That this House calls on the government to recognize the contribution that women in their homes make to our economy, and as a minimum to recognize this contribution by establishing pension equality, including the equivalent of the Canada Pension Plan for women whose work is in their homes, equal pension rights for all women between the ages of 60 and 65 regardless of marital status, increasing the pensions paid to widows under various government plans to at least 75 per cent, and the continuing payment of pensions granted to widows regardless of any subsequent change in marital status.

EXAMINATION OF PROPOSED KEMANO II PROJECT IN B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of urgent and pressing necessity regarding the proposal of the Aluminum Company of Canada to complete its industrial power generating capacity in British Columbia under an agreement and licence that was issued 30 years ago. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the government be required to exercise its various jurisdictions to ensure that the proposed Kemano II project is examined fully in light of standards which are used currently to evaluate such schemes, rather than those which were in place 30 years ago, and that a full public inquiry be ordered to examine the clear federal interests in connection with the Kemano II proposal.

MULTICULTURALISM

CONGRATULATIONS TO CHIN RADIO, TORONTO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I seek the attention of all hon. members of this House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the terms of Standing Order 43.

Taking into account that this weekend marked the fourteenth year of multilingual broadcasts by CHIN radio in metropolitan Toronto, which broadcasts in 32 different languages—the same languages that one hears in my riding of Parkdale-High Park—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That this House congratulate and support the efforts of CHIN radio, a truly multicultural institution, for helping to preserve the heritage of minority groups in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

EMERGENCY PROCEDURE GUIDELINES ON CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of importance to the citizens of the city of Edmonton.

In view of the fact that there is considerable concern in the industrial and residential areas of southeast Edmonton, which is a highly developed petrochemical transportation and storage centre, that an accident equivalent to, if not worse than, the recent accident in Mississauga may occur in the future, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour):

That the Minister of Transport table in this House a policy statement of his department's responsibility regarding emergency procedure guidelines designed to deal with pipeline explosions, tanker car derailments, tanker truck accidents and refinery explosions and fires, to name a few.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ALLEGED DETERIORATION IN FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL-TERRITORIAL BUSINESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I feel almost guilty in bringing this matter to the attention of the House after the motion which was introduced by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). However, we cannot let them get away with everything.

Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and in view of the fact that the antagonistic approach of the present government, especially toward the western provinces and the territories, is making it very difficult for normal federal-provincial-territorial business to be transacted at the official level, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Prime Minister be requested to call to heel his baying hound dogs, the ministers of Justice, Finance, and Health and Welfare so that sweetness and light can once again rule federal-provincial affairs just as they did in those enlightened days between June and December, 1979.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PROTECTION OF FISH HABITAT IN COWICHAN ESTUARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that two years ago the Department of Fisheries and Oceans participated in the task force on the Cowichan estuary convened by the province of British Columbia, in view of the fact that, in spite of repeated promises, the report of the task force has not been released, and in view of the threat that proposed industrial expansion poses to fish habitat in the Cowichan estuary, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That the Department of Fisheries and Oceans table its submission to the Cowichan estuary task force, and take immediate steps to assure the people of British Columbia that it will protect the Cowichan estuary and its potential as fish habitat.

STEPS TO PREVENT POLLUTION OF RIVERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Canadians from every part of this country are blessed with the existence of thousands of clean and unpolluted rivers, whereas such rivers are every day threatened with contamination by toxic substances and other pollutants, and whereas no national policy exists to ensure a minimum standard of cleanliness for the rivers of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House requests the Minister of the Environment to contact each of his provincial counterparts with the purpose of establishing a permanent federal-provincial committee under the authority of the Canadian Council of Resource and Environmental Ministers which would have the responsibility of establishing, on a national scale, a uniform standard of cleanliness of rivers, of maintaining a registry of clean rivers, and of advising provincial governments when pollution of a river reaches a level below this standard, in order to ensure that future generations of Canadians will always have the benefit of clean and unpolluted rivers.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and request the unanimous consent of the House to put a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to all Canadians flying to Victoria.

Since Victoria is the only provincial capital in Canada that is not provided with radar, and given the great increase in traffic at that airport over the past few years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That this House urge the government, when priorizing the various projects being considered for Victoria international airport, to place the installation of radar at that airport at the very top of the list.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

HYDROELECTRIC POWER—EXAMINATION OF ALCAN PROJECT IN B.C.

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Aluminum Company of Canada remains determined to embark upon the second phase of its Kemano hydroelectric development project in central British Columbia, a program which will cause devastating ecological and environmental damage over a wide area. On April 28 the minister informed this House that he had the assurance of the province of British Columbia that this program would not be proceeded with until a full public inquiry had been held.

At that time, Madam Speaker, I urged that the minister go to British Columbia to see for himself exactly what would happen. I now urge that he remain behind, because if he should go he will come back in a Glad bag.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCuish: In light of Premier Bennett's recent announcement that Alcan has a contractual right to proceed whenever it wants, with or without a public hearing—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Could the hon. member put his question right away, please.

Mr. Clark: He is being shouted down, Madam Speaker.

Mr. McCuish: Would the Deputy Prime Minister now inform this House that, in light of the indifference of his minister and in light of the attitude of the province of British Columbia, he will take the necessary steps to protect the 200,000 people in central British Columbia?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Yes, Madam Speaker, we are aware of the situation to which the hon. member has made reference. Yes, in response to his direct question, we are concerned about the welfare of the 200,000 people he mentioned; and yes, we will take his representation under advisement, as the minister assured the House we would last week.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALCAN PROJECT IN B.C.—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON INDIAN LANDS

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I wonder if he is in the House.

An hon. Member: None of them is present; this is Monday.

Mr. McCuish: In that case, I shall again direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. As Kemano completion will cause flooding of Indian lands and will adversely affect aboriginal fishing rights and game habitats, is the minister consulting with Indian leaders, and is he prepared to intervene to compensate for the weakness of his colleague in the Ministry of the Environment?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I shall draw the hon. member's representations to the attention of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the hon. member knows, the minister is in contact with the Indian leaders of this country on a regular and constant basis, and he has their welfare very much at heart.

FISHERIES

ALCAN PROJECT IN B.C.—EXAMINATION OF POLLUTION THEREFROM

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I wish to follow up the subject raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley. The concern he has voiced cannot be overemphasized. This scheme, as it is proposed right now by the Aluminum Company of Canada, will divert the waters from major spawning grounds of coastal and inland fish species, and will result in untold ecological consequences over the entire area of central and northern British Columbia.

Therefore, my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans or, in his absence, to the next man down the totem pole, is this.

Mr. Crosbie: You are pretty low now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Greenaway: Can the minister give the House an assurance that before the further damming of any rivers in B.C. by the Aluminum Company of Canada is permitted, he will exercise his clearcut jurisdiction in assessing the project, not in the light of guidelines that existed 30 years ago but in today's context?

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans stated last week, before the committee on fisheries, that he would investigate this whole question to see where his authority lies, and that he would impose that authority if the situation warranted it.

Mr. Greenaway: Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the minister that he has the clearcut legal right to stop this development. Is the minister now prepared to call for a federal inquiry which would permit public input, or is he prepared to allow the Aluminum Company of Canada to proceed regardless of the consequences?

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, the minister also stated at the same committee meeting that he would favour a public inquiry into the situation.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT CONDITIONS IN WESTERN CANADA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE—SHORTAGE OF FEED

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and the minister for economic development, to the acting prime minister. Each weekend as I return to my home in western Canada I see the crop conditions further deteriorating. They have been holding their own, but in spite of the cool weather this past week they are beginning to turn yellow, wither and die.

In view of this very serious problem that has been developing, can the minister tell us when we can expect an announcement from this government with regard to co-operation with the provinces to look after the drought situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I should like to reply to the hon. member that recently I went to a western province. I met with the director of PFRA there three times. A group of ministers of the government also visited the area. I should like to point out that I do not know of any government of the prairie provinces complaining in any way about lack of co-operation from the federal government in that regard.

I signed an agreement a week ago with the resource and finance ministers of Manitoba about the problem of drought. Last week the cabinet also approved a series of new measures which will have to be implemented immediately, and a minister of the western area was made responsible for monitoring this new set of measures aimed at dealing with this very critical and very disturbing matter.

[English]

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, the answer was that a minister has been appointed. The concern of the people in the west is that we have not heard who has been appointed. We have not heard what kind of programs are being proposed. We were told that there was to be an announcement on Thursday. There was no reason given as to why the announcement was not made.

There is a great deal of concern in western Canada and in this House as to just what these proposals are. When will we be hearing the details of them? It is fine to know they are being considered and discussed, but what are the details?

● (1425)

Mr. De Bané: Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the series of measures will be announced this week.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my final supplementary to the Minister of Transport, who also speaks for the Wheat Board.

Mr. Epp: He does?

Mr. Althouse: Feed supplies are extremely short in the whole western region of North America. Montana producers are looking north for feed supplies. British Columbia hay producers are concerned that their hay will not be fit to eat because of volcanic ash. In short, the sources of supply are diminished more than just as a result of the drought.

What commitment can we have from the minister, the government and the Wheat Board with regard to maintaining initial prices for feed grains and for grains at the current year level, so that producers will be encouraged to keep their grains on the farm instead of trying to get them out before the price drops and the new crop year begins? Can the minister advise when an announcement will be made?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my information is that the Wheat Board is trying to keep a very delicate balance between the interests of stability of exports and the requirements of the Canadian domestic situation. They are not making new sales, and they are monitoring the situation as well as they can. This is a very difficult set of circumstances.

With respect to initial prices, the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board said, on May 26, that he would review the situation before the end of the crop year. In a letter which he recently addressed to the hon. member for Prince Albert, he indicated he might do so in June.

Oral Questions

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION TO ASSIST CREDIT UNIONS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It arises out of the many requests I have received and, I presume, members on both sides of the House have received with respect to the new amendments to the Small Loans Act.

As the minister is aware, credit unions across this country are not able to lend money at over 12 per cent? Will legislation be brought forward soon to change this and give the credit unions a break along with the chartered banks, which do not need it nearly as much?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, the options that are now open to the government range from the revision of this act to minor amendments. There has been no final decision yet. We are studying the matter within an interdepartment committee, and as soon as a decision it reached, I shall be pleased to inform the House.

[English]

Mr. Darling: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the minister's comments, but I would assume that a simple amendment could be brought forward, or a simple bill, without the legal gobbledygook and jargon stating that they can lend money at over 12 per cent. Can the minister give a commitment that this will be done before the long, hot summer recess?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What recess?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I am pleased to see how strongly the hon. member is expressing his hopes that a bill be adopted to solve the problems outlined. I just hope that when I introduce the bill, he will work as strenuously at convincing his colleagues on the other side of the House to give the bill speedy passage.

AIR TRANSPORT

ENGINE FAILURES ON AIR CANADA AIRCRAFT—CALL FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In Los Angeles this past weekend an engine of an Air Canada L-1011 caught fire on take-off and the passengers had to be evacuated. This is the second such Air Canada incident in Los Angeles in the past year. Also, this past weekend three engines failed on an Air Canada 747. Will the minister contact the president of Air Canada and request a complete and detailed inquiry into these incidents, especially since at the Justice Dubin air safety inquiry witnesses stated that Air Canada has been operating for eight years without a review of routine maintenance procedures?

● (1430)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I have had a report on both these incidents and they are presently being investigated by the Department of Transport. I will report further when the results are available to me.

Mr. McKenzie: At the Justice Dubin air safety inquiry, Transport Canada civil aviation inspectors stated that Canada's air safety monitoring system was "in a shambles". Since the Dubin inquiry will not be completed until October, 1980, will the minister launch an immediate investigation and, further, request pilot training in Canada for landing 747s on one engine? Finally, I think we should ask the minister to relay our congratulations to the pilot and his crew for a job well done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: I will relay the hon. member's compliments to the pilot. As to the meat of the question, this was exactly the purpose of the creation of the Dubin commission. I would think the judge would be quite annoyed if I were to set up another commission to do the work he is supposed to do. He is doing it very well, I believe, at this time.

HOUSING

PROGRAMS TO ENCOURAGE CONSTRUCTION OF FAMILY UNITS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. According to press reports this past weekend, the minister has apparently promised aid to the construction industry rather than to home owners and tenants who are suffering very much as a result of the housing crisis.

Will the minister assure us that he will not repeat the mistakes of his predecessors by reintroducing tax shelters similar to the ARP-MURB program, the assisted rental program, which subsidized developers and encouraged them to build luxury bachelor suites, destroyed family housing and resulted in a net loss of rental units for low income families?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am happy to tell the hon. member that the two programs the government intends to present, which will be modifications of existing programs, will not only benefit existing home owners or tenants but will be of some help to people first coming into the market, as well as of some help to the industry generally. But they would constitute a modest intervention by CMHC at this time, bearing in mind the problems about which the Minister of Finance has cautioned the House.

Mrs. Mitchell: Is the minister aware of a number of reports, including one from the Canadian Council on Social Development, which proved beyond a doubt that past programs such as capital cost allowances of the kind which I presume he is proposing have cost taxpayers approximately $65 million a year, while making possible huge profits for developers?

Since non-profit housing creates just as many jobs in our economy, will the minister increase the funding for affordable, non-profit housing instead of providing these tax rip-offs for developers, encouraging them to build high-cost housing which we do not need?

Mr. Cosgrove: I am confident the hon. member opposite will be very pleased with the announcement the government will be making shortly. It will represent modest help to the industry, renters and present home owners, though certainly it will not be on the scale of the many millions of dollars the hon. member has mentioned. It will be a modest program.

SPORTS

HOLDING OF NATIONAL TRIALS—RECOGNITION BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question would have been directed to the minister responsible for amateur sport, but in his absence and in the absence of the parliamentary secretary to that minister I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. The question arises from a recent indication by a representative of one of our national sport federations that national trials would be cancelled, in spite of the recent announcement by the responsible minister that $1.5 million would become available for quality competition among Canadian athletes, which presupposes a declaration of national champions.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister now tell us whether or not the national associations or governing bodies of amateur sports in Canada will proceed through Olympic trials to a declaration of national champions and, should such national champions be declared, whether they will be appropriately recognized by the government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): I regret I cannot give the hon. member the information he requires, but I will make inquiries and ensure he has it by the earliest possible date.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

JURISDICTION OVER FLAX AND RAPESEED

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, who is also responsible to the House for the Canadian Wheat Board. As the minister knows, the Wheat Board does not now have complete control over flax and rape. Is he aware of any move by the board to assume more complete control, and thus tighten up the system? If he is, I should like to know what his attitude toward a tightening up of the system would be.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I am not aware of any change with respect to the grains coming under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board.

Mr. Mayer: The minister did not tell us what his attitude would be toward such a move were it to come. My supplementary was intended for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In his absence, I would ask the Minister of Transport or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether they are aware of any move in the department, specifically by the officials in his department, the grains group which is currently studying a feasibility report on whether the Wheat Board should take over more complete control of the marketing of rape. I would also like an assurance that when this study is completed—if, indeed, it is under way—a report will be made available to the House.

Mr. Pepin: There is, of course, a running debate on this matter, in the west particularly. I would think the Government of Canada would not express views on this subject unless it was intended to change the present situation. I do not believe that one Minister of Transport or one Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce could simply make commentaries on these matters. If there is a decision to be made, it will be made and announced as such, not as a simple reflection on the matter.

PARKS CANADA

GRIEVANCES OF CORNWALL EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION THEREOF

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, we heard a lot of talk last week about the enormous amount of sympathy and compassion shown by the government toward civil servants. My question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board.

In light of the petition which was presented to the House on Wednesday of last week from the employees of the Parks Canada office in Cornwall, and in light of the mass grievance placed before the Civil Service Alliance by those employees over the cancellation of the move to Peterborough, would the President of the Treasury Board agree, before any further cheques are paid out to the employees of Parks Canada in connection with the cancellation of that move, to meet with them in order to resolve present differences and permit a return to a good esprit de corps and a feeling of high morale among the employees of Parks Canada in Cornwall? Would the minister meet with these employees before any further cheques are issued?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am always ready to meet with people who have a just cause to plead with the government of the day. I believe the minister in charge of Parks Canada answered those questions quite adequately last week.

Mr. Domm: I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It is on the same subject and it is one which has never been answered. When the regional office in Cornwall was divided, half went to Quebec and half was to go to central Ontario.

● (1440)

Would the Deputy Prime Minister agree to look into what is best for Ontario and what is best for Parks Canada in Ontario? If Quebec is best served in Quebec by having the regional office moved from Cornwall to Quebec City, would Ontario not be best served if the regional office of Parks Canada were located in central Ontario, where the minister's government proposed in the first place it be located?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will make sure that the views and the questions of the hon. member are drawn to the attention of the minister. I will draw to the minister's attention particularly the interest of the hon. member in ensuring that the province of Ontario is well served and its interests are looked after. I share the hon. member's aspirations in that respect as well.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DENIAL OF DREE GRANT TO MAGDALEN ISLANDS SALT MINING CORPORATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. On Friday last the minister indicated, in denying an application for a DREE grant from Magdalen Islands Salt Mining Corporation, that at least in part the reason for the denial was that there was an unused capacity within the industry in other parts of the country and that he intended to introduce some other economic beneficial programs for the area.

Can the minister tell the House why that same rationale was not applied in the case of the Michelin grant, given that assistance to Sydney Steel and/or the Cape Breton Development Corporation could and would have produced more jobs, more economic development and, in fact, could have saved energy on the east coast?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with regard to Magdalen Islands, as the hon. member said, I could not give a grant to that mine because already the mines we have in Nova Scotia and Ontario have a capacity which exceeds the consumption of eastern Canada. What about other projects in Nova Scotia? Of course we will be helping other projects in Nova Scotia.

As for the tire industry, as the hon. member knows—and we have talked about it at length together—there is a major structural shift in North America in the tire industry. At the beginning of the seventies, radial tires represented 1 per cent of the market. Today they represent more than 60 per cent. That structural shift is happening all over North America, and I think nobody can avoid that change in the market.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Finance. Surely it is understood by the government that, just as there is unused capacity in the mining of salt, there is also unused capacity in the production of tires. What would the Minister of Finance say to employees in other parts of the country working in the tire industry if they asked him why they should subsidize Michelin not only with their taxes but also with their jobs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member raised the question of Michelin, because the grant that is made available to Michelin is made available because the plant is located in an area of slow growth. Any manufacturer in any other area of slow growth in Canada—which includes a large part of Quebec, many parts of Ontario and other provinces—would be eligible for the same consideration as the Michelin plant in Nova Scotia was.

I say in reply—and I think the hon. member will at least want to have it clarified—that if there is, as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has explained, a change in the market and the plant that is to be located in Nova Scotia is to produce a product which has a rapid future growth, it is not the fault of the department or the government that consumers have changed very drastically their preferences with respect to purchasing tires on not only the Canadian market but the export market as well.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

VANCOUVER ART GALLERY—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE THEREFOR

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last Friday, the hon. member for Vancouver South was asking the Secretary of State about financial help to the Vancouver art gallery and he was told by the Minister of the Environment, speaking on behalf of the Secretary of State, that that would be somewhat contingent upon federal entry into the lottery program.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if it is now government policy that legitimate help to legitimate artistic communities is dependent on federal entry into gambling.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member sincerely wants a response to that question, I am quite happy to say that the answer is no to the question put in that way.

Mr. Friesen: That is very interesting, Madam Speaker. Since all studies indicate that lottery programs are supported most by people with lower incomes, and art galleries are supported mostly by people with middle and higher incomes, and given the fact that the Minister of the Environment indicates that it is contingent upon gambling, is it now government policy that lower income people should support higher income people in their programs?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I am satisfied in my own mind that the hon. member is not quoting accurately the words of the minister to whom he refers in his question. The policy to which my hon. friend refers is not a Liberal policy. It was a policy which was found in the budget we defeated last December.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

CALM AIR INTERNATIONAL—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF COMMISSION'S DECISION—PUBLIC HEARING

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. The people of the Keewatin district were denied direct participation through public hearings when the Canadian Transport Commission made a unilateral decision in the selection of an air carrier for that region.

Would the minister agree to review that CTC decision with regard to Calm Air International's operations in the Keewatin District, and make arrangements to hold public hearings in order that all views on the subject of appropriate air service can be heard and taken into account?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there are procedures for appealing decisions of the CTC either to the Minister of Transport or to the cabinet as a whole, and these ways and means are open to any person affected by a decision of the CTC.

Mr. Ittinuar: Madam Speaker, that CTC decision was made in a fast manner because the commissioner who was responsible was moving on to the Railway Transportation Commission; he wanted to get rid of that decision so that he could move on into the Railway Transportation Commission. The decision has resulted in additional costs to already exorbitant transportation and freight prices, which are some 200 per cent in excess of southern prices because of lack of competition.

Will the minister, in conjunction with a review of the Arctic airport facilities policy, ensure that all decisions related to and with regard to the selection of air carriers in the north will be bilateral through public hearings?

Mr. Pepin: It is my understanding that decisions made by the Canadian Transport Commission are made after public inquiries, but it may be that this case was an exception. I will meet my hon. friend later and we will discuss it further.

NUCLEAR POWER

MORATORIUM ON CONSTRUCTION OF GENERATION PLANTS ON VANCOUVER ISLAND—REPRESENTATIONS TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the minister no doubt knows, the government of British Columbia announced a moratorium on the construction of nuclear power generation plants on Vancouver Island.

Can the minister tell us whether, prior to making that announcement, the provincial government in British Columbia made representations to the central government complaining about the failure of the central government to provide Candu safety measures or to assure that the safety measures were satisfactory?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I know of no representation from the government of British Columbia to the national government in this respect.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Has the minister made any inquiries? Has he been able to determine whether it is the nuclear waste disposal problem which is causing the provincial government to hesitate in this area?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I regret to inform the hon. member that I have no particular information as to the reasons that motivated the British Columbia government in its decision. I expect to meet with my provincial colleague in a very short while, and I will take that opportunity to raise with him the point raised by my hon. friend.

CANADIAN CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL ON MULTICULTURALISM

MEMBERSHIP OF COUNCIL—APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT—ADVERTISING IN ETHNIC PRESS

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of State (Multiculturalism). Would the minister advise the House whether he has filled the position of president of CCCM, the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, and if he intends to keep the membership in the CCCM at 100?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State, Multiculturalism): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to see my good friend back after a long illness; and after 12 weeks I am glad to get a question on multiculturalism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: I was very sad that the former chairman of the CCCM, a distinguished Canadian appointed by my predecessor, the hon. member who posed the question, Mr. Norm Kwong, was unable to continue in that post for business reasons. But I have pleasure in telling my friend that I have appointed Mr. Lawrence Decore of Edmonton, of Ukrainian heritage and a former chairman of the Alberta Heritage Council, as the new chairman of the CCCM.

On the issue of membership, previous CCCMs have recommended a reduction in the size of the council to make it more effective. I am giving that matter serious consideration.

Mr. Clark: Another Grit at the trough.

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In view of the fact that his colleague, the Solicitor General, the hon. member for York Centre, was a consistent complainer when the ethnic press was not receiving advertising moneys, what is the minister planning to do with regard to this particular problem with the ethnic press? How much money has the minister spent on ethnic advertising since February 18?

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member leaves himself open a little because, of course, the previous government put a freeze on ethnic advertising. That freeze has been removed, and ads will be run.

Mr. Epp: There is no ethnic advertising.

Mr. Fleming: I have a concern that that budget should not simply be for the ethnic press, but that in fact my multiculturalism budget should be directed toward the English and French language general press so that there is a better understanding of multiculturalism in Canada. In turn, because in another capacity I have responsibility generally for Government of Canada advertising, I hope to be able to set a more professional criteria for the ethnic press and at that point assure them that they will get their fair share of advertising.

ENERGY

PROCESSING OF RESOURCES NEAR SOURCE—POSSIBLE RELOCATION OF SARNIA COMPLEX

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On Friday last the minister reaffirmed government policy whereby public funds would be used to transfer industrial plant so that resources can be processed near their source. When will the government be announcing the movement of the entire Sarnia complex to Alberta so that these millions of barrels of oil can be processed near their source?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend has an interesting suggestion, but he will remember that the decision concerning the Eldorado refinery concerned a planned or projected installation, not one that existed at the time. So it was a new plant that was being planned.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FOREIGN POLICY OF UNITED STATES—STATEMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to know from the minister what facts drove him to the conclusion that there was inadequate leadership in the area of foreign policy in the United States. Would he list those facts, please?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, tomorrow I will be appearing before the parliamentary committee, and we will have lots of chance to explore my views and their views on the present state of Canadian-United States relations.

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, that is totally inadequate. I ask the minister, please, to enumerate some of the facts, which we are entitled to hear in this House, which drove him to the conclusion that there was inadequate leadership in the United States in foreign policy areas. Please tell us.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, I believe my statement speaks for itself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

NUMBER OF GRANTS MADE UNDER PROGRAM

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour who is responsible for the CHIP program. A constituent of mine received a nice note from the minister the other day thanking him for participating in the CHIP program, with a nice cheque for about $380. The only problem is that he did not receive any insulation. My question to the minister is, how many such cheques have been sent out? Is this the reason the program keeps running out of money?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have responsibility for the Ministry of Public Works, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the National Capital Commission, but not the Ministry of Labour. I believe the CHIP program comes under the corporation's responsibility. I am sure the corporation would be very happy to have that cheque back, because indeed we are pressed. It is a popular program, but it has some problems on which we are presently working.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I would be happy to inform the minister that my honest constituent sent the cheque back immediately. The minister admitted in the House weeks ago that the administration of this particular program is completely inadequate. When will he smarten it up?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I am happy to refer to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail today—I am sure the hon. member would be pleased to see the article—referring to the steps that the Canadian General Standards Board in Ottawa has taken to bring some standardization to the delivery of the program into the marketplace and, second, the plans by the corporation to consider having any contractor under the program designated as the contractor recognized by the corporation. With these two steps, which we hope to be in place by July, we think that some of the administrative problems—of course, not totally the responsibility of CMHC—will be ironed out.

ENERGY

CANADIAN MONEY AND EXPERTISE FLOWING INTO UNITED STATES

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister aware of the substantial sums of money and technical expertise which are flowing to the United States from Canadian oil and gas producers as a result of the difference in the crude oil price they receive in the United States as compared to that in Canada?

The minister may be aware that crude oil discovered in the United States nets $32 per barrel to the producer, compared to the price of $7 per barrel for that oil discovererd in Canada. If the minister is aware of this condition, what steps does he intend to take to encourage Canadian explorers to stay and search for oil in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, indeed I am aware of some movements that have taken place for a variety of reasons. As the hon. member knows, those movements have taken place historically over the years between our two countries.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As to the differences to which the hon. member referred, indeed they are real. But one must also realize, as I am sure the hon. member knows, that there are other factors in the United States that make that cost—the net cost to the producer—less than it appears at first sight.

I am discussing with the producing provinces, particularly the government of Alberta, the elements of a new pricing arrangement which I hope will be satisfactory to all concerned. As the hon. member knows, if the producer gets only $7 back at the present time, the price nonetheless to the consumer is $15—$14.75 to be exact—and most of the difference between $7 and $14 goes to the governments of the producing provinces, particularly the government of Alberta.

RAILWAYS

RETENTION OF BRANCH LINES FOR ELEVATOR COMPANIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since the previous Conservative government ignored many of the branch lines which are important to the west, could the minister consider placing into the basic network those branch lines in the west which grain elevator companies have said they wish to service?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the way I see it, the willingness of a company to serve a branch line would be one of the factors—obviously, a very important one, otherwise we would not have a branch line—in the decision to rehabilitate one.

● (1500)

Offhand, I can think of a number of other factors. There would be the cost of rehabilitation, the cost of maintaining it after rehabilitation, the level of the subsidy, and there would be the total volume on the branch line, the availability of alternative routes. There would be a number of other factors to be borne in mind, and presumably that was done by Hall and PRAC when they identified some of these branch lines for rehabilitation.

PETITION

REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION IN SERVICE OF "SAMSON V" STERN WHEELER

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Deputy Clerk of the House has laid on the Table the seventh report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES COMMISSIONER

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY REPORT

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there have been consultations and I think there is unanimous consent so that the following motion can be proposed and passed. The motion deals with the membership of the joint committee set up to study the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages. The motion is as follows, Madam Speaker, and with the consent of the House, I would like to move, seconded by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Bussières):

That the following members do represent this House at the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons appointed to consider the reports of the Commissioner for Official Languages: Messrs. Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe), Corbin, Gauthier, Herbert, Joyal, Kilgour, La Salle, Nystrom and Stollery; and

That a message be sent to the Senate informing honourable senators of this decision.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR SECOND READING OF BILL C-30

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That in relation to Bill C-30, an act to provide for supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1980-81, one sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration of second reading stage of the bill; and that at 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of second reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, my understanding is that the motion may now be debated. I would like to make a few brief comments on the subject. Madam Speaker, I think that the fact that we have waited so long to introduce the motion is evidence that the government has been quite generous toward the opposition and I will show how patient it has been in a few moments. A few seconds ago I heard the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) tell me: "Try to defend closure".

I should remind him and he knows quite well that the procedure now applied is not closure but a limitation of the debate. If the Leader of the Opposition wants to refer to our rules, he will note, Madam Speaker, if he carefully reads SO 33 that closure is imposed when an additional day of debate is required so that all questions will be put at 1 a.m. Such a procedure has seldom been used in the past even if it had been warranted, considering the behaviour of the official opposition. Anyway, we are not resorting to closure today but to the limitation of the debate, as provided for under SO 75C and, for explanation purposes, I think it is important to indicate under which circumstances these provisions are invoked.

Madam Speaker, people are aware that a bill must go through various stages before being adopted. When it is introduced for first reading there is no debate. The purpose is to have the bill printed. I feel that the public at large should know that. When the government decides later to call the second stage of the bill, the debate is on the principle of the bill, and once the principle has been adopted on division or with the unanimous support of all parties, the bill can, at a later stage, be examined in detail either by a standing committee or a committee of the whole, depending on the nature of the bill, one clause after the other, and it can be amended and then reported.

There is another stage during which a bill continues to be studied after second reading and the study in committee, and it is the report stage, and, as though that were not enough, Madam Speaker, there is still another stage at which the bill can be considered by all hon. members, and that is called third reading. So it is important at this time that the public at large watching us on television or otherwise following our proceedings in newspapers or from the gallery, know that the motion introduced today is moved not at the final stage but rather at second reading, a preliminary stage where it is the principle of the bill that is being discussed.

Before being able and allowed to ask the House to limit the debate at this stage to a given number of hours or additional days, there is an obligation for us, on the government side, to hold consultations beforehand with opposition parties, and the rule involved in such a case is paragraph A of Standing Order 75. Since this motion is moved under Standing Order 75C, it stands to reason that we also have Standing Orders 75A and 75B. So, Madam Speaker, before using SO 75C, we tried to apply SO 75A. What does this rule say? Under that Standing Order we ask the official spokesmen for the various parties in the House to have a meeting and discuss whether it is possible to reach an agreement on a set period of additional time to conclude discussion of a bill at one stage. I would like to point out that in the present case, I had this required meeting and discussion with my hon. colleagues and leaders of opposition parties, and unfortunately in this case, contrary to several other instance; in the past where we reached understanding and agreement, in this particular case, for reasons that are known to them, we could not reach agreement on a given period of time before concluding the debate on second reading.

So we must turn to 75B, which says that lacking an agreement between all parties, a majority of parties could conclude an agreement to allow for a fixed period of time in which to conclude the debate on a given stage of a bill.

And unfortunately there was not a majority of the parties which agreed to limit debate on Bill C-30 at second reading stage. Consequently it was only after these two formalities were completed that the government could apply Standing Order 75C which makes it mandatory to give advance notice—which we did last week—of our intention to move the motion today, what we are doing now, a motion which is debatable for a period of two hours and according to which, as members can see for themselves, an additional day will be provided if the motion is passed by the House regarding the second reading stage of Bill C-30. What we are now doing is to debate this motion under Standing Order 75C, a motion of which notice was given last week and which is intended, in the absence of an agreement after negotiations between the parties, to put an end to the second reading stage of Bill C-30.

As we very well know, Madam Speaker, this legislation can be discussed in committee, also at the report stage, if needed, and further on third reading. So in no way is this closure, nor muzzling the opposition. So much less that we did not decide on this at the outset, when this bill that is quite simple was introduced. Quite the opposite, we waited until the legislation had been discussed much too long on second reading. We waited until five debating days had gone on, or almost, because the first day was very limited. So to be honest, it was four debating days. However, we computed the total time used by hon. members up till now on second reading. According to the research I had undertaken already eleven hours and 47 minutes have been used on the government's time, on the time of the House to discuss one bill, and this is quite abnormal, improper and totally unacceptable.

As I said, Madam Speaker, we are at the second reading stage, and at this point almost twelve hours' debating time have been used on the principle of the bill to discuss nearly every matter but the principle of Bill C-30 itself.

As you may recall, Madam Speaker, the legislation was introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). He did this at the end of the evening, he spoke for five minutes and very clearly explained the principle of the bill, and in my view his remarks were complete, concise and quite adequate to explain what the bill is all about. The Minister of Finance deemed fit to use five minutes, and this was quite adequate.

He was followed by the official opposition critic, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the previous minister of finance and he took a whole hour and 37 minutes, Madam Speaker, a considerable, unjustifiable and unacceptable amount of time to talk about the principle of Bill C-30 on second reading.

Madam Speaker, there are 282 members of the House. These are the 1980s, a time when more legislation, coupled with a reshuffling of the electoral ridings and an increase in population have raised the number of members proportionally or just about. We are already 282 members and the standing order limiting speeches has not yet been amended. For second reading, it provides forty minutes, an unreasonable time in 1980, except that the first speaker following the mover of the motion is entitled to forty minutes; in this case, it was the hon. member for St. John's West who, not satisfied with using outdated Standing Orders and, therefore, with using forty minutes, which is somehow inappropriate in 1980, given the large number of members in the House, he nevertheless took one hour and 37 minutes of the time of the House, of the time of Canadian legislators, to speak only to the principle of this bill, and this at only one stage of the bill. I say this is an injustice, it is unacceptable and it explains the measure currently taken by the government simply to limit the debate on second reading of this bill so that it can be studied sooner in committee to give other members a chance to have the floor to express their views.

Madam Speaker, we have here a striking example of an abuse of the Standing Orders. We have here a striking example of the need to change as soon as possible at least the orders dealing with the length of speeches in the House. We have talked about it many times since the beginning of this session and we will hear a lot more about it. I do hope we will be able to do something very soon about it because some hon. members do not show reasonable restraint as our colleagues in England do, even though there is no written rule to limit the length of speeches, and where civilized people very seldom exceed ten minutes, out of respect for their colleagues and to give them the opportunity to express their views on any legislation. Here, when someone uses one hour and 37 minutes in a second reading debate, I say that is unacceptable and that the government is—

• (1510)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, had the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who opened debate on this bill, spoken for a decent length of time and given us some information and a promise as to when he will bring in a budget, then this debate would not still be going on. We are not going to be forced into accepting this legislation now or ever until this government gives us a date for a budget and tells us what its economic and financial approach is going to be to the problems of Canada.

It was six months ago that the Minister of Finance claimed credit for authoring the defeat of our budget on December 13. Six months later and after three months in office, the Liberals cannot indicate to the people of Canada what their economic and financial solutions are or what approach they will take to governing this country. Investors do not know what their position is, and neither do the people. They have heard rumour after rumour and suggestions of tax increases.

The same group which was complaining last fall because we intended to introduce an excise tax on gasoline is now going to do away with indexing of income tax and really give it to the lower income people of Canada. They are going to impose a tax at the refinery level, which means a tax not only on transportation fuels but on heating fuels and products which are used in the petrochemical industry. And on it goes. The government is afraid to come into this House and bring down a budget. That is why we are opposing this bill.

This bill authorizes the borrowing of $12 billion. The House leader has complained because we have spent under 12 hours discussing this bill at second reading—$1 billion an hour. It is a credit to the people of Canada that the government wants us to rush this bill through the House in less than 12 hours, $12 billion in credit. We are not going to do it. The government House leader says that the government was very generous with the time it allocated for this bill. The government is very generous with the credit of the people of Canada.

The government House leader says that they are not imposing closure. This is garrotting. This is the gag, the noose, the stiletto, the bastinado. This is the sledge-hammer, the bludgeon. The government House leader is right when he says that it is not closure. He talks about the principle of the bill. It is not the principle of the bill; it is the "unprinciple" of the bill and of the actions of the hon. gentlemen opposite which are upsetting to us.

The government House leader has asked us to rush this bill through. It is like asking the goose and the turkey to help lay the Christmas table. We are not going to do it. We have debated this bill for three full days, one afternoon and 20 minutes one evening. There have been 21 speakers—three Liberals, a waste of time. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans), though, gave us a few facts. There have been four NDP speeches which were almost a waste of time, and 14 PC speakers with not a wasted minute among them.

What do we want, Madam Speaker? We want the Minister of Finance to come to this House and bare his soul to us. We do not want a four or five-minute speech in which he says nothing. What are the bold, new economic directions for Canada? This gentleman goes outside the country and makes speeches. We want him to explain. For example, he has just been to a meeting of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and this is what he said in a speech there on June 4:

But the experience of the 1970s has brought home the point that we are unlikely to achieve a sustained improvement in employment unless we get inflation under better control.

We want him to come to this House and explain what that statement means. Does it mean that the government is going to attack inflation as its first priority, and that until it does that and beats inflation we can expect no improvement in employment? What direction is he going in? How is he going to achieve this?

The minister is a world traveller. He attended a luncheon meeting of the France-Canada Chamber of Commerce in Paris—"Gay Paree".

An hon. Member: How was it?

Mr. Crosbie: While the unemployment figures are increasing in Canada the minister is in "Gay Paree". What did he say his priorities were on June 2? He said the first one was:

> Reduce in an orderly way our current budget deficit.

That is the priority of the Minister of Finance but back here in Canada it is not the priority of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who says this government is not obsessed with the deficit in the same way the previous government was and will not reduce the deficit at the expense of creating more unemployment. The people of Canada want to know how the minister is going to reduce the deficit without increasing and creating more unemployment.

The Prime Minister also said that the government does not need to reduce the deficit to help the economy, because it is a healthy economy. The people of Canada do not understand this economy to be healthy when unemployment is rising.

The deputy minister of finance, Dr. Stewart, has said it is recognized that the federal government is in a deep budget deficit. The Prime Minister does not realize that. Dr. Stewart says the deficit problem will have to be solved by generalized tax increases ultimately across the board. The people of Canada want to know what these generalized tax increases are. When is the minister going to tell us about them? Who is going to be struck? Who are the geese whose gooses are going to be cooked, or whose geeses are going to be goosed? This is what we want to know. It is what the people of Canada want to know.

Is the minister seriously going to take indexing off the income tax? Will there be a special levy on refinery products? The minister may say that there is a great rush for this bill, Madam Speaker, because the government cannot borrow another sou unless the bill is passed. They will not be able to pay the mothers' allowance or the old age pension if they cannot borrow this money. What a confession of failure that would be! I warn the minister not to say that because an article in The Globe and Mail of June 5 reports as follows:

> Finance department officials emphasize they still have room to handle this month's bond issue even if the new legislation does not go through by the end of the month.

In other words, they think they can borrow another billion dollars this month without the legislation; they do not need it during June. What is the rush now to bring in closure—the guillotine, Madam Speaker—if they do not need further borrowing authority this month?

It is said that small business fears the future of the bond plan. The minister is happily back now from the sustained dangers of Paris—anyone who goes to Paris is in danger of having too good a time. When is he going to tell us and small businessmen about the future of the small business development bond that he introduced in his mini budget on April 21? He took that from my budget and I congratulate him for that. When is he going to act on it and when will the legislation come before the House? When are the people of Canada going to be told what his economic plans are?

Does the minister know the recession has started in the United States? The National Bureau of Economic Research has said that it started in January. According to a report in The Globe and Mail on June 5 a member of the board stated as follows:

> 'Things are going down very rapidly,' Mr. Feldstein said, 'more so than in previous recessions.'

The recession in the United States is apparently more severe than any recession since World War II. What does the government plan to do about that? That is why we want to know when the minister will bring in a budget. When will he indicate the government's long-term, medium-term and short-term economic and financial plans? How can he reduce the deficit and still try to counteract unemployment? Does he know about the forecast of the deputy minister of Finance that the unemployment rate that we thought might go to 8.3 per cent in 1980-81 will be worse than that? That is what the deputy minister forecast in his statement to the Senate a week ago last Tuesday.

Does the minister know that the deputy minister is also forecasting that the inflation rate will be higher than our forecast of last December, when for 1980 we forecast an 11 per cent increase in the CPI, and for 1981 a 10.1 per cent or 11.4 per cent, whichever of two scenarios occurred, high price or low price? Now the deputy minister of finance is forecasting increased inflation and that increases in the cost of living will be higher than the forecast of last December. The minister's department is forecasting that unemployment will be higher than 8.3 per cent this year and next. What is the minister doing about that? What is his approach to it?

Having defeated the previous government on a budget six months ago, and with the last budget passed by this House being brought down in December, 1978, the government owes it to the members of this House and to the public to bring in a budget before the summer recess. If they do not, then they are not accepting responsibility for having defeated our approach to the economic and financial problems of Canada.

We did not suggest that we would put the yoke of indexing on the backs, the hearts, the minds, and the pocket books of lower income Canadians, as the Minister of Finance says is probable.

We are not prepared to authorize $12 billion, $8 billion or $6 billion. Well, perhaps $6 billion or something less, so that we know we will have the minister in the House again before the end of this year. We might go for something like that, but not for $12 billion. Not until the minister can tell us exactly what his plans are and when his budget is coming down.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has to stop this shameful equivocation—his bully-ragging and bullying of the provinces—get down to serious negotiations and come in with a sensible oil price proposal. We know that it will probably be more expensive than the one we offered last December. The hon. gentleman should face up to the fact that they cannot carry out their commitments to the Canadian public. They cannot tell falsehoods, lies, and get away with it any longer. There are serious economic and financial problems facing this country.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The time of the hon. member has expired.

Some hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Crosbie: Guillotine!

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, at the outset may I say to the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) that in spite of his unkind allusion to the speeches made by four members of my party in this debate—an unkindness that I am sure he did not intend—I can tell him that we are as strong in our opposition to this motion as is his party. We think the action of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) this afternoon is an abomination.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Shameful.

Mr. Knowles: When the vote is called on this matter tonight some time after eight o'clock, we shall be voting against the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: If the government is able to get enough of its members here to carry the motion, there is one thing I hope the minister will not do. I hope he will not use a motion which provides one more sitting day for the debate on second reading of Bill C-30 to call that debate on a Wednesday.

Mr. Pinard: Why not?

Mr. Knowles: Because there is such a thing as fairness and decency around here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I object very strongly to what is implied in that question from the President of the Privy Council. In other words, he has it in mind, having got the authority of the House on a vote tonight to conclude second reading debate with one more day's debate, to do it on a Wednesday, which is a short day.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Knowles: That is compounding the abomination. The President of the Privy Council likes to stand up here and refer to rules 75A, 75B and 75C as though they were the gospel truth, as though they were something that the House wrote into the rules with pleasure and with unanimity. I can tell him that is not true at all. I can tell him that in November and December of 1968 the government of that day tried to get through a closure set of rules under another number and heading but had to withdraw that set of rules to get the rest of its changes through before Christmas of that year. Not satisfied, the government of the era came back in June and July of 1969 and brought in rules 75A, B and C and pushed them through with its majority. The rules do not express the views of the House of Commons generally, which is what ought to be the case with respect to the rules that govern this place.

If my hon. friend the President of the Privy Council and others over there want to know what Liberals used to think about closure rules, I invite them to go back to 1913 and read the ringing words that Sir Wilfrid Laurier used against the Tories of that day who stopped a debate in the middle and brought in a closure rule. Here we are again, in the midst of a debate on Bill C-30, and the government brings in this closure rule.

The hon. member for St. John's West is quite right in pressing the point that the most serious offence about this is that we are being asked to close off debate, the basis of which is government spending, at a time when we have not been given a budget or any indication of what the government's financial policy is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: If ever there was a case of asking this House to sign a blank cheque, that is it. We think it is wrong and we have no intention of going along with this desecration of the parliamentary process.

It is interesting to watch some of the things that happen around here. This afternoon, the President of the Privy Council stood up and told us how unco-operative members are on this side. He singled out the member for St. John's West for having spoken for an hour and 37 minutes at one point. I know that the member for St. John's West was embarrassed that he had to cut off at that point, that he was unable to establish a record, that he was not able to surpass the record established some time ago by John Rodriguez. But today, as I say, we are told that we are so terribly unco-operative on this side. However, I remind the President of the Privy Council that on Friday of last week his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette), had this to say in the middle of the afternoon:

On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the clerk said and I am sorry that there is some confusion this afternoon.

I ask hon. members to listen to this next sentence:

All hon. members have co-operated—

That includes the member for St. John's West and it includes me. The sentence continues:

—and now we are desperately trying to find out what will be the next item of business before four o'clock.

We were passing so many items on Friday that the government wondered how it would fill the day. Which way do government members want it? Do they want an opposition that is co-operative or an opposition that is trying to stall? We are not stalling, Mr. Speaker. We are insisting on the right of this House of Commons to know what the government's financial plans are before we sign a blank cheque, which is what it amounts to if we are called upon to pass this motion for closure and to settle this debate with one more day.

I had assumed until I asked my question a moment ago that one more day would at least be a full day, at least a Thursday or a Friday, which has a few more debating hours in it than a Wednesday.

An hon. Member: What about Saturday?

Mr. Pinard: Why not on Wednesday?

Mr. Knowles: The President of the Privy Council asks "Why not on Wednesday?" In others words, the government is prepared to use a rule that was brought in under closure to close off debate, and no amount of semantics, of trying to use euphemisms and saying that it is just time limitation, will get away from the fact that what they are doing is cutting off debate.

The minister says that it is time for some reforms around here, and I agree with him. I have heard that statement many times. But is it not time that we deal with something basic? The only kinds of reforms that we hear from over there are shortening the length of speeches or cutting down to a four-day week—

An hon. Member: Then a three-day week.

Mr. Knowles: A four-day week will soon be a three-day week, that is right—or sitting mornings instead of evenings and so on. But we hear nothing about the fundamental problem that faces this House, and that is organizing our time from the beginning of the session.

What this Parliament needs—and it has been agreed many a time in meetings of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization—is a government that tells us at the start of the session what is to be before us and invites both sides of the House to sit down and discuss the line up of bills. If we do that, we can agree that some bills are unimportant and do not need to be debated on the floor of the House of Commons and that they can be sent right off to committee. We can agree that there are many bills that should be limited to one or two days of debate on second reading. But surely, along with that, along with the House being willing to let some bills go without debate and many bills to be given limited debate, it would be understandable that when we get to the crucial bills there should be whatever debate the House feels is necessary.

In my view, that is the kind of reform that we should be dealing with. I quite agree that the main problem facing us is how to use our time. I have seen this problem grow in intensity in the years since I first came here. In those early days we could get through a session in five or six months, and while we complained we seemed to have dealt with everything. But the things that have to be dealt with now are so numerous, there has to be co-operation. One does not get co-operation by bringing in closure, threatening more use of closure, threatening to change the rules or threatening to cut down the length of time used on speeches. I want to say parenthetically that I think that the 40-minute rule is one that should be changed. I certainly think that no speech needs to be that long. Members will see today that debates where speeches are limited to ten minutes go a bit faster, and perhaps when the rest of the members get going they will make still better speeches. But to think that that is the answer, just to cut the 40 minutes down to 20 minutes or 15 minutes when a government does not plan a session as it should and as it could, is a failure to recognize what Parliament is all about.

I emphasize the point that what we are faced with is a form of closure just as mean and vindictive and hard on the opposition as was the closure that the Tories brought in against the Sir Wilfrid Laurier Liberals back in 1913. It is the wrong way to cope with the problems of this House.

An hon. Member: Were you there?

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend wants to know if I was here in 1913. The answer is no, not yet.

An hon. Member: Just on your way.

Mr. Knowles: But I can tell my hon. friend that there is no better reading in the pages of Hansard than the debate of 1913, especially the contributions that Sir Wilfrid Laurier made, on this very issue.

I see that my time is about up, Mr. Speaker. I am prepared to sit down, but I want to say categorically that this is an abomination, an offence to Parliament, a failure to realize the best way to run this place, and when the vote is called tonight the New Democrats will stand and vote no.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in this debate I would like to answer some of the comments made by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), but before I do so, since my name was taken somewhat in vain by my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) concerning last Friday—

Mr. Knowles: That was a compliment!

Mr. Collenette: —may I say that I did make those statements. I was flabbergasted on Friday afternoon that we had so much co-operation from the other side and we had to scurry around for more business. The opposition is ready, willing and able to co-operate on small bills, bills that require no great discussion, bills that should have been through in half the time—half the time that was taken on Friday in the case of some of them. But when it comes to major bills, the opposition wastes time.

I need not talk about Bill C-19, the employment tax credit, which we will be getting to later tonight. But when member after member rise from the official opposition benches and talk about everything under the sun, such as their constituencies, their grandmother, their ailments, everything except the content of the bill, that is wasting time.

The hon. member for St. John's West talks about the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) not saying anything. When the Minister of Finance spoke in this debate a couple of weeks ago, he said more in five minutes than the hon. member from St. John's West said in an hour and a half in debate on the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: In fact, I would ask hon. members to check Hansard for the days when the hon. member for St. John's West was speaking. I think hon. members will find that the same speech was given today in a truncated form. The hon. member is like a musak tape: it plays over and over again until one changes the tape. We have heard it so often and we heard it again this afternoon.

The official opposition ruminate and fulminate about this terrible rule. They call it closure. I would like to remind members opposite that on December 5 last year, a scant two months after Parliament had opened, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) rose in his place concerning Bill C-20, the mortgage tax bill. I think the bill was in Committee of the Whole stage. They talk about arrogance on our side, but after second reading had been granted, one day after bringing Bill C-20 into Committee of the Whole, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, as reported at page 2149 of Hansard, said this:

> Closure was used by C. D. Howe and it became an infamous rule of the House in the flag debate. It was the initiative behind the debate to ram changes in the rules of the House down the throats of members. I do not intend to do that today. What we are using here, and I think we had better make it clear to the people of Canada, is time allocation under the provisions of Standing Order 75C. This is a far gentler measure.

That is what he said on December 7. I agree that what we are doing here is trying to expedite the business of the House. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton knows, as do all House leaders, that time must come to end debate. This is an important bill. We are talking about borrowing $12 billion for the Government of Canada. We need to have this bill put through very quickly. I will not cite the whole myriad of things that will happen if this bill is stalled any longer. The government needs this bill. I think we are fully justified in bringing in 75C.

I think we can have some fun looking at the record. Later on the same page the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton said:

> I have only done this because there is no end in sight to the debate, none whatsoever . . . I do not think Canadians should be shortchanged by a short-range government and a short-range opposition.

The people of Canada did not realize how short-range that government was. In looking back, we can only thank God that on February 18 the voters of Canada took a very wise and just decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Collenette: I do not want to be cruel because, when you get right down to it, I am not a bad-natured guy. I do not want to go any further with the record in that debate and quote all the words of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. After all, the government House leader and I have to deal with him on a daily basis, and generally we have a very good relationship. But on matters of principle and urgency affecting the government and legislation, we have to be blunt. That is the reason I looked up these words today.

Comments have been made in the House in the last few minutes that we are not reasonable, that we cut off debate, that we do not allow people to speak. We had seven days of throne speech debate when any member could talk about any single matter under the sun, not just matters relating to the throne speech debate. We had several days on second reading of the employment tax credit bill. I class that as a small bill as it was not one that was really controversial; in fact, the opposition will probably vote for it. We had two days in Committee of the Whole on interim supply.

The opposition rant and rave about not having adequate time to express themselves. Perhaps you were here those two days, Mr. Speaker, on the floor of the House when the official opposition could not get their act together. They needed more speakers. They wanted more time in Committee of the Whole. They have all the time in the world, but they cannot plan properly.

I am not criticizing the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton but his members do not listen to their House leader. There was debate on Friday afternoon when someone objected. They did not listen to him. I say to hon. members opposite, "Listen to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton; sometimes he is right".

Let us talk about other provisions that we will have this year when members can adequately express their feelings and points of view. We have arranged by unanimous consent a most imaginative supply order covering this year because the regular supply order is inoperative as a result of two federal elections.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Collenette: Hon. members agreed to it. There was great patting of each other's backs because everybody got together. In the fall there will be ten opposition days. Six will be in Committee of the Whole. On three of those days the hours may be extended through dinner until midnight. There will be plenty of time. However, after seeing the performance a few weeks ago of the official opposition in Committee of the Whole when we had four ministers simultaneously answering questions, I do not think they will be able to get their act together. We have given them that opportunity. There is no question of trying to cut down debate, of trying to limit an hon. member from expressing his or her views in the House.

An hon. Member: Sit down, then.

Mr. Collenette: I have ten minutes. The hon. member for St. John's West used his ten minutes. We have been most reasonable. I see the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) is here. A couple of weeks ago I stood in my place and asked for unanimous consent to extend private members' hour to the full hour because government orders had intruded by about 20 minutes into private members' hour.

We are quite reasonable. We are mild-mannered people. We are good natured. As Henry Higgins said in "My Fair Lady", we have "the milk of human kindness by the quart in every vein". I would sing it, but I do not think I should. We are quite reasonable.

Hon. members opposite have to look at their position in the debate. They talk about everything. They are still fighting the last election. I do not blame them. We had the spectacle on Friday of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) going to Toronto cap in hand, or whatever the expression is, and pouring forth his heart to Bill Davis and all the provincial Tories. He was wrong, he said, they should not have allowed that vote to happen on December 13. We can understand the sensitivities and sensibilities.

I do not want to ram anything down anyone's throat. As I said, we want to be mild-mannered and reasonable. We can understand when the Leader of the Opposition makes a public display of pouring out his heart, much like a group therapy session. We do not want to rub it in any further. The government is quite within its rights, not just technical and legal rights but within its moral rights to bring in 75C.

Mr. Knowles: No.

Mr. Collenette: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says no. We have the rule on the books. It is a rule that has been used at some times with extreme caution. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton used it in this very House only a few months ago. It is there for specific situations when urgent business has to get through the House. I think we are doing hon. members a favour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Collenette: We should be able to go back during the summer recess and say to our constituents that we had a very productive session. However, if we allowed Bill C-30 to be debated ad infinitum, we would be here all summer. I do not think any member should hold up the debate or filibuster solely out of pique, if it is pique, or solely because he disagrees with the principle of the bill.

In the United Kingdom, second reading is done within a day and all questions are put. How long does it take you to state your principles? Do you have to state them ad infinitum, like the hon. member for St. John's West? I do not think so. I am in agreement with using 75C and I welcome the opportunity to get this legislation through.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring the parliamentary secretary back from this trip to Fantasy Island.

Mr. Nowlan: He didn't take the "Love Boat", he used a scow.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This is very important. In his last utterance he talked about the importance of the principle of the bill. The principle of the bill is quite clear; it is a very easy principle. It is a desire and an attempt by the Government of Canada to borrow $12 billion.

The minister comes to this Parliament and asks for permission to borrow $12 billion. However, he has not recognized the purpose of this Parliament. Its purpose is not to put a stamp automatically, like a clerk, on a requisition for $12 billion. The purpose of this Parliament is to ask the ministry why it needs the $12 billion.

When an official of the Department of Finance is reported publicly as saying that there may be no need for the full $12 billion, the government should be satisfied and should carry on its business with something less, at least for a time. The Parliament of Canada is then entitled to ask how much less. Why did the government choose the figure of $12 billion in those circumstances?

Sometimes in these debates two things happen. Sometimes the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) or his parliamentary secretary, and now we have a Minister of State, Finance (Mr. Bussières), stand in their place during the course of the debate and tell Parliament why they need the money, or what is happening to the economic situation in the country that will require them to need the money. Sometimes they do that and sometimes they don't.

This is one of the occasions on which the government, for one reason or another, which I think is in keeping with exactly the same theory on the operation of government as we saw when they promised a bill on freedom of information—and we don't see it—comes to Parliament and says: "Parliament, you are the handmaidens of the government, we do not have to tell you anything, we will do what we please; give us the bill".

That is the issue in this debate, but the background of that issue is important because we face an unusual government. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the beginning of the Thirty-first Parliament when the Liberal party was in opposition. The then financial critic, now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), moved that the issue with respect to interest rates be the subject of examination by a parliamentary committee. The government of the day, the government of which I had the honour to be president of the privy council, agreed that this would be a good thing. Then when we were in opposition, the first motion we brought forward under Standing Order 43 called upon the government opposite to do precisely what they said they wanted us to do. And they said no.

We heard during the election campaign that this 18 cents tax on gasoline was dreadful. Some people would agree with that, others would not. There is still revenue to be raised in the country. But in any event, hon. members opposite were returned to office. They were returned on a condition that their oil price would be less than ours. Mr. Speaker, the ink was not dry on their commissions as cabinet ministers signed by the Governor General before we began to hear noises suggesting that their promise, their commitment, meant nothing at all.

Then, Mr. Speaker, they floated an idea on a principle which was stolen from the Hon. Robert Lorne Stanfield with respect to the indexation of income tax; that was his proposal made by him during the course of an election campaign, and it was stolen and adopted in the course of that great conversion by John Turner before he flew the coop—

An hon. Member: Do you want him back?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The hon. member from Newfoundland over there asks whether we want him back. I can say this: you fellows could certainly use him back; at least he understood the House of Commons from the point of view of a minister of finance coming to this chamber and coming clean with the members sitting here, which is something the present Minister of Finance has yet to understand.

In any event, what is happening now is that this commitment made by the government is being changed. They are now beginning to raise taxes. They are raising taxes through the back door. They are raising taxes on the backs of the poor and the disadvantaged. That is something I never heard anything about in the course of the election campaign. They gave the impression that if they were returned to office everything would be roses, we would wallow in prosperity. Instead, we are wallowing in unemployment and we are wallowing in a lack of candour with the House of Commons as to what direction the country is going to take.

I can say now, on behalf of this party, that if the Minister of Finance, who is in the House, will tell us upon what date he proposes to bring in his budget, we will end this debate now. We would allow that bill to proceed and there would be no point dealing with the closure motion. But he is not going to do that. He is not going to do that at all. What has he done? One thing he stole from our budget, which I thought was a sound item, was the proposal regarding the small business development bond. People are writing to us asking when they are going to bring it in. Not a whisper; no advantage to small businessmen. Farmers have been denied the advantageous capital gains measure which was in our budget. All these things have been denied while the Minister of Finance is out behind the international curtain in Paris attending this conference and that conference.

The cost of the oil import equalization program has now risen to $3.32 billion from $3.1 billion. This means we shall be faced with a deficit of $14 billion. And we are asked to approve a blank cheque for that government, that spendthrift, wastrel government. No, Mr. Speaker, no blank cheque.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): When my friend—and he is my friend—the government House leader talks about improving the rules of the House of Commons and about shortened speeches, I say this to him: I will agree to shorten speeches, but not for nothing. I will agree to shorten speeches in return for something very important to us and to all members of this Parliament, even the silent Liberals who get up and down like trained seals to support a government which even they must have doubt about, given the breaches of promises. I want some power given to this Parliament. I want this Parliament and future Parliaments to cease to be handmaidens of the government. As the member of a government I prepared a program which would have done precisely that and, at the same time, shorten speeches. We are now some 90 days into this session and though the government House leader talks about improving our rules and shortening our procedures, streamlining them and so on, has the House committee on Procedure and Organization met? No, it has not. Parliamentary reform to that party over there, at least as they have demonstrated it, is not intended to improve the lot of private members or to make government more accountable to Parliament; it is to make Parliament more convenient for the government of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Gourd: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to say that the opposition House leader (Mr. Baker) referred to the ninetieth day. I want to point out to the House that it is the forty-first day of the session.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I thank the hon. member very much. It just seems like 90 days bearing in mind the legislative wasteland we have had to deal with so far and the lack of answers we have received. But that is the position we are in. It does not lie in the hands of the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader to say that the legislation we put through last Friday, co-operating with the government, is unimportant.

Mr. Collenette: I did not say that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He did. He called them small bills, little bills, unimportant bills. "Small change" he just called it. If farm improvement legislation and small business legislation can be described as small bills, I think the parliamentary secretary had better look to his priorities with respect to the problems of this country.

Time Allocation for Bill C-30

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Treasury Board: Mr. Speaker, what we are engaged in today is, to my mind, a demonstration of what appears to be the consensus of this House that speeches need not extend beyond a limit of ten minutes. I trust that if this matter does come before the committee to which the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) referred within the next few days we can start from the basis of that consensus rather than work from the premise that certain members of the House need extended time in order to put a few ideas before the House and before the public.

I am particularly concerned that the hon. member would stand in his place and suggest he has such a deal for the government today. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) would stand before this House and give him but a date, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton would be prepared to allow this bill to go forward. I was listening rather attentively before the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton rose to speak because it has been my experience in this House that you cannot listen to just one person opposite to determine what it is hon. members opposite are really after. If you do that, you find yourself running a fool's errand. If you give in first on one item, then you find there is one more thing they want and after that just one more thing. I would not stand in my place and support a government which would give in to that kind of pressure—I am almost willing to say blackmail. This government has been elected to govern this nation and not to give in to the power play tactics of members of an opposition who refuse to support bills or who support them so that they can buy something for themselves.

● (1600)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Daudlin: To get back to my point, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton said that if we would but give him that date, he would assure us that his party would no longer stop this bill. That says two things. It confirms what the government House leader and the parliamentary secretary before me said, and that was that the opposition is systematically stoppping this bill from going forward for no other reason but simply to stop it. That should not be allowed to continue. The hon. member said, "Give us a date". The former minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), said, "Give me the date, and we will be prepared to allow this bill to pass". However, then he had second thoughts about that and said that in addition to the date he was concerned about what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) was doing about oil prices. Already we see the hint that if we were to give a date, hon. members opposite would not be satisfied with that and we would have to give in to something else. I am sure hon. members in the New Democratic Party would then want to jump on the same horse, and they would raise their particular pet peeve.

The people I have the joy to represent, the people of Essex-Kent, and others sent this government to Ottawa to conduct the affairs of this nation as best it saw possible. The people of Essex-Kent thought that all men and women sent to this House were honourable and capable of sitting down and negotiating what is required so that things could happen in this House. The people sent us here believing that men and women of good will can sit down and negotiate to a conclusion which benefits the nation. When I go home, people ask why we sit and listen to people talking on a bill hour after hour seemingly with no direction. Why is it that there seems to be no particular relevance in the debates? Why is it that we seem to hear the same things being said again and again?

I can tell from the look on your face, Mr. Speaker, that you have gone through the speeches and said to yourself: "I have seen this before. Surely this is nothing new. My goodness, surely some other hon. member has said this before". When we go through the speeches, we find that that is exactly what is going on. It is déjà vu. We have seen it all before, and that kind of thing should not be allowed.

If we were limited to ten minute speeches like we are today, and if we were forced to come to the issues before us and the principles of bills and tried to divorce ourselves from repeating what has gone on before, we would find that a debate could be completed in a day and all the new ideas could have been brought forward. That is the kind of thing I think we should be moving toward.

During his short intervention the hon. member for St. John's West spoke about rumours and rumours fueling rumours. It is interesting to hear that because one is forced to reflect on the source of those rumours. We hear opposition members in this place day after day saying not that some minister or some hon. member but some mysterious person from the bureaucracy has been floating some kind of an idea. Some servant of the public has said such and such and "Is that not a terrible thing, and does that not mean that the government is going in certain directions?" I have a great deal of respect for this House, and what we should do first is listen to what the ministers of the Crown are saying in this House. That is the direction which is being given in terms of where the government of the day is going. We should not be going to The Globe and Mail on the fifth page to determine whether some idea is being floated or whether there is a rumour. We should be sitting in the House, listening and determining from that what the direction of the government is, and we should be debating it.

Hon. members opposite talk about the government not pressing forward by giving them a budget in the time frame they would like. It is interesting, is it not, that we had an election on February 18 and that we were back in this House on April 3? However, that is not good enough. Immediately the opposition says we have to do better. They forget the election of May 22 and coming back to this House on October 8. We had to wait until December for a budget.

An hon. Member: We had to uncook the books.

Mr. Daudlin: Hon. members opposite forget those things when they say we are not doing well enough. We have done better than they, we continue to do better, and it does not take much of an effort to do better.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. member not like to correct his statement? We were not back on April 3. It was April 14.

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected. The hon. member will forgive a lapse. I was back in Ottawa on the third wishing we had already resumed, and I am certain I saw the hon. member in the halls on the same day. It has been suggested that we are rushing on to closure. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) pointed out that the previous House leader had taken some pains in a previous debate in December to indicate the difference between the application of Standing Order 75C and the closure rules which also exist. I think it is important that the people across Canada understand that distinction, but I ask hon. members opposite to do more than pay lip service to the fact that there is in existence that kind of a set of rules. They started today by admitting rather belatedly, and I think rather sheepishly, that while they were in government they said there is a distinction and a difference. When their own speeches are brought to their attention they have to admit that, but they still stand in their places and talk again about closure. If anyone has to come clean, it is hon. members opposite. I ask that they abide by the rules. If they want the rules changed, let us sit down and change them; but until we do change them let us use them effectively and do what we are here to do, and that is to see that the best interests of Canada are served.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Daudlin). I note in passing that off the floor the hon. gentleman in a way is a personal friend of mine, but on the floor obviously and necessarily he is a political adversary, since we live in an adversary system.

The hon. gentleman talks about reform, but the procedure committee has not yet been structured. I have been on the procedure committee and that committee has tried to reform this House in a meaningful way for many years. There is a fear on the part of members of the opposition with regard to so-called reform coming from the government opposite. In the last number of years the government has had only a brief three months' experience in opposition. Our fear is exemplified by what is going on in the House today. Our fear is that reform will be chloroform to the rights and privileges of members of the opposition whose only real medium and vehicle for opposition is rhetoric and the ability to stand in this House to make the odd speech from time to time.

There can be reform. In some debates the length of speeches should very well be cut down. Reference has been made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) to the English system. We all know that the mechanics of the rules of procedure of the unitary system in England are fundamentally different from those of the House of Commons of Canada. Canada stretches some 4,000 miles from sea to sea and the analogy of the unitary system does not fit.

Talking of déjà vu, I cannot imagine any precedent in history that would allow what is going on here today. There is a reason. It was not quite what the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said, as I heard him, that the debate on the whole bill might very well stop. Certainly as far as this party is concerned, the debate on the motion would stop if the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought into the House of Commons a budget, so that members who wanted to speak on the budget debate had an opportunity to do so.

Mr. Collenette: Oh.

Mr. Nowlan: The Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council had a chance to speak. Frankly I was surprised at the list of numbers. I was away for a couple of days last week. If I was told that 24 or 35 members in opposition had spoken on this bill, their case might have been a little stronger. But for members opposite to take the Holy Grail now and wrap themselves in a shroud of sanctimonious rhetoric about delay and filibuster is the absolute height of hypocrisy after what they did to the previous government on the mortgage tax deductibility bill. That issue was debated during one election. The public of Canada had given a certain definition of approval for that issue along with other issues. It had been ventilated with the public.

The fundamental reason for a House of Commons, if one wants to go back to England and the days of yore, is to debate the power of the purse, not to pass mortgage deductibility bills and legislative bills. In terms of the analogy of England, it is just sad. The fact of the matter is that they have a wholly different unitary system. They bring in a budget before they try their allocation procedure. They have a five-year or a ten-year plan for financial estimates which is basic and obviously has changes. But the big thing they have in the federal House which we in this country do not have is that in the normal course of events there are changes in government, and the very change in government acts as a governor on what the new government will do. Remembering some of the frustrations of opposition, the new government will not be quite as arrogant or quite as indirect in terms of changing the rules.

They appreciate the frustrations and the problems in opposition.

There is a sickness in this country in terms of parliamentary democracy. It was one of the sadnesses of the defeat of February 18, regardless of the fact that some people sit on the right side and some on the left side of the House. I am referring to the fact that through our parliamentary institution there was not enough time to educate those who only had days in government. Both of the parliamentary secretaries who spoke today are able parliamentarians. They would be that much more able and competent if they had had a longer time in opposition to understand the real process of government, rather than the brief few days they were in opposition.

The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd) spoke on a point of order. He mentioned that this House of Commons has only been sitting for 41 days since the last election. The totality of the previous government's term was only 47 days. That is not time enough for parliamentary secretaries, no matter how able or competent, to start to appreciate what real reform should be, especially those members who have only sat in government. We cannot get real reform when a basic blank cheque bill for $12 billion is brought in and there has been no direction from the government treasury benches as to how government fiscal and monetary policies will be utilized and developed from that $12 billion.

I mainly mentioned the parliamentary secretaries who spoke, but the Minister of Finance was here before. How many members opposite came here only in 1974? How many of them appreciate that the total budget of the House of Commons and the Government of Canada up until 1968 was only $12 billion? I think the two parliamentary secretaries both were elected in 1974. I am not casting anything on them personally, but they have had no experience in terms of restraint in government spending. Six years later the budget, which had reached $12 billion in the first term of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), was $28 billion. We all know what has been happening ever since. We are being asked for a blank cheque amounting to $1 billion for each month, or, as someone said, in effect it is $1 billion for each of the 12 hours that this debate has lasted.

Obviously the public outside is turned off by a lot of what goes on inside here. There is a crying out for some direction in economic policy, so that their pocketbooks mean a little more at the end of a week than will be the case if inflation and all the other economic problems are not brought under control and there is not some direction from the treasury benches. I do not think the public is upset because we have spent 12 hours on a blank cheque for $12 billion. It was almost the exact amount of total federal spending back in 1968, which at that time amounted to $12,200 million. That is why members of the opposition resent this fact.

In a new Parliament there are supposed to be opportunities to reform our procedures. All members know we have archaic methods and outdated rules which must be brought up to date. One does not start to develop that atmosphere when the government brings in time allocation or closure—call it what you will, we all know what it does; it cuts off debate—in the first major spending program. Quite frankly I am amazed.

If my party had stayed in power longer, I would have counselled my prime minister to bring in allocation many more times on issues of topical interest where the public could give its opinion on the subject matter, whether it was on unemployment or legislative bills. That is where allocation should come in, when debate has been held up by an opposition that goes on and on. One only has to read the debates of the last House to see the repetitive speeches on the mortgage tax deductibility bill. Debate went on for six or eight days. I forget how many hours or how many speakers there were. I would venture to say that both parliamentary secretaries who spoke here today contributed their words of repetition to that debate. The public of Canada had already decided upon that issue, among other reasons, by voting for us in the election held just before.

It is rather ironic that we are debating this matter today, this allocation motion. We all know that the real action today is not in this House, but it involves the House, the people across the country from coast to coast, the spokesmen for the federal government and/or the provincial governments who are at 24 Sussex Drive.

In view of some of the events which occurred outside the House in the last three weeks, I should like to say that there has been some good will. Everyone in the House wanted to ensure that there was a strong No. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said that his party would be voting no to this motion tonight. I should like to indicate that the members on my side of the House will be voting no to this motion. There has been some good will, but good will is not built in a new Parliament when a blank cheque for $12 billion is brought in. This cannot be done after only 12 speakers from Her Majesty's loyal opposition and four from the NDP have participated. The government cannot say that is time to cut off debate.

We are heading into the summer recess and the Prime Minister is trying to wrestle and come to grips with the premiers of the provinces in order to resolve fundamental questions. We all know that attitude is important. I gather my time is just about up on this motion, but in closing it is ironic that the Prime Minister sent roses or flowers to the different suites of the premiers as they checked in last night. I give him credit for that; perhaps it will get things off to a good start at 24 Sussex. Hopefully roses and sweet flowers in the suites of the premiers will help; but poison ivy in the House of Commons will not help the attitude, impression, confidence and reciprocation of members. This allocation motion is a dose of poison ivy. It will poison the atmosphere and affect members in their deliberations when we get on with government business. I am certainly glad we are voting no.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I, too, join in this debate on the imposition of Standing Order 75C. I agree wholeheartedly that it should be imposed. I have been in the House, watched this debate go on and listened to what hon. members opposite had to say. In fact, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) just said that there were 12, 13 or 15 members of the opposition who spoke.

Mr. McDermid: Out of 103.

Mr. Evans: There were 22 members who spoke, two of whom are on the government benches.

An hon. Member: There were three government members.

Mr. Evans: Excuse me, there were three. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), myself, and the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey). That leaves 19 opposition members.

● (1620)

The reason we did not stand in our places and speak on this bill, C-30, was that we wanted to hear what opposition members had to say. In 12 hours of debate we have now heard everything at least three times. About half-way or two-thirds of the way through that debate I stood in my place and for 40 minutes gave answers to questions raised by hon. members opposite. I answered those questions to the best of my ability and with honesty. I am sure hon. members agreed with that because they complimented me on my efforts. We have answered those questions and if there are additional questions I would be willing and have been willing to answer them. In fact, I did answer supplementary questions put to me by hon. members on this particular bill.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, at a time when we have a new Parliament that has almost one year of backlog material to be dealt with in this House, is this a time to be spending five days, as we have done so far and six after Wednesday, on a bill that is two paragraphs long extending to two pages?

An hon. Member: Involving $12 billion.

Mr. Evans: There is the backlog of material that has to be dealt with in this House. These are the bills before this House at this time. If we are required to spend five days of debate on this bill, how long is it going to take us to deal with all these bills?

It is quite clear that a filibuster has been taking place and that it would continue to take place. I have been told by hon. members opposite that they have enough speakers to continue for as long as the debate will last.

An hon. Member: Obviously.

Mr. Evans: In other words, the government is being forced into the position of having to impose 75C in order that we can have the kind of debate we are having today, and that is the truth of the matter.

Having regard to the questions that were asked, hon. members opposite have said that if the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance brought down a budget they would discontinue the debate. I have now heard the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants say, of course, that that only applies to not continuing this particular debate on this motion today and did not apply to discontinuing the debate on the bill itself. I stood in my place last Monday night and gave indications why the Minister of Finance has not yet brought down a budget and why it will be a little while before he is able to bring down a budget. There were two issues. Hon. members opposite know those two issues and, putting all rhetoric aside, have to agree with them.

The first is that you cannot bring down a budget involving revenues and expenditures when one of the major revenue sources and revenue drains facing this government, the energy pricing issue, has not been resolved. If you do not have clear information about those revenues and expenditures, about what will happen to the oil import compensation payments and what is going to happen to revenues that come to the federal government from this area, then a budget is not possible.

The second issue involves the envelope system first conceived by Mr. Andras, who is no longer with us in this House. That system was implemented by hon. members opposite when they were in government. We compliment them for that because we think it is a good system and we are going to continue it. This envelope system requires that ministers understand clearly what are the trade-offs within their various departments, in the envelopes, so as to be able to put forward expenditure plans that reflect the priorities within those envelopes. The ministers are working diligently to see that this is done.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is working diligently to see that an energy pricing package is negotiated with the provinces and agreed to. When those two things are in place we will be able to bring down a budget. It will be a well-thought-out budget which will deal with the priorities this government has, taking into consideration the objections and concerns of the opposition.

The fact of the matter is, and hon. members opposite have to agree, that the federal government has to continue; it cannot cease to exist as of the end of this month. Gentlemen opposite know that the borrowing authority available to this government cannot last forever, that it will run out at the end of this month or the middle of next month. Hon. members opposite would like to debate this. I can tell them that if they pass the bill at second reading it will go to the committee where detailed questions can be asked and detailed answers given. This is not the place or the time for that kind of debate. We are debating the bill in principle. Is it a principle of hon. members opposite to have the government run out of money and cease to exist? I certainly hope that is not the case, but that is what will happen unless Bill C-30 passes.

This bill is necessary or it would not have been brought forward. The bill asks the permission of the House for the government to borrow additional moneys to keep it going during the interim period until a new budget can be brought down, until an energy pricing agreement can be reached, and until the envelope system can be well-thought-out and put into place. That is what the government is asking for and it is reasonable.

The estimates handed down by the previous government and reintroduced by this government, though they do not represent our spending plans, until supplementary estimates are brought in are our spending plans. These estimates clearly indicate what will be done with the $12 billion. The expenditures and revenues are clearly represented in those estimates. If hon. members opposite will read the estimates they will recognize that this is what they were faced with when in government.

The people who watch us daily and who read what is going on in the House of Commons are becoming a little disturbed that progress is not being made with bills that are really not matters involving philosophical differences between parties. Hon. members opposite know that, had the Conservative government been put back in place, this bill would have been introduced by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), or whoever would then have been minister of finance. This bill does not involve philosophical differences but rather is a matter of keeping the government running.

It is time we stopped this fooling around and got down to the business of moving forward with the important issues that have to come before this House. There are many such issues. I just need to hold up this particular package again to indicate the number of issues that need to be debated in this House. These are Commons bills. We have had 12 hours of debate and we will have one more day of debate on Wednesday on this bill that contains two paragraphs. Certainly it refers to $12 billion. If they look at the estimates handed down by the last government hon. members will find that this is $12 billion that they would have requested.

We are proposing this motion under Standing Order 75C in order to get this matter before the committee where specific questions can be asked and detailed answers can be given. In this way we can move on with the business of governing this country and quit this horsing around.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That was a great piece of rhetoric, Mr. Speaker, devoid of any content whatsoever. One of the previous speakers mentioned the fact that we repeat things in this House over and over again. Let me take a local example of the radar at Victoria international airport. We have repeated the facts of this situation over and over again. In spite of that, when we speak to the minister he says: "Well, isn't there radar at Victoria international airport"? They do not listen.

It is high time we looked at some of the philosophical bases on which this Parliament works. Let me read just a few words in this vein. These are not my words but are taken from a document, the authors of which I will deal with in a moment. It is a perfectly respectable report to this House, and the first chapter begins as follows:

> Accountability is the working principle of our parliamentary system and a process whose effective functioning is essential to our democratic government.

Those are very fundamental words in respect of this particular debate—accountability, the parliamentary system and democratic government. This particular closure motion brought under Standing Order 75C is a denial in these circumstances of the accountability of the parliamentary system and of democratic government. The government refuses to let us know the reasons it is asking for authority to borrow $12 billion.

Mr. McDermid: It's a nice round figure.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is a round figure. As the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) mentioned a few minutes ago, it was the entire expenditure of the Liberal government when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) assumed office. The figure has now reached the point where they are talking about $56 billion or $60 billion.

One could reflect on just what this amount of money means. Attempts have been made in this House to define billions of dollars. I have worked out one way. If one were to stack one thousand dollar bills one on top of another until one reached $1 billion, the stack would be higher than the Peace Tower. That is merely $1 billion. Twelve of these stacks one on top of the other would amount to a stack which would be 3,800 feet high.

Mr. Simmons: How about dimes?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Such a stack would probably amount to a little more than one kilometer. That is a lot of one thousand dollar bills. Without a proper debate, a proper explanation or a budget, that is what we in this House are being asked to approve.

That quotation I gave was taken from the Lambert report that was tabled in this House in March, 1979, and it goes on to say at page 370:

> Parliament has three tasks to perform, to legislate, to grant supply and authorize the levying of taxes, and, ultimately, to support or replace the Ministry.

As part of its granting of supply:

> Parliament's responsibility . . . is the continuous scrutiny that it is empowered to maintain over the government's implementation of the measures to which Parliament has given assent.

The government is asking us for a blank cheque for $12 billion yet, according to the fundamental philosophy under which this Parliament works, we are expected to undertake continuous scrutiny. How can we scrutinize something about which we do not know? Page 371 of the Lambert report says:

> The key to Parliament's role as a body to which accountability is owed for the administration of government has always been the need for Parliament's approval of government expenditure and its power to review that expenditure.

How are we ever going to be able to review that expenditure if we do not know on what it is the $12 billion is to be expended? That is the conundrum here. The government has only to explain the $12 billion. It has not even told us how much of the previous borrowing authority it failed to use. Under the Lambert report in January of this year a special adviser was appointed to advise the government on what action it should take within one year of each of the commission's recommendations.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that in fact his question about how much borrowing authority since March 31, 1980, and prior to March 31, 1980. had been used can be found on the record in Hansard, if the hon. member will just look for it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would like to take another extract from the Lambert report, and that is recommendation No. 21.2:

> —there be established a committee of the House of Commons to be known as the Standing Committee on Government Finance and the Economy, that the annual fiscal plan presented to Parliament be automatically and permanently referred to this committee, that the committee report to the House on its study of the plan, and, that the government respond formally to the committee's report during a subsequent debate.

To my knowledge, this government has not taken any steps whatever to implement that very important recommendation and establish a committee on government finance and the economy. Nor has it presented an annual fiscal plan. It presented part of a plan in a statement on motions but refuses to produce its full plan. This is the problem which this Parliament faces.

I address through you, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) directly and say that he should know that this Parliament cannot willingly, without the imposition of this closure rule, approve a blank cheque for $12 billion for a government which refuses to account for its expenditures, and we on this side of the House will not approve it. Using standards of domestic husbandry, it is evident that patterns of regular deficits signify bad management. When those regular deficits are taken in a governmental context and on a national basis—and not only are they regular deficits, but regularly mounting deficits—then there is cause for concern and alarm.

A former president of the Treasury Board appeared at a meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association which was brought together to discuss the problems of parliamentary scrutiny over public finance and to suggest ways of altering the balance between the legislature and the executive. Mr. Robert Andras was the Canadian spokesman at that particular meeting. One has cause for great concern because it was he while president of the Treasury Board who saw these deficits mount. They have mounted to such a degree that we are now faced with a net debt—and I hesitate to use the figure because it verges on meaningless—of $55.8 billion in 1979.

The net debt per capita of this country is almost $2,400. Every man, woman and child in this country owes and will have to meet a debt charge of, to be exact, $2,360 in 1979. This is the matter which causes us such grave concern and alarm, and I refer not only to this Parliament but to the people of Canada.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I believe we had one of the more amusing periods in this House this afternoon when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) quite openly embraced the views which had been expressed by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

I could not help but reflect back to one of my very first days, indeed my third day, in this particular chamber, when we were involved in another debate such as this one on exactly the same kind of motion under Standing Order 75C. On that particular day the positions were reversed in that it was the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who spoke and who was followed by the hon. member for St. John's West, if hon. members would check Hansard. On that day they were talking about the same kind of motion and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, to his credit, took exactly the same position as he took today, with one added touch. Today he was able to embrace the views of the hon. member for St. John's West. When the speaking positions were reversed, the result was somewhat different. Then the hon. member for St. John's West was in a position to comment on what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said. The hon. member for St. John's West said it was a lot of trash and nonsense.

Mr. Knowles: Now I know I was right.

Mr. Simmons: Now the hon. member should know that he was right. It was not he but the hon. member for St. John's West who changed gears on this one. What the hon. member for St. John's West embraces in June of 1980 he thought then was a lot of trash. That sums up the ludicrous position taken by the Tories in this debate this afternoon. I have never heard such blatant hypocrisy as that expressed on this bill this afternoon.

We heard this afternoon from the hon. member for St. John's West. "Old Leather Lungs" himself was bellowing forth about how this was the worst thing that had ever happened in this House. But five or six months ago he sat here and defended this kind of action. He went further, Mr. Speaker. If you check the Hansard for December 7 you will find that not only did he want to ram it through in two hours on a Friday afternoon, but he wanted the House to forgo supper hour and have a special Friday night sitting. He could not wait until Monday to get it over with. That Friday afternoon he moved a motion as follows:

That the House sit through the dinner hour and extend the hours of sitting tonight—

That is the kind of rush he was in in those days. How he has changed! What a transformation inside five or six months! He stands here with a straight face and scolds us for taking a full three months to bring in a budget. Is his memory so short that he forgets it was almost seven months before he could bring in that terrible excuse for a budget on December 11 last? He talks about the gag, the guillotine and all the other pretty things he can dream up. Where was his entertaining rhetoric six months ago? Was he silent then? Was he just swallowing or was he doing what he does on most issues—taking whichever side is convenient at the time?

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Simmons: The New Democratic crowd would know all about changing positions, having changed on the constitution and taken both sides—having been for lower interest rates when they were high, and now that they are lower, screaming that they should be higher because of a recession.

An hon. Member: Oh no.

Mr. Simmons: Not all of them, just the spokesman for finance. He was on the radio two weeks ago lamenting that if interest rates go down too much, it might have some severe economic implications. They sat on both sides of the constitution and on both sides of interest matters. They know all about taking both sides, Mr. Speaker, and they have taken them. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I am reminded that today I have on what I call my "Ed Broadbent suit". It is a suit with two inside pockets. In one pocket he carries a speech representing one side of the situation, but if it is not opportune to deliver that speech he just reaches into his other pocket and takes out a speech on the other side of the issue. With only one speech you will notice, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I would remind the hon. member that he should not use the name of an hon. member but rather his riding.

Mr. Simmons: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I should have said the "patron saint of instant solutions"—

Mr. McDermid: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder what Mr. Broadbent's two speeches have to do with rule 75C which we are supposedly debating at the present time.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is wondering; he wonders about so many other things. Let us see if we can find something that he can understand.

I am glad to see the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) coming into the chamber.

Mr. Baker (Nepean Carleton): I think I will leave.

Mr. Simmons: He, too, with a straight face talked about the budget. He was leader of a government in the House that could not produce in six months what he condemns us for not producing in three—a budget. He wants a date for the budget and suddenly all his principles go out the window. He talks about trained seals. If he really wants to see some trained seals he should look behind him when we call the vote on this motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: I say to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton that $12 billion should not come as a surprise to him. If he looks at the revenue and expenditure program contained in the Tory budget he will find that the borrowing requirement was indeed in the order of $12 billion, so this should come as no surprise to him.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Eight.

Mr. Simmons: The official opposition was prepared to support a borrowing requirement of $12 billion when they were the government. Now they ask why we want $12 billion. I say they should read their own estimates and find out why we want $12 billion.

An hon. Member: You read them.

Mr. Simmons: I am told that when we were debating Bill C-20 in opposition last December, the mortgage bill, we took two or three days—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, you are wrong.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh, you went on and on and on.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Seven days.

Mr. Simmons: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton says we took seven days. The note I have before me says two or three. Would the hon. member like to put it on the record?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If it is appropriate, Mr. Speaker, I will read what I said on that occasion when speaking for the government, as follows:

I happen to be quite a reasonable man.

I was speaking of myself, Mr. Speaker.

We have already spent seven days discussing this bill.

There appeared to be no end in sight. I think the record should be corrected to show that with respect to that bill a mighty filibuster was mounted by the opposition.

An hon. Member: Because the bill was so bad.

Mr. Simmons: I too, am anxious to have the record corrected, Mr. Speaker, in case my figure was wrong. It was only my third day in the House and the debate did not seem to me to have gone on for very long.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to say something about this closure motion. It is not simply a procedural matter in my judgment and I do not look upon it as inconsequential. I do not think that Standing Order 75C is simply to be used for the convenience of the government. I think it is a bad policy when the government decides to use closure after a limited debate.

I began by saying closure was never intended to be simply a convenience; it was intended to be used if, as and when a debate had gone on at great length and there was some essential time constriction. Closure was never intended to be used to permit the government to do what it otherwise could not do.

I want to suggest that if the government had brought in its budget and indicated its fiscal intentions, if it had shown what its economic policy was going to be, then we might have expected the government to bring in a bill asking for permission to borrow money in order to facilitate expenditures during periods of slow revenue growth. But that is not the case. This government has been in existence for only 16 weeks. The House has been in session for only eight weeks. We are talking about a piece of major legislation. Just because it is a short bill containing two or three paragraphs does not in any way make it of no consequence. This is major legislation. This is legislation that speaks to the very heart of Parliament. This is legislation that speaks about the right of government to go into the marketplace unfettered and borrow money. This is legislation that is asking Parliament to say to the government that the government has the right, without ever telling Parliament for what use the money is to be put, to go and borrow and to repay in any currency. I repeat, to repay in any currency. This is major legislation.

An hon. Member: Read the estimates.

Mr. Deans: We cannot read the estimates. There is no budget. There is no policy. There is no economic direction. There is no fiscal policy. In fact, there is no responsibility at this point in terms of the government.

During the debate I said that if the government could tell us that it intends to bring in a budget some time in the fall, why does it not just ask for six months of borrowing? Why does the government not come to the House of Commons and ask for permission to go into the marketplace any time between now and October, if you wish—choose a date—and borrow up to 50 per cent of the total amount of the expected requirements for the fiscal year? Then the remainder could be sought after the budget is brought in and Parliament has had an opportunity to pass judgment on the appropriateness of the government's fiscal and monetary intentions. That would make sense.

I can recall a debate not at all unlike this debate, in a minority government in another place, debating the requirements of that government's intentions to borrow, and limiting that government to a period of time that would require it to return to the legislature—in this case the House of Commons—to seek further borrowing approval. This procedure would allow the House of Commons and those who are elected by the people of Canada to pass judgment not only on the appropriateness of the further borrowing, but on the appropriateness to which the borrowing that had taken place was put.

I think that is fiscal responsibility and is not asking too much. I think that every member in this House knows from the debate that has taken place outside among the people of this country that the public are very concerned about the government's unfettered spending, about the government being able to borrow without any evident sense of responsibility and accountability to the House of Commons. I do not delude myself. I understand that the House of Commons has very little power over the way in which the government spends money, particularly in a majority government situation. I also understand that there is a requirement on all of us to pass some judgment about the government's expenditures. There is a requirement on all of us to rise in our places and take part in the debate, and to offer suggestions as to how the government should or should not spend the tax dollars of Canadians.

We cannot in good faith hand over money to a government that does not yet know what its own fiscal policy is going to be, what its own budget is going to contain on what its own monetary policy is going to be. We cannot then be asked to hand over to that government before the government itself knows what its requirements will be or what its expenditures are likely to be, or be expected to give the government carte blanche to go into the financial marketplace and borrow anywhere in the world in any currency obligating the people of Canada to repay, before they have had an opportunity to determine whether or not the money will be used appropriately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: In our parliamentary system, just because a political party forms the government does not give it an unfettered right to borrow. It does not give that party the right to proceed without reference to the House of Commons, or the right to expend money without first determining from where the money will come.

Our parliamentary system is based on the House of Commons having the final say. How can we have the final say on the appropriateness of the government's borrowing $12 billion when we have no idea what the government intends to use that $12 billion for? Would that be responsible?

Mr. Dinsdale: No.

Mr. Deans: I ask hon. members whether they could tell their constituents how they acted on their behalf. I ask the Liberal backbenchers whether they could tell their constituents that they had acted on their behalf, that they kept a check on government expenditures, that they carefully scrutinized what the money was to be used for and then gave the government the authority to borrow. Government members cannot say that. Therefore, government members have no right to ask this House to pass this motion and the subsequent borrowing bill.

I suggest that the government is moving too hastily on this matter. Instead it should have said that because of oil price negotiations and other extraneous matters a budget cannot be in place before the fall and that i needs to go into the marketplace to borrow from time to time in order to maintain the fiscal affairs of the country. The government should have said that between now and then it will need some borrowing authority from the House of Commons and that this will be asked for quarterly or once every six months until such time as it places before Parliament what its program is going to be. Had the government done that, there would have been no difficulty. It would have passed with very little comment and the government could have gone about its business.

I say to the government that it has no right, that it is outrageous, to ask the House of Commons to give it borrowing powers for an entire year—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please; I regret to interrupt the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, it is not out of pleasure that I rise today to make my remarks and comment on this motion introduced by our House leader, but rather because I feel it is my duty so the people of Canada will know what is happening, so they will be well informed and will be able to draw their own conclusions about what opposition members have been doing.

Mr. Speaker, on May 21 last, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought forward Bill C-30 in this House for first reading. A few days later, on May 27, the Minister of Finance asked that the bill be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Then the former finance minister, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) spoke for 97 minutes. Mr. Speaker, during one hour and 37 minutes, the hon. member for St. John's West addressed this House and the people of Canada or perhaps thought he was addressing the people of Canada with the verve he is known for, and he spoke again for ten minutes this afternoon. What struck me the most in the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's West—one cannot help noticing it—is his fondness for the word "budget."

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—Cultural affairs—Government support for Vancouver Art Gallery; the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Industry—Proposal for installation of syncrolift in St. John's dockyard; the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly)—Search and rescue—Inquiry why capability on west coast not upgraded.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CHARITABLE GIFTS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to give individual taxpayers the option of claiming charitable gifts as deductions from taxable income or of deducting 50 per cent of the value of charitable gifts from income tax payable, and amending the present $100 standard tax deduction for medical and charitable purposes to apply only to medical expenses.

He said: The purpose of the motion, Mr. Speaker, that I am bringing before the House today is to help voluntary organizations make a greater contribution to the quality of life in Canada. Specifically, I am urging the government to amend the Income Tax Act; first, to remove the standard $100 deduction for charitable donations and, second, to replace the standard deduction with a 50 per cent tax credit along with the option of continuing to deduct charitable contributions from taxable income if it is in the taxpayer's interest to do so.

I hope to show in this debate that this tax reform, first advocated by the committee of national voluntary organizations, is fiscally sound, beyond partisanship and urgently needed. It is needed because, at this very moment when our expanding society is benefiting from a vast range of services in the voluntary sector, the voluntary sector itself is struggling to survive financially.

There can hardly be a Canadian who is not helped or being helped by one or more of Canada's 45,000 registered charities. There are organizations for the disadvantaged within Canada, the poor, the sick and the needy. There are organizations for all groups, from children to the aged. There are health organizations for research and heart and lung disease, cancer, diabetes, muscular dystrophy, health services for the mentally or physically handicapped. There are religious organizations sustaining and preserving our spiritual values, be they Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Islamic or Buddhist. There are international development organizations providing basic needs to people in the developing countries. There are educational organizations for universities, colleges, adult education, child education, future studies. There are environmental organizations for the preservation and beautification of our air, land, water and cities. There are cultural organizations for native and ethnic groups for art, music and dance. Some voluntary organizations serve national needs, others serve local communities. Many of these needs cannot be met by government or business.

The benefits of voluntary activity extend to the participants, recipients and the community as a whole. For the participant, voluntary activity is a means to become involved in his or her community at a time when other community ties such as the family and the work place are being eroded. Voluntary activity helps a person to develop into a better, happier human being with a greater sense of purpose and understanding.

For the recipient of voluntary activity, a service is provided which might otherwise be unaffordable. It is more likely to be responsive to his or her individual need and more personal than a government or a bureaucracy.

Of course, if individuals are healthier and happier, society as a whole benefits. Through voluntary organizations, the talent, creativity and energy of human society are more fully utilized, with little extra cost. Often voluntary organizations are in the vanguard of social change, as in the case of civil rights, women's liberation, consumer advocacy or environmental protection. There is no way that governments could ever replace the voluntary sector—not without considerable cost in terms of human and financial resources and the loss of initiative and community purpose.

But today voluntary organizations are the victims of inflation and economic restraint which have led to a decline in individual contributions in both real and absolute terms. In 1946, Canadians donated an average of 1.2 per cent of their income to charity; in 1970, an average of only 0.5 per cent of income was donated. I believe this decline is continuing.

Corporate donations have also been declining. A 1975 study of corporate giving by the Institute of Donations and Public Affairs Research showed that donations had dropped by 15 per cent between 1974 and 1975.

Charities depend on individual contributions in order to maintain their independence from government and remain responsive to community needs. In 1977 an estimated $755 million was donated by individuals to registered charities. The value of the volunteer services which individuals donate effectively doubles the size of this contribution. But the budgets of charitable organizations are being wrecked by inflation. Most are simply not receiving sufficient donations to enable them to maintain the services we have come to expect. The financial crunch has pushed some voluntary organizations into the lottery field where they face tough competition from governments. I think it is deplorable that charitable organizations have to rely on gambling to raise money.

If we want to ensure the economic survival of voluntary organizations, we will have to find a way of encouraging private donations. That brings me to the proposed amendment to the present tax system that would, in my judgment, provide this incentive.

Let us look at the present situation. A charitable donation can be deducted from taxable income up to a maximum of 20 per cent of income. Yet in 1977, only 12.5 per cent of taxpayers filed receipts for deductions.

The deduction of charitable donations from taxable income is an unequal incentive to give for different individuals. It costs taxpayers in higher income brackets less for each dollar donation than it costs taxpayers in lower income brackets. For example, let us assume two individuals give $100 to a registered charity. One person earns $15,000 a year and has a marginal tax rate of 12 per cent. The tax on his last $100 is $12. If he donates the $100, his taxable income is reduced by $100 and his income tax payable is reduced by $12. The $100 donation consequently costs him $88.

The second person earns $25,000 and has a marginal tax rate of 30 per cent. If he donates $100, he reduces his income tax payable by $30. The cost of the $100 donation is therefore $70, as opposed to $88 for the lower income taxpayer. As we look at the whole country, it costs individuals who are taxed at the highest rate only $36 for a $100 donation; it costs those at the lowest rate $94; and those who are too poor to pay taxes at all, $100. The less you earn, the more it costs to make a donation.

The current tax system also provides for a standard deduction of $100 for charitable donations and medical expenses. In 1977, 87.5 per cent of people who paid tax claimed this standard deduction.

When a taxpayer chooses to claim the $100 standard deduction, he or she can do so without filing receipts to prove that a donation was actually made. Because the standard deduction can be claimed with or without making a donation, it provides no incentive to charitable giving. Moreover, it is expensive for the government. In 1977, the federal and provincial governments lost $245 million in tax revenue because of the $100 standard deduction.

In 1974, a coalition of national charities set up the committee of national voluntary organizations. It has 108 national members who represent thousands of groups across the country. Under the committee, a task force on tax reform was established to examine ways of enhancing the role and capacity of voluntary organizations by providing an equitable incentive for taxpayers to make donations. In 1978, the committee set up a special project task force which recommended a significant amendment to the Income Tax Act. Called the "give and take" proposal, this recommendation has gained widespread support.

Here is the essence of the proposal. Ninety-eight per cent of taxpayers have a marginal tax rate under 50 per cent. It is these people who provide the bulk of the money for charity. A 50 per cent tax credit would mean that they could donate 50-cent dollars to charity.

For the person with the $15,000 income whose $100 donation costs him $88 now, the tax credit would mean that his donation would cost only $50. For the person with the $25,000 income whose $100 donation costs him $70 now, the tax credit would also mean that his donation would cost only $50. Both persons would receive equal tax benefit regardless of income, and both would have an increased incentive to give.

The tax credit would be set at 50 per cent for three reasons. It gives increased tax benefits to 98 per cent of taxpayers; it provides individuals with the same incentives as are already provided to corporations; and it can be paid for very easily if the government eliminated the standard $100 deduction entirely for both charitable donations and medical expenses.

There is no reason why political donations should receive any more beneficial tax treatment than charitable donations, yet three-quarters of a $100 political donation can be claimed as a tax credit. A $100 donation to a political candidate therefore costs only $25. A $100 donation to a charity costs anywhere from $36 to $100, depending on income. Following the introduction of tax credits for political donations, contributions to political parties quadrupled. A similar incentive should be given to charitable donations.

The option of deducting charitable donations from taxable income would ensure that the 2 per cent of taxpayers whose marginal tax rate is over 50 per cent would not be discouraged from making donations. Although this group is small, their contributions are large—$89 million in 1977. If they were only able to claim a 50 per cent tax credit, the cost to them of their contributions would increase, and their incentive to give would therefore be decreased.

A further incentive for charitable giving could be provided to all taxpayers if the deadline for charitable donations was extended to 60 days beyond the tax year end, as is the case with registered tax shelters. There would then be less of a time lag between the donation and the tax reconciliation.

Because the $100 standard deduction provides no incentive to giving, it should be eliminated—and that proposal is at the heart of the suggested amendment. Such an amendment would increase the paper burden in Revenue Canada if it had to scrutinize receipts from the 7.7 million taxpayers who now claim the standard deduction. But the burden could be relieved if receipts were required only for donations exceeding $100. Receipts for gifts under $100 could be retained by the taxpayer in case of audit by Revenue Canada. This procedure is followed by the internal revenue service in the United States for charitable donations and is followed in Canada for child care expenses.

The national voluntary organizations' task force on tax reform has calculated what the cost of the proposal would be. With no standard deduction, a 50 per cent federal tax credit, and deductibility for taxpayers with a marginal tax rate over 50 per cent, federal and provincial governments would lose $391 million in tax revenues. In contrast, federal and provincial governments now lose about $484 million in tax revenues because of claims for the standard deduction and deductions for stated charitable donations. The proposed amendment would therefore initially save governments $93 million. According to the task force, "if giving increased at the rate of 10 per cent per year, in approximately four years the government would be at the break-even point according to 1977 figures." So I am putting forward an affordable proposal.

The $391 million cost of the proposal is calculated on the following basis. Four essential cost factors are as follows:

Receipts for $601 million in donations were claimed by taxpayers in 1977. Some $512 million of this was donated by taxpayers whose marginal rate was less than 50 per cent and who would therefore claim the tax credit. The cost of a 50 per cent tax credit on $512 million would be $256 million.

Some $89 million of the $601 million was donated by taxpayers whose marginal rate was over 50 per cent, and who would therefore claim the tax deduction. The cost of the tax deduction on $89 million would be $50 million.

The 7.7 million taxpayers who currently claim the standard deduction are estimated to give an average of $20 each to charity, for a total of $154 million. The cost of a tax credit on $154 million would be $77 million.

The medical deductions which would appear as a result of the end of the standard deduction would cost governments an estimated $8 million.

Adding all these cost factors, the total cost of the proposal is therefore $391 million. But, again, that is $93 million less than the present system costs the government.

Mr. Speaker, the "give and take" proposal for tax reform has received the support of many organizations across Canada. All the major churches are behind it. The international non-governmental organizations support it. The national and local YMCAs, YWCAs, the Red Cross, Cancer Society and United Way are all in favour. The Canadian Council on Social Development recommends it, as does the Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

● (1720)

Most recently, support has come from the Canadian Commission for the International Year of the Child. In its report tabled May 30 the commission calls for the 50 per cent tax credit and the elimination of the standard deduction in order to strengthen the voluntary sector. The needs of the voluntary sector became clear to the international year commissioners when some 4,000 proposals were submitted for projects of benefit to children. Most had to be turned down. In the commission's view, and I quote:

> In a country that is in need of new and dynamic ways of addressing social problems, the energy and commitment of its concerned citizens should not have to be expended looking for money. In the long run, a small increase in support to the voluntary sector would bring tremendous dividends to us all.

To sum up, this proposed tax reform would achieve four objectives.

First, it would provide a tax incentive for charitable giving to all taxpayers. Under the present tax system many taxpayers have no incentive at all.

Second, it would make the tax incentive as equitable as possible among all income groups. Currently, higher income taxpayers have a greater incentive than lower income taxpayers.

Third, the tax incentive for charitable giving would not be reduced for any taxpayer. By retaining the option of deducting from taxable income, higher income taxpayers would have the same incentive to give as they do now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman. He may be able to continue if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Roche: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues; I will only be a moment.

Fourth, and most importantly, the increased tax incentives would strengthen voluntary organizations. Surely this goal will commend itself to hon. members on all sides of the House. I ask hon. members to support this motion because in doing so they will be supporting the lifeblood of Canadian society, those volunteer organizations which so deeply enrich the quality of life in Canada.

It is not in our power during private members' hour to change the tax law, but it is in our power to speak with one voice, to communicate our concern to the government and to urge this tax revision at the time of the next budget. Let us together share today in the creation of a small but very important part of that budget. Let us together speak on behalf of the voluntary sector so that our words will be followed by an action that will truly improve the human condition in our society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in this debate. The motion serves to remind us of the vitally important work that is done by the voluntary charitable organizations in Canada. And no doubt members of Parliament could use a reminder that we cannot look to government for everything and that action by voluntary groups still plays a vital role in our national community.

On the issue raised in this motion, there has been fairly extensive public interest. Two important briefs have been submitted to the government in recent years, the most recent being a paper in 1978 from the national voluntary organizations representing most of the larger national charitable groups. The proposals by the NVO are reflected in today's motion.

The NVO was concerned about the level of public support for charitable organizations in Canada. I am sure there is general agreement that providing an incentive for charitable giving is a legitimate field for government action. Whatever we do should be measured against three main objectives. First, the incentive should be an effective one. It does not make sense if the cost of the incentive exceeds the additional amount of giving that results. Second, any tax incentive should provide equitable treatment among taxpayers. Finally, the cost to the treasury should not be unreasonable.

The cost of the motion before us is estimated at more than $500 million in tax revenues forgone by the federal and provincial governments. In effect, it would involve doubling the existing revenue cost of tax incentive support for charitable organizations. At a time when we are worrying about reducing our present federal deficit we should not be thinking about adding another half billion dollars to the combined federal-provincial deficits.

A good part of the cost increase that would be created by this motion would result from the final suggestion in the motion. It proposes that the existing standard $100 deduction, which now applies to charitable donations and allowable medical expenses totalling less than $100, should be continued but apply only to medical expenses. The existing standard deduction in effect is an allowance for charitable donations alone, since a very small percentage of taxpayers have allowable medical expenses that they can claim. Thus, a standard $100 deduction for medical expenses would really mean a new deduction for almost all taxpayers. It would cost a total of about $250 million to federal and provincial treasuries. And it would do nothing to assist charitable organizations, which is the ostensible purpose of the motion before us.

The other main proposal in the motion calls for a system of tax credits for charitable donations. I recognize that it proposes, as an available option, the continuation of the present system of deductions from income subject to tax. But this option would be relevant only to a small minority of high-income taxpayers. For most taxpayers, a tax credit system is proposed.

I do not propose to discuss at length the suggested credit rate of 50 per cent. Obviously, such a rate would impose a large additional burden on the treasury. If we were to switch to a tax credit system for charitable donations, the credit rate would have to be at a lesser level.

I should like to discuss, however, the relative merits of the two approaches—a tax credit and deductions from income. In practice, one obvious difference between the two results from the existing structure of progressive rates of income tax which increase with higher income groups. With a tax credit, all donors regardless of income level would get back the same proportion of their charitable givings as a credit. With deductions from income, the effective incentive for charitable giving is higher the higher the donor's marginal tax rate. If equity in the tax system is the overriding consideration, the principle of a tax credit would therefore seem to be the choice.

There are some things to be said, however, for the existing system of deducting charitable donations from income. The progressive structure of tax rates means that the incentive for charitable giving is strongest at higher income levels. And since a major function of charity in our society is to redistribute income from the better-off to those who are less well-off, we should recognize that the existing approach of deductions does have a secondary effect of redistributing income.

We should also realize that our existing income tax system represents a combination of both a progressive structure of tax rates and deductions. Successive Parliaments have attempted to mesh these two factors together to produce a fair and workable tax system. I suggest that any significant shift away from a deduction system toward a tax credit system will require a reconsideration of the progressive rate schedule to determine whether it is appropriate to a tax credit system, or whether the existing over-all distribution of tax liabilities is fair and equitable to all taxpayers. If a switch from the deduction system to a credit does result in additional tax burdens on middle and higher income taxpayers, it may well be necessary to offset this by readjusting the schedule of tax rates.

In view of the support which this motion gives to the tax credit idea, it is somewhat difficult to understand why it suggests keeping the existing deduction system as an alternative approach. As an option it would be preferable only for taxpayers at the upper end of the income scale, whose marginal tax rates exceed the rate of tax credit. Perhaps the sponsor of the motion had in mind the desirability of attracting larger charitable donations from such taxpayers. We should also consider, however, the increased complexity that would result in income tax returns from presenting optional tax treatment for charitable giving, and the fact that it would be a real option only for the well to do.

In considering government incentives for charitable donations, we need not limit our options to the tax system. There are feasible approaches that involve the expenditure side of the budget rather than the revenue side. One such approach could link government grants to a registered charity to the amount of donations which the charity receives. For example, a $100 gift to a registered charity would mean a federal grant to the same charity of, say, $25. This would involve some substantial changes in the way we now proceed. The government would be dealing directly with the charitable organization rather than with the taxpayer donor through the income tax return.

Of course, the books of the charity would have to be audited. It would change the way in which donors viewed their gift. Instead of calculating how much it would mean in the way of a tax deduction, they would know that every dollar donated would be augmented by a government grant. This sort of approach need not cost more than the existing tax incentives and would meet, to a large extent, the objectives of national voluntary organizations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche). I listened with great interest to the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans). Of course he is absolutely right that any change in the tax system would require consideration, to use his words, on a whole range of subjects. I was disappointed that he did not do it, but I thought for a moment he was about to say that the government would be prepared to support an amended motion if it had not been placed in the alternative. Because he complained that the motion was split in two, I thought he would tell us that the government would consider the motion if it read as follows:

—the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to give individual taxpayers the option of claiming charitable gifts as deductions from taxable income.

That would have been a great step forward and fully within the intent of the hon. member who has given the House this opportunity to discuss such an important matter. I believe the hon. member in the consideration of this motion was attempting to allow the government a choice of options, either of which would be acceptable to the hon. member. Certainly I am disappointed that the government saw fit not to indicate its choice clearly, so that at long last in terms of a tax system we could take the necessary step forward which was advocated by officials within the government to permit growth and versatility in the private voluntary sector to make its impact felt even more in the Canadian community.

I do not want to be partisan—we were partisan a little earlier today—but I cannot fail to remind the hon. member that the costs of which he was complaining, the cost of $500 million, are not large in terms of a whole range of matters that are under the control of the government. Even today those matters could make room available within the tax system to the voluntary sector.

Because the parliamentary secretary is still in the House, I will remind him of a couple of things. I cannot help but recall the question period in the House in which we discussed the movement of Eldorado from Port Hope to northern Ontario contrary to the advice of the board of directors of Eldorado.

The costs of that move are immense and totally unnecessary with respect to the viability of the nuclear industry in Canada. There is a great deal of money and room that would be available there.

The whole decentralization program of the government impacts heavily upon the constituency of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, the parliamentary secretary who has just spoken. Billions of dollars will be involved over a period of years in relocation grants and a whole host of other things. If it were abandoned, those funds would be available. Also there is moving Parks Canada from Cornwall to Peterborough. In order to be direct with the House, I have to say that it is becoming more obvious every day—not just to us on this side of the House, but more important, to people outside the House—that perhaps that is one of the least advisable and most questionable decisions the government has made against its employees' wishes and, most important, against good sense.

It does not take into account the $500 million additional load. It does not take into account the incentive and encouragement that could be given for growth in the voluntary sector, a great incentive for those engines, those people who want to help. The tremendous growth that would take place would lessen the load of government and the necessity of government applying its taxpayers' money and its own efforts with respect to services that must be performed within a country that is changing so quickly that sometimes it is alarming to many people.

I am delighted the member brought forth the motion. I am delighted to support it, but I am disappointed that the response was not just a bit more positive. I believe the day has come for the idea he put forward. I will have occasion on another day to argue a motion along the same lines. It is motion No. 53 standing in my name. For the purposes of indicating that there is a great interest in this area, I should like to quote my motion, as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to change the automatic deduction of $100 for medical expenses and charitable donations, to an automatic deduction of $100 for medical expenses, with all charitable donations being deductible from the total income on which tax payable is calculated.

The fact that there are two motions is important. We are very fortunate to have this particular motion debated today. There is a growing interest in the House and in the country in the support, the development and the use of the voluntary sector in Canada.

As Mr. Speaker will recall, because he was a member of the House in the Thirty-first Parliament, we brought forward a motion to establish a select committee of the House of Commons to study and review the place of and help for the voluntary sector. We asked ourselves as a Parliament to have those people come in and tell us their needs, where they fit in the scheme of things, and to encourage the government of that day, and indeed successive governments, that this kind of contribution was necessary. Arising out of this debate I hope there will be at some stage a speaker who will indicate to the House that this still remains a prerogative of government which is considered important, to give a reference to the House of Commons, if it cannot grant this motion, to advance the cause of volunteerism and contribution of the voluntary sector, because it is so important.

All governments must govern, and government parties and those with the hope of forming governments are all talking about restraining growth and expenditures in the public sector. That is reasonable, in my judgment, and should be done, but it leaves the men and women in those communities out there who require a level of service, particularly as those communities become more urbanized and as those factors that make up the communities change, with that need for service. There is a golden opportunity, as that void will inevitably be created by restraint and withdrawal of public service, for an infusion of service from the private sector. It is the voluntary sector, the men and women of good will, who band together to help their fellow men and women who fill that vacuum and provide that service.

Governments cannot be everywhere. As there are differences when we move from one region of the country to another, as we move from the city to the rural area, as we move among groups of young people and senior citizens, and as we tackle more things, or feel we should tackle more in terms of social problems, there is a requirement for a diversity of service. Governments which are monolithic to a great degree, whether provincial, federal or municipal, cannot attack every problem in a way that might meet particular needs.

The interesting thing about the voluntary sector is that it is made up of special interest groups who tackle specific problems within specific communities. As a result there is a flexibility that contrasts with the relatively necessary inflexibility of government. It is worth while supporting the motion and the idea behind the motion in order that society can be even better served.

I do not intend to speak very long because the case was admirably put. I think there was general sympathy for the idea on the part of the spokesman for the government, but I wish some member of that government party over there would raise in their caucus the importance of the continuance of the initiative for a study at least by this Parliament of the voluntary sector, its needs, and its place in the community. If that could be done I would applaud the government. I would applaud the government if it continued with that initiative. If there is some member over there who would pledge that he will raise that with the government of the day, then I think the voluntary sector would be grateful. We would be embarking on a course of action to serve a segment of the community which has not been served in quite the same way as the needs of today require it to be served. It is in that spirit that I support my colleague and commend him for bringing forth this motion today on such an important subject.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I am disappointed that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr.

Evans) was not prepared to suggest that the subject matter of the motion now before us be referred to an appropriate committee for further consideration.

I recognize that the parliamentary secretary found two aspects of the motion before us not to the government's liking. I am inclined to agree with the two criticisms that were made by the hon. member speaking for the government.

Those two criticisms related, first of all, to the fact that by leaving medical expenses as the subject of a $100 deduction for everyone, in view of the fact that medicare takes care of most expenses, it would have the effect of adding $100 to the exemption level across the board. Maybe that should be done, except that it conflicts with our tax credit ideas, but if that is to be done, let it be done on its own and not in this way.

The second criticism the parliamentary secretary had about the motion was to the effect that offering the taxpayer an option of either a tax credit equal to 50 per cent of his donation to charity, or the present system of a deduction from taxable income, is a bonanza to those in the upper brackets, and if it should be considered at all it should be on the basis of a tax credit system all the way.

I say to the parliamentary secretary that I happen to agree with him, but that does not invalidate the fundamental principle the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) is trying to put forward, namely, that contributions to recognized charities should get the same income tax treatment we give to contributions to recognized political parties. This is something that not only has the support of church organizations and voluntary groups throughout our society, but it also makes good sense. This is a case of fair play and equality, and I think it should be considered.

From the way the parliamentary secretary started his speech I felt he might get around to that, and actually say that in spite of the shortcomings of the motion the fundamental idea was sound and he would be happy to ask that it be referred for further consideration. It is not the first time we have been disappointed by government responses to private members' motions, but my experience around this place is that if you have a good idea and you put it forward in a private member's motion or a private member's bill, after a while if you stay with it long enough you win. This is an idea, if I may quote the words of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, whose time I think has come, and I hope it will receive favourable consideration.

I say again that what I am supporting is the basic principle that voluntary contributions made to recognized charities should receive the same income tax treatment we accord to voluntary contributions made to recognized political parties. Because that is my view I commend the hon. member for Edmonton South for bringing the subject before us this afternoon.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to commend the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) for having brought forward this motion. As the two previous speakers have said, it raises a very important issue in this House. It raises the whole issue of volunteerism, the role of the individual in society and the responsibility of that individual to try to better his or her society by working through it in a non-profit, non-paid way. All of us feel, I believe, that this is the type of activity which deserves commendation, support and understanding, and we should work to promote it.

We have, however, a couple of problems with this bill, and this is in spite of the fact that from the standpoint of the taxpayer the changes being proposed are attractive. They would mean additional tax benefits to the majority of taxpayers. Unfortunately, these additional benefits would cost us, we estimate, in the neighbourhood of $500 million. That is a lot of money and we would have to find a way of raising that type of revenue.

Members opposite have, time and time again in the past, worried about small amounts they felt this government was overspending. Unfortunately we are in a time of tough restraint, and we cannot do everything that we would like. We do not have the money, and we must put our priorities in order. That is why the staggering amount of $500 million is a very sobering and chilling fact.

Mr. Nickerson: So is $12 billion.

Mr. Peterson: Twelve billion dollars is very big, and this would be approximately one twenty fourth of that. I believe that there is no disagreement among members of this House as to the value and the importance of helping voluntary, charitable organizations in their work. They deserve our encouragement and support.

The proposals in this motion are similar to the submissions which were made in 1978 by the national voluntary organizations. This brief attracted the interest of the hon. member who moved the motion which is presently before the House. It is important to examine the reasons why this brief was employed, and the principles which it set forth. The goal of this brief was to increase the level of public support for voluntary charitable societies and to improve the degree of equity in the manner in which the tax incentive was being applied. These are two key principles which we must look at—improved incentives for charitable donations to help the volunteer aspect in our society, and increased equity. I would like to turn for a moment to both of these issues.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the motion provides for a possible change under the form of a tax credit to encourage taxpayers to make charitable donations. What would be beneficial in this case would be a tax credit which would be an identical incentive for all donors notwithstanding their income level. Even if their maximum tax rate is 15 per cent or 50 per cent, the taxpayers would take advantage of a tax credit equivalent to the same percentage of charitable donations. The present system which allows the deduction of charitable donations is discriminatory. Consequently, even if the federal treasury could not allow a tax credit of 50 per cent, we should still consider the possibility of granting a reasonable tax credit; that is, we support as a rule the grant of a credit for charitable donations, because it is fairer for all taxpayers. I feel that it will be more difficult to justify the proposal offering a choice to taxpayers, either an income tax credit or the actual income deduction for charitable donations.

The income deduction would be a better choice for taxpayers in higher brackets; for example, if the tax credit were 50 per cent, the income deductions would be better for those having a marginal rate of taxation above 50 per cent. Such a choice, however, would maintain the discrimination for taxpayers with different incomes. It would also complicate income tax deductions since taxpayers would have to determine their charitable donations taking into account the two choices to see which one would be more beneficial.

[English]

The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) pointed out the problem when there is both the option of the deduction and the credit. His points were well taken. I do not think that we could support that type of inequitable and complicated tax treatment, even though we want to encourage charities and volunteer work in our society. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton also managed as he stated, in a non-partisan way, to attack this government for a number of its spending programs to which he took exception.

This government has put forward one major spending program in this session. It was less than the amount asked for in the bill. I refer to the GIS supplement. I am very proud of that bill because it was directed to those who are most in need at this time. It also indicates that this government was being responsible in the way in which it funded this bill and the expenses which would be incurred, and that is through a tax increase. This is a responsible government, and I would hope that the hon. member opposite will agree with me.

One of the criticisms of this motion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is what to do with the $100 medical expenses which we have at the present time. This deduction covers both charitable donations and allowable medical expenses. For all practical purposes it is applicable only to charitable donations, since relatively few taxpayers have deductible medical expenses because most of us do not have medical expenses of over 3 per cent of our income. The standard $100 deduction for medical expenses amounts to an exemption from taxation for everyone. This deduction costs the federal and provincial treasuries about $250 million per year, and that figure is not related to specific expenses. That is a lot of money. There must be a better way to deal with that $100 standard medical deduction.

Without that added cost, the government could introduce a tax credit for charitable donations with a fairly reasonable rate of credit. If we were to insist on this additional standard $100 deduction and still keep the level of fiscal support for charities at its present level, the rate of tax credit would have to be a great deal less.

Finally, I would like to raise briefly the broader question of how we might examine other ways to introduce fiscal incentives. They do not necessarily need to be fiscal incentives. They could be public sector incentives for efforts in the private sector in the field of charities and volunteer work. One such example was mentioned by the learned parliamentary secretary. An alternative approach which has the elements of equity, impersonality, an ease of administration is a system of percentage-matching grants. For example, for every $100 of deductions received by a registered charity, the government could provide a grant of $25. In this situation the government would deal directly with the charities. The donor would not be required to report his gifts on his tax return, and he would not receive the tax benefit.

In this situation, donations would be made with the knowledge that they were attracting public support to a level that might be decided upon by this House. This approach would not cost more than the existing tax incentive, and there is the real possibility that it would, to a great extent, meet the objectives of the national voluntary organizations. It is simply another approach to this difficult problem which we might consider which, I believe, has met with the agreement of both parties opposite, in terms of the principle which we are trying to promote.

Certainly we on this side of the House would support such an approach in the sense that what we would want to do is find a way to encourage more volunteerism in our society which can be found in many communities to be at a very high level. It is the type of approach—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TIME ALLOCATION FOR SECOND READING OF BILL C-30

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pinard that in relation to Bill C-30, an act to provide for supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1980-81, one sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration of second reading stage of the bill; and that at 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of second reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. When this debate was interrupted at five o'clock, the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) had the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted at five o'clock I was pointing out the particular fondness the member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has for the word "budget." In my view, his unfailing and profound eagerness to have this government present a budget is inconceivable and exaggerated.

[English]

It took five months for the Conservatives, when in power, to convene Parliament.

An hon. Member: Four.

Mr. Cousineau: It took seven months for them to present a budget, yet now they ask this government for a budget after three months. How serious can they be? I must admit that the Conservatives certainly know the ways and means necessary to remain in opposition for 16 years.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cousineau: Hon. members opposite will have a chance and perhaps will find a solution next February. In the meantime—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, other members of Parliament have followed the ex-minister of finance, four from the NDP, two from the Liberals and 16 for the Progressive Conservative Party have discussed this bill. And is it not the member for St. John's West who, last May 28, complained of the fact that on October 23, 1979, when he was minister of finance, he had asked for a similar authorization? How fast he forgets. He did not mention this fact this afternoon. He complained of the fact that the opposition, nine Liberals, seven NDPs and two Conservatives had commented on the measure discussed for four days. Now the shoe is on the other foot.

During this second reading debate on Bill C-30, we have had 11 hours and 47 minutes of discussion and I sincerely believe that the speeches and observations of members of the opposition have touched upon all aspects of this bill and that this House could not be apprised of any new fact in my opinion which could be of some use to the Canadian population. For we should be thinking of the Canadian population. I congratulate the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) who has put forward this motion pursuant to Standing Order 75C.

Last Friday, I heard some members of the opposition use such words as shame, arrogance, closure, and in my opinion they should start getting used to the expression "limit on debate" and "waste of time". The government has taken its responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, and the Canadian people expect decisions to be made by this government even though members of the opposition do not see it that way.

To let the speeches continue at this point, Mr. Speaker, would be tantamount to shirking our responsibilities because I am told that 27 other Progressive Conservative members had indicated their intention of speaking on this bill. To bring in new facts? No, repetitions. I do not know how many NDP members would want to speak, but if 27 Conservative members were to do so, they would have the right to speak for 40 minutes each and we would have in this House 18 hours of debate, repetitions and filibustering, Mr. Speaker. If that bill is not referred to committee immediately, we will not be able to deal with the other legislation this government wants to bring in for the better being of the people of Canada. We are here to administer the country and that is exactly what we intend to do. The tactics of the opposition, whether the NDP or the Progressive Conservatives, may be considered by some as ways of expressing legitimate criticisms but, for others, nobody can deny that those tactics can and must be considered tactics of filibustering.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, what are the real intentions of opposition members in prolonging the debate? What objective are they pursuing? If the intent of the opposition, and more particularly members of the Progressive Conservative Party, were to prolong the debate to discuss this bill fully, if the intention of Conservative members were to bring out all the aspects of the bill and examine it under all its facets, that would be very legitimate intention.

But that is not the case, Mr. Speaker, that is not what is happening. After the speech by the former finance minister, the hon. member for St. John's West, what we heard was for a very large part imitations, déjà vu and always the same old things. The opposition already cried: Shame, and if the opposition talks about closure, I must say we have no intention of letting ourselves be affected by the blackmailing the former leader of the government engaged in this House this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude here because time is flying. Let me conclude by saying that it is the duty of the government to organize things and to thwart some. We are not through thwarting them, and organizing the proceedings. The government has the duty to organize the work of this House and to look after the initiatives that are taken here. That is what we are doing now and that is what we intend to do for the next four years.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 8.10 o'clock p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 75C have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order it is my duty to wind up the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Pinard) which was agreed to on the following division:

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 64, 142, 144, 145, 146, 240, 258, 600, 608, 616, 647, 716, 721 and 741.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

IRANIAN ASSETS IN CANADA

Question No. 64—Mr. Cossitt:

What is the government's estimate of the total value of Iranian interests, ownership, dollars on deposit, etc., in Canada?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): From the information gathered on a regular basis, a satisfactory estimate of the total value of Iranian interests in Canada cannot be made as information with respect to private holdings or indirect holdings is not available.

VIA RAIL—FREE RAIL PASSES

Question No. 142—Mr. Turner:

1. What is Via Rail Canada's policy regarding free rail passes or reduced fares for its employees and their families?

2. Is the policy the same for employees of CN Rail and CP Rail and, if not, what is the policy for CN and CP employees?

3. Is there any limit on the use of the passes?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Via provides a pass good for free transportation system-wide to employees with one year's service, and to their spouses and dependants.

2. The policy is different for employees of CN and CP. By agreement with CN and CP managements and unions, such privileges apply only to CN and CP employees who had service prior to March 14, 1979.

3. The passes for Via employees with less than five years' service permit reservations on the day of travel only. The passes for CN and CP employees permit reservations only one week in advance of the travel date, and then only for an upper berth, or lower berth if accompanied by spouse or child.

VIA RAIL CANADA INC.—PROFIT MAKING ROUTES

Question No. 144—Mr. Turner:

1. Does Via Rail Canada have any trains which either break even or make a profit and, if so, what are the route numbers of the trains and their point of origin and final destination?

2. Could Via Rail Canada increase the number of profit-making routes if it had up-to-date equipment?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Fully allocated costs exceed the revenues received from customers on all passenger train services operated by Via Rail Canada Inc.

2. The revenue/cost rates could be improved on most passenger train services if up-to-date equipment was available but it is unlikely that any service could reach a break even or profit position in the foreseeable future on the basis of fully allocated costs and revenue from customers.

VIA RAIL—TICKET AGENTS—BAGGAGE HANDLERS

Question No. 145—Mr. Turner:

Are in-station ticket agents and baggage handlers employed by Via Rail Canada or by CN Rail and CP Rail?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): At larger stations where there is sufficient volume of work to justify a position devoted entirely to passenger service, the ticket agent or baggage handler is employed by Via Rail Canada Inc. At smaller stations these services are performed by CN Rail and CP Rail telegraph operators and the charges for this work are paid to the railways under the terms of the operating agreement between Via and CN and CP Rails.

VIA RAIL—BOMBARDIER INC.—TRAINSETS ON ORDER

Question No. 146—Mr. Turner:

1. How many Light-Rapid-Comfortable (LRC) trainsets are on order from Bombardier-MLW Limited to be delivered to Via Rail Canada?

2. What does each trainset consist of in terms of engines, steam units, coaches, club cars, snack cars, bar cars, etc?

3. Can the trainset be increased in size to allow for additional passenger-carrying capacity?

4. (a) On what routes will the trainsets be used (b) will they reduce the travelling time of these runs?

5. On what date does Via Rail Canada expect to put the trainsets into service?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Twenty-one locomotives and 50 coaches are on order from Bombardier Inc. (formerly Bombardier-MLW Limited) for delivery to Via Rail Canada Inc.

2 and 3. These trainsets can consist of one locomotive and up to five coaches or two locomotives (one at each end in a push pull configuration) and ten cars. As the trains have all electric heating with power supplied to the locomotive there is no need for steam units. Each car has provision for food and beverage service and adjustable seating to permit various interior configurations.

4. Detailed implementation plans are currently being formulated to ensure that the maximum benefit of this new equipment can be obtained within present operating constraints.

5. Bombardier Inc. have advised us that train delivery will occur in 1981 and revenue service can be expected to occur in either late 1981 or early 1982.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—INCREASE IN LEVEL OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 240—Mr. Herbert:

Did the Minister of State for Economic Development in a speech on September 23, 1979, state that the government is committed to increasing the level of research and development and, if so, in each of the next five years, by what annual percentage is it hoped that the level of research and development can be increased?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (for Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, the former minister of state for economic development, the Hon. Robert René de Cotret, stated in a speech on September 23, 1979, that the government of the day was committed to increasing the level of research and development in Canada.

In the Speech from the Throne opening the first session of the Thirty-second Parliament on April 14, 1980, the government reaffirmed its commitment to increase Canada's over-all expenditures on research and development to 1.5 per cent of the value of the gross national product.

The government has under review its policies and plans for responding to this commitment which will be undertaken within the context of its broad policies for economic development. The government is not yet in a position to indicate the time frame for achievement. The federal government recognizes that it must consider increasing its own effort but also recognizes that, by international standards, the private sector must increase its commitment to research and development at an even greater rate.

POST OFFICE BOX—ANNUAL CHARGE

Question No. 258—Mr. Herbert:

1. What is the minimum annual charge for a post office box in a post office station or substation?

2. Does the cost vary by region or province?

3. Does the Post Office attempt to supply boxes to satisfy the demand?

4. Is a householder, already receiving letter carrier delivery service, entitled to a station post office box?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): 1. Fees for customers whose residence or place of business is located such that it is eligible to receive letter carrier delivery service, mobile delivery service, suburban service or rural mail delivery service on a frequency of five or six days per week are:

Box	Size	Fee
Style A	Approx. 10 cm X 14 cm X 35 cm	$ 10.00 per year
Style B	Approx. 15 cm X 14 cm X 35 cm	20.00 per year
Style C	Approx. 30 cm X 14 cm X 35 cm	30.00 per year
Style D	Approx. 30 cm X 28 cm X 35 cm	50.00 per year
Style E	Approx. 60 cm X 28 cm X 35 cm	75.00 per year
Bag service		75.00 per year

Keys for lock boxes—50 cents each.

Fees for all other customers are:

Style A	$ 5.00 per year
Style B	10.00 per year
Style C	15.00 per year
Style D	25.00 per year
Style E	35.00 per year
Bag service	35.00 per year

Keys for lock boxes—50 cents each.

2. No.

3. Every effort is made by Canada Post to ensure that all requests for lock box service are met.

4. A lock box may be rented if the "Application for Post Office box" completed by such a person is approved and the appropriate fee is paid in advance.

POULTRY PRODUCTION—NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 600—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1977, what amount was paid to farmers in New Brunswick to assist with poultry production?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): None.

POST OFFICE—NUMBER OF LAWYERS EMPLOYED

Question No. 608—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed on staff in the Post Office Department?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Three lawyers (On Strength Justice Department).

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—LAWYERS ON STAFF

Question No. 616—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed on staff in the Department of Labour?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Three (On Strength Justice Department).

SECRETARY OF STATE—THEATRE FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS

Question No. 647—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1978, what amount was paid by the Department of the Secretary of State to each theatre for the performing arts or resident company in Canada?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): From January 1, 1978, to April 30, 1980, inclusive, the following amounts were paid by the Secretary of State Department to theatres for the performing arts or resident companies in Canada for capital assets:

Adelaide Court, Toronto, Ont.	$ 300,000
Arts Club Theatre, Vancouver, B.C.	400,000

AGRICULTURE—UNINSURED LOSSES OF VEHICLES

Question No. 716—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of vehicles recorded by the Department of Agriculture at page 12.62, volume I of the 1978-79 Public Accounts of Canada, for what reason was the loss of $14,908 unexplained?

2. What is the explanation for the loss?

3. On what dates and in what locations did the losses take place?

4. Did the department undertake procedural or structural changes to ensure that such losses do not recur and, if so, what were they?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. An explanation of the losses sustained is not required to be reported for the Public Accounts of Canada.

Order Paper Questions

2. Explanation for loss			3. Date	Location
1975 Chevrolet pickup truck	Accident	$1,222	Oct. 20/78	Smithers, B.C.
1977 Dodge pickup 4 X 4	Accident	$2,172	Jan. 25/79	Williams Lake, B.C.
1975 Valiant 4 dr. Sedan	Accident	$1,001	Jan. 26/79	Nicolet, Que.

1976 AMC Hornet Stationwagon	Accident	$1,222	Jan. 04/79	Halifax, N.S.
	Total	$14,908

4. No. Departmental procedures to guard against these situations are already in place. Furthermore, all losses are investigated and corrective action undertaken.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—UNINSURED LOSSES OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

Question No. 721—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 to miscellaneous items recorded by the Department of National Defence in footnote number 9 at page 12.62, Volume I of the 1978-79 Public Accounts of Canada (a) what musical instruments were involved in the theft and in what way does the department make use of them (b) did the department undertake steps to ascertain the present whereabouts of the instruments and, if so, what were they (c) was the thief apprehended (d) in what location did the losses occur?

2. Did the department undertake steps to ensure that such a loss does not recur and, if so, what were they?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence):

1. (a) one tenor saxophone
one clarinet B Flat two snare drums
one timbal set
two bongo drum sets
one drum major baton

The above instruments are used by authorized bands of the Regular and Reserve Forces.

(b) Yes. On discovery of the loss maintenance and issue records were investigated. It was found that proper records had not been maintained especially in respect of returned equipment from disbanded military bands and their subsequent reissue. Despite a thorough investigation including direct contact with all Canadian Forces bands, the missing equipment was not located and in the absence of any other explanation was considered either lost or stolen.

(c) No.

2. Yes. Strict compliance with accounting and control procedures is being enforced.

FUNDY NATIONAL PARK—POINT WOLFE RIVER—CONSTRUCTION OF FISH LADDER

Question No. 741—Mr. Corbett:

Were studies conducted with the intention of constructing a fish ladder at the dam site of the Point Wolfe River in Fundy National Park and is it the intention of Parks Canada to construct such a fish ladder and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): (a) Yes, studies by Parks Canada were conducted in 1974 with the intention of constructing a fish ladder at the dam site of the Point Wolfe River in Fundy National Park.

(b) Parks Canada has decided against constructing this fish ladder because of costs. In 1974 the proposed design would have cost $371,000 for an adequate fish ladder for the Point Wolfe River. Investigations are continuing to attempt to find an appropriate design for a fishway at a substantially lower cost.

EMPLOYMENT TAX CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF PROGRAM PERIOD

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 5, consideration in Committee of the Whole of Bill C-19, to amend the Employment Tax Credit Act—Mr. Axworthy—Mr. Blaker in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I should like to begin with a question I asked for 20 minutes the other evening. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has had a little more time to gather information. Could the minister tell us what is his projection of the number of unemployed people in the country in the next couple of years? In which months are we likely to see the highest unemployed number, and how many people is that likely to be?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, without wanting to indulge the time of the House even more than we already have on this bill, I should like to remind the hon. member for Calgary West that he has already asked that question and he has already received an answer.

Mr. Hawkes: I agree with the minister that I have asked the question in several different ways, but I have not yet received an answer. If one would like to check Hansard, one could find that out. Could the minister tell us how many of the research officials in his department are involved in the business of forecasting in relation to unemployment?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that the hon. member for Calgary West has developed a strong mental block about the matter at hand, and perhaps about other matters as well. We tried to indicate to him in committee the other night that the responsibility for forecasting economic conditions in this country was primarily that of the Department of Finance. The Minister of Finance already presented his forecasts to this House in his economic statement several weeks ago. Those are the forecasts upon which the general projections of the government are made. Our own analysis is to examine the particular regional breakdowns and demographic breakdowns which I gave the hon. member the other evening. If he wants to refresh his memory, I would suggest that he follow his own advice and read Hansard.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, sometimes it is difficult to read through the rhetoric and get to the facts. But I suggest that there are no figures in Hansard given by the minister in relationship to the kind of breakdown he just talked about.

I will switch my focus for a while. The minister has sat through several hours of debate in relationship to this bill. During the course of that debate, members on both sides of the House raised several issues which suggest that the bill in fact may be somewhat weaker than it appears at first glance. I think we should remember that this legislation has been in place for a couple of years now, but one of the issues which has been raised is that the jobs are not truly created jobs. In fact the employment tax credit bill is used by employers to fund jobs which already exist or would have existed in any case. Does the minister have any research on the proportion of jobs he would classify as being created under this legislation versus jobs that would ordinarily exist?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, again to repeat, I think for about the fourth time in this House, when an employer applies for assistance under the tax credit bill he is required to put down exactly the number of workers in his physical establishment at the present time and to indicate the additional workers he actually wishes to hire through the tax credit program. That is a condition of the application.

There is absolutely no way, unless we are somehow to put a stethoscope against the internal workings of every employer's man who makes an application, to determine whether or not in fact in the future he would be hiring those people. But we are satisfied, after some margin and an interim evaluation, that the incrementality of the program is around 60 per cent. So, that is a judgment call. At this point in time there is absolutely no way of establishing firm criteria until we have had far more experience with the program. It has only been in operation for two years.

I can indicate to the hon. member that similar types of programs have been put into effect in other countries, in Europe and in the United States. They have had varying degrees of success, ranging all the way from 20 per cent to around the 60 per cent or 70 per cent level. The best way the hon. member could probably get his answer is if he and his colleagues allow us to pass this bill, so that we can put it in operation and go on further with the experience of the bill to see how it works.

Mr. Hawkes: I think the minister is suggesting that we give him a blank cheque without examination. To members on this side of the House who value freedom of speech and the freedom of inquiry, that suggestion is totally unacceptable.

Is the minister familiar with a recent report out of the Brookings Institute where similar tax credit programs were examined? If he is familiar with that, could he tell us what their experience was in terms of the measurement of whether or not jobs were truly created?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I will simply tell the member that we do not allow our employment policy to be made by the Americans. Therefore, we do not use American criteria to judge the success of our own program. If he in fact wants to have a debate on American employment programs, I suspect that he should go down there and engage in a congressional committee debate. We use our own evaluation in our own programs that are designed by this Parliament and by this government to suit Canadian conditions.

Mr. Hawkes: Could the minister make a commitment at this time to give us the research study on which some of his answers are based in terms of Canadian experience? Is he prepared to provide that study to the opposition?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I am quite prepared to give the study to anybody who would like to have it, as soon as it is finished and completed and after this bill is passed and we have had a chance to do a proper evaluation.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the minister saying that he is prepared to provide the study after the bill is passed? Is that a condition, that we must pass this bill before he will give us the study? Is that what he just said?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Calgary West is really trying to suggest that somehow—we have now been in debate on this bill for an exceptionally long time, which is fine with me. If he is so all-fired interested in getting an evaluation, he should know that we can only evaluate a program when it is in operation. The problem right now is that we have suffered an hiatus for several weeks in the operation of that program.

We brought this bill in within two days after Parliament opened, on the grounds that we wanted to give it a high priority so we could maintain the continuity and the momentum the program had built up. We have now gone through close to 12 weeks of debate and discussion on this. Until we are able to put the bill back into effect and get it freely operating again, the evaluation, which was ongoing and scheduled to be completed this coming summer or fall will have to be extended much further because we cannot evaluate what in fact is not there.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I am now getting a little confused. The minister said there was a study in progress that was not complete, and now he is suggesting that he cannot study the program unless he gets an extension. Could he clarify that for me?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest it is not just now that the hon. member is confused, it is almost a permanent condition. It is something I guess we will simply have to accept. The fact of the matter is that as a trained social scientist he should know something about longitudinal studies, and realize that one has to have a certain length of time in order to evaluate any public policy. We are saying this particular program has only been in effect for two years. There are certain interim reports that have been used to suggest that it has provided some degree of success in creating jobs, so much so that my predecessor, the hon. member's former colleague, was so all-fired and excited about it he was going to build his entire employment program on the tax credit concept. Obviously in the learned judgment of my predecessor something was happening that was right.

We on our part did not feel that tax credits, solely by themselves, provided the total answer, and that is why we have provided a mixture of programs, which I think is a more proper and effective way of delivering employment programs. If the member wants to use some authority, because he obviously does not trust that which has been given to him from this side of the House, I suggest he go and make the same kind of assessment made by his former colleague and by his own government when they planned their program and announced it on the famous night of December 13, when they suggested the tax credit was going to be the solution to all our unemployment problems.

Mr. Hawkes: I wonder if the minister could tell us whether he has read the employment tax credit bill which his predecessor had ready to bring to Parliament just prior to the dissolution of the last Parliament. Has he read that bill?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I have certainly read a great deal of material but I am not in the habit of reading bills of a previous minister. We know the rules of the House. We started anew. I was not privy to much of the internal assessment. We have certainly assessed the tax credit programs as they were there, and concluded that they play a certain effective role in terms of the over-all production of job-creation programs. The fundamental error and flaw in the approach taken by the previous minister and the previous government were that they were going to rely solely upon the tax credit approach and not provide any direct employment creation that could be targeted to special needs. We felt that was wrong, because the tax credit program tends to have a bias, as we have said in this House, and tends to be more applicable to areas where there is a high degree of manufacturing and it does not apply as well in rural areas particularly where there are areas of high unemployment. That is why we have switched the program.

Mr. Hawkes: Once again the minister is confusing me. He says on the one hand he has not read the previous bill and then he makes a statement about what it would and would not do. Could the minister clarify whether he has read that bill or has not read that bill?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, there was not a bill. There was a policy announced at 8.15 on whatever day it was, Wednesday night, because my predecessor did not have quite the same ability to predict the vote outcome as did the House leader on the opposite side at that point in time. Unfortunately he never got the chance to present a bill to this House. All he could present was an approach, and a program, which were based solely and entirely upon the tax credit scheme, the very scheme which the hon. member is now questioning. I think it is unfortunate that he did not have the opportunity in his caucus at that time, or did not have the freedom to question his colleague, the previous minister, on the tax credit approach that the Tories were going to present. What we are simply saying here is that we were the original authors of the tax credit scheme. We think it has a certain value within a total arrangement, a job-creation initiative, but it is not by any means the only answer. That is one of the major differences between them and us.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would undertake to check with his deputy minister? I made the point the other night that the Committee of the Whole involves a different process than debate. The Committee of the Whole stage exists, as does the standing committees of the House, to provide an opportunity to members of Parliament to get detailed information from ministers. I suggest to the minister that the bill does exist and that his deputy would have it; that it is in fact in the form of a tax credit bill, but it is not the same bill we are examining here this evening. In fact there are significant differences, and I would like an undertaking from the minister to have himself briefed on that bill before he appears before us again so we might discuss the differences between that bill and this bill, and we might have a discussion as to whether that bill might do a better job in the creation of jobs than the one we have before us tonight.

I want to ask the minister next, however, whether he has given serious consideration to wage subsidies as opposed to tax credits in terms of creating jobs where jobs are needed. Have you given serious consideration to that?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, when it comes to the hon. member's suggestion that somehow there is a great sort of secret solution lying somewhere in the catacombs of the department, I would suggest to him that we have examined what has gone on previously and have concluded, as we have said in this House several times, that we believe it is time the entire arrangement and initiatives in the job creation field be reviewed. Our proposal here is simply to extend this tax credit for a further year so we can maintain the momentum of some job-creation in Canada while we attempt to appraise more clearly and realistically what changes are taking place in the economic and industrial structure of Canada. We have announced to the hon. member several times, and we have sent him reports, papers and releases outlining that we are doing that.

We are examining a range of options, including wage subsidies, grants, and training programs. Before we start simply hanging on to sort of panaceas, which seem to be the hon. member's obsession, we want to take a longer-term view of the employment situation in Canada, take a particular look at the question of the demand for new skills, and the changing nature of economic conditions, which the international scene and the resource scene are requiring. We can then determine a program upon which the government can base a whole set of initiatives, rather than coming at it in a piecemeal, ad hoc fashion.

I would simply say to the hon. member that the range of options he is interested in is being examined. We have indicated to him and to other members of this House that we have presented a paper on employment to this House. There is a parliamentary committee which has now been formed that will also be examining the range of solutions and will reach its own conclusions. They will be mixed with the reports being done by my own department, and out of that we hope to be able to come forward with a proper package of answers that are not sort of off-the-cuff, sort of instant answers, but ones that will serve the long term. That is my intention, and I intend to hold that intention.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I am encouraged by the minister's description of the last nine years of Liberal policy in this field as a panacea, rather than as an attempt to get at the structural unemployment which exists. If he is sincere I applaud this long-range effort. Let me get to a few other specific questions which have arisen in the course of the debate on this bill to this point.

The hon. member for Athabasca at one point brought the minister's attention to a situation in which an employer put in a job request, and in the normal, natural course of events an employee of Manpower and Immigration would go out and attempt to talk him into participation in the tax credit program. The minister has now had about four weeks to examine that situation. I wonder if he could tell us what he has found out, and whether he has found any similar situations in Canada.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I did ask my department to check into the conditions raised by the hon. member for Athabasca. I can only say, if that was the statement made by our official, it was clearly a misinterpretation. We have not had other cases of that kind, because we do provide a very clear examination, and I intend to write the hon. member for Athabasca setting out that particular case. We have not had other reported cases of a similar kind.

Mr. Hawkes: Does the minister have an estimate for the number of proportion of firms in Canada that are in a position to partake in this program and get the full tax credit?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, the past record shows that all employers in this country who want to provide incremental employment are eligible as long as they can demonstrate that they are providing a certain fitness. We do not accept applications from people who are just starting up in business. They must have a track record of some 12 months in operation, and it is available to any other employer. I would like to point out that in a survey it was indicated that some 92 per cent of the employers were very satisfied with the program and would like to see it continue.

Mr. Hawkes: Could the minister tell us how many jobs have been created in the two years of experience of this program? What is the dispersion of those jobs, that is, now many in Quebec, how many in Ontario, and how many in the rest of the country?

Mr. Axworthy: Again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that if the hon. member will refer to the second reading debate in Hansard, he will find all the answers to those questions.

Mr. Hawkes: I read what the parliamentary secretary said about that. I think that the total was 45,000 jobs of which 7,500 were created outside the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, that is, 7,500 jobs for eight provinces, the territories and the Yukon. Is the minister satisfied with that dispersion pattern as it relates to unemployment figures in this country?

Mr. Axworthy: No, Mr. Chairman, and that is why we brought in additional job-creation programs, so that we would not have to rely solely upon the tax credit approach which has more general application in the areas which I mentioned just 15 minutes ago, the areas which have higher industrialization. That is the reason why we brought in additional job-creation programs which we announced one week ago tonight.

Mr. Hawkes: In that same report from the parliamentary secretary which he gave during his contribution to the debate, he suggested that approximately 38 per cent of these jobs went to women. In this program which was announced in this House a week ago today, there were 12,200 jobs created for women, out of a total, depending on which set of numbers one uses, of 31,000, 81,000 or 192,000 jobs. But certainly considerably less than half the jobs in this new job-creation program were created for women.

It seems to me that the combination of the employment tax credit program and the program which was announced in this House one week ago perpetuates the disadvantage which women face in the employment market in Canada. They represent approximately 45 per cent of the unemployed, and the sum total of the programs advanced by this minister contributes to that imbalance. They get less than their proportion of the share. I wonder if the minister is reconsidering any of those programs to make sure that women get their fair share of the jobs that he is creating.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, as we have seen in the past, the hon. member is not quite accurate in his use of the statistics. If he looks at the number of jobs created for women through the two programs announced and those programs which are ongoing such as Canada Works and the summer employment training programs, he will notice that over 40 per cent of the places being provided for are for women. In particular, we initiated special programs to provide for a breakdown of those barriers which inhibit the participation of women in the labour force, such as the program to provide incentives to employers in non-traditional work and in the community services employment program which will not only employ large percentages of women but will also provide support services in the child care field which will enable more women to come into the work place.

As I indicated when I announced those programs, if they prove successful, and because we are working on the basis of one half fiscal year, we will add additional funds if they seem to be the answer to that very important problem. In addition, I have also indicated to this House that we plan to take steps in the area of affirmative action, in the area of unemployment and others, to make it easier for women in the work place and to reduce the barriers. As soon as we have the opportunity to bring those matters before cabinet, caucus and Parliament, they will be introduced. I would remind the hon. member that we have been here for only three months, and we have already accomplished far more than his colleagues in their nine months in office.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I want to begin by reminding the minister of some questions which we asked last week when this debate began. We tried to get from the minister the estimates which his department has made of the number and percentage of Canadians who will be unemployed in 1980. Since that discussion last week, the U.S. figures have come out. They indicate what most people knew and what I think President Carter had admitted, and that is that the United States is now in a major recession. The unemployment rate, and I am taking it from memory, was the highest ever since World War II, at 7 per cent. One million people joined the ranks of the unemployed in the last month in that country. The United States is our biggest customer as we are their biggest customer, and their recession will obviously be mirrored and followed in Canada. Could the minister give the estimates of his department, or any other agency or department within the government, as to the prospects for the coming year in Canada?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, that is about the same kind of question which the hon. member for Calgary West asked. The answers are going to be about the same. The first is that, in the statement presented to this House, the Minister of Finance gave the kind of forecast that we could expect within the range of fallibility, that is as primitive as economic forecasting obviously appears to be, that we could, depending upon all of the mixtures in international and domestic conditions, expect the employment rate to be somewhat above 8 per cent in the next year. This conforms to the predictions and projections made by the previous minister of finance in his late, unlamented budget. That is guesstimating.

As we well know, the ability to project those figures into the future is a very uncertain ability. But if the U.S. economy continues in its very severe recessionary pattern, then we can expect to have certain impacts in this country that we will have to try to offset, which is what we are trying to do now in the initiatives taken by a variety of departments in this government.

Mr. Orlikow: When the Minister of Finance made his speech some weeks ago, the extent of the depth of the U.S. recession had not become evident. The estimates of the Economic Council, the Conference Board in Canada and several economic analyses had predicted that the rate of unemployment which has been running at 7.5 per cent of the labour force would rise in 1980 to 8.3 per cent. Just last week Wood Gundy predicted that unemployment would rise to 9 per cent. I suggest to the minister that if we are facing that kind of problem then all the programs proposed by his government will do very little to deal with the severity of the situation.

However, I want to raise a different aspect of the problem. Whether the rate be 8.3 per cent or 9 per cent for the country as a whole, what we have seen for many years in this country is that the rate varies a great deal from province to province and from region to region. The province of Manitoba, which the minister and I both represent, has a relatively low rate of unemployment. But certain groups, particularly our native people, have unemployment rates, not of 8 per cent or 9 per cent, but at least, for part of the year, running anywhere from 50 per cent to 90 per cent.

The question I want to ask the minister is about the new objectives and the new attempts to be made by the government in the next year or two, to deal with the ever-increasing and more serious problem of groups of people with special problems whose numbers are growing at probably twice the rate of the population as a whole. The age group is getting younger and most of them are not equipped by our education or manpower training programs to find jobs on the reserves or in the urban communities. They are moving in greater numbers to these urban communities and, through no fault of their own, become almost a permanent burden. What new programs, if any, will be available for these people?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I certainly share the concern of the hon. member for Winnipeg North about the problems faced by native people in this country. In the job-creation programs announced a week ago, we took special care to highlight the initiatives which are particularly directed toward assisting native people.

Let me mention two of those initiatives, Mr. Chairman, which I think point the future direction of this government. One is the substantial additional amount of money put into native training. I believe one of the major opportunities in Canada at the present time is the jobs that will occur as a result of resource projects, particularly in western Canada. Up to this time, unfortunately, native people have not benefited from job-creation programs, primarily because of their lack of skills. The whole point of the programs is to find a variety of ways of upgrading and initiating skill training for native people in those areas.

Since the announcement of the programs I have had a variety and a multitude of representations from native organizations in western Canada. They have made suggestions about how the funds can be used to set up new training programs to begin developing skills for their people in the bands and non-status communities, so that they can ride the momentum created by the resource projects.

I would say, therefore, that there already is a major new initiative and, if it is successful, then we can expand upon it and work in co-operation with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to develop further training opportunities for native people.

The second initiative is the LEDA program, Local Economic Development Assistance, which is designed to provide for communities—in large part native communities—the means to build and establish long-term economic development so that they will not continually have to rely upon short-term jobs. We have been able to set things in motion in their communities to ensure longer-term economic activity.

We have the opportunity to put ten, 15 or 20 of these projects in place within the next six months or a year. If the moneys are taken up and results begin to show by the development of community economic organizations across the country, then we will be in a position to provide further finances and ensure their development in the longer term.

These are the initiatives taken through my department. I know that my colleagues in DREE and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development also have major projects to assist native people. DREE contributes close to $30 million per year to the Northlands agreement which is almost exclusively used for native people. There are many other initiatives and some of them are being reviewed. There is a task force and a parliamentary committee, so in part it is up to them to suggest the kinds of initiatives that the hon. member would like to see, and based on some of the experiments and new programs that we are trying.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, last week when we were debating this bill the minister said that his department was spending more than $800 million per year on manpower training. The people who lack basic skills come to a large extent from the native communities or our new non-English or non-French-speaking immigrants. For a number of years the amounts allocated for manpower training have been cut. These are the funds used by the department to purchase places in our community colleges and technical institutions. I think the minister agrees that a major effort ought to be made to break the cycle of poverty and lack of education so prevalent in some communities, rather than increasing the funding for this kind of program. A great many of these people simply cannot qualify for the programs offered by the community colleges.

The minister referred to the success of the program operating as a result of the agreement between the federal government and the province of Manitoba through the Northlands agreement. Manitoba's success in training native people to become teachers is an amazing, fascinating story. It must be understood, however, that many native and immigrant people do not have the qualifications on paper that are necessary to enter the community colleges. Instead of an increase in programs aimed at these disadvantaged groups, there have been cutbacks. I would ask the minister whether we can look forward to an increase in that kind of spending?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, normally we have to look at the over-all training program, but we are in a position now to renegotiate the adult occupational training programs with the provinces. This is to be reviewed this year and we will have a chance to sit down with each of the provincial governments—I have already met with each of the ministers on a preliminary basis—to discuss with them whether the mixture of institutional training programs versus industrial training programs should be altered. As the hon. member knows, the provinces supply the training places, which we buy from them, in their community colleges and institutions.

I have already met with the ministers of manpower and labour in each of the provinces and indicated that we would like to review the formula for funding to see if we are getting the most effective use of our money.

Beyond that, we should consider working with native organizations so that they can establish their own training programs at their own institutions. Saskatchewan has made a proposal to this effect and there is some discussion about it in Alberta. I have met with native organizations in those provinces to discuss how our new native training programs can be used to help finance those intiatives. It all comes back to the proposal put forward by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that native organizations should have more autonomy in the economic field and make decisions for themselves. Through our native training programs we hope to be able to encourage and facilitate that development so that they will have more to say about the kind of training that would suit their purposes. That is one of the directions in which we are moving in our discussions with native organizations across the country.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, there is no one who believes more than I that one of the main reasons native people have not progressed as far as they should has been the paternalistic and dictatorial attitude of governments which are almost exclusively white. For more than a hundred years they have told native people what to do to get the meagre assistance which has been available to them.

● (2130)

To the extent that the native people will continue to live in their own communities, let native organizations have control over the kind of training that is carried out and meets the needs of those communities.

I can only talk from personal observation about Winnipeg—I am sure my colleagues from Regina can talk about Regina—but what we are seeing in Western Canada is a very marked movement, which has gone on for a number of years now, and which is continuing at an accelerating pace, of native people into our cities. When the native people come to our cities and they start to look for work, they are going to have to meet the standards of the employers, whether it be in the public or the private sector.

I believe it is the right of our native people, like any other Canadian citizen, to decide and to choose where to live. But the native people are choosing to move to the urban centres. I feel it is very important that we make it possible for them to get the training, to get the education and to acquire the skills which will permit them to get adequate and reasonably well-paying jobs in the cities. Without that these people cannot find housing or have any kind of a living except getting the bare necessities through welfare.

I am sure the minister knows of this situation from personal observation as well as I. In our community colleges and in other training institutions in those cities, in those provinces where there is this movement into the city, I hope to see a major effort different than it has been up to now, to try to bring these people into the main stream of our life so that they can live as other people in our provinces do. I do not believe that we have seen that up to the present time.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I have a number of questions for the minister. I happened to be around when the government of the day passed this legislation. I felt it would be appropriate legislation giving incentive to employers to find new jobs. But it is rather disappointing, to say the least, that when one starts looking at the figures, I think out of the $100 million that goes into this program, probably about .01 per cent comes back to Nova Scotia. That would be about $1 million. If one looks at the southern end of the province having 10 per cent of Nova Scotia's jobs created, it comes to about $100,000.

Before expanding on that point, perhaps the minister could tell me whether there is a difficulty in the southern end of Nova Scotia or in these areas of using this program to create jobs. When this employment tax credit bill was created, I spoke favourably and I hoped that the people in the area would benefit. I have encouraged companies in my region to go into it, but apparently they are not taking it up. Has the minister any given reasons why, in southern Nova Scotia, they cannot seem to create jobs, and lasting jobs?

I ask the minister if there is a different rate for different areas of the province in Nova Scotia, or is it all one rate job creation? I would ask also what that rate would be in the southern end of the province. Is it $2, it is in some areas of Quebec, or is it less than that as a job incentive tax credit?

These are a couple of concerns. Would the minister have any response as to why this program does not seem to go over in high unemployment areas, such as the southern end of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I suggest one reason why the program did not enjoy success over the past year was that we lacked the competent and effective services of the present member for South West Nova who would provide the kind of educational and distributional material for which she is so well known in her riding. We probably suffered for her absence in getting the program accepted during that period of time.

As I have said in the past, the tax credit program is not a program that is necessarily applicable in all regions of the country on equal rates. It does depend on the existence of a body of employers who have the initiative and the ability to take up the program.

In some areas of the country where economic conditions are not prosperous, where there is high unemployment, obviously the tax credit is not particularly appropriate. That is why we decided that rather than again relying solely upon the tax credit as the only job-creation measure, we would reintroduce direct job creation, such as the Canada Development Program, which I can assure the hon. member will have a much larger degree of investment in that part of Nova Scotia than she would have had under the previous government's program.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I was around when the amendments were made to the Unemployment Insurance Act. We were supposed to be saving about $1 billion and reinvesting it into employment programs. One of the reasons why we could come up with this employment tax credit was that it had an appeal not only to corporations and companies to give the incentive to create, but it was supposed to create jobs. I think that some of the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act took away millions and millions of dollars from the southern end of the province and created lots of confusion as to the amount of the numbers of weeks because of the variable entrance requirements last year. Then I look at a program like this. I think there were 65 jobs created in 1979 to 1980 in two manpower offices in my riding.

We can talk about other programs, but this happens to be very effective in some areas of the country. Maybe it is effective in areas that do not have high unemployment. I still cannot understand why we are not getting people in the area to extend this concept to these areas, for example, mine. It seems to me they should be willing to take on a tax incentive because they should be looking for the tax breaks. Is it because we just do not have the money to create jobs? Is it the chicken and the egg, and one is not there?

Concerning the additional jobs created, and I think of the many people who were unemployed last winter because of the amendments and because of the variable entrance requirements by which, come October, they needed 17 weeks, come November they needed 18 weeks, and come December they needed 19 weeks, these variable entrance requirements could not create jobs. They were not going to create jobs at that time. The employment programs that have been brought out in the past are all reflective on economic statistical regions within Nova Scotia. If you happen to have an area that is lumped in with a very highly developed area, your area is still not going to receive any benefits, and will be penalized for being in a highly developed area.

I have already asked this evening whether the amount paid to the employer as a tax incentive is different throughout Nova Scotia. Is it dependent upon these economic regions? Does the minister have any information available? And could he come up with it tonight whether Nova Scotia gets a uniform rate or is it tied into the economic regions?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member should understand that the application of the employment tax credit is not allocated according to constituency or according to any allocation based upon statistical regions. It is a national program that is available to any employer throughout Canada. There is no stipulation that only so many jobs or so much of the allocation can go to a particular region. It depends upon the take up of that region.

I would indicate to the hon. member that, while I cannot give her a breakdown in terms of individual constituencies, within the province of Nova Scotia itself, in the last fiscal year, close to 1,000 jobs were created with the employment tax credit program, which is a substantial investment by this government. In terms of the actual rate of salaries in Nova Scotia, the salaries paid to workers under the employment tax credit program averaged about $166 per week, which is above the minimum wage in this case.

Those statistical breakdowns I can give the hon. member. If she would like, we can try to refine it even further. I suppose we could back to the computer tapes and try even closer to determine her riding. She should not make the mistake of assuming that this program is in any way dependent upon the statistical regions that are used by unemployment insurance. The two are quite unrelated.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, the only brochure I have available right now is the one for Quebec. I notice that in Quebec there are three hourly rates. I am just wondering if that has something to do with economic regions and their development in those areas. That is why I was wondering about the province of Nova Scotia.

My information is there were 644 jobs created in Nova Scotia. If there were 1,000 as the minister says, and only 65 out of 1,000 in my area, that means a lot less than 10 per cent of the jobs were created in the southern end of the province in those two manpower offices. Perhaps the minister might be able to provide me with that information. If we continue at another time, I might be able to get that information from him.

I cannot stress to the minister how important these economic regions seem to be, not only to manpower and employment areas in Nova Scotia, but for development purposes and DREE purposes. If you are locked in to a very highly economic region, you are going to be penalized.

An area like Truro, Nova Scotia, which is economically well off, is in an economic zone and tied into an area that does not have low unemployment. An area such as the town of Truro will benefit by a high unemployment rate because of the average of it and therefore will not be penalized. The only area aside from the Halifax area that I can see that was penalized would be the southern end of Nova Scotia because it was locked in with Lunenburg, which is a highly developed area, one of the best-off areas in the province of Nova Scotia.

When you come to employment programs, we waited for many years for a community employment strategy program to come into the area. It was designated to come in a number of years ago. However, we went into economic regions and it went to other areas where there was a higher unemployment rate. We got into Canada Works or Young Canada Works, and again we were penalized by an economic region that was too high. I am wondering if the same applies to this employment tax credit. I will be very upset if it does, because at the time the amendments were passed to the unemployment insurance, one of the reasons the $1 billion supposedly being redistributed was to create jobs elsewhere. This was one of the programs that was approved for spending. Yet if I only see 65 jobs and there is a failure rate in those 65, perhaps over a long term, what do we do with the $100,000 that came back, if it is 10 per cent to that area to create jobs out of the totals of millions that we lost because of those? I am just wondering if at some future time I might be able to find out if this hourly rate is different throughout the province of Nova Scotia and is it dependent on economic regions?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to put the hon. member's mind at ease. The rate is entirely the same for the province of Nova Scotia. It is a $2 rate. Just to ease her concerns further, I would like to indicate to her that the $2 rate also applies to certain regions in Quebec, with the exception of the Montreal-Hull area. It is also excluded in the southern Ontario area, plus southern British Columbia and southern Alberta which are at the $1.50 rate. The rest of the country is at $1.75. That is why the hon. member finds there are three rates in the province of Quebec upon which this is allocated.

Again, it would be wrong for the hon. member to assume that programs such as the employment tax credit and other programs that were announced are entirely and totally related to the regions established under the unemployment insurance program. As the hon. member knows, having been a member of the House when the debates were on regarding the changes to that act, there was agreement in this House by all parties that there had to be a variable entrance requirement at that time. It had to be gauged by finer-tuned economic regions in order to ensure that there would not be an enormous overrun in the costs of unemployment insurance.

When she asks, for example, about the community development strategy, we have restored the community development strategy. That is not related to economic regions. It is related to the initiative of the member of Parliament in that area developing a project with the local people and, if she will bring it forward to me, we can get it off the ground. They are not in any way geared at the present time to economic regions. They are geared more to the ability of different communities to work with the local businessmen, local communities, local municipal councils—

Mr. Kempling: Speak to the Chair. We would like to hear what you say. We do not like to look at your back.

Mr. Axworthy: Why don't you open your ears if you want to hear? Those kinds of initiatives are really being taken on the grounds there has to be some basis in the Unemployment Insurance Act for establishing regions that most of the job programs are not related to those economic regions. They are related either to the constituency itself or will be applied on a broader regional basis or on a national basis.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I realize the employment strategy programs the minister brought in last week and plans to discuss later, but I did not think there was any particular program whereby the member of Parliament alone could get at certain specific funds unless it was a greater package that was distributed to economic regions. I am not going to get into that because I plan to discuss that at another time and place when we do that bill.

I am discussing an employment tax credit that does not seem to benefit a high unemployment area which is not recognizable. Therefore, out of that $1 billion saving and the agreement of this government to proceed with that program, it seems there should be another return to that area, and jobs are not being created by such a program.

I reiterate that an area such as the southern end, rural and fishing, with all the economic benefits of the 200-mile zone and access to the fish, cannot seem to use this program. We can talk about the initiatives of a member of Parliament. That is fine. But there must be other reasons why this program is not being effectively used. It does not seem to be meeting this. I am curious to know what they are.

I am not against the idea of the tax incentive, but there must be reasons why we cannot seem to do this. Is it our manpower offices, that they have not got the capacity or the ability, or is it that the program does not apply to this region?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I would simply suggest to the hon. member that probably there is no one in this House better able to give that answer than herself. She would be much closer and would have the access to the employers and the people in that community. I would very much welcome it if she were able to provide some kind of survey or assessment as to why there is not a take-up in that riding. I would be very pleased to hear the hon. member's representations with regard to that.

We do advertise the program—it is advertised through the manpower and employment offices—but it is the employers who are required to take the initiative in applying; there is nothing the federal government can do to force people to apply. But in cases where a tax credit is not taken up we provide an alternative by way of other direct job-creation measures. That is where our philosophy is substantially different from that of the Conservatives who relied almost exclusively upon a tax credit at the expense of direct job-creation programs which they cancelled.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Chairman, the minister alluded earlier to the question I raised when I spoke on this bill when it first came to the House. I suggested there were abuses. The minister indicated that he had checked with regard to that aspect. How did he carry out this check in other centres, and what means did he use?

Mr. Axworthy: As I explained, there is a built-in check already in the program. When an employer applies for a tax credit he must establish base line data in terms of present employment structure. He must file a declaration that the job to be produced will be an additional job. Such a statement is signed by the employer. I am not going to contest the integrity of several thousand small businessmen across the country who apply under this project.

We did check in the particular instance the hon. member gave. He implied that one of our officials suggested to employers in his area that they simply use the tax credit as a way of providing a replacement for an ordinary employment vacancy. We were told that this was not the case; it was a misinterpretation.

I take the hon. member's comments with a great deal of seriousness because they do raise an important issue. But at this point the fail-safe method we use is to ask the employer to tell us what his base line data is, and that is monitored. He must, then, produce additional employees. We simply do not absorb any part of their salaries unless they show they have additional workers. Second, they have to indicate that these are incremental workers, workers they would not hire under normal circumstances in their job programs. That is the extent to which we are able to apply checks and balances at the present moment.

If the hon. member has suggestions to make as to how we could introduce further checks without embroiling the employer in a great deal of red tape I should be pleased to hear them. When the program was first introduced it was not taken up with a great deal of frequency. One of the reasons for that, from the point of view of the employers, was that there were too many forms to fill in and too many restrictions. So we loosened the restrictions—and I have certainly had enough comments and representations from members of the Conservative party about trusting small businessmen, cutting through red tape and loosening restrictions. Well, we did that, and the program has taken off and is being used on a wide basis. Now the hon. member is suggesting that we reintroduce a whole variety of supervision measures and restrictions. We would want to see more evidence of abuses before being prepared to listen to his suggestions.

Mr. Shields: On the contrary, Mr. Chairman. I am not suggesting that the minister change the program. What I am attempting to do is draw attention to what I feel to be very serious drawbacks to the program. The minister mentioned that the scheme is being monitored, and I would like to know what tools he is using to monitor the program. I would suggest that a very simple method of monitoring a program of this nature would be to check previous company payrolls and make periodic inspections of the payroll. This would indicate whether new jobs had been created or whether jobs are just being refilled.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, that is what is being done. As I have said, a base line number of employees is provided. If the firm's employment does not exceed that number, the Department of National Revenue will carry out an audit and the firm will simply not get the tax credit.

Mr. Shields: I would also point out that the manpower offices in the various regions employ people to solicit businessmen and make them aware of the program. One might look at it in this light—that whoever is doing this job is really trying to make the employer aware of the program and, possibly through being over-zealous or possibly because clear direction from the top is lacking, he is put in the position of trying to "sell" this program. Are there, in fact, employees in each manpower office who are responsible for just the tax credit program?

Mr. Axworthy: Before we go much further, I would point out that the hon. member is making fairly serious charges about the administration of the program. We did check in the employment offices in his riding and there was a clear response that none of our employees had offered the kind of inducement the hon. member has suggested. So I would ask the hon. member to give specific instances in which what he suggests took place. If he does, I shall be able to investigate them. However, before he builds a general case I believe he should provide us with documented evidence upon which such a case could be built.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Chairman, when an employee of the department of manpower approaches a businessman, whether in my riding or his riding, or in the riding of South West Nova and suggests that this program can be used to an employer's advantage—because this is still a job which is being created although, since business is expanding, it is a job which would have been created anyway—it might be difficult to say no. A businessman signs an affidavit that he is creating a new job. It is a new job in the sense that the business is expanding, but it is not a new job created because of the tax incentive program. That is the point I am trying to get across.

Take an area like Fort McMurray, which is a high growth centre, an employer who may have had an employee base line of 25 employees in the food industry, the hotel industry, or whatever, puts in an application to Manpower saying he wishes to engage new employees. But this is a high-growth area, remember, and the business would be expanding anyway. This is what I see as causing the problem. It applies to Edmonton, to Calgary, to the whole of Alberta, and particularly to Fort McMurray in my riding.

Mr. Axworthy: We come back, then, to a fundamental dilemma. We do rely on the co-operation of the private sector to make this program work. I have often heard members on the other side extol the virtues of the private sector. It is the businessmen, they say, who should be the engineers of the job-creation program. If this is to be accepted as a premise we are bound to rely upon their integrity because there is no foolproof way for any government to say to an employer "We don't think the job you have added under our program is one you might not have added anyway." There is no way of measuring this without peering into the mind and guessing the intention of the businessman. It is simply not possible to do this unless we have been able to devise a way of placing a spectroscope against their heads and deciding whether that is really what they have in mind.

We have suggested that even in high-growth areas like Fort McMurray there is still a large number of people who are unemployed. As the hon. member well knows, there are all kinds of people moving into high-growth areas like Alberta with the expectation that they are going to be on the great streets of golden dreams. They get there and find they do not have the skills required for the jobs available. There is unemployment in those areas, and often people go into the service industry.

I think perhaps one indicator we have—and I am the first to concede that we will want to evaluate the program as it continues to determine whether in fact it is the ultimate proof—is that about 50 per cent of the employees hired under the employment tax credit continue in the work force or in their jobs afterwards. It shows that there is a certain sticking effect. We might interpret that and say that perhaps it shows that these people were going to be hired in any event, but the fact is that we do know we are creating 100 per cent additional jobs. What percentage of those are actually new jobs is hard to say, but we have estimated 60 per cent according to our best estimates. However, give us a chance to continue the program a little longer. We may have better defined answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR VANCOUVER ART GALLERY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have the attention of all hon. members who are in the House on a matter of some concern to the city from which I come, the city of Vancouver in the province of British Columbia. I address my remarks especially to government members because in the city of Vancouver we desperately need—I was going to say we need a new art gallery, but really we need an art gallery which would do credit not just to the city of Vancouver and the surrounding neighbourhood but to the whole of the province of British Columbia.

The reason I would like to take hon. members into my confidence is that, unlike any other city, at least as far back as I can remember—and I have looked into it—the people within the province of British Columbia went out and raised over $4½ million from 15,000 subscribers to help build a new art gallery. In fact it was to help move the art gallery from the old, inadequate premises into a courthouse which is going to be abandoned and which is an historic building.

This is a community which went out and raised the money first and then went to the province, to the city, and now to the federal government. While the party I represent was the Government of Canada, we agreed to match the $4½ million which was pledged by the 15,000 people who raised it, and that money—and I want all hon. members to pay very close attention to this—is conditional upon the federal government's coming through.

This is not the first time a city has received funding from the federal government. In a letter to the editor of the Vancouver Sun by Duncan Campbell, the president of the Vancouver art gallery, he pointed out that the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts received a $3.4 million grant and that the Art Gallery of Ontario received a $6 million grant. There have been other grants made. This is not something the city of Vancouver is asking for which has not been done in other places.

What we have had recently is a not very satisfactory but, in fact, a rather unseemly situation. The Secretary of State (Mr. Fox) says that, "If only you terrible Tories had not tinkered with Loto Canada, there would be lots of money for the art gallery." I have to say, with great respect, that whatever was done with Loto has nothing to do with the principle involved here.

The other day when I asked a question in this House, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), formerly a secretary of state, indicated—and it is recorded in Hansard—how very much he wanted this to go ahead, but then he went on and said that somehow or other the former government, which was committed to get the money, had blown it by daring to alter the Loto arrangements. Look, it is just not fair and it is just not reasonable.

The art gallery in Vancouver will be the art gallery for British Columbia against a backdrop, by the way, of a situation where we cannot even exhibit all of the works of Emily Carr because there is just not a place for them. The time has come for this, and I must appeal to members on the government side to give us a break and speak directly to the Secretary of State on this matter. It is just not good enough to go out there and say that because of changes in Loto there will be no money for art galleries in western Canada. That is just not good enough.

I underline the fact that we are not asking for something we have not gone out and made a real effort to match in terms of funds. If any of the members opposite come from cities or communities which would go out and raise over $4 million from 15,000 people, I would be very surprised.

Because this must be concluded by the end of this month, we have already received a very ominous letter dated May 9 from Mr. McGann, the Executive Director of the Vancouver Foundation, saying that the $250,000 pledged by the Vancouver Foundation—if the government cannot make up its mind soon—will have to be withdrawan. It will happen with other donations. I ask members on the government side to listen to my plea. Surely to goodness a community which has the gumption, determination and interest to put that amount of money up from the private sector should be given a break. We are not asking for something that has not been done in other places, but we are asking for something on one condition—we went out and raised the money first. That has been done in other places.

In other places the federal government has been asked for up front money. In this case the local community has put the money up front. I know there are many issues which cross partisan lines, but I am glad to see that there are a number of members on the government side tonight and I ask them to take this matter up immediately in caucus. Caucus will be on Wednesday morning. I ask hon. members to give use a break on this matter and raise the matter there. It is something that is needed in British Columbia, it is something that is appropriate, and it is something on which our own people have already made very significant pledges.

I hope there will be no more talk about the fact that unless the new government can work out a whole new deal on Loto, there will be no money for an art gallery in Vancouver for the province of British Columbia. I am sure hon. members, knowing the situation, would not want that response. I ask the indulgence of hon. members to plead my case when the appropriate time comes on Wednesday morning.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) had all my sympathy until he implied that only western Canada or British Columbia were being victimized by this program. I want to tell him right now very, very strongly—as strongly as I can—that such is not the case. Indeed the hon. member, and any one of his ilk, will do no justice to the people of Canada by attempting to put one province of Canada against the rest of Canada.

In his remarks on Friday the hon. member for Vancouver South seemed to suggest that only he and members of his party are interested in this problem. Nothing could be further from the truth. Indeed, if the former Conservative government had been more concerned with this matter, this debate would not even have been necessary. In fact it was for just such worthy projects as the Vancouver art gallery—and I admit that it is a very worthy project—that the federal government intended to use Loto Canada revenues. Of course, that was before the former Conservative government made its unfortunate decision to throw away Loto Canada, thus depriving both the sports and cultural community of a considerably large amount of available funds.

Had the previous Conservative government not made its sweetheart deal with the provinces—

Mr. Fraser: That is a ridiculous, cheap answer.

Mrs. Appolloni: If the hon. member wants to listen he has to do me the courtesy of keeping quiet.

Mr. Fraser: I have listened to all I want to hear.

Mrs. Appolloni: It is estimated that 30 per cent of the total net revenues from Loto Canada would have been allocated to arts and culture on an annual basis. At that time Loto Canada estimated this amount at $30 million. Even if we take a more conservative, perish the word, figure, forecasting increased competition in the lottery field, the yield to arts and culture would still be estimated at being no less than $19.5 million per year.

Under the agreement negotiated by the previous Conservative government only $12 million would have been allocated to arts and culture; that is much less money to undertake the projects which both the arts community and the federal government want to see undertaken.

On Friday the hon. member for Vancouver South raised the spectre of blackmail. This is most emphatically not the case.

Mr. Fraser: It's what they are saying back home, lady.

Mrs. Appolloni: If the hon. member cannot control himself I do not think he wants information, he just wants to make some more brownie points. It is emphatically not a question of blackmail, but of a government attempting to do whatever can be done to overcome the difficulties inherited from its immediate predecessor.

We are approaching the issue of arts and culture funding, including the Vancouver art gallery project, with the highest sense of concern and, indeed, urgency. I must emphasize that there are many projects from all across the entire country well worthy of government support. The government must do its best to fund these worth-while projects within the very limited amounts of money available for this purpose. Due largely to the previous Conservative government, there is unfortunately very much less money available for this purpose than we would have wished.

INDUSTRY—PROPOSAL FOR INSTALLATION OF SYNCROLIFT IN ST. JOHN'S DOCKYARD

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in connection with a question I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) last Thursday about the proposal for the installation of a syncrolift at St. John's dockyard in St. John's. I never expected I would have to mention this project again in this House, but it has to be mentioned because it appears that someone on the other side wants to sabotage this economic development project that is scheduled to go ahead in my district of St. John's West, or was scheduled to go ahead until this government returned to power last February 18.

Put very shortly, there was a dockyard built in St. John's, Newfoundland, back in the 1920s by the government of Newfoundland, which had very little money and very little prospect, as an act of faith in the marine industry in Newfoundland. That dockyard is still basically the dockyard that is there today in Newfoundland. It was taken over by the Government of Canada in 1949. The Government of Canada gave it to CN to operate and it has been operating the dockyard ever since.

It has one graving dock. That graving dock can take three or four ships, but once those ships are on the dock it can take no more until they are repaired and discharged. That is the nature of a graving dock. The yard in the last couple of years has had the opportunity of greatly increasing its business from foreign fishing fleets, particularly the fishing fleet of the U.S.S.R. To do that business it needs a syncrolift. A syncrolift is simply a mechanical device to lift ships out of the water and put them down in a berth on dry land. This would be a three-berth syncrolift so they could do three vessels of up to 3,600 tons in each one of those berths using the syncrolift, while other vessels were being done in the drydock.

The dockyard was losing money until several years ago. It is now making money, and with the traffic that is offering now, with the syncrolift it could be a real winner. It would increase employment from 330 men and women, now employed, by 150. It would employ some 50 people during the construction period.

When I was first elected in October, 1976, I brought this to the attention of the government and I worked with the dockyard to make its case with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On December 29, 1978, it was announced by Mr. Jack Horner, the then minister, and by Don Jamieson, the then Newfoundland minister, that the government was going to go ahead and provide the funds for this syncrolift, which was estimated then to cost $15 million.

The syncrolift was to be operated by CN which would enter into a lease and repay 65 per cent of the funds over a period of 15 years, 20 years or 25 years, whatever the period was. CN would guarantee that it would pay 65 per cent of the cost, and the remainder of the cost would be in the form of a grant from the Government of Canada. That is very slim assistance compared to other dockyards in Canada.

The shipyard in Halifax is getting an 80 per cent grant from the Government of Canada, and a 20 per cent from its provincial government, which amounts to a 100 per cent grant. Halifax has to pay nothing back on a $43 million expansion. I could go on and mention shipyards and dockyards in Quebec and British Columbia which are getting much more generous treatment. Nevertheless, that is fine, and there is no reason why this should not go ahead.

When my party took office we went ahead and appointed consulting engineers. They began work on the plans and specifications. The project was approved by Treasury Board and all the necessary steps were taken. About two months ago the consulting engineers reported that the site is feasible and the project is feasible. Since that time we have had the tremendous prospect of the Hibernia oil fields and the gas prospects off Newfoundland.

This dockyard is within 175 miles of this great potential, the Hibernia oil fields. It will be a real money maker as years go on. But the consulting engineers recorded that the costs had now gone to $23.4 million. CN has shaved off $2.4 million in costs and brought it down to, I believe, $20.7 million. In 1980 dollars, the $15 million estimated cost of 1978 is $18.5 million. This in effect would be several million dollars more than the original estimate.

It is not the fault of the dockyard that we have had inflation over the last two years. We know whose fault that is. Now the word is that the government does not know whether it will go ahead with this project. It does not know whether the project should go ahead because of this $2 million cost overrun. The minister who represents Newfoundland, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey), should be fighting for this project. It is an economic development project for his own province. Instead of doing that, he goes to Newfoundland and says that he does not know whether this project is going to go ahead or not this year. The Telegram of May 29 quotes the Minister of National Revenue as saying:

> Right now government is in the process of redoing the list of projects that need to be done. The syncrolift is just one of a number of projects around the province—

The minister said that construction at Wabush airport in his district had been held up while the Conservatives were in power in Ottawa. What does the construction of an airport facility in Labrador have to do with economic development funds to be spent in St. John's, Newfoundland? At least the minister's predecessor from Newfoundland, Don Jamieson, fought for the whole province. He did not go to cabinet meetings to fight only for his own district. He did not screw projects that were not in his district. He did not put the blocks to projects which were in districts of members from other parties. I hope that the Minister of National Revenue will not do what he appears to want to do, squash this project in some little manoeuvre so that he can get some extra money from Treasury Board for Wabush airport in Newfoundland, which is not even an economic development project.

When I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce about this, he confirmed that the government is committed to the balanced development of every part of Canada, including the province of Newfoundland. If this government opposite is dedicated to the balanced development of every part of Canada, it will see that this project in the St. John's dockyard will go ahead. It is one of the few feasible or viable economic development projects in Newfoundland that has come up in the last five years.

If the project does not go ahead, there is only one reason, and it is political; the Liberal minister from this province is trying to put the knife in a project in a district which is held by a Conservative. That is the only possible reason, unless CN, for some reason, goes back on its bargain. If CN does go back on its bargain, then I say, "Call in private enterprise and let's turn the dockyard over to private enterprise". It is a money maker, and it will make a fortune for whoever owns and operates this facility in the future.

The project might not cost the Government of Canada a cent because there is also a provision in the agreement that it will share the profits of the dockyard if they exceed $300,000 a year during the term of the agreement. They might well get the whole 100 per cent of their investment back. I am calling on the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to prove to the people of St. John's West and St. John's East, the people who work in that dockyard, the unions, the government of Newfoundland, the port associations and all the other associations, that there is not a body in Newfoundland opposing this project, although the shipyard in Marystown has sometimes expressed dismay, but the project has no connection with that town. That is every association in St. John's.

I want the minister to assure them that this kind of gross politics is not going to interfere with the economic development program of his department. This was part of the federal economic stimulation program to aid the Canadian shipbuilding and repair industry. It is a good project. The civil servants in the Department of Public Works, and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are all supportive of it. Every civil servant I have spoken to supports it. If it does not go ahead it will only be because of political interference of the most demeaning type.

If I am ever in a position again to represent my province in the Government of Canada, I hope that I will never stoop so low as to try to stop a project in another member's district that is so deserving—or even undeserving—after it has been started and is on its way. I would ask the minister to make a quick decision so that this project can get under way this year.

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to try to enlighten the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and bring him up to date on this project. The St. John's dockyard, as he knows, is a federal government dockyard operated by Canadian National. It came under federal ownership at the time of the union of Newfoundland with Canada. I know I do not have to tell the hon. member these things. As he knows, in response to CN's representations that the facility could not be operated effectively in its present state, a federal interdepartmental examination of the matter concluded that there is a need for a more effective drydocking system and also identified newly emerging market opportunities to which the hon. member referred, that could enhance operations if exploited properly.

From this emerged a plan for a marine elevator type of drydocking facility that could lift vessels weighing up to approximately 4,000 tonnes out of the water and transfer them to one of three working areas onshore. The number of working areas planned for St. John's was limited, by design, to three, so that no excess capacity would exist that might cause a shift of business from Marystown shipyard, which is owned by the province.

As the hon. member knows, both the Liberal and Conservative governments approved the plan whereby the Department of Public Works would construct the facility at a cost not to exceed $15 million in terms of 1978 dollars, and lease it to CN for a 25-year term at a rate that would reflect recovery of 65 per cent of the capital plus interest at the Crown corporation borrowing rate. CN accepted the proposal and Treasury Board authorized the Department of Public Works to fund and proceed with the initial engineering work.

The initial engineering work is now complete but reflects a situation where the estimated cost, at $23.4 million in terms of 1980 dollars, is much more than the $2 million difference to which the hon. member referred. Of course, in terms of 1980 dollars it exceeds the limit previously agreed by CN and by the government. Consequently the project is now under review by both parties, and alternative ways to bring costs within agreed limits are under examination.

The hon. member speaks of sabotage and political interference. To my mind this is just a responsible way for a government to look at a problem and try and make a decision. I am sure, from the remarks of the minister in reply to the hon. member's questions in the House and from the notes and the information that I have gathered, that this question is being considered very seriously by this responsible government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I want to recognize the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) next. First, however, I would extend the apologies of the Chair because I permitted hon. members a bit of leeway. Perhaps the hon. member will recognize that between himself and the parliamentary secretary who will reply there are now only five minutes remaining before the adjournment.

SEARCH AND RESCUE—INQUIRY WHY CAPABILITY ON WEST COAST NOT UPGRADED

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, on May 5 I put a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) to find out why, in light of the tragic sinking of a vessel off the west coast of British Columbia with the loss of 30 lives, his department refused to upgrade search and rescue capabilities on the west coast, and why there was a cutback on programs that had been promised. I also asked the minister if he could explain why he was not prepared to submit to the House two reports which he held from the Department of National Defence and the Ministry of Transport that analysed and made recommendations concerning this accident. His answer was basically that improvements had been made. Although they were not to my liking, undoubtedly they were unfolding as they should.

● (2225)

I would now challenge that minister to show that improvements have occurred over the last few years and that his department can deliver a rescue platform to the site of an emergency any sooner than they were able to do ten years ago. In fact, on the central coast of B.C. it still takes from three and a half to five and a half hours to place a rescue helicopter in that area, no matter whether it comes from Comox in Canada or Sitka in the United States. Nine out of ten times the rescue helicopters tend to come from Sitka.

I would also challenge the minister to show that he has not in fact cut back on improvements promised. First, five helicopters, CH113s and CH113As, were committed to go to CFB Comox. Would he confirm that these helicopters were assigned to this facility?

Next is the SARCUP program which is the helicopter upgrading program. Fourteen helicopters, CH113s and CH113As, were to be upgraded. Could the minister confirm that he has not cut back on that program and that he now intends only to upgrade 11 of those 14 helicopters?

Could the minister further assure us that the original automatic hover equipment that was to be used to provide automatic hovering references to stabilize the aircraft when hovering over heavy seas to pick something or somebody out the water, that he has not now substituted a less sophisticated, less expensive and less effective system?

Could the minister state yes or no whether he intends to release to the public or to this House the MOT and the DND reports which refer to the Lee Wang Zin? If the answer is no, could the minister explain why the public should not be entitled to the information contained in those reports?

Finally, I understand the minister will be submitting for approval to the cabinet the national SAR plan, if it is essentially updated from 1979-80, which never did reach the cabinet. It would extend, presumably, to the year 1985. When we examine that data, the data sheets in this report for Campbell River, Johnstone Straits, Queen Charlotte Sound, Hecate Strait, Queen Charlotte Islands, Vancouver Island West and the North Pacific, we find that there is only one piece of primary search and rescue equipment in that entire area. It is a 44-foot self-righting lifeboat that goes 12 miles an hour which covers 350 miles of the west coast and presumably 200 miles out to sea. This is clearly inadequate. In spite of that report, in spite of dramatic increases in population, it underestimates private and commercial activity. It does not give any mention of aircraft flights and increased traffic volumes and the government still cannot, with any degree of reliability, provide a rescue vessel in that area. This situation has not been changed for years.

I would ask the minister to release those reports. I would urge him to commit the necessary resources to distribute the helicopters at Comox along the coast of B.C. so they can be effectively deployed. I would urge him to upgrade the national SAR plan to provide immediate resources to the central and northern coasts of B.C. and, at the same time, to approve expenditure of funds for immediate use to prevent the crippling and time consuming process of bouncing important programs back and forth between cabinet, Treasury Board, and the departments over and over again.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in his reply on May 5, 1980, the minister stated that our search and rescue program has been improved in recent years, and we are continuing to improve it.

Under the search and rescue capability update program, 11 Canadian forces helicopters will undergo modifications to upgrade their capability for search and rescue operations. The modifications to the helicopters, six Labradors and five Voyageurs, include the installation of external long-range fuel tanks, rescue hoists, new radar and improved communications equipment. These improvements will extend the range of the aircraft and will enable them to fly search and rescue missions in adverse weather, day or night, throughout the 200-mile offshore limit.

The improvement program, to be completed by June, 1984, is part of a two-phase program. The first phase which began in 1978 consisted of improvements in the navigation avionics, communications and the installation of high-powered search lights.

A significant improvement in Canada's search and rescue capabilities is its participation with the United States and France in an international search and rescue satellite program called SARSAT. The first launch is scheduled for mid-1982.

• (2230)

Also, an interdepartmental working group has been formed under the auspices of the Interdepartmental Committee on Search and Rescue to ensure availability of reliable emergency locator transmitters, ELTs, by recommending methods for accelerating the reintroduction of existing ELTs into the general aviation category and to identify plans for the technological improvement of locater transmitters including their wider use and compatibility with SARSAT.

On this subject, I would refer the hon. member to the appendix of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence of December 4, 1979.

As regards reports on the sinking of the Lee Wang Zin, I can assure the hon. member that the recommendations in those reports which we are able to act upon will be implemented. Also, the minister explained in his letter of May 27, 1980, to the hon. member the nature of such investigations and why they are normally not made public. The minister also expressed his willingness to discuss the matter further with the hon. member.

As far as National Defence is concerned, everything is being done to improve the search and rescue capability of the rescue co-ordination centres, including the one on the west coast. I regret I do not have time to read the very long list of success stories carried out under the search and rescue program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION INTO SAFETY OF DISPOSABLE BUTANE LIGHTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I sincerely hope that all members will agree with my non-partisan motion as it affects the safety of millions of consumers.

In view of the fact that a number of people in North America have already lost their lives as a result of explosions of disposable butane cigarette lighters, which are said to have the same amount of force as approximately three sticks of dynamite, and because as recently as last night another similar accident critically injured comedian Richard Pryor who as of this moment is fighting for his life, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

That this House instruct the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to launch an immediate investigation into the safety of all disposable butane cigarette lighters in order to determine which brands should be removed from the marketplace and what appropriate safety warnings must be established.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DIRECTORSHIPS AND RESIDENCY LAW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the sweeping changes when the Canada Business Corporations Act succeeded the Canada Business Act, which affected some 21,000 small companies in Canada, and the severe consequences of expropriation of their assets by the government if continuance is not filed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs make a statement on motions to this House as to his intentions and interpretation regarding this Draconian procedure and the apparent use by some companies to transfer to provincial jurisdictions where directorships are not covered by Canadian residency law.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DECISION TO CLOSE AUTO PARTS FACTORY IN OSHAWA—STEPS TO PRESERVE JOBS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that Houdaille Industries Limited, of the United States, yesterday announced its decision to shut down its auto parts factory in Oshawa in October, in spite of having a less modern facility in the United States, and considering that Canada runs an annual deficit in auto parts trade with the United States of almost $4 billion, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House instruct the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce:

(1) to take immediate steps to try to preserve the jobs in the Houdaille plant in Oshawa, and

(2) to make clear to the United States government that the massive imbalance in automotive parts trade cannot persist.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INCOME TAX

RETENTION OF INDEXING OF PERSONAL INCOME TAXES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

The indexing of personal income tax to some extent prevents the tax man from profiting by inflation. This principle was first enunciated by the Hon. Robert Stanfield and adopted by the Hon. John Turner in his budget of 1974 as being an element of fairness in the tax system. I, therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone):

● (1410)

That this House direct the government that it should not in any way interfere with the indexing of personal income taxes, and if it needs measures to reduce its unmanageable debt it should introduce appropriate, honest fiscal measures and desist from its apparent intention to remove from the tax system the index for inflation.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

MOSCOW OLYMPIC GAMES—PROTEST AGAINST ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE STAMP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bruce Lonsdale (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a motion which I hope will gain the unanimous consent of the House.

Whereas the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) has confirmed that the previous Conservative government had approved plans to introduce a 35-cent stamp to commemorate the Moscow games this year, and whereas this government and many others have combined to boycott the Moscow games as a result of the U.S.S.R.'s invasion of Afghanistan, and whereas any action or gesture that might detract from the boycott's objective should not be pursued, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith):

That this House recommend to the Postmaster General that all and any plans to issue a stamp to commemorate the Moscow games be immediately terminated.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

INVESTIGATION INTO COSTS OF METRIC CONVERSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing national necessity regarding false and misleading practices of the Metric Commission in implementing conversion to the metric standard of weights and measures.

The Canadian Metric Commission has advised municipal fire departments that conversion to metric can be accomplished at a cost of $5 per pumper—the cost of applying decals to the vehicle. In fact, according to fire officials the cost can run to as much as $13,000 per pumper, including hoses and connections but not taking into account the cost of changing fire hydrants.

In view of information provided by the Metric Commission being inaccurate and grossly misleading, and the actual costs to municipal fire departments being prohibitive in many cases, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That a moratorium on the implementation of the metric conversion program be declared until the true costs are established and answers given as to whether metric conversion will result in better fire and rescue service, and will save more lives and more property, and whether or not litres of water will flow faster through metric hose.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CHARITABLE FOUNDATIONS

STATUS OF MANITOBA FOUNDATION FOR CANADIAN STUDIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that Revenue Canada has revoked the status of the Manitoba Foundation for Canadian Studies, publishers of "Canadian Dimension", as a charitable foundation, and in view of the fact that this unprecedented action constitutes a very serious threat to freedom of speech in Canada in attempting to make an unworkable distinction between education and promotion of a particular ideology, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House call upon the Minister of National Revenue to reverse this ill-advised decision and forthwith restore to the publishers of "Canadian Dimension", the Manitoba Foundation for Canadian Studies, its status as a charitable foundation.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since the constitutional package for the public was opened behind the closed doors of 24 Sussex Drive, and since restraint in all matters was apparently practised inside, but the CBC did otherwise outside, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That the House direct the Minister of Communications to find out if the mobile satellite dish at the on-spot location for the CBC across the street from the Prime Minister's residence was, indeed, that of the CBC or some other provincial jurisdiction and if it had, in fact, permission to operate, and what the total extra cost was of this on-location CBC coverage.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROGRAM TO ERADICATE AQUATIC WEED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the aquatic weed known as Eurasian milfoil.

Recognizing that the weed Eurasian milfoil shows no political boundaries as it chokes out the recreational waterways of Canada—in particular, this weed is presently infesting over 100,000 acres in the Kawartha Lakes' chain, adversely affecting a $100 million tourist business—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott):

That this government request the Minister of the Environment to meet with his provincial counterpart in Ontario in an effort to enter into a joint program of federal and provincial funding in order to eradicate this fast-spreading weed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—MEASURES TO DEAL WITH ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. As we have seen today, the unemployment figures are again discouraging: there has been an increase to 7.8 per cent in the seasonally adjusted figure, which is worse than a year ago and worse than a month ago.

The minister, on April 21, predicted an average unemployment rate of 8 per cent this year. Back in December, the Department of Finance predicted a rate of 8.3 per cent. Since then, on May 27 the deputy minister of finance, in his evidence before a senate committee, predicted "a higher and more sustained increase in the unemployment rate than was projected last fall" and also, he went on to say, "the prolongation of rather severe unemployment rates."

Can the minister tell the House what average unemployment rate he predicts during this year and next year, and would he indicate, whether by a budget or in other ways, how he intends to deal with the increasing and serious economic problems in this country? If not by a budget, how does he intend to indicate his way of dealing with these problems?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member for St. John's West has pointed out, the projection for unemployment that I presented on April 21 was about 8 per cent, a somewhat different figure than had been presented by himself in the preceding December.

I have had no reason to change that projection for 1980. Perhaps it ought to be changed and will have to be changed with ongoing developments. I believe that the projections made by my hon. friend in December had to be changed as a result of new developments, and that may occur in this case; but at the present time I am not projecting an additional increase.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, on April 24 the Prime Minister said, "Our main preoccupation is to ensure economic growth and jobs for Canadians and the deficit is a long-term objective." The firm of Wood Gundy has predicted, for the first time since 1954, that we are going to have a real decline in output in the Canadian economy—a decline of 0.5 per cent—which does not say much for economic growth. We know from the figures that jobs for Canadians are seriously in danger.

Could the minister tell the House how he plans to ensure economic growth and jobs for Canadians, especially in view of the present record high deficit that he is prophesying for this year in his budget and the high deficit in the balance of international payments? How is the minister going to carry out the Prime Minister's objective in the light of this situation?

Mr. MacEachen: I should add, Madam Speaker, that the projection made by Wood Gundy is more pessimistic for growth in 1980 than the projection which I gave on April 21, which was real growth of one-half of 1 per cent. I notice that the president of the Royal Bank today gave a similar forecast. There is no doubt that as a result of declines in the United States and the absorption of very large oil price increases in the world economy, we are in a period of slow growth in Canada.

The hon. member has asked what my plans are with respect to dealing with that situation. I have said to my hon. friend that it is certainly not my intention at the moment to attempt to deal with that situation by recommending further increases in the very large fiscal deficit. I do not believe my hon. friend would recommend that course, either. There is a good deal of stimulus being provided by the very large deficit that is in existence at the present time. In the absence of that deficit, probably the unemployment rate—no question of probability, there is no doubt that the unemployment rate would be higher than it is at the present time.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, there is no question about it; the minister in office is a changed man from the minister out of office, and he had better get his act together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Those on our left are only happy when there is trouble in the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: My final supplementary to the Minister of Finance is this. In the minister's speech in Paris recently, June 4, to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, he said:

> To the extent that these changes include further reductions in the demand for oil—

Sorry, the minister said this:

> But the experience of the 1970s has brought home the point that we are unlikely to achieve a sustained improvement in employment unless we get inflation under better control.

Does this indicate it will be the minister's policy direction and chief priority to introduce policies to get inflation under better control? Not policies directed at increasing employment but, rather, that the emphasis is going to be in getting inflation under better control? In other words, does he mean what he says, or does he not mean what he says, or does what he says mean anything?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, that convoluted series of questions would require an answer that only the hon. member would be capable of giving.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: As the hon. member knows, there is always the dilemma of trying to deal with rising unemployment and the threat of inflation. The consensus of opinion at the OECD meeting of ministers of finance from the western industrialized countries was that at the present time it would be desirable to maintain the battle against inflation—not to attempt to reflate at the present time against the danger of renewed inflationary expectations.

Mr. Crosbie: Did you agree?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Madam Speaker, I agreed with that approach. This is a situation that will have to be assessed as time goes on, particularly in view of what happens in other countries. But it would seem to be unwise today to begin to launch an abrupt change in policy and to assume that the threat to the economies of not only Canada but other countries from inflation is over. That would not be very wise.

EMPLOYMENT

EXPENDITURES FOR JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On April 21, the finance minister increased federal expenditures by $2 billion. In view of the rapidly increasing unemployment situation, can the minister tell the House how much of that $2 billion increase has been allocated for employment-creation projects?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member well knows—because he has been in the House and participated in debates—we have announced two job-creation programs, one a summer job-creation program which was in the neighbourhood of $100 million, and the program announced last Monday of $137 million. Those are direct job-creation programs.

I would also remind the hon. member that in the last three months this government has brought forward a number of decisions that will stimulate the economy—the fighter aircraft decision, major investments in DREE programs, major investments to support Chrysler—all of which are deisgned to provide a stimulus for jobs across Canada in terms of long-term economic development. If you add all those up, we are probably investing in this country to the extent that our fiscal limits will allow.

● (1425)

Mr. Hawkes: There appears to be a contradiction between that statement and the statement of the Minister of Finance. If the Minister of Employment and Immigration is suggesting that $237 million out of the $2 billion is allocated toward job creation, I do not think we shall find it in the figures which were presented to us.

The labour force data released today suggests that in the past month this country has lost 68,000 jobs, on a seasonally adjusted basis; that is, 3,400 jobs lost each working day. Can the minister tell us whether, in his view, that loss is temporary or long-term and likely to accelerate?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that the contradiction is surely in the eyes of the beholder. In this case there is no difference whatsoever between myself and the Minister of Finance. What the Minister of Finance has just said is that we, like most economies, are influenced by a number of factors.

Certainly, there is the international factor—the softening in the U.S. market and the severe recession which the U.S. economy is now experiencing. So in terms of giving an answer, it depends partly on decisions made elsewhere, outside the borders of this country. But I can assure the hon. member that we will do everything we can to soften the impact and respond with a great deal of care and concern.

HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT—PROGRAMS TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The unemployment figures released today show that over 900,000 people are unemployed. The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment is up in every region. Also, in the heartland of the Canadian manufacturing industry, Ontario, unemployment is up sharply, to a large extent because 30,000 auto workers and workers in related industries such as rubber, plastics and glass are unemployed and are not likely to resume employment, if ever, until 1981 or 1982.

Given these facts, can the minister tell us whether the government is considering new programs which will put a large proportion of our unacceptably high number of unemployed to work? Or are we to assume that the government has decided that these people will just have to live as best they can until the international economic situation improves?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I think that would be an unduly pessimistic attitude to take. The hon. member referred to the particular position of the auto industry. It seems to me that general demand policies would not have very much of an effect on improving the sales of automobile manufacturers. It is the kind of program announced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, namely, to permit companies like Chrysler to adjust to market conditions, which has the best chance of providing employment opportunities. That is the type of program we ought to be seeking in the present situation.

Mr. Orlikow: It seems to me highly unlikely that 900,000 unemployed are going to be in the market for cars, refrigerators, houses or anything else. Despite all the speeches about helping women to get jobs, or better jobs, figures today indicate that 400,000 women are looking for work. That is virtually 40 per cent of the work force. Does the government have any plans to ensure that more women will be able to find jobs in the coming year?

Mr. MacEachen: I think I should clarify my earlier answer to the hon. member so that he would realize that when I talked about the automobile industry, I had in mind those persons in that industry who are suffering from unemployment and whose only hope for future employment comes, not from general demand policies, but from structural readjustment within the industry itself so that the market opportunities for the product would be better.

As the hon. member knows, there are certain automobile manufacturers abroad who are competing very vigorously in the North American market because they have products which consumers want. That is the point I had in mind with respect to these unemployed.

● (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: What about the second part?

[Editor's Note: At this point Mr. Trudeau entered the chamber.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, to say the least, I am dismayed at what I consider to be a very cold and callous reply from the Minister of Finance, who himself comes from an area which has a large number of unemployed, to a very serious problem.

I would like to ask the minister a very specific question. Almost 50 per cent of the unemployed are young people under 24, and of those more than 400,000, 95,000 are students who are looking for work for the summer. They not only have difficulty finding jobs, but also in the calculations which the provinces make with respect to student aid it is assumed that 45 per cent of their needs will be met by income they earn from working. Can the minister indicate what programs the government has to ensure that these people can find enough work so that they can go back to school this fall?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I would have thought the hon. member was aware that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has already announced a job-creation program, and that within his plans there is room for a very large number of employment opportunities for summer students.

HOUSING

MEASURES TO INCREASE STARTS AND CREATE JOBS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for housing. According to CMHC, housing starts are over 100,000 behind what CMHC says are required for Canadians in 1980. This translates into a loss of over 100,000 jobs both in the housing industry and in related industries. When is the government going to act on this crisis and start to provide incentives which would then produce jobs and homes for Canadians?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as I indicated in answer to a similar question yesterday in the House, it is my belief, and the belief of the corporation officials, that those figures for the month of May reflected the high interest rates of earlier in the year. It is our anticipation that they will pick up, with interest rates having been adjusted.

I would say that the Minister of Finance should take full credit for not having overreacted to requests for the spending of billions and billions of dollars in response to that temporary adjustment. In addition, I indicated that before the end of the month the government will be responding modestly to improve some of the programs designed to bring relief to all classes of people in the industry.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, perhaps the minister is going to change the construction season in Canada, because by the time he gets it out, it will be half over.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lewis: Does the government not sense the urgency in the fact that the season is half over before it has put out any program?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, the government indeed recognizes, for example, that there is a backlog in the demands for more starts and the number of programs which are already in place administratively by the government. We know there are people waiting and ready to take up starts which are released. I expect in the two programs which will be announced before the end of the month that there are clients and people ready and willing to start building almost immediately.

AIR TRANSPORT

ENGINE FAILURES ON AIR CANADA AIRCRAFT—STUDY ON AIR SAFETY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is with regard further to Air Canada's 747 problem with engine failure last Saturday.

In light of statements from Air Canada that there is a very serious idling problem with its 747s, and the statement from the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers' Association that the pilot involved in the 747 incident Saturday should not have taken out another flight the same night, will the minister expand the terms of reference of Justice Dubin to include these near-fatal accidents within the context of the study on air safety the justice is currently undertaking?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have an answer to the first part of the question at least. The event in London is not considered to be an accident. I am told that in cases like this, in which the aircraft is not involved in an accident as defined in the regulations, there is no requirement for the crew members not to conduct a further planned flight. So this was not an accident. This was considered to be a mishap of some kind, but the normal procedure is for the pilot to continue.

With respect to the relationship between that and the inquiry conducted by Judge Dubin, my information is that the judge is taking a very wide approach to security in the air and will want to make recommendations on a very wide plane.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, if that fourth engine had failed, I point out to the minister that there would have been a fourth accident. They were very fortunate.

In view of the fact that Transport Canada inspectors have stated before Justice Dubin's inquiry that it is impossible for Transport Canada to determine whether Canadian aircraft are airworthy as, and I quote, "they are being muzzled by their supervisors", has the minister taken action to correct this situation and to ease the minds of members of the travelling public, or will we have to wait for Justice Dubin's report in October before the minister takes corrective action on safety inspections?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, just on details again, it was not three engines which had trouble; it was only two. Just to rectify these things.

With respect to representations made before the judge, I would think it would be in the spirit of asking a commission to inquire to wait until the judge decides which of these representations he considers to be valid, makes up his mind and makes recommendations accordingly. It would be unwise, obviously, to act before the recommendations of the commission of inquiry are given to the government.

INDUSTRY

DECISION TO CLOSE AUTO PARTS FACTORY IN OSHAWA—STEPS TO PRESERVE JOBS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister is no doubt now aware that Houdaille Industries in Oshawa has annouced its intention to close in October of this year, and that 150 more workers in Ontario are going to suffer as a result of the branch plant economy we now have. It appears that the industry is going to transfer its productive capacity to Huntington, in the United States.

Can the minister indicate, first, whether he or his ministry were informed of the intended closing? Was there any discussion, and has the minister made it known to the company that he would like it to come to Ottawa, to sit down and to discuss ways and means of keeping that plant in operation and those employees working?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, no information was brought to my attention directly. I have not had any such discussions. But it is always my interest in situations of this type to discuss the situation directly, not only with the company itself but also with the workers involved, and I will be happy to move to arrange such a meeting as soon as possible.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, does the minister or the ministry have any procedure whereby in the case of the auto-related industries, given the problems which confront us in this country at the moment, the industries make known to the minister their intentions with regard to closings, lay-offs, transfers or any other changes in their productive capacity or production which will detrimentally affect the Canadian economy and Canadian workers?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, while what the hon. member is referring to is a matter which comes primarily under provincial law, we have officials in the department whose job it is to maintain close contact with the industry so that we can be up to date on developments. The strengthening of this aspect of the department is something I am carrying out right now.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO CONFERENCES—INQUIRY AS TO CANADA'S PARTICIPATION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond): Madam Speaker, the Minister of National Defence recently attended the NATO conferences held in Bodoe in Norway, and in Brussels. Following his first participation and visits abroad as Minister of National Defence for Canada, could he indicate to the House what is the position of Canada in the collective agreements and what is the Canadian contribution to those agreements, more especially at the NATO level?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am quite pleased to see that the member for Richmond is interested in this very important matter, considering present world conditions. We should not be naive or take peace for granted as I believe that a conflict is always possible. The NATO meeting in Brussels had been convened to assess the credibility of the deterrent capability of the NATO members. We developed our strategies in the face of Soviet strategies. As for our Bodoe meeting, I think it was a very important one. The nuclear group was gathering to assess the terms under which they might use nuclear power in case of conflict. Madam Speaker, Canada—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Lamontagne: Are hon. members opposite not interested to learn what occurred at those very important meetings? Before concluding, Madam Speaker, I would like to specify that in spite of the meeting of the nuclear group in Bodoe, Canada is not a nuclear power and does not intend to become one, but will remain a very firm supporter of NATO.

AIR TRANSPORT

ENGINE FAILURES ON AIR CANADA AIRCRAFT—MONITORING OF FUEL QUALITY AT AIRPORTS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport and it relates to the same serious matter raised a few moments ago by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

Will the minister tell the House whether the fuelling system at Vancouver international airport is being investigated in relation to the near-disaster involving the Air Canada 747 at Toronto last weekend? Is the minister convinced that fuel turbidity—that is, water and dirt in the fuel—was not a causative factor in the failure of the three engines, and is he aware of the fact that fuel quality is not monitored continuously at Canadian airports?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the specific case which my hon. friend brings to my attention. I will look into it and report to him.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I would like the minister to confirm that an automatic device to continuously detect impurities in jet fuel was specified by his officials, according to accepted standards, and installed in the fuel-handling system at Vancouver when it was designed in 1968, but that this important safety device was disconnected several years ago because it kept shutting down the fueling system automatically? Is it the ministry's policy not to include on-line turbidity monitoring devices in fuel-handling systems at airports, and is this the true situation?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, the promise I made in reply to the first question applies to the second.

An hon. Member: A very turbid answer.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON TRIP TO EUROPE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Would he mind making a statement on motions, the logical place to tell us about his trip to Norway and Brussels?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Further, might he then take questions, as is the normal custom, which would be somewhat more pointed than the one he recently answered?

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, in spite of the fact that no question has been put, I will point out to the hon. member opposite that we will be sitting in Committee of the Whole Thursday and Friday and hon. members will then have every opportunity to ask relevant questions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DESECRATION OF GRAVES OF CANADIAN WAR DEAD IN FRANCE—GOVERNMENT PROTEST

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. With regard to the desecration of the graves of Canadian war dead at Bretteville-sur-Laize, France, two months ago, has the minister sent a note of protest to the French government?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, this was indeed a most unfortunate happening, but a note of protest to the French government has not been necessary because the French authorities themselves are very embarrassed by it, as is the community in which it took place. The graves are being restored and everything possible is being done to restore the dignity in which our veterans rest.

OPERATION OF PATROL BOATS IN CARIBBEAN—CIDA INVOLVEMENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of press reports recently that CIDA is being pressured by his department to provide money for gunboats and various other types of security operations in several small east Caribbean islands, can the minister investigate these reports and assure the House that CIDA is not being forced to play policeman in the Caribbean under the cover of development assistance?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I understand that the boats in question are not gunboats but are patrol boats of various kinds.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: In other words, the premise of the hon. member's question is erroneous.

Mr. Ogle: My supplementary question to the minister is if he could inform the House whether it was the U.S. State Department which put pressure on the Canadian government, via the World Bank consultative group on Caribbean economic development, to help subsidize the security networks of several island governments supposedly under the bogey of communist subversion.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, I will have to take notice of that question. Perhaps in the meantime the hon. member could furnish me with some details as to which islands and to what problems he is referring.

DESECRATION OF GRAVES OF CANADIAN WAR DEAD IN FRANCE—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC STATEMENT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, in view of his answer to me a moment ago, he could issue a public statement and make certain that it is sent to the London Times in England and to some of the papers in Paris, France, that the French government has apologized.

Furthermore, would he ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs to write to the families of the 3,000 Canadians who are buried there, expressing his regret at the desecration and telling them that an apology has been received from the French government?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will certainly take that under advisement. I am not sure that we know all the families involved, but certainly some action of that kind might be called for and I will pass the suggestion along to my colleague. Perhaps the hon. member could furnish me with the information from those newspapers in which I gather there have been unfavourable comments.

ENERGY

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY RESERVES OF OIL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that in September of 1974, Canada, along with 11 other countries, agreed to a scheme for stockpiling oil to provide emergency reserves sufficient for 90 days—an action that has not been taken, unfortunately, by Canada—will the minister indicate why this emergency oil base has not been established? Also, since the Atlantic provinces, and Nova Scotia in particular, remain especially vulnerable to energy losses—we have no natural gas to offset the need for liquid petroleum distillates, and no immediate oil for pumping—will the minister consider establishing an emergency reserve oil base in Atlantic Canada covering our needs for at least 90 days?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, first, I would like to stress to the hon. member again that in Canada we have one market and one price for oil, and that we will not allow a situation to develop where Atlantic Canada would be put at a disadvantage both in terms of price and in terms of supply. So far as the specific question raised by the hon. member is concerned, I will examine the situation and I shall be pleased to report to him later.

Mr. Crouse: I have one brief supplementary, Madam Speaker. Since Canada to date has taken no special steps to meet the requirements of the 1974 agreement—-I stress the date of the agreement which Canada signed in 1974—what steps is the minister taking to ensure that Atlantic Canada will have an adequate reserve supply of crude oil?

Since, admittedly, we have a shortfall of 50,000 barrels of oil in our agreement with Mexico, I would like to ask the minister with what countries he is now negotiating in order to offset that shortfall. While he is at it, will he tell us the price that he and his government agreed to pay Mexico for those 50,000 barrels of oil?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I would have to ask the hon. member whether he is stating that Canada does not have a 90-day supply at the present time. If he says that—he does not say that—then I would challenge him on it. I would argue with him that if he checks the past, he may find that indeed Canada just now may have a 90-day supply. It is important that the whole country should have adequate supplies to meet its needs. This situation is being monitored regularly by my department and is on the face of it the subject of constant monitoring.

As far as the agreement with Mexico is concerned, again I should like to stress that Canada increased its supply by 50,000 barrels per day, thanks to that agreement. The hon. member may regret that it has not gone to 100,000 barrels per day, but it would have been easier if his government had moved when this matter was available for negotiation at the time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the price of that oil is concerned, it is a matter that has to be negotiated in terms of the prices as the purchases are made on an ongoing basis. There is no specific price, like in agreements with other countries, between companies or even from state to state. These agreements are all subject to renegotiation in terms of prices.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

UNACCEPTABLE RISKS OF CERTAIN DRUGS—EXERCISING OF CANADIAN JUDGMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of recent press reports concerning the use of the powerful hormonal drug, Depo-provera, for uses such as contraception in provincial institutions for the mentally retarded and other users, other than that which the Federal Bureau of Drugs allows the manufacturer of the drug to claim for it, can the minister tell the House whether she intends any strengthening of the ability of the federal department of health to achieve compliance with its own judgments about unacceptable risk when it comes to these particular kinds of drugs?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I regret to say that I am not aware of the case referred to by the hon. member. If he could give me more information after the question period, I will look into it and report as soon as possible.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is in a more general vein. In the absence of the minister being aware of this particular drug, could she tell us whether or not she intends any changes or any federal initiatives, either by her department or perhaps by the Minister of Justice and the Department of Justice, in the very important and long neglected area of patients' rights and the need for more informed consent in Canadian health care—a need which was pointed out recently by a report of the Canadian Law Reform Commission—so that, particularly as it relates to these kinds of controversial drugs, people would not find themselves in the position of being unknowing objects of de facto medical research?

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Of course, my reply to this question is yes. I am concerned with this problem which is still with us, and as tomorrow marks the one hundredth anniversary of the Ontario Medical Association, this is one of the issues I intend to raise in my speech.

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ONTARIO DIVISION

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Considering the fact that this year marks the sixtieth anniversary of outstanding contribution in social services by the Ontario division of the Red Cross to this country, would the right hon. Prime Minister agree to send a message of congratulations on behalf of the Government of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please, that is not a question.

ENERGY

EXTENSION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO MARITIMES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Previously he indicated in the House during question period that he would not consider extending the gas pipeline beyond Quebec City into the maritimes from Montreal because of environmental studies. Are the environmental studies in progress now? Does the minister still stand by this decision?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the decision to which the hon. member is referring had been made by the National Energy Board. As the hon. member may recall, the board had mentioned two factors which prevented it from recommending the extension of the pipeline into the maritime provinces. The first was a series of environmental studies which had not been completed to the board's satisfaction, and the second was the board's desire to secure further information on the exploration of Atlantic offshore mineral deposits. In reply to the first question raised by the hon. member, I will say that I have already met with the promoters of this project. I have discussed this matter with them and asked them if they could possibly complete these environmental studies to provide information which would satisfy the National Energy Board, something the hon. member is aware of. Cabinet could only accept the board's report as such or reject it completely. It decided to accept it and allow at least the construction of the pipeline within Quebec borders for the time being, indicating its hope that the gas pipeline could be extended into the maritime provinces as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I have a short supplementary question. Obviously, then, environmental studies were done on the extension of the pipeline from Montreal to Quebec City. Would the minister confirm that this is so; and if so, would he table these studies in the House? I would appreciate the information.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, all these studies have been laid before the National Energy Board. They were part of the evidence produced by the various partners whose application was before the board. These documents have already been made public. If I can be useful to the hon. member by getting them from the board for him, I will certainly try to do so but again, I think these documents were made public and were used as evidence before the board.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TAX INCENTIVES FOR INDUSTRY LOCATING IN SLOW-GROWTH AREAS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. In view of the sharp decline in seasonally adjusted employment for May—the greatest since April, 1967—will the minister consider implementing the provisions of the December 11 budget which proposed a system of tax incentives by way of tax contracts for industries locating or expanding in slow-growth areas?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in the statement I made to the House in April I explained at that time why I did not bring forward the proposal that had been made in the December budget. Also, I believe I indicated that I would be giving further thought to possible steps which could be taken in that direction.

Mr. Howie: Madam Speaker, will the minister immediately bring forward the small business bond which he mentioned in his recent budget-like economic statement?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Economic-like budget statement.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, it is my intention at a very early date to bring forward at least the guidelines which will be the basis of this particular program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The legislation itself could not be ready and it could not be passed for some considerable time.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. MacEachen: Because it is part of the Income Tax Act. As I recall, I made a commitment at that time that I would allow the bill, or the draft bill to be made available for further comment. In order to avoid that anticipated delay, it is my intention to make available the ground rules with respect to the small business development bond at a very early date.

CONVENTION CENTRES

GOVERNMENT POLICY—CENTRE IN OTTAWA

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Business. Some weeks ago the minister made a statement in the House that a convention centre policy was under review and would be available shortly.

Would the minister advise the House whether such a policy is still under development, and whether the rumoured approval of the Ottawa Convention Centre will be part of that policy? When will the policy be made available to the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State, Small Businesses): Madam Speaker, as far as the development of a national convention centre policy is concerned, I want to indicate that the cabinet is still developing this policy and the announcement made this week with regard to the Ottawa Convention Centre is not part of this policy.

[English]

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister. Would the minister advise the House when government policy on convention centres will be available to assist people in Toronto and throughout Ontario in the planning of convention centres?

Could he also tell us in what way the Ottawa Convention Centre will not be part of that policy, and whether the convention centre here will replace the convention centre in Toronto in terms of funding by the government?

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, the policy will be made available shortly. With regard to the help accorded to the Ottawa Convention Centre, or the Rideau Centre, that is part of planned federal participation in the centre by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are wonderful fellows.

THE CONSTITUTION

STATEMENT ON MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS TO DISCUSS RENEWAL

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, three weeks to the day after the Quebec referendum, I have the pleasure to report to this House on yesterday's meeting of first ministers on the renewal of the constitution. My remarks will be brief because I do not want to impose upon hon. members' good will on this opposition day and also because the leaders of opposition parties, as well as private members, will undoubtedly want to ask me further questions on this subject. I would rather use the time allocated to me to answer specific questions.

The first thing to point out following yesterday's meeting is that it resulted in a collective decision which could prove most beneficial for Canada. In effect, all first ministers have committed themselves to reach by September major decisions on the constitution, and in order to do so they have given themselves a very tight three-month schedule of meetings and negotiations.

In fact, Madam Speaker, we have made a commitment, in our own name and in the name of our ministers and officials, to spend during the next three months twice as much time on the constitutional problem as was spent in the last two years by the federal and provincial governments combined.

This is evidence of the importance and urgency that both myself and the premiers attach to the renewal of the Canadian federalism and of our constitution. It is also a sign of our strong will to fulfil the promise we have made to Canadians to bring real and substantial improvements to the fundamental law of this country.

[English]

The hope of the federal government was that the premiers would want to join with us in urgent and effective action to give Canada a new constitution which will be fully responsive to the present and future needs of the country and its people. That hope has now grown into a joint federal-provincial commitment.

I, therefore, want to pay tribute to the premiers' open-mindedness and generosity of spirit which made that commitment possible. I realize we could not have made that commitment if we were not aware of the strong support for real reform among the people we represent, so I gladly pay tribute also to the spirit and the will of the people of Canada at this decisive moment in our history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I am confident that the next three months of very concentrated effort will produce, at the next meeting of first ministers in the second week of September, an agreement on the so-called short list of issues which we discussed yesterday. I am equally convinced that if we fail to reach substantial agreement in September we will be courting disaster for Canada. In that event, the federal government would have to give very serious consideration to its options and recommend to Parliament a plan of action which would allow us to fulfil our responsibilities to the people of Canada.

It was drawn to my attention that, subject to correction, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) would have said words somewhat to that effect last Friday and such is the case. I am encouraged to hear that, if properly reported, he would have indicated that if there were a deadlock in discussions at the first ministers' level, then Parliament would have to take its responsibilities. That is also my view and, also subject to correction, I believe it would be the view of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I am very encouraged by this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I am confident that the agreement we seek will both strengthen the rights and freedoms of the people and define a division of federal and provincial powers which will enable Canada to achieve its great potential. I am determined that, in our progress toward agreement, we will not engage in any trading-off of the rights and freedoms of the people against the powers of governments.

With the consent of the House, Madam Speaker, I will table the documents I distributed to the premiers yesterday. They are a meeting agenda, a statement of principles for a new constitution, a list of priority issues, and a calendar of meetings for first ministers and ministers between June 17 and September 12.

With regard to the priority issues, Madam Speaker, I would not want to mislead the House in any way. The copies which I have tabled and the copies which were distributed are a statement by the federal government. The list itself has been amended by adding one item to the list which we brought to the meeting yesterday, the item of fisheries. The only other difference between the list now tabled and the list that we circulated at yesterday's meeting is that our list yesterday had two columns; one column lists items that are of general interest to the people of Canada and the other column lists items concerning the division of powers between governments.

I commend to the earnest attention of all hon. members the two documents dealing with principles and priorities. It would be my hope that members from every part of Canada, and of all parties, would consider and discuss the contents of these papers among themselves and with their constituents.

Such consideration and discussion would not only assist the federal and provincial governments and Parliament and legislatures in our progress toward constitutional renewal, but would also help ensure that Parliament will play its full and rightful role in the building of the Canada of the future.

• (1510)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I want to make a brief response to the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and I will have some questions following the response of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent).

I want to begin by thanking the Prime Minister, on behalf of the House, for reporting so quickly to Parliament on the Prime Minister's conference yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Judging by the Prime Minister's statement and the public comments of other participants, it appears that the first ministers' meeting yesterday made a reasonable start on the process of constitutional change and there is no question that all members of the House applaud that progress.

As I understand it, the Prime Minister sought agreement on a statement of principles as well as on process, and the goal of agreement on a statement of principles was not reached. It may not even have been pressed by the Prime Minister after he noted the reaction of other first ministers. Consequently—and I think it important that the House and the country understand this fact—the document relating to principles which the Prime Minister has tabled represents only a proposal by the federal government and not an agreement by the meeting.

The Prime Minister made reference to my speech of Friday. He learned long ago the value to him of reading my speeches and adopting my policy, and I recommend that speech to him as well.

I must say that I am a little surprised by the Prime Minister's assertion in his statement that "all of the first ministers committed themselves to a September deadline for major decisions". My understanding from the public comments of the premiers is that many of them see the September meeting as an opportunity to conclude whatever agreement has been reached by ministers and officials in the intervening months, but that they do not regard September as a deadline for decision on all items in the list. Indeed, Premier Blakeney is reported as saying: "We agreed unanimously there should be no deadline for reform"; and if that is so it was a wise decision by the first ministers, because agreement on complex and fundamental questions is work that is too important to be jeopardized by artificial deadlines.

Premier Blakeney went on to say: "We also agreed unanimously if we meet in September and accomplish nothing, it won't look very good"; and certainly the House would hope that discussions this summer will result in an agreement on several specific matters. The question of the nature of the agreement yesterday and the nature of the goals for September affects the expectations that will surround the September meeting, and I hope the Prime Minister will indicate later whether, in his view, the other first ministers are committed to agreement, in principle, in September, on any, on all or on most of the 12 items in the list.

I also noted the following words of the Prime Minister:

—the federal government would have to give serious consideration to its options and recommend to Parliament a plan of action—

—if there is no agreement on the short list of items.

Mention was made of the use of a federal referendum to try to force acceptance of some changes the federal government wants, and we would like to know if that is what the Prime Minister really means or what other unilateral initiatives he is contemplating.

I should like to add that if the federal government expects a co-operative attitude from the provinces with regard to constitutional reform, it must be co-operative itself about other matters that are of importance to some provinces. The Prime Minister knows that I worry over the recent statements some of his ministers made and that I fear they will ruin the atmosphere of good will that will be necessary for constitutional reform.

[English]

In closing, I want to express my satisfaction and that of my party that the first ministers have agreed on a busy agenda for the summer, and to express also the hope that the discussion will be pursued in a genuine atmosphere of co-operation and lead to significant agreement by September.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I, too, would like to join with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in congratulating the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for reporting so quickly to Parliament on the results of yesterday's conference.

Clearly, Madam Speaker, yesterday produced solid evidence for the first time in a long while for believing that Canadians can expect early and substantial constitutional change. For this reason, all participants in the meeting yesterday deserve the unqualified commendation of members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: The participants showed their good will yesterday. The same attitude must continue to prevail this summer. And of course, Madam Speaker, some decisions will finally have to be taken at the September conference. I agree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in that regard. Quebeckers and Canadians of other areas have been waiting long enough for a new Canadian constitution that would allow Quebeckers to prosper within Canada and would recognize as well the legitimate regional grievances. I repeat that it is imperative that decisions be taken in September.

[English]

It is worth noting in the context of the decision-making process that my party has previously made known its constitutional position on the importance of including fundamental rights and language rights in a new constitution; on the need to leave with the federal government certain financial powers that will enable it to provide at long last an industrial strategy for this country from coast to coast; and on the need to improve our representative system in Ottawa so that those who live in both the west and in the east in particular will feel that they have a higher degree of effective and numerical representation here in the nation's capital.

For a number of months, Madam Speaker, a special 35-member committee of my party has been at work preparing detailed recommendations on the constitution and other matters, including all of the specifics in the short list that the Prime Minister tabled today. I am pleased to say, Madam Speaker, that on these matters we have made decisions for a series of meetings that will take place over the summer as well, and we as a party will be ready for the September first ministers' conference with very specific suggestions for consideration at that time.

Having made these general observations about the substantial progress that now seems to be under way, I want to conclude with a minor but critical observation. No other democratic nation in the modern world has left to such a small number of people—in this case 11—the serious task of making the decisions which will reshape the nature of a democratic state. While unquestionably wishing those 11 individuals every success, on behalf of my colleagues I should like to say that I profoundly wish that the people who met yesterday had found a more effective manner of involving substantially more Canadians in this very important democratic process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed that the documents referred to by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) be tabled at this time and appended to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For documents above referred to, see Appendix.]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, during my response to the Prime Minister I referred to the expectations that will surround the meeting in September and I quoted a passage from his statement today which I found surprising. I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell the House whether he is in a position to say categorically that all the first ministers at yesterday's meeting accept the September meeting as a deadline for decision on all or a great majority of the 12 items?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the best answer I could give would be to refer the hon. Leader of the Opposition and the House to the calendar for future meetings which I have just tabled and of which the Leader of the Opposition has a copy. Under September 8 to September 12 we read that the first ministers in open conference will meet in Ottawa to finalize agreements on work under way, and to put in train a further work program. These words were not the words of the federal government, Madam Speaker. The words we had in our first draft were: "to reach conclusions on work under way". In my view, they had the same meaning because we always talked of the urgency of making decisions by September. But it was at the request of some of the premiers that I put in the document that was accepted by us the words "finalize agreements." This indicates, it seems to me, a clear intention to consider that meeting final as regards the list that we then have before us, because it goes on to say that we will put in train a further work program.

This being said, I would not want the Leader of the Opposition or indeed any of the premiers to think that I am trying to impose on them a deadline if they do not want to accept that deadline. The Leader of the Opposition quotes a statement by one premier which seems to contradict that. All I can say is that that was not my impression of the meeting yesterday.

Several of us, indeed, on the contrary, made it quite clear—several of us, I repeat—that we had to have action by September, much as the Leader of the New Democratic Party has just indicated on behalf of his own party; otherwise there would be catastrophic consequences for the future of the country. So there is, I can certainly say, a large consensus to consider that a deadline, but I would take no exception if some premier would plead that he is not personally part of that consensus.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I think this important, and I am pleased that we have the undertaking from the Prime Minister that he will do nothing to try to impose a deadline upon the discussions which is not agreeable to the other participants in yesterday's meeting.

Mr. Trudeau: I did not give that undertaking.

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister said he did not give that undertaking. I thought he said quite explicitly, Madam Speaker, that he would not impose a deadline. Perhaps, then, the Prime Minister can tell us whether or not he believes that he has an agreement from the other first ministers participating yesterday that the decision at the meeting in September will be a meeting to finalize agreement on all 12 items or simply to finalize agreement on those subjects on which agreement has been reached by the committee of ministers or "fonctionnaires" of the public servants meeting through the summer.

The word "finalize" as it appears in the communiqué could have very different meanings. Since there is a very real importance here given to the expectations that surround the September meeting, I think it significant that we have a commitment from the Prime Minister that he will not try to inflate expectations in a way that might lead to either disagreement or disappointment in September.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the words are quite clear—"to finalize agreements on work under way", which are the dozen or so items. The Leader of the Opposition suggests that "finalize agreements" might mean only finalize agreements on that on which we had finalized agreement. I do not think that is a productive way of interpreting the statement we made yesterday.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition seeks a commitment from me that I will not consider that as a deadline. I will not give him that commitment. Quite to the contrary, I consider that as a deadline. I suggest that certainly many of the premiers there, and if I understand the Leader of the New Democratic Party, do consider that as a deadline. I do not want to rope in any premier who might say that he personally does not consider it a deadline. But I do, and I suggest that that was the meaning of the text that we adopted generally yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, just so that we are clear on this point, the Prime Minister is telling Parliament today that he expects to have, after the four-day meeting in September, an agreement by the 11 first ministers on each of the 12 items in the short list. Is he telling us that that is his reasonable expectation today, that that is what he expects to come out of the September meeting?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I expect that we will have dealt with those 12 items in a final way. It is possible that we will not be able to agree on them all. If that is the case, I think we will each have to take our responsibilities as to whether there is sufficient body of agreement to consider progress satisfactory or not. I am not predicting we will all agree necessarily on everything. I am saying that we must make every effort to seek that agreement. If we do not achieve it, I indicated that I thought that would be a very considerable failure of grave consequence for Canada.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I do not want to pursue this matter at this stage. I simply express my hope that the Prime Minister will understand that such an agreement as was reached yesterday was reached because an atmosphere of co-operation existed involving all of the eleven governments, and indeed involving this House. If there were to be actions taken which led to false expectations and consequently to a disagreement in the meeting in September that might not otherwise occur, and to a rupture of the process, that would be something to be regretted by all members of this House.

Let me turn to one other matter, and perhaps other of my colleagues will have additional questions. During his remarks today, the Prime Minister referred to the possibility of the federal government reviewing other options. We have heard and discussed in the House the question of the option of a national referendum. Will the Prime Minister tell us, first, whether he is now considering a referendum, and whether he discussed that with the premiers? Second, what other kinds of options is he considering? Third, if it is a referendum, is it his present intention that a referendum sponsored by the federal government would deal only with questions which lay within the jurisdiction and the competence of the federal government?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, on the first part of the question, I want to emphasize most strongly that those who considered September as a deadline—and I took it to be the consensus of the meeting—included several premiers who made it very clear that in their mind urgency was of the very essence of the operation. Several spoke to the point that if we did not act with great urgency we might, as early as the fall, have cause to regret it. So that is the only glossary I can add to my previous answers.

As to the second part of the question on a referendum, Madam Speaker, I cannot recollect the matter having been raised yesterday. It was not certainly by me. Therefore, the third and fourth questions as to the nature of that referendum—

Mr. Clark: The other options.

An hon. Member: You referred to options.

Mr. Trudeau: As for the other option, Madam Speaker—

An hon. Member: "Options".

Mr. Trudeau: —I think the text is as general as I would care to put it this afternoon because I am optimistic at this stage that we will all act, and act rapidly, in agreement.

I indicated that I would recommend to Parliament a plan of action which would allow us to fulfil our responsibilities to the people of Canada. It was at that point that I quoted the Leader of the Opposition, who I thought shared our views on that, without tying him to that particular date. I understood his views to be that if there were a deadlock which was judged to be such at some point, Parliament would have to take its responsibilities. That is my view. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition does not care at this time to express in what way Parliament would have to take its responsibilities, but I would be happy to discuss that with him privately if he wishes.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my questions also are directed to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I think all of us in the House want the process to succeed and that is why it is so important we all understand the process.

In terms of the deadline, there are operative words in the calendar that the Prime Minister has tabled today with regard to the meetings of September 8 to 12. The last words are "put in train a further work program." I would interpret those words of the Prime Minister, who obviously wants to have some agreement at that meeting, as indicating that other work would still be necessary after the meetings of September 8 to 12.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister, was there any discussion yesterday with the first ministers in terms of enlarging participation from the 11 participants of yesterday for the meetings of September 8 to 12? It has been mentioned in this House and in other circles as well, in terms of constitution-making, that consideration should be given to enlarging that group. Was that discussed? What was the conclusion in terms of participation of other members, and specifically that of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), at subsequent meetings?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, on the first part of the question concerning the other work to be brought in after the September meeting, the answer is, of course, that the list which we agreed on does not cover all the matters to which the provinces and the Government of Canada attached importance. We chose a list which was largely produced by a meeting in February, 1979, of first ministers and subsequently modified by the continuing committee of ministers on the constitution when the Leader of the Opposition was prime minister.

The basis of the list I put to the first ministers yesterday was indeed a list which, subject to correction, we inherited more or less from the continuing committee of ministers on the constitution under the Clark government, but we went through that list and many participants specified that although the list was not all-inclusive, it did indicate the priorities we had for September. Of course, no one felt he would be excluded from bringing in other matters after September.

On the second part of the question concerning the enlargement of the participating group, I put the question directly to the premiers because I had in mind a suggestion which had been made to me last week by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I asked if the premiers would consider enlarging their delegations as we would enlarge ours by the addition of leaders of opposition parties. Once again, I do not want to speak for all of them or answer for each, but I think it is fair to say that they were quite negative to that proposal, which I believe is the attitude of the present Leader of the Opposition who thinks that it should be the job of the 11 ministers, at least in the early stages, to pursue these meetings and to head the delegations.

As far as I am concerned, the subject matter is still open. I have told the leaders of the other parties in this House that if we were to agree on a plan of action, I would gladly consider making them active participants in any federal delegation which I would lead. To that answer I should add that we also discussed the question of participation by native Canadians, participation by the representatives of the Yukon and Northwest Territories and, indeed, the question of the participation of mayors and municipalities who are asking to be included in such discussions. We had a very lengthy discussion on these subjects too.

Mr. Epp: I would like to ask the Prime Minister another question which arises from his last statement in answer to my first question, and that is the participation of elected members or elected leaders from the territories. If I can repeat my earlier words, as the process evolves those people who are not only deeply interested but who will be affected by constitutional changes will, if success is to be achieved, need to have some participation rather than a decision being given to them. Was there a clear rejection by the Prime Minister and the premiers of participation by elected government leaders of the territories, and obviously there is one territory that has different status, namely the Yukon?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I would state it in a more positive way. There was a clear preference expressed by, I would say, if not the totality then certainly the overwhelming majority of the 11 present yesterday, for proceeding the next time only with first ministers. The question was discussed, I repeat, of adding representatives from the territories and from the municipalities. Indeed, several first ministers indicated groups of different kinds in their provinces that would like to participate, such as the Francophonie Quebec.

The conclusion was reached that we should continue in the future as we have in the past and have the 11 governments head delegations. In those delegations we could, of course, include, as we have in the past, representatives of the territories. As some of the first ministers point out, they had in the past included representatives of municipalities, Indian bands and so on. The procedure willed by the 11 first ministers yesterday was that we continue to have 11 delegations meeting, with each first minister being free to bring into his delegation those people he feels should have a voice or a place in his delegation.

I should add that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) did meet with representatives of the territories in recent days and indicated that we would want to include them in our delegation as we have in the past. There may be in the future some larger form of constitutional convention, but for the time being the procedure will be 11 delegations led by 11 first ministers.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister knows both from private conversation and from public statements that my colleagues and I favour at some point an outside deadline being established for these important talks. I understand from his comments that he shares the view that it is important, while setting a deadline, to avoid any suggestion of confrontation or belligerency at this point.

In light of the Prime Minister's earlier answers to the Leader of the Opposition, and just for the purpose of clarification, with regard to the short list of items that were agreed to for the September meeting, what is the Prime Minister's view in approximate terms about the number of items that have to be agreed to before the September meeting in order for him to think that that is sufficient progress not to require, for example, parliamentary action?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I begin by saying that we agree with the Leader of the New Democratic Party who favours deadlines but no belligerence. I would indicate to him that there was no setting of a deadline by me yesterday. I proposed a calendar. It was discussed, modified and finally accepted. In so far as that calendar contains a notion of a deadline by talking of "finalizing agreements", I want to assure the Leader of the New Democratic Party that is was not as a result of belligerency that I got that particular agreement.

I think the next question is impossible to answer except by saying the maximum number of agreements would be 12 and the optimum would be near the maximum. We will have to be reasonable and see if there is substantial progress or not. I am not sure I follow the logic of the Leader of the New Democratic Party when he says that if we reach a great measure of agreement, or a maximum of agreement, then perhaps parliamentary action would not be needed. I would think on the contrary. Perhaps I misinterpreted his thinking, but if we have reached optimum agreement, hopefully we will be proceeding with parliamentary action very soon after that agreement.

Mr. Broadbent: This is a two-part question to get clarification of the point made by the Prime Minister. As I understand it, both from private conversations and public statements there are two situations in which parliamentary action might take place. One is if there is substantial agreement, and as part of the normal process of amending the constitution and hopefully repatriating it a special act of Parliament would be required.

That would be essentially in support of or in agreement with action taken by the provinces. There could be no conceivable dispute that I can imagine about such a course of action.

The other circumstance under which Parliament might take action is if there is a constitutional deadlock resulting from a lack of unanimous agreement, or even in other circumstances where two or three provinces might not agree on a number of items. I was attempting to get clarification from the Prime Minister about the second situation as it pertains to this list. If I understand him correctly, he is not insisting that all the items on the short list be agreed to at the September meeting, or that the lack of complete agreement, if that should occur, would not necessarily lead to his wanting to bring before Parliament perhaps special legislation which would be submitted and voted upon to get constitutional change in spite of what some of the provinces are doing? Is that the Prime Minister's position?

Mr. Trudeau: I am not sure I followed the question very closely, Madam Speaker, but I will attempt to answer it. Obviously, if some items of the 12 have not been concluded in the sense that some of the delegations are asking for more time to work them out, but there has been a large body of agreement on the rest, I would not then say we are courting disaster. The list is made up of items which various levels of government considered extremely urgent; and it may be that one premier might consider one item extremely urgent, and even if that item were not solved it would be possible for the rest to say: "Look, we are doing well, let's go on; we don't have to press the panic button".

But these are all hypothetical situations. Being short of unanimity on everything does not mean it will be catastrophic. But once again, the mood of the meeting and certainly the mood of people on this side of the House is that we have to make very substantial progress by September, otherwise we shall fail in the expectation which every party in this House and certainly every premier, including the Prime Minister, created during the referendum—that we would all get down to business and renew federalism very quickly.

Mr. Broadbent: A final question, Madam Speaker. As the Prime Minister knows, in February, 1979, a substantial amount of agreement was reached between the government he then headed and the provinces on virtually the whole of the list which has been tabled today. Is it now the position of the federal government that the agreement which was reached on most of those items in 1979 is the take-off point, or is it the view of the Prime Minister that all these items have to be looked at anew?

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, it is precisely because the leader is right that we were able to set so early a deadline, because there was a lot of work done before and since February, 1979, on those items on the agenda that we think it is not unrealistic, after weeks of meetings at the level of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the provincial attorneys general, to think of setting a deadline as early as September. So I say to the hon. member that the commitment was not specific because every one of the participants yesterday wanted to take it exactly from the point we had reached in February. Each will perhaps want to reconsider his positions on one item or another of the agenda, but on the whole I think the plan we had made to September, 1979, will hold and we will be able to take it from there this summer in the discussions that will be taking place.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister concerns his statement that Parliament should play its rightful and full role in these developments. Has he anything in mind for Parliament between now and the conference in September and, if he has, what kind of role is he contemplating—for example, the establishment of a special committee, or a joint committee, or of providing opportunities for special debates in this House? Is there something he can tell us about extending the input role of parliamentarians?

The right hon. gentleman also made the statement that perhaps it would be better if there were more participation and that this might be a way of ensuring it. Could the Prime Minister elaborate on what he has in mind?

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, it is precisely because I did not have a firm answer to that question that I preferred to make a statement on motions as early as today. I am open to suggestions from the other side as far as the participation of parliamentarians until September is concerned. The Minister of Justice is known to be a flexible man. He will be directing the work and I am sure that if members of other parties want to participate in the drafting or the elaboration of some of those documents or those thoughts, either in this place or in committees on a private basis or in parliamentary committees, he would be verry happy to welcome assistance from all sides of this House.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask at least one question that I find very relevant in the circumstances as the provincial premiers had an opportunity yesterday to make some of their particular interests known to the Prime Minister of Canada. I am also pleased to see the good co-operation of the provinces and particularly the Premier of Quebec who showed I think a measure of good will. Like all premiers, he also indicated certain reservations and at the same time he set a certain minimum in that desire to co-operate for that new federalism. He reiterated in particular that principle of self-determination on the powers regarding languages and education. Indeed that principle has already been recognized as acceptable by both the Pepin-Robarts report and Mr. Ryan. I do not know whether he repeated it again last Friday to the Prime Minister of Canada, but to have that good co-operation from Quebec, it seems there are, nevertheless, minimums that are hopefully, it seems, according to Mr. Lévesque, basically non-negotiable. Does the Prime Minister—and that is my question—intend from here to September, for the good operation of those future negotiations, to meet his Quebec counterpart and discuss as a whole those three specific points that seemed very obvious in any event in the statement of the Premier of Quebec at yesterday's meeting?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I wish to assure the hon. member that all provincial premiers will be most welcome if they wish to meet me before September to discuss specific issues, but I repeat to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) that according to the procedure established by the premiers themselves yesterday, the ministers responsible for constitutional renewal, in our case, the Minister of Justice will be responsible for holding meetings and following up on the debates.

This does not preclude meetings between the premiers and myself. In fact, as everyone is aware, the premiers will meet in Winnipeg around the end of August and they might also discuss these questions. However, I should add that the list of priority issues for the decisions to be made in September was established with the unanimous agreement of all premiers, including the Quebec premier, and that he himself did not ask that the subjects mentioned by the hon. member for Joliette be added to the list. He might want to express his opinions when we or our delegations discuss the statement of principles, but in any case, we shall discuss this matter when he asks his questions.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, it seems that the Quebec premier deplored for instance the fact that in his statement the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada mentions only the existence in Canada of the Canadian people. It seems that Mr. Lévesque would have preferred that mention be made of the existence of two peoples, Francophones and Anglophones, which duality was also recognized by the Pepin-Robarts commission. Does the Prime Minister intend to recognize this Canadian duality in future negotiations?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House have always rejected the political concept of two nations. I do not know the position of the hon. member for Joliette on this issue. Of course, we would be interested to learn what it is. However, for our part, we recognize the concept of duality both from the point of view of history and from that of its application to the linguistic reality of everyday life, and we alluded to it when we spoke in the statement of principles about the meeting of the English fact and the French fact in America. This recognizes the historical duality of Canada. Further on, we spoke about the official character of the French and English languages in Canada. This recognizes the linguistic duality or the equality, if you wish, of both official languages. But from there to believe as the hon. member seems to do that there are several people in Canada, we prefer for our part the expression—

Mr. La Salle: I did not say several.

Mr. Trudeau: Two peoples in Canada? We speak about the Canadian people, and if I am not mistaken, this was the position taken by the majority of Quebeckers in the referendum.

[English]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have been listening to the questions and I have not seen the list, but I would like to suggest in my question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that he consider the fact that we are trying to build a constitution which hopefully will be as good and last as long as the last one.

One of the facts which seems to be omitted in these discussions—and, I suppose, in the list—is the fact that 60 per cent, 70 per cent and maybe 80 per cent of our people now live either in big cities or in large regional concentrations, or will in the future. Is there some way we can work in the views of the Association of Mayors and Municipalities which have been expressed to the provincial governments and to the federal government for the last 30 years which would make it possible for the civil servants who will be working on this problem during the summer to consider some imaginative proposals on how both the federal and provincial governments can delegate some of their powers for temporary periods to these large cities or large regional governments to provide some evidence to this big mass of the Canadian people that we are trying to meet the needs of these many people who, for their own good reasons, want to live in the cities and yet have a place in the power structure without interfering with the constitutional powers of the federal or provincial governments? I believe there is a way. Would the Prime Minister consider allowing a place on the agenda this summer to get this input to the officials?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I personally have great sympathy for the point of view put forward by the hon. member. I believe I stated a few times in previous weeks, when I was explaining this in answer to opposition questions, that not only the elected representatives of the territories but also the elected representatives of municipal governments felt they wanted to participate in these debates, which concern their future because, as the hon. member knows, many of them—and I feel rightly so—feel that provincial governments are much too centralized and should decentralize their powers to a greater extent. For that reason I raised the subject yesterday with the first ministers and indicated the hope, as I answered an earlier question, that we would find some way of getting these various groups to get their inputs to us either by submitting briefs or by participating in some way in the delegations when they are convened next September.

I think that would perhaps not be a satisfactory answer to the municipalities and to the hon. member except that I want to go on and say that we have not exhausted all matters for discussion by September, and that indeed the question of municipal institutions was raised by our government in February, 1979, as a subject matter which deserved a great deal of attention. I can tell the hon. member that as far as we are concerned we still consider that a priority item. It simply is not on the list of items for the work between now and September, but we still consider it, as I understand the hon. member does, an item to which anyone working on a new constitution should give attention.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am very grateful to the Prime Minister for his answer because I think it has been a great disappointment to many Canadians that both levels of government have not given consideration to this over the last 30 years when the situation was arising.

I would like to go on to my previous proposal and suggest that since this is not a matter of priority in the first two summer months, it might be well for Canada if the Prime Minister took the lead in putting forward some proposals dealing not only with cities per se and with large regional governments, but also with groups of provinces or parts of provinces using the technique of delegating powers from other sources of power, the provinces and the federal government, to solve some of their problems which are basic to the wider constitutional difficulty. It would be in the interest of realizing that Canada has changed a lot in the last 112 years if the Prime Minister could put forward one or two imaginative ways which could solve this situation in a co-operative sense by keeping it flexible, so as to maintain powers with the provinces and the federal government on a permanent basis but to delegate those powers over periods of time, first to the cities and second to these large regions, to a group of provinces or in some cases several regions within a province where the clashes are just as great.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I could not agree more with the intention of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I repeat that we took the initiative in February of 1979 of putting that on the list of items to be discussed because—and I repeat—we feel that the provinces have tended to centralize powers too much in the provincial capitals rather than use some such method as the hon. member suggests to spread around the exercise of administrative and other powers.

I will certainly undertake to give consideration to the precise suggestion for delegation put forward by the hon. member, but I remind him of something he of course already knows, and that is that municipal governments under the BNA Act come within provincial jurisdiction, and they are somewhat jealous of that jurisdiction. For that reason, I think we would only be able to proceed by way of suggestion rather than action by the federal Parliament.

So I would hope that the municipalities themselves, and interested Canadians such as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, would support the municipalities in pleading with the provincial governments that perhaps a new Canadian constitution would have greater provision for municipal powers and autonomy within the centralized provincial governments.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a question on what seems to me to be at the heart of constitutional reform, this whole matter of a new distribution of constitutional jurisdictions.

Assuming that the provinces fail to reach agreement in this matter or, say, if a province like Quebec or a minority of others would wish to have certain powers that a majority of provinces would rather see entrusted to the federal government, does the right hon. Prime Minister foresee a solution which would also allow for constitutional reform or does he feel that to all intents and purposes, we would reach a complete impasse?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, this matter was discussed at various meetings on the constitution and proposals have been made to find a solution, namely the delegation of legislative powers in one sense or another. I know that the Premier of Alberta for one had pushed this idea at a constitutional meeting held at a time when the Progressive Conservative Party was in power. It was not advocated yesterday but we would be prepared to examine it if it is in the interest of the provinces.

Madam Speaker, I would like to add that, as the hon. member has said, the distribution of powers is truly at the heart of the constitutional problems but he must surely know that there are other constitutional problems than those which might give rise to some sort of power struggle between the two, three or four levels of government. Some constitutional provisions are of particular interest to all Canadians while not really being part of this problem of distribution of powers. I hope that in this matter, we will also consider what is directly in the interest of the population rather than government and bear in mind that these matters are also at the heart of the problems, to use the member's expression.

Mr. Duclos: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if, from what he has just said, we might not reasonably conclude that the idea of asymmetry contained in the Pepin-Robarts commission report could be a means to achieve an end with respect to constitutional reform and more precisely with a new distribution of constitutional jurisdictions?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, that would depend on the asymmetry in question. If it is on the jurisdiction level per se, we think that federalism cannot be very effective if some provinces have more jurisdiction than others. That is my personal position which does not preclude asymmetries in particular fields, either with respect to the administration or the application by one province or another of jurisdictions granted to them by the constitution. The hon. member is certainly aware of dozens of examples of special agreements made by our government, for instance, when we made arrangements with the province of Quebec concerning immigration, family allowances or, in the Pearson era, old age guaranteed income supplement. So, from an administrative point of view, it is possible to have arrangements differing from one province to another, but the most important thing is that all provinces have free access to such arrangements if they so desire.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I should warn hon. members that from now on I will allow only one question from the different questioners, and this will apply to those who have already risen. I have on my list the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble), the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) and the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). I am in the hands of the House, but this is an opposition day and perhaps hon. members would want to debate other matters as well. So I will entertain only one question from the next questioners.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has dealt with two questions posed to him with respect to the part that he thought that this Parliament might play, and he answered one of them clearly in terms of the part played by Parliament in the event that we were discussing work which might lead up to the final meeting in September.

My question to the Prime Minister is: What part does the Prime Minister propose that this Parliament play in the constitutional discussions, given its legal limitations under the constitution which he proposes to change, in the event that there is no agreement ultimately between the provinces and the federal government?

Mr. Trudeau: I am not sure what constitutional limitations the hon. member is thinking of. Parliament, of course, would be free to discuss the general subject of constitutional change, and I indicated to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), I believe it was, that we would be open to suggestion in that regard. I understand from the government House leader that the opposition has two days together in the first part of July which it can use to discuss any subject it wants. For all I know, it may want to discuss the constitution. Opposition days can be used for such purpose and, of course, the government can set time aside—in consultation with other House leaders—if such is the desire of the opposition parties and if such a discussion seems called for at that time.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a serious question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). This matter arose at the end of his press conference yesterday and it ties in with the questions of my leader today in terms of expectations in September. The right hon. Prime Minister said that if there was a success in September—depending on how we define success—then this could well expedite his retirement.

I am asking this question seriously to try to remove perhaps some personal elements here. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has also used words like "disaster" and "catastrophe" if we do not have substantial agreement in September, what would his position be? Would this expedite his retirement, or what would be his status?

Mr. Trudeau: In that case the catastrophe would be that I would stay on for a considerable amount of time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I just wanted to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether there has been an agreement to set a deadline before the finalization of all 12 points by September—to which I am not privy at this point—for the energy agreement with the producing provinces, namely, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and if so, what is it?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the question of a deadline was not settled yesterday. I did not understand it to have been raised as a deadline. We all know the present energy agreement expires on July 1. I would refer the hon. member to the energy minister as to the exact status of the discussions with the petroleum producing provinces.

I think on this matter the premiers of those provinces could best speak for themselves if they have views on that, because one of the rules of the meeting we had yesterday was that we would state our own positions, that we would not quote the positions of others by name. That is why today, except when a name was mentioned, I did not want to bring out any names myself. The hon. member seems to wonder about the position of the Premier of Alberta. I could only refer the hon. member to the Premier of Alberta to state that position for himself.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in response to the question put by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated that he was very sympathetic toward hearing the views of the municipalities. In his opinion, the powers of the provinces were too great and should be decentralized. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could indicate if he holds the same view in regard to the sentiments expressed pertaining to the powers of the provinces? Does he hold the same view in regard to the powers of the federal government and the centralization of those powers?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I think it has become something of a cliché in the country, in the media and particularly among members of the Conservative party who talk about extreme centralization of the powers of the federal government. I just wanted to offset that cliché by perhaps creating a new one and a new idea. I would even argue that Canada is probably the most decentralized federation in the world, but this does not prevent members on the other side from continuing to lament that we are too centralized. I just want to draw to their attention that the provinces are extraordinarily centralized. If one asks the opinion of the municipalities, they complain much more about the centralization, and sometimes the autocracy, of the provincial governments than they do of the federal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: With my apologies, I have to make one slight exception. I understand the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) was seeking the floor from the very beginning and I did not see him. In order to be fair to him, I will allow him one question.

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Thank you, Madam Speaker, for making an exception and recognizing me. I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I think the Prime Minister and the provincial premiers are of the knowledge that the territories are not in the same category or have the same status as municipalities existing within provinces. They are a territory and a government unto themselves without obedience or adherence to provincial governments.

I should like to know specifically what are the plans of the provincial premiers for native, Yukon and the Northwest Territorial governments' participation in constitutional talks and upon what they based their decision of yesterday? What are the Prime Minister's own views in regard to this matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I refer the hon. member to the priorities which were proposed by the Government of Canada, which were tabled in this House half an hour ago and which will be appended to Hansard. If he looks at the last paragraph in those priorities, he will have in part the answer to his question. With the permission of Madam Speaker, I should like to read it; the document was tabled:

The government also proposes that the leadership of the native peoples continue to be involved in the discussion of constitutional changes which directly affect the native peoples, in the context of the joint work on the item "Canada's Native Peoples and the Constitution". In addition, governments would pay special heed to representations from them on the items in the package set out above.

In so far as the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are concerned, I will just repeat what I believe I have said several times, that under the constitution those territories fall within federal jurisdiction much as the municipalities fall within provincial jurisdiction. I am not attempting to equate them both, but as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) pointed out, there are many, many more citizens living in municipalities than there are in the territories put together. All these various groups have their legitimate grievances. Some formula must be devised to hear them on constitutional matters.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, out of courtesy for hon. members, I would like to give the order of business for tomorrow and Thursday.

Tomorrow we will resume consideration in Committee of the Whole of Bill C-19 on employment tax credits and I hope we will be able to complete that stage tomorrow. Thursday will be the last day of the second reading debate on Bill C-30.

PETITION

REQUEST FOR LEGAL ACCEPTANCE OF IMPERIAL SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, a petition pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67 which, in brief, prays that the system of weights and measures known as the Imperial system always shall be legal and acceptable in Canada, regardless of any other system that may happen to be used.

The petition attached bears the signatures of 4,088 electors. It was sent to me in my capacity as the hon. member for Wetaskiwin for transmittal to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. If the petition is found to be in order, I pray it will be referred to an appropriate committee of the House of Commons.

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR AMENDMENT IN CANADA

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-598, to provide for the patriation of the British North America Act and for the amendment in Canada of the Constitution of Canada.

He said: Madam Speaker, in introducing a bill I understand that it is the practice to permit a member some three minutes of explanation of the bill.

This private member's bill is a follow-up to the unanimous acceptance of a motion under Standing Order 43 introduced by me on May 9 on patriating the Canadian Constitution from Britain, and followed up by a suggested address to the Queen on a question of privilege raised by me on May 12, 1980.

For some time now I have argued forcibly that patriation of the existing Canadian Constitution is inevitable. It can be patriated in four different stages in regard to the evolution of a Canadian constitution. The first is that it can be patriated in the very near future—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Yurko: As I indicated, it is customary to give a member some three minutes—

Mr. Collenette: Thirty seconds.

Mr. Yurko: It can be patriated in the very near future with the unanimity amending formula, as I have proposed. Second, it can be patriated by an act of the British parliament deleting section 7 of the Statute of Westminster, but leaving Canada without an entrenched amending formula until one is found.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Yurko: Third, it can be patriated by an act of the British parliament with an agreed upon amending formula similar to that detailed in my motion No. 13 on the order paper. Fourth, it can be patriated with a new constitution if one is found in Canada.

● (1620)

I want to place on record that a new Canadian constitution must be drafted by Canadians, for Canadians and passed into law in Canada. It would be inappropriate if Canada, after 50 years of effort, finally agreed on a new constitution, but had to adopt it through an act in another country. Therefore, I am very pleased to request first reading of this bill, which is an act to provide for the patriation of the British North America Act and for the amendment in Canada of the Constitution of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 12, 27, 139, 141, 274, 331, 411, 666, 667, 798, 823 and 927.

I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE FOR ELECTRICAL POWER

Question No. 12—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In each of the past four years, by province, what was the total amount paid by the government for electrical power?

2. (a) What was the over-all total for all of the provinces in each of the past four years (b) what was the total for all of the provinces for the past four years combined?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1 and 2. Public Works Canada does not aggregate records for this type of information by province. Following is a breakdown by regions for the fiscal years 1975-76 through 1978-79 as figures for 79-80 are not yet finalized.

Expenditures for Electricity by Region

Region	1975-76	1976-77	1977-78	1978-79	Total
Atlantic	1,465	1,902	2,693	3,451	9,511
Quebec	2,480	2,846	3,300	5,230	13,856
National Capital	7,270	10,004	11,186	11,716	40,176
Ontario	3,715	4,928	5,827	5,383	19,853
Western	2,524	2,998	3,476	4,138	13,136
Pacific	1,349	1,585	1,709	1,928	6,571
Total	$18,803	$24,263	$28,191	$31,846	$103,103

MR. MIKHAIL KHVATOV

Question No. 27—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) Did RCMP witness Spooner state to the Court at the Peter Worthington trial under the Official Secrets Act that Mikhail Khvatov was a KGB agent involved in certain activities during 1975-76 and, if so, what was the exact period of time that these incidents supposedly occurred (b) on what date did the RCMP become fully aware of Mr. Khvatov's alleged activities?

2. (a) During the week of June 3, 1975, was the security division of the RCMP contacted by the honourable member for Leeds-Grenville concerning Mr. Khvatov and, if so, what was the name of the RCMP official who spoke to the honourable member (b) did the RCMP official request the honourable member to report anything that might be of interest arising from a luncheon meeting with Mr. Khvatov (c) did the honourable member ask that his telephone communication be duly noted in RCMP records for future reference and did the official assure him that it would be (d) did the honourable member ask the RCMP security service if Mr. Khvatov was a bona fide diplomat or whether they had any knowledge if his activities included those other than of a diplomatic nature (e) did the RCMP security service assure the honourable member that Mr. Khvatov was definitely a bona fide diplomat to the best of their knowledge and, if so, what are all the reasons for the contradiction between this statement and the one made by witness Spooner in Toronto?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General):

1. (a) RCMP witness Spooner did not state during public sessions of the Worthington trial that Mikhail Khvatov was a KGB agent.

   (b) The RCMP became aware of certain activities on the part of Mr. Khvatov in late 1972.

2. (a) The RCMP do not have any record of Mr. Cossitt contacting the security service of the RCMP in Ottawa concerning Mr. Khvatov during the week of June 3, 1975.

   (b) Although the identity of the member of the RCMP whom Mr. Cossitt would have contacted cannot be established, it would be in keeping with RCMP security service policy to request that Mr. Cossitt report anything of possible interest arising from a meeting with a representative of the Soviet mission.

   (c) As the Ottawa RCMP security service has no record of contact with Mr. Cossitt during the week of June 3, 1975, they cannot comment on these questions.

   (d) and (e) See (c) above.

VIA RAIL CANADA INC., EQUIPMENT

Question No. 139—Mr. Turner:

1. How many pieces of serviceable equipment does Via Rail Canada, Inc. own or lease and what is the breakdown, by type (i.e. standard coaches, bar cars, sleeping cars, dayniters, club cars, etc.)?

2. (a) What is the breakdown, by type, of serviceable equipment that is (i) 1 to 5 (ii) 6 to 10 (iii) 11 to 15 (iv) 16 to 20 (v) 21 to 25 (vi) 26 to 30 (vii) over 30 years old (b) how much of this equipment does Via Rail Canada expect will need to be replaced in the next five years?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport):

1 and 2(a).

Via Rail Canada Inc.—Inventory 1980

Equipment Type	Serviceable Equipment	Age of Active Equipment (Years) 1-5	6-10	11-15	16-20	21-25	26-30	Over 30	Acquisitions 1980-1984

Electric Generators	3					3
Total	1184			43	15	272	649	205	120

2(b). Via is currently acquiring 21 locomotives and 50 coaches from Bombardier representing an additional 3750 seats. In addition, Via has acquired some surplus self-propelled cars from other railways and is undertaking a complete redesign and rebuilding program with these units to prove out the feasibility of modernizing and redeploying its present self-propelled car fleet. New management controls incorporating the assistance of our new reservation system, RESERVIA, to improve occupancy rates, car, assignment and fleet utilization have also assisted in being able to operate with our present fleet size augmented as required with the new equipment on order and other equipment being rebuilt.

VIA RAIL—TRAIN CREWS

Question No. 141—Mr. Turner:

1. Does CN Rail and CP Rail supply train crews to Via Rail Canada for the operation of its trains and, if so, does this include stewards and porters?

2. Does Via Rail Canada pay the railways for these crews and, if so, in what amount?

3. Does Via Rail Canada intend to supply its own crews for the operation of its trains or will it continue to rely on CN and CP?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Via Rail Canada Inc. contracts with CN and CP to staff its trains. The contract price includes the cost of providing operating crews such as conductors, enginemen, trainmen, flagmen and baggage handlers who continue to be CN and CP Rail employees. It does not include employees such as stewards and porters. Employees who provide meal, snack, dining, sleeping, club and lounge services on trains are Via employees.

2. Via pays a negotiated contract price to CN and CP Rail for hauling its trains. One of the elements of railway costs is operating crew wages but such costs are not identified separately to Via. The costs are included in a train operating charge calculated in accordance with costing order No. R-6313.

3. Via has no immediate plans to supply its own operating crews and will continue to rely on CN and CP Rail to provide these for operation of its trains.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD OPERATING ACCOUNT

Question No. 274—Mr. Herbert:

In each of the past five years, what amount was transferred to the National Film Board Operating account?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Film Board as follows:

Fiscal Year	Amount
1974-75	$ 9,359,663
1975-76	12,254,046
1976-77	10,519,064
1977-78	12,353,076
1978-79	12,334,462
1979-80	10,150,000 (Forecast)

Order Paper Questions

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT

Question No. 331—Mr. Herbert:

1. Does the government request an accounting from the government of Quebec for moneys provided for student assistance?

2. By province, what amount is outstanding under the Canada Student Loans Act?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: 1. No. Under the Canada Student Loans Act, a province such as Quebec, which elects to operate its own program of loan assistance, is entitled to an alternative payment calculated under a formula set out in the act. The formula is designed to assess the cost to the federal government were it to provide the assistance provided by the province concerned and this amount is paid to the province to help defray the cost of providing its own loan program.

2. Amounts outstanding under the act are not maintained by the federal government by province. Outstanding amounts are recorded by lenders (banks and designated credit unions or other designated lenders) in respect of accounts handled by the lender concerned. However, data on loans authorized by province are maintained by the federal government and are published in the annual report for the Canada Student Loans Program.

AHOP DEFAULTS

Question No. 411—Mr. Orlikow:

In each of the past three years, by province, how many persons who purchased homes under AHOP defaulted on their payments or withdrew from the program?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

Mortgage Insurance Fund Claims Paid[1]
Assisted Home Ownership Program, by Province, 1977—1979

Province	1977	1978	1979
Newfoundland	14	66	210
Prince Edward Island	1	1	2
Nova Scotia	8	21	60
New Brunswick	13	75	97
Quebec	73	292	522
Ontario	89	547	3,286
Manitoba	1	8	15
Saskatchewan	5	9	23
Alberta	1	2	3
British Columbia	43	471	936
Yukon Territory	—	—	1
Canada	248	1,492	5,155

[1] Includes AHOP unit acquisitions from builders where the units were originally designated as qualifying for AHOP assistance and there were separate mortgages on individual units at the time of acquisition. Data is not readily available to distinguish between AHOP acquisitions from purchasers and AHOP acquisitions from builders.

MR. T. D. FINN

Question No. 667—Mr. Cossitt:

Is Mr. T. D. Finn Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet for Security and Intelligence and (a) if so (i) what is his complete employment history in the public service (ii) what are all of his qualifications that led to him receiving the job (b) if not, who is the assistant secretary?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Yes.

(a) (i) Secretariat Officer, Privy Council Office

Current appointment taken up September 6, 1977;

(ii) Mr. Finn is a lawyer with experience in both the public and private sector. This experience, together with his range of government knowledge and experience led to his appointment.

(b) Not applicable.

SCHOOL BUS SAFETY

Question No. 798—Mr. de Jong:

1. Is the Department of Transport considering regulations that would force the manufacturers of school buses to improve the safety of such vehicles?

2. Will the installation of seat belts be compulsory on all new school buses?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. To date, Transport Canada has issued 28 school bus safety standards under the Motor Vehicle Safety Act. Included in these standards are four new requirements published in The Canada Gazette March 12, 1980, which will significantly improve the protection offered to school bus occupants in an accident. The requirements address seat strength and padding, body joint strength, fuel system integrity and emergency exits; they become effective for vehicles manufactured after September 30, 1980.

2. The installation of seat belts in school buses will not be made compulsory at this time. Such requirements cannot be justified on the basis of Canada accident statistics and could increase the hazards to younger passengers, unless monitors are provided on all school buses to ensure proper use and fitment.

As a practical alternative to seat belts, two of the recently-introduced safety standards entitled "seat strength and padding" and "body joint stength" combine to provide passive protection for all passengers by increasing the degree of encapsulation afforded them in an improved passenger compartment.

MARIJUANA STUDIES

Question No. 823—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1975, what amount was spent on studies related to marijuana by the Department of Agriculture?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): None.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES TENDERS

Question No. 927—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In each of the past five years, how many tenders were called by the Department of Supply and Services on (a) an invitation basis (b) a public advertisement?

2. What is the over-all total in each case for the past five years?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services):

1. (a) (i) Headquarters

1975-76: 11,390 1978-79: 11,782
1976-77: 12,349 1979-80: 10,455
1977-78: 12,967

(ii) Regional operations figures are not recorded. However, the following number of contracts were awarded, generally on the basis of an invitation:

1975-76: 223,871 1978-79: 278,810
1976-77: 230,164 1979-80: 259,162
1977-78: 261,414

(b) 1975-76: 1 1977-78: 3 1979-80: 4
1976-77: 2 1978-79: 2

2. (a) (i) 58,943
(ii) 1,253,421

(b) 12

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—IMPOSITION OF METRIC SYSTEM

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano) moved:

That this House condemns the government for the approach used to impose the metric system on the people of Canada, for its failure to introduce a Metric Act, and for its imposition of a timetable which ignores the wishes of Canadian consumers and the needs of Canadian export.

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, I understand that discussions have been held between the House leaders and that an agreement has been reached that the lead-off speaker in this debate will have 30 minutes, and that all succeeding speakers will have 20 minutes each. Could we have a House order to formalize that?

Mr. Knowles: I gather that my hon. friend is about to correct himself; the agreement was 15 minutes, not 20.

Mr. Kempling: I am sorry, I was told 20 minutes, but I accept 15 minutes.

Mr. Knowles: The rule is for 20 minutes. The understanding we had, and I took part in those discussions, was that the lead-off speaker for each party would have 30 minutes and that all other speakers would have 15 minutes. Under such conditions we usually agree that no one will ask for any overtime.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, the agreement was as modified by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that each lead speaker would have 30 minutes and each subsequent speaker 15 minutes. I might say also that the proportion of speakers for the official opposition would be the same as that established a few weeks ago on the first opposition day which, I believe was, four, three and one.

Madam Speaker: Is that agreed to by all members in the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Huntington: Madam Speaker, I would like to preface my remarks on this motion by saying that as a person with a science background and as a businessman, I carry no personal antagonism to metric per se. I recognize the need for rules and order in the business sections and sectors of the country and in the international marketplace.

My concern is with the approach used by the government to impose metric on the people of Canada. There are four basic points I want to make. First, there has been a lack of honouring the main tenets of the white paper tabled in January, 1970, on metric conversion in Canada. My second point is that it is unwise in metric conversion to make moves that are not in concert with the United States. Third, metric laws should make use of the metric system voluntary, as is the case in the United States. And fourth, the will of the people to make change has always been of prime importance in the parliamentary system. Metric conversion in Canada is being imposed and does not have the will and understanding of the people.

This country in 1871 passed the Metric Weights and Measures Act, which was an act to render permissive the use of the metric system. In 1873 the act was enlarged to the Weights and Measures Act. In January, 1970, a white paper on metric conversion was tabled in the House of Commons. It received the initial support of all parties. In April, 1971, the Weights and Measures Act was updated. I would like to quote one part of it:

> All units of measurement used in Canada shall be determined on the international system of units established by the Government Conference of Weights and Measures.

This act authorized both a systems international metric system and customary Canadian units of measurement for trade. This act also contained a clause prohibiting governor in council amendment of schedule II of that act. To quote from the metric overview board report of February, 1980:

> In essence, this act, which was proclaimed three years later, made SI the standard measurements units for Canada. But Canadian units of measurement were also authorized for use in trade as well as the special land measures for Quebec.

In June, 1971, the Metric Commission was established to advise the minister. In March, 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sent a letter to the premiers of the provinces advising that the plan of the Metric Commission had been endorsed by the government and asked the premiers for their assurance that the guideline dates were generally acceptable.

In March, 1975, there was a debate in this House on the motion to approve the guideline dates of the Metric Commission. Then in November, 1976, the omnibus bill, Bill C-23, was tabled in the House of Commons. This bill dealt with details pertaining to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, the Two-Price Wheat Act, hectare measurement in lieu of acres, Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act, etc.

The metric overview board report points out that one of the provisions in the omnibus act was the repeal of the Weights and Measures Act which, in effect, allowed for metric only. This slipped through the eyes of Parliament. In effect, it meant the abolition of the Canadian Weights and Measures Act and removed from that act the early limitation of power of the governor in council to abolish Canadian units of measure in trade.

It is now obvious that members of Parliament were concerned and caught up in the details of the omnibus bill and missed the important and major play buried in the legislation at that time. All through the white paper of 1970 were warnings and cautions. I speak of the metric conversion white paper which I am holding in my hand. There were warnings and cautions that those planning metric conversion would have to be aware of the importance of the public understanding the reasons for metric conversion in Canada. I would refer hon. members to paragraphs 3.1(III), 3.2, 3.3, 5.2 and 4.8.3, which carried these warnings throughout this report.

In 1977 the other place issued warnings in its hearings, which were again ignored, concerning metric conversion in Canada. It is my opinion that the government, the Metric Commission and its officials failed to accept the wisdom of the white paper's concerns and warnings. They even failed to accept the warnings and admonitions of the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) who spoke in the debate in March, 1975. I trust that one of my colleagues speaking later to this motion will be good enough to cover some of the points made by the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in that debate. They got themselves entrenched in planning, in engineering, in kiosks, in details and with legislative intrigue and, in this process, forgot about the Canadian people, the need to have the people understand the "why" of metric conversion in Canada and the importance of people accepting the change.

As I stand to speak in this debate a decade later, there is no "why" for metric conversion in Canada. The case put forth in the white paper has not withstood the test of time. We have had the right to use metric in Canada since 1871. Am I the only person in this House who finds the patchwork, piece by piece, step by step use of this Parliament to impose the SI system of hard metric conversion on the people of Canada rather strange and frightening?

The failure of the Metric Commission to heed all aspects of the white paper became evident when a large number of Canadians expressed their deep antagonism and resentment about metric conversion to the candidates competing for office in the 1979 election.

As we came out of the 1979 election we had a situation where the imposition of metric conversion on the people by the Liberal government, through the heavy-handed actions of its commission and federal inspectors, was a direct affront to the majority of the people and to the parliamentary system.

The whole approach of the Metric Commission and the Liberal government has turned out to be one of planning the imposition of metric on the people through the use of indirect authority, indirect amendment to key legislation, interdepartmental intrigues, removal of legislative safeguards—all in the spirit of well organized stealth and contempt for the people and their Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: As we enter the constitutional debate on the centralization of powers, let us be aware of the hazards to our freedom by centralizing powers into commissions, tribunals and the bureaucracy, as against increasing the power of Parliament by improving its institutions and structures. The latter will allow for reactions from the people and will preserve freedoms through the continuous process of change while the former will surely lead us into a form of democratic dictatorship. It should anger us all when bureaucrats who are supposed to be apolitical professionals in their service to the Crown engage in political partisanship through official government communications.

I should like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of my colleagues, to a memorandum regarding the main estimates, 1980-81, from the Metric Commission of Canada to the minister which reads, in part, as follows:

> The completion of the final or implementation phase has been delayed by the decision of the former cabinet to postpone the conversion of scales in the retail food sector.

The memorandum continues in another paragraph as follows:

> Previous favourable public response to the Metric Commission's information and awareness activities recently has been damaged by the actions of the previous government, and considerable remedial work is required. Gallup poll surveys in 1973 and 1977 and a July 15, 1978, Weekend Magazine poll reflected the growing favourable trend towards SI. Latent negative reactions to the changeover, brought out and exacerbated by the previous government's actions and statements, show up in a November 1979 Gallup poll—

That is misleading in the extreme, Mr. Speaker, because the downward trend in popularity of metric had taken place over a period of four years, if you look at unbiased polls and surveys.

Another comment in this memorandum to which I take exception is the misleading information it gives the minister when it states as follows:

> —now published will have been implemented as this country joins the rest of the world in converting to the full use of the international system of units (SI).

Singapore and Australia use SI units and there might be one other country. We are rushing to join the whole world? I suggest there is a bias in the Metric Commission that is extremely dangerous to the parliamentary process.

Let me return to the matter of trade, Mr. Speaker. If we consult the white paper on metric conversion in Canada, one of the main reasons it gives to justify metric conversion is trade. It tells us that we have to join 110 countries that are using metric. Paragraph 4.2.1. of the white paper reads as follows:

> The marked trend to the metric system outside North America, and the increasing importance to Canada of export markets, especially for manufactured goods, make it urgently necessary to consider the matter of conversion. The question is a complex one because the United States, which is Canada's main export market, has not made a decision to convert.

Paragraph 4.6.1. reads as follows:

> Important benefits of conversion are to be found in ability to maintain and expand Canadian trade with nations in the metric sphere. Because of the vital importance of foreign trade to Canada, especially the need for growth in exports of manufactured goods, there must be serious concern about damage to Canada's competitiveness in world markets as a result of the pace of changeover to the metric system in the world at large.

I could go on, as there are several other sections which refer to trade. One decade later we find that only 4.8 per cent of our trade is with metric countries—Australia and Singapore—who have converted to the SI system. But that is not where our export trade is. We buy from them. The major western trading countries, the United Kingdom, the United States of America and Canada, still trade in standard measure. It should be pointed out that 75 per cent of Canada's trade is with the United States.

For Canada to rush into hard SI metric ahead of our major export markets is, in my opinion, just economic suicide. Certain sectors have changed voluntarily to metric and have been encouraged to do so. General Motors has sought international standards and it is in their interest to do so. Nobody argues with that. There is no problem in the pre-packaged area of consumer merchandise, except where hard metric, on top of bilingual labelling, becomes a non-trade tariff barrier to protect monopoly interests. There are interests in Canada that have been counting on this.

The white paper also says:

> It would be wise to allow the timing and process of conversion to be closely related to the development of United States practice.

Paragraph 4.5.2. of the white paper states:

> Where export to widely dispersed foreign markets is important, as in certain forest industries, the urge is strong to seek maximum international standardization.

They must have been thinking of the pulp and paper sector of that great industry because the approach imposed has escalated costs in the balance of the industry.

Sector conversion was to be voluntary. The white paper emphasized that and the Metric Commission reports and all their propaganda emphasize that it is voluntary. Yet through the calculated impression given by the Prime Minister's letter to the premiers in 1974, the province of British Columbia changed all forestry measures to metric without consulting the forest industries. We now have even the province of British Columbia backing off metric.

I should like to quote from a report by the government of British Columbia on March 11 to a meeting of the intergovernmental metric conversion committee, which says on page 3:

> I do not wish to belabour the point, but our Interministerial Metric Conversion Committee has unanimously expressed grave concern to the Metric Commission that the failure to properly inform the public will result in unnecessary future delays, public resentment and hostility. This matter was also the subject of discussion in the legislature of the province of British Columbia.

On page 4 it states:

There is a vast difference between the public being made vaguely aware that something is happening, and being positively informed of what is taking place, the reason for it and how it will affect them.

● (1640)

That is the dilemma in Canada. It goes on to say:

I suggest it is a rare individual in Canada who is not aware that we are converting to metric. However, the public have not been informed what that system is and the reason for the change.

The failure to inform the public, interpreted by many as intentional bureaucratic withholding of information, has caused serious apprehension and resentment which eventually led to the establishment of the overview committee. Rumblings of discontent by retailers, consumers and the general public have already surfaced. They could well develop into groundswell or even tidal waves of resistance if preventive measures are not taken.

That is what we were involved in when we ordered the overview board to make a report on the condition and the efficiency of metric conversion in Canada.

Except for the pulp and paper sector of the forest industry where definition of weights and measures is of little importance, we find that there is some $2.5 billion of forest products sold to world markets all in standard measure. Germany wants plywood in standard measure, such as 4 x 8 sheets. The United States uses standard measure. Sixty-five per cent of our lumber market in British Columbia is with the United States. The new Russian plywood mill has 4 x 8 sheets. Yet in the face of such trade facts we have the government trying to force the forest industry to go hard SI metric.

The type of pressure being applied is centralized federal power at its best—perhaps I should say at its worst, I stand corrected. No wonder the frontier provinces are concerned. In 1978 Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation refused to consider mortgage assistance unless plans were drawn in metric measure. Some time this year we will be looking at a new national building code entirely in metric, regardless of the fact that there is almost no hard metric dimension lumber or plywood in the country. Forty-two per cent of the construction dollar is a government dollar. Plans and bids have to be metric to win these bids. What does the winning bidder do? He makes his bid and submits his drawings in hard metric. He then converts his drawings to Canadian standard measure so that whatever is being built can be built within acceptable cost limits. The same happens with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation mortgages for houses. The metric overview board recommended that the forest industry should remain in standard measure in Canada until, or if, an agreement with the United States is made. To change to another form of measure is insane. I suggest that that sector, as others with similar problems, be allowed to remain in soft metric measure.

I understand that the HUDAC group are lobbying members today and have recommended that the process of metric conversion be continued and that a clear and concise statement from the federal government be made setting forth the government's full support of the metric conversion program without introducing legislation. I completely disagree with their stance because it ignores the will and the expression of consumers in Canada and the majority of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Talk to the builders and the insurance companies about it.

Mr. Huntington: A unilateral move by Canada will create two inventories, two sets of plans and unnecessary costs that can only weaken the economic strength of the country. All of this turmoil in the forest industry has occurred in spite of the warnings carried in the white paper. The white paper made it very clear that we must consider the progress of conversion in the United States, and that we should be in concert with that progress.

Paragraph 4.5.4 says that we should not attempt conversion independently of the United States. Paragraph 4.6.5 says that timing and process is to be closely related to the development of United States practice. Other warnings were carried in paragraphs 4.6.7, 4.6.8 and 4.8.2.

In 1975 the United States passed their metric act. At least the U.S. system works, and when the United States does something it is put up to their elected representatives for a debate. Heavy emphasis on that act was on voluntary compliance. The United States is still a democracy reflecting and respecting the people's concern. The spirit of the U.S. metric act is that its federal government is ready and willing to assist voluntary moves.

There is a great difference between the Canadian voluntary program and the voluntary program of the United States. The Canadian government has played with the word and with the legislation. Under the Canadian voluntary program we have been orchestrated. The development of sector plans has been by the government. People have been talked into it. We have had paid sector officials who repeated and repeated the fact that metric was now law.

Grass roots consumer organizations, such as the Consumers' Association of Canada, in my opinion, have been co-opted. Could it be that the $450,000 a year which it gets from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has had an effect? That organization was a grass roots organization that really created the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs out of grass roots consumer concerns. Yet where has its voice been when the dairy industry of Ontario and of other provinces converted to metric, and milk and dairy products have cost the consumer 12 per cent more as a result of the conversion?

An hon. Member: Nary a word from them.

Mr. Huntington: On the other hand, in the United States there is a metric board and a metric act. The metric commission in the United States is supported by the private sector. It has no powers other than to assist where the change is desired. The voluntary initiatives have been in areas where it does not affect the consumer. In my opinion, it is foolish to force metric ahead of its time. The evolutionary process will take care of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: In Canada, pressure has been exerted. Small business has had to follow big business. There has been no consensus in major sectors that have been involved in the Canadian brand of voluntary conversion. We found that out in the meat packing industry after we were in office for a short time, and we found it also in the retail sector of the food industry. There was no consensus in those voluntary sectors.

An hon. Member: And no consultation.

Mr. Huntington: There was leverage, use of regulation, use of inspectors and back room deals. The government has played games with governor in council powers, with legislation, with the provinces and with Parliament. The government has seen fit to impose system international metric on the people without a sustainable reason for it.

Canadian conversion is nine to 15, maybe even 20 years ahead of the United States. The Liberal government, with its fetish for secrecy, has not even published the metric overview board's report which is a valuable overview on the whole area of public concern.

Freedom of information is a serious issue as we watch the Liberals try to centralize more and more power into the bureaucracies and its tribunals and commissions. I have always thought that limited government was a cornerstone of Liberal-Conservative political principle. That is not the case here.

As an aside, the hard-working members of the metric overview board have not yet been paid for the valuable work they have performed. That is a twist that is below the normal sense of decency and fair play expected of professional, apolitical civil servants.

I urge the government to table or publish the metric overview board report. It is a valuable document for the metric debate. All that is published is this Metric Monitor which is a biased, one-sided view of the debate. It is straight propaganda done with the people's money. In the metric overview board report you have the other side of the coin. This matter can be opened up and perhaps understood in a more equitable, fair-share way.

The democratic way would be to have a metric act fully debated in the House of Commons so that all the pieces are together in one place in one play and all concerned could make input to the process. The debate we are in today is the manipulation, by stealth, of legislation and regulation to make the standard measurement system illegal in Canada.

What has happened in Canada and Great Britain is that too much power has been gained by the bureaucracy and the academic elite. Our challenge is to strengthen the parliamentary institutions so that the skills and knowledge of the academic elite can be used and enhanced, but with the ultimate power and control remaining with the collective expression of the people.

If we allow the government and its bureaucracy to deny the expression and will of the people due process, then we in this House have pulled the curtain down on the parliamentary process and we in Canada are dangerously close to another form of government. The insensitivity and arrogance of those responsible for metric conversion in Canada attacks the heart of our system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on my way to the House this afternoon, realizing that this opposition day dealt with the metric system, I looked down at my feet while walking through the tunnel and thought how history had been cheated. Had that king some x number of hundreds of years ago who sat on the throne of Great Britain huge feet like mine, three of them would have made exactly one metre and we would not have this argument this afternoon. However, such was not the case and today we have a very real concern in this country over the change from one system to another.

A number of questions and concerns have been put to me. When I first came here, one of the first things I did was list what I heard during the campaign. I was never sure how many were legitimate questions, how many were myths and how many were straight propaganda. I had a little study carried out on these questions. The questions I asked were: How did we get the metric system introduced in Canada? Was it done democratically?

In the minds of the population there seem to be a lot of metric systems utilized around the world. That is the impression you get when you read the pro and con letters to the editor in the small weeklies in my area. Are there in fact several types of metric? If so, which kind are we going to adopt for ourselves?

Of what use is the system? We are told that our trading partners mostly use the imperial system. Is that true? Who benefits from changing to metric? Who pays? Are these legitimate concerns or are they myths in the minds of the population?

I had a study carried out; I am not sure how objective it is. The questions were answered by the staff of the Parliamentary Library who tested out the legal basis and so on. I will review some of the answers that were found.

The legal basis for our system is the Weights and Measures Act passed in April, 1971. It became law on August 1 of that year. It allows the use of the metric system in commerce and trade in Canada. In review, a white paper on metric conversion was tabled by the government in January of 1970. The leaders of all parties in the House gave their support to the policy as outlined in the white paper.

Subsequently in June, 1971, the government established the Metric Commission by order in council and in 1974 approved the national program of guideline dates for metric conversion, consisting of four distinct phases. Phase one, investigation of the system, was to be completed by 1974. Phase two, the planning stage, was to be completed by 1975. Phase three, which dealt with scheduling, was to have been completed in 1976. Phase four, implementation, was to begin in 1975.

In March, 1975, the Hon. Alastair Gillespie, then minister of industry, trade and commerce, introduced a resolution to the House of Commons to approve the government's program of guideline dates for metric conversion. The resolution was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which examined and endorsed the program, and recommended that further legislation to facilitate metric conversion be enacted; as well, the ministers responsible for metric conversion in each of the provinces unanimously endorsed it in 1976. I was a little surprised to find these facts recorded in light of some of the comments made since.

The government announced its intention to introduce a series of four omnibus bills to modify the approximately 90 existing laws governing weights and measures and to allow for conversion to metric. The first of these bills, the statute law, the Metric Conversion Amendment Act, was introduced in the House of Commons on November 22, 1976. The act included amendments to several existing pieces of legislation including the Weights and Measures Act, the act of 1971. That act had previously stipulated that the governor in council could not amend schedule II to the act so as to prevent the use of customary Canadian units of measurement in trade. The amendments, however, removed that prohibition. Moreover, the amendments gave the governor in council power to make regulations setting a date beyond which any units of measurement set out in schedule II could not be used in trade. In effect, this allowed the phasing out of the use of Canadian units, as established in schedule II of the act, in favour of the metric units in schedule I for use in trade. That, briefly, is how we got into the situation we are now in.

Pursuant to the act, orders in council were passed relating to the use of metric units in the retailing of gasoline and diesel fuel, individually measured food and scale conversion, and home furnishings. Subsequently, an order in council removed the requirement that metric units of measurement be used in the retailing of individually measured food and that retail scales for such foods use metric units. Again, that occurred on January 18, 1980.

The system that we are moving toward is the system of international units, symbolized by SI, the system often referred to simply as the metric system. There seems to be a great deal of confusion about SI and whether there are any other metric systems. Perhaps the main source of confusion may be in the fact that different countries at different points in time have chosen to define their measurements in relation to different base units. Thus we have systems such as the so-called CGS system—which stands for centimetre, gram and second—and in other countries we have the so-called MKS system, which stands for metre, kilogram and second. Both systems have existed for a long time. These systems are different only in that base units and their legal definitions vary. One system may be based on the gram, another system based on the kilogram. Basically the metre in either country will be the same length, the gram will be the same weight. So they differ only in legal definition; the size of the units are integral, the same from country to country.

It has been necessary to review SI from time to time to add, replace or redefine certain measurements in order to keep up with technological and scientific requirements. This does not usually have any effect on trade or commerce. It is simply a way of more clearly defining the length of the metre for scientific purposes. For instance, to begin with the metre was considered—improperly, as it turned out—to be one ten-millionth of the distance from the North Pole to the Equator on the meridian that goes through Paris, France. Advanced measuring techniques later showed that this was not quite correct. The current definition of a metre—and I think this is the latest definition—is that it is 1,650,763.73 wavelengths of orange-red light radiated by the isotope krypton-86 as measured in a vacuum. Even that very lengthy definition may have to be redesigned as more precise terms are available, now that we have laser technology. In any event, while the metre has had several different definitions it has remained the same size throughout the world regardless of the legal definition.

How international is the system? Forty-five countries, including Canada, have signed the Treaty of the Metre of 1875 which requires that they express their units of measurement in terms of SI units and support financially the International Bureau of Weights and Measures at Sèvres, France. These member countries also form the General Conference on Weights and Measures which oversees the advancement of SI. In addition many countries have converted or are in the process of converting to the use of SI measurements. Indeed, of the 154 countries recognized by the United Nations, 152 use some or all of the SI system in measurement, with only North and South Yemen remaining totally outside the use of SI measurement. The SI units adopted by Canada will be the same as those used in all other countries which have accepted these SI definitions as set out by the General Conference.

Who benefits from metric conversion? Well, as a general statement of principle I think one could say that the large international manufacturers benefit first from international conversion. To present proof I simply turn to the case of General Motors, one of the largest international corporations. In 1960 General Motors estimated the cost of conversion at about $1 billion. In 1973 this estimate was revised to approximately 11 per cent of that amount and the decision was made to proceed with metrication within General Motors. That was without legal coercion; it was a decision made at their head office in the United States. In 1979 they found that the actual cost of going metric in all divisions appeared to be less than 1 per cent of their original 1960 estimate. Instead of $1 billion it was to cost 1 per cent of that, about $10 million.

Metric System

In the six years during which General Motors has been converted to metric they have found that the cost avoidance, or savings, have overshadowed the cost of conversion by a factor of ten or 15 to one, so that instead of costing them money it was making them money. General Motors' metric plan goes like this: first, new development would be metric from the start. This would include items in the current development stage. This was the plan in 1973. Second, service parts and in-production parts would be left alone. Third, supplier co-ordination would be implemented; that is to say, suppliers would be worked into the metric system as well. Fourth, their capital equipment would be purchased with dual measuring capability where applicable. The result is that today 27 passenger car series in the General Motors line of domestically made automobiles are predominantly metric. Only seven remaining series have not been fully redesigned since the initiation of the metric policy in 1973, and it is anticipated that these, too, will be metric by the early 1980s.

It should be noted that General Motors' primary purpose in adopting this metric policy was to enable it to design, manufacture and market similar or identical products or components all over the world. This is a point which has not been lost on my local constituents. They realize that companies like General Motors get advantages from going metric. They realize that General Motors would have probably gone metric whether Canada did or did not. Their objection is on the grounds that a great many aspects of our commerce and our economy in this country and certainly in a lot of the smaller towns and villages offer really no incentive to switch to metric. The consumers are used to the old system, they have measuring equipment geared to handle the old system and to them the new system appears only to be a cost with no benefits. We have a whole generation of people who could be considered to be a non-metric generation.

Our school system and our educational institutions are busily turning out a new generation that were trained to conceptualize things in metric terms. My children, for instance, do not really conceive of inches, or even pounds. They speak in centimetres and metres. When I do little chores with them, help them build a playhouse or something, the length of the piece of wood I hand them, or ask them to saw, has to be converted so that I may tell them it is so many centimetres or so many metres long. This forces people in my generation to become familiar with the metric system.

My automobile has dual systems on the speedometer. I have used this to great effect in learning how many kilometres there are in so many miles. I now have more or less a grasp of how far 60 kilometres is, or how far 100 kilometres is. It is starting to mean something to me. But I know there are a great many more people in my communities who were not brought up to worry about the metric system.

To put it dramatically, one fellow presenting a petition to me said that just with this move to metric the government has made his whole education and his whole lifetime of experience obsolete. His whole method of conceptualizing things has been made totally out of date, and he has been left almost in an alien society. I am not talking about western alienation, Quebec separatism or anything like that, but about a whole generation or generation and a half of our citizens who are being alienated through our attempt to move our retail trade at the local level too quickly toward metric. I think we should take a second look at that and slow it down a little bit, because we are asking a great deal of these people when we ask them to throw 50 or 60 years of their experience in the trash bin, so to speak.

We have asked farmers to make a sort of double switch by going from bushels to the tonne, because by taking that step we have gone through two forms of conceptualization. We must remember that the bushel was essentially and is essentially, if it still exists anywhere, a measure of volume. A bushel of wheat weighs 60 pounds. A bushel of oats weighs 34 pounds. When we measure things in tonnes, the old measurements do not work any more.

We have to apply varying numbers to the kinds of grain that we put into granaries which once held 1,000 bushels. We have gone from a volume system to a weight system, and then we have not used the kind of weight system with which we were familiar. We were familiar with pounds or tons, but we have moved to kilograms and tonnes. It has been a double shift, and it has been very hard for many farm people to catch up.

To be honest, it has created some problems for the grain trade. How can we measure the capacity of an elevator system which was laid out in bushels and cubic measurements when now we have to use tonnes? We knew the bushel capacity available in an elevator which might have held 100,000 bushels. Now that capacity varies depending on the kind of grain that goes into it. It will hold 6,000 tonnes of wheat but only 3,400 tonnes of oats. There are seven or eight kinds of grains that you could put in between with weights that vary. There are very sophisticated statistical methods for bodies like the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Grains Commission by which they can plug in their computers and get a more or less accurate assessment of how much space there will be at any of the delivery points, given the kinds of delivery patterns that have existed.

However, it is still not the same as knowing how much volume there is out there. If the delivery patterns of farmers change from oats to wheat, for instance, the capacity is reduced almost by one-half without the computer or the managers of the Canadian Wheat Board even knowing about it. So it has created new ways of having to deal with old problems.

I think we ended up holding on to the acre as the basic unit of measurement in western Canada, simply because our land was already surveyed in discrete amounts. There is one mile between lines. This creates a certain number of acres, 640 to the square mile. True, we can make estimations. We can say 800 metres is approximately half a mile and 800 metres squared gives us about 64 hectares, which is only one hectare short of a full quarter section. It is close enough for figuring, but it is still stupid to go into the land titles offices and change all the titles just to fit into the metric system of measurement. Since my time is almost expired, Mr. Speaker, I would like just to reiterate that we in rural Canada can see that large scale corporations do not have any disincentive to switch to metric. We can see the large scale food industries switching to metric because to them there is no real cost. Their equipment handles a large enough volume of weighing and measuring that it wears out occasionally, and they can use that five-year or six-year changeover to put in metric scales at really no cost to them. But we have little businesses, even some fair-sized ones like the Wynyard Co-op, which estimates it is going to cost $25,000 just to switch over to weighing and metering under a metric system if it becomes something that it must do.

We understand that some of this will happen whether the law changes or not. We realize that General Motors will be producing metric cars, but we cannot see why small retailers have to switch to the system cold turkey, if you like, leaving the old imperial measurement system completely in the background. We think those scales have been working. We think their traditional customers have been used to using those weights and measurements, and we think this should at least be allowed to go on in concert with the new changes.

I make one last plea. Let us reconsider that generation of people who feel completely alienated by the change. They have their rights, they are part of this country, they have made their contribution and I think they should be considered in the next few years. Let us slow down the change and be more humanistic.

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State, Small Businesses): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), I would like to make a few comments on existing acts pertaining to the metric system, and the way Canada has been approaching metrication since the white paper was brought forward in 1970.

But before coming to specific remarks, I would like to remind the hon. member for Capilano that I took a good note of the memorandum he referred to, and indicate to him my undertaking to study it. Because on the principle he stated, that it was at least strange that government advisers took it upon themselves to criticize openly a decision taken by a government elected by the people, I would like to tell him I took good note of his remarks and I will try to get more details on the subject.

However, and this also concerns the speech made by the hon. member for Capilano, I would like to stress how much I was shocked when he referred to payments due the two members of the overview board. At least ten days ago, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member sat next to me here in this House, as is normally done between civilized people, to ask me to try to expedite within my department the last two payments due the two members of the metric overview board. This happened ten days ago. Unfortunately, I had to stay away from the House for a week, and when I returned yesterday, I already had from officials in the department I am representing an answer indicating the procedure to expedite these last two payments. And not later than noontime today, an official of my staff phoned the office of the hon. member for Capilano to inform him I was now in a position to expedite the last payments, as I intended to do within the next few days. I think mentioning those details in his speech while implying the government wanted by that to show its disagreement with the report of the metric overview board was not at all fair play. With respect to the release of the report of the metric overview board, the hon. member for Capilano should understand—and I also mentioned to him at the time I personally looked at that report for the first time on April 18, 1978, and as this is a 375-page report—that there must be delays due not only to the consideration of the report but also due to the translation of such a big document.

Mr. Speaker, I found it indeed very interesting to hear the comments of the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) who explained, without bombast, contrary to what his predecessor did, basing himself on examples drawn from everyday life experience in his area, that metrication or the conversion from the imperial system to the international system was obviously causing certain problems with a certain category of Canadians whom he called very rightly "the non-metric generation." I agree with the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre that above all must be consideration for those people; the system I think is necessary, as indeed the leaders of the three parties recognized in this House in 1970 when the white paper was tabled. Even if the system is necessary in the short, medium and long terms, it is quite obvious that we must not above all metricate to metricate but rather take into consideration in the first place the interests of the users, the consumers and the industries affected by the changes that result from metrication.

Mr. Speaker, the motion before us implies that the Canadian economy needs other legislation on the metric system. I want, for my part, to remind the House that of the 88 sectors that released sector plans, only three, namely the sale of gasoline by the litre, furniture and balances in the retail food business, are regulated under the 1971 Weights and Measures Act which was later amended, as was mentioned, by the 1976-77 act.

Only in those three cases, Mr. Speaker, did the industries concerned ask, with the support of the Consumers' Association of Canada, for pertinent regulations throught the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would like, at this point, Mr. Speaker, to make a brief remark on the Consumers' Association of Canada because I was most surprised to hear the hon. member for Capilano mention or suggest that this association, which has so vigorously and competently defended the interests of Canadian consumers, may have been prevented from expressing honestly its views because of possible grants it may have received. I am taken aback by this judgment on the Consumers' Association of Canada. As I already mentioned, some sectors are also under provincial jurisdiction and some fertilizers and pesticides are subject to the Fertilizers Act and the Pest Control Products Act of the federal government. Most of the other approximately 80 sectors convert without legislation in accordance with the guidelines, standards and target dates prepared by over 2,000 voluntary workers from all sectors of the Canadian economy, including unions, consumers and teachers.

A brief comment on some economic sectors might help to illustrate, Mr. Speaker, how the Canadian economy as a whole is adapting to metric conversion without requiring any legislation. Let us take for instance the manufacturers of motor vehicles and parts, which include the companies which manufacture or assemble motor vehicles, such as automobiles, commercial vehicles, buses and trucks. This sector also includes the manufacturers of motor vehicle parts and accessories such as motors, brakes, clutches, axles, gears, and so on.

Metric conversion for private vehicle manufacturers was implemented at the same time in Canada and the United States. The metric contents of 1980 models manufactured by the different companies vary from 90 per cent for General Motors, to 48 per cent for Ford and 34 per cent for Chyrsler. General Motors has publicly stated that it intends to complete conversion of its operations by 1982.

The hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) may be right in saying that, in any case, these companies would probably have converted to the metric system with or without a metric conversion program, but it is important to note that this major sector of the economy undertook this process on a voluntary basis such as recommended in the white paper of 1970. Private vehicles and parts manufacturers are expected to complete their conversion program in December, 1982, according to the target date and to the metric conversion plan published in 1976. Truck manufacturers should have completed their metric conversion program by 1990.

[English]

Another sector which we could study for a little while would be forestry. Most research establishments in the forest industry are now operating completely in metric units. All forest inventories are now being carried out in metric measurements. As of January 1, 1979, metric scaling was used in British Columbia and Alberta and is expected to come into force in Ontario as of April 1, 1981. The national standard for scaling roundwood is now being used to some degree by most provinces. Training programs for woods personnel are under way across the country. The forestry sector has now completed 98 per cent of the activities in its plan and is expected to be essentially metric by mid-1980.

Another sector which would be of interest to members is the petroleum and natural gas industries and services. Metric conversion in the oil and gas industries is another example of a conversion which has proceeded relatively smoothly. This has been brought about by the leadership exhibited by the Canadian Petroleum Association. The association, realizing the necessity to formulate a well-thought-out plan for the industry, established a committee in 1972 with the responsibility of bringing about an orderly transition to the metric system on a least cost basis. This sector committee is truly representative of the industry, with representatives from all phases of the petroleum production field. Operations have been essentially in metric since January, 1979.

Before leaving these remarks on sectors, I would like to touch briefly on the plastics industry. At present, a substantial number of plastics manufacturers are marketing their products in metric units. Further progress towards metric conversion is expected as more companies are identifying their products in metric terms in response to market demands. Blow moulders of plastic containers experience no difficulties in meeting market demands for plastic metric containers. Metric production is also on the way in the reinforced plastic composites, injection moulding, machinery and mould-maker areas of the industry, in response to market demands. The ultimate objective is international standardization. Conversion is to be compatible with related domestic and worldwide industries and achieved at minimal cost. The plastics industry as a whole is expected to operate predominantly in metric by July, 1983.

The motion before us also suggests that it is the government which has somehow managed to impose the metric system on the people of Canada. The motion suggests that this House of Commons has somehow avoided the metric system, while the government has somehow failed to consult the representatives of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): The facts do not support this view. As the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) pointed out, the metric system was made legal in Canada by the Metric Weights and Measures Act of 1871.

On January 16, 1970, the white paper on metric conversion in Canada was tabled in the House of Commons by the hon. minister of industry, trade and commerce and supported by all party leaders in the House. The policy conclusion stated in the white paper was that metric conversion was inevitable and in the national interest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): If hon. members opposite are not happy with those comments, I should like to indicate that those are the comments made by the hon. member for Capilano when he said what happened in the House concerning the metric system. If they are not happy, they do not have to listen; they can work on something else.

On April 7, 1971, the Weights and Measures Act was amended and recognized the "système international" as the legal metric system for use in Canada. The "système international" is the latest evolution of the metric system and has been in use for close to 100 years. On June 10, 1971, the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act made a metric contents declaration mandatory for all pre-packaged goods. A program of guideline dates for metric conversion was approved by the government and debated by the House of Commons of March 17, 1975. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs studied this matter at length and reported back to the House of Commons on December 17, 1976, with a recommendation that the House consider the advisability of adopting this program and also introduce additional legislation to facilitate metric conversion.

Subsequently Bill C-23, which became the Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment Act of 1976, was debated in the House of Commons and the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs over a period of almost ten months. Exchanges took place on the floor of the House of Commons and in the Senate 16 times. It was passed by the House of Commons on July 15, 1977, and received royal assent on August 5, 1977. In view of these debates and discussions over the years, one can only conclude that the motion as presented is not based on the facts.

Now I should like to deal with the Canadian approach to metric conversion. To perform its task, Metric Commission Canada established 12 steering committees, each responsible for co-ordinating a group of economic sectors that have related interests. For example, steering committee No. 5 groups the following sectors: construction, non-metallic mineral products, structural and architectural metals, engineers, real estate, land surveyors and town planners. Canadians working in all types of organizations sit on the various steering committees representing the Canadian people and co-ordinating the conversion activities of all sectors of Canadian society. The commission established 100 sector committees which report to the steering committees. Each is responsible for a particular industry, group of industries or interests. These sector committees are preparing the basic plans for converting the sector for which they are responsible. They are doing this in collaboration with the individual firms and individual associations.

The ongoing task of the steering committees and their sector committees is to monitor the progress of conversion and suggest any necessary modifications to the plans in order to meet changing conditions. These sector plans are guides for the individual firms and organizations concerned. While there is no obligation on any firm to conform to them, they represent the best judgment of the industry on how to go about the process of conversion. Since individual firms and public service organizations are the entities that are implementing metric conversion, it is clear they have a major role to play in the national conversion process.

An hon. Member: Why convert?

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): The hon. member should read the white paper published in 1971 which was approved by his party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): The basis of the Canadian approach to metric conversion is that it is a voluntary process, each firm and organization being guided by its appreciation of its own short and long-term interests. As I indicated in my opening remarks, some regulations had to be passed by the House concerning three sectors, gasoline sale per litre, scaling in the retail trade and also some furniture articles. As I said, the basis of the Canadian approach is that of a voluntary process. A corollary of this approach is that each unit of the economy is expected to identify the opportunities for change and to bear its own costs, just as it will reap the benefits arising from the change.

There are obvious advantages to both Canada and the United States in programs for metric conversion that are reasonably co-ordinated. The United States Congress approved legislation providing for voluntary metric conversion. At the same time, industry in the United States is moving on a broad front to implement conversion programs. In the meantime, Canadian and American sector committees are stimulating, supporting and assisting all efforts to press forward with preparations for metric conversion. In the investigation phase in each industry or occupation, research is necessary to define the most appropriate metric units to be used, the metric standards to be employed, and the range of sizes or quantities to be used in metric production. In the planning phase the sequence of events and the time needed for this conversion process in each sector is determined and these tentative estimates are co-ordinated with the estimates of the requirements of suppliers and customers. In the scheduling phase a time table is developed for each industry and field of endeavour so that it can be co-ordinated with all other sectors within the over-all target date. The implementation phase is the final stage where each sector and individual organization implements the plans laid according to the schedule defined in the previous phase.

As was also mentioned, the government has consulted all the provinces as to how they wish to implement conversion in their areas of jurisdiction.

These include notably education, highway design and regulation and land title registration, besides many other important areas. Interdepartmental committees are established to plan and co-ordinate conversion work carried out in the different departments.

The metric system is legal for use in Canada and has been for a long time. Our Weights and Measures Act has been amended by Parliament through the Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment Act of 1976 to allow the phasing in of the metric system in any sector of the economy at a time considered appropriate by a consensus of all concerned. In addition, most sectors of the economy are converting voluntarily after careful investigation, planning and scheduling of implementation. Therefore, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is no need for any over-all legislation concerning the use of the metric system in Canada.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to preface my remarks with a comment which flows from the remarks of the previous speaker, the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Lapointe), who referred to the metric system we are now supposedly enjoying in Canada as being voluntary. I would remind him as the member of Parliament for a riding which was one of the three test centres for the metric system, Peterborough, that it is anything but voluntary in the minds of the constituents of Peterborough or in the pocketbooks of the businessmen of that riding.

There is a strange history behind this whole process of conversion to metric. It is a political history book about which members opposite should take a moment to think. They should think about the record of the two previous ministers of small business, and it should serve as a warning to the present minister of small business. I refer to the period when the guidelines for debate on this subject first came in, approximately 1975, if my memory serves me right.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): There was no minister then.

Mr. Domm: The Hon. Len Marchand was the first minister of small business.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): That was 1976.

Mr. Domm: He was followed by the Hon. Tony Abbott. Those two former ministers did not listen to the thousands of Canadians who voiced an objection to metric in the retail food sector, and they are no longer with us today. Perhaps I am too benevolent in paying attention to the point which hon. members opposite fail to realize, that they do not pay attention to the consensus of the people of Canada or listen to their constituents when they voice their objections, not by tens, twenties or hundreds, but by thousands.

I have in my hand a computer print-out. It represents the number of people who have objected to the metric system. They are voters and constituents from across Canada. These files which I have on my desk are files of letters from constituents in Sherbrooke, Quebec, one of the test centres for metric in Canada. This file is a one-week file which is to be added to the thousands of letters from constituents and petitions from the riding of Peterborough, where there was a voluntary test centre.

I can tell hon. members how voluntary this system is and what the millions of people in Canada can expect on January 1, 1981. They can expect in 21 cities across this country a voluntary process, a process by which the metric commission dictates arbitrarily. Without consideration for the citizens of Canada, the merchants in 21 to 25 cities will buy metric scales, imported from the United States. The merchants, including the major food chain stores across Canada—Loblaws, Dominion Stores, Sunnybrook, IGA—will be told they must put in metric scales. They will then voluntarily meter out the merchandise to the consumers who totally misunderstand the reasons for this implementation.

If hon. members opposite and the minister of small business, who I notice is not present in the House, fail to hear these comments and refuse to listen to the people of Canada about the implementation of metric by this so-called voluntary process, then I predict the minister will follow the line of Len Marchand and Tony Abbott who, as former ministers of small business, no longer have a seat in this House.

I enjoy my seat in this House. The former member who represented my riding was a member of the Liberal party. He was elected four times and was a cabinet minister. I refer to the Hon. Hugh Faulkner who represented Peterborough from 1965 to 1979. He did not listen to the constituents of Peterborough, nor did he respond to their concerns about the high cost of metric conversion at a time of unemployment and at a time when small businessmen were trying to make a living. He did not respond, listen, care, react; he did exactly the same thing as the present Minister of State for Small Businesses is doing. He completely disregarded the constituents in his riding, in Sherbrooke, in Kamloops and across Canada.

Hon. members opposite in that party which forms the government of the day, will enjoy reading the letters of the people who object to metric. At the bottom of this yardage of computer print-out there are approximately 12 names.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair has had difficulty in the past when hon. members wanted to bring materials or things of the nature the hon. member is using into the House. There is a question as to how far one can go with regard to the difference between "tell" debate and "show and tell" debate. I respected the hon. member's original usage of the list because I recognized he wanted to make a point.

I am not going to, nor do I think the hon. member would wish it, make a ruling on the matter. However, I am concerned when I see cardboard boxes of material and things of that nature coming into the House. The hon. member has made his point with that computer list, and I would ask him to give some consideration to the problem which all occupants of the chair have had in deciding the difficult question of how much one can bring into the House during debate. I thank the hon. member, and I apologize to him for my interruption.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I respect your decision, but I would advise hon. members that I have no cardboard boxes. Perhaps you, sir, are referring to a member opposite or a member of the other opposition party.

During the question period on April 25 I asked the Minister of State for Small Businesses a question concerning the implementation of metric and whether there had ever been a full parliamentary discussion or an act formulated. At that time the minister said that there was no full legislation or implementation through an act of Parliament, in his memory, but he said he would look into that matter and advise me.

I suppose it would be in order to read some of the concerns of the constituents which have brought them to my attention. Following a statement made in a speech during the Speech from the Throne debate in April, concerning the nightmare the metric implementation had brought to the people of Peterborough, a member opposite interrupted my remarks by saying there was not a single problem in Sherbrooke, not a single complaint. That remark is recorded in Hansard.

I took the liberty in finding out why metric, as it was implemented in Sherbrooke, Quebec, was such a roaring success when it was such a nightmare in Peterborough. I wrote a letter to the editor of the Sherbrooke paper—one of the two Anglophone papers in Quebec, I understand—saying I was very pleased to learn how successful the implementation of metric had been in Sherbrooke. I wrote that I would be very interested in learning from them why they related so favourably to this voluntary implementation program.

I received more letters from Sherbrooke in ten days than I received in any ten-day period from my own constituents. They were totally unaware of the fact that it was implemented in Sherbrooke on a voluntary basis and totally unaware of the fact that it was implemented without a problem. I should like to read from one letter I received from a Sherbrooke constituent as follows:

You said you were surprised to be interrupted by the MP from Sherbrooke when you were commenting on metrication and that he said it was positive and there wasn't one complaint. Maybe he got no complaints. I don't know, but I doubt it . . . I have talked to many people in Sherbrooke and I haven't found one in favour of metrication.

Another letter reads as follows:

I was pleased to see your note in the Sherbrooke Record concerning the metric system. I am surprised the local MP stated there was no objection. I wish to state there is much dissatisfaction with the way the government has forced this on the public.

And yet another:

I cannot understand Mr. Pelletier stating that there was not a single complaint from the Sherbrooke area. The Dominion Store where I do most of my shopping took a survey, I think in February, and it was an overwhelming gesture against the metric system. I cannot see any benefit in the metric system, just a lot of confusion, and I can assure you the many housewives that I talk to are in agreement with me.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, it is not just the riding of Peterborough that is opposed to the implementation of forced metric. In January, Dominion Stores did a survey. The imperial measure was favoured by 88 per cent in Peterborough and by 68 per cent in Sherbrooke. The Dominion Stores study was a throrough one, a cross-section of detailed interviews of 3,000 people. In Peterborough, only 9.8 per cent of those interviewed favoured the metric system compared to 75 per cent for imperial. Those figures are for more than 2,000 interviews conducted in my riding by Dominion Stores. The figures speak for themselves.

Hon. members opposite may be able to totally ignore these figures and to say that the people of Canada will eventually learn to like it, but what about the food store owners?

Allen C. Jackson, president of Dominion Stores Limited, in an interview I had with him followed by correspondence, said:

We are unable to find any significant benefit to the Canadian consumer at this time in using metric weights for fresh meats, fruits and vegetables. In fact, in the United States, which is our major trading partner, metrication is at least nine to ten years away.

Mr. Jackson's next comment, and I think it is a wise one, is that there is a clear need to delay metrication at least until the United States catches up to the Canadian rate of conversion.

I wonder if those on the other side of the House know how much money conversion will cost? Mr. Jackson says the cost to Dominion Stores alone for converting to metric sales is estimated to be $10 million.

Why should a company be forced to spend $10 million on metrication when it needed it for other purposes? Mr. Jackson says he would much prefer to spend the money on energy conservation. Why not spend this money on something like energy conservation? Could the Dominion Stores not spend $10 million in a better way, than in the United States to purchase weigh scales which Canada is unable to produce and supply? This has a negative effect on our balance of payments deficit.

It should be noted that it is not just the consumers of Canada who are up in arms over this issue. I had a letter from one storeowner in my riding who was particularly upset. He operates a store in Havelock, Ontario, which is on the eastern border of my riding. He indicated that his meat sales alone declined by 21 per cent from the implementation date of September 1, 1979, to November 24, 1979. He said the sales dropped because Havelock is only ten miles from Marmora and Campbellford which are still using imperial. Shoppers simply drove the few extra miles to shop in a system with which they were familiar. He estimated he had lost $37,000 at the time he wrote the letter, not including the $12,500 he had to spend for two metric scales imported from the United States.

Some hon. members may not believe there could be such heavy losses. As a businessman from the Peterborough area I can tell them there are, indeed, such losses. I should like to read an excerpt from another letter I received from a Peterborough constituent as follows:

I live in Peterborough, one of the three centres where the metric system is being shoved down our throats. I for one am defying the system and doing the larger portion of my shopping outside of the city and will continue to do so as long as I can find a merchant who will sell me 16 ounces to the pound and 12 inches to the foot.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if the government will not respond or listen to the constituents of Canada, then perhaps the least we say on this side the better it will be for our party, because we will be returned with a majority, and will form a government that will listen to constituents, respond to their concerns and act accordingly.

This is not a voluntary system; this is a forced system. Two merchants have been locked up and forced out of business. Bands were wrapped around their weight scales so they could not sell one nickel's worth of their products until they purchased metric scales.

The implementation on January 1 in 21 cities will, I predict, cause a great upheaval across Canada. It should be put on record that Peterborough is not on the list of cities to face metrication on January 1. There is not one metric weight scale in any grocery store, chain or independent retail store in the riding of Peterborough today. That is what they think of metric implementation, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before I recognize the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) may I indicate that if she wishes to call it six o'clock I shall recognize the hon. member again at eight o'clock this evening. It is her preference, of course.

Miss Nicholson: May I call six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening, at which time I shall recognize the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

At 5.58 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) had the floor.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in the debate this afternoon, one of the members suggested it might be useful to look at the question of metric in historic terms. I would like to do that very briefly.

The white paper on metric conversion, tabled in the House by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in January, 1970, put forward the view that metric conversion was inevitable and in the national interest. Among the advantages that were stated in the paper were ease and convenience in education and in general commerce, improved trading abilities and opportunities in world markets for Canadian industry.

In 1971, Metric Commission Canada was established to promote, plan and co-ordinate the change-over to the metric system in Canada and to advise the minister of industry, trade and commerce on legislative and any other action required to facilitate conversion to the metric system.

The commission consists of a number of part time commissioners, and the chairman, drawn from various segments of the economy and geographical regions of the country. In organizing their work, the commission divided the various elements of the economy into some 100 sectors and organized committees to consider each of these. As a result, there are more than 2,000 persons, each of whom is knowledgeable in the particular subject involved, engaged in committee work. It is done on a volunteer basis, and most of them receive only limited travelling expenses.

Each committee works through a four-phase program: investigation, planning, scheduling and implementation, and each committee, after consultation with interested members of the public, prepares a timetable for implementation.

One can always improve methods of consultation, but it is not accurate to say that the timetable of implementation is imposed on the affected section of the economy.

With a few exceptions, mainly where the area was already subject to regulation, but also where the sector committee considers regulation desirable for orderly and fair treatment of all concerned, timetables are implemented by those the sectors represent.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was represented on many sector and steering committees to provide a consumer viewpoint, as well as to explain the statutory requirements of the laws administered by the department.

I feel it is appropriate to reaffirm, as the commissioners did on their fifty-fifth meeting held in January, that the Metric Commission of Canada has always endeavoured to facilitate and promote voluntary conversion. At the first meeting of the commission on January 16, 1972, the commissioners had stated that the conversion to the metric system should be planned by volunteers and they had sent a questionnaire to every national association and provincial government asking for their co-operation.

Such planned but voluntary policy was again discussed at the meeting of the commission held in October, 1977. Some members of the textile industry had suggested the enforcement of regulations under the Weights and Measures Act to put an end to the use of the imperial system. Although the legislation of 1976 amending the statute law (Conversion to the Metric System) had legalized the enforcement of those regulations the commission reconfirmed its policy of voluntary conversion. The commission objected from the beginning against the enforcement of regulations providing dates for compulsory withdrawal at the outset and suggested that they would be used only to complete the conversion in a market which had implemented the metric system.

The policy of conversion by consensus was reconfirmed at the meeting of the commission in October, 1978, when the commission discussed a proposal put forward by some representatives of the textile and furniture industries aimed at drafting regulations to set dates for the compulsory withdrawal of imperial units. The commission agreed on the conversion dates timetable but only after the commission staff and the commissioners had made considerable efforts to get evidence that the textile market was already largely converted to the metric system. Special meetings were even held to which persons opposed to the regulations were invited to voice their opinion.

For obvious safety reasons the provincial governments enacted laws regarding the metric conversion of traffic signs. However this decision was taken by the provincial transport ministers at a meeting held in Nova Scotia in 1973 independently of the commission. That decision of the premier was incorporated in the conversion master plan of the research sector and the highway maintenance and construction sector at the time when the Roads and Transportation Association of Canada agreed to constitute the nucleus of that sector's planning subcommittee. The plan, including its legal provisions was approved by the commission only on September 15, 1976.

When this regulation was deemed necessary, the commission took exceptional measures during the scheduling phase in order to see to it that all those concerned be consulted and a consensus reached.

Mr. Speaker, I think it will be readily recognized that this was the case with the working group on scales in the retail food industry, when volunteers from the Retail Council of Canada, the Canadian Federation of Retail Grocers, the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, the Quebec Food Retailers Association, the Canadian Institute of Food Distribution, the Consumers' Association of Canada as well as the scales manufacturing and repair industry co-operated with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs over five years to prepare an orderly plan which, from the outset, required a consensus for the benefit of all before regulations were defined. The food retailing business, unanimously and with the support of the Consumers' Association of Canada, asked the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to prepare regulations under the Weights and Measures Act.

● (2010)

[English]

In 1977, an amendment to the weights and measures regulations was passed to enable the conversion of certain commodities, particularly goods sold "loose" at the retail level, to be regulated.

In effect, this set a timetable for the conversion of scales in retail food stores. The schedule as developed by the retail trade, the scale industry, consumer groups and governments divided the country into a number of areas and set dates for the conversion of each area. In this way it was intended that there would be a rapid conversion and, within a few weeks, all the merchants in an area would complete the transition so there would be no possibility of some merchants taking a commercial advantage by not converting. This is, of course, a way of proceeding about which there can be different views. In Australia, voluntary conversion was tried. When a number of difficulties were found with it, the Australians moved to greater regulation.

Metric System

Three pilot areas, Kamloops, British Columbia, Peterborough, Ontario and Sherbrooke, Quebec, completed conversion in August, 1979. Other areas were scheduled to start in January, 1980, but in December, 1979, the former government decided to halt the program.

There were some useful things learned from those pilot areas. One of them was that a month, which was the period allowed for conversion in Kamloops, was too short. Most people seemed to need four or five shopping experiences in order to convert easily from kilograms to pounds.

There are also different views on whether to allow dual pricing and dual measurement while people become accustomed. There are certain advantages seen by people in allowing dual pricing for ease in comparative shopping and comparative pricing. Against this there is rather a lot of experience to show that a very long phasing in process simply interferes with the process, and, while the costs of conversion are not inconsiderable, the final results are well worth it.

Just this evening I was talking to three people who claimed they had greatly increased their business as a result of the change to metric, which has facilitated their penetration of the overseas market.

While there are different views on the best way to proceed, I think I have shown that the methods taken up to now have in general been reasonable, thoughtful, careful and not unduly harsh or fast.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my remarks, I would like to make a comment on the statement of the minister this afternoon. He commented on the fact that the leaders of all the various political parties had agreed on metrication. I think he was referring back to 1970 when the white paper on metrication was presented to this House. If he has not seen the comments of Ged Baldwin, who was the one and only spokesman for our party at that time, I would refer him to Hansard for January 16, 1970.

While there was no doubt that all parties in the House agreed there was a need for metrication at some future time, there was certainly no agreement that metrication should be forced on the people of Canada. I wish to quote from page 2471 of Hansard for January 16, 1970. Ged Baldwin, the then hon. member for Peace River, said:

> I agree that there must be a continuous and detailed study. We are prepared to co-operate with the government in this regard . . . I would strongly urge the minister to give some thought to having the white paper he tabled today submitted either to a special or to a joint committee so that there might be a continuous study and reports from time to time to this committee by the boards the minister proposes to set up.

From that point on there was no referral to this House and no referral to a committee of any kind, but there was a forcing of the metric system on the people of Canada. It was in late 1976 or early 1977 that a debate took place in this House. It was a frustrating experience for those who took part in the debate. The debate was on Bill C-23, entitled "An act to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement". It was frustrating because it was the first occasion on which Parliament had an opportunity to debate conversion to the metric system and members were shocked to learn how far Canada had proceeded toward conversion on the basis of decisions made by the Metric Commission, a commission made up of bureaucrats appointed by order in council. This underlines the arrogance of the government in bypassing Parliament, ignoring our democratic system which provides for public debate by members of Parliament who are representatives of the people on matters which affect individuals so fundamentally, and which also provides for public input through committees.

What the government did was to set up a metric commission and say to a group of bureaucrats: Convert Canada to metric; ignore the cost; ignore the public and their feelings; ignore the inconvenience and ignore the fact that the United States, our largest trading partner, is moving to the metric system only with extreme caution. The government said to the Metric Commission: Push metric through at all costs. And this is exactly what the commission has been doing. They set up sector committees, around 100 of them according to an hon. member on the other side, and in my opinion they named to those committees people who were committed to metric, people who had preconceived ideas and who undertook to sell the metric system at all costs rather than to determine whether it was in the best interests of the sector or whether the people in the sector wanted to go metric.

The Metric Commission also "conned" the civil service in the various provinces to change their land title system. Saskatchewan is a prime example. In that province on April 20, 1976, an order in council was passed amending the regulations under the Land Titles Act and changing the land measurement system from acres to hectares. The hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) did not seem to understand this. He was accusing the federal government of making these changes. But the changes were made by the NDP government in Saskatchewan replacing acres with hectares. As I said, it was done by order in council and without any input from the MLAs or the ministers. When we found out about this order in council, we telephoned some of the MLAs in Saskatchewan and they could not believe that the regulations had been revised by order in council, so as to change acres into hectares in the province. So here we have a situation in which the NDP members are complaining about the metric system being imposed upon Canada by the Liberals in Ottawa while the NDP in Saskatchewan is doing exactly that.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, the cost of metrication to the end of 1979 has been some $27.7 million with an additional million dollars for the Metric Monitor, that newspaper, that propaganda organ which is shipped out to various people around the country on a fairly regular basis. It is also estimated that a further $27 million will be spent in the next three years—the Metric Commission will be spending that amount. If hon. members look at the May 22, 1980 issue of Hansard they will find these figures laid out in detail in response to a question showing what it has cost year by year to bring in metrication. Those figures refer to the cost of operating the Metric Commission alone.

It is interesting to recall what took place during the proceedings on Bill C-23. Members of the opposition, particularly those from western Canada, strenuously debated the changes provided in the bill—acres to hectares, bushels to tonnes—in the federal field covering the Canadian Wheat Board Act, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the two-price wheat system. It appeared to us that neither the government nor the Metric Commission understood the west and in particular they failed to understand the survey system which is based on the mile. I shall not go into the details of our survey system; the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre has already done that. I am suggesting that hon. members on the government side did not understand the situation in the west. They did not understand that farm machinery was built in sizes conforming to the imperial system, that it is calibrated for bushels rather than for kilograms and tonnes. It is very difficult, when one has to make three or four calculations, to be certain that in applying fertilizer, or chemicals for example, the right amount is getting to the ground.

In that debate on Bill C-23, the first time Parliament was given an opportunity to discuss metric, members of the Official Opposition pointed out to the government that farmers in western Canada along with the people there generally were opposed to the metric system. We understood the feelings of the farmers. We understood the feelings of those people because we were out there and we talked to them. We communicated with our constituents, because that was our job, and they told us what their feelings were. By contrast we found that the Liberal members from western Canada, such as there were, completely underestimated the depth of feeling on this topic among western farmers. They would not listen. And that is nothing new, because they have never listened. To me, the statement made by the then hon. member for Assiniboia, Ralph Goodale, on January 26, in the debate on C-23 was completely unbelievable. This is what he said in the House:

> I want to deal with a few of the aspects of metric conversion affecting grain which may not be fully appreciated but upon the basis of which I believe this measure is not only supportable but is also in the best long-run interests of all segments of the grains industry, including producers in the prairie region. First, it should be noted that this change has a broad and virtually unanimous base of support in the farm community.

He went on to say that he had visited his constituency and that the people there were all in favour of metric. This was not so. When we got into committee on Bill C-23 representatives of various farm organizations appeared before us. Some of them were members of the sector committee but most of them were either paid employees or executives of the farm organizations and they said the same thing Ralph Goodale, the member from Assiniboia, was saying—that all their members were in favour of the metric system. Nevertheless, at that point in time the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), myself and others were getting petitions from the locals of the various farm organizations opposing metrication.

Those petitions and those motions were passed over to the government so that it could understand the opposition to metrication in the west. But the government paid no attention whatsoever.

Then the minister responsible at the time tried to convince us that converting bushels to tonnes and acres to hectares would mean a saving of $1 million to the grain producers of western Canada. He was never able to explain this in committee, because there was no proof that such a saving could ever be realized.

● (2030)

As a matter of fact, there was no saving. It was going to cost the farmers of western Canada many millions of dollars to convert to metric.

I see that my time is almost up. As far as Bill C-23 is concerned, when we found we could not convince the government to make any change, we suggested to the government that it bring in an amendment to allow a dual system; to allow the metric system and the old imperial system to operate side by side.

This, Mr. Speaker, was turned down by the then Liberal government. Fortunately, when the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) became the minister of transport and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, he insisted that the Canadian Wheat Board and the grain commission report using the dual system in order that those young people who understood the metric system could make use of it and the older people who understood the imperial system could make use of that. This is a sensible approach, Mr. Speaker. This is an approach this government has refused to take because they say it is voluntary.

Any time you are forced to do something by legislation it is not voluntary, it is a taking away an individual's democratic rights. This is what that government did in bringing in metrication. It brought in, in effect, legislation requiring the people of Canada to do certain things which they did not want to do, and it was brought in without any debate in this House of Commons except for Bill C-23. This is a disgrace and a sad commentary on the way the government across the way operates today.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my comments this evening by saying that in spite of the caricatures which are often used in respect of debates about the metric system, it is important to take the debate about the metric system seriously, and I hope to be able to reflect a bit with hon. members this evening about just why we ought to take it seriously. It is not just a question of dinosaurs versus progressives, although indeed we have had many dinosaurs speak against metrication this evening. Here is another case of the Conservatives being right in some respects but for the wrong reasons, where they have a sort of half decent instinct, but it only manifests itself in inarticulate groanings.

Metric System

I would like, if I could, to articulate some of the resistance to the metric system this evening. Basically, the resistance is there because it is a basic conceptual change from a human system of measurement to a rationalized system; from a measurement system related to the human body to an abstract creation. The difference in how we perceive this question crosses party lines and crosses idealogical lines. I think it is important to acknowledge that. And it cannot be explained away in terms of generation gaps either. I recall, in my first election campaign that I got the most enthusiastic response ever from a group of junior high school students when I said something critical of the metric system.

So the resistance we have to the metric system is not something that is a generational thing; it is something which is very much imbedded in the way people perceive reality and I think we should acknowledge that.

Now, in addition to this conceptual change, which stirs up resistance to the system I think we need to say it has been resisted because it is a change which is seen, and rightly so, to have been imposed upon the public without adequate political debate, without adequate debate in Parliament and without adequate public debate about whether, in fact, this was something that we wanted to do. There was no consensus. From a democratic socialist point of view, Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious thing because the metric system is partly responsible for people having a very negative view of government, and in the view of our party it is very important that people have a positive view of government. We regret that the metric system has been imposed in the way that it has, because it has helped to create a negative view of government.

Human health, I believe—and I mean this in the broad sense of the health of the community—depends on people having a feeling that they are actively and creatively participating in their own reality. Robbing people of this feeling through these false bureaucratic and technocratic imperatives is very dangerous. Humans, I submit are created in the image of an active and creative God, and they will, therefore, quite appropriately resist any attempt to violate their nature in this way, whether their control over their own lives is threatened by a bureaucratic initiative, whether it is threatened by multinational corporations—no matter who happens to threaten control over their own lives.

What we have here is an example, Mr. Speaker, of how too many things are outside the pale of political debate in this country, and of how our consciousness of those things which we perceive to require political debate is too narrow. The metric system is perceived as some sort of a value neutral evolutionary imperative that really does not deserve to be talked about in any sort of political or public way.

I must give credit where credit is due, as I mentioned at the beginning when I referred to the Conservatives as dinosaurs. They acknowledged that some of these questions needed to be reopened, when they were in government, by suggesting a parliamentary inquiry into another issue which has proceeded in the same way as metrication, and that is the development of nuclear power in this country as if it were just part of the natural course of events and did not have anything to do with conscious public discussion, with opponents being made out to be members of the flat earth society.

I think in this area, as in others, Mr. Speaker, we need to expand the parameters of political debate in this country so that more and more of what we decide to do as a nation, whether we disagree with each other or not, will come within the parameters of political debate. This would be a very healthy thing, but what we are talking about here tonight is an example of just the contrary.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, not to point out, as a final reflection on this issue, the economic side of things. I say "reflection", because I see this debate as an opportunity to debate, really in retrospect, what has already happened. There may be some debate about the scheduling of things. There may be ways that we can talk about how we want to, and what is the best way to implement the final stages of metrication. But in a sense we are really reflecting on something that is already taking place, whether we like it or not. We have to see it as an opportunity to learn, therefore, about what kinds of mistakes not to make in the future.

As I said, I wanted to talk about the economic side. The Liberal government has, as usual, acted in a way that is supposedly—at least if you listen to the rhetoric—in the interests of the Canadian public but, in fact, they have acted in a way that is actually extremely insensitive to the needs of farmers, insensitive to the needs of small businessmen and insensitive to the needs of workers who never asked for metrication in the first place. But it is something which fits, as usual, perfectly into the global profit strategies of multinational corporations. It fits perfectly into the profit strategies of these global corporations, in their kingdom building aspirations, in whose long-term interests it is to create the standardization and uniformity that will result from metrication, not to mention the short-term profits they receive from smaller units for higher prices.

Global profit strategies, Mr. Speaker, by definition, require increasingly homogeneous markets and a built-in disrespect for local and traditional customs and values. My friends on the right here, who are so fond of defending these sorts of things, ought to contemplate that reality the next time they get up to defend their multinational friends. Unfortunately for the multinationals, Mr. Speaker, the human spirit, it appears to me, will prevail against all efforts to destroy our particularity and the ways in which we express ourselves in differentiated ways as human beings. Our humanity will thus prevail. This will be true of all efforts to reduce us to passive receivers of our reality and to unconscious consumers of metric hamburgers.

May we learn therefore, from the arrogance and the disembodied intellectual approach, which has characterized metrication, a new respect for the dangers of trying to change reality by undemocratic means in a democratic society.

• (2040)

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, for the second time in as many months I rise to make my case on behalf of many millions of Canadians who have been metrified by this government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): This time I am speaking on behalf of the Canadian consumer; not only in my official role as opposition critic for consumer affairs, but as a consumer myself and one who has been in direct contact with several thousands of consumers across Canada about this government's wholesale conversion to metric.

Let me put on the record the basis for my intervention in this debate which, I am delighted to note, is the first full-blown discussion on metrication, save one hour last month when I introduced a notice of motion to make metric conversion voluntary. This is the first opportunity to register the views of all parties in the House of Commons on the specific subject matter of metric conversion.

My professional interest in metric conversion first arose in my election campaigns over the past year and a half. For reasons which I thought were peculiar to the Hamilton-Wentworth region alone, I was forever questioned about metric conversion at coffee parties, at shopping centres, on front verandahs. The vast majority of my constituents were pleading with me to do something about this metric nonsense, as they kept describing it.

Why was this an issue only in my riding? Neither Ancaster, nor Dundas, nor Waterdown, nor even the city of Hamilton itself, were test centres like Sherbrooke or Peterborough or Kamloops. Why the consumer furor over metric in Hamilton-Wentworth? After researching the history of Canada's metric conversion program, dating from the mid-1960s and culminating in the government's white paper on metric in 1970, I was amazed to learn how totally Canadians had been force-marched into metrication by the Liberal administrations of the 1970s, by stealth, as has been so thoroughly documented by my colleague, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington).

So, like any responsible reporter who turns politician and tries to sample public opinion before arriving at a definitive position on an issue affecting peoples' lives such as this one, I went on a Hamilton radio station open line program to invite the views of listeners on metric. I also requested the people of the entire southern Ontario area served by radio station CHML to write to my office on Parliament Hill regarding their position on metric, for or against. I believe the "Open Line" host, Mr. John Hardy, can testify that my question was absolutely straightforward: Are you in favour of metric conversion or not, and why?

I am still not certain, Mr. Speaker, how many letters arrived in my office postmarked Hamilton and a myriad of other centres in Ontario—I think we received 700 in the first week and upwards of 2,000 within the next few days. That was, however, only a cross-section of the listening audience of one of several Hamilton area radio stations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): If you fellows would listen, you might get a little information on this whole metrication program. Listen to the input from the people. There followed a constant stream of requests from similar programs across Canada. I spent an average of eight to ten hours a week for a solid month on radio talk programs, discussing metric with Canadian consumers from Vancouver to Halifax. For the record, Mr. Speaker, these are the broadcasting outlets which devoted up to two hours on this subject: In Hamilton, CHML; in Vancouver, CJOR; in Ottawa, CFRA with Mr. Hal Anthony; in Halifax, CJCH; in London, CFPL with Mr. Bill Brady; in Edmonton, CJCA with Mr. Ron Collister; in Winnipeg, CJOB with Mr. Peter Warren; and in Regina, CKCK. That one was a live debate with the Saskatchewan minister of highways, Eiling Kramer. The point I want to make is that flowing from these many hundreds of telephone conversations with Canadians came thousands of letters to my office—my staff and I have lost count, but I have here, not a box full of letters, but two files, of about 14 in my office—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair appreciated the comments of the hon. member, but since I did warn another hon. member earlier about using exhibits, I think it would be improper of me not to warn the hon. member. I would ask the hon. member to remember that there is in fact a rule against exhibits in the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: He is an exhibit himself.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am in total concurrence with your admonition. The only difference between previous displays and this one is that I am going to quote from some of the letters that have arrived in my office, and I would beg your indulgence for a few moments.

An hon. Member: Read them all.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): These files testify to the very strong feelings of Canadian consumers about the changeover to metric. As I said, I will go through those letters at random. These letters come from Highland Grove, Ontario, Halifax, Burlington, Victoria, Montreal, London, Lynden, Ontario, in the beautiful riding of Hamilton-Wentworth, Sydney, Nova Scotia, Indian Head, Saskatchewan, Ottawa, Killam, Alberta, Annapolis Royal, Nova Scotia. Let me pick any one of them at random. Here is one from Snowflake, Manitoba.

An hon. Member: Wow!

Metric System

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): It reads.

I am definitely against metric. I am a farm woman and I don't see why farmers should be put to the awful inconvenience of hectares, litres and all the rest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): It goes on to read:

For myself I think recipes, dress patterns, temperatures and the whole mess is so totally unnecessary to change to metric—

Why wasn't the whole country consulted before it was started?

That comes from Patricia Robinson in beautiful downtown Snowflake, Manitoba.

Many of these letters are from proponents of Canada's conversion to metric. The vast majority are very much against what they constantly refer to as "metric madness." The most interesting aspect of the individual Gallup poll I have conducted is that nearly all radio hot line calls and these letters are thoughtful ones, not hysterical or emotional appeals to stop progress and turn the clock back 100 years.

That is what bothers me most, Mr. Speaker, including some of the comments made by the hon. pterodactyl from Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). Because some of my colleagues on this side, and I have the democratic responsibility to check with our people, and because we dare to raise publicly the awful possibility that this Liberal government may indeed have moved too fast, too bureaucratically, too dictatorially, on a matter as profoundly important to Canadians as metric conversion, we are branded as anti-progress neanderthals living in the eighteenth or nineteenth centuries, as people afraid of progress, afraid to take a different stand from our largest trading partner, the United States.

Of the several thousands of letters in my office, the major problems faced by consumers fall into seven areas. They are: First, metric packaging rip-offs; second, retooling costs; third, the costs of new scales; fourth, land measurements; fifth, construction standards; sixth, safety problems with conversion; and seventh, other conversion problems, the latter being an umbrella category with which almost any one of us can identify.

My hon. friend, the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) just told me a recent horror story about a tornado that touched down in Bramalea about ten days ago. It tore away great chunks of aluminum siding and roofs, and now the insurance companies are complaining that the tornado is costing them a fortune because all aluminum siding and shingles have switched to metric, and much of the reconstruction has to start from scratch. I am sure the insurance companies can afford it, but it is the home owner who will be paying for metric conversion through higher premiums in the long run. You do not need an act of God to demonstrate potentially devastating costs to home owners. An electrical contractor in my riding recently warned me about what will happen when your fluorescent lights go hard metric. Many households will need to be rewired to accommodate the shorter metricised length of your fluorescent lights over the kitchen and bathroom sinks or in the playroom.

● (2050)

During this sampling of opinion on metric, I have welcomed all points of view. Sometimes I have received very thoughtful flaying of my position on this subject. I want to read into the record part of one such excoriation, the most recent one published last week in the Dundas Star Journal. I hope Mr. Speaker will not mind if I display the paper in which this article was published.

An hon. Member: It is a good paper.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Yes, it is a good paper. The lady who authored the prominently displayed letter to the editor signed herself simply as Jane Neysmith. Presumably she was a Dundas constituent. She maintained that the only reason I am harping on the metric question is for my "political security". She further went on to state:

In his weekly letters to the folks back home Scott wrote "I resent the way the previous Trudeau government force-marched us into metric conversion without consulting the Canadian consumers".

Certainly I still stand by that statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Miss Neysmith continued, "Does he", meaning me—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): She continued:

Does he also resent those Canadian consumers who freely and overwhelmingly voted Trudeau and his government back into power?

I want hon. members opposite to listen closely to this. She continued:

It was a democratic way of failing to demonstrate real discomfort with metrics.

In short, the lady is suggesting that the return of the Trudeau government is a vindication by the majority of Canadian consumers that metrication is an all right thing. I can only assume that all hon. members opposite who support the Liberal government's imposition of metric will agree with Jane Neysmith, that the Liberal victory indeed was a indication of the Canadian consumers' approval of the switch to metric. I know all hon. members on the government benches will be thinking of their constituents when they vote on this metric motion later this day.

I have here Parliament's infallible diary, Hansard of March 17, 1975, page 4180. I will not hold it up because it will be constituted as another display. This will probably be the one and only time I quote a prominent member of the Liberal government so extensively to support my case. I am delighted to see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) here this evening. I should like to quote that hon. member for Windsor West because his comments cry out for a rerun in the public record on metric. It reminds me of the story going around about Ronald Reagan wondering if, at his age, he can last eight years in the White House, if elected president next November. The answer is: yes, he will do the first four years and the next four years will be reruns. I am delighted to have an ally such as the hon. member for Windsor West as a rerun or, in Windsor parlance, as a retread. I should like to quote the memorable utterances of the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs on metric. If one does not think metric was imposed, listen to the hon. member for Windsor West.

An hon. Member: Watch his hair go up on end.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I should like to refer to Hansard dated March 17, 1975, at page 4180 which reads as follows:

One can also ask why the government is asking the House to deal with this important matter by resolution. A resolution does not have the legal force of an act of Parliament. It is not binding on anyone in the sense that not following it would bring any criminal or civil sanction.

He was referring to members of Parliament when he said the following:

This means that we have no opportunity to question the minister or his officials directly and in detail on the practical effect of metric conversion on our daily lives and our commercial activity, both domestic and foreign, nor can we question them on the costs of this conversion and how they will be assumed.

I should like to quote from page 4181 of Hansard when the hon. member for Windsor West said the following:

We are dealing with a very serious issue. The suitability of these dates—

He meant the guideline dates for conversion. He continues:

—has a lot to do with the ability of our economy effectively to carry on both domestic and foreign business, its ability to meet import competition and, above all, it has a lot to do with what the actual costs may be for business and industry, and therefore ultimately for the public, of converting to the metric system.

My favourite quotation from the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce appears on page 4182 of Hansard. It reads as follows:

There is another area of concern which the government appears to have overlooked.

I will be right with you, Mr. Speaker. It continues:

I refer to the possibility that some unscrupulous elements in the business world will use the changeover to the metric system to increase profits unjustly at the expense of consumers. They would in effect use the opportunity to increase their profit margins by maintaining the same price even when they shift to supplying their product in a metric size, which in fact is somewhat smaller than the size previously used.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): In conclusion, I should like to again—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It has been an interesting experience. I am sorry to have to cut off the hon. member, but I will recognize the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang).

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the immense interest expressed throughout this debate in the report of the metric overview board, I wonder if I could seek the unanimous consent of the House to table this report.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): We made an agreement, let us stick to it.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I would simply like to table the report so that it will be available and accessible to all people of Canada and all members of the House of Commons. May I have that unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. In the first instance the hon. member has come to the end of his allotted time. There is relatively strict order today. Because so many members want to speak, the Chair is obligated, on behalf of all hon. members, to give every member an opportunity to speak. I understand that this is a motion; and the hon. member wants to table some papers. I could rule against the request of the hon. member simply on the grounds that he has now exceeded his time. Aside from that, if in fact he is making a motion to table some papers he must seek the unanimous consent of the House. As I understand it, he does not have the unanimous consent of the House. That being the case, I recognize the hon. member for Kitchener.

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, the point that strikes me most about this non-confidence motion of the official opposition is that they have chosen the issue of metric conversion to try to bring the government down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Does this mean that metric conversion is the highest concern and priority of the official opposition? If so, I suggest their priorities are out of whack.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The second point I should like to make is that I find it quite ironic the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) is the member who brought this motion before the House. On November 14, 1979, when that member was the minister of state for small businesses and industry, he said in response to a question of the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin):

> The fact is, the whole process has been handled very well by the Metric Commission, who are engineers, who have been dealing with sectors of industry and associations, who have had time to sit down and study the various implications and problems involved.

The hon. member for Capilano seems to have changed his tune.

It is apparent to me that the issue of metric conversion has become an emotional issue. To get some perspective on this problem, let us look at the facts and the history of metrication. The Weights and Measures Act of 1871 established the metric system for legal use. The Canadian government policy that metric conversion was inevitable and in the national interest was established by the House leaders of all parties. On January 16, 1970, the House leaders from all parties supported the white paper on metric conversion in Canada.

• (2100)

It is well worth noting that the white paper resulted in a response by the Canadian government to representations from diverse segments of the nation, an example of democracy in action. These representations came from groups which include the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian Home and School Association, the Agricultural Institute of Canada, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association and the Canadian Council of Professional Engineers. Does the opposition party say that all those people have no relevance?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: These learned groups, after great consideration, were convinced of the practical benefits to be derived from a system with advantages that range from simplifying the learning process in school to improving and consolidating Canada's position in world trade.

We should also keep in mind the voluntary nature of metric conversion. There are some 102 voluntary sector committees with over 2,000 volunteer representatives from industry, labour, consumer, and governmental bodies. Metric Commission Canada has had the over-all strategy of involving every sector from every region of Canada as soon as possible in planning for metric conversion. Sector plans are developed through a consensus process. These groups take the responsibility for monitoring the implementation of their plans. Thus, the voluntary participation approach is characterized by plans which are developed by those who will have to implement them.

After consulting with industry, labour and consumer groups, a program of guideline dates for metric conversion, recommended by Metric Commission Canada, was approved by the Canadian government and debated in the House of Commons on March 17, 1975, contrary to what the opposition has said. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, an all party committee, studied this matter at length and voted unanimously in favour of it. It reported back to the House on December 17, 1976, with the recommendation that the House consider the advisability of adopting this program and also of introducing additional legislation for metric conversion.

Subsequently, the Metric Conversion (Statute Law Amendment, 1976) Act was passed by the House of Commons on July 25, 1977. This was debated in the House over a period of nine months. It gave the governor in council the power to set dates in any sector of the economy, after which the customary imperial system would be illegal. Out of a total of 33 sectors which have published metric conversion plans, there are only three sectors for which regulations have been issued under the Weights and Measures Act. These regulations establish cut-off dates for the sale and advertising of goods in other than the metric system.

With regard to these three sectors, regulations were requested by the working groups on scales in the retail food industry, by the home furnishings and piece goods industry and by the petroleum refinery wholesalers and gasoline service stations—they were requested. These groups or committees had consumer and industrial representatives on them. The moves to make metric conversion mandatory in these three sectors were therefore initiated by the industries concerned, and not by Metric Commission Canada. The regulatory action that was requested was to bring about an orderly conversion without unfair competition, reducing the possibility of consumer confusion to a minimum.

As I stated before, the House leaders of all parties spoke in 1970 in favour of the policy for metric conversion. They stated it was inevitable and in the national interest. The white paper was quite specific about some of the economic advantages of conversion.

Mr. Blenkarn: What are they?

Mr. Lang: I will give them to the hon. member, and I will quote from the white paper.

> Important benefits of conversion are to be found in the ability to maintain and expand Canadian trade with nations in the metric sphere.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: If hon. members would cut down on the noise they might be able to hear better. The quotation goes on:

> Because of the vital importance of foreign trade in Canada, especially the need for growth in exports of manufactured goods, there must be serious concern about damage to Canada's competitiveness in world markets as a result of the pace of change-over to the metric system—

This is particularly important for Canada. In 1978, 26 per cent of our GNP was in exports, compared to only 7 per cent in the U.S.A. I quote again from the white paper:

> The view is held in certain sectors of industry that Canada should not attempt conversion independently of the United States. The Canadian automobile industry, with its close ties with the United States involving common designs, production and the marketing programs, is cited as an illustration.
> It appears generally the practice of the larger automobile companies to design in the measurement system of the different countries in which they manufacture. Metric or non-metric design may be translated and adapted as occasion demands. The same companies in their international operations are conscious of the great practical advantages of common, standard stock sizes of metal materials, common standard fasteners and common designs for production and maintenance spares.

That was the situation in 1970. Today, some Canadians have a misconception about metric conversion in the United States which, of course, is our major partner.

In early 1980, a statement by President Carter in the report of the U.S. metric board to Congress reaffirmed the U.S. federal government's support for metric conversion. The United States passed a metric conversion act in 1975. With confirmation by the Senate of the United States metric board in March, 1978, and the steady conversion of United States industry and services to metric, all of Canada's trading partners either operate in metric units or are converting to them.

It is true that about 70 per cent of our exports go to the United States. The automobile and parts related manufacturing sector in the United States is leading metric conversion in North America. Over 70 per cent of manufacturing and orders for parts are already in metric units. The General Motors X-Model, 1980 cars are now 90 per cent metric, and they have stated publicly that they intend to complete the conversion of their operations by 1982.

These developments are significant for employment and production levels in over 200 companies with over 100,000 employees in southern and central Ontario and southwestern Quebec. Thirty one per cent of Canada's 1978 exports to the United States were in motor vehicles and parts. This is our biggest single manufactured export to the United States, and it amounted to over $11 billion in 1978.

Canada's third largest export to the United States is newsprint, and the exports in that industry in 1978 amounted to $2.3 billion. The paper mills in Canada have virtually completed implementation of their metric conversion plans. Even in the U.S.A., over 80 per cent of the mills label, ship and invoice using metric units.

A number of sectors in the United States are ahead of counterpart sectors in Canada. For example, Canada exports distilled liquor products to the United States and, by U.S. law, the federal alchohol U.S. administration act, all packages of spirits have been in metric units since January, 1980. At this time Canada has not converted this sector to the metric system. In addition, all new wine packaging and retailing in the United States by the same law has been in metric units since January, 1979.

I could go on with the various examples of where Canada is behind the U.S. in metric conversion and the importance that we continue on with the metric system. I am also aware of the problems that any new change brings to the population, particularly in the stressful society in which we live today. I am concerned about the stress that relates to the elderly, but with help and understanding from the younger segments of our society the painful transition can be made, and it must be made sometime.

The major point I want to make is the one I established at the outset of my remarks: The official opposition has shown, by using metric conversion as their issue to raise a non-confidence motion to defeat the government, that their priorities are completely out of whack.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) was good enough to quote Hansard of November 14, 1979, at page 1302, and to take out of context a few sentences in an answer which I gave to a question asked by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin). If he had read on for a few lines more he would have read:

> The fact is, the whole process has been handled very well by the Metric Commission, who are engineers, who have been dealing with sectors of industry and associations, who have had time to sit down and study various implications and problems involved.

● (2110)

This is what he did not read:

What has happened is this: in the process, the people outside have been forgotten and the human element has been completely ignored.

Mr. Lang: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the addition of the last sentence changes what the previous paragraph stated—there was confidence expressed in the Metric Commission.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Thank you for your wisdom, Mr. Speaker. At the outset of my participation in this debate I want to express my particular pleasure in seeing in the House tonight the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) who opened this debate today. I should also like to pay tribute to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) who for many years now has felt that the very important issue of metrication was not getting a fair hearing in this Parliament. He played a big part in organizing this debate today and I know that members of our caucus want to salute him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: I am glad the Minister for Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is in his seat. The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Lapointe) has just stepped out, but I am sure he will return in a few moments.

I am pleased the two ministers are here because, while it may be the view of the government that it has launched into the metric program to such an extent it cannot back out of it, many Canadians have a different view.

As part of my submission tonight I want to make an appeal for special consideration in at least one area where metrication has not yet become a fact of life. It would have become a fact on January 1 had it not been that this party was the government at that time. I refer to the metrication process in the meat industry, which would have included auction markets. Any member of Parliament who has ever been around an auction ring would know there is a significant difference between fixed price buying and bid buying. However difficult Canadians may have found it to go to supermarkets, machinery dealers or whatever market, to buy items at a fixed price, they probably could do so if they worked at it long enough, by making calculations on the back of a cigarette packet or even on a pocket calculator. The situation is very different at the auction ring, however. There are two presumptions that go with auctions: the first is that both the buyer and the seller know the value of the product, and the second is that they know the language of the game.

If I were the gentleman who represented the riding of Lethbridge for some years in this House, that great auctioneer, I could demonstrate what goes on when one bids on products or livestock at an auction. The auctioneer goes into his act and wants to know how much you will give—per kilogram. A split second decision has to be made which calls for judgment. When you start buying livestock at so much per hundredweight, you are actually buying at one-tenth of a cent per pound. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for the auction industry to survive with metrication because neither the buyer nor the seller will have confidence—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malone: I think it is time, Mr. Speaker, to note that the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier) is interrupting again. He is like that left-wing chickadee, fresh from a feast of fermented chokecherries—always flipping around this House, never making any more sense with his interruptions than he ever does. All he can do is interrupt. Maybe he should become aware that I have had a chance to talk to some other members of his party privately. Those members from the province of Quebec who went through the tortuous experience of the referendum a few weeks ago ought to recognize that whatever solution might have come out of that referendum that made Canadians in general happy, the mood in western Canada is not one of happiness. Their unhappiness largely relates to the question of transport and the injustice they feel in that regard. The attitude of this federal government toward the fact—

Mr. Stollery: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The opposition was arguing the question of metric conversion. I do not know what the hon. member is going on about, but I wish he would stick to the point instead of going off on fancies which exist in his imagination about the problems of western Canada—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) has the floor. I am sure the suggestion that he might make his remarks more relevant to the motion before us has not been missed.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I want you to know that I am very annoyed with the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) because I was coming, after saying that resources are another question, to the point that on the prairies today one of the greatest reasons for discontent is the move to metric conversion.

I have often risen in caucus to say what the mood on the prairies is regarding metrication. My colleagues will point out that farmers in Ontario feel the same way. But I submit there is a difference, Mr. Speaker. The particular difference is that, unlike the other seven provinces in this country, the prairies were surveyed in miles. If you fly over the prairies you will see the grid pattern of one mile east and west by two miles north and south.

That leads me to another point, Mr. Speaker. We went through a decade of debate in this country from the time of the Right Hon. Lester Pearson to virtually the present day about something called the Canadian identity. Canadians went through that soul searching period, asking "who are we"? Somehow many believe that we are not unique among nations of the world and there is nothing that sets Canadians apart.

I remember a recent election night when the newly elected Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) quoted Robert Frost who said, "Promises to keep and miles to go before I sleep."

Mr. Stollery: What does that have to do with it?

Mr. Malone: It has plenty to do with it. The next day as I was driving back to my constituency, on the car radio I heard an advertisement for Superior Ford claiming that their trucks were the best by a country mile.

I am simply saying that the roots of our system of measurement go back to the roots of our country. This is the land of the mile. The word kilometre simply is not a part of how Canadians think and feel.

The hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) told us tonight that we have already made temperature conversions, that cars have been converted to the metric system, that boats have been converted to the metric system, bottles of alcohol have been converted to metric and pulp and paper has been converted. What the hon. member does not realize is that the citizens of Canada have not yet converted to metric. This kind of talk that somehow in the higher echelons of industry—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malone: Maybe I will pause here, Mr. Speaker, because there is nothing but a racket coming from the other side. We gave hon. members opposite some consideration when there was a bit of torture in their hearts about whether the referendum was going to be carried. I point out to them tonight that the disrespect shown to the prairie communities has far more serious implications than they believe. If they continue to show the arrogance they are showing tonight, this country will surely split as it was about to had the referendum been lost in another province.

I want to speak tonight about the attitude of government. As a student going to school I associated with someone from a neighbouring school whom I knew, though not particularly well. That particular person had some difficulty academically and left high school before completing his education. He bought a broken down farm, however, painted it up, planted hedges and trees and in a few years had built himself a real showplace. I drove into his farmyard about two years ago.

Mr. Chénier: Jack Horner.

Mr. Malone: When I asked this man how everything was going, the man buried his face in his arms, leaned against the corral fence and burst into tears.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malone: I hear the laughter on the other side, but it would do members some good to listen. He had just killed a quarter section of cereal crop land because he had made the wrong conversion from metric. Here was a man who was a food producer for Canada. He fed the Canadian people and had surpluses left over. He was a useful citizen. He produced, and he did things, but by the action of an insensitive government which believed somehow its deadlines had to be met, that there could not be the printing of both imperial and metric, this man lost his self-esteem. Who did that? The Government of Canada. The government that should be elected by the people and for the people made a Canadian citizen feel like he was useless. Members opposite like to take the attitude that this is lighthearted, that they can laugh it off and chuckle. But I tell them most seriously if that man were here tonight, I know very well he would whip them because he is just so angry and bitter about what this government has done in terms of destroying his ability to produce his own livelihood.

Another constituent of mine is over 90 years of age, and came from Norway. He came here after knowing the metric system. Now he tells me that he did not know what the temperature was, how fast he travelled or how far he had gone. He said that he did not know what his farm production volumes were. He asked what was happening in Canada today.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is why you lost the west with that silly laughing and those stock answers.

Mr. Malone: For those opposite who treat this matter so lightly this evening, I want to share with them some other serious difficulties that are happening in prairie farm production as a result of the conversion to metric. Farm people become pretty astute in making judgments about their production. I doubt if there is a farmer anywhere in prairie western Canada who grows grain and who cannot very quickly estimate within four, five, eight or ten bushels how much his truck holds. He could go to a country elevator and the agent could attempt to cheat him by 50 or 60 bushels, but the farmer would argue with him and tell him that he had more grain than he was suggesting.

Now the measurement is in tonnes. You visually cannot see, nor can a human being comprehend the weight of a tonne because you cannot lift one. What happens when the elevator agent says to a farmer that he has so many tonnes of grain? The farmer has to take him on blind faith. We trust most of our elevator agents. But in doing business we do not trust people to the extent that we trust them irrespective of our intuitions.

Again, members opposite in their insensitivity toward farmers and people in farm production are finding out that this government by the attitudes it has taken has been the source and cause of great discontent.

I do not think you will find members in this party or in the party to my left, or even reasoned Liberals who would take the position that one system is absolutely right and the other is absolutely wrong. That is not the argument. Surely for all of the talk you have heard here tonight, we staged it in and it came in with agreement of certain groups, but we all know in this Parliament that Canadians out there—

Mr.Deputy Speaker: I hate to interrupt the hon. member but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise to speak to the motion put forward by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) concerning the metric conversion program. I would like to make three points tonight on this topic. One concerns my personal experience with metric conversion, another concerns my educational experience, and finally I would like to point out the number of companies and sectors of the economy which benefit from metric conversion.

First let me share my personal experience. Ten years ago I had the opportunity to live in a country that was totally metric. I had my whole family with me including my two sons who were then aged eight and nine. They attended grades three and four in school, and in one year this eight and nine-year-old learned the metric system completely. If my children at those ages could learn the metric system in one year, then surely to goodness hon. members opposite can learn the metric conversion in their lifetimes.

An hon. Member: I don't think so.

Mr. Malone: How many kilopascals do you have in your town?

Mr. Flis: I was never exposed to the metric system. When we did our shopping, we bought our meat in kilos.

An hon. Member: Did you ask your constituents about this?

Mr. Flis: I did ask my constituents. I did not receive one complaint from them about this topic.

A member this afternoon criticized the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier). He did not receive one complaint from his constituents, so I do not know what all the fuss is about.

We did our shopping in kilos and litres. I paid two zlotys for one litre of mineral water. There was no problem. I emphasize that if children aged eight, nine or ten can convert to metric system within one year, then I do not understand all this fuss about changing a country to the metric system. That outlines my personal experience, Mr. Speaker.

My second experience concerns the educational system. I would like to share with hon. members opposite and with all hon. members of this House the Conservative government's policy for Ontario on metrication. I want to emphasize this; this is the metrication policy of the Conservative government of Ontario. As a principal of a school, I received a directive which I had to implement in my elementary school. First, all schools in the province of Ontario were told that the metric system was to become the principal system of measurement in the curriculum of the elementary and secondary schools of the province.

As I said, this is a directive which came from the Conservative government to every school in Ontario. Second, the metric conversion being implemented in the schools was with the expressed intention of ensuring that programs of instruction became predominantly metric by June, 1978. That is two years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Flis: Here is a province that knows the importance of converting to metric and which converted its school systems completely two years ago, in 1978. Yet here we are arguing today whether we should convert or not. That was done two years ago by a conservative government which is twenty years ahead in its thinking over its federal counterparts.

Third, the directive stated that metrication was to be applicable to all areas of the curriculum and that all measured quantities wherever appropriate were to be stated in metric units. This is a directive I received about seven or eight years ago.

Fourth, the units and symbols of the metric system taught in the schools conform to those of the international system of units known as System International, SI, something which the hon. member who introduced the bill a couple of weeks ago was knocking down, yet this was recommended by the Conservative government of Ontario.

Fifth, metric conversion should be accepted as an opportunity to reassess pedagogical approaches towards the topic of measurement as a whole, that students be provided with opportunities to acquire a practical experimental knowledge of metric units through activity that involves comparing, estimating, measuring and related problem-solving and that teachers and students be encouraged to design and construct appropriate measuring devices to be used in conjunction with selected commercial equipment.

Two weeks ago we heard from the opposite side that students should be given the choice whether they want to learn metric or the imperial system. I can see in my grade 7 class one student wanting to learn metric and another wanting to learn imperial. Is this what the opposition is proposing? Someone has to take leadership and it seems that this government has taken that leadership.

Sixth, metric changes in the curriculum should be co-ordinated with corresponding changes in industry and commerce. Educational authorities saw far enough ahead that they realized our educational training must be co-ordinated with industry and commerce, something that hon. members here cannot seem to see.

An hon. Member: Tell the truth.

Mr. Flis: If quoting from a government document sent to every school by the government of Ontario is not telling the truth, I do not know what is.

Seventh, metric conversion of learning materials in the schools be carried out on a pre-planned and gradual basis, with due consideration being given to the attrition, modification and replacement of materials, as well as to the availability of new learning materials.

This is the metrication policy of the Conservative government of Ontario whose goal was to convert all schools two years ago, and we are arguing about it today.

An article in the Toronto Star just the other day stated that the United States will be selling gasoline by the litre by 1981. Who provided leadership? It was provided by Canada. We now have litres in our gas pumps. A giant country like the United States of America is following our example. That is what leadership is all about.

The third point I wanted to make was the number of companies and sectors of the economy benefiting from metric conversion as it has been approached in Canada. Let me give one example. Intercomp Resource Development and Engineering Ltd., based in Calgary, Alberta, is one of a growing number of Canadian companies operating internationally in the metric system. This is why we are going metric. If I have a manufacturing plant in Canada, I must produce one item in the imperial system. If I want to export that item, I must manufacture it according to the metric system, double the cost. Where is the sense?

Since its formation in 1968, Intercomp has expanded its international operations and now has major offices in Houston, Texas, and The Hague, Netherlands. President R. C. McCullock estimates the value of projects requiring the use of SI units has exceeded $1 million annually and states the requirement for providing services and software in metric measurement is accelerating.

I could go on for a full half hour, but I understand there are other members who want to speak on this topic. I have emphasized the three points I wanted to make. The first was personal experience, second, where we are in education today, 20 years ahead of the thinking of some members opposite, and third, the number of companies in Canada, and I will not take the time to list all of them, which have already converted because they have to compete in the world market.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important issue to all Canadians. It affects us all whether we like it or not. We all have to deal with physical things and live in the real world. When we talk about what affects the way we measure and what is in the real world, it makes us realize that metrication has an effect on us all. There are a couple of points I want to make. Time is fast disappearing.

It has been a great mistake to talk about bringing in metrication. It was pointed out many times this afternoon and this evening that metric was made legal for purposes of trade in this country in 1871. Since that time we have had a dual system in this country in many respects.

As a cattleman, I have always talked about this. People in the medical business have always talked about cubic centimetres. That is a metric system of measure. We have always talked about kilowatts in terms of thousands or tens. When we sell our grain internationally we have people in the terminals that export the grains acting as arbitrators; employees of the Canadian Grains Commission. They are independent. They have always weighed our grain in metric measure. Therefore, what we have is a system of duality.

We are outlawing an imperial measuring system. That is very sad. It is almost like outlawing an old friend. It is a system of measure that has served this country extremely well. As was pointed out previously, we have a system of surveying, particularly in western Canada, second to none in the world. That system has served us very well.

I find it extremely sad that we should now be bringing in something by order in council, outlawing a system of measures and weights that has served us very well. This is extremely sad.

The hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) was castigating us for not being able to learn as quickly as his children, but I challenge the hon. member to go to a service station and tell us how much air he gets in his tires measured in kilopascals. Today I phoned the Metric Commission to ask what is a kilopascal. I would like to read it into the record. It is very interesting. A pascal is the pressure or stress which is produced when the force of one newton is applied to the area of one square metre.

I must confess when I heard the word "newton" I thought they said neuter. I am in the cattle business and neuter means a certain thing to me. I am sure there are a lot of people in this country who would like to see some of those people neutered who are pushing this metric business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: We go further. In answering the question "What is a pascal?" we end up having to ask the question, what is a newton? Well, a newton is defined as the force which, when applied to a body having a mass of one kilogram, gives the body an acceleration of one metre per second squared. When we talk about pounds per square inch we talk about weight and a system of area, which is pounds per square inch. But we are converting to kilopascals.

● (2140)

Look at the situation around the world. Most of the countries which have gone metric are using a system which involves millibars. It makes no sense to me that we should begin to talk about kilopascals. Back in February I went to an airport and talked to a man there who collects the data from the weather station. I asked him: Why kilopascals? He said: I really don't know. I read it in millibars and then convert to kilopascals. To my mind, that makes absolutely no sense. It seems to me that when we change we should change to something that makes sense. In this case, a kilopascal means nothing. I am sure the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park would have a difficult time reading back to me or remembering what I said when I defined a kilopascal. Whether our children are learning it or not is not the point. My children are learning it and are going to feel comfortable with it. But because they are learning it I see no reason why whole generations ahead of them should should immediately be forced to change to a system they are not comfortable with.

I listened to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) making the case about auction markets. There are people in my constituency who have stated categorically that if the metric system comes into the auction markets they will stop bidding.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Mayer: Hon. members over there may laugh but it is a serious business when decisions have to be made with split second timing involving, sometimes, thousands of dollars. It is no laughing matter; it is very serious and it affects the livelihoods of a large number of people in my constituency.

I should also like to talk briefly about the system of measuring temperatures. We are changing to degrees Celsius—in my area we say "senseless" and we say "so many degrees senseless" because that is about how much sense it makes to us. On this scale there are 100 degrees between boiling and freezing—100 gradations. On the Fahrenheit scale there are 180 degrees between boiling and freezing. I am in the vegetable business and when I store vegetables it is very important to have an accurate knowledge of the temperature at which those vegetables are kept. One degree "senseless" is almost two degrees Fahrenheit. I can stand a variation of one degree Fahrenheit but I cannot stand a one degree variation in terms of "senseless" because it could destroy a whole year's work. So in the process of conversion we have done some very foolish things and I urge hon. members opposite to consider some of the effects.

Even this afternoon, in committee, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was talking about 28 bushels per hectare. This made no sense at all because in western Canada we have been told we are going to keep the acres, so at least he could talk about acres. But he talks about bushels per hectare which is a cross, a hybrid idea—I could use a much more unpleasant word about it, but I won't.

An hon. Member: A duality.

Mr. Mayer: Exactly. They are both wrong. I turn to the lumber business. We cannot now buy shingles to fit a good many roofs whose shingles were installed just a few years ago. We are told we shall not be able to buy a standard door, a 2 foot 8 inch by 6 foot 8 inch door. If such a door works well on its hinges I do not see why one of a different size should be considered to work better. So in future, if a door wears out it will not be possible to buy a standard size door to replace it; you will have to box in the whole area of the doorway so as to make the new door fit.

A constituent of mine runs a small store. He told me a few weeks ago that he would have to spend $3,000 on a new refrigerator this year and that if, in addition, he is forced to spend another $3,000 on a new scale it will be very hard for him to stay in business in his small town. What really gripes him is that his old scale will be of no use whatsoever. He can only put it in his backyard to let the garbage truck run over it so that it is taken to the dump. I would very much like to go on—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt the debate and put forward every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings before the House in accordance with Standing Order 58(9).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion of Mr. Huntington, which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

It being 10.13 p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.13 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1938)

SUGGESTED AGENDA FOR THE MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS ON THE CONSTITUTION OTTAWA, JUNE 9, 1980

1. Review of developments since the Constitutional Conference of February, 1979.

2. Principles for a new Canadian Constitution.

3. The process for achieving a new constitution including:
(a) the subjects to be given priority consideration;
(b) the arrangements for federal-provincial meetings and other work over the coming months.

A STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES FOR A NEW CONSTITUTION

We, the people of Canada, proudly proclaim that we are and shall always be, with the help of God, a free and self-governing people.

Born of a meeting of the English and French presence on North American soil which had long been the home of our native peoples, and enriched by the contribution of millions of people from the four corners of the earth, we have chosen to create a life together which transcends the differences of blood relationships, language and religion, and willingly accept the experience of sharing our wealth and cultures, while respecting our diversity.

We have chosen to live together in one sovereign country, a true federation, conceived as a constitutional monarchy and founded on democratic principles.

Faithful to our history, and united by a common desire to give new life and strength to our federation, we are resolved to create together a new constitution which:

shall be conceived and adopted in Canada, shall reaffirm the official status of the French and English languages in Canada, and the diversity of cultures within Canadian society, shall enshrine our fundamental freedoms, our basic civil, human and language rights, including the right to be educated in one's language, French or English, where numbers warrant, and the rights of our native peoples, and shall define the authority of Parliament and of the legislative assemblies of our several provinces.

We further declare that our Parliament and provincial legislatures, our various governments and their agencies shall have no other purpose than to strive for the happiness and fulfilment of each and all of us.

PRIORITIES FOR NEW CANADIAN CONSTITUTION PROPOSED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA ON JUNE 9, 1980

The time has come for the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces to join together in the task of drafting a new Canadian Constitution.

As it enters upon that task, the Government of Canada is dedicated to a full review of all constitutional measures now applying to our federation.

The whole task constitutes a great enterprise and will take time to achieve. Not all of it can be accomplished at once, nor can we wait until all of it is done to demonstrate to the people of Canada that tangible progress is being made.

The Government of Canada believes, therefore, that intensive work should now begin on a list of items of particular priority to the people of Canada and to governments, with the understanding that some or all of these could well become the subject of early adoption as parts of the new Canadian Constitution.

The list of proposed items is this:

A statement of principles
A charter of rights, including language rights
A dedication to Sharing and/or to Equalization: the reduction of regional disparities
The patriation of the constitution
Resource ownership and interprovincial trade
Offshore resources
Fisheries
Powers affecting the economy
Communications, including broadcasting
Family law
A new Upper House, involving the provinces
The Supreme Court, for the people and for governments

The government also proposes that the leadership of the native peoples continue to be involved in the discussion of constitutional changes which directly affect the native peoples, in the context of the joint work on the item "Canada's Native Peoples and the Constitution". In addition, governments would pay special heed to representations from them on the items in the package set out above.

CALENDAR FOR FUTURE MEETINGS OF FIRST MINISTERS AND MINISTERS ON THE CONSTITUTION PROPOSED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

(a) June 17: An organizational meeting of ministers would be held in Ottawa or at some other convenient location. At that time a schedule for consideration of particular items during the summer months would be worked out and agreed upon.

(b) June 18 to July 6: Governments would prepare for intensive discussions.

(c) July 7 to July 25:* Federal and provincial ministers and officials would remain in session (except for weekends) for three weeks, and provision would be made to continue for an additional week if necessary.

(d) July 26 to August 24: Break in negotiations to allow governments to consider or reconsider positions and to prepare for further intensive discussions. The provincial premiers meet in Winnipeg on August 21 and 22.

(e) August 25 to August 29:* Federal and provincial ministers and officials meet again.

(f) August 30 to September 7: Governments consider positions and prepare for first ministers conference.

(g) September 8 to 12: An open conference of first ministers in Ottawa to finalize agreements arising out of work under way, and to put in train a further work program.

*The dates could be altered provided the length of time devoted to discussion remained the same.

BROADCASTING

SATELLITE TELEVISION SIGNALS—EQUAL PRIVILEGES THROUGHOUT CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of recent statements by the chairman of the CRTC, confirmed by the Minister of Communications, that the government will prosecute certain organizations and individuals for distributing television signals received from satellites, but that other groups need not be concerned about prosecution, and since this obvious double standard allows some Canadians the right to choose freely what they watch on television while denying that freedom to others, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the government be directed to prepare amendments to the Canadian Broadcasting Act which recognize the global realities of modern communications technology and which will eliminate the present double standard by extending equal rights and privileges to television viewers in all parts of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

VIOLATIONS IN TAIWAN AND SOUTH AFRICA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the arrest and detention overnight in South Africa last month of the Reverend Tom Anthony of the Anglican Church of Canada, and in view of the arrest, detention and trial in Taiwan of Dr. C. M. Kao, general secretary of the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan, and other church leaders, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand):

That this House express its concern at the violation of human rights in Taiwan and South Africa, condemn the oppressive system of apartheid in South Africa with all its abuses of human dignity, and express its hope for the fair treatment and release of Dr. Kao and the other church leaders in Taiwan.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

LANGUAGE TRAINING FOR HOUSE OF COMMONS EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion relating to an important and urgent matter.

[English]

In view of the fact that recent events have made it more necessary than ever that members of Parliament be able to deliver services in both languages from their offices to Canadians, I move, seconded by the Conservative House leader, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and, I hope, supported by members of the Liberal caucus:

That this House urges the committee on members' services to give positive consideration to making the language training presently available to members of Parliament available to the employees of members of Parliament.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT OPENING OF TUNA SEASON BE ANNOUNCED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that Prince Edward Island is fast becoming the tuna capital of the world, and because many of the tuna charter boat operators are now being flooded with inquiries from all over the world that they cannot answer because they do not know when the tuna season opens, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House instruct the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to immediately announce when the tuna season will be opened so that tuna charter boat operators will be able to accept reservations with some certainty.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

AGRICULTURE

PRIORITY IN ALLOCATION OF ENERGY SUPPLIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing importance under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas the federal government's Energy Supplies Allocation Board has recommended the removal of agriculture and, apparently, the essential transportation and processing requirements associated with the production of food from the high priority list it has held, whereas every Canadian and thousands of human beings in other parts of the world depend upon our food and animal production for survival, and whereas agriculture should never be relegated to a secondary position in any list of essential commodities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House urge the government to place agriculture at the top of the high priorities' list.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR CANADA

AIR FARES FOR DISABLED PERSONS AND THEIR ATTENDANTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that disabled persons confined to stretchers requiring the use of two aircraft seats are forced to pay double fare, plus an attendant's fare, when travelling by Air Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. McCauley):

That this House approves the principle that Air Canada tickets should be sold on the basis of one ticket for one person, and not on the number of seats necessary to transport that person and, where an attendant is warranted, the attendant should travel free or at a substantially reduced rate.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO GIVE LOCAL POLICE JURISDICTION OVER PROSTITUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since prostitution has reached crisis proportions in Vancouver's west end, degrading the quality of life for residents and encouraging many juveniles to believe that prostitution is a trendy activity, and since the courts have historically ruled that prostitution is a federal concern rather than a municipal one, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the Minister of Justice immediately instruct his officials to amend the Criminal Code to give local police the authority to deal fairly and firmly with the problem of prostitution.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ENVIRONMENT

PROTECTION FROM POLLUTION BY ACID RAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the federal government has done nothing to substantially lower the volume of acid rain falling every day in Canada, and in view of this inability to protect the environment from certain death, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House unanimously support a motion to reduce acid rain produced in Canada to a level where it does not endanger lakes, rivers, forests and agriculture; and that this House endorse the reduction of American acid rain by calling for the education of U.S. tourists through placement of billboards and leaflets at every border crossing, in co-ordination with advertising on major American networks the horrible impact that American pollution is having upon our environment.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF METRIC OVERVIEW BOARD REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and given the urgent and pressing interest on both sides of this House of Commons in the still unreleased report of the metric overview board, which thoroughly documents the state of metric conversion in Canada and Canadians' feelings on this subject, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That this House give unanimous consent to have the metric overview board report, much of the content of which has been extensively quoted in recent debates in the chamber, tabled for the benefit of the House of Commons and the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

JET AIR SERVICE FOR WESTERN MANITOBA AND EASTERN SASKATCHEWAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan areas have been waiting many years for jet air service. The main runway at the Brandon airport was lengthened and strengthened in the sixties and a new terminal built in the seventies in anticipation of this service. Now that PWA has applied to provide this service, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) stated in a speech in Winnipeg on May 28 that improvement of transportation in western Canada was one of his top priorities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That the Minister of Transport use his good offices in urging an early decision by the Air Transport Committee on the PWA application to provide east and west jet service to the 180,000 people living in western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

WILDLIFE

PROTECTION OF POLAR BEARS—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PROHIBIT SPORT HUNTING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Since the Canadian government is currently increasing the quota of polar bears that can be killed for sport by hunters, considering that Canada is the only country that still allows sport hunting of this potentially endangered species, and because the Soviet Union and Norway have banned hunting of these animals, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That this government show compassion and concern in protecting these animals, because of their small numbers and the important symbolic role they play in representing Canada's north, and immediately introduce legislation to ban sport hunting of polar bears in Canada's north.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

COMPENSATION FOR FARMERS DUE TO EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport a question in his responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board.

I am sure the minister is aware of the severe drop in price received by farmers since the embargo placed on shipments to the U.S.S.R. by the previous government, and continued by this government, because of the unconscionable attack by the U.S.S.R. on Afghanistan. Can the minister explain to me, other members of this House and the farmers of western Canada the plans he has to compensate them for this loss of income?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am quite aware of the fact that following the U.S.S.R. aggression in Afghanistan, the Canadian government at the time took action to restrain Canadian exports. With respect to the degree of compensation that this might justify, which is an acceptable principle inasmuch as reduction in export and price can be directly related to the restraint of export to the Soviet Union, this is constantly being assessed by the government.

It is too early now, because there is still a month and a half to go before the end of the season, to find out exactly what the effect of the government's action has been. However, as I said, this is constantly being monitored. There will be a cabinet paper in a few weeks, at the end of the grain season.

Mr. McKnight: In light of the minister's acceptance of the principle of compensating farmers in western Canada, and in light of his policy and the policy of the previous government to monitor continually the change in price, I am sure the minister realizes that since January the farmers of western Canada have suffered a reduction of approximately 75 cents per bushel for their grain. Can the minister tell me how many reports he, his assistant in the other place, or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have received to date?

Mr. Pepin: On what, may I ask?

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the minister a statement made on January 9 by his assistant in the other place, who said that farmers must be compensated for their loss of income and a monitoring policy must be set up to arrive at that figure.

Can the minister tell me, the members of this House and the farmers of western Canada whether anyone has monitored this situation? Has his department, or the Department of Agriculture, monitored it? If they have not monitored it, why have they not answered questions put to them, in light of the 75-cent reduction per bushel of grain for farmers of western Canada?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, the monitoring system is obviously a collective action. This is done through the grains group, which is a unit that belongs to Agriculture, Transport, and Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is being done there. Before coming to a conclusion, obviously all the facts must be put together. As I said a moment ago, it is too early now, because sales may be made to countries other than the U.S.S.R. in the coming month and a half, to come to that conclusion.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister on the same topic. The fact is that prices have dropped approximately 75 cents a bushel since January 4, when the embargo was put in place. That is a fact; it does not need to be monitored.

In these circumstances, why was the Canadian Wheat Board not represented at a meeting in Brussels on May 19 to discuss the subject, among many others, of the embargo which was placed on shipments of grain following the invasion of Afghanistan? Seventy-five cents a bushel has been lost. Is this not a sufficient basis upon which the government could go ahead with a policy of ensuring that the farmers of western Canada do not carry the full price-tag for Canada's foreign policy?

Mr. Pepin: This decision was made by the previous government and it is supported by the present government; there is no doubt about that. Obviously, the previous government knew that the decision made last January would have certain effects on volumes and on prices. That is why they put forward the idea of compensation.

Mr. Clark: What about Brussels?

Mr. Pepin: Thank you very much. I will deal with these points one after another. I thank the Leader of the Opposition for his advice. On this subject, there was a meeting of exporters in Brussels in May and the Canadian government was represented there by the head of the Grains Group, which is not abnormal in these instances.

Mr. Mayer: I am concerned because the Canadian Wheat Board should have been at that meeting in Brussels, not necessarily a government official. Perhaps I should turn to the Minister of Agriculture, since the responses we have had from the Minister of Transport in relation to his responsibilities in this House on behalf of the Canadian Wheat Board have been totally inadequate.

In the light of a Statistics Canada report today showing that farm income fell drastically in the month of April, can the hon. gentleman take it upon himself to see that this 75 cents a bushel which has been lost by western grain producers will be forthcoming to them, in line with the policy now adhered to as a result of the statement by the Minister of Transport?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I, too, am waiting for the paper to which the Minister of Transport referred.

AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION TO BE PAID

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In light of the commitment he has made to the Canadian grain growers that they will be compensated for losses due to the embargo, and since the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has estimated these losses at 700,000 tonnes, and bearing in mind that the pre-embargo price was $233 a tonne, is the Prime Minister prepared to give the House the assurance that 100 per cent compensation will be made to the farmer, involving an amount of approximately $163 million?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It would seem that this question is directly linked to the answers given by the minister who replied to the earlier questions. We shall have to wait to see what the facts are, what has caused lower prices, and what the volume is, before reaching a final conclusion as to amounts.

Mr. Hovdebo: A further question to the Prime Minister. In the last few days, the ministry of fitness and amateur sport has indicated it would give $1.5 million to assist Olympic athletes. In order to establish some kind of fairness, would the Prime Minister indicate whether he will get from the cabinet a commitment that the farmer will not be the only person to carry the ball for the foreign policy of Canada?

• (1425)

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am not sure I see the connection between the two questions. The government has had an ongoing policy of assisting athletes in Canada, particularly in the area of amateur sports. Of course, we will continue to do that no matter what happens in Moscow. In the same way, we have assisted western grain farmers in many ways over the years and we will continue to do so.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, I have a further question for the Prime Minister. I have here an article which states—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member just ask his question very simply.

Mr. Hovdebo: The minister has stated that $1.5 million was given due to the inability of those people to go to Moscow. On the basis of that, would the Prime Minister give us some indication of whether he agrees that in fairness we should give the same kind of assistance to farmers?

An hon. Member: Why should he sell their wheat?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the commitment is there to both groups. As the minister pointed out, we are waiting to ascertain the facts before determining quantum.

Oral Questions

EMBARGO ON GRAIN SHIPMENTS TO U.S.S.R.—INTENTIONS FOR NEXT CROP YEAR

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Transport who answers for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. There is one other dimension to this whole question that has not yet been raised today; that is, the whole question of whether Canada is prepared to continue the embargo that we entered into at the first of the year.

The minister may know there is concern at the present time by farm groups in western Canada that maybe they have not been treated as fairly as they could have been. With excess capacity developing in the transportation system, if we do continue the embargo into the next crop year we could, in effect, find ourselves out of sales we might have been able to make if we had not followed this line. Has the government given any consideration to what it intends to do after the end of this crop year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Very much, Madam Speaker, because obviously we have to decide now if we are going to continue the restraint action in the next crop year. Nobody likes the restraint situation we are in now; everybody would love to sell a lot more. But the decision of January last was made because of political circumstances; that is, the invasion of Afghanistan.

Obviously, the great eagerness of everybody related to this industry to export more and more, to the Soviet Union in particular, must be assessed in the light of political events that took place originally to justify the restraint period. That is going on now in the cabinet, and before the end of the crop year, presumably, a decision will be made as to whether the restraint period should continue.

Mr. Murta: Madam Speaker, is the minister saying to the House that the government, through the cabinet, is not prepared to, or will not make any changes in policy when the new crop year arrives after July 31? Is the decision to continue well into 1980, and possibly 1981?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, my understanding is that the restraint period was for the duration of this crop year. As we will be confronted with a new crop year on August 1, presumably a decision will have to be made on whether the restraint period should continue into the new crop year: it is elementary.

ENERGY

OPEC DISCUSSIONS—AVAILABILITY OF FOREIGN OIL

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It relates to the OPEC talks of this week, reports of which are somewhat confusing; but it does appear clear that there will be a cutback in production this year by OPEC countries.

Given the unhappy fact that Canadians, particularly those in eastern Canada, will be even more reliant this year on foreign oil, is the minister able to inform the House whether the OPEC cutbacks in production will adversely affect the availability of foreign oil upon which that part of the country is so reliant?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I noted the comments of the hon. member at the beginning of his question when he said that the reports appear to be rather confusing. I would suggest that we wait for formal communication of the official conclusions of this session to find out what the real conclusions of the meetings have been. As the hon. member knows, there are various reports coming from various countries, and it is rather hard to assess whether there has been any agreement or anything of substance so far as prices or supply are concerned.

So far as supply is concerned, I again remind the House that we have in this country not only a one-price policy, but also a policy of ensuring supply to all parts of Canada. Our policy is to the effect that no area of this country, whether it be Atlantic Canada or anywhere else, would be put at a disadvantage as compared to any other part of this country, whether in terms of price or in terms of supply.

Mr. Jarvis: I appreciate the minister's comments about supply, because I was going to ask him the following question in any event. Given the probability of cutbacks on the one hand and, on the other hand, increased Canadian consumption and reliance on foreign oil—both of which factors would operate to trigger the provisions of the Energy Supplies Emergency Act—and given the speculation which was evidenced earlier in the question period today about priorities being considered by the allocation board under that act, would the minister take the opportunity this week or next, by way of either a statement on motions or the tabling of documents, to indicate to the House succinctly and clearly the principles and guidelines which govern the board members' deliberations in determining the priority of energy allocation supplies?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I have heard representations about the priorities accorded to various sectors by the Energy Supplies Allocation Board. I want again to remind the House and the country that the government has not yet received those recommendations from the board. They are, at best, the conclusions of that board and those conclusions have been finally reached. I understand that the draft regulations are still not completed. Before being approved by the government, they would first have to be received and then we will certainly give them very, very careful consideration. I want to reassure—particularly the farming sector—that if the reports we have are to the effect that agriculture would be given a lower than first or top priority, it would be definitely a matter that this government would want to consider very carefully, bearing in mind the great importance of the farming sector to the whole Canadian economy.

INDUSTRY

LAY-OFFS IN STEEL INDUSTRY—DISCUSSIONS WITH COMPANIES ON IMPORTATION OF ORE FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning the massive lay-offs which have occurred in the steel industry. Could the minister tell the House, since my colleague from Churchill asked him questions on this issue on May 12, whether he has had the opportunity to contact again the executives of the Canadian steel industry about the fact that 45 per cent of the iron ore comes from the United States and not from Canadian mines?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, through my officers I have contacted the executives of these companies. We are trying to set up a meeting with them in which I will personally take part with the support of the Minister of State for Mines, and I will try to find a solution to what is a crucial problem for the workers in this important sector.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Given the fact that there is talk of not only lay-offs in Quebec but also of closing four iron mines in northern Ontario, could the minister tell the House whether the policy of the Government of Canada should not be to make the Canadian steel industry use Canadian instead of American resources, especially now when unemployment in the Canadian industry is so high?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, the government's policy is still to make use of our natural resources in this country. We received the support of a majority of Canadians for this specific reason, namely, our commitments concerning that important national policy.

ENERGY

OIL—APPLICABILITY OF BLENDED PRICE TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my questions are supplementary to those put by my colleague, the hon. member for Perth, to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. While there might be confusing reports coming out of the OPEC meeting—we might all agree on that—we would also agree that there is one certainty, that is, that the price of oil will not go down, regardless of any confusion in the reports and in today's papers. Since that is pretty well the consensus, I should like to ask the minister this question as he searches for a blended price like the knights of old searched for the Holy Grail.

The minister tells Atlantic producers and consumers that there will be no oil import subsidy. Can he tell the House that, with his blended price, the consumer in eastern Canada would not have to bear by himself or herself the increases that are bound to come out of any OPEC meeting; or will the government get away from the noxious notion of a blended price which would unfairly discriminate against all of us who live in eastern Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member gives me the opportunity once more to clarify the misunderstanding that might still exist in his mind on this particular issue. This allows me to reassure the people in Atlantic Canada, as I am sure he will when he realizes it, that under any arrangement at which we arrive we will continue in this country our one-price policy for oil.

It is a complete misreading and a complete misinterpretation of the facts to pretend that the people in Atlantic Canada will be in any way, shape or form discriminated against as compared with people in the rest of Canada. People in Atlantic Canada will receive from this government exactly the same fair treatment that all Canadian consumers will receive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, are we to understand then from the minister's reply that a blended price, if it ever comes, will not bash those in Atlantic Canada, primarily those from the provinces of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia who need oil for electrical generation? Unless there is an oil import subsidy, the electrical rates of people in those two provinces could very well be double those they pay today? Can we be reassured that the oil import subsidy, regardless of anything else the minister does with the blended price, will continue so far as consumers in Atlantic Canada are concerned?

Mr. Lalonde: Again I think the hon. member is confusing many issues in this question. What is clear is that there will be a single price for oil in this country. We will continue this policy, and the people in Atlantic Canada will not be put at a disadvantage compared to people in the rest of Canada. Now the hon. member wants to go further, and asks whether there will be some kind of special support for the people of Atlantic Canada—for instance, with regard to oil-generated electricity.

I have already indicated to my provincial colleagues that I have this question very much in mind. In the discussions that I am having with the producing provinces, I hope to arrive at a resolution where the federal government will end up with sufficient funds to take care of situations like this. I have indicated that to my provincial colleagues.

COST OF ELECTRICITY IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If we understood him correctly, he will not mind rising in his place and giving Atlantic Canadians the assurance that the cost of domestic electricity in that part of this country will not get any further out of line than it is today.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Out of line with what, Madam Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I find it appalling that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not aware—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order please. The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan.

FINANCE

CONTRIBUTION OF CHARTERED BANKS TO GENERAL REVENUE OF CANADA

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Finance. Is the minister aware of the fact that under previous legislation the chartered banks of Canada contribute an amount to the general revenue of Canada equivalent to the cost of operating the office of the inspector general of banks, and that this situation creates at least a potential—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McRae: I have already asked the question.

An hon. Member: Then sit down.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McRae: I have asked my question.

Madam Speaker: Would the hon. member ask his question now.

Mr. McRae: Madam Speaker, I would ask the minister if he is aware of this. Also, is he prepared to introduce amendments to prevent this potential conflict of interest?

An hon. Member: Did you go to caucus this morning?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, of course I am aware of that situation. The hon. member must know, as all his colleagues do, the great objectivity of the inspector general of banks and the interest he has always demonstrated for all Canadians. This situation raises no problem at all as far as I am concerned.

AIR TRANSPORT

RESERVE FUEL CARRIED BY AIR CANADA AND CP AIR—SAFETY CONSIDERATIONS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. When permission was first granted to lower fuel reserves required by Air Canada and CP Air in the early 1970s, it was specifically intended to be on a trip basis, taking into consideration en route weather, terminal weather, runways, etc.

Will the minister indicate whether his department in fact has approved blanket safety reductions in the past few years, and will he ensure that those original safeguards are being enforced?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, do these safeguards concern the carrying of fuel in airplanes?

Mr. Ellis: Yes.

Mr. Pepin: If that is the question, indeed there is a situation in which Air Canada and CP Air are privileged in the sense that they have to carry only 30 minutes more fuel than the fuel needed to go from the point of departure to the point of arrival, as opposed to other companies which have to carry enough fuel to fly from the point of arrival to a subsidiary point. So there is a difference. The situation was justified until now.

Mr. Crosbie: There is no fuel like an old fuel.

Mr. Pepin: The department is now conducting an inquiry among air controllers to find out how many instances there have been of the kind reported in the papers a day or two ago. So the department is going to find out if this is a recurring event; and, if so, they will act accordingly.

Mr. Ellis: Madam Speaker, I have a brief supplementary question. I would not advocate that the 30-minute reserve be taken away from Air Canada and CP Air but, rather, that it be enforced.

Mr. Crosbie: Increased.

Mr. Ellis: It should be left in such a way that there is no question in anyone's mind that they are perhaps shaving those 30 minutes. Since it is so important, would the minister perhaps in the very near future make a statement on motions concerning the enforcement of this 30-minute reserve?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Madam Speaker. But I said at the end of my answer that this is exactly what will be done. The officials will find out to what extent the regulation is being observed, and how many instances of the same situation have taken place, that is, when an airplane, because of a limited fuel reserve, had to get priority status to land at a certain airport. This will be reported and I will make a little sign to my friend when I have the report so that he can ask me another intelligent question as he has today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT—IMPLEMENTATION OF BRANDT REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister the reason for his visit to certain European countries following the Venice Summit. I think his visits to the Vatican and England are self-explanatory, but I refer specifically to his visits to Sweden and Norway.

Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to discuss with Scandinavian leaders the north-south international development question, particularly the report of the Brandt commission, which indicated specifically that the future of mankind is hanging upon resolution of the international development question, and the principal recommendation in the report of the Brandt commission that there be a world summit of north-south leaders of about 25 in number?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I expect that subject will be among those discussed with the prime ministers of Sweden and Norway. Of course, there will be many other reasons for the visit. In the case of Norway, we will be discussing certain subjects relating to NATO. In the case of Sweden, I will be returning an official visit made here by the Swedish prime minister some years ago.

An hon. Member: To discuss neutrality.

Mr. Trudeau: As the hon. member said, in the cases of London and Rome, in a sense the visits speak for themselves.

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, in his discussions with the world leaders whom the Prime Minister will be seeing, will he discuss the four emergency provisions set out in the report of the Brandt commission dealing with resource transfers, an international energy strategy, expanded food production, and a broadening of international financial institutions?

Will those four emergency provisions set out by the Brandt commission form the basis of the Canadian position to be taken and advanced at the special session of the United Nations on development to be held in August?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I commend the hon. member on his interest in this matter. I can assure him that it is shared by the government. Apart from the occasion of the summit in Venice where the north-south subject will be very high on the agenda, and the other bilateral visits I mentioned, I would inform the member—because of his interest—that there have been other approaches made relative to the Brandt commission. For instance, the subject was discussed at some length, first in correspondance and then in the bilateral meeting we had with the President of Mexico.

We have been looking at the proposal of the Brandt commission for a mini-summit and possible dates in Venice for that summit. Canada has been asked to indicate tentatively if it would be prepared to participate. The government is very interested in this subject. Either the foreign minister or myself would welcome any occasion to exchange ideas with the hon. member or any other member of the House who would wish to do so.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROVISIONS RESPECTING IMPORTATION OF MARIJUANA—GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION OF PENALTY UPON CONVICTION

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development. Last week, the former Ontario ombudsman and a former Conservative member of this House, the Hon. Arthur Maloney, raised a question about the penalty that is imposed upon, particularly, young people for illegal importation of marijuana into this country—a minimum sentence of seven years.

• (1450)

I am wondering if the minister is considering looking at this particular section—not with regard to hard drugs, of course, but with regard to marijuana—to determine if the penalty might be left to the discretion of the courts.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, we are looking into the matter at this time. We indicated in the Speech from the Throne that we would be making some changes in this area. I hope to do so in a few weeks from now.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INTENTION TO ABANDON TRACK IN NOVA SCOTIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Transport. It is with regard to the announced intention of Canadian National Railways to abandon about 55 miles of track in the Oxford subdivision of Nova Scotia. The minister will recall that I wrote him on this matter on May 26, outlining the adverse economic effects of this proposed abandonment.

Will the minister now say for the record that he supports the retention of this Canadian National Railways' line system, without prejudice necessarily to whatever the CTC hearings may disclose?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if I were to do as the hon. member suggests, one would be questioning the usefulness of the CTC.

Mr. Crosbie: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: It seems to me that the CTC is there to investigate such situations and make decisions thereon. Then, under sections 25 and 64 of the transportation act, the minister or the government can change these decisions or leave them alone.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, does the minister not perceive that this is symptomatic of the mindless support that the succession of Liberal transport ministers have given to the CN, which has allowed these railways to deteriorate to the point where, for example, the line to which I have referred can only be used in some sections by trains travelling at five miles per hour?

Will the minister not use the authority of his office, without prejudice to the CTC, to investigate this matter to determine what can be done under these conditions and under conditions on other railway lines which have been allowed to deteriorate to this deplorable state?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, it is a question of different points of view. Mine is that this support is indicative of the respect this government has for regulatory institutions in Canada.

Mr. Clark: You certainly do!

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

DATE LEGISLATION WILL BE INTRODUCED

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State having to do with the freedom of information legislation which was mentioned prominently in the Speech from the Throne.

Would the Secretary of State report on the progress of that legislation which is within his responsibility, where it stands at the moment, and whether we are likely to have introduced in the House, at least before the summer adjournement, a freedom of information bill?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the hon. gentleman and inform him that we have taken a very hard look at the bill which he introduced when he was the government House leader. We have had an opportunity to examine many letters of criticism—I do not mean that necessarily in a negative sense—which were brought to my attention following the tabling of that bill by the hon. member.

I have also had the opportunity to review many of the comments made by provincial governments. I have requested the provincial governments to forward to me any other comments they wish to bring to my attention before we finalize the bill. In the meantime, I expect to place a position paper before my colleagues within a week or so.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do not want to ask the minister to tell tales out of school, but could he inform the House whether he or the government have settled upon whether in principle the government supports the position of an independent judicial review? Could the minister indicate to the House today whether that is the case? It would make me completely happy if he were to answer in the positive.

Mr. Fox: Madam Speaker, perhaps I should get back to an initial statement and recall to the hon. member that the government made a commitment to introduce freedom of information legislation in the Speech from the Throne. We intend to introduce that legislation before the adjournment of this session if at all possible. We are, indeed, committed to the notion or concept of an independent review of decisions made concerning access to information.

FISHERIES

CLOSING OF FRASER RIVER, B.C., FISHERY—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SEASON

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or to the member responding for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It has to do with the west coast fishery.

In view of the early closing of the Fraser River this year, which has meant that the Fraser gillnetters have had only six fishing Mondays, compared to 17 last year, and that there is great hardship resulting from this situation, could the minister tell us whether the requested two subsequent Monday openings have been considered by the Department of Fisheries, and whether they are ready to make a response to this request?

I do not think it is fair that the gillnet fishermen should be required to bear the brunt of the conservation measures. I believe the sport fishery and the trawl fishery should also share that burden.

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the reason the fishery was closed in the first place is that we wanted as much as possible to conserve the salmons stocks of British Columbia. I am not aware of such a request being made to the minister. I will bring the hon. member's question to his attention and have an answer for the hon. member as soon as possible.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, there is a certain urgency about this matter because there is the possibility that the outrage and anger resulting from this hardship may cause some fishermen to defy the law.

Would the parliamentary secretary also convey to the minister the need for some kind of compensation for these fishermen who are facing such great economic hardship, along the lines of the Atlantic salmon compensation which was offered to the Atlantic salmon fishermen? It is very foolish for the government to expect one small fishery to bear the brunt of the economic hardship and the responsibility for conservation, when the government has done very little about habitat destruction and overfishing often by foreign fleets.

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, I will bring the question of the hon. member to the minister's attention.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO ATLANTIC COAST—IMPORTANCE TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the confusion arising out of the meeting of the OPEC oil ministers, and the uncertainty which it raises in the minds of eastern Canadians, would the minister take this opportunity to impress upon the premier and government of New Brunswick the necessity of proceeding with a gas pipeline to the Atlantic coast and try to overcome their objections, which may be less with regard to the environment than with their mismanagement of the Pointe Lepreau nuclear project?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I take note of the representations made by the hon. member. I would like to point out to him that the extension of the gas pipeline to the Atlantic coast is a matter which the government views with keen interest. As for the position of New Brunswick, I have already spoken with the minister of energy of that province and I hope I can discuss this question with him again in the near future. I want to assure my hon. colleague that his views will be brought to the attention of the government of New Brunswick.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

INQUIRY RESPECTING NUCLEAR POLICY—REQUEST FOR TABLING TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A few days ago, the Prime Minister indicated that the minister would be conducting an internal inquiry with respect to Canada's nuclear policy. Would the minister table in the House of Commons at an early date the terms of reference of this inquiry?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as was pointed out by the Prime Minister, we are now reviewing the nuclear policy of our country. I will be pleased to give further details on our review policies to the hon. member. But we did not set up any formal task force with specific terms of reference. If the hon. member wants to have further details, I will be pleased to give him some.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, in light of the fact that the Prime Minister in his statement in the House made a commitment that there would be an opportunity for public input, could the minister enlighten the House as to the plans being made on how people can make representations to the department and obtain information with respect to this inquiry, so there will be no question that the people of Canada who are interested in this topic will be deprived of that right?

● (1500)

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for his second question which is somewhat clearer. Surely there will be an opportunity for public input. A number of documents are now being drafted. They should be made public as soon as they are completed. They deal with a series of nuclear industry-related issues. When they are made public, I think interest groups will be able to make representations. The best forum will have to be set up to make possible truly well structured and organized exchanges between the government and the people who are very much interested in the topic.

LOTTERIES

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS ON REINSTATEMENT

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. A little over two months ago, his colleague the minister responsible for amateur sports indicated the government's intention to reconsider the possibility of lotteries. The Prime Minister already confirmed this intention when he replied to a question. In view of the good will which the Prime Minister has demonstrated recently toward a serious reassessment or division of powers with the provinces, and in view of the fact that the provinces have exercised this power for a year already, could the Prime Minister indicate to the house today whether he has abandoned his plan to recuperate this lottery?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the minister, I could not say anything more to the hon. member. I know that the minister meant to seek the advice of a number of provincial ministers concerning this, but I have not yet been made aware of his findings.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER HAS SOUGHT LEGAL ADVICE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that it has even been stated in Quebec City that a decision of the federal government could be considered as a breach of contract, has the Prime Minister considered getting a legal opinion or asked the Minister of Justice to obtain such expertise, if not will he do so and will he make it public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not know if the minister has effectively asked that such a review be made. I would only remind the member for Joliette that a contract had been signed between Mrs. Campagnolo, the then minister responsible for lotteries, and the ten provinces. That contract was amended. Will the ministers also agree to change this one?

FINANCE

DEBATE ON APRIL ECONOMIC STATEMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, but in his absence I direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. We remember that infamous day in April, when the Minister of Finance tabled a document which we on this side declared to be a budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fretz: The Prime Minister has walked out, Madam Speaker, while I am directing a question to him. I wonder if someone on that side of the House would answer this question. Is the Prime Minister, or whoever will answer in his place, aware of a symposium being held in Ottawa this week entitled "A Review of the Spring, 1980, Budget" which will be addressed by three highly-placed government tax officials and the minister's parliamentary secretary? The appearance of these august persons gives further credence to our belief that the April document was, indeed, a budget.

Some hon. Members: Question.

An hon. Member: It is past three o'clock.

Mr. Fretz: In light of these facts my question is, will the Prime Minister allow the House to have the budget debate which has been so long denied and delayed?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that the hon. member has made many assumptions to draw a conclusion which has long since proved to be false. The speech made by the Minister of Finance during the throne speech debate allowed him to table a ways and means motion providing for the disposal of various measures which had been on the table for a long time but had nothing to do with a budget speech.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKENZIE—ENGINE FAILURES ON AIR CANADA AIRCRAFT—ANSWER OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege regarding the answers that the Minister of Transport provided to the House yesterday to my questions about the 747 Air Canada aircraft that experienced engine failure last Saturday. From all news reports and all the information I have received, it appears that three engines failed and not two, as the minister stated yesterday. I wonder if the Minister of Transport could clarify that for the House.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the mistake is mine. I made it because of something I had heard to the effect that it was two engines. I apologize: it was three engines.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NYSTROM—S.O. 43 MOTION REGARDING LANGUAGE TRAINING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my point of order arises from the motion under Standing Order 43 which I presented to the House today. I hesitate to raise it because I do trust Your Honour's judgment on this but I have had a chance to check with a number of members on both sides of the House and I have not been able to discern whether somebody actually did say no to that motion. I am speaking of the motion under Standing Order 43 which referred to extending language training to employees as well as members of the House. I wonder if Your Honour would consider putting the question again because a number of us have been unable to discover who said no.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may want to bring back his motion under Standing Order 43 on another day, but it was clear to me today that someone in this House shouted no. Therefore, I knew that could not have the unanimous consent of the House to put the motion.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FRETZ—REQUEST FOR RESPONSE TO QUESTION AND APOLOGY FROM PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A few minutes ago we saw a display in this House by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I realize I am new in this House, having been here only one year, but I believe new members look up to and respect those members who have been here for a number of years, such as the right hon. Prime Minister. For the Prime Minister to walk out on any member when a question is being posed is to me the height of irresponsibility and arrogance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: Therefore, Madam Speaker, I want it recorded that I have raised this question of privilege. I believe that the right hon. Prime Minister should get back to me with a response and an apology.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am informed that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who usually answers exhaustively and politely to all questions put to him, had an urgent appointment. It was after three o'clock when the hon. member asked his question and the hon. member himself specified that his question was directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). As the Minister of Finance was absent, he wanted to direct it to the Prime Minister. However, as the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) is here, he gave him a complete and exhaustive answer. I think that the hon. member is absolutely ill-advised to complain about the Prime Minister's attitude who, once again, Madam Speaker, had to leave the House because of a very important appointment he had at three o'clock, which means after the oral question period.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): On that question of privilege, Madam Speaker, it should be clear to the House of Commons and certainly to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that it is Madam Speaker and not the Prime Minister or any other minister, no matter how full of self-importance he may be, who decides when this question period is over.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The question period is not over until Madam Speaker decides it is over. That is a long-established practice in this House of Commons.

What my colleague the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) has outlined is that there has been a practice generally of courtesy and respect for the rights of private members of Parliament and particularly, perhaps, for the rights of members who have come relatively recently to this House.

The Prime Minister has often spoken of his desire to have this House function effectively. Madam Speaker, he is going to have to prove that desire by his actions. He does not prove a desire to have the House of Commons function effectively when he walks out on a member of Parliament who is posing a question to him which is important to that member of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): On the same question of privilege, Madam Speaker, I notice that the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), not having risen on a question during this question period, has found this excuse to raise this red herring.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in the House from two o'clock to three o'clock, when he had an urgent appointment. The question was raised by a private member and it was answered by a minister of the Crown who has responsibility for the Department of Finance. Everything was done according to the rules and with full propriety. I submit that the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition are completely objectionable.

• (1510)

Madam Speaker: Before I hear the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) on another question of privilege, I will rule on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) who, of course, knows that this is not a question of privilege but merely a grievance that he has expressed. He is entitled to have grievances about the manner in which questions are answered in this House, but the Chair has no authority, of course, to determine the quality of the answers or whether the question should be answered or not. The question was asked.

May I remind the member that no minister is obligated to answer a question if he does not feel that he wants to answer it. In this case, however, no one has been prevented from functioning, because an answer has been given to the member's question by someone who is responsible and entitled to answer questions on this particular subject. Perhaps the member is not satisfied with the answer, but that is an entirely different matter. He might not be happy about it, but, of course, that does not constitute a question of privilege.

MR. McRAE—RIGHT OF GOVERNMENT MEMBERS TO ASK QUESTIONS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege has to do with the rights of members on this side of the House to ask questions during question period. I was seen by you, Madam Speaker, and rose to ask a question. I got the impression from the noise that occurred that there was some question whether members on this side should be allowed to ask questions of the minister. I would like to deal with this point.

I feel that I have the same privileges as every other member to ask a question no matter whether I am on this side or on that side of the House. I make it a point of asking questions directly on which I have not primed the minister. In fact, the minister's answer was not one that I liked and I intend to pursue this particular matter further. But I got the distinct impression that this was the reason for the noise and it was very difficult for me to ask the question.

I also want to make it very plain that I distinctly said: "I want to ask the minister if he is aware of—"and that, in my opinion, is a question. I believe that once in a while some members on this side should stand up and say that we on this side have every right to ask questions in the same way as members opposite.

Madam Speaker: I do not disagree with the hon. member. He does have a right, and that right was recognized today. The hon. member did have a chance to ask a question today. However, I did call the House to order when some of the members were a bit noisy in order to give the hon. member a chance to ask his question and be heard by the minister and by other members. Therefore, I do not feel that his privileges have in any way been breached.

I cannot hear the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on that same question of privilege because I have already ruled on it.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that the very first question I asked in this House of Commons was asked on the second or third day of sitting. The preamble to the question was too long and the catcalls were very loud from the other side of the House.

I would like to tell the hon. gentleman who raised the last point that following my experience I discussed the matter with a parliamentarian who had been here a number of years. It was pointed out to me that my questions should be short and to the point, and that if they were I would not get catcalls. I follow that practice now and I have not had any catcalls since.

Madam Speaker: I do agree with the hon. member that members from both sides of the House should be allowed to ask all of their questions and to have silence and the attention of the House while asking questions. When there is too much noise, I try to call order but it is impossible for me to remember whether the catcalls were more important on the third day of this session than they were today. I do not know if I have been absolutely fair in calling order now if I did not when the hon. member was subjected to catcalls. I try to judge the situation and play it by ear. I hope I did not prevent the member from asking a question on that day.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, you were eminently fair.

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk Assistant of the House has laid upon the Table the ninth report of the Clerk of Petitions, stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

[English]

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I too have the honour to present to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled a petition pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67, which in brief prays that the system of weights and measures known as the imperial system shall always be legal and acceptable in Canada regardless of any other system that may happen to be used.

The petition attached bears the signatures of 4,875 electors and was sent to me in my capacity as member of Parliament for Moose Jaw for transmittal to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. If the petition is found to be in order, Madam Speaker, I pray it will be referred to an appropriate committee of the House of Commons.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA

Question No. 43—Mr. Cossitt:

1. During the past 10 years, were objects of art purchased by the National Art Gallery subsequently found to be fraudulent, imitations, reproductions, etc. and, if so, in each case (a) what was the type of object and the date of purchase (b) what was its cost (c) who was the artist (d) who authorized and certified that the art was genuine?

2. Was the cost of such objects recovered and, if so, what was the amount?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Museums as follows:

1. To the best of its knowledge, the National Gallery of Canada has not acquired any objects of art during the past ten years which have subsequently been found to be fraudulent, imitations, reproductions etc.

2. Not applicable.

CANADA COUNCIL GRANTS

Question No. 57—Mr. Cossitt:

Were grants made by the Canada Council prior to May 22, 1979, termed publicly by certain persons as "peculiar" and, if so, does the government plan to (a) review criteria for Canada Council grants (b) make changes in the methods of making such grants (c) introduce legislation or any other regulations requiring grants to be given on a different judgement basis?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): The Canada Council has no record of the type of grants described in the question.

The Canada Council has been established by an act of Parliament in 1957 to promote and assist a very diversified arts community. The government does not intervene in the grant-making decisions of the council which relate to its specific mandate under the Canada Council Act.

AIR CANADA

Question No. 194—Mr. Herbert:

1. For each fiscal year (a) 1977 (b) 1978, what was the total revenue and net earnings or deficits for Air Canada?

2. For each year, what was the total (a) of direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits conferred by the government on the corporation (b) of loans, advances or guarantees extended by the government to the corporation (c) investment by the government in the corporation both before and after any write-off?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows:

1.		1977	1978
		($ Millions)
	(a) Total revenues	1187.7	1322.6
	(b) Net earnings	20.0	47.5

2. (a) Air Canada received no direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits from the government in either year.

(b) No new guarantees were provided by the government in either 1977 or 1978.

In 1977, $17 million in 8.1 per cent-8.8 per cent notes maturing in 1981 were provided to the airline related to the Winnipeg Line Maintenance Hangar contract.

(c) Details of the government's investment in the airline during 1978 are best displayed in the company's 1978 annual report tabled in the House. This includes all pertinent aspects of the corporate recapitalization that occurred on April 13, 1978, under the provisions of the Air Canada Act 1977. References are notes 5 and 6 to the financial statements in that report.

There were no write-offs.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

Question No. 215—Mr. Herbert:

1. During 1977 and 1978, by quarters, what were the rates of interest charged by the Federal Development Bank and what were the prime rates charged by the chartered banks?

2. What was the loss record of the Federal Development Bank in each of the past five years?

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State, Small Businesses): In so far as the Federal Business Development Bank is concerned:

1. A list of interest rates charged by the Federal Business Development Bank and the prime rate charged by the chartered banks for 1977 and 1978, by quarter, follows:

	Chartered Bank Prime	FBDB Loans Over $50,000
March, 1977	8.75	11.50
June, 1977	8.25	11.50
September, 1977	8.25	11.50
December, 1977	8.25	11.50
March, 1978	8.75	11.50
June, 1978	9.25	12.00
September, 1978	10.25	12.00
December, 1978	11.50	12.50
March, 1979	12.00	13.00

2. There has been no loss in the fiscal years 1976, 1977, 1978 and 1979.

NATIONAL LIBRARY PURCHASE ACCOUNT

Question No. 282—Mr. Herbert:

As at March 31 in each of the past five years, what amount was outstanding in the accounts of Canada in respect of the National Library Purchase account?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Library as follows:

Fiscal Year	Amount
1974-75	$342,070
1975-76	426,833
1976-77	338,410
1977-78	33,595
1978-79	1,913
1979-80	2,538

LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Question No. 333—Mr. Herbert:

Is it the government's intention to measure the opportunities for Canadians to learn English or French as their second official language and, if so, by what method?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): It is currently the practice of the federal government to monitor the participation rates of elementary and secondary students in second official language learning and it is the government's intention to continue this procedure.

However, any type of measurement requiring provincial co-operation would, of course, be subject to federal-provincial agreement.

This question will be discussed with the provinces during the negotiation of new federal-provincial agreements on official languages in education commencing 1980-81.

Order Paper Questions

CMHC—NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 655—Mr. Howie:

From January 1, 1978, what amount was loaned by CMHC to organizations in New Brunswick for construction of senior citizens residences?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Question No. 881—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is it a requirement under the conflict of interest guidelines that cabinet ministers shall disclose personal gifts or other benefits of a value exceeding $200 which they receive from persons other than relatives or family members and, if so, since such a requirement came into effect how many gifts have been reported and, in each case (a) by whom (b) what was the value?

2. What was the total value of all such gifts?

3. Is there a requirement that the gifts be reported within 30 days of their receipt and, if so, has anyone failed to follow this requirement and, if so (a) who and on what date (b) what was involved?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The conflict of interest guidelines for ministers, in effect since April 28, 1980, require that:

IV Gifts

> "Ministers shall disclose in the public registry any personal gift or other benefit of a value exceeding $200 which they receive from any person not connected with them by blood relationship, marriage or adoption, together with the name and address of the donor. Official gifts and hospitality received from other governments and hospitality received from personal friends are not subject to this rule. All gifts or benefits exceeding $200 in value, other than official gifts or benefits, are to be declared to the ADRG within 30 days of their receipt for disclosure in the public registry."

The guidelines for ministers also require that:

VIII Administration

> "—Ministers must complete all arrangements necessary to achieve full compliance within 120 days of appointment or of the coming into force of these guidelines. Within this time period, ministers must provide to the ADRG copies of duly executed trust instruments and public disclosures of previous activities, personal gifts or benefits and discloseable assets, as required, and a public document in which they will indicate in summary for the arrangements they have made to comply with these guidelines. The public disclosures of previous activities, personal gifts or benefits and discloseable assets and the summary of arrangements made by a minister will be open to examination by the general public in the public registry maintained by the ADRG."

Information about the disclosure of gifts and benefits by ministers may be sought from the public registry maintained by the assitant deputy registrar general at the Trafalgar Building, 4th Floor, 207 Queen Street, Ottawa, soon after the expiry of the 120 day compliance period referred to above.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 587 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 587 be made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

METRIC COMMISSION PERSONNEL

Question No. 587—Mr. Stewart:

What is the number of persons employed by the Metric Commission and, in each case, what is his/her (a) name (b) salary (c) job designation (d) date of appointment?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The parliamentary secretary will recall that I had asked him whether he would make inquiries of the Minister of Public Works with respect to question No. 785, which reads as follows:

Has the Department of Public Works, the NCC or any other department or agency made any agreement with the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton or any other local government in the national capital, to grant land or the right to use land for the extension of the Knoxdale-Hunt Club arterial road or any part thereof through lands owned or controlled or used by any government department or agency?

I have been checking the list with which the parliamentary secretary kindly supplies us in advance each day, but I have not seen the answer to that question. Would the parliamentary secretary tell me whether he has made that inquiry or whether he has any idea when that question might be answered?

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I have made inquiries. However, I see that the minister would like to speak to this matter and perhaps he can give an answer right now. I am sorry, but I assumed that I had already given the answer to the hon. member because I was told the answer very quickly. In any event, the minister might like to comment.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have signed an answer which was very short. There is no agreement, and I am sure that should allay the hon. member's fears.

• (1520)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I just want to convey to the parliamentary secretary that I was not being critical of him when I put that question. Also, I am grateful for the minister's answer.

Madam Speaker: Shall the reamining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED—CANDU REACTORS

Motion No. 6—Mr. Herbert:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings and other communications between the government and senior officials of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited during the months of June, July, August and September, 1979, that pertain to the negotiation of the sales of Candu reactors either by AECL or by any private company acting with the authority or knowledge of AECL.

[English]

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports that the pertinent correspondence exchanged between the government and AECL during the months of June, July, August and September, 1979, contained commercial information that could be detrimental if made public to future AECL contract negotiations with potential clients. Therefore, I should like to ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Herbert: Transfer for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

TREASURY BOARD—SPECIAL INDEX FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Motion No. 11—Mr. Benjamin:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of report on a special index for senior citizens prepared by the Treasury Board.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, since the Treasury Board did not prepare any report on a special index for senior citizens, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), I move the motion. If it is being denied, I ask that it be transferred for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the other notices of motions for the production of papers also be reserved.

EMPLOYMENT TAX CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF PROGRAM PERIOD

The House resumed, from Monday, June 9, consideration in committee of Bill C-19, to amend the Employment Tax Credit Act—Mr. Axworthy—Mr. Blaker in the chair.

On clause 1—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on Monday, June 9, 1980, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration. I believe the hon. member for Calgary West had the floor.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, this is our third day of Committee of the Whole examination of this bill. I want once again to remind the House that I see no officials present. I also want again to remind the House that we have requested that the minister either be better briefed or show up in this committee with officials. It is our contention that the minister wastes the time of the committee because he does not have the answers to the reasonable questions which we on this side and those on his side are putting to him.

I wish to quote from Hansard for December 4, 1979, page 1995:

Our objection to this bill rests both on the substance of it and on the attitude of the government. They have not shown during the debate on this bill any co-operation and openness—

The quote is from the minister when he was sitting in opposition and debating our mortgage tax credit bill. I think it summarizes a great deal of the feeling that is building up on this side of the chamber. We have to look at that feeling in the context of the present situation.

Back in 1972-73, I remind the minister, the Liberal government was facing an unemployment situation of a little more than half a million people. In that context, in a public policy sense, for one program alone, the local initiatives program, a job creation program, they were willing to allocate 1 per cent of the budget funds available to the government. Here we are, eight years later with the worst unemployment situation that this country has ever faced, with a rapidly worsening employment situation, and we find the government proposing some ten days ago in this House an expenditure for job creation that is less than one quarter of 1 per cent of federal government expenditures.

It is in that context that it is not only the right of members of Parliament to be able to examine with the minister his proposed legislation, but it is clearly an obligation. When his government chooses to allocate to job creation so few funds, such a little amount of money, it is the obligation of those on this side to examine very carefully whether that money will be well spent.

It is in that context that I rise today and begin another series of questions. I wish to begin with the minister's statement this morning made to a women's group in this city. I quote from a press release:

They were restricted—

That refers to his government.

—to spending limits—

That is in the context of job creation.

—set by the former Progressive Conservative government and he is not willing to announce an expensive new deal until a full review of existing programs is complete some time next fall.

I begin by asking the minister how he comes to the conclusion that the decision that he and his cabinet makes as what to spend on job creation is a consequence of the spending limits established by the Conservative government. Can he tell us how he comes to that conclusion?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is quite obvious, that the estimates of spending were established by the previous government. We were working within those spending estimates. What we did was shift the priority within those estimates to apply a different program, allocating them in terms of direct job creation as opposed to the employment tax credit.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I sat in this House in early April. I heard the Minister of Finance increase the federal budget to the tune of $2 billion. Can the minister tell us what portion of that $2 billion increase he got for job creation?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is repeating the question he raised in question period yesterday. I pointed out to him in question period in repetition, which seems to be the only way to get the answer through, that in fact the increased expenditures were allocated to a number of job stimulation measures. He seems to be under the illusion that the only form of job creation was that announced last Monday. It has been repeated to him time and time again that in fact there is a wide variety of economic stimulation measures taking place in the government, that we believe in a mixed approach to job creation, particularly in terms of investing in long-term job creation. If the hon. member is prepared to look at the variety of decisions taken over the past three months, he will see exactly where those expenditures have been made.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I think Hansard records—and the papers given to us by the Minister of Finance say the same thing—that the increased $2 billion expenditure was to go to the subsidy paid for the consumption of oil and to pay interest on the public debt. Is the minister disagreeing with that statement by the Minister of Finance? Is he suggesting to the committee that from that $2 billion extra expenditure he got some of the money for his operations?

Mr. Axworthy: Perhaps I might repeat what I said, Mr. Chairman. The budget account adds up to well over $60 billion. Within that sum a wide variety of initiatives are taken by the government to assist in economic stimulation and job investment from one end of the country to the other. The global budget is attached to a vast variety of purposes, as he will see if the hon. member would like to go through the estimates. I invite him to attend a variety of meetings which are held daily to examine the spending estimates of a number of departments. I am sure it would be a very useful exercise for him to attend those committee meetings and add up the large number of jobs which have been created as a consequence of government expenditure.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the minister suggesting that paying a subsidy on oil imports or paying increased interest on the public debt creates jobs in this country? Is that the kind of economics he is giving us this afternoon?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I do not use the same kind of silly logic as does the hon. member. I am saying that within the budget of the Government of Canada a number of initiatives are taken to create jobs. If the hon. member wants to quarrel with the principle of providing one-price oil across Canada rather than require the maritimes to pay substantially higher prices, I suggest he should take that issue up with the caucus before he speaks publicly on it.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I am very much concerned about the employment situation in the Atlantic region. One of the criticisms of this bill is that it does so little for areas of high unemployment in this country. I was in the House earlier during the question period today and heard the minister of energy propose that oil should be available at one price to all Canadians. On the surface that sounds very good, but it has an impact on job creation. Two provinces in this confederation, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, depend on electricity for much of the energy which their industries use. In those two provinces electricity is generated by oil. The consequence of one-price oil in Canada is that people in those two provinces will pay twice as much for electricity, whether they use it in their homes or in their businesses. A one-price policy would, in effect, make it much more difficult for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island to attract industry. Is the minister saying he is prepared to go to the minister of energy and argue for a special subsidy for the generation of electrical power in those two provinces?

Mr. Axworthy: The hon. member somehow has the habit of making an assertion, drawing a conclusion and then putting the words in my mouth. If he finds this an amusing exercise, I have no objection. But what he says ought not to be taken seriously as being in any way a statement of our policy. I simply respond that the reason there is one price is to make sure there is some degree of unity across this country, that some degree of parity between the regions is maintained. The cost of doing so is what we pay for maintaining a degree of equality in Canada, and if the hon. member is not prepared to pay it he should have a serious discussion with his leader and his caucus, because he is certainly way out in right field.

Mr. Hawkes: It is nice to be in the field instead of out of the field, Mr. Chairman. The principle of equality is an important one and the minister is demonstrating either a lack of capacity to listen or an unwillingness to respond. If we are to disperse jobs in this country, if there is to be equality of opportunity in the different regions, one of the most important parts of that industrial dispersion is the supply of energy and its price.

It was a Liberal government some 15 years ago, I believe, which provided incentives for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island to switch from coal-fired electrical generation to oil-fired generation because it was cheaper to import oil than to use the domestic supply. The situation today is that imported oil costs more than double the cost of domestic, and the areas to which I have referred burn this oil for the purpose of generating electricity. When a one-price policy for oil is in effect, it will be the same for all Canadians who want to buy gasoline for their cars but it will not be the same for all Canadians in terms of heating their homes or running factories in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. In those provinces the price will be doubled. This will affect the ability of a region to attract employers.

Mr. Chairman, I want to move on now to the five basic issues we should keep foremost in mind when looking at employment programs of any kind. First, there is the question of timing. Will the measure which is introduced spend the money and create jobs at the right time? Second, is this the best way to spend money? Will it provide the most employment and the best kind of employment for the least dollar cost? Third, we should ask ourselves: What is the value of the goods or services provided by this additional employment? Fourth, is the money being spent to provide employment for people who really need it as opposed to those who may not need it so much? Finally, what will the impact of this increased employment, this increased spending, be on inflation?

I should like to go back to the first of those questions. I should like to go back to the first question I asked in this chamber on the last occasion when the predecessor bill was before a committee and to the same question I asked the first time this bill was before a committee. I am interested in knowing what planning figures the minister is using to predict when we are likely to peak. In what month and in what year are we likely to experience the highest number of unemployed Canadians? Will it be 1981, 1980, 1982, 1983? Which month of which year is the minister using as the date on which we are likely to experience the highest unemployment? This occurs in the context of the timing—whether or not this bill asks Parliament to endorse the spending of money when it is needed most. The minister has the figures; he refused to share them with us on a previous occasion. I hope he may be more forthcoming today.

Mr. Axworthy: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am glad the hon. member finally got around to reading my opening address because the principles he put forward were those contained in my opening statement. So it is nice to know that after 20 hours of debate he has finally got around to understanding what the purpose of the employment tax credit bill is.

He still avoids one basic point, however, which is this. The employment tax credit bill does not represent the entire package we are putting forward as employment measures. It is one of several initiatives we have put forward and I would again remind the hon. member that this is simply an extension of the existing tax credit program until we have had the time and the opportunity to examine properly the changes which are taking place in the economy of this country and have reviewed federal programs through a variety of procedures.

We are extending this legislation for the following reason. When this government came to office there were no job creation programs in existence. Canada Works was cancelled and phased out, and the hon. member who has been belabouring his acute concern about the plight of the Atlantic provinces is a member of the same government which cancelled the Canada Works program, which would have created jobs directly and have been of major benefit in the Atlantic provinces and in the eastern portion of Quebec.

He cannot have it both ways. He cannot come here and flail away at the inadequacy of our programs when he belonged to a government which cancelled the very programs which were a major benefit to that region. He was a member of a caucus then. Did he stand up in caucus and complain about what an awful thing my predecessor was doing in cancelling those programs? I did not hear him say anything in Parliament about that. I did not see him rise to his feet in righteous indignation concerning the awful measures which were being taken to void completely an area of its major employment programs. I suggest that he has gone through a little Saul of Tarsus routine. He has changed his mind, as people are apt to do when they change sides in the House.

Mr. Rae: It happened to you, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: Perhaps the hon. member is learning from a good teacher. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, and we repeat it again, that we have put into place in this country not just the employment tax credit program, which is designed to provide job availabilities for close to 50,000 participants in the next year. We have also put into effect a number of direct job-creation measures which go on top of those already in existence. We are spending well over $1½ billion in this department on a variety of training and job measures.

Now, if the hon. member thinks that is inadequate, he should be debating that entire package and not picking out one piece or another. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is not the place to do that, just as it is not the place to debate energy policy or all the other irrelevancies that have been brought into this debate in the last 24 hours of the time of the House. This bill has consumed that much time primarily because the hon. member opposite is asking the same questions over and over and getting the exact answers he wants but not registering them on whatever litmus paper he uses to record these things.

The fact of the matter is that when it comes to the assessment of what we are expecting in the unemployment field, the statistics are in front of hon. members opposite. I do not have to keep providing them to them. They get them every month from Statistics Canada. The patterns are there. We know that the seasonal variations of employment rise and fall according to conditions of seasonal employment in winter, summer, spring and fall. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, we are very vulnerable and sensitive to the decisions made outside our boundaries. We cannot in any way control the decisions of the U.S. federal reserve board that were made last year to hike interest rates up to 20 per cent, causing a recession in the United States, which caused a downturn in their economy, causing them to buy less pulp and paper, less lumber and less manufactured goods, thus creating an unemployment problem in Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we do not have control over the United States. We could influence them—my hon. colleague who just left, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, does his best—but we are not in any way going to try to pretend that we are omnipotent when it comes to economic matters, just as the hon. member's government was not omnipotent. No government is omnipotent.

All I am saying is that the hon. member for Calgary West is asking questions that have been answered fully both by the Minister of Finance in his initial statement and by myself in repeating those statements. We told him what we expect the unemployment rate in this country to be. It will be at the level of about 8 per cent. He said that he does not agree and that it will be 9 per cent. That is up to him. Wood Gundy has its figures. The reason economics is a dismal science is because everyone has a gloomy prediction to make, and they are all different. However, that is our best forecast for next year. Mr. Chairman, I will not predict beyond that. I am not going to vault myself into crystal balling into 1983, 1984 or 1985.

Part of the reason, in case it has escaped the notice of the hon. member, that we are doing the review is to come up with those very assessments so that we can establish proper calculations and reorient our programs accordingly. That is why we are doing it. He is a member of a parliamentary committee to do that kind of study. I think, Mr. Chairman, he should curb his impatience, proceed in a logical, rational manner to get representations from across this country and join with his parliamentary colleagues and present the proper report, which I would be very glad to receive.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I have reviewed Hansard for the last two committee meetings, and I find a perfect correlation and a perfect relationship between the lack of knowledge on the minister's part and the length of his answers.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The difficulty is whether the hon. member wants to continue the debate or make what is known in the French language as "un rappel au Règlement", that is, a question related to the Standing Orders of the House. If the hon. member wants to pursue a point of order, I will hear him. If he wants to continue the debate, I will not recognize him.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, on my point of order, I asked a question, and I think an examination of Hansard will indicate that the minister took some considerable time and did not answer my question.

Is it part of my 20 minutes when he chooses not to answer my question or do I still get a chance to ask additional questions? Can he eat up all my time by talking about something different from what I asked?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It is well understood that the Chair does not comment upon the quality or lack thereof of either the questions or the answers in the House of Commons, except in some reference to parliamentary language and matters of that nature.

Certainly some hon. members who are questioning might far prefer to have the majority of their time dedicated to questions, with the smallest possible amount of time dedicated to answers. Other hon. members might feel the opposite way. The time allotted is 20 minutes, and the manner in which it is used is the business of the hon. member and the minister, not that of the Chair.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Chairman, my question is to the hon. minister. I do not wish to belabour this point, but I think that something has to be cleared up from when questions stopped the last day.

This is a very simple act. All it is is an employment tax credit program. What I am trying to point out is that I feel that $100 million in the total program is being targeted to areas, as the minister has indicated himself. We do not know what is happening with this tax credit program, but it is still a loss of revenue to the government of $100 million. Perhaps 60 per cent, according to the minister's best estimates, are using it. Can we afford to carry this program and gamble $40 million or just throw it away? That is what we are doing, and that is the point I am making.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member brings up a good question. The only thing I would ask is that he try to straighten it out with his colleague from Calgary West, who suggested in the House that a direct job creation program is a waste of money and that a tax credit program is a more efficient use of our money. However, that is something between the two of them. I must confess that I have some of the same reservations about the use of the tax credit methodology. It is one that is widely used in a number of countries, and the evaluations have shown that the actual incremental number of jobs can range between 20 per cent and 50 per cent in those areas. We have estimated, in interim reports that we have had, that it was around 60 per cent. As I indicated, a full evaluation will be done upon the completion of the cycle of this program, if the bill passes, which we hope to have by the end of the summer. I did indicate to the hon. member that I would provide that report to him. Sixty per cent is a judgment call in part based upon the auditing that we do through the Department of National Revenue. But we do ask for the base line employees and the actual numbers.

All I can indicate to the hon. member is that again, as I said, we do not have the ability to pry into the minds of some 18,000 businessmen who have signed up agreements under this program as to whether they were going to hire people in any event. They have to sign certificates saying it is incremental work, and I would suspect from the monitoring that we have done that there is a fair amount of it. That is the reason, Mr. Chairman, why we did not want to put all our eggs into the one basket of the employment tax credit.

That is why we wanted to vary the program and test it out. It is certainly my intention, again through the review process we are initiating, to get calculations from other areas and try to develop a more in-the-field observation from our own regional offices as to the actual incremental number of jobs put into the work force as a consequence of the tax credit.

I might say that there might be a particular value not just in the general employment field, but again in trying to target in on special needs. There are groups of people in the labour force who we know are more difficult to employ either because of lack of skills or because of certain work handicaps they may suffer, and tax credits may be a way of providing a direct incentive to the employer to bring those people into the work force. That will be one of the areas of examination we will be making in this review in terms of prescribing longer term programs.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Chairman, in the minister's words, I made some serious charges when I said that I felt the program was being abused. I want to really clear up this situation. I am not casting aspersions on the businessmen who sign up for the program, nor am I casting aspersions on the department itself. What I am suggesting is that someone from the manpower offices who is responsible for the program may be overzealous and go out and solicit. We mentioned before that in a high growth area the employer would never even think of applying for this program if he did not get someone from the manpower office knocking on his door and saying, "This is a new job and you qualify for this program." The businessman is not at fault here. I am saying that somehow something breaks down, and I think that is where the abuse comes in.

I have done some more checking myself. The minister said that he has checked in offices in my riding. I would like to know how he checked the people who were going out and asking employers to take part in the program because it was a high growth area.

I should like to suggest also to the hon. member for South West Nova, who mentioned that there were not many employers there taking part in the program, that they do not do so because these are high growth areas. That is what I think is wrong with the tax credit program. The only guys who are going to use it are those who are making the bucks. It is of no use to someone who is breaking even.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the hon. member for Athabasca that his observation may be a proper one. We have several thousand employers and you cannot monitor them every day if someone is being overzealous in promoting the program and suggesting its benefits could be used, not in the way the program is designed, but in a way simply to add an additional employee to the factory, we would want to correct that abuse.

We did check with the employment offices in the hon. member's riding to determine that, and we were not able to get any evidence. I would simply suggest to him again that we unquestionably did undertake a major promotion of the program, because when it was first introduced in 1978 there was not much uptake. I think the program produced only 16,000 places. Since then we have been able to increase it to around 50,000. I am sure that within that number there are some who may be abusing it.

If the hon. member has suggestions as to how we can ensure that the abuses are not extended, without increasing the red tape or the regulations, I would be very glad to hear them. I hope it is something on which we will be able to get a better fix as we look at the program more carefully over the summer and fall months. Perhaps this is something for which the parliamentary committee in its hearings across the country may get a better idea.

Mr. Shields: I am glad the minister pointed out that the number went up from 16,000 to 45,000. That is my whole point. I think the 16,000 probably was a realistic level where the program was unsolicited from the employer. I am wondering if it was advertised, whether people were informed by way of brochures, rather than have someone go out as a salesman to the employer's office saying, "This program is available, you are expanding, new jobs are being created and you fall under this program."

I am not suggesting for a moment that the individual who goes out from the manpower office is attempting to do something illegal. I am not suggesting that the employer feels he is doing something illegal. He feels that he falls under this program because it is brought out to him and explained in this way, and this is an education program, as the minister mentioned. I should like to suggest that no one go out from the manpower office, that it should be advertised in the paper and that brochures be sent out. That is my point.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief questions because in the previous Parliament it was my privilege to have had the responsibility of being the minister of employment and immigration when this program was initiated. When the program was initiated, we built in a lot of road blocks and there was too much red tape. As a result of that, the program was not working, so we called in the business community and asked them what was wrong with it. They said there was too much red tape, there were too many road blocks. We were being pressured constantly by a very good critic, namely, the former member for Hamilton West, who indicated that we should remove some of this red tape. This was asked by the opposition parties who said, "For heaven sake, trust the businessmen. These people out there are not crooks. They want to work, they want to create the jobs, but they will not go through all this red tape in the interest of proving their honesty." So we followed that particular program.

In the first instance, I think the program was taken up in large measure in the province of Quebec. We checked with our people there to find out why it was being taken up in Quebec and found that the reason was the leadership given by some officials in the Department of Employment and Immigration who let the businessmen know that this plan was available to them, that they could hire people, that there was a tax credit available to them. Then we removed much of the red tape, not only at the behest of the opposition parties but at the behest of the Canadian business community. As a result of that, the program took off and became very successful.

We did not have all of the protection built in that we had in the original instance, but we felt that the Canadian businessman could be trusted. I think that the figures we are hearing today from the minister are accurate to the degree that they can be. I think this will require further checking and testing because we are dealing with taxpayers' money, but I commend the minister for continuing in this particular vein because this is a good program and is creating jobs.

My question to the minister concerns the time element. When it was my privilege to be the minister, we saw the program taking off and being successful and we needed more money quickly. Is there a time frame with which the minister is faced in order to keep this program operational?

Mr. Axworthy: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member repeat his question?

Mr. Cullen: When I had the privilege of serving in this particular role and the program took off, we had real concern abut adequate funding being available. I know that the minister brought this program in almost immediately after the House assembled, and I wonder about the time frame for this program. Are we facing a situation where we might lose momentum as a result of the delays we are facing today and have faced in the past?

Mr. Axworthy: As I pointed out when we introduced this bill two or three days after Parliament opened, the provisions in the bill expired as of March 31. We have tried to maintain some degree of continuity by still issuing application forms, with the caveat that it did require the ultimate approval of Parliament. But in effect, at this very time we are debating this bill, there is no employment tax credit program, it has expired, and we are simply asking for an extension.

As I pointed out, we have had well over 20 hours of debate or discussion on this bill. Perhaps I should not say "on this bill", because of the 20 hours only one hour and ten minutes perhaps have been devoted to the bill. The rest of the time has been devoted to a wide variety of fascinating matters that members of the opposition have been prepared to bring forward. In fact, we have spent an inordinate amount of time on what the hon. member for Athabasca said is a very simple bill extending a program that has already been in operation.

So in answer to the hon. member, I have to say that the longer we continue with this, the more difficult it will be to maintain continuity and momentum and it will probably hurt the program.

Mr. Cullen: I have one further suggestion to make to the minister. I have to disagree with my friend opposite, the hon. member for Athabasca, who was talking about using newspaper advertising and bulletins and papers. Our experience with that is that it does not work. I think the average Canadian sees something like 600 advertisements a day in one shape or another. It is only by personal contact in promoting this program that it was made to work in Quebec in the first instance, and it is what is making it work today. I hope the minister will not say to his officials, "Do not go out to promote this program." Just the opposite should be true.

• (1600)

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I have a short comment for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and hopefully his staff. It relates to a very specific aspect of employment, that is, the question of farm labour. In my own case I suppose it is even more specific. I want to talk very briefly about the help required in cattle operations in western Canada. That is my special interest.

I believe it was last Friday that the hon. member for Bow River made what I think were the only remarks on the subject of farm labour in these proceedings in Committee of the Whole. The minister may remember them. I think they were appropriate remarks. He spoke from experience and long years of a genuine interest in the subject. At that time he reminded the committee about the problem of perhaps inexperienced and new farm helpers which are available from time to time through employment offices for work on farms. Also he mentioned the concern of the farmer employer about very, very expensive modern-day equipment. He spoke of tractors and implements that were worth up to $30,000.

I share that concern, but I want to comment a little more about the type of manpower I can hopefully get from manpower offices which might be of more help to us in the cattle business. It is not an easy job to convince young people, especially, to come out into the country and work on a cattle ranch. This is not a critical comment about the minister and his department, but there are valid reasons for this situation, even when there are areas and regions which have a good supply of labour in these times of high unemployment.

Of course, the reasons for this relate to the fact that those kinds of jobs are a long way from the bright lights, especially for young people. I can tell members that that is a major factor in this day and age. Another reason is that it comes as quite a shock to a young person, whose idea of cattle ranching is an image he has picked up from watching western movies on television, that we have to work in the winter and keep ourselves warm outdoors all day. He loses his enthusiasm in a hurry when that situation becomes apparent to him.

We in the cattle business have the same problem with respect to expensive machinery. We hesitate to allow inexperienced help to operate that machinery, even if we are resigned to that fact. I am thinking of a modern-day, 14-foot, self-propelled hay swather which can be worth up to $35,000. We are faced with the same situation. It is just as significant that we have trained stock horses. Sometimes it takes five, six or seven years to properly train a stock horse to work with cattle. We hesitate about allowing inexperienced help to ride and use those horses.

The type of labour in which I am interested for my own operation is full-time, year-round help. When we hire them, we hope it is by the year and that they stay for ten years. Of course, experienced help who would qualify in these areas are very difficult to hire. If they are very experienced they work on their own, which is understandable. A few times I have gone to the manpower office and have been successful in getting help. More recently I find the local officials seem to feel that they should specify a minimum wage which as a prospective employer I should be expected to pay. A good question is: How much is an experienced man worth?

My own experience in this specialized field is that I always have to pay more than perhaps the going rate in order to entice them, if you like, to come out and work on a cattle ranch. But it becomes a little annoying when Manpower officials suggest that there is a certain wage, regardless of whether one agrees with it or not, that is expected to be maintained. I should like to ask the minister whether that is official policy and what comments he might have on that.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I think the contributions made by the hon. member and the ones made previously by the hon. member for Bow River have drawn attention to the very specific problem of providing a proper work force in the agricultural field. I took note of this problem last evening and I will address myself to it.

As far as the specific questions are concerned, the program is available to farmers if they would like to use it. In the last year of the program some 2 per cent to 3 per cent of the 50,000 jobs actually created were in the field of agriculture, farming or animal husbandry. I agree it is a small number, but probably the reason for it is the nature of the occupation as well as the nature of the program. It is not designed specifically to address the concerns of a livestock raiser.

The issue of minimum wage is something over which we have absolutely no control. Obviously it is within provincial jurisdiction. They set the minimum wage as well as the wage rates in various training programs. We are now in a position where, within the next 12 months or so, we will be negotiating with the provinces concerning the Adult Occupational Training Act where we put out a substantial amount of money but do not necessarily control the type of training being offered in each of the provinces. I will make a point in those negotiations to raise some of the concerns about agricultural training.

I should like to make one comment to the hon. member which perhaps is something that goes back to his view of the attitude of young Canadian people toward working on farms. We operate an exchange program of farm students between certain European countries and our own. Several weeks ago I met with the sponsors of that program. They indicated that they can recruit enough trained and interested students from Europe, but that they cannot attract similar numbers of Canadian students to go overseas to learn about farm methods in Denmark, The Netherlands, the Scandinavian countries or West Germany. They feel that one of the reasons is that there seems to be a negative attitude toward going into farm work at the present time. It is something we will have to address and perhaps something our department, in combination with the Minister of Agriculture, can look at.

Mr. Hargrave: I have some further comments, Mr. Chairman. I must admit that perhaps my comments are not specifically on the application of this particular program, but certainly they are on the question of farm labour. I point out that these additional programs about which the minister spoke do not lend themselves to long-time, full-time employment. We in the cattle operations are quite resigned—and have been for many years—to the fact that we have to train our own young people. I find it interesting that the best source of young people really genuinely interested in this field is people who come from a long distance away, such as from the province of Ontario or Quebec. They travel a couple of thousand miles and show a genuine interest in sticking to it. I have had much better results from that source of employment.

It is rather ironic that about the only time the local young people, especially those of the cities, seem to be willing and anxious to come out—to put it rather crudely, to do us a favour and work for us—is when they have unpaid bills on their financed cars, which they will lose if they do not get a payment in pretty quick. Under those circumstances, they suddenly become interested in our type of work, but winter usually scares them off.

Again, coming back to my one point, I am sure that the minister is aware that there are no minimum wages for agriculture-related work, certainly not in Alberta. I am not questioning whether or not there should be minimum wages, because there is a reason in the history of that situation as to why there are no minimum wages. Is it the policy of the officers in the field to suggest a minimum wage which must be guaranteed before we can even get serious about hiring full-time employees?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, it is not a specific policy. We do recognize that there has to be a minimum amount of remuneration for people who go into the work force, but because of the nature of the farming community where other services are provided, such as room and board, there is no minimum wage. As the hon. member has said, the minimum wage guideline is a decision which is made by the provinces. I will undertake to discuss that topic with the provincial ministers when I have the opportunity.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I have just one other observation. I do not believe that it will lead to a question. I want to give the minister a specific example. I once put an order in to the local manpower office for help. I specified that I wanted an applicant who was reasonably competent in the saddle. I did not expect a bronco-rider, a professional rider or anybody like that. It turned out that the manpower office received one application from an individual who described himself as a horse trainer. The minimum salary expected for him was $600 a month plus room and board! That particular individual may have been a horse trainer, but he did not fill the bill at all. I think he had some experience in training horses. To me that is a good example of a minimum wage which was used in an entirely wrong situation.

I make these remarks for the benefit of the minister and his staff just to let them know that, while I am sure he does not hear very often from those of us who are in the market for a full-time, year-round employee, we sometimes feel a little less than adequately served. Perhaps it is because of the nature of the jobs which we offer, but when we get employees who are willing to stay, they are very well paid. We often feel that there just is not enough of them when we need them.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, although I know that the minister has had several questions from other hon. members on the subject of studies which might be undertaken to show the effectiveness of this particular program, I would like to ask a couple myself.

I notice that on April 24 the parliamentary secretary to the minister, in an address to the House, referred to a study which was based on some 5,000 people who were employed under the program and showed how many of those people had been unemployed, for what periods of time and so on. Could the minister tell us if there have been any programs which would show how long the jobs created under this program have lasted and how long those people who have been employed under the program remained employed?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, by our best estimates, the average number of weeks that are used under this program is 46. As the hon. member knows, the program must be a minimum of three months' duration and are an average of 12 months, it is about a 46 week average over all.

If I understand the hon. member's second question, what we can gather from the interim report—and I want to make it clear that it is simply an interim evaluation which will not be completed until the end of this summer—about 50 per cent of those who join the program stay on the job after the program comes to an end.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I wonder as well if in the study which was referred to there was any breakdown in terms of male/female employment and in terms of native employment?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, in that interim study there was a breakdown between male and female employees. We estimated that about 40 per cent of the participants in the program were female. The range was between 35 per cent and 40 per cent. The reason for that figure is that most of the work is concentrated in the manufacturing sector or the goods-producing sector. As the hon. member well knows, that is a sector which has not been available to women up to this point in time.

We hope to be able to break down those barriers through some of the programs we introduced last week, but it will be a long-term program and, as a result, the figures do not reflect the over-all percentage of women in the work force.

Mr. de Jong: Were there any figures in terms of native employment?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, because of the nature of this program there was no specific breakdown for native people because the requirement of the employment tax credit program is that, again, we use private sector employers. There are not a large number of such employers within the band council or reserve areas that were being used. If there is some way of getting such figures, I will attempt to get them for the hon. member.

Mr. de Jong: I would like to question the minister a bit more about native employment. As the minister may be aware, I represent the constituency of Regina East. That constituency has a large number of native people among which there is an extremely high rate of unemployment. The Saskatchewan Federation of Indians conducted a study in 1978 which suggested that up to 700 to 800 Indian people from the reserves are moving into Regina every year, which is only adding to the unemployment there.

Would the minister have available for me any figures relating to native unemployment in Regina, particularly with regard to treaty and status Indian people?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I met with the officials of the Saskatchewan government about two weeks ago to discuss their proposals for an urban and native program. I am recalling offhand, but I think they estimated that unemployment rates were in the area of 40 per cent to 50 per cent, which is about the same unemployment rate that is occasioned on the reserves or in the non-status Indian community. That is one of the reasons we have introduced special programs which relate to the problems of native people and are presently negotiating with a number of native organizations in western Canada to determine if they can get those programs started this summer.

We have had some very good discussions with the native organizations.

I would point out to the hon. member, so that he will not make the same mistake which the hon. member for Calgary West continually makes, that this is not the only program. We are spending the substantial amount of close to $70 million on the LEAP program of which close to 40 per cent of the participants are native people.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I am fully aware of the programs that are available. The tragedy of this debate is that I am more aware than the minister of what he has and has not done in the employment-creation field. I am aware that there are many programs, and I think I know more about them than the minister.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: If the hon. member has a point of order, would he come to it? I gather that it was not a point of order.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I would like to question the minister further about the plans, ideas and philosophy of the government as it relates to native people. I understand that treaty Indians are not included in the unemployment statistics. If this is so, would the minister explain the rationale behind that policy. Also, is there any thought of providing or keeping accurate records on the employment of treaty Indian people?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, at the present moment, Statistics Canada does not cover reserves in its labour force survey. But there are ways of determining certain figures, which are drawn primarily from the Department of Indian Affairs. That is where we get our figures.

Mr. de Jong: Is it the philosophy of the government to continue to accept the responsibility for treaty Indian people after they leave the reserve and enter into an urban lifestyle?

● (1620)

Mr. Axworthy: Again, Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out, through the initiation of a number of LEAP programs our department has accepted some of the job proposals and job implementations used by native people in the country. I would also point out a fairly interesting innovation with which the hon. member's colleagues from Winnipeg may be familiar. In the major initiative that I announced with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in Winnipeg two weeks ago, we indicated that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was interested in joining in the agreement to provide special programs for native people who were moving off the reserve into the larger urban centres. We will test that to see how it works, as part of the over-all employment creation program for the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, the problem with the LIP, LEAP and OFY type of grants is that they are generally of short duration. It can even be claimed that they sometimes create havoc in the lives of participants through a sense of insecurity. People do not have the opportunity to buy a home and establish a permanent lifestyle because they never know whether the grants will be renewed or what sort of changes may be made in the programs and the philosophies of the government. It is often found that people who exist on grants acquire a great expertise in "grantmanship" and that a lot of their abilities are wasted.

It is not a very wise thing to use community groups to provide needed social and human services, particularly as they relate to native communities. It is better if they are trained to do these things themselves and they are often in the best position to help themselves. It is only good sense to encourage this approach.

The major problem with all these programs is that they are short term and it is not known whether they will continue from one year to the next. Often they are programs that deliver essential social services that the government cannot provide. All too often the services of social welfare departments and hospitals are inaccessible to the native people because of the cultural alienation that exists. It is only sensible to provide human services to the native organizations through the native communities. It appears to me to be cynical to make them short-term projects. This creates disillusionment and a sense that they are receiving gifts for which they must plead and connive, bow and scrape for, rather than giving them the feeling that they are getting money to supply services that they have a right to.

I would ask the minister to give serious consideration to the short-time factor that is involved in the job creation type of program and to ask his department for proposals that would allow long-term funding for native organizations. I wonder if the minister could respond to this suggestion.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member that one of the main objectives of members of this House should be to try to break that horrendous cycle of dependency and poverty that native people in this country experience, but it will not take place overnight.

If the hon. member has been following the announcements made by several of my colleagues, he will know that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has indicated that he wants to restore a sense of autonomy and independence to band councils so that they may make their own economic and social decisions.

We are attempting to come to grips with the question of land claims which would put a substantial amount of capital in the hands of native organizations and band councils and give them a major source of money for investment so that they may develop their own programs and resources.

I agree with the direction that the hon. member recommends we take and indeed we are trying to move that way. I would ask him to reflect upon some of the initiatives we have taken recently through my department to begin the process of longer-term economic development. Through the local economic development assistance program we intend to set up a series of projects across Canada designed to help communities establish economic development corporations which will enable them to initiate the analysis and marketing feasibility studies necessary for their communities and to obtain the seed capital to invest in new business opportunities.

It is my hope and ambition that these pilot projects will show how we can expand the whole concept of economic development for native people, as opposed to short-term assistance.

I do not think we should disregard or deny, however, the value of the shorter-term job-creation programs. I put this question very explicitly to native leaders when they were in this city three or four weeks ago at the council of chiefs meeting. I asked whether they wanted us to cancel the job-creation programs and the universal answer was that they did not. They considered them necessary for two reasons. First, they provided work as opposed to being on the pogey. In many cases the work is in and around the reserves, which is very valuable. A number of the projects concern the development of roads, transportation systems, sewer systems, public works programs and so on. The hon. member has visited many of the same reserves that I have and he knows that many of them need substantial public works improvements.

More important is the fact that the short-term job-creation programs also provide job experience in new settings for native people. It is often the first opportunity for them. I can think of a number of projects that I helped get established in my own city when I was working at the university, such as the Winnipeg home improvement project. A LIP grant was used to establish a skill training program in which approximately 80 per cent of the participants were native. We kept track of the program and found that 50 or 60 per cent of the participants found full-time employment. It provided them with their first opportunity to gain on-the-job experience. They acquired certain attitudes and habits which were useful in a new environment.

I do not apologize for the short-term job-creation programs, therefore, and I think we must continue to use them. I do agree, however, that we should shift the emphasis to long-term job creation and in particular allow native people and organizations to make the economic decisions for themselves.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I do not disagree with the minister except to point out how cruel it is when someone is taken off the welfare rolls, becomes involved in something positive in the community for a few months, and then all at once it is over and they are back on welfare. That is where the cruelty is.

I have also been involved with numerous projects in Regina and Vancouver and have found that to be a problem. People have to go back on welfare when projects end because there is no other employment for them. They are back to square one but with a higher level of frustration.

The problem of native employment, youth employment and employment for women is tied in to our economic strategy. The minister was right when he objected to the narrow definition that some of the Conservative critics used with respect to job creation. The minister claims that there are all kinds of job-creation programs as a result of investment in industry, special assistance, etc, but that is where we take objection to the economic policies of the government. They are the same type of policies that were practised by the former Conservative government, which are the same as those that were practised by the previous Liberal government. These are policies essentially of constriction, of cutbacks and of lay-offs.

We have tried to solve the problem of inflation on the backs of working people. We have been quite willing to accept higher levels of unemployment because it is supposed to solve our inflation problem. The cruelty is that we have not put into place programs that will help those people who are bearing the brunt of the fight against inflation. We have, indeed, shoved them out into the cold. The puny programs that have been brought forward go nowhere near helping those people that government policies have thrown into the garbage heap of the unemployed.

Could the minister enlighten us as to what the economic policies of the government are in terms of employment? Does the government still accept the notion or the goal of full employment, or is 4 per cent, 6 per cent, or 8 per cent unemployment an acceptable level of unemployment? What is the acceptable level of unemployment to the minister and to the government?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, before I answer the last question, let me point out for the record that the member has suggested the programs we have announced have a short terminal point. As I indicated in my opening statement when I introduced the job-creation programs two weeks ago, in the community development program part of direct job creation, if a program demonstrates its usefulness or its viability then it can be extended and be transferred into LEAP, which is a three-year long employment-type training program. If the member is asked, then he should be prepared to say that there is that option of a continuation of the program. As well, under the community services portion of the program there is a three-year time phase for that program.

In terms of the last program, I would not want to take on the task of answering for the entire economic strategy of the government. But I did indicate, as I have several times in the House, that we are now initiating a review of the employment strategy for the Government of Canada. The task force is now in place. The parliamentary committee will be starting its visits and consultations in the spring, the summer and fall of this year. It is out of that process that we hope to be able to arrive at both an estimate of the changing nature of the job requirements in Canada, and how as a government we can respond to them. I would simply ask the member to restrain his anticipation until we have been able to complete that review.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, does it mean that the minister is not prepared to give or cannot give us a figure today of what is an acceptable level of unemployment in this country?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, from my point of view having anyone out of a job is unacceptable. I will try to do my best to deal with it, but in the realistic parameters that we have we are working under a number of limitations. But that is the ultimate objective, if you like taking into account all of the slippages, and also the fact that some people just do not want to work. But we will tackle unemployment with all the tools that are available to us in the best way we think.

There are major changes going on in the economic structure of Canada. We have to look at those, and simply to scoff at them, as some members are apt to do, I think is simply showing a know-nothing attitude. We have to look at how conditions change in this country, how we can respond to those changes and how we can use our resources most effectively.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I want to indicate to the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown that the Chair is well aware that he has been patient in waiting for his turn. But there is a requirement to keep some proportion on both sides of the House, so I will recognize next the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence and following him the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Chairman, in case we have forgotten our purpose here or what the subject is of this debate, I rise to speak on behalf of the speedy and merciful passage of the bill to amend the Employment Tax Credit Act, which is Bill C-19.

It seems to me that it goes without saying that I should support this bill. I am deeply concerned that this piece of legislation should be passed and passed urgently. It seems to me that we are trying to get under way a program that needs to be continued, and if we do not work and act quickly it will fall by the wayside and its momentum will be lost.

We understand also that this is not the only bill that will deal with unemployment. It is only one weapon in an arsenal of attempts to work with and overcome the problems that face those who are unemployed. It seems to me that if we have any compassion for those who are unemployed and if we really cared, we would not find it necessary to have 20 hours of debate, or more, of constant repetition.

An hon. Member: Why don't you sit down, then?

Mr. de Corneille: We would not find it necessary to talk about something that has already been tested and used, and whose value has already been realized. To understand what has happened in the past, we see also that it is a program to meet the small businessman's needs and help him fulfil his ability to make a contribution to the private sector, to the whole country and to its employment programs as well.

We see the opportunity here of giving the small businessman an opportunity to participate in the economy and also to help the unemployed. It seems to me that it is a method that has been approved as being one of the few methods which the Conservative party has recommended in terms of dealing with unemployment, because it is to stimulate the economy by stimulating business.

In that respect the principle seems to be good and accepted by all sides. However, if we accept that that is one tool, not the only method of approaching unemployment, and if we also realise the fact that there are many other programs which the Minister of Employment and Immigration has announced that this will be part of a wider package of programs, then we can see that there are other parts that we can look forward to if members do not want this program alone.

In the meantime, we have an urgent situation. If people are unemployed and in need of jobs, why does this House persist in debating something we all understand? A lot of people are wondering about this. People who are watching this debate on television and people who sit in the House know why this is Committee of the Whole and why the whole of Parliament is not here right now. They ask what is happening. Nothing is happening. That is why often all the benches are empty. There is a delay, if you will; there is obstruction in being able to bring forward legislation that deals with urgent needs. There has to be some concern of conscience on the part of all of those who have to think about people who are unemployed as to whether we are really dealing with these issues or toying and playing with them for political ends and purposes.

If we really cared, we would get on with the job. We would get on with the job by passing this particular piece of legislation. Using our committee on employment and immigration which exists for that purpose, we could discuss employment packages, or better packages if we have any. Then we could come back to seek amendments for additional bills when they come forward dealing with the problems at which they are aimed. This bill is not aimed at dealing with the whole unemployment problem of Canada; we all know that. We know that it is an urgent bill. It is a transitional one, to keep something going while we bring forward other legislation that would deal later with the total unemployment problem of Canada.

We inherited a situation where there were no funds to deal with these problems at the present time. We have to at least perpetuate what is there and keep it going because it is a good program. We should be able to assess its value. No program is perfect. No one program will solve all problems for all regions. The question is whether this Parliament intends in the next little while to help those urgently in need of that help, and to get a bill through to support a principle on which pretty well everyone has agreed.

Why is this bill being delayed? People who watch Parliament on television and who follow Parliament will realize that the vain repetition and idle discussion that is taking place is not contributing to the passage of this urgent bill. I feel that is true of other debates they are watching on television. I do not want to say that any one party is guilty. In fact, I am quite concerned that people may become disillusioned with the entire parliamentary system. Look at the debate yesterday. There are problems facing Canada in terms of unemployment, inflation, energy and national unity. What was the subject chosen for debate during the time of the House of Commons used as prime time by the opposition? It was apparently a very important subject to them, the metric system. That is what got our attention.

• (1640)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do so with great reluctance. My point of order is that the choice for opposition day has absolutely nothing to do with the content of this bill. I do not understand how a member can stand during this debate and speak about an event which took place on another day on another piece of legislation or, for that matter, an event which has absolutely no relativity or relationship to what is before us.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair has to draw to the attention of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain that he has not in fact presented a point of order for consideration. I might add that if some member wants as part of his address on the subject matter before us to make reference to the choice of an opposition motion, then it seems perfectly within the rules to do so.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a similar point of order. You ruled before you heard all the discussion on this, and that is your right. I agree with a lot of what the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain said; I think he had a legitimate point of order. However, it should not be directed toward the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence, but rather the Conservative opposition which has filibustered this bill for about six weeks in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair will attempt to serve hon. members who obviously do not feel too inclined to address themselves to points of order but rather to quick points of debate. I will hear the hon. member for Calgary West, but I would ask hon. members to remember that if they rise on a point or order, it would be helpful if the Chair could hear the point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, both officially and unofficially behind the curtain we have offered to the party opposite, the government, quick passage of this important bill at the point when they answer our questions. The filibuster is on the other side of the House. The extraneous comment brought in about the opposition day is another indication of the government's desire, for whatever reason, to extend this bill and keep us longer in debate.

Mr. Collenette: On a point of order. This is a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The same point of order?

Mr. Collenette: On the comments of the hon. member for Calgary West. Is he undertaking to make a House order that we would dispose of the Committee of the Whole stage of this bill by six o'clock tonight? If he is making us an offer on the floor of the House to get this bill through, I am sure the minister, in consultation with the New Democratic Party, will be more than happy to make accommodations. Is the hon. member offering to make that an order of the House?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: This becomes more and more difficult for the Chair. My inclination is to suggest that if representatives of the parties want to go behind the curtain and make some arrangement, they should do that rather than do so in this loose fashion. I will recognize the hon. member for Calgary West, but I will begin very soon to apply some sense of order. I want to return to the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence who properly has the floor.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I will not take much time. If we get our questions answered instead of being given a filibuster, we are quite prepared to allow the bill to proceed.

Mr. Collenette: When?

Mr. Hawkes: When we get answers. Until then, we will continue to fulfil our obligation on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada and seek answers relevant to this bill.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North rising on a point of order as well?

Mr. Orlikow: It is on the same point, Mr. Chairman. If there is agreement on the part of the other two parties, we would be quite willing to continue the debate until six o'clock and finish it by that time. We would be quite willing to agree to that. In saying that, I want to say to the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence that the kind of speech he is now making is not conducive to encouraging members on this side to stop the debate.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Chairman, if my words have in any way contributed to at least a discussion and a dialogue between the parties, I would regard them as being of some value. What I am really pleading for is that we consider the needs of the people to whom this bill directs itself, the unemployed.

I would like to point out that it is a very simple bill. It is a continuation of a former policy. I am really pleading that we not use this forum as anything other than a place to pass bills and to address ourselves directly to the issues at stake. No one side is solely at fault, but we all have a responsibility to try to make sure this bill reaches its destination with all haste.

In that spirit, I suggest that we ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to do his best, as I hope he is trying to do and know he will try to do, to answer questions. Then if we are promised passage of this bill tonight, that would be to the well-being of all parties.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I take great offence at the hon. member for Sarnia and the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence lecturing me and my colleagues on the types of questions that we are asking the minister. We are doing this in all sincerity. We are trying to get to the bottom of a $100 million bill. If I do not ask the questions my constituents expect me to ask the minister, I am not doing my proper duty as the member of Parliament representing Brampton-Georgetown. Therefore, I am going to ask my questions and I do not need lectures from those hon. members.

I enjoyed the speech on second reading by the minister's parliamentary secretary. He gave us some interesting statistics, and I want to follow up on a couple of things that he said. He stated that the reaction from business and industry has been remarkable. I am not sure what he means by that. Through the Canadian Federation of Small Business I did a survey in my constituency and I found that about 50 per cent of the small businesses were in favour of this bill. Therefore, I would not say support is overwhelming; I would say some are interested in it and some are not.

We are talking about employment figures. About 19,000 was the figure the hon. member for Louis-Hébert gave the House as far as Ontario is concerned. I noticed a 61,000 unemployment increase in Ontario this month. Has the minister any comments to make on how this bill is going to affect Ontario? How many jobs does he expect in Ontario this year as a result of this bill?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, if we go by past standards, of the total 50,000 in the 1979-80 year in the province of Ontario, the number of jobs created was about 19,000. I would expect the same number to hold true this year.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I understand that 55 per cent of the total jobs under this plan were taken by youths. May I ask the minister how many of those youths are still employed after two years of the program?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer that directly because, as I said, we have only done one interim evaluation. We monitored the program based upon 2,500 employees. At that time we indicated that about 55 per cent of the participants in the program continued to be employed in the work place after the termination of the agreement under the tax credit program.

Mr. McDermid: Is the minister telling us he has no statistics on how many of those are still working or how many are no longer employed and are receiving unemployment benefits? He cannot answer that, is that correct?

Is this program integrated in any way with the government's other employment programs, or is it a separate entity? Is the minister regarding the whole thing as part of a package or is this in addition to the package he introduced the other day?

Mr. Axworthy: I thought I had made it clear on several occasions that in the government's view it is necessary to take a variety of different initiatives in connection with any meaningful job creation program. While the employment tax credit is particularly applicable in areas where there is a high incidence of manufacturing, it is not as useful or as available where there is a large agricultural or fishing base or where, as in certain areas of the maritimes, there is a slower pace of economic activity. Therefore, it is an integrated package but we are providing a different mixture of programs.

We are asking each of our regional offices to design a blueprint advising us to the best mixture of program for that region, after consultation with the provinces, the employers and the community service sector. So they have some responsibility for designing the "menu"—the selection of services they want to use.

Mr. McDermid: I have the latest unemployment statistics before me and I am shocked to find that in a country like ours 431,000 of the unemployed, or something like 44 or 45 per cent, are young people. I ask the minister whether he would not consider waiving the three-month minimum limit applicable to students, because we are getting on into the summer now. Would he also consider raising the minimum rate to $2 for student employees under the program this summer?

Mr. Axworthy: I do not believe that at the present time the regulations would be waived, but we will take a look at the suggestion. I would point out that the figure he has in front of him was produced prior to full implementation of the summer youth employment program which has put some 70,000 job placements into the market over the summer. This will not solve the entire problem but it will make a dent in that figure. So the May figures, the statistics we have, do not reflect the introduction of the summer youth employment program.

Mr. McDermid: I think that is very misleading because we are talking about 430,000 people who are out in the labour force. That figure does not include the students who are coming out of school now and looking for summer jobs. The youth employment program is designed for the 70,000 students who are getting out of school. So I say to the minister: please do not mix up those two figures and mislead the Canadian people. I think that is very unfair.

The young people today are saying: "I want a meaningful job, not a job which is going to last an average of 48 weeks". They are looking for a job which will last a lifetime. The program before us completely misses this point, as do other government employment programs. I plead with the minister seriously to consider the plight of these young people and design programs in co-operation with the private sector which will lead to the creation of meaningful, long-term jobs.

The minister mentioned earlier that part of the deficit financing is going to help the unemployment program, yet the deficit is going up at the same time as unemployment is going up. The two just do not match. I would ask the minister to take a long, hard look, on behalf of the youth of this country, at meaningful programs which would give them jobs once their education has been completed.

I must admit I am included with my hon. friend on the employment for the eighties committee and I am looking forward to my work. But I do not want the minister to hang his hat on the work of the committee. He should be starting right now, especially with the young people of Canada in mind, because I personally feel it is an absolute disgrace that 431,000 young people in this country, 45 per cent of those without jobs, should be unemployed. It is just not good enough.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, in order not to offend my friend on the Liberal benches, I shall be brief and try to keep to the point—which he did not. Some major problems have arisen in this province since the minister introduced the bill before us. I am sure he is not unaware that the unemployment rate in Ontario in particular has risen significantly since this measure was brought down, as, indeed, it has risen across the country. In the major industrial areas of the province unemployment has made dramatic leaps in the past month. Windsor has the highest unemployment rate in the country—we all know the reason for that—and just today in Hamilton, in my own riding, we heard the announcement that Dominion Foundries and Steel Company will be shutting down most if not all of its manufacturing for a week. Incidentally, that is the first time since I have lived there, almost 30 years, that I can remember this company closing down. They are thought of, usually, as a very progressive company and normally they are able to maintain their employment levels.

Anyway, 10,000 additional people will be laid off. That is the equivalent, under a job-creation program such as this, if we take into account the length of time involved, of 200 year-long jobs disappearing just because all these 10,000 people have been laid off for a week. In addition, there will be a marked reduction in the numbers of people who will be making purchases. One must take account of the fear which accompanies these lay-offs. Many of those affected will be reluctant to resume their normal purchasing patterns bearing in mind that the reason given for the lay-offs is a dramatic decline in markets. This is bound to have an effect upon the sale of goods and the flow of services.

With all this in mind, given that the levels of unemployment in Ontario have risen significantly in the past month, given that most of the unemployment is located in the major industrial areas, given that these areas are where most of the young people who are seeking employment live, given that the major unemployment which is occurring almost inevitably results in a decrease in purchasing at the retail level where many of the young people might find work, can the minister outline what measures he might introduce, perhaps supplementary to the bill now before us, which would begin to address themselves to the situation, now crucial, which presently faces us?

Mr. Axworthy: Again, the hon. member asks questions which could be divided into those having short term and longer term implications. I should like to tell him, as I have told him in the House several times, I believe, that in the specific case of the automobile industry my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has already provided a major program to support the ailing automobile industry and provided a loan guarantee to Chrysler to make sure that it will not fail.

In the meantime, we have introduced into the Windsor area regional benefits under the unemployment insurance program which will provide an additional 12 months of benefits for auto workers in that area. We have also introduced special work programs into the Windsor area, again to make sure there will be a minimum of hardship experienced by the workers who are being laid off. However, we recognize that this is not a sufficient answer and we are presently in discussion with the United Auto Workers, which began two weeks ago and are continuing on a daily basis, to work out what we would consider to be an appropriate response to the problem of lay-offs in the auto industry.

I hope to have these meetings with the UAW concluded some time in the middle of July so that we can come up with a longer-term program, taking into account always that we have certain restraints on the finances of the government and that we cannot simply open the purse wide. Because the purse has already been opened very wide by a wide variety of programs. We are meeting with the UAW to see what we can do to provide longer-term answers. I think that indicates a co-operative attitude on the part of labour, employers and the government, which is necessary if we are to come to grips with the problem.

I am also meeting with a number of other major industry associations in Ontario which have job opportunities. A number of areas—for example, the aerospace industry—are not going to be creating unemployment. The aerospace industry will in fact be creating close to 15,000 to 20,000 jobs in the province of Ontario. The real trick is to make sure we find workers who are unemployed in those areas where labour is needed.

That is what we are meeting with the industry about right now, to work out programs and have discussions to provide labour on an industry to industry basis. Again, it is going to require co-operation from the public and the private sector, and that is the approach we are using right now, both in terms of guarantees, as my colleague has done through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and also at the same time looking at the specific problems faced by workers in those areas.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, let us be perfectly frank with each other. The aid to Chrysler will have very little, if any, benefit at this point in time. There are very few new jobs being created and certainly no people being recalled at the moment as a result of the minister's assistance to Chrysler. That, I am sure, we agree on.

In a program such as this you are almost totally reliant on a reasonably buoyant economy to create jobs for people who are going to go into the service and retail sectors for short-term employment. I refer to students, for example. The majority of students require jobs today, and they will need them in June, July, August and part of September. What we are seeing is a marked increase in the number of people who are unemployed, and most of them are in the major centres of the province.

Taking that into account and the fact that because those people are unemployed there will be a reduction in purchasing and that that reduction in purchasing inevitably will lead to fewer job opportunities, what then can you use this kind of program for? Where do those people go to find work? I just mentioned that Dominion Foundries will be laying off 10,000 people for seven days. Dominion Foundries has employed people in the past for summer employment. It is very difficult to imagine how they will employ people this year for summer employment. That means that the people who might normally have been employed there will be looking elsewhere, but for the 10,000 people who are unemployed for a week, that is one one fifty-second part of their income for that year that is affected in one way or another, and so they will be reducing their purchasing. As they reduce their purchasing, the jobs that those young people might normally get in department stores and in other summer-type work will not be available. I do not understand how giving money in the way that we are talking about without having developed an over-all strategy will work.

I do not understand where the jobs will come from. I really do not. I am not trying to create a political argument, I am being as honest as I can be. I do not know where those jobs are. If the economy is in a decline, as it is, if the major employers are laying off, as they are, and if that has the depressing effect on the economy that we all understand that it has, then the secondary type of job that is being looked for by these people will not be there. I do not understand how a program like this can possibly work in those circumstances. I think that if we were in a period of increasing employment and increasing purchasing and had a more buoyant economy, then we could reasonably expect to see some job opportunities.

Let me suggest that if the government had gone ahead and decided to embark on a major program of house building, that would have created a number of jobs in related industries. We all know, I am sure, that there has been a marked decline in the number of housing starts, although there is still a considerable demand. With that decline we are now down to something like 170,000 starts projected for this year. That is down from what is generally accepted as being a target of 260,000 that would be required if we were to keep pace with the need.

If the government were to embark on that kind of program and were then to use some of this money to support employment in related industries, I could see some benefit from that. I could actually see where the jobs are going to come from. But I cannot. I do not understand how it will work. I do not understand where we are going to create work for the people involved.

We will pass the bill at six o'clock, as far as we are concerned, and the government can go ahead with the business of getting the money out, if there is someone to take advantage of it. My suspicion about this is that what is going to happen is that some of the money will be used to pay for employees in jobs that already exist, not new jobs, and that in fact a lot of this money will not be taken advantage of because there will be no new jobs. In the final analysis there will be an ever-increasing number of people unemployed, and we still will not have in place a major strategy for dealing with the chaos that confronts most of the economic sectors in the country. I really do believe that we are dealing with this in a very backward way.

The minister could have the bill passed and could get on with it if he could bring in some kind of economic strategy to show where we are going to create employment in the long term. I have not seen, heard or have any inkling as to when that is going to come or, for that matter, whether it is ever going to come. I suspect it is not. I do not think the government has the foggiest idea how to deal with it.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain paints a picture of dark, satanic mills closing down in the dark of night. I remind him that in the last year close to a quarter of a million jobs have been created in this country; 250,000 jobs have been created from May of last year to May of this year, so the picture is not quite as gloomy as he likes to paint it. It sounds great in the spoken word but, in fact, there still is a functioning economy in this country.

If he is worried about the application of this specific program, if we can somehow satisfy the weird obsessions of certain members of the opposition to satisfy their pedantic tastes and get the bill passed, then there is already a built-up demand for this program. Between April and May of this year we have signed, subject to the passage of the bill, close to 3,000 agreements with Canadian employers who are waiting for this bill to be passed and waiting for hon. members to come to grips with the fact that there are already major demands. They are waiting for the hon. member for Calgary West to overcome his academic convolutions and for us to pass this bill. The demand is there. He is worrying about how it is going to be used. I am telling him it is there. They want to use it. All we have to do is get on with the job.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, when I participated in this discussion on the last occasion I asked the minister if he would give some special consideration to ensuring that employers of only one person would be as eligible as the employer of thousands. I did not think I got an answer to that question and I would like to repeat it now. Will he give the assurance to the little guy that he will get the same break as General Motors?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I pointed out to the hon. member last time that 65 per cent of the jobs created under this program went to employers who employ less than 20 people. That suggests to me that if two-thirds of the jobs are created by employers who employ less than 20 people, it is not General Motors which is benefiting from this program. It is mainly the smaller businessmen in Canada.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that he did not answer my question today and that I did not get an answer the other night. He has given me more information this time than he gave me the last time, but the question still stands, and I raise it as a question of very major importance, particularly in the province of New Brunswick or in any part of Atlantic Canada which is feeling the crunch of unemployment. The rate has not gone up as fast as it has in Ontario, but it has gone up and will continue to go up.

Let us bear in mind that Atlantic Canada is an area in which the rate usually goes up a little slower at the beginning, gets a little higher before the end and is much slower coming back down. I think that many of these programs have to be directed toward that kind of area. They have a special impact in that area where there are many small employers. So I will take the minister's assurance that the guy who wants one man will be able to get one man and will not have a rigmarole to go through to arrange it but will get help from the department and its staff, because this is one of the problems. The staff of the employment offices are very patient and helpful to those who want 20 people and whose records look good, but somebody who, for the first time, is looking for assistance to employ one man needs a great deal of attention.

I should also like to ask the minister if he has as yet any answers to give me to my question in respect of the guidelines which shall be applied to the make work programs, such as Young Canada Works and the Winter Works program. Will he give consideration to adjusting those guidelines so that communities, service clubs, etc., may be able to make contributions to the community rather than have some of the money spent in a fashion which the community sometimes resents when the community or the service club wants help? I sent the minister a letter containing three or four applications which I suggested should have had top priority consideration. They were rejected out of hand and I wonder, in view of the letter and the examples which I sent him, whether he has given that subject consideration, and can I get an answer to that today?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, we are tracking through old ground, but let me repeat to the hon. member the following. When it comes to guidelines for the work programs, we plan to reintroduce the constituency advisory system which was abolished by his government, by his caucus and by his members in the last Parliament. That constituency advisory system will allow the hon. member to recommend people from the community who will be able to exercise judgment based upon what is the most valuable project or program within the community. We intend to reintroduce that system to provide a check against the very conditions to which he referred.

The reason he ran into problems in the summer youth program is that his government cancelled that constituency advisory system and therefore there was no way of determining what the local priorities were. The way to try to restore it to some extent was to allow the individual member of Parliament to make the recommendations.

The hon. member has to understand that in his area he got a substantially high proportion of job projects, but he could not get them all because we have far more applications than we have money assigned to the program. There was $110 million assigned to the program to create 70,000 jobs across Canada. They had to be allocated on some degree of equity throughout the width and breadth of this country, and therefore we could not satisfy all the hon. member's particular needs. I did undertake to the hon. member that if he has additional projects and would send them to me, if additional money comes forward because of the cancellation of some program, we would review them. But at the present time we have just received his letter. I would say that if I were allowed to spend less time in the House on this bill, I would have more time to apply to his problem.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, I am reminded of the minister's interjection in response to the debate in respect of the time which was being consumed. A point of order had been raised, and just in case it was not picked up by the electronic media which looks after us, let me point out that he made the interjection across to our chairman in the committee and said, "And you have all you are going to get." Apparently that is precisely the position in which I now find myself, that I have all that I am going to get.

My question to the minister was whether he would consider changing the regulations. I agree that the ministerial advisory board made a major contribution to the selection process, and I am not arguing that. However, neither the member, if he has input which I did not have, nor the ministerial advisory board can get around the regulations as they exist. I ask the minister whether he would inject into the regulations, by ministerial order or otherwise, or would he advise his staff that in the discretionary process of choosing which project shall be accepted the good be extended to the greatest number of people or to the community concerned, and that this should be the guideline on which moneys are awarded.

I submit that the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number is not prevailing in many instances. When boy scout groups or service clubs which need their premises improved are ruled out of order by virtue of a regulation, then I think something is left to be desired in the regulation. I am only asking that the minister consider this, give it his personal attention and understand the problems which the ministerial advisory board will face when it is appointed. The board cannot get by those regulations no matter what may be the personal wishes of the individuals or the board as a group. That has been their experience. I would like to see that regulation changed.

Will the minister take note of my question and give consideration to recommending to the staff that the greatest good to the greatest number of people, the community, the service club or whatever, shall be the guideline, not some of the ideological guidelines which now preclude items which communities need? I submit that all the projects that I submitted to the minister are items and projects which rendered great good to a lot of people for a long time. I think the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence would be particularly interested in two of them because they are church camps where young people have been entertained for some 25 to 40 years. They are in dire financial circumstances and need help. That is ongoing work supported by the churches, and the regulations precluded them. I would like to see them made eligible. Is that too much to ask? Is that information I am not going to get either?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to defend the actions of past governments. If there were regulations—

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I did not mention criticism of the past government. He can throw that back as many times as he likes. These decisions were made through his office while he was minister and had nothing to do with decisions made earlier. What I am concerned about is the regulations.

Mr. Axworthy: The program that we announced a week ago on Monday is a new program. There are no regulations for it. The hon. member may have some conspiratorial sense that somehow there is a hidden set of regulations. There are no regulations other than the guidelines which we have set to make the communities service program available to non-profit, voluntary community organizations to serve a work of genuine value in that community. We base our judgment of those upon the recommendations that come from the constituency advisory group. The problem which the hon. member faced in the past was that the system set up by the previous government did not allow any community input.

Mr. McCain: No.

Mr. Axworthy: The decisions were made by the joint committee of federal and provincial civil servants and the recommendations came forward. We altered that to allow hon. members to have some say. We have now restored the constituency advisory group to provide an assessment of local community priorities. That is the determining factor. I have tried to tell hon. members that three or four times. I do not know how to emphasize it, underline or dramatize it any more. The choice on priorities will be for the advisory group that he will recommend and nominate.

Mr. McCain: May I take up a minute of your time, Mr. Chairman. The opposition has two choices in a case of this kind, and it is very difficult to decide which choice is the proper discharge of duty. One is to walk out and leave this bill and let the government pass it at any time that they choose because the opposition has been confronted with an absolute refusal to co-operate, to try to understand the questions which are asked, to try to understand the problems which are presented.

It is our job to try to represent our constituents. I spoke about a regulation. The minister has avoided his responsibility completely on that because it has nothing to do with the advisory board, nothing to do with members' influence. The only concern was the refusal or acceptance of those projects I forwarded to the minister. The fact is that they were eliminated by regulation by the staff of his department. I want that regulation changed so that the money spent in my constituency will be of long-term benefit to the greatest number of people. That is what we are here for; that is what I am trying to accomplish. I challenge the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence to say again that I am wasting my time, when I am trying to look after my constitutents and their long-term benefit. If I cannot achieve that, I am through.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to speak on the extension of the employment tax credit program. I know that program well, having worked in a Canada Manpower Centre as an adviser, and I am in a position to tell you that it is a little gem, and it is so for several reasons.

First of all, when that project was created, the government tried to set up a program that could apply without adding to the pile of paper work an employer normally has to cope with when he operates under a government program.

It has always been said that, whether here or elsewhere at any level of government, there is always too much red tape, too many meetings with officials, too many all sorts of things. If some of my hon. colleagues ever worked with the tax credit program, the only paper the Canada Manpower Centre fills in is a yellow form that certifies the hiring of an employee, and the employer at the end of the year only has to send a form to Revenue Canada on which he puts the salary, and that is all. That is it and it is an incentive that people had a little difficulty with at first because there are two departments involved, the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Employment and Immigration. At first there was a little lack of confidence between the officials of each department. In the third year of application, it was a phenomenal success. If the program is being extended today for another year, it is quite simply because it is a necessity.

I come from an area where the rate of unemployment varies regularly between 15 per cent and 20 per cent. We have a huge problem to live with, and that problem is all the more serious as it affects particularly young people. In an area like mine with multinational industries, most of those industries are unionized, the unions are very strong, and like any good union, they protect the seniority of their workers, and that is normal. But the result of all that is that those who have to suffer from the problem of unemployment are the young people.

I heard a while ago some colleagues criticize the existing job-creation program which this government launched in the early seventies, and all I can say is that I wonder, had we not spent that money to create so many jobs every year, year after year, how our young people could have kept their self-respect. Of course, the job-creation activity is not creating permanent jobs, but jobs to allow young people to subsist while the real work problems are being resolved. By the way, we have had such a large number of people coming out on the labour market, a number larger than any other country has seen, when women started to go out to work and when young people from the generation born during the years 1945 to 1960 started to appear on the labour market 15 years ago. There were too many of those young people at the same time and the work they did was not really necessary. They were supported by temporary program like Canada Works, LIP or that kind of program assisted by an Unemployment Insurance Act which allowed them to live decently, with a sense of self-respect.

The ETCP is another program which aims at getting at the roots of the problem. This program can really promote job creation. An employer in my constituency is happy to receive a tax credit of $1.75 an hour when he hires a young worker, and generally, this young worker will stay with this business afterwards.

Farm workers can also benefit from the program. They are very happy about it. It is the nicest little program ever conceived because it can be applied easily. There is no need to hire ten accountants to be told what to do and what form must be filled in and sent back to the government. I therefore find it difficult to understand why the discussion has gone on for so long to extend this program for one year. It is easy to draw conclusions, but the gentlemen opposite, as our friends in Quebec often say, the hon. members on the other side should go and see in their own constituencies the people who have used this program. It is a real jewel. When you talk to them about a manpower training program, they will tell you: that is very nice, but we have to consult the province for a training program. However, you set up something when you were in power not so long ago and you knew that it would come to an end on March 31—

An hon. Member: You were not there long!

Mr. Gimaïel: You knew that on March 31, 1980, the program would come to an end, and we also knew this, we who were working in manpower centres at the time. What we were asking from the lower echelons was that the program be extended for one year. This was not done. Now we are doing so. We should take care of this as soon as possible. I believe that there is a great potential of use in this program, and the minister will confirm that the funds allocated to the ETCP in the last two years were not sufficient because there always were more requests. This proves that this program is effective and will be increasingly so to the extent, first of all, that members of Parliament will publicize it in their ridings at the same time as the department and will tell their constituents about it because it is universal and applies to nearly everyone. This is one of the elements that the government conceived to fight the basic problem of unemployment which affects all the countries of the capitalistic or western world.

Over the past ten years Canada has given people billions and told them: "Think of ideas, we will give you money, do what you like". There is no other country in the world which did that and it proves that we are confident in the possibilities of the population, and that is why Mr. Pierre Trudeau was re-elected as Prime Minister of Canada during the last federal election. Besides proving that we have faith in the people this constituted an opinion poll which we do not often have the chance to see because it is not one in which we ask people: "Are you for or against this issue?" It is an opinion poll which asks the individual what he thinks. We give money to someone who uses it however he sees fit. The results are fantastic. In my area, job-creation projects have worked wonders which can be used today for recreation purposes or others. Apart from this, there is also the fact that permanent institutions were created from temporary projects. And all this in the context of the same employment tax credit program. A little while ago, I heard someone ask who is going to create jobs. There is no one here on this side of the House who can claim to know the truth and to be able to create all the necessary jobs in Canada. No one. What we are saying is that within this country there are a good many people who have an incredible potential to create jobs and for the last 12 years we have been helping them. That is why Canada has one of the lowest unemployment rates in the world as well as one of the lowest inflation rates. We will continue to do what we have done, to have faith in the population, in all Canadians. This is what is being done in my area and I am happy to encourage these people.

A little while ago, we were talking about a striking committee for job creation. That is essential. When we came to power and the previous government had decided, oh wonder, to put an end to the job-creation program, to suppress it, we wound up with the program pretty much in tatters; the striking committees had disappeared. We had to take all that in hand and rebuild. People ask me: Why a striking committee? Because these striking committees are comprised of key people who have ideas, know the local background, come from all parts of the region and from every corner of the riding; these people sit down and study ideas which are presented to them and invest money in them. It is simply a question of trusting the people. If you trust Canadians, Canadians will trust you. We know what we are talking about. We have been in power almost 20 years. That is essential. When you want to show someone you trust him you give him the opportunity of making it on his own. That is exactly what we are doing. We are not the fountain of truth. We will not force Canadians to work in areas they do not want to work or to do things they do not want to do, but we will help them hire other Canadians, if they want, and put their ideas in practice.

In conclusion I wonder if the minister could tell us whether the budget for the tax credit program, with which I became very familiar when I worked at the Canada Manpower Centre, will be increased over last year? I am aware of the fact that the program is being extended another year. Perhaps it should be extended even longer, but I wonder whether the program budget itself, and I realize these are hard times, can be increased.

• (1730)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the hon. member for a very interesting and good address. It is nice to hear a positive contribution and one that has some relevance to the bill which is under debate. I would simply say that the budget amount which we announced when we introduced the bill is $98 million for this year, which is about the same amount we spent last year. We had hoped that the number of participants under the program would be in the same range of about 50,000.

The reason for keeping it at the same level is that it is simply an extension of the bill while we are reviewing the other programs. We have taken other moneys that were available for tax credits and put them into the—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order. Surely, the minister realizes that it is incorrect to talk about a budget. This is a tax credit, and it does not appear in the budget figures. It is not—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. If I understand the question of the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean, it was with regard to allocations for certain projects. Therefore, I think it is proper to talk about budget expenditures.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, this is getting to be humorous. The reason for continuing the program at the same level was because we wanted to shift the allocations that were under the estimates into the area of direct job creation.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few comments and ask the minister a couple of questions. Nobody has a monopoly on the concern, which we all must share in the crisis that we have, over unemployment and other related problems of the economy. I agree with the minister that there is not one simple solution to this serious problem. However, we on this side differ from this government in the approach. The former government attempted to create jobs of a more permanent nature. This government has gone back to the grand mentality which emerged in the early 1970s where it makes money available to keep people working for three or four months so that they can qualify for unemployment insurance. I realize, though, that there must be such a program, especially when the economy has been mismanaged as badly as it has, not only by Canada—but by other countries as well.

Has the minister or his department been involved in discussions with the provincial governments with regard to this whole area of manpower training? It is quite obvious to me, as it is to many Canadians today, that there is something fundamentally wrong with our primary and secondary education processes. We are keeping our young people in school far too long, and this has a twofold effect. When we keep young people in school for 13 years—I am talking particularly about young people who are motivated at the ages of 15, 16 or 17 toward some kind of a job skill—to prepare them for a career, they are bored to death. This system provides nothing more than a babysitting service.

As a result, we are graduating from our schools today armies of young people with no job skills and who have lost all their motivation toward a certain trade skill. Because the education process has been disrupted, we have academic mediocrity as well. Is it not high time that the various governments get together and work out a program?

Indeed, the educational program in the province of Ontario provides for such a scheme in which young people are offered a training position in industry. They are offered the opportunity to leave school at grade nine or ten, find a place in industry—not at $9 per hour, but at $1.50 per hour because they are continuing to learn a trade and a skill. This learning experience within the industry would be supplemented with training, perhaps one day a week or one week a month, in one of the colleges or secondary schools in the country.

The minister will readily recognize that what I have described is the European system. There is a model of that system functioning in Ottawa right now, and the academic portion of it will run into September. The question is, have there been any discussions with the provinces to address this very fundamental problem, which will help to prepare us for the 1980s and, indeed, for the next century when we will need highly skilled people to work at highly technical jobs?

I would also like to know if there have been any discussions with the unions and the industries and whether these two groups are concerned about this problem. We cannot expect the federal government to find a solution to what is probably the most crucial problem facing our country today, particularly as it refers to youth unemployment. It is a problem which no single agency can solve by itself. It is a problem which requires the input of the federal government, the provincial governments, the industries and, of course, the workers' organizations, before an agreement can be reached.

Can the minister enlighten us as to whether he is concerned as well about these matters, whether there are any discussions going on and whether he has read some of the studies which have been produced by some of my colleagues, by educators in the country, and so on? What does the minister see for the future with regard to the combination of manpower training and job creation, which are two areas for which his department is responsible?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has put his finger on what is really one of the critical employment questions in this country, one that we hope to address by the establishment of the parliamentary committee which would be specifically looking at the issue of a critical need for skills in Canada and at a way in which we can supply them. In the meantime, I have met with the provincial ministers of employment and immigration and discussed this very topic.

We also discussed what we should be doing about the revision of the Adult Occupational Training Act. As the hon. member knows, we put over $800 million into that act. Many of the provincial ministers have indicated that they would like to shift the emphasis in the program from institutional training to industrial training. I can also tell the hon. member that I have had very specific negotiations with the province of British Columbia through representatives of the minister of labour there concerning their new apprenticeship program. Our hopes are that out of the additional $10 million which will be put into the critical training skill program, some of the money could be used in the new apprenticeship program under discussion in British Columbia. There have been two meetings with the minister of labour of British Columbia and our officials are now meeting. I hope to have further discussions when I am out in British Columbia at the beginning of next week.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I recognize that the minister is taking this question rather seriously and that he has had discussions with the provincial governments. The question is, has he had any discussions with industry? Whenever I advance this idea, the point is always raised that unions would not go along with it and that industry is not interested. From my experience as an industrialist and from talking to other industrialists, I find the contrary to be the truth. Industry is interested but they need the help and support of government to bring together a sort of tripartite approach which also involves labour and government. It does not matter how many institutions we build, skills and technology change so fast that we will always be behind the times. In the context of modern industrial development, only industry can train the people it requires. Of course, we need to back that up with some institutional training and schemes such as the one we are debating today for tax aid to industry for apprentice training and so on.

We also need to get the unions behind this. They would like to have two positions for every apprentice that is being trained, of course. Unfortunately, they have been very shortsighted about this. We politicians may talk forever but unless we bring the other two partners into the scheme nothing will be achieved.

Has the minister discussed this matter with his colleagues and are any discussions going on with labour and industry in regard to it?

Mr. Axworthy: In the past month or so, Mr. Chairman, I have met with representatives of the aerospace industry, mining groups, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, automobile workers and the CLC to discuss the question of how to develop new training programs. Within the next week I shall meet with people in the oil resource industry. We have also met with the employers councils in British Columbia to discuss the matter.

We must try to develop a review of the kinds of financing to be used for training programs. The hon. member suggested that the levy grant system used in Europe, where there is a sharing of training costs among industrial groups be considered and I must tell him that we are setting up joint task forces composed of people from my department and from industrial areas.

One of the most useful blueprints for that came under the sector approach that the minister of state for economic development took 18 months ago when there was an examination of skill requirements industry by industry. Some fairly good information came out of that which is now being used as a basis for discussion and negotiation.

I intend to meet as many industry groups as I can to deal with the strange paradox of having 900,000 unemployed at the same time as a growing shortage of skilled labour. We must find a way of transferring those who are unemployed into the areas of demand which require high skills. That is what we are looking at right now.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I was rather shocked at the remarks of my very good friend, the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence. It did not sound like him at all, as he is normally so positive. I concluded that he must be suffering from some malady like the 'flu or the grippe or a little dose of western Canadian liberalism! Perhaps he is sitting a little too close to the minister. I hope that the attitude of the minister will not wash off on the member.

I have only observed this debate fairly briefly, Mr. Chairman, but it seems to me that the minister could get the bill through more rapidly if he were less chippy in his answers and more forthcoming. I also listened intently to the remarks of the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean. While I agree with some of his remarks, I find it rather odd that he seems to take the view that Canada is in a rather good position in terms of unemployment. He said that his area had 15 per cent unemployment, which I would think is totally unacceptable. I cannot believe that he accepts that. I think he said Canada had one of the best employment rates in the world. Unless I am wrong, France, West Germany, The Netherlands and even the United States have better rates than Canada. In other words, Canada has more unemployment than they have. I reckon the real Canadian unemployment rate is somewhere near 12.4 per cent. I simply say that rate is not acceptable.

It seems to me that the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain was right when he said that this bill is rather short term or cosmetic in its approach and that we should look toward a long-term industrial strategy—which does not seem to be evident—and a guaranteed minimum annual income in this country. I wonder if the minister has examined the Humphrey-Hawkins proposal in the United States. They said they would not accept 12 per cent or 15 per cent unemployment but would set a rate of 3 per cent or 4 per cent and guarantee everybody a job. This is the most forward-looking legislation I have seen. I wonder if the minister has had a chance to look at that bill. Is he prepared to consider that kind of procedure?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, in the United States system there is a division of powers, which means that legislators can sometimes go on at great length and pass bills which the administration then does not implement. In the last statistics published, the unemployment rate in the United States in shown as being equal to ours. While the Humphrey-Hawkins bill has a very important objective, I would point out that it is an objective which was set out in 1913 for the Liberals by Mackenzie King. So the Americans are 30 years behind us in this respect. They are experiencing the same kind of problems we have in living up to that because of the very turbulent economic conditions that exist.

Mr. Waddell: Has the minister considered the possibility of framing some sort of long-term industrial strategy to implement the measures of Mackenzie King in 1913 to solve our present difficulties with unemployment. Has the minister considered moving in that direction?

Mr. Axworthy: Not only have we considered it, Mr. Chairman, we are in the process of doing it. It is unfortunate that the hon. member has not participated in the debate sooner. He could have entered it at any time in the last three weeks.

We have established a parliamentary committee to develop exactly those kinds of proposals. We also have a task force working within government to examine the different conditions that are changing in the economy of the country and we are studying how government programs may best be utilized to solve that problem. Perhaps the hon. member should speak to his colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North, who will be a member of that committee and suggest these ideas to him, because those are the objectives of the committee.

● (1750)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, I thought the member was going to suggest that I speak to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and ask him about Mr. King and his plans. However, I want to add a couple of comments in what I hope is a positive spirit of debate, since I am urging the minister and the member from Eglinton to be positive. I think the member for Prince George-Peace River who last spoke brought up the point about the need for critical skills and for long-term skills. He also made reference to the apprenticeship program. Yesterday I flew from British Columbia with a gentleman who was president of a small corporation in Richmond, the Canadian Aircraft Products Ltd. Even though he was from Richmond, he deigned to sit with me! I heard a story that I have heard before. It concerned a fairly sophisticated corporation that makes aircraft parts and is looking for workers because they cannot get skilled workers. So what do they do? I hear a member say that we should blame it all on the unions. Let us not blame it all on them. If they have some part of the blame, then they should take it. But it seems to me that it goes further. It seems to go into the school system and into our attitudes and so on. We have too easily taken skilled labour from the old country. I know because my father came from the old country where they seem to get some kind of an education in skilled trades, and we are still relying on them.

I have heard the minister's reply and I will not ask him what he is going to do about it. I was happy that the question was put and that the reply was given, and I would second the need to encourage real jobs in terms of apprenticeship jobs.

I know the hon. member from Richmond will not believe this, but as a small employer in Richmond where I used to have a business I took advantage of this program. I can tell the hon. member from Lac-Saint-Jean that. On one occasion when we hired a secretary, I suppose we did not need to take advantage of the program; but it was a good break in terms of money, although I think we would have hired the secretary anyway. On another occasion the program was useful because we were able to hire a woman who had been out of the labour force. She had had children and it was somewhat difficult for her to get back into the labour force. We took a chance on her and it worked wonderfully well in getting her back into the labour force. I tell the minister that the program was helpful and that is why we will ultimately support this bill.

Before I sit down I want to ask the minister one more question. It has to do with remarks made by my colleague the member from Regina East and concerns the native people.

If I could back up a little bit, I am not sure whether the minister noticed in today's question period—perhaps my friend from Lac-Saint-Jean did—when the member from Broadview-Greenwood asked a question in French about an industrial matter and the government minister from Windsor replied in French. This was done as a matter of course. I do not know whether many members noticed, I am a new member and I noticed. It occurred to me how far we have come in this country.

As I look across at my friends over there—the little coterie, I am tempted to say the poker game, but I know that comes later—it comes partly through their efforts, through sticking up for their language, their culture and demanding it. I congratulate them for that.

I allude to this because I am thinking about the question of the native people. At some point we have to make a similar type of commitment. We have to say that there is an injustice there and we must be prepared to make extraordinary commitments to native people in Canada. I find that the employment provisions in this bill—I think it is something like $10 million but I am sure the minister can correct me if I am wrong—are not really sufficient for native employment.

I have a letter here from the Kootenay Indian area council. This letter is in reference to work on the pipeline, the Alaska natural gas pipeline which is to come through their area. They are requesting that the Northern Native Development Corporation act as a vehicle through which people are hired so they can monitor it, protect their land sites and ensure that people are hired for a reasonable length of time and on a reasonable scale. Yet they never seem to get any help or commitments, either from the pipeline companies or from the northern pipeline agency. This is what they say in their letter:

> Our request has been made clear on a number of occasions that the NNDC be given the contract for clearing, grubbing, grading and stockpiling on the pipeline to accommodate the employment of our people.

I saw this kind of employment in Alaska, in Copper Center, where native corporations take gravel and have contracts with the northern pipeline. I saw women workers in Alaska who belonged to the Teamsters Union. They were working on the trucks. Through the American civil rights act and through the affirmative action program they were working. The Americans are way ahead of us here. Has the minister given any thought to these types of native programs for expanding the provisions in this bill to encourage further native employment and to consider the employment of native corporations on large projects, such as the pipeline?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that there is no provision in this bill for that particular aspect. We are debating the employment tax credit which has nothing to do with this particular issue.

However, I would like to point out to the hon. member that the additional $10 million that we put forward for native training opportunities is to be used for exactly those kinds of purposes. I have already held several discussions in western Canada with native organizations to establish how we can help them to create their own training programs run by the band councils or by their own corporations to take advantage of the resource projects. Those discussions are ongoing on a continuous basis both with me personally and with my officials.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I am not going to have time to go into the questions that I wanted to raise in detail, but I want to tell the minister that it seems to me unfortunate that the government opposite, ever since the time of Mackenzie King, appears to place great emphasis on programs, committees and all kinds of airy, fairy solutions that involve more bureaucracy, more handing back of the taxpayers' money to someone else, instead of tackling the real problems and coming up with the real solutions.

I would like to pursue a theme initiated by my friend from Prince George-Peace River. It relates to the importance of developing real jobs in Canada, and in particular to recognizing the tremendous demand for skilled technical people which will materialize in Canada over the next decade. We have to recognize that the unemployment rate among the young people of this country, is almost twice the national average.

The minister should know that each oil sands plant, each heavy oil plant, each nuclear installation, each major coal project and each major pipeline project is going to employ thousands of people—at least in the tens of thousands in skilled and technical areas. In addition, as a portion of that complement, it is estimated that each oil sands plant will require over 3,000 engineers, that is, professional university-trained people. That figure does not even begin to include all the spin-off jobs related to all of the service industries that will be required in support of a massive national effort over the next ten years to make this country self-sufficient in energy.

In the professional areas we are going to need civil, electrical, and mechanical engineers, physicists, scientists, economists, and we do not have a program—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

PRIME MINISTER OHIRA

CONDOLENCES ON DEATH OF JAPANESE PRIME MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, concerning the sudden death yesterday of Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira. Mr. Ohira was recognized by his colleagues around the world for his sage advice and considered counsel.

We in this House were honoured to have Mr. Ohira speak to us only last month. His closing words to this Parliament are a fitting tribute to his ideals, and I quote his words:

The rich life that we strive for is a life that rewards us with deeper satisfactions. We strive to create a world where our children and grandchildren can feel proud to be born into.

We in this House, Madam Speaker, are indeed proud to have known Mr. Ohira. Therefore I move, seconded by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau):

That this House convey to the government of Japan, and the family of Prime Minister Ohira, its condolence over the death of our friend, Masayoshi Ohira.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I wish to associate the members of our party with the sentiments of this motion.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA COUNCIL

CRITICISM OF WORKS OF ART PURCHASED FOR DISPLAY IN OTTAWA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I rise with reference to action by the Canada Council in purchasing, at a cost of $100,000, so-called works of art constructed of twisted aluminum and steel, five of which have just been erected in Rockcliffe Park, with six more to follow by July 5, resembling what could be termed a hideous scene from the morning after the night before, including, for example, two objects of twisted bands of green and blue steel by Robert Murray, for $31,000.

Having viewed these incredible, insipid examples of so-called Canadian art, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the government immediately require the Canada Council to account for this nonsensical, wanton, wasteful expenditure of public funds. Further, that the Canada Council be instructed to desist from such unnecessary, extravagant expenditures in the future; and, finally, this House condemns the constantly continued spending splurges from the public purse by this government's unrestrained and uncontrolled spending policies.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WATER MANAGEMENT SYSTEM—CO-OPERATION WITH UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, having regard to the fact that the former Liberal minister of the environment and the former member for Kootenay West are both on record in this House as expressing their disapproval of the Kootenay River diversion project in British Columbia, and recognized that the American Libby Dam project might ultimately be responsible for a serious reduction in nutrients, adversely affecting the fishery in Kootenay Lake, and in view of the fact that the just released report on the water quality of Kootenay Lake, sponsored by Environment Canada, has confirmed that this is indeed the case, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King):

That the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of External Affairs initiate immediate discussions with officials in the United States to develop a more co-operative water management system or, failing this, that the minister refer this matter to the International Joint Commission on the basis that decisions made in the United States have adversely affected the Canadian environment, specifically, the Kootenay River system.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

CALL FOR REVIEW OF INSPECTION SYSTEM PRIOR TO ISSUING EXPORT PERMITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Whereas changes in federal fisheries inspection procedures are causing higher demands on inspection and facilities than can be met, particularly in Atlantic Canada, whereas this is causing delays to processors in receiving certificates to permit export of fish from Canada, and whereas the annual amount of exports has tripled for fish products in the last few years and the number of inspections have remained the same, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

● (1410)

That this House urge the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to review the inspection system, which is delaying issuance of certificates, and to implement procedures that are cognitive of the need for quality; and also to recognize the reduced number of personnel and facilities available to meet the needs for speed for our processors in Atlantic Canada.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HORTICULTURE

IMPORTATION OF FLORIDA TOMATOES—UNFAIR COMPETITION WITH CANADIAN GROWERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It relates to the importation of Florida field tomatoes into the British Columbia market, such that the volume of imports is displacing 50 per cent of the domestic hothouse product and thereby creating unfair competition and causing hardship and financial difficulty to Canadian growers. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King):

That the government take immediate action to impose an appropriate level of surtax on Florida tomatoes to at least restore a position of equal competition to Canadian growers, and that this government accept the recommendations of the Canadian Horticultural Council of including tomatoes in the list of named commodities under the automatic surtax provisions enacted on October 22, 1979, by the previous PC government.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE ECONOMIC DISPARITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in May hit its highest level since April, 1979, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That this House direct the government to immediately bring in measures to provide tax contracts to defer taxes for industries locating or expanding in areas suffering from economic disparity, and that it expedite its efforts to implement the small business development bond.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

FIRE PROTECTION FOR PORT OF VANCOUVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. Inasmuch as the city of Vancouver soon will cancel the operation of the only fireboat which provides fire protection in the port of Vancouver, and since all municipalities bordering Vancouver harbour require fire protection by sea, and this should clearly be the responsibility of the National Harbours Board, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That the Minister of Transport take immediate steps to instruct the National Harbours Board to purchase the Vancouver city fireboat and, in co-operation with the region, extend fire protection to cover the waterfront areas adjacent to all municipalities surrounding the port of Vancouver.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ELECTRICITY

DISPARITY BETWEEN ATLANTIC RATES AND NATIONAL AVERAGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of growing urgency to Atlantic Canadians. In view of the continuing, unacceptably high unemployment in Atlantic Canada, arising in large part from commercial and industrial electricity rates—which in Atlantic Canada are already 60 per cent above the national average—and concerned that any further escalation in the next round of oil price increases will further discourage new industry from locating in Atlantic Canada, and now seriously threatens existing jobs in the primary resource and manufacturing sectors in that part of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

● (1415)

That this House direct the government to take the necessary action, when setting energy costs, to eliminate the current disparity between Atlantic Canada's industrial and domestic electricity rates and the national average rates or, at best, not permit it to further widen, and to provide capital assistance programs designed to assist in the conversion of oil to coal for electricity generation.

Madam Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TERRORISM

VIOLENCE IN SOUTH AFRICA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that Mr. Yusuf Salojee, a Canadian who is an official spokesman for the African National Congress and who works full time for that organization in support of its efforts to destroy the government of South Africa, has confirmed that his organization was responsible for the terrorist bombings of two synthetic fuel refineries and will direct, promote and encourage other acts of violence, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That this House condemn terrorist groups like the ANC which are publicly dedicated to and supportive of violence, including killing of innocent people, in pursuit of their political ambitions and goals.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

OIL PRICING AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question for the Minister of Energy relates to the lack of an oil pricing agreement. Having regard to the fact that in the last three months the minister has held only one substantive meeting with each of the producing provinces, can he tell the House whether he has arranged a series of further meetings to negotiate the agreement; and, specifically, will he tell us when, where and with whom these meetings will be held?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I have had two meetings with the ministers of each of the producing provinces. I have also been in communication with them over the telephone at various times; I was in communication by telephone as recently as today. I plan to have further meetings next week with my colleagues.

Mr. Jarvis: Inasmuch as the present pricing agreement expires in 18 days and, perhaps as significantly, the premiers and ministers of producing provinces, including the premier of Saskatchewan, as late as this morning have indicated that an oil pricing agreement is important, if not vital, to constitutional negotiations, is the minister able to explain to the House why he cannot inform us specifically of a timetable of oil pricing meetings?

Mr. Lalonde: I have just indicated to the hon. member that meetings are being planned for next week.

Mr. Jarvis: With respect to constitutional negotiations, the Prime Minister has imposed a three-month deadline and has called for a tight, intensive schedule of meetings and negotiations. May I ask the minister why, when on the pricing agreement there is an unavoidable 18 months deadline, we do not have an equally tight and extensive timetable of meetings? The minister has not told us when he is going to meet, or with whom or where.

Mr. Lalonde: First, I think that in fairness the hon. member should be correct in quoting what was said in the House by the Prime Minister and what happened on Monday. No deadline or schedule was imposed. The Prime Minister said in the House that this had been agreed to with 11 first ministers: I refer the hon. member to the communique which was tabled. So that was not imposed; it was commonly agreed to by the first ministers concerned.

As for the second part of the question, I intend to be in touch again with one of my colleagues before the end of the day in order to find out whether or not we will be available on the same date. But all the meetings will take place in the course of next week and there will be intensive negotiations and discussions.

● (1420)

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, that is an interesting change from what was said in the House. My question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources relates to other commitments made in the House by himself and his colleagues with regard to a blended price system.

Is it still the intention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to introduce a blended price system which will reduce the import compensation program by the $1 billion which was announced in the mini-budget of the Minister of Finance on April 21?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, we have already indicated on several occasions in the House, and I had also the opportunity to do so outside the House, that our proposal for a blended price included a provision under which the cost of imported oil would gradually be blended in the general price of oil sold in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, given that blending, that gradualism and the commitment of the Minister of Finance in terms of how much will occur this year, as well as increases by OPEC and the fact that Canadian production is decreasing and Canadian consumption is increasing—a lot of it is leakage to foreign airlines, truckers and automobile drivers—will the minister at least have the honesty to admit to the House that he cannot have that blended price system, with the savings the Minister of Finance talked about, plus keeping his commitments in terms of crude oil price increases which would be less than those promised by the Progressive Conservative government, and that one of those Liberal promises must be broken? They cannot both be kept.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Absolutely not, Madam Speaker.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY—REPORT OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's very strong commitment in the Speech from the Throne to have the government initiate measures that would reflect and support improvement in the status of Canadian women—a commitment that I feel was personal as well as governmental—I wonder if the Prime Minister would respond to the critical report issued yesterday by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women which, among other things, stated that the government's recent employment strategy favours men.

I know the Prime Minister has a personal commitment in this area, and that is why I am asking him this question. With respect to women in the labour market, does the Prime Minister adhere to the council's specific request that the government take measures now to remove the barriers in the Canada Manpower training programs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is quite correct in referring to the commitment that this government has. I am aware of the particular details relating to the figures quoted by the hon. member, but I am sure the parliamentary secretary would be happy to deal with the question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM AND SPEAKER OF SINGAPORE PARLIAMENT

Madam Speaker: I would like at this time to draw the attention of members of this House to the presence in our gallery of a delegation of visiting parliamentarians, led by Dr. Yeoh, Speaker of the Parliament of Singapore.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM MALAYSIA

Madam Speaker: I would like, also, at this time to draw to the attention of members of this House the presence of a delegation from Malaysia, led by the Hon. Abu Hassan, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Industry in Malaysia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUS OF WOMEN

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION IN SALARIES—MEASURES TO RECTIFY

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): I ask the Prime Minister for his personal support to improve the condition of women in Canadian society. I do not ask him for facts or figures, but for his personal support. May I ask him about a related matter concerning the finding of the Canadian Human Rights Commission that over 3,000 public employees, predominantly women, have been very seriously discriminated against in terms of wages and salaries.

Will the Prime Minister take some initiatives to see that this finding is respected, to begin negotiations and to ensure that, retroactively, this wage differential is recovered?

[Translation]

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): With regard to the first question, Madam Speaker, it might be that I am too far away for the hon. member—

An hon. Member: You are not tall enough.

Mr. Dawson: I am not tall enough, as the hon. member says. However, I would advise the hon. member that if we have decided to make the Minister of Employment and Immigration responsible for the status of women it is precisely to try to balance the forces facing one another and make sure that jobs are just as available to women as to anybody else.

As for the second question, I will inquire about it and get back to the hon. member.

[English]

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, not only is the hon. member not visible, but he is not understandable. He did not reply at all to my question which related specifically to the 3,000 public servants who have been found by the Human Rights Commission to have been discriminated against. I should like, once again, to address my question to the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: He prefers to rewrite the constitution.

Miss Jewett: It is a personal question. When you see half the Speech from the Throne—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is entitled to rephrase her question and, of course, she can address it to whomsoever she pleases.

Miss Jewett: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am addressing my third and last question—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: Thank you for the applause.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Miss Jewett: I wonder if the Prime Minister has been made aware of the statement made by Edgar Gallant, chairman of the Public Service Commission, saying that it would be extremely difficult to improve the lot of women in the public service. I am very happy to say that it was not difficult to improve the lot of Francophones. It was done without an amendment to the Public Service Employment Act.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Miss Jewett: But apparently it is very difficult to improve the lot of women. Would the Prime Minister say whether he would give consideration to issuing specific directives to ensure that women have equal opportunities in the Public Service of Canada?

Mr. Dawson: Madam Speaker, so far as the first question is concerned, the hon. member knows very well that if this government decided to make the Minister of Employment and Immigration responsible for the status of women, it would be because this government wanted to try to solve as many employment problems as possible.

Concerning the 3,000 cases about which the hon. member is speaking, I have to admit that I do not have the details concerning all 3,000. If the hon. member wishes to come back to us with the full details, we will answer her question.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON TAXING EXPORTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it relates to the oil pricing agreement and the uncertainty he has created in the province of British Columbia where he has not yet advanced any kind of firm position, but has talked about such things as the federal export tax on natural gas, a federal levy on natural gas, distributor level, and so on.

In the case of British Columbia, it is a very serious consideration which will, of course, have some effect on the constitutional discussions. The minister's meetings so far have resulted in the energy minister of British Columbia asserting that everything emanating from Ottawa recently under the guise of an energy policy has nothing at all to do with energy, and everything to do with money.

Could I ask the minister when he intends to advance to British Columbia a firm federal position, because so far all he has told them is that he will bring in some kind of a tax on natural gas which will cost the province of British Columbia an additional $300 million?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I know there have been various speculations and I have said that as long as the negotiations were going to continue, I would not speculate on specific reports or specific rumours. And I certainly do not intend to do so today. I will not even confirm or deny the rumour to which the hon. member has referred. Those negotiations are proceeding between the federal minister and the provincial ministers concerned. They are going to continue between now and the end of the month, and I will be happy to report to the hon. member and to the House the result of those negotiations.

Mr. Oberle: As Madam Speaker will recall, I did not ask the minister to give the House the contents of the clear position he advanced to British Columbia. I asked him whether he advanced the position—instead of rumours which he now seems to be confirming.

Since the uncertainty he has created does not only have a dilatory effect on the constitutional talks upon which the government is embarking with the provinces, but already has shown very serious effects on the industry which is seeking other places to explore for new resources, particularly in northeastern British Columbia and other parts of Canada, can we tie the minister down to committing the government to producing a firm position which he will advance to the provinces?

Time is running out, as my colleague said in his load-off question. At what point in time, between now and the end of the month, is the government prepared to advance to the provinces a position into which they can sink their teeth?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, various avenues have been explored with the provinces. As the hon. member should know—and I am sure he knows—when one is in the process of negotiation, I do not think there is any great advantage in freezing oneself into a single position—neither side—until one is reaching the end of those negotiations. This is a very normal process.

I quite understand my provincial colleagues wanting to keep their options open as late as possible. I have refused to put them in a position where they would have to refuse any possible room for manoeuvring. I have enough respect for them to think that they also want to have some room for manoeuvring. This is the process that we are going on. I think the process is going on normally and I will be able to report, as I said, the results later on.

NEGOTIATIONS TO CONCLUDE ENERGY AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given the fact that the two massive oil sands projects—Alsands and Imperial in northeastern Alberta—face a one-year delay for lack of an oil pricing agreement, and that these plants alone would contribute $3.6 billion to the Canadian balance of payments and provide 97 million man-hours of construction jobs, is the minister prepared to commit to this House that he will, if necessary, negotiate night and day to conclude an energy agreement, stop this idiotic posturing to fulfil Liberal campaign promises and get on with the job of securing the energy supply of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would only answer the hon. member by indicating that the federal government is ready to and has approved proceeding with those two plants. As a matter of fact, Petro-Canada, with Alberta Gas Trunk Line, has already come out with a proposal for another plant, a third plant. So the federal government is very supportive of the construction of more tar sands plants. The companies are ready to go ahead with those plants.

I remind the hon. member that it was the government of Alberta which said that it would refuse to let those plants go ahead, until and unless it had the prices it wanted under a new pricing agreement. This is what we are negotiating. We are not the ones preventing those plants from proceeding. I am afraid the hon. member has the wrong information.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources knows full well that the go-ahead on those plants depends solely on an energy pricing agreement. How can the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources expect this House to believe that an energy agreement is a priority with his government when he has failed to meet with the minister of energy for Alberta for one full month?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, we are not putting any condition on the building of those plants: we are encouraging their construction. We are supporting the immediate start of those plants. The companies are ready to go ahead. It is the government of Alberta that has been putting conditions. As far as reaching an agreement—

An hon. Member: You are dead wrong.

Mr. Lalonde: —I remind the hon. member that there is an agreement in existence at the present time until July 1.

An hon. Member: Who is responsible for energy self-sufficiency in Canada?

Mr. Lalonde: That agreement is operational now and we are negotiating a new agreement. As soon as those negotiations are completed, I will be very happy to inform the hon. member of the results.

SMALL BUSINESS

ENFORCEMENT OF IMPORT QUOTAS FOR FIVE YEARS

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. With reference to the 1977 decision of the anti-dumping tribunal to impose quotas on shoes imported into Canada, and with further reference to the action taken by the government then in power to limit shoe imports, and in view of the fact that, in spite of these quotas, more than 12 million pairs of shoes entered Canada illegally over the past three years, could the minister advise the House, first, whether he intends to correct this anomaly which has caused serious hardship to the Canadian footwear industry by demanding the enforcement of the quotas; and, second, whether the minister intends to consider the possibility, as suggested by the shoe manufacturers of Canada, to extend the current quotas for another five years.

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State, Small Businesses): Madam Speaker, I must advise the hon. member for Sherbrooke that, together with the Minister of State for Finance, I had a most successful working session with the representatives of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada, and we are having, on a continuing basis, discussions with the industry, the importers, the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, about the options which I, jointly with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, will eventually submit to my cabinet colleagues. The quotas are scheduled to expire on November 30. We are considering various ways and means to protect the best interests of the shoe manufacturing industry and Canadian consumers.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PERSONAL TAX INCREASES—JUSTIFICATION THEREFOR

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance.

In view of the survey released today, which showed that corporate profits were up over 50 per cent in the first quarter of 1980 over the first quarter of 1979 and that, according to the minister's own survey—his economic review—the real disposable income of the average Canadian actually fell in 1979, can the minister tell the House, where is the fairness in proposing substantial personal tax increases at a time when the economy is on the verge of a recession and when the real disposable income of the average Canadian is falling? Could he please explain the fairness of these proposals?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is ahead of himself because no proposal has been made to increase substantially the personal income tax of Canadians. If that proposal is ever made, the hon. member will have an opportunity at that time to make his point of view known.

As the hon. member said, it is true that there was information today with respect to the profit picture of a limited number of firms in Canada. I think one ought to bear in mind that the very strong profit picture is due, in a certain sense, to very large increases in speculative commodity prices. I do not think this profit picture will continue into the remainder of 1980 because of the onset of a recession in the United States.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the profits of our chartered banks which are also up substantially this quarter over last quarter. In view of the announcement just a couple of minutes ago that the bank rate for today is 11.29 per cent, a drop of .52 per cent, can the minister tell us why—

● (1440)

Mr. Rae: I find it hard to understand why those trained individuals on the opposite benches can take credit for the rates when they go down, but refuse to take responsibility for them when they go up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: My question to the Minister of Finance concerns the chartered banks. Why did the government reject amendments to the Bank Act which are being proposed by our party? These amendments would guarantee that the public would know if, when the rates charged by the Bank of Canada go down, the rates charged by the chartered banks would also go down?

Can the minister tell us why his government rejected amendments which would give him and his government the power to assess the reasonableness of interest rates charged to average Canadians?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the Bank Act is at present before the standing committee. When it is reported to the House it will be possible to deal with the questions which are now before the standing committee.

Mr. Rae: You rejected them this morning.

Mr. MacEachen: I would remind the hon. member, as he grows very concerned about increased profits, that it is because of the strong profit picture of the last two years in Canadian industry that it was possible to have a 19.4 per cent increase in business investment in Canada. It is also probable, because of the profit picture, that the spending plans in 1980 will be equally great. The hon. member ought to put the picture of profits beside the picture of the very substantial growth of capital investment in Canada.

ENERGY

OIL—PRICE INCREASES FOR HOME HEATING

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I realize that the minister has not yet established his made-in-Canada oil price, but I understand that the price will rise by about 25 per cent. Millions of Canadians are totally dependent upon oil for home heating and pay approximately $800 annually for fuel oil.

How does the minister expect these consumers to bear this additional cost of $200 per annum that will result from this increase? Does he realize that those people who are in lower income brackets spend twice as much of their income, percentagewise, on fuel oil as those in the higher income brackets?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, obviously the hon. member is the only person in the House with this information. He seems to know what the price increase would be under the new oil pricing arrangement. I can tell the hon. member that we will not come out with the kind of proposals and budgets which Parliament and the country rejected in the last election.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, who has just heard what was said by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If this price increase comes about, will the Minister of Finance tell the House whether there will be any plan to assist home owners who are faced with drastic increases in the price of fuel oil? I would not want the plan to be similar to the minister's plan for mortgage interest which he abandoned.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if I could eliminate the problem in this particular area as rapidly as we eliminated it in the area of mortgage interest, I would be delighted.

Oral Questions

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

URANIUM EXPLORATION AND FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or, because of his recent very unfortunate altercation with a particularly vicious bathtub, whoever might be speaking on his behalf.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nickerson: Could I have quiet, please, Madam Speaker?

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nickerson: It is understood that requests have been made to the Government of Canada for the imposition of a moratorium, similar to the one imposed in B.C., on uranium exploration and development in the Northwest Territories, an area which, for the time being, is under federal jurisdiction. Could the minister advise the House whether or not the government has taken the request seriously and, if so, whether it does or does not intend to impose such a moratorium?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, there is no moratorium under active consideration.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

CANADA'S NUCLEAR SYSTEM—FOREIGN SALES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since recent information has shown that the Port Hawkesbury heavy water plant has no further orders, and since the economic impact of a shutdown will be significant not only to the people working there and the Cape Breton area, but also the Canadian economy, depending on nuclear technology, will the minister tell the House what the government's plans are regarding the Port Hawkesbury plant, and if there are any foreign sales for Canada's nuclear system in the near future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it has already been indicated to the House that the nuclear industry of this country is under review. I can assure the hon. member that at the present time there is no excess supply of heavy water. However, the government decided several months ago to build up a reserve inventory of heavy water for purposes of national security. I do not see any problems with regard to heavy water plants in Cape Breton in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, I would take exception to the response that there is a need for $100 million worth of heavy water for national security. That is a very questionable premise. Since the answer given by the minister is really an indication of the government's failure to sell our nuclear technology, can the minister tell the House what the government's internal review of nuclear energy has determined thus far, what the basis of Canada's nuclear energy policy will be now that the industry is withering on the vine, and whether the country will have an opportunity to have access to information from AECL and the government through an open review before members of Parliament?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the hon. member should know that the party to which he belongs was the government last year, and that during that time it did not change the decision to build up an inventory for national security. I believe that the inventory build-up is justified for our own security purposes and for the purpose of security of supply to the people who purchased Candu reactors. These countries should be able to rely on Canada for an adequate supply of heavy water for their Candu reactors. I think the decision was a wise one and I am surprised that the hon. member does not seem to agree.

In so far as the other questions raised by the hon. member are concerned, the review is proceeding but we have not reached a conclusion as yet. When we do come to a conclusion, we will examine the ways in which Parliament and the public can express their views in reaction to some of the proposals which would be put forward at that time. Obviously, if members in this House or organizations outside the House have views to express they will be most welcome and we will certainly take their views into consideration.

NATIVE PEOPLES—DISCUSSIONS WITH GOVERNMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In the document entitled "Priorities for a New Canadian Constitution" which was submitted by the Prime Minister to the constitutional conference on Monday, the last paragraph related to the involvement of native peoples in the constitution process. After his statement on Tuesday, the Prime Minister said that this matter was discussed at the conference, but it is not clear what was decided.

Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether that paragraph was agreed to by a majority or a consensus of the provinces and, if so, will it be the subject of further discussion at the working meetings during the summer? At what stage will the Indians and the Inuits be asked to give their views to those working meetings?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the document which was tabled was presented by the federal government. The provinces are not bound by that document—including the last paragraph—except in so far as the list of items to be discussed, which was agreed to by the first ministers.

The particular paragraph concerning natives and about which the hon. member has inquired was not the subject of any agreement. The matter was discussed and the paragraph outlines the view of the federal government. But at this stage I am in no position to speak on behalf of the provinces as to what they intend to do about the matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VENICE SUMMIT CONFERENCE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Could he tell the House which ministers, if any, will be accompanying him to the summit conference in Venice?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as is customary—and I believe this was the case in the summits we have attended in the past four or five years—I will be accompanied by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Finance. Because of the importance of energy on the agenda, I also intend to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to accompany the delegation. I believe this was the practice followed by the right hon. leader of the opposition, when he was prime minister, at the Tokyo Summit.

ENERGY

OIL PRICING AGREEMENT—DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since that conference will occur prior to June 30, which is the date for the expiry of the present pricing agreement, does the minister expect to conclude an oil pricing agreement before he leaves the country? If not, can he tell the House what contingency plan the government has established in the event that the present pricing agreement expires before midnight on June 30 and no new agreement is signed?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have already indicated to the House that I would hold meetings next week, presuming that I will attend the summit conference in Venice. I want to assure the Leader of the Opposition that I will be back well before June 30. In fact, I hope to be back the day after the end of the Venice conference in order to carry on the negotiations until June 30, if necessary.

[English]

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. This matter takes on some urgency since there has been so little progress realized, and perhaps no real progress attempted by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources since his swearing into office and the imminent expiry of the oil pricing agreement. It is interesting to know that his travel plans would involve him coming back to Canada before the agreement expires.

My question is, what contingency plan, if any, does the minister have in place? If he has none, I think the House will like him to say so, and if he has one, we would like him to tell us what it is.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I act on the basis that we will arrive at an agreement and not on the basis that we will have to prepare contingency plans because of a lack of agreement. Our objective has always been and remains to come to a settlement and I have already indicated that we will try our best to do so.

Since the Leader of the Opposition himself has attempted unsuccessfully for six months to achieve an agreement, he knows that it is no easy matter and that a lot of work needs to be done. I intend to have at least as much success in my negotiations as he did in his.

FISHERIES

SPORTS FISHERY AT MOUTH OF FRASER RIVER, B.C.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question will be to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, in the absence of the minister.

The parliamentary secretary will be aware that the Fraser River chinook gillnet fishery was closed down yesterday and there was an announcement today that the sports fishery at the mouth of the Fraser River will be closed down on Friday night, as well as Rivers Inlet, for chinook salmon. The closure of that fishery, particularly the sports fishery, indicates the seriousness of the depletion of stocks in the Fraser River and elsewhere in British Columbia.

In view of this, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could inform us how the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans can permit the Aluminum Company of Canada to divert the Nechako River in order to reduce the minimum flow requirement in that river, under the requirements of the department, from 1,000 cubic feet per second to 500 cubic feet per second, thus further reducing the health of the chinook salmon in the Nechako and Fraser Rivers?

How can the minister reconcile not forcing Kemano I and the Aluminum Company of Canada to meet the requirements for fisheries in those river systems? Could the parliamentary secretary inform this House of the facts?

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question, because he appreciates the concerns of the salmon fishery in British Columbia. The hon. member is quite correct inasmuch as the Aluminum Company of Canada has cut the water down to 500 cubic feet per second. We have asked our officials to look into this situation. I think within the next few days we will be able to make sure that the water rate over that dam is back to 1,000 cubic feet per second.

Mr. Miller: Madam Speaker, I think the House should be aware that the reduction of that flow is not for smelter purposes but is for the sale of hydroelectric energy to B.C. Hydro and then later to the United States.

I should like to ask a question about Kemano II, which is a project that will influence 40 per cent of the B.C. salmon industry production in the Skeena River, the Fraser River, the Nechako River and the Dean River. Has the minister any plans, in co-operation with the British Columbia government, to call for a full public inquiry into Kemano II which, if it goes ahead, will further jeopardize all salmon production in those four rivers and reduce the income of the B.C. salmon fishermen, shore workers and those engaged in processing?

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, I indicated in the House the other day that the minister had stated he was in favour of a public inquiry into the Kemano II project. This is the position of the department. I will bring the hon. member's question to the attention of the minister and get back to him with a further answer at a later date.

HIGH LEVELS OF ASBESTOS DUST AT CERTAIN AIRPORTS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Yesterday, the government of New Brunswick was forced to close its principal office building in Fredericton because of unacceptably high levels of asbestos dust. Tests are currently under way at Toronto airport by the ministry of transport with regard to unacceptably high levels of asbestos dust found in certain facilities in the airport.

Is the minister, on behalf of the government and in pursuit of her responsibilities for national health, conducting tests in all federal government buildings to determine whether there are unacceptable and dangerously high levels of asbestos dust, especially in buildings erected prior to 1972?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, further to questions on that topic relating to the airport situation which were asked last week, I checked with the department and was told that regular monitoring was taking place. I was not informed of any specific critical situations such as the hon. member seems to be suggesting. I will inquire again in the department. If the hon. member wants to give me more detail, I shall, of course, benefit from his knowledge.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, perhaps by way of a supplementary question I could suggest to the minister that in view of the fact that a number of schools in Canada have had to be closed because of dangerously high levels of asbestos dust, and the incident in Fredericton yesterday, as well as the incident at Toronto airport where 115 Government of Canada employees have had to be monitored and tested because of exposure to high levels of dust—surely in the light of that evidence it would be incumbent upon the minister to order a full-scale monitoring of all government buildings. Has she done so? If not, why not?

Miss Bégin: Madam Speaker, I think I have very clearly and frankly said that I have not ordered such a monitoring. The hon. member is speaking of a matter where the provinces are all actively involved. He mentions schools and federal buildings. It was obvious in my first answer that I have not been informed of any critical situation in which I had a given, direct responsibility; but I shall inquire as soon as we leave the House.

HORTICULTURE

FLORIDA TOMATOES—EFFECT ON DOMESTIC MARKET

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture further to the subject I raised earlier today which relates to the very serious situation in the province of British Columbia regarding the excess importation of Florida field tomatoes to the extent of displacing about 50 per cent of the domestic market.

Is the minister aware of the problem, and has he had any discussion with the British Columbia coastal vegetable marketing board? What action does he intend to take on this subject?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the problem. Our agricultural liaison officer is making an inquiry but I have not seen the report yet. I have seen the suggestion that the British Columbia marketing board or association made. They are asking for immediate border controls and we are considering that request at the present time.

Mr. Wise: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. There is certainly no question about the seriousness of the situation or the action it warrants. I ask the minister to give me a commitment today that he will at least make a recommendation to his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to impose an appropriate surcharge on the importation of that particular product.

● (1500)

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, we will be having further discussions later today, and from those discussions probably some recommendations will be made.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, could I ask the government House leader what his intentions are for business for the balance of today, this week and into next week, as far as he can see.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as my hon. colleague knows, we will be dealing with the second reading stage of Bill C-30 today. Tomorrow in the following order we will study Bill S-2, an income tax convention bill which relates to many countries in the world, then Bill C-5, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and finally Bill S-6, to amend the Two-Price Wheat Act.

[Translation]

As for next week's business, as of Monday, and depending on the progress made in the House and in committees on other pieces of legislation, we should start consideration of an order relating to the establishment of a Ministry of State for Social Development placed under the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. We would then proceed to consideration of Bill C-22 to adjust the accounts of Canada, sponsored by the President of the Treasury Board and finally we hope to complete once and for all the Committee of the Whole stage of the employment tax credit bill and start second reading of the unemployment insurance bill sponsored by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the President of the Privy Council that he has had from me before. On Monday of this week the Minister of Veterans Affairs, speaking at the dominion convention at the Royal Canadian Legion at Penticton, British Columbia, assured the members of the legion that he would soon be bringing in legislative measures with respect to veterans, and that he knew what had to be done. Can the President of the Privy Council underline that assurance and let us know whether the appropriate legislation will be before the House this month?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I want to confirm that the minister knew what he was talking about and that he was speaking the truth.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I rise with respect to the matter raised by the two House leaders. I would like to ask the government House leader whether the Minister of Veterans Affairs has discussed the veterans affairs legislation in cabinet, because he said in Penticton on June 9 that he will soon be discussing veterans affairs legislation with the cabinet. We find it very strange that this has not been discussed in cabinet since he has been the veterans affairs minister since March and he has all the information contained in Bill C-28 dealing with veterans affairs legislation and what is required. The hon. member for Victoria, the former defence minister and veterans affairs minister, left $19 million in the estimates to deal with veterans affairs legislation.

Can the House leader inform us what is causing the delay and the problems within cabinet in bringing forward this veterans affairs legislation?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I wonder what delay the hon. member is referring to. Everything seems to be going smoothly. The minister has made public his position which indicates his interest in the matter. He is doing all he can to speed up the process. Everything is going normally. What he said during the convention the hon. member mentioned is true and I wonder what delay he is complaining about. There is no undue delay and every week the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who has a proven interest in the matter, asks me the same question. I always give him the same assurances, as I did today. I am doing the same thing for the hon. member.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. PAPROSKI—LOTTERIES AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES—ANSWER OF PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I am sorry that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has left the chamber because there was a particular question I wanted to ask him. It has to do with Hansard for June 11, 1980, when the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) asked a question in regard to lotteries. The Prime Minister answered the question as reported at page 1989 as follows:

> Madam Speaker, I do not know if the minister has effectively asked that such a review be made. I would only remind the member for Joliette that a contract had been signed between Mrs. Campagnolo, the then minister responsible for lotteries, and the ten provinces.

I would like to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister that there was no agreement signed. The only agreement that was signed between the provinces was one that was concluded by myself and two other ministers here. There was no other agreement signed by Mrs. Campagnolo. I think the Prime Minister might want to correct this statement himself. The only agreement on lotteries was made with the help of the justice department and also with the PCO under the jurisdiction of the Progressive Conservative government that was then in power.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): If I may, Madam Speaker, I shall convey the representations of the hon. member to the Prime Minister who will act upon them, if necessary.

Madam Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) that he cannot have corrections made to the blues of another member of the House. It is up to that member to have corrections made, if he feels he was wrong in his reply.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, with all due respect to the Chair, it was not my intention to change the blues. All I wanted to do was to remind the Prime Minister that he had made an error, and I would like him to correct it.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HAWKES—REMARKS OF MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION DURING CONSIDERATION OF BILL C-19

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I have given you notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege. In reality I think there are four issues which affect the privileges of members of the House that have arisen during the course of debate on Bill C-19. I will take them in sequence.

First, I refer to pages 104 to 114 of Beauchesne, paragraph 319, under the heading "Referring to Members in Debate", and I read a small portion of that paragraph:

In the House of Commons a member will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the House itself as a political institution;—

I believe the next few words are crucial. They read as follows:

—or to impute to any member or members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case; or to use any profane or indecent language;—

After a cursory glance at Hansard for the last three days of debate on Bill C-19, I have in my hand a typed list of 37 instances in which I think the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has been in contravention of that privilege. If I may, perhaps I could read two or three of those, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member intend to refer to a question of privilege flowing from the discussion which took place in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: In that case, the hon. member should have brought the subject up in Committee of the Whole. Therefore, I cannot hear him at this time.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, some of these instances that I wish to bring up today were in fact brought up in Committee of the Whole. This particular one on the use of language was not.

Madam Speaker: In that case, the hon. member will have to indicate to me from what deliberations exactly his question of privilege flows. Under those conditions and if they do not flow from the deliberations in Committee of the Whole, I can hear him.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, it will take me a minute to collect my thoughts. The instances in question in Hansard occur in the issues for June 2, June 5, June 9 and June 11. Some of the debates are not in Committee of the Whole but are in fact debates in the House. Does that change my situation in any way?

The second item I wish to raise is found on pages 22 and 23 of Beauchesne. It is the issue of influencing members. In debate there is an issue that was brought up in this House during question period for the first time by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton).

[Translation]

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as pointed out in your remarks—

• (1510)

[English]

Madam Speaker: Order, please. A point of order can be brought up on a question of privilege, and I will hear the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Dawson: Madam Speaker, as you pointed out, those are questions which have not been raised in Committee of the Whole. If the hon. member has any grievance concerning the proceedings in Committee of the Whole, he should raise the matter before the Committee of the Whole.

Madam Speaker: It is not clear even for the Chair what is exactly the matter in the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I think we should listen to him very quietly and then I might be able to decide whether his question may be raised at this moment or some time later.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the issue which I wish to raise refers to articles found on pages 22 and 23 of Beauchesne under the title "Influencing Members". The particular article is No. 67. I wish to read just a short portion of that, as follows:

It is generally accepted that any threat to a member, attempting to influence his vote or his actions as a member, is a breach of privilege.

The issue raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) during question period was whether it was appropriate for the Minister of Employment and Immigration to seek advice from members of Parliament on the spending of public funds. Was it appropriate to send us a letter asking our advice on which make-work projects should be funded in our constituencies and which should not?

As the course of debate on Bill C-19 has proceeded, the kind of language used by the Minister of Employment and Immigration in addressing the members of this House has been unparliamentary in many instances. It is my view, and my question of privilege is based on this view, that the threat system implied in the attitude and the language is potentially influential of the actions of members of Parliament in terms of their decision whether to respond to the minister's request to propose certain projects to the exclusion of others.

There were two items raised yesterday in Committee of the Whole by more than one hon. member. They both referred to a situation which is important in the present atmosphere of the House. Today we are debating Bill C-30 under the provision of closure. The decision by this House to involve that provision was on the basis of lack of time for debate.

This House complied with the request of the Minister of Employment and Immigration that we move Bill C-19 into Committee of the Whole, which takes the time of the House. While we have been in Committee of the Whole, two things have occurred and these were raised yesterday. In the first instance, and on three separate occasions, the minister showed up without officials, without the kind of detailed information that is normally available to the committee. This resulted in constant repetition of questions, which eats up the time of the House.

Another phenomenon which has emerged and which was raised yesterday is that the Minister of Employment and Immigration tends to be overly lengthy in terms of his answers. The effect of that is that the government itself is eating up the time of the House.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order. I have tried to listen to whether or not the hon. member has a question of privilege. The hon. member is not very precise as to what time the deliberations he was discussing took place and what exactly was said. The hon. member said very vaguely that something which he did not find acceptable occurred during the course of a certain debate. When he proceeded to try to be a little more precise, he was speaking of something, and even then it was not all that precise, which took place during Committee of the Whole.

I must tell the hon. member that a question of privilege flowing from deliberations that took place in Committee of the Whole have to be brought up at that committee. The hon. member was talking of deliberations flowing from Committee of the Whole. If the hon. member feels he does have a question of privilege flowing from other deliberations than those which occurred in Committee of the Whole, I can listen to it. Otherwise, I will have to say that he is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Dawson: Madam Speaker, on this same question of privilege, as you pointed out, this happened in Committee of the Whole. However, I suggest the allegations made by the hon. member, that the minister has attempted to influence hon. members because some programs, which have been in place for several years, call for consultation of hon. members, are very serious allegations indeed. I would like to point out to the hon. member that if we hear long answers on Bill C-19 and if the debate has been going on for five days, it is precisely because he tries to put multiple questions without really wanting to hear any answers. I suggest, Madam Speaker, that 22 hours of debate on a bill of this importance is enough and, hopefully, the hon. member will co-operate so that this House can deal with other matters.

Madam Speaker: The parliamentary secretary is also discussing something which happened in Committee of the Whole. If he wishes to raise grievances or a question of privilege on this matter, he should also do so in Committee of the Whole.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: On a question of privilege—

Madam Speaker: Order. I cannot hear the hon. member twice on the same question of privilege. Those remarks were out of order. Therefore, I cannot allow the hon. member to rise on a question of privilege regarding remarks which I have just said were out of order.

TRADE

ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE ON PROPOSED NATIONAL TRADING CORPORATION

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, this morning I had consultations with my colleagues and I wish to move a motion with the unanimous consent of the House relating to the creation of a parliamentary task force on the proposed national trading corporation. The motion is rather long but I understand that my colleagues have had an opportunity to look at it and that the unanimous consent for which I am asking exists. So, if there is agreement, I will move that motion right now.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have one question, Madam Speaker. In the draft I have, the words appearing in the first line read "a Special Committee of the House of Commons to be composed of seven members—" Does that appear in the motion the hon. gentleman intends to put?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker. With regard to the parliamentary task force it is written here "a committee of the House of Commons".

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Agreed.

Mr. Pinard moved:

That a Special Committee of the House of Commons, to be composed of seven members, be appointed to act as a parliamentary task force on a national trading corporation, to report finally no later than December 19, 1980, to examine ways in which a national trading corporation could improve Canada's export performance and to describe the functions that should be undertaken and the form that such a corporation should take and, more specifically, to consider:

(1) means of assisting small and medium-sized Canadian business to expand their export markets;

(2) what (if any) direct government participation and involvement is required, what kind, to what extent and for what period of time;

(3) the corporate structure and working relationship of any such trading corporation;

(4) the method of financing such a corporation;

(5) the role of the board's managerial and staff requirements of such a corporation;

(6) the over-all costs and benefits of creating a national trading corporation;

That the committee shall have all of the powers given to standing committees by section (8) of Standing Order 65;

That the committee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary;

That the committee, its subcommittees and members of the committee have the power, when the committee deems it necessary, to adjourn or travel from place to place inside and outside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the required staff accompany the committee, subcommittee or members of the committee, as the case may be;

That the provisions of sections (4) and (9) of Standing Order 65 be suspended, unless otherwise agreed to by the committee, in application to the said committee;

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when an interim or final report of the committee is completed, the committee may make the said report public before it is laid before the House; and

That the members of the committee be Messrs. Cardiff, Deans, Flis, Lachance, Roy, Thomson and Tobin.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), that the second report of the Standing Committee on Transport presented to this House on Friday, June 6, 1980, be concurred in.

DERAILMENT AT MISSISSAUGA, ONTARIO

Question No. 138—Mr. Turner:

1. From which location did the CPR train which was derailed at Mississauga, Ontario, on November 11, 1979, originate?

2. Was an inspection performed on the train and, if so (a) what type (b) was it an over-all inspection plus a brake test and, if so, what type and where were the tests performed?

3. Was there a pull-by or a walked inspection made on both sides of the train at London, Ontario and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, was it made in a lighted area?

4. Were cars set-off or added to the train in London, Ontario?

5. Were any hot-box detectors passed over by the train and, if so, how many and what were their locations?

6. Is it normal procedure for only a three-man crew to be responsible for a train handling as many dangerous commodities and, if so, for what reason?

7. Is there a regulation determining what is an adequate number of crew members for trains handling cargoes defined as being dangerous commodities?

8. Were the cars handling the dangerous commodities equipped with friction or roller bearings?

9. Does the Department of Transport consider roller bearings to be safer than friction bearings and, if so, for what reason?

10. Was the crew informed of the location and contents of the dangerous loads and (a) if so (i) how many and what are their names (ii) by what means (b) if not, for what reason?

11. Is there a regulation that requires that combustible material will not be pulled next to toxic loads and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The question posed addresses the derailment of a CP Rail freight train at Mississauga, Ontario on November 10, 1979, into which Mr. Justice Samuel G. M. Grange is presently conducting an inquiry to determine, among other things, the contribution factors and causes of the derailment and the subsequent events involving dangerous commodities. In consequence, much of the information requested in the question will undoubtedly emerge in the evidence being adduced in the course of the inquiry. In so far as the Canadian Transport Commission is concerned, it wishes to advise as follows on those matters within its knowledge:

1. The train originated at Windsor, Ontario.

2. Mississauga Accident Inquiry.

3. Mississauga Accident Inquiry.

4. Mississauga Accident Inquiry.

5. One, located at mile 88.22 Windsor Subdivision, Haycroft, Ontario.

(1) waybills,

(2) Hazard Information Emergency Response Forms which must accompany each shipment under CTC regulations, and

(3) each shipment and its location is identified on train consist issued to the train crew.

(b) not applicable.

11. CTC regulations require separation between certain classes of regulated commodities in the marshalling of trains. CTC designated classification system does not utilize terms "combustible material" and "toxic". If question seeks to determine whether chlorine and propane could be placed next to each other at the time of the accident, the answer is affirmative but this is no longer permissible and a five-car separation is required between these two commodities by order of the commission.

VIA RAIL—PASSENGER ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 140—Mr. Turner:

1. Is the management of Via Rail Canada aware of any instances where persons were forced to stand on its trains due to the lack of seats and, if so (a) on what trains did the occurrences take place during the past year (b) did the occurrences take place on a regular basis such as once a week or more on any one train?

2. Has Via Rail Canada taken steps to try and alleviate this problem and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. See table below.

2. Yes. Peak periods are identified and in practically all cases, enough seats are available.

Overcrowding (Coach)

Train	Date	From	To	Reason
61	February 2/80	Montreal	Toronto	Extra coach not added to train due to lack of communications
72	December 29/79	Windsor	Toronto	No extra equipment available
53	January 2/80	Montreal	Toronto	Due to late arrival of trains 11 and 15 from Eastern Canada—train at limit
75	August 19/79	Toronto	London	Week-end peak travel—no extra equipment could be added—train at full limit
15	July 27/79	Halifax	Moncton	Peak travel—train at limit
78	March 13/80	Windsor	Toronto	Hockey tournament in Toronto—train at limit
55	March 23/80	Montreal	Toronto	March break—train at limit
35	March 23/80	Montreal	Ottawa	March break—train at limit
32	March 8/80	Ottawa	Montreal	March break—additional equipment not available

VIA RAIL—INCENTIVE PAYMENTS

Question No. 143—Mr. Turner:

Does Via Rail Canada have an agreement with the railways whose track Via Rail trains travel over that involves incentive payments to the railways to keep Via Rail trains on time and, if so, what is the agreement and how are incentive payments determined?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Via Rail Canada, Inc. has an agreement with the railways that provides for financial incentive payments to encourage the railways to improve train performance.

It is possible for the railways to earn up to 10 per cent of Via's gross revenues for improved train performance.

The incentive payments are determined by comparing present train performance to historical train performance which was generally based on the train performance under railway management for the period 1975 to 1977 inclusive.

DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—SX CLASSIFICATION

Question No. 372—Mr. Herbert:

1. As of March 31, 1979 (a) how many persons in the SX classification were employed by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (b) how many were (i) Francophones (ii) females?

2. What are the present totals?

3. Was there a structural change in the Department since March 31, 1979 and, if so, what effect did such a change have on the number of SXs employed?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General):

1. (a) 28
   (b) (i) 5
   (ii) 2
2. (a) 27
   (b) (i) 5
   (ii) 2

3. Hereunder is a list of the structural changes in the department since March 31, 1979.

(1) The Bureaus of Corporate Affairs and Intellectual Property were amalgamated, but this had no effect on the number of SXs employed as one of the two ADM position was vacant at the time and has since been abolished.

(2) Field operations was merged with Consumer Affairs Bureau. This reorganization had the effect of reducing the number of SXs employed by one with the elimination of the position ADM field operations.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—LAWYERS

Question No. 620—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed on staff in the Department of National Revenue?

Mr. Yves Demers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): There are no lawyers employed on staff in the Department of National Revenue. The Department of Justice has, however, assigned a total of 14 lawyers to provide the day to day legal counsel required by the customs and excise and taxation divisions of the department.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ADDITIONAL UIC OFFICE IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 661—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1978, have studies taken place regarding the possible establishment of an unemployment insurance office in Oromocto, Minto, or an additional location in Fredericton, New Brunswick?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): The further extension of services to Fredericton north, Oromocto and Minto has been the subject of investigation by Employment and Immigration since January 1, 1978.

Currently Oromocto, which is located 12 miles from Fredericton, is covered by a two-day-per-week itinerant service to Canadian Forces Base, Gagetown, designed to assist long-term servicemen and officers to prepare themselves for a second career. Minto is served by a branch office which provides employment services and accepts unemployment insurance inquiries and applications.

An examination of the need for services in Fredericton north and Oromocto indicates that the residents of both localities have reasonable access to the main CEC, that the vast majority of job opportunities are in Fredericton and that there is an insufficient number of claimants to warrant the establishment of separate offices to provide unemployment insurance services.

The possibility of reallocating some resources from the Fredericton office to the centres in question has also been considered. However, it has been concluded that such moves would not significantly improve the service to the residents of these centres and would cause a serious deterioration of service at the main office.

EIC will continue to evaluate this situation in light of changing conditions.

DIAND—PROFESSIONAL SERVICES CONTRACTS

Question No. 698—Mr. Clarke:

1. For the fiscal year 1978-79, how many contracts were let by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for professional services, to persons who at any time within the past five years, had been employed in indeterminate positions under the Public Service Commission?

2. How many contracts were (a) for less than one year (b) for one to two years (c) over two years?

3. How many contracts were let outside the national capital region?

4. What was the total cost of all such contracts?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Thirty-nine contracts were let by the department for professional services to persons who have been employed in indeterminate positions within the past five years.

2. (a) Less than one year: 39;
   (b) None;
   (c) None.

3. Twenty-one contracts were let outside the NCR

4. Total cost of all such contracts is $172,896.

MR. J. D. NOAH

Question No. 707—Mr. Clarke:

1. Is Mr. J. D. Noah employed in the Department of National Defence and, if so, what is his function?

2. Is Mr. Noah associated with J.D. & O. Noah Limited and does he conduct company business on government owned telephone lines and, if so, what disciplinary action does the minister intend to take to ensure that Mr. Noah ceases such unauthorized use of the government telephone system?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. Mr. Noah is employed as an administrative services officer within the directorate of documentation and drawing services at National Defence Headquarters.

2. Yes. Mr. Noah is president and chief executive officer of J.D. & O. Noah Limited. There is no evidence that he has ever conducted business using government owned telephone lines. Mr. Noah is fully aware that unauthorized use of government lines for the firm's business dealings is unacceptable.

FRANKING PRIVILEGES

Question No. 788—Mr. de Jong:

Has the Postmaster General considered allowing franking privileges to members of provincial legislatures?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): No.

CFB GAGETOWN PERSONNEL

Question No. 832—Mr. Howie:

On January 1 (a) 1978 (b) 1979 (c) 1980, how many (i) civilian permanent (ii) military (iii) civilian temporary personnel were employed at CFB Gagetown?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): As of March 31:

		(a) 1978	(b) 1979	(c) 1980
(i)	Civilian permanent personnel	677	669	674
(ii)	Military personnel	3188	3159	3025
(iii)	Civilian temporary personnel	564	293	151

DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS GRANTS

Question No. 844—Mr. Howie:

Since September 1, 1978 did the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs make any grants to any persons or organizations in New Brunswick and, if so, to whom and in what amounts?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): The following contributions have been made:

1. Information Metro Moncton	$9,000
2. Le Centre de communication et d'information mobile	$13,000
3. Le Comité de justice sociale	$2,000

Order Paper Questions

DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS FIELD WORKERS

Question No. 845—Mr. Howie:

How many field workers of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs are employed in New Brunswick?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): 1. Twenty-three (including inspectors, officers and support staff).

NEW FIGHTER AIRCRAFT CONTRACTS

Question No. 882—Mr. Wenman:

What percentage of the new fighter aircraft contract will be spent in the four western provinces and (a) what will be the amount in dollars (b) what type of work will be involved?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b) New fighter aircraft (CF-18) industrial benefits have not been estimated specifically for the four western provinces but Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce have estimated that Canadian provinces other than Quebec and Ontario will share some $400 million—11 per cent to 12 per cent—of the new business created by the McDonnell Douglas offset program.

Approximately $1.3 billion of benefits remain to be allocated before the program formally ends in December, 1995. The western provinces share of that business depends largely on the imagination, aggressiveness and competitiveness of the companies there, and the encouragement and assistance which provincial governments provide to companies in their jurisdictions.

Western companies have already received NFA industrial benefits in the form of airframe and engine component production subcontracts; and the transfer of cryogenic technology to aid in pipeline design and construction. Opportunities are being provided to western companies to compete for: CF-18 engine and airframe assembly work; commercial transport structural manufacture; the provision of computer software; the transfer of advanced technology related to grain and woodpulp drying; solar and wind energy; metal-plating and medical diagnostic systems; investments in new facilities to manufacture plastic molds and glass components for the electrical industry and tourism to Canada which McDonnell Douglas has undertaken to promote at home and abroad.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker would you be good enough to call starred question No. 868?

*EEC—TARIFFS ON CANADIAN GROUNDFISH

Question No. 868—Mr. Gass:

1. Has Canada held meetings with the European Economic Community aimed at the elimination of tariffs on Canadian groundfish by the EEC and, if so, on what dates and in which locations did the meetings take place?

2. What did Canada offer in return for such tariff concessions by the EEC?

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the answer is in two parts. 1. Negotiations between Canada and the EEC have been under way since 1977, with meetings held alternately in Ottawa and Brussels. The current phase began with a meeting in Brussels January 31 to February 1, 1980. A second session took place in Ottawa, April 24 and 25, 1980. Further negotiations are expected to take place in the near future.

2. Canadian objectives to be covered in the bilateral agreement include provisions concerning the protection of Canadian interests in stocks beyond the 200-mile limit; protection for Canada's Atlantic salmon; and reduction of tariffs on Canadian fish products to the lower levels which apply to Canada's major competitors. To obtain these concessions we would be expected to establish allocations to the EEC at an agreed level off the Atlantic coast for a limited period of time. As negotiations are still in progress the details are, of course, confidential.

[English]

Mr. Collenette: Perhaps, Madam Speaker, the other questions could be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the other questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1980-81

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-30, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1980-81, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I closed the debate on Bill C-30 on June 3, 1980, and I wish to continue today to speak briefly on this billion borrowing bill. We have yet to hear any proper explanation as to why there should be a requirement for $12 billion. We are not accepting this bill sitting down because there should have been a budget presented by now, and as far as we are concerned on this side of the House this is a very irresponsible act.

I would like to go into a little history as to why we find ourselves in this ridiculous position today of uncontrolled spending, endless borrowing, the printing of more money and what have you. It goes back to 1969 when the rule changes were brought into the House, having the effect of ruling out proper examination of departmental expenditures. At that time, rule changes were rammed through by the use of closure and the Canadian people have been suffering as a result of the move ever since, Madam Speaker.

I would just like to point out that we—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I promised I would do this favour for myself. The hon. gentleman referred to me as Madam Speaker and after two months I wondered whether one of these days I might address the hon. lady and ask whether she is rising on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): On behalf of other hon. members who serve in the chair, we would appreciate the minor recognitional difference.

Mr. McKenzie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of your colleagues said, "I don't see the difference"! Well, I do see the difference and as far as I am concerned you are a man, so I will correct your Liberal colleague on the other side of the House. My apologies. We are just getting used to saying "Madam Speaker" and now we have to refer to both.

Another thing Mr. Speaker, which was started by the Liberal government of 1963, was the dock workers' strike in Montreal. That started wage demands right across the nation and began the inflation spiral. We are getting into the same situation with the letter carriers' strike which will cost some $36 million in the first year. Now everybody will be in line for the same type of settlement. So we can see what the Canadian people are going to be facing in the years to come with inflation, uncontrolled spending, borrowing, the printing of more money. Many Canadians think that when we talk in figures of billions they will not be affected. But I am going to give a little breakdown on that, Mr. Speaker, to point out how it does affect them. It is the Canadian taxpayer who is paying for all this; it is not somebody else who is paying for them.

Another possible jolt we might be in for, Mr. Speaker, is the talk we hear these days that inflation indexing will be removed from the income tax. I just want to give some idea of what it will cost some individual taxpayers if this indexing is removed. At the present time if a person's real income is $10,000, on the removal of indexing he will be paying an additional $156 a year. In five years from now he will be paying an additional $896. If a person is in the $30,000 bracket, within five years he will be paying an additional $2,740 in taxes. So we are starting on another inflation spiral, tax increases and what have you.

I would like now to refer to some remarks that were made by the former finance minister, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He pointed out earlier in this debate that when he was finance minister last October and had asked the House for $7 billion borrowing authority to meet the earlier Liberal budget obligations—not his own—the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) pointed out that we needed no more than $3.5 billion.

The question here is how in seven months the government's borrowing needs have jumped from $3.5 billion to $12 billion. We have had no explanation from any government members, from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) or from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce for this huge jump in such a short period; the government is asking us to blank-cheque this borrowing authority for $12 billion with no explanation for that huge increase.

I would just like to refer to a recent American Reader's Digest article which explains what causes inflation, uncontrolled borrowing and why we have to print so much money. I just want to read a couple of paragraphs which explain in explicit detail just what causes inflation and how some governments have lived within their means, have been able to control inflation and are not having endless and uncontrolled spending and borrowing.

Mr. Speaker, the article I mentioned reads in part as follows:

> Inflation in western European countries has been routinely running high with two dramatic exceptions—West Germany and Switzerland. West Germany has kept its inflation rate around four per cent; Switzerland, below two per cent in recent years. Both countries have displayed the political courage and citizen discipline to keep a tight rein on their budgets and on the growth of their money supply.

In the post-war era there have been four major instances of inflation being brought under control.

> West Germany did it in 1948—refusing to "spend" its way to prosperity by running up huge deficits. The United States did it in 1953, under President Dwight D. Eisenhower, whose prudent fiscal policies led to an inflation rate during his administration of 1.4 percent a year. France accomplished the feat in 1958, when Charles de Gaulle halved the government's budget deficit. In each case, control was achieved by dramatic cuts in government spending and a concomitant dialing down of the money machine.

The fourth one, and the best record of all governments, was that of the Diefenbaker government. It had a world record of keeping inflation down as low as 1.2 per cent because it did not have blank-cheque government. It did not encourage government empire building. What that means is that each cabinet minister was not handed a blank cheque just to go on to endless and uncontrolled spending.

Unfortunately, neither France nor the United States stuck to its guns against that old predilection of politicians to give social benefits without taxing. There are just two countries in the world today that have proper inflation rates.

I just want to go into the deficit a little further and into why we unfortunately have this borrowing bill here today. A deficit occurs when a government spends more money than it collects over the course of the year. The deficit this year is to be around $12 billion. What that means is that this government has put us into the ridiculous position of its spending $1 billion a month more than what it takes in in revenue. You could not possibly become any more irresponsible.

This year's deficit is equal to $473 per capita or $1,282 per taxpayer, or $30.7 million a day. These figures are probably a little out of date and probably have gone up considerably since this government took office in February.

In 1978-79 the government had a deficit of $12.1 billion, more than total spending the year before the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to office. There were deficits in ten of the 11 Trudeau years.

When an individual citizen, a businessman or a government spends more than they receive in revenue they must borrow money to pay debts. The government's debts grow year by year when the financial accounts continue to show a deficit. There are two commonly used definitions of government debt. While net debt is the more frequently used, either is correct as long as the user indicates which definition he is using.

The gross national debt figure includes all liabilities incurred by the government, including bonds, treasury bills, accounts payable, accrued salaries and future pension fund obligations. As of March 31, 1979, the gross national debt was almost $98 billion, $4,145 per capita or almost $12,000 per taxpayer a year. Roughly, that breaks down to $1,000 per month, and rising, for each taxpayer in Canada. They can think about that, Mr. Speaker. There were many people who thought in the last election that they were going to get cheap gas and so on by returning this government but I can assure them nothing is going to come cheap. It is costing them $1,000 a month to pay for this huge debt with money they do not have.

The net debt figure is obtained by subtracting assets from the gross national debt. On March 31, 1979, the net debt was over $55 billion, $2,361 per capita or $6,371 per taxpayer. The net debt under Liberal governments over the last 11 to 12 years has increased by 231 per cent and, of course, this will be increasing dramatically because they have only been back in power for a short period, since March 4. They really have not had an opportunity to get going yet, but watch out, they are just getting warmed up!

Interest on the public debt will be about $8.5 billion this year and $10.2 billion next year. Twenty-two cents out of every tax dollar is used to pay interest on the debt. Interest on the public debt costs $1 million per hour. The annual cost is $356 per capita and $964 per taxpayer.

Any interested taxpayer can read my speech and some other excellent addresses that will be following this afternoon on these figures, they can sit down and analyse them and just study what this government is costing them. They will then realize that nothing is going to be cheap with this government. They are going to be paying through the nose for all time to come.

I want to congratulate the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), who has dug up some very interesting figures on what the deficit is costing every Canadian. The net debt per capita of this country is almost $2,400. Every man, woman and child in this country owes and will have to meet a debt charge of, to be exact, $2,360 in 1979. We do not have the 1980 figures yet. This is a matter which causes us grave concern and alarm. I refer not only to this Parliament but also to the people of Canada.

In the last government under the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), Mr. Speaker, corrective measures were taken and, unfortunately, they have all been dropped by this Liberal government. The former president of the Treasury Board, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), has projected that without the realistic budgetary moves proposed by the former minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West, the federal deficit in 1984 would be $18 billion. For fiscal 1980 the estimated deficit is $11.8 billion, without the budgetary measures contained in the Crosbie budget. With the measures the deficit would have been held to $11.25 billion.

We were off in the right direction with starting to cut back on some of the uncontrolled spending. Since last July the Progressive Conservative government had saved one-half billion dollars. Even under the Crosbie budget the public debt would have grown by 22.6 per cent in the next four years. The deficit would not have dipped below $9 billion by 1984.

The cumulative effect is even more alarming. Without the Crosbie budget the federal deficit will exceed $27 billion between 1980 and 1984. The four-year accumulated deficit represents an addition on the net debt of Canada which, even with the Crosbie budget's restraint measures, will rise from $55.8 billion in 1979 to $105.6 billion in 1984. That is almost doubling, Mr. Speaker, so you can see the dangerous path that successive Liberal governments have this country on. Without the Progressive Conservative budget the net debt would have reached $133 billion by 1984, more than 25 per cent over the forecast level.

Unfortunately, that budget was defeated and now we are back to the old Liberal way of doing things. We are removing any and all controls, and this is confirmed each year when we receive the report of the Auditor General.

Hon. members opposite ask many questions of us on this side. They ask what social programs we would cut back. That statement is becoming very outdated. It tries to give the Canadian people the impression that the only thing on which we spend money is social programs. That is absolute nonsense. There are many areas where we could cut back on federal government spending. One of the things that the Clark government had planned to do was to implement all the recommendations in the Auditor General's report and the Lambert commission report, both of which have always highlighted the fact that they cannot find out where half the money is going, that there is no control. They have said that repeatedly in all their reports.

Another serious problem which was pointed out by the Auditor General recently is that the productivity figure is down to around 65 per cent. We hope this is something on which this government will be working. Increased efficiency and productivity will be a start in reducing some expenditures. This has been brought out on a regular basis.

Over $1 billion has been spent annually by Liberal governments on outside consultants. We do not believe that is necessary when we have 550,000 civil servants. We have sufficient expertise in the government not to have to resort continually to that number of outside consultants. Of course, some consulting work has to be done from outside, but not to the tune of $1 billion.

Another area in which we could cut back in expenditures is the costly metric conversion program. Some excellent speeches have been made here recently in which hon. members have pointed out how wasteful and costly the conversion program is and how we could cut back on it.

Also, there are many cases of totally unnecessary Statistics Canada surveys. There are hundreds of them around and we question the need for them. They ask many personal and unnecessary questions. We could cut back on those surveys.

We question the need for some 431 Crown corporations, many of which have outlived their usefulness. There should be a complete review of these Crown corporations. Canadian taxpayers are paying for many that are simply not required.

Another costly area which has been allowed to continue to run out of control is public works. A stop should be put to the rental of unneeded office space across Canada. The former minister of public works, the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), had started on a program to reduce the unnecessary rental of unneeded office space, but unfortunately he did not have time to complete his program fully. It would have resulted in the saving of millions of dollars.

Duplication is another unnecessary cost that taxpayers have to cover. It occurs at all three levels of government—municipal, provincial and federal. I want to congratulate the former prime minister because the agenda of the meeting which he was going to have around December 15 contained an item concerning the duplication of forms which was to have been discussed with the premiers with the purpose of eliminating much of it within governments.

I should like to give you, Mr. Speaker, an example of what happens in some businesses with government forms. One example is Chevron Canada Limited which has to complete 491 monthly, quarterly and annual reports for the federal government, which are then inspected by 14 federal agencies, 19 provincial agencies, and eight municipal departments. This apparent duplication of government inspection and excessive paperwork must be monitored more closely and reduced. But I doubt that this will happen under the present government. The cost of filling out these forms and processing them costs businesses and governments millions of dollars annually, a cost which is, of course, passed on to the taxpayer or the consumer in one form or another.

I will give another example of overlapping and duplication, Mr. Speaker. There is a consortium of seven major oil companies. Their contract was cancelled. It was a promising $60 million contract for a drilling program off the Labrador coast in 1977, because Ottawa and Newfoundland both seek control over offshore mineral rights. In Quebec public housing projects worth $150 million were blocked for as long as four years by disagreement between federal and provincial agencies. Residents of some 20 communities were denied cable television for three years while officials in Winnipeg and Ottawa fought over the ownership of a certain type of cable equipment. All this duplication and overlapping goes on endlessly. These are just a few examples of what the government should consider. It has nothing to do with social programs.

Another area that is costing the Canadian taxpayers millions of dollars due to the direct neglect of successive Liberal governments is a program which was introduced by the Diefenbaker government back in 1958. I am referring to the roads to resources program which was to open up the north. In the 1950s it was identified that the oil shortage and the energy crunch was going to come in the early 1980s. Whoever predicted that knew what he was talking about because in this regard we have a very serious problem in this country. This program was laughed at by the Liberals. When they formed a government in 1963, the roads to resources program was dropped and the government started relying on imported oil. Today Canadian taxpayers are paying around $9 million a day for imported oil. With increased consumption and no proper conservation plans, the cost will increase.

So you can see, Mr. Speaker, the enormous costs we are incurring. Any taxpayer who thinks he will have cheap gas and will not have to pay 15, 16 or 18 cents a gallon more is indirectly paying a subsidy which is costing Canadians millions of dollars a day. That will continue under the present government.

Another staggering figure is cost overruns. The former president of the treasury board had done a lot of work on this and had started corrective measures. Last year, cost overrums cost the Canadian taxpayers $1.062 billion. This matter has been raised repeatedly in the House and we really do not know whether or not the present government has taken any corrective measures because we have received no constructive answers from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston). There were around 497 projects with cost overruns. So any one who says there is no control is not exaggerating. That is exactly what it is.

I want to explain what the Clark government inherited when it took office last year. On taking office in June of 1979, the Clark government was presented with a federal financial situation far more serious than that acknowledged by the preceding Liberal administration, and worse than expected by the most pessimistic of forecasters. The new government found that the budgetary deficit was out of control, that the accounts of Canada were in disarray, that expenditure control systems on many capital projects had completely broken down and that the federal government was committed to some "quite untenable financial situations." Further, the new government discovered that the economic forecasts of the previous Liberal administration were so inaccurate as to significantly misrepresent the actual state of the economy. That is what they have done to the Canadian people in the last 17 years.

The financial skeletons were revealed during the transition between the Liberal and Progressive Conservative administrations. For the most part, the ugly financial surprises were based on information unavailable to the public during the life of the previous administration. The new information placed constraints on policy initiatives planned for the first year of the Clark administration. In place of the previous practice of burying the problem by stamping "secret" on the file, the new government accepted the responsibility of cleaning up the financial wreckage left by its predecessor. But all that has gone down the drain now and they are at it once again.

When the Clark government took office with only two months of the current fiscal year elapsed, 50 per cent of the reserves were committed, leaving a new government with very little room to manoeuvre. Moreover, many of the claims on reserves made by the Liberal administration represented reversals of planned spending intentions. More than $100 million of the so-called spending cuts of the Liberal administration announced in August, 1978, were reversed between the presentation of the main estimates in February and the beginning of the election campaign in March. Further claims on reserves were the consequences of fundamentally unrealistic economic forecasts of inflation and real economic growth.

I do not think members of the government really understand the role of an elected official, but no matter what level of government, a member's first responsibility is respect for the taxpayer in dealing with his tax dollars. Certainly there has been no respect shown for Canadian taxpayers under any Liberal administration going back to 1963. Canadian taxpayers have been treated with contempt over the years.

There was a real period of uncontrolled spending in the Twenty-ninth Parliament under the Liberal-NDP coalition. In that period federal spending increased by some 50 per cent. One of the largest percentage periods of growth was in that 20-month period. Thus, I get somewhat of a laugh out of members of the NDP saying that they are opposing this closure method, that they do not want to give the government a blank cheque. They certainly had no hesitation in handing the Liberals a blank cheque in the Twenty-ninth Parliament. They are just as responsible as the Liberals for the mess in the country today.

Successive Liberal governments have left us with the following: In 1970 Canada was the third richest nation in the world, behind only Sweden and the United States. By 1978 we had fallen to eleventh place. Under successive Liberal governments the growth in the GNP per capita was one of the worst in the world. We stand eleventh in the list of rich nations today. The government have managed to let us drop down each year to eleventh place from second and third.

Another record is the unemployment rate of Canada which was 8.4 per cent in 1978. It was the highest of any major industrialized nation. They have broken all records, but their records all go in the wrong direction. They have not accomplished anything of real success. There is more debt, high unemployment, more borrowing, more printing of money, all kinds of empty office space, rampant inflation and duplication. It just goes on and on.

For the purposes of comparing Canada with another country, the United States with ten times the population is concerned about a deficit that is only slightly larger than that of Canada's. They had $15.8 billion versus $10.5 billion for 1980-81. The United States deficit was cut in half this year. Unlike Canada, the Americans are likely to balance their budget within the next few years. The record of the Liberals is very disgraceful.

As I mentioned earlier, probably the indexing will be eliminated. This will cause huge tax increases. It will pay for the uncontrolled spending, the $12 billion debt and whatever. According to many columnists, we cannot rule out tax hikes. Mr. Don McGillivray, an economic columnist, pointed out that he figured the index change would mean a $1,000 increase, and on and on it goes.

We have another Mickey Mouse arrangement in the House. The President of the Treasury Board wrote a profile a number of years ago. His book was entitled: "Fiscalamity". At that time he was opposed to uncontrolled government spending. He pointed out how it affects the country with inflation and whatever. Then he ran as a Liberal candidate and ended up as President of the Treasury Board. What he said in his book and what he did after were two entirely different things. It is too bad he does not practise what he preaches.

I understand there are a number of other members of the Conservative party who wish to speak this afternoon, so I will bring my remarks to a close and welcome the next Conservative member.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak in support of Bill C-30. As this is my maiden speech, I hope Mr. Speaker will bear with me. Indeed, I hope all my colleagues will.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I also hope all my colleagues in this House will bear with me if at times I stray ever so slightly from the topic at hand.

First of all, I want to take this opportunity to thank my constituents of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe who have bestowed on me the great privilege of representing them in the nation's capital. I consider it a great honour and a very sober responsibility to ensure that the needs of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe are heard loud and clear in this most distinguished chamber.

An hon. Member: They made the right choice.

Mr. Tobin: I think it is worth pointing out, at this historic time in our history when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the premiers are seeking to renew the national commitment to confederation and the national commitment to Canada, which collectively is much greater than its individual parts, that at 25 years of age I am the only Newfoundland member of Parliament who was born a Canadian. I am proud of that. I am proud to be a Canadian, but my sense of loyalty and pride in Canada is no greater than that felt by all those people in Newfoundland who became Canadians by way of a democratic vote in 1949. The people of Newfoundland and Labrador look forward to repatriation of the constitution quickly. They look to our first ministers to recommit themselves to confederation. Any Newfoundlander who would suggest otherwise is a spokesman divorced from his people; let there be no question of that.

While we in Newfoundland and Labrador were certainly the last to join this great confederation of people, we will be among the first to stand up and voice our support for Canada should we be given that opportunity. We are proud to be recognized for our unique music, tradition and history. Also we are proud to be recognized as just over a half million of Canada's best Canadians.

In the year 1949, the year Newfoundland joined confederation, five years before I was born, a great Canadian addressed this House of Commons. His words of warning then are more relevant this day than ever before. I should like to quote from Hansard of February 15, 1949, which reads as follows:

> In the country today, and I am not referring to anything that has been said in this debate, there is I suggest a tendency, a very dangerous tendency in my view, to stir up the feeling that the provinces and the dominion are somehow and in some way hostile to each other; that the people of Canada as represented in this Parliament are in some way different from the people of Canada as represented in the provincial parliaments; that there is, for instance, some inevitable conflict between my duty and loyalty as a resident of this province and my duty and loyalty as a Canadian. I suggest that there is great danger to national development in that trend and in that sort of talk.

Those words of wisdom were spoken by the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson on February 15, 1949, and I think they are very relevant today. Mr. Pearson went on to quote Mr. Drew, the leader of the opposition in 1941, who said:

> The time has come to start thinking as Canadians. Those who deliberately seek to arouse province against province, race against race are disloyal to Canada—

I want to say a few words about Bill C-30, but first I hope Mr. Speaker will permit me to talk for just a moment about that part of Canada that is Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe. It stretches from Cape Norman on the Strait of Belle Isle in northern Newfoundland, all the way down the west coast to Cape St. George, St. Georges Bay. It is a rural, rugged and beautiful coastline along which some 85,000 people earn their living and make their homes. It is that part of Newfoundland which those of us who live there refer to as God's country.

• (1600)

To the north in my riding, one will find Gros Morne National Park, a mountainous land of almost untouched and unspoiled beauty. I would recommend that you, Mr. Speaker, and all hon. members present visit that national park and meet the people who live in the communities within the boundaries of that park. I see the minister for parks shaking his head.

Farther north, hon. members will find the many fishing communities of the great northern peninsula and the fierce, independent, hard-working people who make their living from the sea. They are proud Newfoundlanders and proud Canadians, as are the people of the Port au Port Peninsula. There too, one will find a thriving and growing fishing industry. It is also there that one would delight in finding the only French-speaking communities in all of Newfoundland.

Should you visit my riding, Mr. Speaker, no doubt you will want to visit the beautiful Bay of Islands area and meet and talk with my many friends there. From the Bay of Islands, one will find that he is just minutes away from the city of Corner Brook, the western capital of Newfoundland. Corner Brook is located at the mouth of the Humber River where the west coast city began in the 1920s and has grown ever since. Bowater's paper mill in Corner Brook is one of the largest in the world, and Bowater Newfoundland Limited, as a result, is the largest single private employer in Newfoundland. It is in Corner Brook where the importance of Newfoundland's forestry resource can be fully appreciated. Indeed, there is no doubt that our fishing and forestry resources are the backbone of the economy of, not only Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, but all of Newfoundland.

Also in my riding, Mr. Speaker, you will find the two airport towns of Deer Lake and Stephenville. Both of these towns look forward to continuing to service the air travelling public in the northern and southern extremes of my riding. Deer Lake and Stephenville are small towns, but they have a great deal in common, as they are a people determined to go forward, seeking to maintain stability and a sound economic base for future growth.

There are many more communities I would like to talk about; however, time does not permit. I am proud of the district and of the people I represent in this House. I have great confidence in the future of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe and, more importantly, the people of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe have great confidence in themselves. I shall work to secure assistance from the Government of Canada, as much as is reasonable, and we are a reasonable people. I will seek to secure assistance that will ensure the people of my riding are given every opportunity to grow and prosper.

It is time for me to turn my thoughts and remarks to the business at hand, Bill C-30. I would like to voice my support for the approval of the $12 billion supplementary borrowing authority. But first let me take just a moment to comment on some remarks made by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), who has taken the liberty of referring to the Prime Minister as "the Count Dracula of the Canadian economic system". I think that one could better equate the efforts of the Prime Minister and, indeed, the efforts of all members on this side of the House with those of that distinguished organization, the Canadian Red Cross. Since our election in February, this government has been providing the transfusion so badly needed by the Canadian economy and the Canadian people after their near fatal accident with the Tory government.

As part of the transfusion process I talked about, the government requires the authority to borrow $12 billion to meet the projected financial requirements for 1980-81 as outlined by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on April 21 and to allow us some margin for contingencies. I think that members opposite must realize that it would indeed be foolish for a government not to have such authority, as it has had in the past, to have the ability to deal with an emergency should one arise. I feel confident in saying that this government has the wisdom and good sense to spend this money only when and where it is needed.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to point out to the hon. members in this House, especially those who were here during the last Parliament, that the estimates for the 1980-81 expenditures are based on the figures produced by none other than the hon. member for St. John's West. This government recognizes that now is the time for action and it has wasted no time in tabling the estimates so that all members of this House might examine and approve them. In this regard, the government also recognizes the necessity of passing this bill as quickly as possible in order that we may proceed to other important matters.

This government has not delayed in implementing programs which are desperately needed. Operating on a shoe string budget, a situation left to us by the previous government, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has succeeded in introducing a new series of measures to provide relief to those Canadians facing unemployment. Ridings similar to my own all across Canada have unemployment figures the same as the figure in my riding of over 15 per cent, and they would welcome this announcement. This winter my riding can, for example, look forward to receiving funding under the new Canada employment program for community development projects, a program designed to aid people living in areas of high unemployment. In the coming year, this program alone will provide employment for 15,500 Canadians.

In addition to some of the short-term measures, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has already begun work on long-term employment strategies for the coming decade. Indeed, I am proud to be participating in the formulation of these long-range plans as a member of the parliamentary task force on critical skills for the eighties. I would like to mention that, after only a couple of sessions, I for one welcome the serious, no-nonsense, non-partisan attitude of all seven members of this committee who collectively represent the three parties in this House.

Continuing with the matter of federal expenditures, I would like to stress that the economic development of the west coast of Newfoundland, indeed of all Newfoundland, for the moment is dependent on the support it receives from the federal government. And it is through the expenditure of these federal funds that regional disparity can be countered. However, we in Newfoundland and Labrador look forward to the day very soon when we are economically self-sufficient. We look forward to the day when we have the capital at our disposal to develop the great fishery and forestry and other resources in our province to their maximum potential. This will come about through the development of oil resources off the shores of Newfoundland and Labrador.

We in Newfoundland and Labrador view this resource potential as a means to strengthen the economic and social fabric of our province. As Canadians who for so many years have benefited from the tax dollars of other provinces, we look forward with pride to sharing the benefits of any offshore development with all Canadians. There is no doubt about that and I say again that any Newfoundland spokesman who would suggest otherwise is a spokesman divorced from his people.

The Prime Minister of Canada assured the people of Newfoundland and Labrador during the election campaign that it is this party's position that Newfoundland will reap the maximum benefits from offshore development, and for that reason and others the people of my province responded by sending five Liberals out of a possible seven members to this House of Commons. A fair and just share of the offshore resource is what the people of my province expect, and I am confident that that is what this government will deliver.

That is an honest statement of our intentions. It is very much unlike the vague and misleading promises of the Conservative party, such as those delivered by the member for St. John's West and other Tory candidates who promised to deliver to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador complete ownership and control immediately after being re-elected. It would be as simple as that and we would have no problems at all. Of course, the people of Newfoundland and Labrador were not fooled. They wondered why, if things were so simple, the Tories did not deliver the goods before the last election. The reason is obvious; they could not deliver the goods. Once again they were talking through their hats. Is it any wonder that the hon. member for St. John's West—and I wish he were here—is one of the shortest lived finance ministers in the history of Canada? It is no wonder at all.

I want to quote from an exchange of letters between the former prime minister and the Premier of Newfoundland. I will do so because I want to point out that we had the former premier, the premier, the hon. member for St. John's West, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and all the Tory candidates telling us in February to vote for the Tory party in Newfoundland and we would get our offshore oil. It was to be as simple as that—a straightforward deal between the boys in Ottawa and the boys in Newfoundland.

I should like to quote from the letter dated September 14, 1979, when the then prime minister, now the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), wrote to Premier Peckford of Newfoundland as follows:

—these arrangements will certainly involve important regulatory, legislative and, indeed, constitutional changes before everything is in place.

They did not say anything about the constitution during the election campaign, Mr. Speaker. We did. We were honest enough to state it but the Tories did not. Further on in the letter we find that the little club that is going to straighten this matter up is getting bigger. The letter goes on to say:

—I am sending a copy of this letter to all the premiers because all are interested in the matter to some degree and will, in due time, have to deal with it in constitutional discussions.

That is what we were honest enough to say all along, Mr. Speaker, and I welcome the opportunity to put it on the record of this House. That is the farce that the Conservative party tried to perpetrate on the people of Newfoundland during the last election campaign. I think it is shameful, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I should like to direct my remarks for a moment to the perennial third party in the House of Commons, the New Democratic Party. I see that only one member is present, which is not surprising. The elected members of that party participated in what was beyond a shadow of a doubt the greatest political hypocrisy of our time. Those are strong words, Mr. Speaker, but let me tell you why I use them. I am not surprised that the New Democratic Party is upset about the limitation imposed on this debate. Indeed, I would not be surprised if they could find a way to disagree with the Lord himself if he sat on this side of the House. This is the party that refused, again and again as a party, to take a position during the referendum campaign.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Tobin: This is the party which, for purely political and partisan purposes, refused to stand up and be counted for Canada. Shame, Mr. Speaker—shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I find it at the very worst dishonest, and at the very best cowardly, for any Canadian to seek election to represent Canadians in this Parliament and then, when the time comes, to refuse to stand up and be counted and to defend Canada.

Mr. Miller: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that this is the hon. member's maiden speech but nevertheless he is totally misrepresenting the position of the New Democratic Party during the referendum in Quebec.

An hon. Member: Boo!

Mr. Miller: Our party leader attended at least two meetings in the province of Quebec outlining our position on the referendum.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Miller: I would question, Mr. Speaker, your permitting the hon. member to use that kind of false—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Miller: —comment, regardless whether it is his maiden speech or not.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The hon. member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) takes a certain risk when he uses words like "dishonesty". It tends to incur the distress of other members. On the other hand, I believe it has been ruled in this House that the use of that expression is not necessarily unparliamentary. It is, however, a risk he takes.

I might point out to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) that unfortunately the use of a point of order is not an opportunity to enter into debate with the hon. member who has the floor. We will continue with the remarks of the hon. member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member opposite suggested that I was misrepresenting the position of the NDP during the Quebec referendum. I would make it very clear to him, as it is clear to everybody else, that they did not have a position, so how could I misrepresent it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I am convinced that all Canadians, whether they voted Liberal, Conservative or even NDP in the last election, viewed the Quebec referendum result not only as a victory for Quebec but for all Canada. The NDP would be wise to recognize that even those who supported them in the last election can have nothing now but contempt for that party's non-stand during the referendum campaign. Let the non-stand taken by the New Democratic Party be an example to Canadians of the shallowness of ideas and integrity of that party.

While I am on the subject, Mr. Speaker, let me direct my comments for a moment to hon. members opposite in the Conservative party, particularly to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. While there is a fundamental difference between his views and mine on economic matters, and while we would no doubt differ on how this country should evolve, I am sure my colleagues on this side join me in applauding the Leader of the Opposition for his courage in stating in a clear, concise and loud manner his and his party's support for the No side during the referendum campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I suggest the Leader of the New Democratic Party could well take a lesson from the Leader of the Opposition, and indeed should take daily lessons from the Leader of the Government, the right hon. Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I support Bill C-30, Mr. Speaker. Some 12 years ago at the age of 13 I adopted the habit—old man that I am—of listening to and watching every newscast I could. I used to read every newspaper I could lay my hands on. Very quickly, Mr. Speaker, I gained a tremendous respect and admiration for the prime minister of the day, 12 years ago, who happened to be the same Prime Minister as today. It is a privilege that I did not expect to come my way those 12 years ago to be standing here today as a colleague of the Prime Minister of Canada.

There is no question that the Prime Minister's political longevity is a direct tribute to his honesty and integrity over the years. I hope it is also a tribute to the kind of men and women he has attracted to run for this party under his leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I cannot, in all good conscience, Mr. Speaker, rationalize the negativity that constantly emanates from that side of the House of Commons—negativity toward Bill C-30 and negativity toward everything this government would undertake as part of its mandate from the people to serve the people. Perhaps there is an explanation for the negativity we have seen in something the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) touched upon in this House a few days ago.

I remember that during the February 18 election campaign I spent one cold night in Corner Brook talking with my grandfather. During the course of our discussion about my chances of election and who was going to form the next government, etc., my grandfather gave me what I think is very sound advice. He told me that if I lost, then I should be proud in defeat. I should be proud of the effort I had made. He also told me that if the people were kind enough to bestow their confidence upon me and I won, then I should be humble in victory. I think that is sound advice, Mr. Speaker—to be humble in victory, and proud and dignified in defeat.

The people of Canada spoke on February 18 and while we on this side, I believe, have been humble in victory, hon. members opposite have been everything and anything but proud and dignified in defeat. Sadly, instead we have seen a kind of bitterness and a vindictiveness that I am sure has clouded their ordinarily good judgment and has poisoned what would ordinarily be their good will to participate in the House of Commons.

We on the government side recognize the necessity for a good, effective opposition in the House of Commons. We would welcome good, effective and constructive opposition. But if that is not forthcoming, then we have no time to play games. That is why I voted for time limitation on this debate on Bill C-30. That is why I support Bill C-30 so we can get on to other important matters.

I have one final piece of advice for members opposite before I sit down. It is simply this: I suggest that right now is the time for members opposite to swallow what has become in their own minds that very bitter pill called defeat.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve the right, after reviewing what the last member said in terms of his use of the words "dishonesty" and "cowardly"—this is in reference to the representation that he made toward this party with regard to our position on Quebec—to review the blues for further consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair will certainly respect the right of the hon. member and support the right of the hon. member to make that review.

I might add that one hon. member whose advice is often sought in that regard, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Neilsen), has mentioned to me privately the same concern. My recollection was, and I believe it to be the case, that an accusation made directly to a member, of a member or about a member that he or she is dishonest is unparliamentary language and out of order. But a reference made to a political party or a group where the word "dishonesty" is used has in fact been ruled acceptable debate.

The Chair does not want to enter into the fine points of that difference. I only raise it to assure the hon. member that the matter is of some concern. I did warn the previous member on the subject. I will on behalf of the Chair undertake to assure the hon. member that his point of privilege will not be lost, and if he chooses to bring it up tomorrow he will be heard.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, it is a duty that I have to fulfil on behalf of my constituents to rise and speak on this bill.

From my recollection of when I studied history in my school days, the reason we have Parliament is to be accountable to the people of Canada, the people who elected us on their behalf. We are accountable to them for the tax dollars that the government collects. It is the duty of every elected representative to see that those tax dollars are spent wisely. But when the government of the day comes before us with a bill asking for permission to borrow $12 billion, and at the same time, upon requesting information from it as to what use the government will put the $12 billion, we find it very difficult to get that information, then I find it rather strange that the previous speaker should talk about taking his responsibilities soberly. He apparently finds it very easy to rise and support a bill that really gives the government a blank cheque in terms of borrowing $12 billion. I think all of us as elected representatives of the people take our responsibilities very soberly. I know I take mine very soberly and that is why I feel compelled to speak on this bill.

The previous speaker said that he is operating on a shoestring budget because of the situation in which he was left by the previous government. I do not know where he comes from or what kind of situation they are in in Newfoundland, but in Manitoba $12 billion is anything but a shoe string budget. In fact, it would account for roughly six years of total expenditure by the province of Manitoba. The hon. member should be very careful when he talks about a shoe string budget and relate it to the amount of money that is involved. It is a tremendous amount of money, and to refer to it simply as a shoestring budget is not exercising rationally or responsibly his admonition of himself that he is sober in his responsibilities to his constituents.

Mr. Nielsen: That is just the amount of the deficit.

Mr. Mayer: Not only is $12 billion a lot of money to borrow, but it is a lot of money in relation to the total spending of this government.

There was mention by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) of what the Americans are doing with their budget. In 1979 the Americans had a budget of something over $600 billion and a deficit of $29 billion. This works out to something like 5 per cent of their total expenditure as far as borrowings are concerned.

To relate that back to what we do here in Canada, in the current fiscal year the government will be spending roughly $54 billion. Of that, we are told we will be running a $14 billion budget, which leaves approximately $40 billion that we will be collecting from the taxpayers. If we relate that to the amount of interest which this government is going to be paying on previous government debt, it amounts to something like $10 billion. Therefore, for every $4 which this government collects from the taxpayers of Canada, $1, or 25 per cent, of that is going to be used simply to pay interest on past government debt.

This kind of an expenditure does not finance any new programs. It does not finance any health care programs nor does it increase pensions to those who are in need. It does not buy any new fighter aircraft. It does not do anything that people have come to expect from their government; it simply goes to pay interest on past mismanagement. I find it incredible that we could be so flippant about giving this government borrowing authority to borrow vast sums of money without expecting it to account for what it wants to use the money for and without examining the government's record on what it has done to the economy in the past ten or 12 years.

The previous speaker also talked about being humble in victory and proud in defeat. It seems to me that this government is anything but humble in victory. I have to think that it is arrogant in victory. If the government was anything that approximated humble, it would be very willing to be forthcoming with information as to how it intends to use the money which it is asking us to approve for its borrowing and the government would do this by presenting a budget.

I think the reference to this borrowing authority being a blank cheque fits. There have been many examples used in this House to try to relate billions of dollars into figures which the ordinary citizen can comprehend. In my opinion, "billions" does not mean much to people because it is such a large number that it virtually becomes meaningless. In terms of each citizen it amounts to $500 per man, woman and child throughout the whole country. For each family of four it means we are being asked to approve $2,000.

I like to think that I come from a very friendly part of the country. We refer to ourselves as being very hospitable. However, I am sure that our hospitality would be strained to the limit if one day a salesman or someone we did not know drove into the yard, knocked at the door, introduced himself and then said that he was sure we did not know him but that he wanted to borrow $2,000. In addition, he would not say what he would use the money for or how he would pay it back; he just wanted to borrow $2,000. If we were faced with that situation, I think our hospitality would be strained past the limit and that we would chase that kind of an individual out of the yard. Yet this is exactly what this government is asking us to do.

On thinking about what would happen in that situation, I think the poor chap would deserve some pity and help and we might feel some compassion for him—at least in my part of the country. In any event, that is what is going on when we are being asked to approve this kind of borrowing. In terms of the people I represent in Portage-Marquette, it would roughly equate to $40 million. I do not know how I could possibly face my constituents if I went home and said that I was perfectly content to sit on my hands and not feel obligated to rise in my place and voice some objections to committing them to paying $40 million. I take my responsibilities seriously and soberly. For me to do that simply means that I rise and voice my objection to being asked to approve borrowing without any idea of what the money is to be spent for.

I refer now to a remark made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) which appears in Hansard for June 2 at page 1670. In closing his speech he said:

I think the time has come for us to move forward on this bill and get on with the business of the House in looking at legislation that is extremely critical, and to stop the kind of delaying tactics that have been used and will be used tonight and tomorrow to stop the passage of a bill which is a fair and honest bill, a bill of borrowing authority the same as ministers of finance have brought down in every government in the past. I think we should get on with the bill, pass the bill and move to other pieces of business.

The parliamentary secretary should be ashamed of himself for making that kind of statement. I am glad to see that he is in the chamber. He stated on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada that we should get on with other business of the House that is critical. To suggest that borrowing $12 billion is not critical and important to the people of Canada is an irresponsible statement. The parliamentary secretary should take those things into account when making such statements.

Much has been said about the irresponsible spending record of this government. I wish to quote from the report of the Auditor General of Canada to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979. At page 12 of that report, Mr. Macdonell talks about how difficult it is for us to be accountable to our constituents and for the government to be accountable for its actions to the people of Canada unless they have information. This is where he says how critical it is to have information, and I quote:

"the key to accountability is . . . quite simply, information—the openness with which an individual or agency operates and the access to information by persons outside who are in a position to do something about it, if necessary, and the ways in which relevant information is selected, processed, and utilized."

From this definition it follows that accountability will be direct and effective where information is reliable and meaningful. For reasons I have set out in detail in five successive annual reports to the House of Commons, it is clear that neither of these latter adjectives applies to the financial information Parliament now receives.

Had this government been more open and forthcoming in terms of information as to what it intends to do with this $12 billion, we on this side would have been much happier to see the passage of this bill come about very quickly. If the parliamentary secretary was really interested in getting on with the business of the House—important business, he called it, by implication saying this bill is not important business—he would have tried to see that the information would be forthcoming. I am sure we would not then be showing as much concern with this bill as we are at present.

I wish to make one other point before concluding my remarks and making way for as many more speakers on this side of the House as possible. On Tuesday afternoon the Minister of State, Small Businesses (Mr. Lapointe) talked in this House about the metric conversion process. During that debate we were given information to the effect that the metric committee that is forcibly converting this country to metric has a budget of something like $27 million. In his remarks the minister made the point that the plastics industry and the petroleum industry were converting very successfully. He sadly neglected to say whether anyone was concerned about people.

My point is simply this. The minister would be exercising his responsibility to small business a lot better if he had seen that some of the $27 million that will be wasted by the commission to convert this country to metric was made available to the small business section of his department in order to assist small businesses. Conversion to metric will cause a lot of problems and additional expense to small business. Small business would be much better served by the minister had he shown some concern about the people involved in the conversion process and tried to ensure that some of the $27 million presently budgeted to the Metric Commission was made available to small business.

There are several other points I should make, but my main concern is that opposition members should have complete information on what the government plans to do with this $12 billion before we are forced into giving the government a blank cheque to borrow vast sums of money on behalf of our constituents.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise this afternoon in this chamber on a matter of such controversy at this point, namely Bill C-30, and as I do I am almost in a nervous shock. Because when the man in the street arrived here as a new member of Parliament, he gets the feeling, especially under a government that gives so many services as this government has been giving Canadians for years, that such services clearly require funds, and that during difficult periods such as we are now going through, the government must borrow.

We had a notion, when the government announced that borrowing would be needed, that these loans would proceed as a matter of routine and everyone would be in agreement here, because if services are given to Canadians it is because members of Parliament passed legislation to help develop the Canadian population. My state of shock comes from the realization that some members here are trying to prevent the Government of Canada from borrowing to meet its commitments to the Canadian people or to defer the process. This is something that as a man in the street I have difficulty in realizing. But as every other member of Parliament, I am so much more aware of the fact that I represent some 80,000 constituents.

The debate has been going on for quite some time. I heard all sorts of things. Some hon. members suggested at some points that this government spent too much, expenditures had to be cut, but a few minutes later they were going on record to suggest that millions should be invested in their constituencies. The rationale of this I never could understand. Others have said that this government is asking for a blank cheque of $12 billion. It is unbelievable that some people can say such inept things to the people. If my memory serves me well a blank cheque is a cheque on which there is no figure and which is signed by the person who is the holder of the bank account. It is certainly not so. There is a very definite figure mentioned in Bill C-30, which represents the borrowing authority asked in it.

Furthermore, we know perfectly well for what purpose those expenditures will be made. Those who do not know just have to review all existing Canadian legislation and they will find there all the expenditures made by the Government of Canada within a year. They are all there and you know it full well.

Another matter that has been frequently raised is the fact that, apparently, the government has not introduced a budget before it requested that borrowing authority. Apparently, this has happened before and anyway I remember very well that the Minister of Finance mentioned on April 21 what would be the expenditures of our country for the coming month. But worse still is that the people who refuse today to give to the Government of Canada the borrowing powers that will enable it to administer our country are the same who after their election as a government on May 22, 1979, took seven months before presenting their budget.

I remember very well, I was in Lac Saint-Jean at the time and I had been listening to the evening news on TV. On two occasions, we saw the then prime minister (Mr. Clark) who, by the way, was not prime minister for too long, go to Banff with his cabinet. Jasper Park, Lake Louise, Banff are very beautiful. Had they visited Lac Saint-Jean at least once they might have seen the marvellous sunset or else they could have seen the most beautiful and the deepest fjord in the world, the one which goes farthest inland, the Saguenay. But this did not happen. Watching all this, we had the impression that that government had just discovered a Canadian city called Banff, that the weather was nice and that they were wandering through the city. I think that that government sat more often in Banff than here. This can certainly delay a budget!

The result of all this was that when the famous budget of which everyone is aware was introduced by the then minister of finance, this budget was so far removed from what Canadians thought the budget of the government should be that it was the last nail in the coffin that the Progressive Conservatives had built for themselves. If at least this budget had been introduced in the first three or four months in office of that government, then we would not have had to wait until February 18 for that government to be replaced by one more able to govern this country. In addition, the budget that the members opposite have been demanding for so long would probably have been introduced before now.

However, after February 18, that important date when Canadians were finally able to say to Pierre Trudeau, "you are the one we find the best," the new government had to rebuild the whole machine and discuss the situation with public servants who were completely lost because they had just gone through a terrible time with many people who had just come into power in May telling them, "black goes right, white goes left," and so on, and because those who had tried in seven months to change major policies to give to the country a new direction which no one understood and did not know exactly where they were going. Everything had to be replaced, all these people had to be told to sit down and to work peacefully as in the past without starting a war with anyone, especially not with our neighbours, nor with those who are a bit farther from us, and they had to be asked to get themselves into the state of mind that they were in before, under the Trudeau administration.

I can assure you that it is quite a handicap to follow such a government and to introduce a budget in the following months. This is a major handicap that we must overcome, and the work is enormous. We have had to do everything over very quickly, and we had to do it so completely over because the former government nearly had time to destroy everything in such a short while.

Other than that there is one thing I want to point out. I can tell hon. members opposite even before a budget is introduced in the House that the next budget will help the middle class, the working class and the underprivileged class in Canada which was not the case of theirs. You know what happens when you do that, you have to borrow several billions of dollars because times are difficult. The man in the street understands that problem very well. It is beyond me that you should have missed that.

How I remember the millions of dollars that were supposed to go into the coffers of the companies, the multinational oil companies, with that famous budget. You would have wanted us to draft the same budget again and have it endorsed by the people of Canada. That would have been quite simply shameful. The only thing you have to do now to try and right the wrong and the damage you did to this country by delaying the process of legislation for a period of seven months during which the House did not sit is to stop filibustering the borrowing authority this government is asking for in its own right. It has that borrowing authority as the elected government of the people of Canada, and all you are doing now is delaying it. That delay, as you know full well, is unjustifiable.

For my part, as I said in this place yesterday, I come from an area where the presence of the Government of Canada is essential and is being felt at various levels because of the economic problems we are now facing. We know full well that the Government of Canada spends more money in my area than it gets out of it in revenues. We are aware of that. We also know one thing, and it is that this situation will not last forever, it is only temporary. When will we get out of it? I am not a soothsayer, I cannot tell you, but we will get out of it. All the premises are there, and all the work that has been done in recent years tends to lead to that result. But in the meantime we cannot conceive that you would want to have a single generation pay for all the problems we are now experiencing. That is why the Government of Canada is borrowing. This is capitalization. When it is paid off, it will bring dividends. We are spending today to meet the needs of the underprivileged. One day the government will have enough revenue to look after those needs, as it has already been the case. It is a regular cycle.

Therefore, the people in my area know quite well and are proud of the fact that the authorities of this country have taken the necessary decisions which have brought investments worth millions of dollars in this fine country called Canada and have made sure that not only one generation or only one part of the population is experiencing difficulties. You know that during the last election campaign the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) said a few words that we have not forgotten. He said: "The Liberal Party of Canada does not make promises but stands for principles." Those are the principles which I am now stating, principles of justice and equity for the distribution of wealth. A while ago I heard my colleague from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) who referred to the position taken by various provinces in the constitutional negotiations. Once again, the same spirit should be revised.

What I find most unfortunate—and I do not know whether it is a false impression—is that my colleagues opposite seem to have forgotten those principles. They seem to have forgotten them, because they are trying to prevent the Canadian government from borrowing or they are delaying the borrowing process of the Canadian government. They want to prevent the government from borrowing. This government was democratically elected on February 18, 1980, when the former prime minister decided to call the election when his senseless budget was rejected. This is what they are trying to do. I wish to tell them that we are pleased to see that the members opposite are doing their job, that they are watching us and saying from time to time: You should perhaps do that instead of something else.

That is part of your job, but it is also part of your job to represent your constituents, if you know what that means. It means that when existing legislation obliges the government to borrow to meet its requirements, you also have the duty to approve it, and as quickly as possible. Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, I have the impression that hon. members of the opposition live in the past. We still hear them talk about oil taxes, budget cuts, all things which Canadians said at one point they did not want, ever.

We also hear that the government should not be given a blank cheque, but the government is not asking for a blank cheque. It is telling us that the House must give it authority to fulfil its obligations towards the people and in that sense, gentlemen, when you let the debate go on and on, you act as if you were still in power, and you are not. It was a democratic decision that made things the way they are, nothing else, following your actions and those of people who formed your government.

As a new member, I think that is horrifying, Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand. I have trouble grasping all that and putting it into my head at a point in time a responsible member of Parliament comes here to represent his constituents. Follow your reasoning to its logical conclusion, gentlemen.

Assuming a motion for closure is not brought in at some time, and that you keep the debate going, say, until the month of January, 1981, where would the government get the money? Can you tell me that? What about the people of your ridings who are on welfare, get medical care or money for the capital projects under way in Alberta, whether through Petro-Canada or any other way? I am asking you to realize that the government is now asking you to do your job. Let the bill go through as soon as possible so that we can perform our duty to Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-30, which has become a very, very important question in the minds of the Canadian public. The hon. member from the other side of the House just said that the people of Canada are not signing a blank cheque. That is true. They are signing a cheque with $12 billion on it. The government is saying to the people of Canada, "We are not telling you how we are going to spend the money, but we are asking you to pay the bill".

I suggest that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this country and the government of the day will be held responsible by our children and our grandchildren for the actions that the government is taking in this House today. We have had 12 years and more of Liberal government under the leadership of the Prime Minister, which has led us in a direction that is socializing this country and turning it into a socialist state, with the help of the NDP members on the extreme left who defeated a good budget and who defeated some direction for this country. That direction would have turned around this excess spending.

What type of direction is this government asking for? What kind of spending has it been doing? There has been excess spending in the form of a Metric Commission. There has been excess spending on many white elephants across the country. We just heard of one in the past few days. Two billion dollars was spent on a complex. It is rather hard for someone from the province of Saskatchewan to think in terms of those figures because that is about the budget of our whole province. We have some concern for our constituencies and for our people because we are asked to share in the responsibility for paying for this type of mismanagement brought upon the people of Canada by the government of the day. Truly it is a blank cheque and more. We have had no direction from the Minister of Finance with regard to what type of budget there will be. We have had no direction in terms of how the spending will be done. All we know is that we must pay the bill.

I think at this time the Canadian people are asking more of government and more of this House of Commons. They are asking for some accountability on the part of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and every member who sits in this House of Commons with regard to the spending done here, in this case $12 billion.

There has been big government during the Trudeau years and during the Liberal years. Big government spending has gone completely out of control. There has been no consideration given to production. We have lived through an era in which the word "profit" was a bad word and the word "incentive" was completely forgotten. We have given no direction and no incentive to the people who have been paying the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: In my constituency of Assiniboia we have very productive people. I imagine every member in this House thinks that his people are productive, but when we analyse how much money is being spent and where it is being spent, it gives me some concern as a member from western Canada.

I would like to relate a couple of examples just in the short term I have been the representative of the constituency of Assiniboia. Under the summer youth employment program it is very interesting to note that the constituency of Assiniboia was allotted by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) $85,000. I received letters from people from across my constituency whose projects were turned down. The average constituency in Quebec received $200,000. My people are asking, "Where is the money being spent?" We asked for help with productive projects. Before I came to this House my predecessor who represented Assiniboia had been working toward the extension of the runway at the airport at Estevan. I worked toward that extension and made submissions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). We have been turned down again and again on that project. There are aeroplanes coming in to service the oil wells and coal production in that area. The request of that particular community was turned down. We asked for $200,000.

I have figures in front of me regarding the money spent on Mirabel airport. The original approved cost was to be $212,247,000. The final cost turned out to be $371,276,000. There was a cost overrun of $159 million, or 74 per cent. This is the way this government has been spending money.

The people of my constituency and the people of western Canada are very, very concerned about the excess spending that has been going on here in Ottawa by big government. That leads me to another question. It is all right to accuse someone of excess spending, but we must also come up with some answers. How can we solve the problem? One of the major problems Canada faces today is that we have priced ourselves out of the world market under the socialistic direction the Prime Minister of Canada has taken.

One of the members across the way laughs. I should like to read the words the right hon. Prime Minister wrote in 1961 which appeared in a book entitled "Practice and Theory of Federalism":

If the whole of the Canadian electorate could miraculously be converted to socialist ideals at one fell swoop, there would be no reason to discuss strategy in the present context. Socialism would be achieved with or without federalism, and socialist administrations would be installed at every level of government affairs, no matter the form of the constitution.

The Prime Minister of Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I was simply indicating to the hon. member that it is now five o'clock and I wanted to give him the opportunity to complete his sentence. Otherwise I will recognize him at eight o'clock when the House resumes debate on Bill C-30.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed in today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

[English]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall item No. 1 on the order paper, in the name of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt), stand by unanimous consent?

Candu Reactor Sales

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This item was placed on the order paper as a notice of motion for the production of papers on April 14. It was transferred for debate on June 4. If the member is serious, he should be prepared for debate. So I give the first notice of my intention to raise the matter at the next time of calling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the Chair to understand from the comments of the hon. member that he is not going to deny unanimous consent at this point to the suggestion that the item stand? Is that correct?

Mr. Herbert: I am putting my objection at this time, which means it will require unanimous consent at the next time of calling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That is understood. The next item is item No. 19, in the name of the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon). Shall the item stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SALES OF CANDU REACTORS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings and other communications between the government and senior officials of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited during the months of June, July, August and September, 1979, that pertain to the negotiation of the sales of Candu reactors either by AECL or by any private company acting with the authority or knowledge of AECL.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for very long. This motion was transferred yesterday. It is a repeat of an identical motion which I placed on the order paper in the last Parliament on November 8, 1979. The motion arose from a complaint of a constituent who represents and works for a company which is interested in international trade, which is working in the export business, particularly in the field of nuclear reactors, nuclear equipment and allied equipment.

The complaint of the constituent was that in this period to which the motion refers there was, in his opinion, direct interference by the government of the day in Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, the result of which was to ensure that there would be no communication between private companies interested in furthering sales and the representatives of the government who were interested in making purchases.

When I look at the make-up of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, I find that its objectives are, among others:

To participate in the development of a viable Canadian nuclear industry through the development and marketing of nuclear power systems, components, materials, equipment, technology, medical and industrial isotopes, irradiators and related products.

They are also:

To ensure an adequate supply of heavy water to meet domestic and export needs of the Candu system.

The last available report of AECL was transmitted to the then minister of energy, mines and resources on June 28 of last year, so presumably we will soon be getting the more current report. In his opening remarks, the president of AECL makes reference to Canada's clear intentions to make the affairs of AECL more commercially oriented.

If one looks through the last report of AECL one sees some most interesting photographs of reactors in Argentina, of people from China looking at the Ontario Hydro facility at Pickering, of an exhibition which was organized in Switzerland where Canada is attempting to sell its technology, of visiting personages from Romania, and of the construction of a Candu nuclear generating station in Korea for the Korean Electric Company. I mention these just to illustrate that obviously we have been intent on making export sales and have been at least communicating with persons in the countries mentioned.

It appeared from the information available to us in the second half of last year that a deliberate attempt was being made to hinder any negotiations. It appeared to me that an important minister of the Crown at that time was interfering with the operations of a Crown corporation which should have been independent of government interference, to ensure that by refusing to communicate they were effectively stopping negotiations for a sale.

Let me be very clear, Mr. Speaker. In this motion I am not arguing for or against the merits of selling Candu reactors abroad. Whether we should or should not do so is for the government to decide, but I am tired at this stage of double standards. I honestly believe that we should make up our mind whether or not we are going to be in this market. I honestly believe that we have one of the best reactors that is available. I honestly believe that if we do not sell our reactors, France, West Germany or another country will sell theirs.

Although I am not making the argument in this motion for the sale of our reactors, I do believe we should have a very clear statement of what our policy will be, and we should not find ourselves in a position where a minister of the Crown appears at least to have interfered with the operations of an independent corporation to ensure that negotiations do not proceed.

Just this week, and by coincidence, representatives from Argentina were in this capital city of Ottawa. I did not meet them but they made plain to other hon. members their disenchantment with the actions of our government in making it impossible for the government of Argentina to communicate with us and do business. What I am suggesting, of course, is that we should make up our minds precisely what we want or do not want. I do not like the suggestion that a minister of the Crown can make a personal decision about the countries with which we should be doing business.

To make a point, I have made reference in the report to representatives from China, which would make it at least appear as if we are prepared to do business with China. That is fine by me personally, but I also ask why we have put every single impediment in the way of doing business with Taiwan. I know we have heard two motions in the House in the last two or three days concerning the conduct of people in Taiwan, but will anyone suggest that what is happening there is any better or worse than what is happening in other countries with which we are doing business? My point is that I am very upset that we can have this double standard where we or individuals decide with what countries we shall or shall not be doing business and the basis on which that business shall be done. If we want to be holier than thou and we do not want to do business with governments of countries that do not act in the way we believe they should act, then I will accept that as policy, but it must be across the board, for all countries. I think it is unjust and unfair that we have this double standard.

It seems to me that the action last year, in appearing to stop a sale to Argentina by closing off negotiations or making it impossible for the parties to get together, is not the way in which we should be proceeding. I understand the sensitivities of the Department of External Affairs and its foreign relationships with other countries, but I think if there is one thing we in Canada can do, it is to establish a clear basis upon which we do business.

I have heard comments in the last few days about South Africa, for example. Certainly I am not here pleading any case for South Africa, but will anyone suggest that what is happening there is worse than what is happening in other countries? We do not like to talk about it because there is too much at stake either in business or in the relations between our country and that particular country.

My motion was put on the order paper not in the expectation of receiving any documents. When I put it on in the last Parliament, it was directed against the last government. I did not expect to receive the documents. Frankly I did not expect to receive them from this government either, and I understand the reasons why.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Herbert: Simply because probably among those documents there are documents which are of a confidential and private nature. I am prepared to accept that explanation. However, I must direct my motion at all the documents. I have no way of putting my finger on any one direct communication. That is why I make my motion in this form.

My objection is to an apparent action of a minister of the Crown in communicating with an independent Crown corporation to ensure there will be a closing off of communications between private Canadian companies and AECL, so as to ensure that discussions dealing with the sale of equipment related to nuclear devices—and not necessarily Candu reactors themselves—should not proceed and the basis for the intervention apparently to stop the sale, in this case to Argentina. I will make it plain again. I am not pleading for the sale of Candu reactors to Argentina or to any other country, but I am pleading with the government to establish a policy which is the same for all countries and not to set up a double standard that sounds politically good, whether it be the last government or the present government.

Because I am referring to June, July and August of last year, obviously I am not pointing the finger at the present government. But I feel we must clarify this particular point. We must tell AECL that its job is to try to increase the export market to give us more jobs in Canada. It is an area in which we have the expertise. It is an area which provides the type of high technology employment that is beneficial to Canada. I do not believe impediments of any kind should be put in the way of this company in its negotiations with any country, unless we set up in advance the standards by which that other country is supposed to operate. Then I suggest that probably we will be cutting off two-thirds of the world's countries.

I hope I have made my point. I do not intend to pursue this motion through to its logical conclusion, but I plead with the present government not to fall into the same pattern as the past government and, by indirect action, interfere with the free operation of a Crown corporation which, in the fashion it is set up, is supposed to be independent of government interference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with attention to the statement of the hon. member. I have noted that a number of the issues which he raised will be under consideration in the nuclear review which the government has undertaken. I can assure the hon. member that the points he made will be fully taken into account in our consideration of the ways in which the nuclear industry in Canada can best be further promoted and developed in the future.

In entering this discussion this afternoon, I thought it might be useful if I were to say a word first about the ways in which the nuclear industry in Canada has developed, before turning to the future possibilities that are open to AECL and the private sector in this important area of our high technology industry.

As members of the House will recall, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the current nuclear industry originated in the military programs launched during the Second World War. Research and development activities on the peaceful use of nuclear energy have been funded by parliamentary appropriations since the very start of atomic research in Canada.

In 1952 AECL was formed when the assets of the Chalk River wartime research project, along with those of the commercial products division of Eldorado Mining Ltd., were transferred to the newly formed Crown corporation. From a starting complement of about 1,300 employees in 1952, AECL has grown to close to 8,000 employees. Today the corporation has major facilities at Chalk River in Ontario, the Whiteshell nuclear laboratories in Manitoba, the power project engineering, design and development facilities near Toronto, and a successful radioactive isotopes commercial products operation in Ottawa.

Also, AECL has heavy water production plants at Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury in Nova Scotia and a partially constructed heavy water plant in La Prade, Quebec, as well as its corporate headquarters here in Ottawa. The Canadian nuclear industry today directly employs about 30,000 people. It is estimated that a further 50,000 jobs are generated indirectly.

The majority of jobs directly related to the Canadian nuclear industry are of a highly skilled nature. For example, in the nuclear manufacturing sector, the level of professional and technical employment is approximately four times the Canadian manufacturing average and double the electrical product industry average. AECL has developed as the linch pin of this industry providing, on the one hand, the coherent, specialized, technical basis of the industry and, on the other hand, the marketing and export of nuclear power systems in various forms.

Alternative industrial structures have been considered from time to time and remain a major subject of review. The value of Canadian goods and services in a single exported 600-megawatt station can range up to $300 million. Additional opportunities for Canadian industry often exist in the provision of support facilities and infrastructure.

The tangible results of AECL's efforts are perhaps most readily seen in the province of Ontario. Having foreseen the early exhaustion of its hydraulic resources for electricity generation, and having limited indigenous fossil resources and a sufficiently large grid, Ontario made an early commitment to a nuclear program. In 1978 Ontario received 30 per cent of its electric energy from nuclear sources. Installed capacity is now about 5500 megawatts and a further 8500 megawatts are under construction. Quebec has an installed nuclear capacity of 250 megawatts with a further 600 megawatts under construction. New Brunswick, as hon. members of that province will be aware, also has a 600-megawatt unit under construction at Lepreau.

The technical success of the Candu reactor is evidenced by a comparison of the measured gross capacity factors of the western world's nuclear power stations. In 1978 Ontario Hydro's units occupied five of the top 12 positions. On a lifetime comparison basis, these same units occupy five of the top seven positions. The unit energy cost of electricity produced at the Pickering nuclear station is about half that from the comparably sized and contemporary coal-fired Lambton station and has the additional benefit of major savings in foreign exchange.

The Candu reactor has proven to be a dependable, safe and economic source of electrical energy. Its continued role has received recent support from the Bayda royal commission in Saskatchewan, the report of the Porter Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning in Ontario, and the select committee on energy of the Ontario legislature.

The United States nuclear physicist and Nobel prize winner, Hans Bethe, has called the Candu reactor a technical wonder and praised its fantastic reliability. The Sussex University research unit in Britain, after a worldwide analysis of nuclear plant performance, has rated the Candu heavy water system the best in the world and recommended its adoption in Britain. And in the wake of Three Mile Island in the United States, the Tennessee Institute for Energy Analysis suggested that the U.S. use the current lull in the construction of new nuclear plants there to examine alternative models, including Canada's Candu reactor.

As a development-hungry Third World looks toward nuclear technology to replace oil-related energy and as Europe is planning for massive nuclear development, Canada finds itself with an unique opportunity to prove its nuclear technological leadership.

I believe it is clear from what I have said that the nuclear industry in Canada and particularly the development of AECL has not been something that happened overnight or without the consultation of Parliament. For almost 40 years the Canadian government and the nuclear industry have been working to develop and build a viable product that is not only safe but dependable and efficient. It is helping to meet Canada's current energy demands and, according to projections, it will provide a greater proportion of our energy demands in the future. Parliament has been involved with the development of the industry since its inception and will continue to help to ensure that the nuclear option provides safe and dependable energy for all Canadians.

But what of the future of the Candu reactor? Although the Candu reactor has achieved practical maturity and proven its commercial viability, the development potential of the system is nowhere near exhaustion. The current Candu designs are capable of evolutionary development to minimize energy costs and conserve resources. It is most important to recognize that the Candu system can and will adjust to future requirements by a process of evolution, based on a proven, highly successful design.

Most other advanced nations expect that future nuclear energy requirements will be met by a change from current thermal reactor systems to fast breeder reactors. However, the fast breeder type of reactor is far from being commercially feasible at this stage and will require massive outlays in capital before it is fully developed. The evolutionary route of the Candu system is obviously less costly and more predictable than employing our scarce resources to develop the fast breeder reactor.

Three major areas for the evolutionary development of the Candu system that are currently under way are reactor size, in terms of unit output; the fuel cycle, and heat-transfer fluid or coolant, used to extract the heat energy from the reactor core.

On the first point, it has been found that it is possible conceptually to design units of 2000 megawatts without technical limitations. For the Bruce Generating Station, each of the four units is rated at a nominal 750 megawatts, with the additional thermal energy being supplied as industrial process heat to a heavy water plant. This demonstrates the other possibilities open for power reactors other than generating electricity.

Part of the power reactors output may be extracted directly as heat for space heating for industrial and residential uses. One possibility that has been suggested is the full output of a reactor being applied to the extraction of oil from tar sands. The large quantities of heat and electricity that are required for this process could be matched to the capacity of the reactor. Heat from the reactor can be used in greenhouses and providing warm water for fish farming, as the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) has pointed out in this House.

The second area of development of the Candu system is in the fuel cycle. All present Candu reactors operate on the once-through natural uranium cycle, with retrievable storage of the spent fuel. Although this cycle is very efficient in its utilization of our uranium resources compared to other commercially available reactor systems, it does consume fissile uranium, the supply of which is limited.

The Candu reactor is, however, capable, with minor alterations, of being adapted to exploit the considerable reserve of energy in spent fuel by recycling plutonium, and may be further adapted to the transformation of thorium into a fuel material, thus giving access to vast new reserves of energy. This inherent advantage of the Candu system is unparalleled in the world today. It will prolong the life of our present nuclear facilities and ensure that we shall remain competitive internationally in the future.

The third area of possible development is the choice of heat-transfer fluid or the coolant, as it is known. The coolant presently used in the Candu design is heavy water. Heavy water is an efficient but expensive heat-transfer fluid.

Two other coolants are being examined for possible savings in energy costs, boiling light water and organic-cooled reactor type. Both of these approaches have been examined in conjunction with the advanced fuel cycles. By combining alternative coolants with advanced fuel cycles it seems certain that additional reduction in capital costs will be possible. Estimates of over-all cost reductions of 15 per cent to 20 per cent may be realized, principally in the capital cost component when the advanced fuel cycles are available.

The Candu reactor is not simply for our present use. It is flexible enough to be adapted for the advanced fuel cycles of the future. As I have indicated, AECL and the nuclear industry are studying ways by which we can continue to use the Candu reactor well into the next century. The future of the Candu reactor is bright; with its flexibility and proven capability it is indeed a "technical wonder."

• (1730)

The nuclear power programs of many industrialized nations, including Canada, have been challenged by perceptions which focus essentially on three principal issues: reactor safety, the safe management of high level nuclear wastes and nuclear weapons proliferation. These are, of course, important issues which will continue to require consistent attention. While these issues are the subject of concerted national and international action, they are not likely to be totally resolved to the satisfaction of all, in the immediate term.

For example, the safe management and disposal of radioactive wastes is a problem facing the industry as a whole. From its inception in the early 1950s, AECL has been studying means of safely immobilizing such materials and, more recently, has formally joined with the province of Ontario in a major effort to establish the parameters associated with their permanent disposal. With the proper support, AECL is confident that this matter can be addressed in an economic and timely manner, consistent with the meeting of concerns on health and safety. The present phase of the program consists of a research effort for the safe disposal of nuclear waste. Site selection will come much later.

The Candu reactor system has a power safety record second to none in the world and a comprehensive high level waste management program is well under way. Significant progress has been made through the aegis of international organizations and agencies toward the articulation of a global safeguards regime which will, on the one hand, diminish the probability of weapons proliferation and, on the other, provide developing nations with the benefits or nuclear technology upon which to base some of their economic development aspirations.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the nuclear energy option is of compelling national and international importance. The issues are not trivial and are often politically sensitive. The goal is nothing short of a solid contribution to a stable and secure long term energy supply to underpin our economic and social development in the years ahead. To this end Canada, through government funding, has firmly established international scale and world recognized research and development facilities, the principal mission of which is to sustain and safeguard our fission energy option both now and in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I noted the remarks made by the hon. parliamentary secretary. I am always pleased to hear him read his speeches because of the exciting way he does so. The beginning of his speech was so exciting that even the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was compelled to leave the House on business—momentarily. His speeches are so exciting that they make the answers given by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) during the question period sound positively vaudevillian, exciting and stimulating. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has other discriptions for the hon. member's delivery but I shall not repeat them.

I shall, however, say something about the substance of the parliamentary secretary's speech. It was simply an incredible speech and showed a completely uncritical attitude toward the nuclear industry.

An hon. Member: It was critical but it was not negative.

Mr. Waddell: I heard nothing critical in the whole speech; no questioning, nothing.

This is the government that in reply to a question in this House today stated there was an inquiry under way with reference to the nuclear industry. Mr. Speaker, the nuclear question is probably one of the most crucial questions of the day. I am astounded at the parliamentary secretary's uncritical attitude toward the nuclear industry. It shows that the internal inquiry is not real. This government and the department should come clean with the Canadian people and say so.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Have a public inquiry.

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) says it should be a public inquiry. That is what his government suggested and I shall return to that in a moment.

I have not finished with the parliamentary secretary yet but I want to deal with the remarks of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). He said he was not pleading for the sale of Candu reactors and was not pleading for information. What was he pleading for, then? I thought he had a tiger of a resolution here and was bringing up an important matter on the freedom of information and the important matter of the nuclear industry, but he fizzled out. He started off like a tiger and became a pussycat. I do not say that personally, but in effect that was the result of his speech.

He said he did not receive documents, but that it does not matter; that he was not asking for documents—in spite of putting the resolution forward—because they are probably of a private and confidential nature.

A new book has been published entitled "Deference to Authority: the Case of Canada" by an author called Friedenberg. I am sorry I do not have the name of the publisher or the full title available. The book points out that we Canadians have such deference for authority we are afraid to question things and ask that they be brought out in the open; that we are almost a totalitarian society and that we will not look into things as the Americans will. This pertains to freedom of information, to the McDonald Inquiry, to the way RCMP is run and the way the Liberals run the Government of Canada. I shall come back to this, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member did say he was pleading for a policy, a standard but he apparently objected to a standard being set. I do not think it is any secret but he mentioned that representatives from Argentina were in this country about a month ago. They visited Ottawa in secret. The Argentinian equivalent of the head of AECL came to see the government to get us to reduce our standards. So we do have a policy and we do have standards, Mr. Speaker, and I will congratulate the government on that. There are standards for the sale of Candu reactors overseas and the hon. member should know that and the difficulty of keeping to those standards.

I believe we sold a reactor to India. They did not live up to the standards and built an atomic bomb, to their eternal disgrace. I can understand why they did it; because of the pressures on them and the difficulties of their foreign policy, but, nevertheless, I think the decision was wrong and it was a very important one.

There are policies and standards, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) has stated that these standards will not be lowered, and in that he is right. The hon. member who just spoke said he does not want any policy at all. The policy he wants is laissez-faire—sell the reactor to anybody. If that is the case, I do not know why he brought the resolution.

I want to return now to the question of the Candu reactor itself, Mr. Speaker. It is a good reactor, if you like nuclear reactors. There are two problems with them and the first is a serious one. The fact is that we cannot dispose of nuclear waste. The parliamentary secretary said that with the proper support, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is confident it can solve the disposal problem. It has the proper support, Mr. Speaker, from the Government of Canada, but the government is not going to help them solve the disposal problem because it does not have the answers.

That is the fundamental question of our generation. It is a moral question, Mr. Speaker. Can we in this generation pass on to future generations an unsolved nuclear waste problem that may in fact destroy future generations and destroy the world? That is a fundamental moral question. For my part, I say no, we cannot, and some of my colleagues say no also.

Another problem that arises in the selling of the Candu reactors is whether those countries who buy them will live up to the safeguards. For example, India did not, and that is another problem.

To return to this matter of an inquiry, on May 1 of this year, as reported in Hansard at page 605, the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) asked about an inquiry, and referring to the Progressive Conservative government, he said this:

> Our government initiated a national inquiry into domestic and international nuclear policy in Canada. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to reconvene that national inquiry so that Canadians may have an input and there can be an assessment with respect to the direction of our national nuclear policy?

The parliamentary secretary then stood up and gave one of his solid answers, as follows:

> Madam Speaker, there is no intention at the moment to begin a public inquiry of the type the hon. member has raised but, rather, to pursue an internal review as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced a few days ago.

At this point the hon. member for Saskatoon West asked a supplementary question, which reads as follows:

> Will he be able to table as soon as possible the terms of reference with respect to an internal inquiry, and will the minister be in a position to let us know precisely the nature of that inquiry? Will the inquiry be open, and will the people of Canada have an opportunity to participate, whatever form it may take?

At this point, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) replied, and gave this answer:

> Madam Speaker, I was involved in the discussions of this matter with the parliamentary secretary and the minister.

So it went right to the top level, to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister continued:

> On behalf of the government, I would like to explain why we are not at this time organizing a public inquiry: it is because the time schedule for keeping our industry viable is very, very short.
> We are now in danger of seeing the Canadian industry obsolete and lose its chance to sell in other countries of the world unless we make some quick decisions on some basic questions. It is in order to get these quick decisions that we in the government want to establish our own policy in a firm way.
> There is no intention of preventing the Canadian public, concurrently or subsequently, from participating in various ways and expressing their views, but we cannot wait for a long inquiry to decide whether we stay in the game or get out of the game. That is the essence of the situation.

That is sort of like Alice in Wonderland, at the point where Alice was in Wonderland and the queen said, "Off with her head", to which Alice replied that she wanted a trial. But the queen said, "Off with her head first and then the trial". The quick decision is going to be over with, and it will have been taken.

I think the Prime Minister is making a big mistake in this area. Perhaps the Prime Minister wants to go down in Canadian history as one who has repatriated the constitution, in other words as the great constitutionalist. I predict that perhaps in 50 to 100 years from now historians are going to look back and say that is the man who ignored one of the most crucial issues of his time, the nuclear issue; by making an internal inquiry when the decision had already been made.

The big point today in this debate, and I thank the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for raising the matter and smoking out the parliamentary secretary is that we got the terms of reference for the inquiry, and that was it. The inquiry is over, it is finished; we have had the trial, the head is off, and that is unacceptable.

Atomic Energy of Canada seems to feel that it is above participation, that it is above inquiry. If anyone wants to ask a question of Atomic Energy of Canada, any interested groups of citizens, we hear the reply that Atomic Energy of Canada will not participate, nor will it give us information. I wrote to Atomic Energy of Canada and asked how much it spent on public relations—a simple question. I suspect in the United States I would get an answer, or I could go to the Freedom of Information Act. But what did I get back? I received a snarky letter from a Hilary Pearson, parliamentary affairs officer. The letter reads:

> In response to your request of May 1, 1980, for information concerning AECL public relations, please find attached the relevant figures for vote funded public affairs.
> It would be appreciated if in future you would check the public accounts for the fiscal year in question prior to making a request for publicly available information.

That is typical of the attitude of the Atomic Energy of Canada. It thinks it is above everything; that it cannot be asked questions.

An hon. Member: They are just above you.

Mr. Waddell: Above me; I am a member of Parliament, like you. I would think that if you asked Atomic Energy of Canada, you would expect a reply. If it is above me, as the hon. member said, it is certainly above all the other Canadians in the country who are seeking information.

I said this was tied in with freedom of information. Yesterday in the House this government was asked about freedom of information. It is going to bring in a bill as was indicated in the Speech from the Throne. It was also in the Speech from the Throne in 1978, and it has not been brought in yet. Sure the government will bring it in, but it will bring in an emasculated bill. The government will not put it to a court review when there is a dispute between a citizen and the government. The government is not going to make it apply to groups, such as Atomic Energy of Canada. I tell hon. members to mark my words. It is not in the interests of the authoritarian nature of the way we have been conducting public business in this country for Atomic Energy of Canada to have such a bill. It is not in the interests of the bureaucrats in the federal government to have that, and it is not in the interests of the Liberal Party of Canada. That is how they use their power and that is how they continue government in this country; not through authoritarian, but through a secretive type of government. It is not in their interest to open up government and let the fresh air in. I tell hon. members to mark my words and watch for that bill.

I just wish to compare Canada to the U.S. The Americans have a good freedom of information bill. They are looking at the nuclear industry critically, and they are not afraid to do so. I have a magazine called the National Journal, in which is an article by a Mr. William J. Lanouette. He talks about the dangers that persist one year later at the Three-Mile Island nuclear plant. It is a fair article. He speaks of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission which is the American commission, and says this in his article:

> Both the utility and the NRC are well aware that their public credibility has suffered from their handling of the Three-Mile Island accident and its aftermath. And both have pledged to involve the public in decisions that affect it.

I repeat that last sentence: "And both have pledged to involve the public in decisions that affect it." I say compare that to this government. The member on the government side is even afraid to ask for information or to press for information from Atomic Energy. Compare that to this attitude in the United States that both the agency and the company, and the government by implication, have pledged to involve the public in decisions that affect it.

We just heard the parliamentary secretary give a most remarkable speech in which it was clear that he is not prepared to involve the public in one of the most vital concerns of our generation.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, if there is time remaining in the time allotted for the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) might we ask some questions from this side of the House, if there are no objections?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member who had the floor does have a couple of moments left, and it is his privilege to accept questions from other members if he so wishes.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to hear from the other members. I am not sure, but perhaps the Chair could tell me, how long this matter will be debated?

Mr. Knowles: Ninety minutes.

Mr. Waddell: I am informed 90 minutes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to hear from the other members. Personally, I would like to see the matter come to a decision. I would rather the debate proceed than answer questions. It would save time.

● (1750)

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this motion. In doing so, I will in a way be speaking about a very important part of my life. I spent a large part of my professional life in the nuclear energy industry.

I wish to begin by saying that the nuclear energy industry in Canada and throughout the world has come of age. There is an increasing realization that if mankind is to progress and overcome the poverty in the Third World, it must have access to energy sources that have been developed by mankind. The nuclear energy resource is one that literally developed in the last half century.

In Canada, it has basically been developed over the last 35 years. It is a triumph of Canadian excellence in the area of research and development. This is a magnificent triumph of Canadians which is recognized throughout the world. Indeed, the Canadian excellence can be compared to the excellence of development in any area in the world in history. Canadians can be very proud that they have contributed to the development of nuclear energy.

That is not to say there are not concerns about this industry and apprehension by society at large. One of the reasons for this is that the industry has been kept underground. It has not been allowed to come forth into the open and present to the Canadian public and the rest of the world the substance of the whole effort of producing energy through nuclear fission and nuclear fusion. Indeed, the energy of the sun is nothing more than nuclear fusion. The world is sustained by nuclear fusion. We find that quite acceptable because it is at a distance.

I am convinced beyond a shadow of a doubt, as are many experts in this field, that mankind not only needs nuclear energy desperately in the evolving civilization, but knows how and has available at its fingertips the ability to cope with the problems resulting from this industry.

There is no problem so severe that mankind cannot solve it. I am referring to technical problems. The one thing mankind cannot solve seems to be fear. There is much fear, unjustly expressed, about this industry. For example, it is said we could not possibly solve the nuclear waste disposal problem.

The surface of the world has no end of radioactive deposits. In India one finds great areas of sand with fairly high radioactivity, and it has been there for ages. Indeed, cosmic radiation, which is of a similar nature to nuclear reactors, heats the earth and impacts upon the earth all the time. There is a danger that we may be altering the atmosphere of the world such that the cosmic radiation may intensify considerably faster than anything from nuclear energy.

The first point I want to make is that mankind does not have a problem but an opportunity for potential success. Second, it has no choice but to use the success. Third, mankind will use this opportunity regardless of what some groups of society say today. The point is this; mankind must use it sensibly, rationally and with understanding rather than with fear and misunderstanding as advocated by some groups today.

One of the first things that must be realized in a progression toward acceptance in this area, because there still is great, great fear from the association of this industry with the atom bomb, the fusion bomb and the fission bomb, is that today there is development of radiation for curing cancer. Indeed, there are many areas where radiation is being used advantageously.

I come back to the essence of this problem, the fact that the whole area of research and technology must be brought into the open. It must be set up before all people so that they know what we are dealing with. They should know whether the solutions are there today or are going to be found tomorrow.

The greatest steps made in the Thirty-first Parliament were in two areas. The first was the freedom of information bill that was brought before this House. Its purpose was to get into the dark corners of the government and technology so the public would know what was going on. The second most important resolution or motion was brought forward by the government House leader. It was motion No. 3, brought forward on October 24, 1979. It proposed:

> That a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to inquire into the economic, social, environmental, health and international considerations bearing upon the role of the Government of Canada in the development, use, regulation and export of nuclear energy, including but not limited to:
> (a) Energy and economic policy considerations:

It was not limited to economic, social, environmental and federal-provincial considerations, but international considerations. This inquiry of the two Houses was given the widest possible terms of reference. It was permitted to dig into all the dark corners of this industry and put on the table for the people of Canada and the world where the shortcomings existed. It was also to put on the table the triumph, because this has been a triumph in Canadian technology; a triumph of Canadian excellence. Let no one say differently. The world recognizes this.

On February 18 of this year the government changed. Instead of coming forward and saying to the people of Canada; we will bring before you, to a large degree, the future energy sources for mankind, and I repeat that solar energy is literally nothing more than fission energy; we will open the gates and the cupboards and tell you what we have done as a government over the past 35 years and what we are doing today in this field of technology and commerce in order to study nuclear energy. This government is filled with fear. Why is that so? It is going to do an internal examination and review. In the few short months we were in government we had occasion to speak with the AECL people and to have before us in the energy committee last fall—

May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening, at which time the House will resume debate on Bill C-30.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1980-81

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-30, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1980-81, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the debate was interrupted at 5 p.m. the motion for second reading of Bill C-30 was under consideration and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) had the floor.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I was speaking about how in the past 12 years the government had been spending money. I was trying to bring to the attention of the government that it is now asking for $12 billion without giving the public a clear understanding as to how it will be spent.

We have dealt with how the government has spent money in the past, and that is a pretty dismal record. I would also like to deal with where money has been spent. I have given several indications of why we feel very strongly that we have been short-changed, and I would like to bring a couple more of those indications forward. Simply put, I think the cow seems to be fed in the west and milked in the east. A good indication of that could be seen in the House about a week ago. I asked the minister who answers on matters relating to the Canadian Wheat Board if he would consider, in times of drought in western Canada—and particularly after farmers had subsidized the price of bread in Canada to some $25 million since the first of February—if he would give the same consideration as that given by the Conservative government in power just a year ago. I received the following answer:

On May 29, you inquired in the House whether the government would increase the price of domestic grain as of February 1, 1980, and how farmers are to recover the $25 million they have lost.

A little further on he says:

There is therefore no plan to reimburse producers for their costs as a result of the program during the recent period when world prices were above the domestic maximum.

It was interesting to note, however, that a day later I received on my desk a news release from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) stating:

Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan today announced that a cheque for $5 million has been sent to Quebec—

A little further down it says:

Under the Quebec program, the federal government is providing $33.5 million over a five-year period—

● (2010)

All I want to suggest is that it is high time we in this House gave some consideration to where moneys are being spent. We in my constituency ask for some consideration, particularly in view of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his Speech from the Throne asked that special consideration be given to western Canada because there was no representation, for the most part, in western Canada. I am glad I can stand in this House this evening and speak for a party which has members in all provinces of Canada. I believe it is important when the government is considering its spending—particularly in the case of spending $12 billion—that it consider fairness.

There came to my desk today a news release from the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), which says:

The Minister of Transport's intention to deprive over 7500 western grain farmers of 1000 miles of rail branch lines is another indication of the Trudeau government's misunderstanding of and indifference to the needs and objectives of western Canada.

This leads me to another point about government spending, which I think is very important and relevant to Bill C-30. We have come through a time when, in western Canada in particular, we were not moving grain. It is all right to talk about government spending and so on, and to criticize it, but it is another thing to come up with some answers. I suggest that there are some answers. One answer is found in productivity. Western farmers have produced wheat. We had not put in a system of rail grain movement in general that was handling our production, and that was a gross error on the part of the government that is in power today. The former minister of transport, the hon. member for Vegreville, did a tremendous job of adjusting some of the inadequacies and some of the problems that existed in that area, and this is bringing about some results today. It looks like we are back to the old game; 1,000 miles of transportation is in question. I suggest it is very important that we look at productivity. I represent people who are very productive in two areas: agriculture and the oil industry. If we are going to find some solutions to the problems and stop the extravagant spending of the government, we had better find some solutions to productivity problems.

Our government was blocked. In fact, it was put out of power, and, if I recall correctly, I was the last speaker before the government was put out of power. We brought down a budget which would have provided a way to make Canada productive, particularly in energy, which is very important and will be very important to Canada. It is interesting to note that to this point the government, after only several months, has done nothing about an oil pricing agreement. There have been no negotiations which have brought forward any result in terms of coming to an agreement. At this point the two sides seem further apart. OPEC is talking about $37 a barrel for oil, and we in western Canada are receiving less than half the world price. We basically have no program for self-sufficiency or production.

Mr. Mazankowski: Confrontation and arrogance.

Mr. Gustafson: What brought all this on? For the past 12 years of Trudeau Liberal government the Prime Minister has allowed socialist trends to develop.

These trends have been the downfall of this country having regard to productivity, the lack of which has been unequalled in the history of Canada. Unless we reverse the trend in agricultural production—

An hon. Member: That's right, back to the stone age.

Mr. Gustafson: —and in industry, this country will face problems for many years.

● (2020)

I want to give you some indication from a very homey experience. I was involved in the contracting business, house moving. We moved a house for a gentleman to a town called Kipling. I happened to move that house in which he was retiring. He was of Hungarian origin and came over here as a pioneer. He took an axe in his hand and said, "What can I build?" On that farm was a log house that he built. The next house beside the log house was the one in which he lived from about 1920 to about 1948, and I am only guessing. He was using that house for a tool shed, and the house which we moved into Kipling for him and in which he retired was built by him in about 1948 or 1949. A story was told in that farmyard of someone who came to Canada, picked up an axe and said, "What can I build?" He hewed out, in the Canadian way—and he was one example of many great Canadians from various origins—a tremendous future which I as a member of Parliament and other members of Parliament and their sons and daughters are enjoying in Canada today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: The opposite trend to that in recent years has been to ask, "What can we get for nothing?"

An hon. Member: The Tories.

Mr. Gustafson: The socialist theory, brought into being in this country predominantly by the Leader of the Government today, has brought this country to a situation where we have forgotten about production.

I want to take my point one step further. In 1900, 97 per cent of the people were involved in agriculture; today, less than 5 per cent of the people are involved in agriculture. They produce enough food to feed all the people in North America and a good number of people around the world. Production is the word. Our farm boys produce in western Canada and in eastern Canada. In the west they work side by side with the oil boys who are out there pumping oil in temperatures of 40 below. There is some cost to production. The NDP and the Liberal parties have forgotten about that.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Gustafson: They have forgotten about it completely, seemingly.

An hon. Member: What are you talking about?

Mr. Gustafson: Production and the fact that we must produce. But what is the story in the oil industry?

An hon. Member: Tell us.

Mr. Gustafson: A lot of this work has been done by farm boys who worked on these oil wells and produced. The story is this, plain and simple. We in Canada are now furnishing, through production, oil for half price, but we are running far behind because the government has not put a program in place so that we can become self-sufficient in this country and so that, through production, we can have the wherewithal to make this country self-sufficient in energy.

I want to suggest to you that in the next few years, and perhaps next winter, one of the most important words will be energy. I want to suggest that you cannot produce food without energy. Canada is counting on this government. Canada is counting on this House of Commons. Canada is counting on the Liberal government on that side of the House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: —to bring an end to senseless spending. They are counting on you and they are counting on us. It is most important that we bring some responsibility back to the way in which we handle the finances of the taxpayer and the finances the government controls. Here we are asked to approve borrowing authority for $12 billion. But are we going to be productive?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Gustafson: Are we going to have some foresight—

An hon. Member: No.

An hon. Member: We always have.

Mr. Gustafson: —or are we not?

An hon. Member: Not from you.

Mr. Gustafson: As I said, we have not had an oil agreement. What has the government done?

An hon. Member: Alberta is overpaid now.

Mr. Gustafson: I want to quote from the Leader-Post. The article is entitled, "Messer sees different oil price deal". It reads:

> Messer said Lalonde is "somewhat mistaken" to assume co-operation means Saskatchewan would settle for less than Alberta. In fact, Saskatchewan is looking for a better deal than that sought by the other provinces.
> "We want a better deal, better in terms of enhancing and encouraging more resource development—

That is the key. It is not simply to get oil as cheaply as possible, with no conservation, and to use it up, with no direction in production. In our budget a year ago in this House we put into place a program which would make Canada self-sufficient in energy—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

An hon. Member: You were still on holiday.

Mr. Gustafson: —and also a program that would not put this country into debt. It was looked at and commented upon by economists and by experts in many cases as an excellent budget.

Mr. Lalonde: Ask Bill Davis; and what about the minister of finance in Ontario?

Mr. Gustafson: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), appealing to the voters in this country, simply did one thing. He offered eastern Canada western Canada's resources at a price he cannot deliver. I want to suggest to you that this type of program will not work. But there is a program that will work; one of being responsible, a program of a fair price for a commodity and a program which looks into the future and to the welfare of this country.

An hon. Member: What is a fair price?

An hon. Member: Give us a fair price.

Mr. Gustafson: I see that my time is nearly up. I would like to say in closing that in terms of the excess spending we have seen in the last 12 years by the Liberal government, as never in the history of this country—

An hon. Member: The PCs have never spent, they have never been there.

Mr. Gustafson: I challenge you. The people of Canada are counting on this House for responsible direction.

An hon. Member: That is what they will get.

Mr. Gustafson: The deficit of this government is nearly the same as one year's deficit of the United States which has ten times the population. Do you call that responsible?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State, Small Businesses): Mr. Speaker, I certainly feel very privileged to speak tonight on Bill C-30, in view of the very obvious lack of understanding by many Canadians of the way in which our fiscal spending operates at the federal level. Furthermore, I should like to place on record the amount of federal funding provided to our senior citizens and to those in need of financial help. It amounts to slightly over $11 billion for 1980-81, or 19.1 per cent of our budgetary outlay.

● (2030)

The federal system provides that a transfer of payments be made in order that all Canadians are provided with a standard of living commensurate with other regions of Canada. The area of major expenditure in this context, of course, is the imported oil subsidy that ensures an equitable price structure to those areas of Canada which do not have access to our own domestic resources and have to import. It must be an equitable price structure for all Canadian consumers which enables our industries, farmers and fishermen to compete in international markets and thus provide jobs and opportunities for Canadians across this nation.

The transfer payments to the provinces for joint funding projects provide senior citizens with apartments through CMHC. I am proud of the fact that the Government of Canada is currently providing, by way of guaranteed loans, funding for these facilities to ensure that our citizens who helped build this nation have a retirement which is free of apprehension and want. I was sorry to learn tonight that the government of Ontario will be raising the rents on senior citizens' apartments by $18 per month when the leases come up for renewal. It seems very ironic that less than two weeks ago we in this House increased the guaranteed income supplement by $35 per household. The Liberals giveth, the Tories taketh away.

Another project funded by the same department is the sewage disposal projects and water purification plants where loans, forgivable loans and high cost grants were available, in some instances amounting to over 25 per cent of the total cost. The areas requiring massive amounts of federal funding, and rightly so, are the old age pensions, and of course to a lesser degree, the guaranteed income supplement, the Canada Pension Plan, unemployment insurance and family allowances. These programs ensure that our Canadian people enjoy one of the highest standards of living in the world. I would suggest to the House that to cut expenditures in these areas I have mentioned thus far would be irresponsible and would cause a degree of suffering in Canada that has not existed since the dirty thirties. Therefore, it becomes obvious that, if we are to maintain a standard of living which reflects equality for Canadians, we cannot dispense with either the transfer payments or the social benefits provided to senior citizens and those in need.

To ensure the continuation of these programs in relation to payments to persons we require current expenditures in this area which amount to 19.1 per cent of total federal expenditures. Certainly I hope hon. members across the House are not suggesting we cut back in this area and inflict untold hardships on those in need and those who have worked so hard to make this nation the best in the world. The federal government will spend 32 per cent of its total outlay on the health and welfare of Canadians in 1980-81.

If we are to ensure continuity of opportunity and quality of life across this nation, we must maintain a strong federal presence in these areas, so that the funds transferred to the provinces in need are used in a manner which does not create economic imbalance in other areas of Canada. I should like to point out that over 20 per cent of the main estimates represent transfer payments to the provinces, the territories or the municipalities. The major program associated with fiscal transfer programs is equalization. Perhaps we should not forget that we spend $5.7 billion for the financing of hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education. These contributions by the federal government to the provinces are intended to provide more stability in spending patterns and to provide the provinces with flexibility to administer their own programs. This federal contribution consists of a combination of cash payments and income tax transfers, both of which grow with our economy.

Certainly I hope hon. members across the way are not suggesting a cutback in the area of defence spending, which accounts for 10.5 per cent of our expenditures. With the unrest in the world today, our commitment to world peace must be honoured. I hope no one here would suggest we cut back our spending relating to food production or in any other area which contributes to our well-being, the creation of jobs or export opportunities in any region of Canada. It is in the area of economic development and support that we spend about 13.1 per cent of our total budget. While the expenditures may seem high, can we really do without the benefits provided by the central government? May I point out that only 18 per cent of our expenditures are used for government administrative services. However, if we were operating as a corporation or a company, naturally we would look at our borrowing requirements as an investment in our future. Let there be no doubt about it, we have a great future, but only if we utilize our resources, our human and renewable resources, and exercise care in the use of non-renewable resources which are so scarce in the world today.

There is no doubt that all of us have borrowed at one time or another for our businesses or our farms, to purchase our homes or to further our education. Certainly we do this in anticipation of our potential. I submit that the potential in Canada is being developed in many sectors. For example, our offshore fishing rights have been extended to the 200-mile limit. This has provided stability to the industry in British Columbia and the Atlantic provinces, and has created jobs and opportunities which have brought increased sources of income to those particular areas. I am delighted another area of wealth and prosperity is being developed in the Atlantic provinces. I am referring here to the energy discovered off Newfoundland and Sable Island. I hope these new areas of prosperity will enhance the life styles of Canadians living in those regions, and that the need for central government transfer payments will diminish. As these needs diminish, and as these new sources of energy bring new wealth to this region, the need for energy equalization payments will no longer exist.

Bill C-30 provides borrowing authority of $12 billion for the year 1980-81. A few moments ago I referred to the fact that most of us at one time or another have borrowed funds in order to utilize our potential and realize our dreams. If we do not have this borrowing authority, must we cut back on the aid to our senior citizens? No, we must not place additional hardships on our senior citizens, the people who worked so long and hard to build this great nation. Should we cut back on energy transfer payments to the Atlantic provinces until their own resources come on stream? No, we must ensure that these Canadians have a continuation of their standard of living and not a deterioration of that lifestyle. Should we cut back on our joint funding programs? No, but we should carefully re-examine the method of transfer to ensure, for example, that all Canadians have access to hospitals and medical care, not to mention equal opportunities for secondary education.

I believe the government has shown responsibility over the last several years by curtailing growth of the public service in 1977-78, and reducing the size since that time. The net reduction for 1980-81 will be 5,840 person-years compared with the previous year. As Canadians we should be proud of our record over the last several years. While our per capita debt increased during the recent years of high energy costs, the federal per capita debt at the national level increased by less than half that of the province of Ontario during the same period. I am proud to point out that we have a lower per capita debt than our neighbours to the south. For example, the U.S. per capita debt is about $3,500 per person, while our Canadian debt is about $2,500 per person.

When we compare the base of our potential with that of other nations, it is obvious that Canada has a great future, a future that is the envy of the industrialized world. Bill C-30 seeks borrowing authority of $12 billion for the fiscal year 1980-81. This bill also seeks explicit authorization for the government to borrow in foreign currencies as well as in Canadian dollars. The government's projected budget and non-budgetary cash requirements for the fiscal year 1980-81 amount to $11,730 million. This amount excludes requirements for foreign exchange transactions.

In addition to these forecast cash requirements, there is always the need for a substantial margin of borrowing authority to provide for contingencies. For example, there are major uncertainties arising from foreign exchange transactions, since either a major weakening or a major strengthening of the exchange rate would have an impact upon the borrowing requirements of the government. If the Canadian dollar were to be strong, then the government would have to raise more Canadian dollars to borrow foreign exchange. On the other hand, the Canadian dollar could be weakened. Under those circumstances, the government would then be faced with the need to borrow foreign currencies.

This margin of borrowing authority is being provided by unused borrowing authority obtained prior to November, 1979, which is not subject to automatic cancellation at the end of the fiscal year. This unused borrowing authority, which is available for use at any time and which shall be carried forward, amounted to approximately $2.9 billion at the beginning of the fiscal year 1980-81. All unused borrowing authority obtained under the Borrowing Authority Act, 1979-80, was cancelled or lapsed on March 31, 1980. That refers to the borrowing authority granted by the House at the request of the former minister of finance.

Consequently to date, in fiscal 1980-81, new moneys raised have been charged to the $2.9 billion of unused borrowing authority obtained earlier and carried forward. However, these unused borrowing powers are rapidly being used up, and the government requires new borrowing authority to enable it to continue with the 1980-81 debt program. The borrowing authority of $12 billion now being requested, along with the remaining portion of the unused borrowing powers obtained in prior years and still available, should be sufficient to complete the borrowing program this fiscal year as well as to provide a margin for contingencies.

All outstanding and unused borrowing authority provided by this new act for fiscal 1980-81, in respect of which no action has been taken by the governor in council pursuant to section 37 of the Financial Administration Act, will be cancelled on March 31, 1980.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, the passage of Bill C-30 is required for the current fiscal year of 1980-81 to ensure the continuation of the programs so essential to the well-being of our citizens, and to ensure the continuing realization of our potential as a great and united Canada.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this is the third opportunity I have had to participate in a debate on a request by the government for the borrowing of some billions of dollars. It is a subject which is particularly close to my heart because, as the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), who is sitting close to me now but was not so close in those days, will remember, that was the subject of my maiden speech in October, 1978.

One year later, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), who was for a brief period the minister of finance, brought down a request for some $7 billion, and I had an opportunity to speak in that debate, as did certain other members, and I will refer to them later. Today we have a government which is requesting $12 billion in borrowing authority from this House. In the interests of consistency, but also in the interests of something broader, I would like simply to once again go over the arguments which were made by both opposition parties—first by the Conservatives and ourselves in 1978, and then the Liberals and ourselves in 1979, and now again the New Democratic Party joined in opposition by the Conservatives to this particular request.

The way in which the Government of Canada, whether it be a Liberal government or a Conservative government, has gone about requesting from Parliament the authority to borrow either on domestic or international markets some billions of dollars is something which we as a Parliament must consider, look at very carefully and ask ourselves, in as non-partisan a fashion as we can, whether this is really the best way to conduct our affairs.

The origin of Parliament lies in the control of the public purse. The origin of Parliament and the tremendous conflicts between monarchy and the people in the seventeenth century and afterwards took place in England because the monarchy refused to treat the people with sufficient respect. The monarchy insisted on conducting its foreign wars without going to Parliament for approval. As well as the conflict being a question of religion and of the rights of democratic principles, it was about taxation and representation. I suggest to the government that those principles are just as important now, if not more important, than they were at the time of the rise of Parliament, considering how we conduct our affairs.

We are being asked to allow the government to borrow billions of dollars anywhere in the world, at whatever rate it should or can. Such a request has not only been made by this government, and I do not think that it is a question of attacking—though I certainly will have something to say about the particular conduct of this government and its Minister of Finance—put by previous Liberal and Conservative governments. Where is the opportunity for members of Parliament to question? Some members opposite will always say, "You can always question in committee."

You, being an experienced member of this House, Mr. Speaker, know how our committee system works and how overburdened our committees are. You, sir, know how responsive ministers are to questions in committee. You know to what extent members of Parliament are really able to deal with the hard, difficult, tendentious matters and come up with conclusions.

I suggest to the government, as I suggested to the hon. member for St. John's West when he was the minister of finance, and to the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) when he was the minister of finance, that it is no longer good enough to simply come into this Parliament and ask for a blank cheque without presenting a budget at the same time and without giving an indication as to what the revenue picture will be—in other words, where the money is coming from, how it will be raised, how people will be taxed and whether there will be indexation. Nor has the government explained how it intends to spend the money. Where is this money going?

It is in my view, Mr. Speaker, absurd for us to continue year after year with this cockamamy approach to the control of public expenditure and to this utterly cockamamy approach to the financial affairs of the country. As I say, it is not a partisan question. If I were a member of the government I would be equally concerned and if I were a member of cabinet I would be equally concerned. They know where these figures come from—the civil service. They give the economic policy here—the civil servants. Governments come and go—

Mr. Corbin: Some do.

Mr. Rae: Yours did and it will again. It is the entrenched force of the civil service which is there forever and it is that force we as members of Parliament have to be able to question, to grill, to find out what they intend to do, where they intend to raise the money and what they intend to do with it.

While browsing through the previous debates on this subject I came across the intervention last year by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) who is known in my part of the world as "Amazing Gray". He spoke on October 23, 1979, in his then incarnation—he once was fired but now he is hired, Amazing Gray—as the official spokesman for the opposition on financial matters.

The minister was in the House a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry he is not here now to listen carefully to his own words. All you have to do is change the label "Conservative" for "Liberal" and you have a very strong argument. I wonder if it is the same argument he makes in cabinet. We will never know. This is quite a long quotation but I think it is worth putting on the record. He said, as reported at page 509 of Hansard:

> Rather than using what appears to be a device to enable it to borrow to finance the activities of government if revenues fall because of economic growth being lower than predicted for the balance of the fiscal year, the government should move more quickly than it intends to present a budget. It should be a budget that contains measures of a focused and specific nature—

I wish he would tell the minister what the word "focused" means. He went on:

> —to help our economy become more productive and efficient and to deal with our deficit in current account.
> While the government may argue it does not have a lot of room for manoeuvre—

How many times have we heard ministers of finance, Tory and Liberal, Liberal and Tory, tell us that they do not have any room for manoeuvre. To continue:

> —it has just given us a new explanation of its stimulative deficit, just the opposite of what it said before and during the election—

How many times have we heard ministers of finance say just the opposite before and after an election. He went on:

> I believe it does have some room in a budget for measures of the kind I have suggested, measures which would at least blunt and contain the adverse effects on the economy of the slow-down, the recession which is likely to be, unfortunately, already under way.

Then the final paragraph from Amazing Gray when he said:

But there is another serious flaw in the way the Conservatives—

Mr. Paproski: Here comes the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Rae: The minister went on to say:

—are proceeding with this first financial measure they have called for debate in this new Parliament. They are seeking this $7 billion in borrowing authority in Bill C-10 without first presenting their own budget to Parliament. We do not have from the Conservatives a statement to this House, in the form of a budget, on what they expect the revenues and expenditures of this new government to be, and what will be the resulting deficit and cash requirements to be financed by borrowing for the balance of this fiscal year.

That was October 23, 1979, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: How soon we forget.

Mr. Rae: How soon we forget the basic principle. The basic principle that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was putting forward in 1979 was that the Conservative government at that time should not be asking for billions of dollars without first presenting a budget. If that principle applied six months ago why does it not apply today?

Mr. Beatty: Because the Grits are the government.

Mr. Rae: The hon. member says it is because the Liberals are the government. Let me say to that hon. member that his government was exactly the same in 1979, and when they were in opposition in 1978. On this particular question it simply will not do for us to go back and forth every six months with the parties in opposition saying what they would do if they were in government, then becoming the government and doing the reverse. The people making the decisions on our financial affairs are exactly the same, apart from those people who are frothing about on the surface of our political life, the members of cabinet. The critical question is, who is in charge?

The basic principle we are putting forward is that there should be, at least three or four times a year, a presentation by a minister of the Crown to this House. It should be in the form of a statement on motions, about which he could be asked questions, and which would be referred to a committee, or in the form of a budget about which members could ask questions and cross-examine, or a statement as to where the money is to come from, what the taxation plans of the government are, where it will go and how they intend to spend it.

It is fantastic that we continue to conduct our affairs in this manner. It is fantastic that the only statement we have had from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) regarding his views of the economy and what he might or might not do, what is possible, what may be the case or may not be the case, are the tealeaves that he left on the floor of the House of Commons on April 21 which we have been trying to read since, and the droppings he leaves after any question period which we have to examine to try to determine what the position of the government is.

We had the famous trial balloon on the question of the deficit from the Minister of Finance. He gave an interview—one of the exclusive interviews which he gives to the odd, favoured, members of the press, not to members of Parliament—to Le Devoir. He said it was probable—not possible, but probable—that the government would de-index the deductions and exemptions on income tax, and thus hoped to raise over $1.5 billion.

Then the deputy minister of finance spoke to the newly established Senate committee on the national finance, where all the important people seem to go these days. Dr. Stewart, the deputy minister, and Governor Bouey were there recently, giving their views on the economic situation. Dr. Stewart raised the same possibility that de-indexing in a general way might take place.

Today in this House we put another question about the tax system and the Minister of Finance gave us an answer to the effect that it was pure speculation, whether the government planned to de-index. It is not pure speculation, Mr. Speaker. This is coming from one quarter and one quarter only—the Department of Finance and the Minister of Finance. This is an odd way to conduct affairs.

In the latest edition of The Economist, the British magazine of economic affairs, there is an article in the World Business section about our Minister of Finance. I am surprised he stopped long enough for them to focus the camera, but there is a picture of him. Underneath the picture is the line, "MacEachen's ballooning". Among other things the article points out that the economic cost to this country of having no budget from last December until next year is:

—that fiscal measures are still in limbo while monetary policy, set on a moderately restrictive path, carries the anti-inflation load for the time being until a budget can be agreed.

I honestly do not see how the government can expect us to pass, to accept, or to vote in favour of a request for $12 billion when it has not told us what its taxation policy is, or what are its spending plans. In fact, this government has abused the House, played with the House and sent up trial balloons which are then shot down. This government has indicated that taxes may have to be raised in a general way, but we are not told which taxes have to be raised. The hon. member says this will come in a budget. In that case, the government should not be asking for $12 billion until such time as it is prepared to present a budget, so that we can pass on the whole financial picture.

The government cannot have it both ways. This government cannot conduct its financial affairs in a complete fog, the fog of dust, led by the Minister of Finance. Every time he makes a statement he totally confuses the public. It totally confuses the business people and destroys business confidence. It destroys the confidence which the average person has in the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: I see I have stirred up some of the sleeping lions who I know will vote for whatever measure the cabinet puts forward, and we have seen evidence of that, regardless of how strange it may be. I just want to speak to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) about his own contribution and the contribution of the Minister for Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray). Perhaps the minister will stand up and tell us how it is that events are now so different that a budget was required in October before he was prepared to accept the request for $7 billion and yet somehow, strangely, a budget is not required in June when his government is asking for $12 billion?

Mr. Paproski: Tell us, Herb.

Mr. Rae: That is a riddle or a conundrum I would like the minister to try to answer for us tonight in the House of Commons. The government cannot answer that question. There is a total contradiction between the kinds of statements and the kinds of things that were being said about deficits, about spending, about the nature of stopping deficits, the nature of taxation, the nature of the recession and what the Liberal party would do when it was elected, and what its record has been since it was elected.

There has been a total contradiction in the statements that were made by the financial spokesman for the Liberal party prior to the election and what the government has been saying since the election. There is a complete contradiction, and that contradiction has to be brought home again, again and again to the Canadian people. But above all else, this party opposite is a party without a shred of principle, without a shred of conviction and without a shred of belief in anything, either political or economic.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: The only principle which keeps that motley band together is the lust for power. That is the only thing that keeps them there. When did we hear, prior to the election, from the Liberal party that a higher deficit was causing inflation? We heard that statement from the Liberal party when it was in opposition.

An hon. Member: They will divorce you if you are not careful.

Mr. Rae: In opposition, it was the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) who said that deficits are less important than people. That is what he said. When will we hear that statement from the Minister of Finance, from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, from the Parliamentary Secretary or from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? When will we hear those statements? When will we have a clear indication, now when the economy is heading into a recession, when our capacity for utilization of our industries is falling to 80 per cent, when in some industries it is below 70 per cent, when our unemployment rate for the fiftieth month in a row has been over 7 per cent of our labour force, that the government will reduce the deficit? If it is going to reduce the deficit, how will it be done, how will it raise the taxes and what expenditures will be cut?

The parliamentary secretary says that we have to get the deficit down. There are only two ways to do it, either by cutting expenditures or raising revenues. That is a statement with which no member of this House who has the moderate knowledge of mathematics, which the parliamentary secretary possesses, could disagree. That is not the question. They are the government. I ask them what they are going to do. Will they raise revenues or will they cut expenditures? I ask when and how will this be done? Until the government answers those questions, it does not deserve to get a penny authorized from this House, not a cent.

We should return to the historic role of Parliament. Parliament has to control the purse. Parliament has to exercise authority over the affairs of the country, not the Senate, and not by the Deputy Minister of Finance going to the Senate and giving a long philosophical discussion of what he might or might not do. This will not be done by the governor of the Bank of Canada giving speeches right across Canada saying what the economic policy of governments past and present have been or will be because whatever happens, Bouey XVI will be there for years to come. That is not the way policy is supposed to be made. Policy is supposed to be made here in Parliament, and it should be accountable to Parliament. We are the people who have been elected and we are the people from whom the rest of Canada expects some leadership and accountability.

We have this ritual that we go through with this government—and we went through it with the Tory government—of waiting months and months for a budget, having no indication of what its policy is, having dribs and drabs of statements, some saying the deficit has to go higher and the Prime Minister saying one moment that he is not particularly concerned about the deficit, the Minister of Finance saying that it is a very serious problem, Governor Bouey saying he is not worried about the fact that there will be extensive capital investment which will cause tremendous problems to the country in years ahead, and Dr. Stewart saying the reverse a week later in front of exactly the same Senate committee. This is no way to conduct the financial affairs of the country. It is certainly no way to conduct the financial affairs of Canada.

In closing, I want to make one point perfectly clear.

Mr. Beatty: The last person to say that was Richard Nixon.

An hon. Member: That is not a comparison.

An hon. Member: That is a good parallel.

Mr. Chénier: Now he is lost for words.

Mr. Rae: The economy is heading into a serious recession. The American economy is heading into a more major recession than was ever anticipated. This is no time for the government to be contemplating serious tax increases when there is no evidence of excessive demand in the economy, either in the government sector, the private sector, or from consumer demand. That statement has to be made. It is many times said, almost as an incantation of faith, that the current deficit is causing major inflation and that we have to raise taxes in order to fight it. That is an incantation of faith which has no basis in fact. The fact is the general level of demand in the Canadian economy is dropping, dropping dramatically and dropping seriously. This is no time for the government to be contemplating, in any way, shape or form, tax increases which would only have the effect of hurting the average Canadian and of hurting the level of growth in our society.

It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to talk about inflation being public enemy No. 1, or the major problem facing the Canadian economy. Of course it is a major problem. Let me suggest to the government opposite that it was an obsession with the deficit and an obsession with using monetary and fiscal policy in order to fight inflation that led to the defeat of the Conservative government in December, 1979. The Liberal Party of Canada was not elected as a government in order to raise taxes at the present time, or to reduce expenditures at the present time, or to dramatically reduce the deficit at the present time. That was not the message the hon. member for Windsor West took to the Canadian people at that time. Nor is it the message that the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) and the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier), who has been so noisy this evening, took to them. The message they took was quite the opposite. Their message was that people were important, that the Tory budget was unfair and that they would not introduce the same budget. They have broken faith with the Canadian people more than once.

I want to give notice to the government that we will fight every inch of the way any effort by this government to tax the Canadian people in a punitive way as our economy is heading into a serious recession. It is economic suicide. It may be politically popular in some circles, possibly for those whose financial help keeps the heads of those in the Liberal party and the Tory party above water, but that is not the reason they were elected. It is certainly not the reason we were elected to Parliament and we have no intention of letting them get away with it.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-30 on which we are to vote in the next half hour or so will give the government borrowing authority in the order of 12—

Mr. Taylor: On a point or order, Mr. Speaker. Is it not our turn to speak at this time?

Mr. Anguish: I believe it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, there is a division between two sides of the House. I understand a certain number were recognized on one side and on the other side. I am not aware that there is any break in the order.

Mr. Taylor: There was a PC speaker, then a Liberal speaker and then there was an NDP speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to hear what the hon. member who just intervened has to say on this subject. Since we on this side have been asked so many questions by those in opposition, I think we should take some time to respond and give our side of the story. I would like to talk for a few minutes about the bill before us, which would give the government borrowing authority of $12 billion for the fiscal year 1980-81.

I listened with some interest to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), who unfortunately is not now in his seat. I see he is elsewhere in the chamber. He talked a great deal about how much the government has spent over the last 12 years. I wonder why he chose 12 years as opposed to some other number, why he did not go back a little further. Had he gone back just a few more years he would have been able to talk about a party in government of his own particular stripe, a Tory government.

When he was lamenting the size of the deficit being in the order of 24 per cent or 25 per cent, he could have made a very good comparison with another government, a Tory government, which sat in office here in Ottawa between 1957 and 1962. It had a deficit of something around 34 per cent, not 24 per cent or 25 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Simmons: That member very conveniently chose his time period. He wanted to avoid talking about that period of government. I can understand that he did not want to talk about the eight months of interim government led by the hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). Perhaps it is not fair to make too many comparisons. However, when he wants to go back ten or 12 years, I invite him to go back 16 or 17 and give us a fair comparison and tell us how high the deficit was. Before he goes looking, I can tell him the percentage was 34 per cent under the last Tory government, save that of the hon. member for Yellowhead, not 24 per cent or 25 per cent.

The very first requirement of any member who stands before this House is that he give the facts in some balanced manner, that he not misrepresent his case before the House. I submit the hon. member for Assiniboia did exactly that. He misrepresented the case of government spending over the past few years. I invite him to set the record straight on that.

If the hon. member wants to talk about Liberal spending and Liberal programs versus Tory programs, I will spar with him any day of the week. If he wants to talk about what the Liberals are doing for the people of Canada today, let me pick a specific example. We just kept a commitment, and I get a smile from some of the guys on the other side who kept raising questions—

Mr. Nielsen: Honourable guys.

Mr. Simmons: One day they lambaste us for not keeping commitments. Today in his preamble the hon. member deplored the government for keeping a promise. We happen to be proud of keeping our promises.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: One commitment we kept recently was to increase the guaranteed income supplement by $35. That is not news to this House. This House participated in it. What might be news to this House, and therefore I wish to get it into the record, is what the Tory government of Ontario has done since that increase came in. It moved to take some, and in some cases all of the increase back from the recipients of the GIS.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Simmons: The Tory government in Ontario raised the rents in senior citizen homes by $18 a month in the past few days. How can you win? The great Liberal government wanted to do right for the people of Canada, but how can you win with so many Tory governments out there taking out of their left hands what they just received in their right hands? I am talking about the ordinary people across this country. It is shameful.

I say to the hon. member for Assiniboia that there are all kinds of examples of what this government is doing with the people's money. There are very good examples. I have just given one. I make a bargain with the hon. member; I will undertake, as my own personal crusade, to see that the money over here is spent even better, if he will talk to his Tory friends across the country, like Bill Davis in Ontario, who are gouging the senior citizens. How can we help them when Bill Davis insists on taking it away from them?

I make a deal with the Tory member for Assiniboia, that he talk to the Bill Davis' of this country and I will talk to the ministers of finance of this country as well as to the people of my caucus. That is a fair deal. Now for the NDP—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: What they lack in quality tonight they make up in quantity. I am glad the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) has come back into the chamber because he is the one who preceded me when speaking to this particular bill. The gentleman from Broadview-Greenwood is the armchair socialist in the NDP. The old enthusiasm has gone. It is not there any more. He has no more heart for it, not the same fire in the gut as he used to have. That happens to all armchair socialists. It happens to all those intellectuals who have it up here but do not believe in the cause. Around him, though, are some real socialists. I learned from the papers in the last day or two that the hon. member's leader is a real socialist. He is going over to Oslo to attend a meeting of the SI—the press release from NDP headquarters did not bother to mention what the SI is, but apparently the letters stand for Socialist International. So there are some socialists in the NDP.

• (2120)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: I don't know what the socialist from Oshawa is going to do when he gets over there, I don't know where he stands on the views of the Dominican Revolutionary Party—they are members of the Socialist International, too—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: —or the socialist workers party from Luxembourg. I am sure he will have a lot in common with them and I hope he will be able to throw some light on their discussions. And what about the unitary socialist party of San Marino, or the National Liberation Party of Costa Rica, or the National Revolutionary Movement of El Salvador?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Bedfellows all!

Mr. Rae: Do you like the generals in Latin America? Are they better?

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Simmons: But while there are socialists in the NDP there are also quasi-socialists, armchair socialists.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know it is difficult for you, but it is most unseemly that lovers should quarrel that way.

An hon. Member: What a contribution!

Mr. Simmons: I thank the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) for coming in. He is a bit late, but he has obviously dined well. Welcome anyway. We have a few minutes left before we close down for the night. Nice of the hon. member to drop in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: What about Bill C-30?

Mr. Simmons: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wants to talk about Bill C-30. I have a few things to say about that but as a preliminary to answering the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) I was attempting to assess the vantage point he speaks from. It is not the vantage point of a socialist who skips all over the world, attending conferences in Oslo with his brethren from El Salvador and other places. He speaks from the perspective of an armchair socialist—one who thinks about these things but does not feel them very much.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Simmons: It is not the perspective of a real, gut socialist like the hon. gentleman who sits behind him; not the perspective of the pseudo-socialist who sits to his right normally, but the perspective of an intellectual, an armchair socialist, one who has the solutions in his head to all the problems. Don't ever challenge him to put them into practice because he would be lost.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, we seem to be hitting a nerve with the armchair socialists.

An hon. Member: Say something!

Mr. Simmons: He talks about control of the public purse in the best and most serious vein he can muster and he says, with a maturity which belies his years—

Mr. Rae: You should be so lucky!

Mr. Simmons: —that there has been no opportunity to ask a question. Mr. Speaker, he was in committee this morning asking questions. Did anybody stop him there? Is he telling the House that he has been muzzled? If so, let him come forward and raise his complaint in the proper fashion. He is misleading the country when he says there has been no opportunity to inquire into these matters. There have been all kinds of opportunity. Of course, he does not want to admit that because it belies his version of the facts. He talks about allegations that we have done one thing in opposition and another in government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: One thing is certain, at least; when we were in opposition, we could not be accused of the type of flip-flop the NDP has done in opposition. First of all, that party is never going to be in government anyway.

Mr. Anguish: What about the Liberals in western Canada?

Mr. Simmons: In the second place, as we have seen on so may occasions, most notably in connection with the referendum in Quebec, they are capable of taking both sides of an issue depending on what they think is the popular thing to say. They don't need to be in government to change gears. They do it just about twice every day on just about every issue. For instance, their finance critic, when interest rates were high, blamed the government for it. Now, when they are coming down, he gets upset if the government begins to take any credit. He cannot have it both ways. Either he cannot blame the government for the high interest rates or, if he does, he must allow us to take credit when interest rates are lower. Not only did that hon. member criticize the government for high interest rates, when interest rates began coming down very quickly he was on the air, that week, expressing concern that they might come down too fast.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: That was his concern, then. Yes, he was on both sides of that issue, too. He was against high interest rates but equally he was against low interest rates and he was pontificating on the CBC about the detrimental effect of low interest rates.

An hon. Member: Rubbish!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is very difficult to hear what is being said.

• (2130)

Mr. Knowles: Tell us about Bill C-30.

Mr. Rae: Tell us what you are going to do with the $12 billion.

Mr. Simmons: We are going to spend it for the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: We are going to use it well for the people. That is what we were elected to do, and we intend to do it well. They are all out tonight; the real socialists and the closet socialists are all out tonight. The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, the armchair socialist, says this is no time to increase taxes, and he is right. There is not a Canadian anywhere from coast to coast who disagrees with him on that. This is no time to increases taxes.

Mr. Rae: Talk to the deputy minister of finance.

Mr. Simmons: Even when I agree with the NDP, they do not want to hear it. If they listen, they might just get an angle on this one. Can anybody find one single Canadian who would agree that any time is the time to increase taxes? The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood thinks he has again latched on to a popular issue when he tells the country tonight that this is no time to increase taxes.

When interest rates were high, the hon. member was telling us to get them down low. He changed his mind afterward, but that is another issue. He always manages to peddle what he considers a popular line.

Mr. Rae: It works in Broadview-Greenwood.

Mr. Simmons: The hon. member says it works in Broadview-Greenwood. He can fool some of the people some of the time, but he will find sooner or later that he does not fool all the people all the time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: That is where the crunch will come for the hon. member. He can sit here and laugh at the people who elected him—

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if there might be unanimous consent in this House that the hon. member who has the floor discontinue his speech and let the previous speaker carry on with the intelligent conversation he had—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons).

Mr. Simmons: It is all right, Mr. Speaker, I now have some information. As I was saying, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood can sit and laugh at those who elected him if he wants. He can poke fun at them for the next two or three years, but he is going to have to go back and meet them at the polls again in three or four years. Instead of looking for short-term cliches which fool some of the people, whether in Broadview-Greenwood or wherever, he ought to address himself responsibly to some of the problems of this country. If he did, he would long be remembered, and his contribution in this House would be much greater.

No time is ripe to increase taxes. No one on this side of the House is advocating that. I do not believe anyone who sits in this chamber, in opposition or in government, knows at this time whether there will be a tax increase.

That brings me to the rumour we hear from opposition benches about tax increases of all types. Nobody on this side of the House has decided whether there will be a tax increase. Where did the rumour come from? It is another convenient invention of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. He is trying to fool a few more people. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has been fooling people for years.

Mr. Orlikow: He was a Liberal and a Conservative.

Mr. Simmons: We got rid of him. He was a Liberal, but he went to where he belonged. A convenient rumour has been invented by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood and the hon. member for St. John's West to fool a few people and to convince them that somehow they are fighting their battles.

Whatever happens to be in the budget this government will bring to the House, there is one thing which will not be in it. If hon. members want specifics, I have them tonight. I have had a talk with the Minister of Finance. Facts are coming in all the time.

An hon. Member: Here comes John Evans.

Mr. Deans: Do you believe him?

Mr. Rae: If you believe Evans, you will never get anywhere. He wants to raise taxes.

Mr. Simmons: I can tell the armchair socialist from Broadview-Greenwood one thing about the budget; it will not contain an 18-cents a gallon gasoline tax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: Will it be 17 cents or 17½ cents?

Mr. Simmons: He has started another rumour, Mr. Speaker. He can even make a rumour out of a suggestion of fact. This fellow can even twist a non-fact.

He has started his rumour-mongering already. Now he will rush out and say it will not be 18 cents but that it might be 17½ or 17¼.

Mr. Knowles: Are all Newfoundlanders like that?

Mr. Lefebvre: Only the good ones.

Mr. Simmons: One of the real socialists opposite is the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). To his credit, he is one of the real socialists. Why he is not going to Oslo with his brethren from Costa Rica I do not know. There is a difference between the real socialists and the armchair socialists like the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. There is a difference not only in title and style but also in substance. The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood calls for letting the deficit go to fight unemployment and to stave off recession. That is his cure-all, but the real socialist from The Battlefords-Meadow Lake has a different view altogether. As the NDP representative on the public accounts steering committee he says that the deficit of this government, which he says last year was $16 billion—he is only $4 billion out, but that is another issue—is shameful.

An hon. Member: The year is not over yet.

Mr. Simmons: The differences over there are very great. What is presented to the House as a united party is indeed a group of people searching The Globe and Mail for something about which to ask questions. That is the only thing that unites hon. members opposite. They all read The Globe and Mail at about 5.30 every morning to see what they can ask in the House.

I have a few more words to say about Bill C-30, which would give this government borrowing authority. It has become the in thing and the trendy thing all over the country to lament the size of the deficit.

• (2140)

You gain a special respectability as a Tory if you go out and say the deficit is large. You do not remind the people of the Tory deficit when they were in power some years ago, a long time ago. They are not in power very often, but the last time they were in power for a length of time, back in 1957, 1958 and 1962, the deficit, if you remember, was about 34 per cent as compared to 24 per cent or 25 per cent now. They do not remind people of that, they just go on talking about how large the deficit is. This is the respectable thing to do. It establishes your credentials as a Tory to go around talking about the deficit and how large it is. To put it in another way, it is the litmus test.

An hon. Member: You better learn the language or you will get nowhere in the cabinet.

Mr. Simmons: It is the litmus test. If you wish to qualify as a profound scholar of public finance in this country, you have to talk about deficits and how large they are. It is the trendy thing to do these days. As I said, you have passed the litmus test; it shows you qualify as a Tory.

An hon. Member: As a Liberal, Roger.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I told you that fellow was an armchair socialist. Now he feels constrained to defend the Tories.

I would say to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that he should be careful of the kind of help he is getting from the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), very careful indeed. Is it that the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood cannot listen for a moment? He might learn something. I am not sure he would, but perhaps he would.

Mr. Knowles: Give us something to listen to.

Mr. Simmons: I would say that the member for Broadview-Greenwood makes a lot more sense now when he is sitting down than he did when he was standing up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: I want for a moment to refer to something the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) mentioned when he spoke on this bill a day or so ago. He said then:

Rather interestingly, in this new Parliament what has now been given to us in the economic statement is an indication that the federal level of spending in relation to the gross national product will grow by 2 per cent—

He is playing loose with the facts, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to the House that that is not true at all. It will not be of the order of 2 per cent, and I want to get that into the record.

An hon. Member: What will it be Roger?

Mr. Simmons: It will remain in the range that it had been in 1975, not the increase about which the hon. member for Edmonton East spoke.

An hon. Member: Which is what?

Mr. Simmons: Now I want to come to the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), the former president of the Treasury Board, who spoke about the consumer price index figure. In his speech in the House a day or so ago he alleged, or stated as though it were a fact, that a noted international publication had ranked Canada as sixth among the industrialized nations in terms of the consumer price index figure, the increase in those figures. Once again, he misleads the House. If he will read a very respected British periodical, The Economist—a good Tory periodical from which the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood quotes, badly, but he quotes from it—he would see that the facts are not at all as the hon. member for York-Peel says. We do not rank sixth, we rank fourth, very closely behind West Germany, Holland and Japan. We are ranked a long way ahead of such countries as France, way ahead of Italy, Sweden, the United States and the United Kingdom.

An hon. Member: Where are we on unemployment?

Mr. Simmons: This member who should know better, the former president of the Treasury Board in the Tory regime, if he is going to read all kinds of statistics in the House, the very least you can ask of him is that—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 9.45 p.m., pursuant to the order passed on Monday June 9, 1980, it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion before the House.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no point of order at this time.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion of Mr. MacEachen, which was agreed to on the following division:

TRANSPORT

DEFECTIVE AUTOMATIC TRANSMISSIONS IN FORD MOTOR VEHICLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity certainly to drivers of many Ford Motor Company products in this country.

In view of disturbing information that the Ford Motor Company has known since 1971 that some automatic transmissions lurch into reverse from park, that at least six complaints a month have been received by Ford about these slipping transmissions, that there have been altogether 291 recorded cases—including 41 injuries and four deaths in Canada—and in view of the fact that the Ministry of Transport has been investigating these incidents since 1977, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the government immediately introduce legislation which would empower the Government of Canada to recall the 1.5 million Canadian vehicles with the alleged defective transmissions, and not wait for the results of inquiries in the United States.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), I move:

That this House commends the Minister of Veterans Affairs on the assurances he gave to the Royal Canadian Legion at its Dominion Convention in Penticton, British Columbia, on Monday of this week, that he would soon be bringing in legislation respecting veterans and their survivors, and this House urges the minister to do so before the end of this month.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT SALES TAX ON FOOD BE REMOVED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Canadians, who used to eat one meal a day outside their homes, are now eating two or more meals a day away from home, and in view of the fact that the federal government has imposed a 12 per cent federal sales tax on food service equipment, a tax which is inevitably passed along to the consumer in higher prices, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to remove the sales tax, an action which would allow the consumer to save money on meals eaten in commercial establishments, and an action which could slow down the rise in the consumer price index.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RETRAINING PROGRAMS FOR EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is in the chamber. I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie):

That by reason of the importance of the Government of Canada giving leadership in the field of employee retraining, the President of the Treasury Board make a statement in the House prior to the summer adjournment on the proposals of the Government of Canada for retraining programs for its public servants.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

NEGOTIATION WITH PROVINCES TO IMPROVE DAY-CARE PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the fact that 2,500 children in metro Toronto alone are on day-care waiting lists, and in light of the fact that provincial day-care funds are dwindling dramatically, causing real, everyday problems to working mothers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean):

That the government assume its responsibility to working mothers in this country by immediately undertaking discussions with social services ministers in the provinces to renegotiate the Canada Assistance Plan so that day-care will cease to be a luxury-priced item and will become available and affordable to all working mothers in this country.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY TAX CREDIT

REQUEST THAT DECEMBER BUDGET PROPOSALS BE IMPLEMENTED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Since public transportation is very limited and not available to many Canadians who travel to work from rural to urban areas in the Atlantic provinces, and since contemplated oil price increases will result in substantially increased costs for these people, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That the Minister of Finance be directed to implement the energy tax credit proposals contained in the December 11 budget to assist Canadians earning less than $21,000 per year.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

APPROVAL OF FRENCH SCHOOL IN REGINA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Smith (Don Valley East): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Saskatchewan's provincial government recently approved Regina's first French school, and classes are scheduled to start next fall at Dr. Martin Leboldus High School in South Regina. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang):

That the House give unanimous support to this initiative which encourages the flourishing of the two official languages.

Madam Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

REPRESENTATIONS BY NATIVE PEOPLES IN FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to the native peoples of Canada.

Considering the fact that the native peoples of Canada will only be involved at what we consider to be a third-tier level at the first ministers' conference in the joint work on the topic of Canada's native peoples and the constitution, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight):

That provision be made for the native peoples of Canada to make official representations to federal and provincial ministers and their officials during the July 7 to July 25 session or the August 25 to August 29 session as posted in the Prime Minister's proposed agenda for constitutional reform.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF SALMON FISHERY—COMPENSATION FOR GILLNETTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the collapse of the west coast salmon gillnet fisheries appears evident because of recent federal closures of the Fraser River and Rivers Inlet for chinook fishing, and since British Columbia gillnetters cannot afford the harsh economic realities imposed by prolonged closures for conservation purposes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That the Government of Canada initiate early discussions with representatives of the fishermen to investigate how gillnetters might be compensated for their income losses and/or to consider some other long-term insurance type solution designed to eliminate or minimize the financial instability in the industry.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TASK FORCE TO STUDY PAY AND BENEFITS OF ARMED FORCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that there are many armed forces personnel and their families in Calgary and other centres who are eligible for welfare supplements, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That this House direct the Minister of National Defence to appoint a task force outside the chain of command to examine military pay and benefits in relation to the cost of living in various communities to which armed forces personnel and their families are posted.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion would require unanimous consent before it could be put to the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—CONDEMNATION OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES ABSTAINING FROM VOTE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On June 7, in Luxembourg, the North Atlantic Assembly voted on a draft resolution "condemning the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan as a violation of Afghanistan's sovereignty and territorial integrity and of the right of the Afghan people to self-determination".

The resolution went on to call for a strengthening of the NATO alliance. The NDP member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) and Liberal Senator Royce Frith, members of the Canadian delegation, abstained from this vote. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this House condemns the NDP member for Selkirk-Interlake and Liberal Senator Royce Frith, and urges that they be removed immediately from the North Atlantic Assembly parliamentarians' group.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INDEXING OF PERSONAL INCOME TAX—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the somewhat elusive Minister of Finance. On Tuesday we heard bad news about increasing unemployment figures and today, as the minister knows, we have a cost of living increase announced of 1.2 per cent in May. That is a year over year increase of 9.4 per cent and an annualized rate of 14.4 per cent. But even more alarming is that the underlying rate of inflation, when we remove food and energy costs from the index, was also up 1.2 per cent, which is a year over year rate of 9.1 per cent, the highest since 1976.

Given this burgeoning inflation rate, would the minister now advise the taxpayers of Canada and the House that the government definitely and unequivocally is not going to remove indexing from the personal income tax system, as the Minister of Finance said was a probability several weeks ago and as his assistant said had a 50-50 chance? In view of this burgeoning inflation rate, will the minister now make it clear that the government is not going to attempt to take advantage of inflation to get additional revenues in an unfair manner from the people of Canada, and that this is definitely ruled out?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, while the statistics on inflation are serious and have to be taken into account, I doubt whether the term "burgeoning" is justified. I am sure the hon. gentleman would not have described his forecast of inflation which he made last December for 1980 as burgeoning.

However, that aside, I am delighted the hon. member raised the question of indexation and the possible removal of indexation from the income tax system, particularly his use of the word "probability".

Mr. Crosbie: That was your word.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. gentleman says that "probability" was my word. I want to assure the House that it was not my word. I was asked by a newspaper reporter from Le Devoir whether I was considering the removal of indexation as a possible revenue measure. After he had brought to my attention the statistics which the hon. gentleman obligingly provided in his budget papers, showing that over the years there had been a revenue loss of some $5 billion to $8 billion as a result of indexation, what I said to the newspaper reporter was that, yes, that was one of the possibilities, side by side with other revenue measures which had to be considered in preparing the budget. That was the beginning, and that is the situation at the present time. It is a matter that obviously will be considered.

I understand the hon. gentleman himself stated that he had considered it at one time, and maybe he would permit me to do the same thing.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I made it very clear that I considered and rejected the removal of indexing in the income tax system. It was rejected.

I remind the minister that his deputy minister of finance, Mr. Stewart, in addressing a Senate committee on May 27 said that the forecast of last December was now going to be exceeded, so the likelihood is a rate in excess of 11 per cent. In view of these alarming figures, will the minister now tell this House that he is no longer considering the de-indexation of the personal income tax system, that he is not going to take advantage of the inflation that the government is permitting in this way, and that it is ruled out even though the Liberal member for Mercier has stated in the 74-page policy document of the Liberal party "that Canadians are undertaxed compared with people in many countries"? Even though Liberal members of Parliament believe they are undertaxed, will he rule out indexing and attacking lower income taxpayers in that manner?

● (1120)

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, obviously the hon. gentleman himself agreed with the analysis that Canadians were undertaxed, in view of the massive tax increase which was contained in his December budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Otherwise he would not have levied such very heavy taxes. I do not complain about the necessity for additional revenues. I believe that if we in this country are to make any progress in reducing the deficit, and if we are going to introduce any additional necessary programs, there may be a requirement for additional revenues. I have never concealed that.

The hon. member says that he considered de-indexation and had rejected it. I presume that he declared his rejection after he had prepared his budget, not before, and I will await the budget before finalizing my opinion on revenue sources.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the minister is the only person in the House who is like Wynken, Blynken and Nod all at the same time: he can do it all together. The specific question he has been asked is whether he would now tell the Canadian public that he will no longer contemplate the de-indexation of the personal income tax system. That is the question.

Let me remind the minister that in the election campaign leading up to February 18, the Prime Minister and the people who campaigned with him never once mentioned to the Canadian people that they are undertaxed. They said they were being overtaxed. They never mentioned there was any need for government revenues being increased. So will the minister now confirm to the House that they will stick to their pre-election position and there will be no taxation increases, and that indexing is ruled out for now and forever as long as this government is in power?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is creating, for his own purposes, a fictitious Liberal platform.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I happen to have been chairman of that platform committee and I know what was said with respect to taxation and new programs. For example, we said that if we were to introduce the guaranteed income supplement, we would bring in new taxes. The Prime Minister stated in the campaign that he would likely secure those taxes from the corporate sector. That is exactly what happened. But there was no pledge that there would be no tax increases under a new Liberal government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Another flip-flop.

FINANCE

PRIME INTEREST RATE OF CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Has he noted that the shares of the Royal Bank set a 1980 high yesterday, and that John Mitchell of Greenshields attributes the strength to lower interest rates, which he predicts will increase the bank's domestic profit by as much as 40 per cent in the fiscal year 1981 if present interest levels are maintained, raising profit to more than $10 a share in fiscal year 1981 compared with $7.40 a share in the current year?

If the minister is aware of that, is he also aware of the fact that the Royal Bank last lowered its prime interest rate one month ago today, when it went down to 13.75 per cent, and notwithstanding the bank rate having now gone down to 11.29 per cent as compared to the then 14.17 per cent, the Royal Bank prime rate has not come down nor have the prime rates of the other major banks?

If the minister has noted these facts, would he tell us whether he has inquired as to why prime rates are not coming down in a more direct relationship to the bank rate?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member seems to find some difficulty in accepting the notion of decreasing interest rates. The fact of the matter is that in the last number of weeks there has been what one might call a phenomenal decrease in interest rates, in the bank rate and in other rates in this country. I regard that as a most welcome development. The hon. member asked me to relate the bank rate to the prime rate. He knows that from time to time there are lags in these adjustments.

● (1125)

Mr. Crosbie: Quite a lag.

Mr. MacEachen: But the trend is downward. That is the important thing. The rates now are much lower than the high rates I inherited from his government.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed again to the Minister of Finance. He must know that the only meaningful interest rates for consumers in Canada are the prime rates and the rates they are paying on their mortgages and consumer loans, not the bank rate to which the Minister of Finance is referring.

Has the minister inquired from the chartered banks why, in fact, their prime rate structure has been static? It has not gone down over the last month; it has been static at 13.75 per cent, notwithstanding the bank rate drops in Canada and the rather sensational prime rate drops in the United States where prime rates are now lower than they are in Canada, whereas during the Clark years prime rates in the United States were higher. He knows that, because he is grinning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I had the opportunity last night to spend several hours at a meeting with the Canadian Bankers' Association.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is where you get your answers.

Mr. Stevens: We know whose side you are on.

Mr. MacEachen: I discussed these and other questions with members of the banking fraternity. I want to assure the hon. member that the same vigilance this government has exercised with respect to establishing policies to bring about a decline in the bank rate also will be applied to the prime rate.

Mr. Andre: At least blush when you say that.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance is—when?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the proof of the pudding is in the eating. The hon. member has been served it every day in the House in the way of lower rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MONITORING OF INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance concerning the food he has been feeding us for the past two months. It follows directly on the questions of my socialist friend from York-Peel, the ones he picked up from us yesterday concerning the problem of the rates being charged to consumers.

If the minister is serious in the answer he gave to the hon. member for York-Peel, when he said he will be vigilant in following the interest rates charged to consumers, the prime rates and the rates charged to small businessmen, could he please answer the question I put to him yesterday? Why have the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance specifically rejected proposals from this party which have been forwarded to him and which I am sure he has seen? They would give the minister the power and ability under the new Bank Act to monitor interest rates charged consumers and small businessmen by the chartered banks. They would give the government responsibility for assessing whether they are reasonable and whether excess profits are being made by the banks, in light of economic conditions.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, perhaps the hon. member would be prepared to wait until the banking bill has come out of committee before raising these questions in the House.

Mr. Rae: He has rejected them in committee.

Mr. MacEachen: If I wanted to raise a point of order, I would have a valid basis against the hon. member in raising questions which are presently under discussion in committee.

Mr. Crosbie: What a joke.

Mr. MacEachen: I want to tell the hon. member that all the amendments he has proposed with respect to financial disclosure—and I would gather this is part of his over-all series of amendments—are still under consideration by myself.

INDUSTRY

REBATES ON CANADIAN-MADE CARS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister is no surprise.

Miss MacDonald: The poor consumer.

Mr. Rae: I look forward with interest to hearing what the minister has to say. My question to the minister follows the questions and answers that have been going across the floor of this House for over a month to his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

● (1130)

Considering the fact that Canadian cars are being sold in the United States with large rebates being offered by the three large car makers, and considering the fact that the consumer price index figures issued today show that the lack of such rebates in Canada is putting serious pressure on the consumer price index, can the minister tell the House what his attitude is regarding those rebates, when the three large car makers are offering them in the United States on Canadian cars and not in Canada, and when we have signed a deal on pricing?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, to assist the hon. member with this very important question, and to follow up what I said in the House the other day, I had my officials contact the heads of the motor vehicle manufacturers to raise the question of rebates for cars in Canada with them.

They said that the market situation, as they saw it, did not lead to their deciding to offer these rebates directly to consumers. They have available, however, dealer incentive programs which, in their view, make available to Canadian consumers equivalent opportunities to the rebate programs in the United States.

An hon. Member: Could you believe it?

FINANCE

INFLATION—PROPOSAL THAT FAIR PRICES COMMISSION BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): A further supplementary question, Madam Speaker. We have the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce accepting the word of the three car makers, and we have the Minister of Finance consorting with the Canadian Bankers' Association. We know who they are with.

I should like to put a final supplementary to the Minister of Finance. The fact of the matter is that consumer demand has been falling dramatically, that real disposable income has been falling dramatically, and yet we have this persistent and consistent pressure on the price side.

In light of these conditions, and in light of the fact that corporate profits have been so high and some bank profits have been so high, will the minister reconsider the historic rejection by the Liberal party of a proposal from us that the government establish a fair prices commission so that we can get at the root of what is causing this inflationary spiral even when demand is falling?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has referred to my consorting with the bankers. One of the bank's presidents told me last night how much he enjoyed the luncheon he had with the hon. member recently.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He is blushing.

Mr. MacEachen: With respect to the very important question of policy raised by the hon. member, it is a matter that, if decided upon, would be announced to this House in a formal way.

TRANSPORT

DEFECTIVE AUTOMATIC TRANSMISSIONS IN FORD MOTOR VEHICLES—RECALL THEREOF

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the disturbing news that many Ford Motor Company products have slipping transmissions which lurch into reverse from park, and that there has been a total of 291 recorded cases in Canada, with 41 serious injuries and four deaths, could the minister tell the House why there are no regulations on the books right now that would enable the federal government to force the recall of automobiles which are known to have defective parts?

Will the minister give the House an undertaking that the government will consider enacting legislation which would empower him and his department and the Government of Canada to recall automobiles with defective parts?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is in the law authority to issue a notice of defect. I also indicated before that the department can inquire, can inform and can do all kinds of things around the phenomenon of recall.

As I said specifically, however, the department does not have the authority to recall; that is very clear. Why? Simply because the system as it exists has been sufficient in possibly 99.9 per cent of cases to obtain the result which is contemplated. So as I said yesterday, in instances of this kind I, personally, do not believe that the legal process should be used to reach an objective which can be reached through other means less dramatic than the legal one. But this is a subject for debate, obviously.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): What is most disturbing about this case, Madam Speaker, is that the federal Department of Transport has been investigating these incidents since 1977. I and other consumers would be interested in knowing what other cases might be under investigation by the department regarding defective brakes as we heard about in the Volkswagen Rabbit case, faulty transmissions, and so on.

In the meantime, I should like to know what advice the government can give to the great number of concerned Ford drivers in Canada until the government makes up its mind what to do about recalling these vehicles. Is any kind of an information kit being issued, for example, in conjunction with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I am interested in the subject, obviously and passionately. I shall have a kit developed myself and I shall send a copy to the hon. member. Communiqués to that effect come across my desk regularly. This was the case in the Volkswagen brake incident. I will package something and send a copy to my hon. friend.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF OIL SANDS PLANTS IN ALBERTA—OIL PRICING AGREEMENT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In reply to my question yesterday about a possible one-year delay in construction of the two massive oil sands plants in north-eastern Alberta because of lack of an oil pricing agreement, the minister said:

> We are not the ones preventing those plants from proceeding. I am afraid the hon. member has the wrong information.

I would suggest that perhaps the hon. minister has the wrong information. Is it not true that the companies developing those massive oil sands plants must have a firm agreement on pricing before they can proceed, and that they do not have that from the federal government at the present time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should know that there is a firm pricing agreement. This is going to expire July 1, but there has been one in operation for the last few years. As recently as two weeks ago Alberta Gas Trunk Line and Petro-Canada announced an intention to build a third oil sands plant without waiting for a firm oil pricing agreement. They decided they wanted to proceed. They have confidence in this government, and the government of Alberta, that we will provide ample funds for them to have a financially viable operation. This is the view of both governments and it is shared by the entrepreneurs concerned.

They need, and are waiting for, formal authorization from the government of Alberta and from the various boards and agencies of that government. Various fiscal incentives have been asked for from this government over the years, and they have been granted. What is lacking at the present time is the form of authorization from the government of Alberta. The hon. member knows that that kind of answer has not been forthcoming in the last year from the government of Alberta, not from this government.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stand in this House and say that he has a firm agreement with Alsands on pricing, and that he has a firm agreement with Imperial Oil on pricing? Will he stand in this House and say "We have signed and we have a firm pricing agreement"? He should know that is not true, and that $12 billion in investment is ready to be put in place.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Shields: I will leave that one, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, obviously the hon. member is more interested in making a speech than asking a question.

Mr. Andre: You invoked force majeure.

TRANSPORT

DEFECTIVE AUTOMATIC TRANSMISSIONS IN FORD MOTOR VEHICLES—COMPENSATION FOR PERSONS INJURED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked about the failure to recall Ford cars since there have been four deaths in this country, 41 injuries and, I believe, nearly 300 accidents. If I heard the minister correctly in the House today and through the media yesterday he said that his department has some power to do something.

As his department has known about the problems for a few years, and since it has some power, does the minister not agree that the government has some responsibility to compensate people who have been injured as a result of these accidents, and some responsibility for the people who have died as a result of them, at least equal responsibility with the Ford Motor Company which manufactures the cars in our country?

● (1140)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would emphasize that the safety authorities in the United States have reached what is called a "tentative finding." This tentative finding must now go through the process of public hearing. In other words, up to now the possibility of the fault has been studied in both Canada and the United States but there is no conclusive evidence. Ford still disagrees with the tentative finding made in the United States.

In this case, in a number of occurences, it is claimed that an accident can be imputed to slippage of the transmission, but there is no proof that this is so. The figures have been added up and they indicate that there is the possibility of such a fault. But, I repeat, it is not a proven fact.

LEGAL OPINION ON RESPONSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT FOR COMPENSATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It concerns the failure of the government to recall any Ford cars despite the fact that four people have died and 41 have been injured as the result of faulty transmissions.

The Minister of Transport has said that the government does have some power to act, but it has failed to act despite the fact there is thought to be a problem. He is satisfied that there are no conclusive findings on the problem in the United States. I would point out that I am referring to cars which are made in Canada.

Has the Minister of Justice sought a legal opinion on this matter and, if he has not, will he seek a legal opinion to determine whether or not the government is equally responsible with Ford Motor Company if any deaths or injuries occur due to faulty transmissions, in light of the fact that the government has the power to put a stop to this matter and recall the cars, that it has known of this problem for a number of years and that this problem is causing undue hardship to a number of Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have not received a request from anybody on this matter to this day. I will certainly examine the question. I believe this responsibility comes under the administration of federal laws in the area of transport safety, that is under the Minister of Transport. I will discuss this matter with the minister. But I have not received a request from anybody regarding a criminal offence.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER STABILIZATION PROGRAM HAS ASSISTED POTATO GROWERS

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, yesterday it was implied in the House and in the committee on agriculture that the Minister of Agriculture showed favouritism toward Quebec in the administration of assistance programs aimed at several types of agriculture. Could the minister tell the House whether it is true that the stabilization program has assisted potato growers of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, wherever the stabilization program is used, it will be of some help. But there is no guarantee that it will be a profit-making apparatus. It is a program which, if used, would allow these growers to stay in business.

ENERGY

OIL—POLICY ON RATIONING

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Several weeks ago I asked the Prime Minister a question regarding the energy future of Canada and what the government's position was on the matter. I would like to rephrase the question and ask the Minister of Energy whether or not he understands, considering decreasing domestic oil supplies, the insecurity and instability of foreign imports and an inadequate and insufficient conservation and substitution program, that his policy is one of rationing and committing this country to rationing?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I certainly do not understand, for the very simple reason that that is not our policy. Our policy is to reach as quickly as possible a level where we will not be reliant on imported oil. This policy implies increased supply, better conservation programs and a whole series of policies to encourage Canadians to move off oil to alternative fuels.

I have already announced a policy, for instance, whereby refineries will upgrade oil in this country and whereby there will be greater access to natural gas. There will be savings of well over 100,000 barrels per day alone through the measures I have already announced. Our purpose is to achieve complete autonomy for Canada as soon as possible. There is a whole array of measures already in operation, and I hope to be able to announce further measures once an oil pricing agreement is reached, which I hope will be soon.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, I understand very well the implications and the understandings. The inadequacy of the time-frames involved in all these measures to enable us to reach a goal where we will not require rationing, in fact, implies that the government has a rationing policy.

Does the minister understand the possible political frustrations and the frustrations among interested groups when rationing, no matter what form it takes, becomes necessary because of the short-term needs of oil in this country?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, there is no rational policy—rationing policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Pardon me, Madam Speaker, I was thinking of the former Conservative budget.

Mr. Andre: After that first statement, your nose shrunk by two inches.

Mr. Lalonde: Coming to the present government, there is no rationing policy under consideration. As the hon. member knows, the Energy Supplies Allocation Board is working on measures, as are all other countries which are members of the International Energy Agency, to enable us to cope with a situation which might arise out of an international crisis and which would create very serious problems for all western industrialized countries.

However, these measures are aimed at a very serious crisis of an international nature, and rationing is not a matter which is under consideration by this government.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT EXCISE TAX BE RESCINDED

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, who during the early weeks of 1980 expressed himself as being completely and totally opposed to the excise tax as it was originally proposed by the hon. member for St. John's West. However, since he has been appointed to his high office, he has indicated that he would review the imposition of that excise tax.

Is the minister prepared to take some positive action to rescind that excise tax because of its oppressive, depressive nature and in light of today's announcement on continuing high inflation costs?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, my opinions about that tax have not changed very much. I am currently having very detailed discussions with my colleagues in cabinet.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, in light of the comment made by the Minister of Agriculture, I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

Earlier, the Minister of Finance indicated that he, too, would review the imposition of that harsh, excessive tax as it is applied to the Canadian wine industry. Is the minister now prepared to say whether or not that review has been completed? The fact that the tax has been imposed is an indication that the review has been completed and of the disdain which the government holds for the Canadian wine industry and Canadian grape growers.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the representations which have been made by members of the government party, by the hon. member and by representatives of the wine growers, are still under consideration. It was certainly not my intention, in reintroducing the proposals of my predecessor, to place an undue burden upon the grape growers. I would be very concerned if any undue burden did occur. I can assure the hon. member that I am still considering the matter.

STUDENT AID PROGRAMS

INPUT BY STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Does the Secretary of State plan to act on representations made by the National Union of Students and other student bodies that students be given the opportunity to provide a more satisfactory input into the review of student aid programs?

● (1150)

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Kitchener for raising this question. It is obviously a question of great interest not only to university students in his home area of Kitchener-Waterloo, but also to university students right across this country.

An hon. Member: Sit down, Francis.

Mr. Fox: Perhaps, to set the record straight, I should start off by saying that the previous Conservative government and the Council of Ministers of Education did not provide for any student representation or even any student input into that very important federal-provincial task force looking at student aid policies in this country.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Fox: I had the opportunity of meeting with representatives of the National Union of Students on May 14 this year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: I would very much like to answer this question, because it is of great interest to student groups across the country.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Fox: It is obviously not of interest to the previous Conservative government or to the present members of the opposition. As a result of this meeting with representatives of the National Union of Students on May 14, I decided to raise the matter once again with the Council of Ministers of Education. I met with the chairman of the Council of Ministers of Education in Victoria on May 27 last to discuss this matter more fully.

An hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Crosbie: Sit down.

An hon. Member: Order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would like ask hon. members to allow the minister to answer the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fox: I realize, Madam Speaker, that it is very embarrassing to the previous Conservative government to recognize its lack of interest in matters concerning student groups in this country.

An hon. Member: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I also have to call the minister to order. I would like him to answer the question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have over-pled your case.

Mr. Fox: I will be pleased to answer the question, Madam Speaker. As a result of this meeting with the chairman of the Council of Ministers of Education, the one-stage, no input process established by the previous Conservative government will be replaced by a second stage whereby the discussion paper to be produced by the joint federal-provincial task force will be made available to student groups, the National Union of Students in particular, in order that they may have meaningful input before any decisions are taken on matters of great concern.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Show a little respect for Parliament.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. All questions deserve an answer if the minister so chooses to give one. A question has been asked. We must have the answer, but I would ask the minister to be brief and to conclude.

An hon. Member: This is an abuse of the House.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My conclusion is that there will, indeed, be meaningful student input into the process following the publication of the discussion paper which will be made available to student groups in this country.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fox: Unlike members opposite, who speak a lot about freedom of information but were not willing to make these discussion papers available.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not know whether the minister has concluded his answer. I will ask if he has, and if he has then I will proceed to another hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Yes, Madam Speaker.

HOUSING

DESPERATE SITUATION ON INDIAN RESERVES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister of Canada, regarding the desperate housing situation on Indian reserves. In view of the fact that funds are urgently needed to build over 13,000 new homes that are backlogged, and that 24 per cent of the present homes on reserves are badly in need of repair, as well as the $12,000 per unit subsidy that is completely inadequate to meet current construction costs, will the Prime Minister assure us that additional funds will be allocated for reserve housing, as requested in an urgent memo recently to his cabinet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will be glad to take notice of the question and research that document to which the hon. member refers.

EMPLOYMENT

TRAINING AND EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR INDIANS ON RESERVES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): My second question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the appalling and disgraceful state of housing on Indian reserves, will the minister explain why housing construction projects are no longer eligible for LEAP funding, since this program was essential to build housing as well as to provide training and employment opportunities for people on reserves? Will the minister also explain why no program has been initiated to fill this void?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, I would say that a program has been initiated. In this House just two weeks ago we announced a program of Canada Development Projects across Canada which will have special additional funds allocated for native employment.

As we indicated in the opening statement in announcing that project, if other federal departments want to put up capital moneys, then certainly the labour component of those projects will be paid for under the Canada Development Projects. These funds are certainly available to any group on a reserve to initiate a housing program under that arrangement.

THE CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL ACCEPT INVITATION OF CLAUDE RYAN

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the fact that Friday last he had the opportunity to meet with the leader of the Liberal party of Quebec, who is also the former president of the No committee, I imagine they discussed the list of subjects to be raised during the federal-provincial conference in September. Yesterday the leader of the QLP said that the list was nothing more than a draft which would have to be completely remade, devoid as it is of such fundamental elements as the linguistic and cultural duality of Canada and the existence of a distinct society in Quebec. Given those remarks, does the Prime Minister intend to accept the invitation the leader of the QLP made to him yesterday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in his question the hon. member for Joliette said that he thinks the leader of the Quebec Liberal party and I discussed that list of priorities.

I can assure him that we discussed neither the list nor the statement of principles. I think the hon. member is making a mistake when he says Mr. Ryan stated that the list was just a draft. I rather think Mr. Ryan referred to the statement of principles. I, for one, do not contest such a description. I proposed it as such to the provincial premiers. It was a view of the federal government which I thought would have the support of a majority of Canadians but it certainly contains matters which are subject to discussion and amendment. That is why we gave ourselves several weeks during which the Minister of Justice and his colleagues will attempt to improve the draft.

As for linguistic duality, I think it is clearly recognized in that statement of principles and I would very much like to have the support of the hon. member for Joliette in that regard.

INQUIRY WHETHER PEPIN-ROBARTS RECOMMENDATIONS WILL BE TAKEN SERIOUSLY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Since Mr. Ryan also admits that he has drawn inspiration from the Pepin-Robarts report, I do not understand how the Minister of Transport can remain silent, considering the apathy shown by the Prime Minister. However, taking the report into account the Liberal party leader has stated that he could not follow the Prime Minister of Canada since he wanted to base his constitutional reform solely on one peoples. Would the Prime Minister tell us today whether he intends to take seriously the recommendations of the Pepin-Robarts report, the comments made by the leader of the Liberal party of Quebec, the former president of the No committee, and refrain from making Canadians believe that he has a mandate following the results of the referendum on the matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member refers to the Pepin-Robarts report. The analytical and historic parts of the report indicate quite well, I think, the concept of duality in Canada. We have tried to recognize that concept in the statement of principles to which the hon. member refers. We have spoken of the meeting of the French and English fact in Canada. We have also spoken about the linguistic duality. As for the term "people", unless I am mistaken, the Pepin-Robarts report nor any other rejects the concept of people. We must use a term to describe the inhabitants of Canada. Would the hon. member rather speak of the Canadian nation? Or would the concept of people be more acceptable? He should indicate a term to say that a population is living and wants to continue to live in this country. This is, as I said, what was decided by a majority in the Quebec referendum. The referendum did not deal with one term or another, but surely it indicated the will of Quebeckers to be part of a living whole in Canada and that normally there would be no objection to refer to them as a people.

REASON FOR LOSS OF JOBS IN CANADIAN ECONOMY

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In the recent labour force survey there was a notification that 68,000 jobs had been lost from the Canadian economy in the last month.

Can the minister tell the House from what sectors those jobs were lost, manufacturing or resource industries, what kinds of occupations, and what regions of the country were most affected by the job loss?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would say to the hon. member that if he had read the second page of the statistical survey, he would have found the answer there. What they did point out was the jobs were lost primarily in the goods producing service industries, and were primarily in the province of Ontario. That is on page 3 or 4 of the labour force survey that was issued two days ago.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—LENGTH OF QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I hesitate to rise on a point of order, but I feel I must in view of what occurred just a few moments ago in the question period when the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) directed a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox). The hon. member can deny it if he wishes, and if he does I will have to accept what he says, but that was obviously a planted question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Point of Order—Mr. W. Baker

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Subject to his denial, I say that was a planted question. The minister had his music with him for the answer. That was bad enough, but, Madam Speaker, you have admonished the opposition, and we accept the admonishment because it is correct, for abusing the question period by giving long preambles to questions and motions under Standing Order 43. We accept that because the proper way for the question period to be handled is with as much crispness as possible.

It is important, if this question period is to mean anything, that answers not carry on the way the answer of the Secretary of State did. It went on long before there was any disruption or calls for order from this side of the House. When it goes on so long that it is not even a neighbour to crispness in its characterization, the Chair must intervene. Otherwise, question period will slowly and irrevocably deteriorate to a point beyond which it has already deteriorated.

We are prepared to accept your views or rulings, Madam Speaker, with respect to crispness in our questions, but when the Secretary of State went on and on and on in his answer beyond what could be considered a normal length for an answer, an answer that was abusive, political and all the rest of it as well as being too long, then we have to rise. Our only defence to that kind of process before an intervention by the Chair is to shout "Order", just as the defence to too long a preamble to a question or Standing Order 43 motion is to shout "Order" from the government side.

Madam Speaker, you need some assistance from the House with respect to this matter. I say to you now, as the House leader of the opposition, that we are prepared to do our best to assist you by undertaking that we will keep our preambles short. However, there is a quid pro quo in this House of Commons. We need some kind of assurance from the Chair, the government House leader and certainly from ministers of the Crown, who are supposed to be knowledgeable about the rules of this House and should not abuse them, that they in turn will help improve the quality of the question period.

If the Chair needs assistance, I want to say it will have that assistance from the opposition. It is important that some kind of undertaking come from the government House leader so that the spontaneity of the question period will not be lost. I say that with great seriousness. It is important that you intervene, Madam Speaker, and when you do you will have support for that intervention from this side of the House with respect to those matters for which we are normally responsible, namely the asking of questions.

I felt I had to rise and say that to you, Madam Speaker. If the hon. member for Kitchener tells me that his question was spontaneous, that he had not in fact consulted with respect to the question, naturally I will accept that. However, even if that is so, the answer was far too long. In fact, Madam Speaker, if you review the question, you will see that it could have been answered—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It could have been answered—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That question could have been answered by a simple yes or no, with a short explanation. I think there has been an abuse today. The practice has to stop.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am a little surprised by the intervention of the opposition House leader. All the more so because if the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox) did take some time to answer—and I shall come back to the nature of the answer he has given to the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang)—it is because he was constantly being interrupted not by the shouts of the opposition but by the screams of some members opposite. I could see the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) who was behaving like a madman, Madam Speaker, and who was screaming to prevent the Secretary of State from giving a coherent answer. I find this not only childish but very disrespectful of this institution. That is the sad and poor image we project because of the irresponsible attitude of the hon. member for Calgary Centre with his uncontrolled screams.

I was present, I watched him. I see that the hon. member is here and I will tell him to his face: his attitude has been irresponsible and degrading to this institution and I find that deplorable. Madam Speaker, I could single out several other members but I do not sit in the House to supply the gossip column of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) who is absent. Be that as it may, I feel that basically the official opposition House leader is right to look forward to an oral question period which as a whole would unfold in a more orderly fashion, but I would not like him to put the blame on government members only.

It happens very frequently that members from his side ask questions with very long preambles and very long argument. It also happens that they get from this side some rather short answers. I admit also that occasionally members of the government give some rather long answers, but the questions are so long that it is sometimes inviting to give a complete answer and use more time for that purpose.

I come to the point he raised, namely the question put by the hon. member for Kitchener. The House leader of the official opposition seems to suggest that it is not customary—and I do not know if there was indeed prior consultation between the hon. member and the Secretary of State—to give a minister notice of a question. On the contrary, that happens quite regularly and should be done more often, and even opposition members do it.

Often, when a question is rather complicated, opposition members think, very appropriately, of giving notice of the question so as to get a full and detailed answer, because there are still some members in this House, Madam Speaker, who really want complete information and answers instead of trying to score political points and create an impression. And I cannot accept nor understand the remark made by my hon. colleague to the effect that it is most unusual that a member, from either side of the House, should give a minister prior notice of a question he intends to ask.

On the contrary, I think that this shows intelligence and respect not only for this institution, but also for the minister. I am not saying that this should be done in every case. This is not what I am suggesting. What I do suggest, however, is that it is not normal to complain, that this happens occasionally, regardless of what actually occurred in this instance, which I do not know.

The point which I want to emphasize, Madam Speaker, is that nothing whatever ought to be considered out of order with respect to the attitude evidenced by the hon. member for Kitchener when he addressed his question to the minister. Moreover, there was nothing irregular as far as the answer provided by the Secretary of State is concerned. The only irregularity arose from the fact that because of the obstinate and continued catcalls at that very moment, it was just about impossible for a minister to provide a normal reply which could at least be heard, and that is what I find unacceptable.

If anything is to be retained from the contribution made by the House leader of the official opposition, it should be that those who are asked questions should at least be given a chance to reply and be heard. I was sitting next to the Secretary of State and I could hardly hear him because of the catcalls from the other side. In particular, the hon. member for Calgary Centre, was stridently objecting to the length of the reply given by the Secretary of State.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, on the matter of principle, and regardless of what happened today, I agree with the House leader of the official opposition that opposition members should make their questions much shorter. I also agree that, on this side of the House, unless the subject is really tricky or calls for more explanations, we should try, as you yourself have suggested on a few occasions since the beginning of this session, to give replies which are shorter or more ad rem, to use a legal expression. However, I would not want to see a most legitimate complaint used as an opportunity to criticize the attitude evidenced this morning either by the hon. member for Kitchener or by the Secretary of State, who made outstanding efforts in order to be heard amidst the noise and shouts coming from the Progressive Conservative benches.

Point of Order—Mr. W. Baker

[English]

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to add to the length of the discussion about the question and answer which have been alluded to. However, I should like to say that underlying the discussion we are now having is to be found the basic cause of the difficulty now affecting our question period. I feel my colleagues are right in expecting that members of our party should get in four or five questions a day. Most days, we get only three. It is not your fault, Madam Speaker. Your arithmetic is dead on; we get the right proportion. The reason we do not get the four or five we think we should get is that not very many questions are asked during the question period, and this is because the preambles to many of the questions are too long and the answers are far too long. It is not only the case of the reply given by the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox) this morning. I think Your Honour will find, if you check Hansard tomorrow, that the Secretary of State spent more time while he was on his feet telling us what the Tories had not done than in answering the question about what were the Liberals going to do. I do not think that is a correct use of the time.

We had no objection in our corner of the House, Madam Speaker, when you remonstrated with one of our members a few days ago on the ground that the preamble to his question was too long. I join with the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in saying that you have our support if you try to cut down the length of preambles and the length of answers so that more members not only in our party but in all parties can get a chance to ask their questions in the question period.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): In view of the fact that the government House leader has brought my name into the discussion, Madam Speaker, I should like to make one or two observations. First, I observe that the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox), who triggered this discussion has not had the courtesy to stay here and listen to it.

The government House leader directed his criticisms at me. He is correct in saying members should not shout. My comment is that I was emulating his colleagues, including the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) and innumerable other members of the government party, who frequently and consistently since this session started have resorted to shouting "Order" across the chamber whenever they are dissatisfied with the nature of a question, apparently with some success.

Today there was a clear abuse. Obviously, the Secretary of State had made some adjustment in the programs respecting student loans and, quite obviously, he wanted to make those public. So he had his backbencher from Kitchener (Mr. Lang) put the question and this gave him the opportunity to make a speech in the House in the guise of answering the question, outlining the things he had done which, in his view, were so much superior to what had been done by this party. The answer given by the Secretary of State today should most properly have been made either by press release or by way of a statement on motions if it were necessary for it to be given in the House.

If there is to be this kind of abuse from that minister, of all people, and if we are to continue to hear "Order" shouted at us from the other side when we seek information in questions, it is understandable and natural that there should be reciprocation in kind. I hope it does not deteriorate to that. I underline the point made by my House leader, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and by the House leader for the New Democratic Party that it is far better both for the House, and for the country which watches our debates, if we shorten our questions and our answers. But I have to say that, given the nature of this chamber where we face each other two sword-lengths apart, if members over there shout "Order" at us we will respond in kind; we will shout "Order" back. If they refuse to answer questions or if they abuse the question period, you can expect that we will respond in kind. That would be only natural and if we were to do anything else we would be failing in our responsibility as an opposition to keep the government in check.

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, I would point out to the House leader for the official opposition that I am fully capable of making up my own questions. I do not accept his accusation of abusing the rules of this House. I will ask him to try them on to see whether they fit for him or for his party. I would also point out that it is not the hon. gentleman's position to judge whether a question is appropriate or not, or whether it is too long or not. That is for Madam Speaker to decide and I believe she is doing a fine job of carrying out that responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I should also like to reply to the accusation that I made a speech when asking this question. My question was three and a half lines long and contained 40 words. I would hardly regard that as a speech.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We did not say that. It was the minister who made a speech.

Mr. Crosbie: We know you cannot make a speech!

Mr. Lang: I think that is all I have to say on the subject. That is all it merits.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I would not have risen in this debate had the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) not mentioned my name. I want to tell him that the Secretary of State, who had to leave for an important engagement, would have liked to stay. He asked me to replace him in the House for this period of time because he had a very important appointment.

But what surprises me most, Madam Speaker, is that the hon. member for Calgary Centre who did get caught in the act, today behaved like a child who gets caught and fights back saying that it is not his fault, it is because others are doing the same thing that he is doing it himself. I do not find that attitude to be very serious or very parliamentary. It is obvious the hon. member for Calgary Centre abused what is called the minimum decorum to be kept in this House. If unfortunately, on certain occasions, other members do the same thing, that does not justify at all the behaviour of the hon. member for Calgary Centre today.

• (1220)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I do not intend to make a lengthy contribution to this discussion unless I am goaded. We all realize that government back-benchers have the right to ask questions and that the Speaker controls that so that it is not too often and does not interfere too much with the opposition's primary responsibility in the question period. We also realize that government members presumably usually check with the minister so that the minister knows he is going to be asked a question on a certain subject and will not appear like a dumb-dumb or a dingbat when he is asked a question by somebody on his own side. The hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) did not deny the proposition that he had informed the minister that he was going to ask that particular question.

Mr. Corbin: You guys do it all the time.

Mr. Crosbie: There is nothing wrong with that. I am not saying there is anything wrong about that, but the minister then abused the question period by trying to make a five or six minute speech in reply to a tame, pussycat question from his own member. That is an abuse of the question period.

Mr. Lang: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Crosbie: I am already up on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have already heard the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang). I know what his arguments are, and I think at this point I would like to cut off the discussion and make a few remarks for the benefit of the House.

Hon. members realize, of course, that whether questions are planted or not is not for me to judge. My view is that all questions are legitimate unless they require very lengthy statistics. In that case I would say they should be put on the order paper. In my view, all questions are legitimate whether they come from one side of the House or the other. I will make a passing remark about the question of the hon. member for Kitchener: it was short.

I think the answer was the matter which was put mostly into question by some hon. members. Some answers might be longer than others, and it is not for me to judge whether a question is properly answered with a "yes" or a "no".

In the particular case this morning I was trying to listen to the answer the minister was giving to the question of the hon.

member for Kitchener. At one point I could not even understand whether he was answering the question or going into debate. I could see that hon. members to my left were quite disturbed about what was going on, but I really could not follow the answer, so I called the House to order because I felt that the Chair had to know what was going on. The minister proceeded with answering the question. I called the minister to order also when I was able to realize that he himself was going into debate. Then I felt he should be allowed to proceed to the end of his answer, but even at the end I had to ask him whether he had really finished answering the question; I could not hear because of the noise in the House.

These things happen. I know hon. members like to protest when they feel that their privileges are being encroached upon, and I listened carefully to what I could hear. I do not really think that today we went beyond what is acceptable. The hon. minister jibed hon. members on the other side of the House, but this happens both ways, when questions are asked and when answers are given, and I allow a certain amount of that, politics being what it is.

I accept the remarks of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and I am happy that I will have the co-operation of hon. members on his side of the House as to preambles. I will try to check that answers from the other side are not too long and are not used in a way which is improper in question period.

I apply instant justice here. When looking into the record I might find that instant justice might have been applied in different ways at different times; but it is instant justice, and if after looking into the record I feel that I have been perhaps a little too lenient on one side or the other, I try to check that the next day. That is the only thing I can do.

I welcome the feelings which have been expressed by hon. members about the question period. I would like to recognize many more members, and I am happy that I will have co-operation with regard to preambles. I will try to look after the answers. I would even like to suggest in some cases, especially toward the end of the question period, that perhaps there not be supplementaries because supplementaries are not always supplementary. Hon. members will agree with me on that. Perhaps toward the end of the question period I could use my prerogative. It is my prerogative, but I try to go along with custom because I respect custom. I think custom is very important and sometimes more important than rules.

However, if hon. members agree, toward the end of the question period I might not allow as many supplementaries as I have in the past, in order to allow more members to ask questions.

I accept the remarks of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and those of all the other members as well.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SARGEANT—NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION SESSION—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF S.O. 43 MOTION BY HON. MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG-ASSINIBOINE

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of a motion moved under Standing Order 43 by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). In his motion the hon. member called for my condemnation and my removal from the NATO Parliamentary Association because he does not like the way I voted on a resolution brought forward at a plenary session in Luxembourg last Saturday.

I might point out that the hon. member misled the House a bit in saying that this motion referred only to the Afghanistan situation. It referred to many other situations besides the Afghanistan situation. I might also point out that the entire Canadian delegation felt that the resolution should have referred only to Afghanistan and left out the pot-pourri of other things that it contained. It it had done so, I could easily have supported it.

I do not really feel it is necessary that I explain my vote, but in this case I will very briefly. Because I strongly supported the Afghanistan clause in the resolution, I could not vote against it. However, because I am morally opposed to clauses in the resolution which effectively call for an escalation of the arms race, I could not vote in favour, so I abstained.

Furthermore, it is my understanding that Canada is still a democratic country; it is my understanding that all 15 member states of the North Atlantic Assembly are democratic countries; and it is my understanding that in a democratic country freedom of expression, whether by voice or by vote, is a basic right. Although I personally disagreed with the way some of my colleagues voted in Luxembourg, I recognize and respect their right to vote as they please, and I do not ask for their condemnation.

If I were to follow in the same vein as the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, I would ask that he be censured because he seems to have no respect for or belief in the tenets of democracy. However, I respect his right to freedom of speech, so I will ask, respectfully, only that he withdraw his motion.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, any member is entitled to move whatever motion he feels fit to move in this House. Your Honour accepted my motion and asked for unanimous consent, which request was turned down.

The hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) has highlighted the deep divisions within the NDP over NATO and NORAD and over the buying of the new fighter aircraft. The hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake mentioned the arms build-up motion which he could not support. Clause 5 of the motion says "to pursue arms control negotiations". It does not call for an arms build-up alone. It also calls for arms control negotiations, and I feel very strongly about Canadian members of Parliament and senators going to NATO and NORAD and voting against NATO and NORAD. They do not want us in NATO and NORAD. They have made that point very clearly over the years.

The hon. member talks about the democratic process. I can express my opinion, and I express my strongly held opinion, one which has been expressed by many Canadians, that with regard to NATO and NORAD the New Democratic Party has a lack of concern about the defence of Canada at a time when there is an arms build-up and invasions. Since Russia is invading Afghanistan, this is not a time to be pulling out of NATO or NORAD or to abstain from voting when we go to Brussels or Luxembourg NATO meetings. There is nothing in the resolution which would say that the hon. member should not vote, because it covers both conditions, arms control and arms build-up, and my motion was accepted. I question whether the hon. member has the right to a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: We have here a difference of opinion between two members regarding deliberations which took place in a body other than this Parliament. The motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) might have been on the border of not being quite in order, but these motions come in so rapidly and they are spontaneous, so perhaps under scrutiny—I do not recall the exact terms of the motion—it might be found to be out of order. I am making those reservations with all the risks that that entails. Therefore, the remarks which the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) made would have been out of order also, but because I cannot judge instantly and without a closer examination of the motion whether the motion under Standing Order 43 put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine is really in order, I have to accept the remarks made by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake.

However, this is basically a difference of opinion between the two hon. members, and therefore it is not a matter of privilege.

MR. MILLER—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, last night I indicated I might be rising on a question of privilege today and I sent you written notice of it. However, the hon. member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) is not here today, so with your permission I would like to request that I be permitted to raise this matter when both the hon. member and myself are in the House.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. PAPROSKI—LOTTERIES AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES—ANSWER OF PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I rise on the point of order which was raised yesterday by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski). In reply to his point of order I stated yesterday that I would convey his representations to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I would like to make a very short statement for the record so as to straighten out the facts.

On October 5, 1978, the federal government and all of the provinces, with the exception of Nova Scotia, signed a memorandum of understanding whereby, inter alia, the federal government would restrict its lottery market products to a retail price of $10 and up, and the provinces would limit themselves to products retailed at $9 and below. That memorandum was signed by Iona Campagnolo on behalf of the federal government and by Reuben Baetz on behalf of the provinces.

So the hon. member for Edmonton North who was questioning an answer given by the Prime Minister in this House and saying that no agreement was signed will note that the facts which I have just stated indicate that the Prime Minister was right. I wanted that to be on the record today.

DROUGHT—STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to provide the House today with details of the government's assistance programs for farmers who have been hard hit by drought conditions in western Canada. My colleague, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, was supposed to be making a statement at the same time in western Canada. He has probably already made it by now as we in the House were delayed by this long point of order which took so much time. Of course, the House is as unpredictable as the weather for the farmers.

The current dry conditions do indeed constitute a serious situation for some producers, and the government well recognizes that fact. We recognize that the producers most affected by the combined effects of a dry fall last year, a winter with little snowfall and this dry, hot spring, are the livestock producers of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Our programs address immediate problems being encountered by this group. The main problems are a lack of feed for the livestock, such as reserves of hay in the two provinces, an almost complete lack of pasture growth for grazing livestock in some areas, and some problems with water supplies.

I believe that these programs, which will be cost-shared on a 50-50 basis with the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, will solve some of these problems. The federal government's share will be $7 million.

Let me detail the programs, Madam Speaker. First of all, a cost-sharing program with the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan for feed assistance and livestock transport has been instituted. In most cases, feed will be transported to dry areas to maintain livestock. In other cases, it might be more appropriate to move livestock from these dry areas to other regions in which feed and forage is available in ample quantity. The program recognizes both of these aspects of assistance.

While the program as a whole will concentrate on these transportation and feed assistance concerns, some money will also be directed to the development of water supplies where emergency conditions have developed.

The transportation and feed assistance programs are centred in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, but part of the over-all program provides for the allocation of $1 million for similar activities in northwestern Ontario and the interior of British Columbia. Drought is also affecting these areas. Also, there will be $1 million for similar programs for the native people on Indian reserves.

Let me say that these measures have developed through the combined efforts of both federal and provincial officials. The federal task force on drought, which I ordered to be formed during the dry conditions in 1977, was instrumental in presenting me with specific recommendations on how best to handle current drought conditions. We activated this group and asked the provincial governments to participate in early May.

While livestock producers are suffering the most, cereal producers are also waiting for rain. But with some exceptions in some areas of the prairies, the cereal group could still provide reasonable yields with rain in the next short while.

So far as cereal producers are concerned, there exists already government mechanisms to assure them of their livelihood should the summer continue hot and dry. They are protected under our crop insurance plan or under the terms of the Western Grain Stabilization Act. About 80,000 farmers have purchased $1.5 billion in crop insurance protection this year. The federal government shares equally the $146 million in premium costs with participating producers. It is a 50-50 cost-sharing program and the provinces administer these programs. The stabilization act also provides income protection should poor crop yields result in reduced cash flow. About 124,000 grain producers are enrolled in that program.

Let me say that the government views the measures I have just detailed as being short-term in effect. No one can provide the rain that is really needed. But federal and provincial officials are continuing carefully to monitor the entire moisture situation in western Canada, and they will be making recommendations to us as the summer progresses. We do not consider the program I have just announced as being the total program. If conditions were to change, we will have to reconsider it, and that is what I mean by saying that we will be watching the situation carefully so as to assess the needs of these people. That is as briefly as I can put it.

I want to acknowledge also the co-operation of my colleagues, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané), the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), and other colleagues in the cabinet, as well as the co-operation we had from the provincial governments concerned.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply briefly to the minister's statement this morning. I think it would be safe to say that we on this side of the House would view the scope of the minister's statement as being too narrow in its parameters. The statement itself is not detailed enough. We hope that during the question period which will follow we will be able to receive from the minister more details of this matter.

The minister has dealt with two very important issues: one is feed assistance and the other is livestock transportation. But there are many other areas which are of grave concern in western Canada; for example, the problems of small communities which have already faced water rationing, a subject which has not been addressed by the minister at all.

There is one other point I should like to make at this time. In terms of the situation in the prairies, the minister is correct in the case of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The situation is extremely serious in those two provinces. Coming from the province of Manitoba, I suppose I can speak with some authority. They are probably experiencing the worst crop year since the depression. The hay crop is just non-existent.

● (1240)

I suppose we would have to call into question whether or not $14 million will be enough. The minister indicated that there may be more money coming. It is something we will pursue with him when we get into a question and answer session. The germination of the seed is very, very poor in Manitoba, and unfortunately there is no relief in sight.

Last night I mentioned in the Standing Committee on Agriculture that at the present time farmers are starting to plough up the crops and to apply for crop insurance. For example, the temperature on Wednesday was plus 36 degrees Celsius, with winds gusting to 50 miles per hour and the humidity around 20 per cent. That is not the kind of weather in which one could expect to grow crops.

The Alberta situation has changed rather dramatically over the past few weeks in terms of the grain crop, but in terms of the hay crop it is still very serious. The minister's statement does not really address the Alberta situation regarding hay. Rain early in the spring is required to produce a hay crop. I have talked with my colleagues in the House of Commons from Alberta and with farmers in that province. They have indicated that they will be faced with some real problems in terms of adequate hay to winter their cattle this coming year. The majority of cattle are produced in that province, so the minister may want to take another look at the situation pertaining to hay.

We on this side of the House criticized the government for its lack of urgency. That was documented on May 30 in the motion of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave). Up to this point when the minister has finally made his statement, I think our feelings can be characterized by restating the motion of that day. It read as follows:

That this House deeply regrets the government's lack of response in the House of Commons to concern about the disastrous western agricultural drought and the related forest fire emergency and calls on the government to abandon its secretive approach and consult with MPs of all parties in an open and forthright manner.

Since that time we have had a number of discussions in the agriculture committee on this question. Now the minister has come forward with a statement, but certainly it is not too soon. At the present time some cattle are being sold in western Canada. There is grave concern among some small prairie towns about the fact that they may not have enough water to last through the summer if they do not receive any more rain than they have up to the present time.

I should like to make some suggestions which the minister might take under advisement. First, we should ensure that a backhaul of hay is installed from eastern to western Canada in terms of the cattle trucks and rail vehicles being used. In other words, if cattle are being brought from western to eastern Canada there should be a backhaul of hay. The tractor-trailers and trucks should be full of hay when they are heading back to the prairies. The government should ensure this happens, and I hope the suggestion is taken under advisement.

The next point I should like to mention was not touched upon in the minister's statement. I am referring to the fact that perhaps this is the first time since the feed grain policy was instituted that the policy may work in reverse to the intended method for which it was brought in. It was to supply the domestic market first, that domestic market being eastern Canada, Quebec, the maritimes and parts of British Columbia. This year that domestic market will be in western Canada. It is incumbent upon the government to ensure the Canadian Wheat Board has enough stock of barley on hand in the prairies. I know in southern Manitoba that that is not the case. One can talk to a number of elevator companies in southern Manitoba to find out that the stocks of barley just are not there. The track record of the Canadian Wheat Board respecting the availability of supplies of barley must be a very, very top priority. The question of pelletizing grain screenings, especially at Thunder Bay and also Vancouver, to be brought back to the prairies should be looked into. This is a perfect source of cattle feed.

The minister should also consider the drilling of deep wells for water. Dug-outs certainly have been the primary source of water supply in western Canada, but they are almost empty. Unless water is trucked in, which of course is very expensive, the drilling of deep wells should be looked at very, very soon. Also the minister should look at the possible use of federal-provincial wildlife preserves for grazing cattle.

As I mentioned, the statement of the minister is welcome. In my opinion it is a bit too narrow in its scope, there is not enough detail as to what the government intends to do, but nevertheless it is better than nothing and will give farmers some assurance that the governments in effect are working together. Perhaps that is the most important point, that the governments are working together to try to solve this problem.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). We expected this statement a little over a week ago, but I am pleased to see that it has finally come. I am not totally pleased with the contents of the message, but at least we see some action is beginning to take form.

I view the drought situation which is occurring as something that will require complete rethinking on the part of the Department of Agriculture. In a sense, we are no longer dealing with farms that we are trying to keep profitable. Profitable farming is not an alternative under conditions such as we are now faced with. We are forced to go back to a situation of simple survival. Less rain has fallen on the eastern part of Saskatchewan, approximately two-thirds or three-quarters of Saskatchewan, all of Manitoba and northwestern Ontario, than has ever been the case in the 80-some years that recorded meteorological data has been available. It is not just the worst drought since the thirties; it is the worst drought which has existed in that very large part of western Canada since man started keeping records. It is an emergency situation. There have been three months without any moisture in some areas. In a great many areas there has been about two-tenths to three-tenths of an inch spread over the area in the form of slight precipitation.

Under those conditions we are wise to give top priority to water supplies. Man must survive this drought first. There must be water supplies to the towns and villages and also the farms. We must ensure that the program of 1977, where all small water sources were pumped dry and piped into larger dug-outs so that there would be some storage to get us through the winter, is put in place, especially as we approach winter.

I think that this feed movement program recognizes the needs of dairy producers. Provincial programs in conjunction with the federal drought task force have properly given top priority to the movement of forage to dairymen. It is fortunate that dairymen will have a cost of production formula based on costs. In Saskatchewan at least, the cost of production formula has yielded an increase of 1.5 cents per litre to help offset the extra expense of buying and importing hay. At least three or four truckloads of hay go back into Saskatchewan on wheat pool trucks that have hauled cattle east.

However, having said that, Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that the announcement has no provision for guarantees on feed grain supplies being held within our area. This is in part due to the implementation of an open market feed grain policy a number of years ago. We were told then that the open market would supply all domestic needs and the Wheat Board was instructed to concentrate on the export market for feed grains. They have been trying to do this but now there is a conflict of interest between the livestock producers of western Canada and the grain marketing institutions.

It is good business for the open market to get as much feed grain as it can in order to put upward pressure on the domestic price. When supplies are available, buyers are not so likely to bid the price up so the domestic market has been attempting to drain the area. Because the Wheat Board has not been given the jurisdiction to supply the domestic market first, it is intent upon selling as much feed grain into the world market as it can. Livestock producers may be at a disadvantage because of that inappropriate policy which was decided on some years ago.

As yet no announcement has been made about increasing the initial price of feed grains so that farmers who produce both grain and livestock will not be encouraged to sell before the end of the crop year, July 31, in order to take advantage of the higher prices for this crop year. The same argument applies to holding seed on farms. There would be less incentive to put it on the market before the end of July if an announcement were made soon that initial prices will remain at the same level for the next crop year.

The announcement makes no mention of the sense of urgency that exists regarding the market price of cattle. Cattle prices in the west are more depressed than in other parts of the country because of the emergency situation there. Stabilization pay-outs are available for some products but they are not normally available for cattle. If a normal stabilization program were to be put into place for cattle, it would not apply to those producers experiencing losses of 40 cents or 50 cents per pound through being unable to pick their marketing time.

Urgent consideration should be given to these needs and I hope the government will hold a watching brief on the situation and act accordingly.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a couple of brief questions. Regarding the supplies of feed grain maintained on the prairies, in my constituency tons of feed barley would ordinarily be available to farmers at the Netherhill elevator. In the surrounding area there are three feed lots, one that uses 20,000 bushels per week, the other one using 5,000 bushels per week—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. The procedure is for members to ask questions at this point. Statements have been made and now hon. members are permitted questions. I should like the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. McKnight: I should like to ask the minister what provisions have been made through the Canadian Wheat Board to guarantee a supply of grain to farmers in western Canada at this time?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is having meetings in Winnipeg today with the Wheat Board and the Canadian Grain Commission. They have made a survey of the grains that are available but I do not know their findings yet. I hope we will be able to report early in the week.

We are told unofficially that there are adequate supplies on the prairies for domestic livestock emergency feeding programs. I do not think we can say at this time whether we are going to make offers to farmers or whether we are going to decide that none of it can be shipped out of the area without properly compensating grain producers. All these things have to be taken into consideration when the decision is made.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions regarding the amount of assistance. It was suggested that there be a 50-50 division of the money, $7 million each. Out of that is to come $1 million for B.C. and Ontario and $1 million for Indian reserves, which leaves $5 million. It was my understanding that the Saskatchewan—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. Would the hon. member please put his question.

Mr. Hovdebo: Is there enough money to cover that sharing, because Saskatchewan has already paid out $15 million?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I understand this is an estimate made by Saskatchewan. As I said earlier, this is our proposal at this time. We will monitor it very closely and if necessary will go back to the treasury and scrape up some more money. If the rains come—and you can bet your bottom dollar, Mr. Speaker, as can everyone in the House, that I am praying that the rains do come—it is going to mean better crops and that we will spend less money.

The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) made some representations about Alberta but the Alberta minister has stated that they do not have emergency conditions as such. Newspaper reports made it appear as if no aid would be given for transportation in Alberta. That is not the fact, Mr. Speaker; arrangements will be made with Alberta.

Mr. Murta: I should like to ask the minister how his department and the provincial governments arrived at what I expect will be an amount of $14 million. It is a 50-50 share, so each side is giving $7 million. Is the minister prepared to table a breakdown of the costs in the House? He must have had some guidelines in order to arrive at the $14 million figure. Could he inform the House what they are and is he prepared to table the documents showing that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have instructions to table the working documents and make them public. It was a joint operation between federal and provincial officials who made the estimates.

The hon. member made representations about wells. I would point out that they are included in the program to supply water to municipalities. It is not just restricted to the farming communities but takes in the whole community, wherever need exists.

The PFRA is one of the most capable bodies in the world. Its engineers have maps showing all the water available, sweet and sour, how deep the wells are, etc. This kind of program is also being worked out with the provinces.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock, we were on statements by ministers, but I see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is not present.

An hon. Member: The parliamentary secretary is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I put before hon. members the suggestion that we consider other matters and revert to statements by ministers, if that appears to be appropriate?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Ostiguy) is willing to answer questions in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), if that is appropriate to hon. members opposite.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if that is the wish of the House I certainly would not object. I would point out that the rules say that questions under this order can be addressed only to the minister who made the statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair understands from the comments made that I may put the question to the House as to whether or not there is unanimous consent that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture will now handle the questions.

Mr. McKnight: I have two questions that I wanted to put to the minister. Because of the importance of his statement, I shall put them to the parliamentary secretary in the hope that he will seek further advice.

Did the minister or the department have any discussions with the Department of Finance as to an income averaging trust account regarding the sale of cattle at depressed prices because of the drought? I refer to an income averaging trust account similar to the one proposed by hon. members on this side, which would deal with the sale of cattle at depressed prices. Also, has the minister or the cabinet given any consideration to returning PFRA to its rightful place in the Department of Agriculture?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it must be understood that the statement made this morning by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) followed a study conducted by a task force made up of Agriculture Canada officials and their counterparts from the western provinces. As far as the matter raised by the hon. member is concerned, that is if a study has been made of short or medium-term livestock sales, I am convinced that the officials of Agriculture Canada, jointly with their provincial counterparts, have looked fully into this problem. Now, would the hon. member be so kind as to repeat his other question, because I have forgotten what it was?

[English]

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, the question I asked was: due to the need to sell cattle now, although farmers really do not wish to sell because it will disrupt their income and they will be giving away portions of their sales to the tax department, has the minister considered setting up an income averaging trust so that the sales of those cattle would be taxed over an average period rather than in the year of the sale?

[Translation]

Mr. Ostiguy: Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that there is income stabilization insurance for the western provinces as well as for the rest of Canada, and that a great many western farmers benefited from the crop insurance plan to which the Department of Agriculture and the federal government contribute to a large extent. I think that the first thing that had to be done was to estimate the extent and value of drought related damages out west. As for the loss of livestock sales, I think that, if necessary, the agricultural stabilization board can look into the matter during this year.

• (1410)

[English]

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue this area of questioning with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Ostiguy). I am concerned about the need to provide some averaging of income in situations such as the one we are now in where a farmer may be required to unload two or three years of livestock inventory all in one year, and that does create some real tax problems with which the current act does not adequately deal. But I am more concerned with what I consider to be an even greater loss in that the farmers are selling these cattle into an extremely depressed market and in a great many cases into a market which is even more depressed on a regional basis.

I ask the minister, through the parliamentary secretary, whether his department is able to move rapidly to put the agricultural products board into a position to purchase feeder and breeding stock that is offered in the west for resale in other parts of Canada in an attempt to keep the price from collapsing totally, in the three prairie provinces in particular.

[Translation]

Mr. Ostiguy: Mr. Speaker, as I just said to the hon. member of the opposition, the Department of Agriculture's first concern was to establish the extent of drought related damages. Naturally—as I said a moment ago—the Department of Agriculture through the agricultural stabilization board, can always take action, but as we all know we must wait a full year because it is difficult to estimate immediately the value of losses in the sale of livestock. I think that the aim of the study initiated by senior officials of the Department of Agriculture, in co-operation with provincial departments, is to establish exactly how much damage the drought has caused out west.

[English]

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the parliamentary secretary that the losses incurred will occur in this year's market cycle, very specifically to a few producers in a short period of a year's total run of cattle. The legislation that he refers to, the stabilization act itself, will not provide any real assistance to those people who have been forced to sell at the extremely low price.

We started the year on feeder cattle at 90 cents. We are now in the 50 cents range, and it is only those people who have been forced to sell because of the drought who will be taking that 40 to 50 cents loss. A one or two cents payout at the end of the year will not do anything for them. The act does provide another option in that the agricultural products board can go in and start purchasing these distressed cattle in an attempt to hold up the market. That would provide more real stabilization to the people who are directly affected by this drought. I suggest that the minister and the department should be looking very carefully at immediately trying to put that program in place.

[Translation]

Mr. Ostiguy: Mr. Speaker, I do take note of the recommendations of the hon. member, and I will submit them to the minister and the Department of Agriculture.

[English]

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture is in reference to page 3 of the document which was read into Hansard by the Minister of Agriculture this morning. The minister said that "some money will also be directed to the development of water supplies where emergency conditions have developed". Could the parliamentary secretary indicate the amounts of money that have been allocated or set aside for this particular program? If he cannot, could he give some indication to the House as to how the government arrived at whatever figure he may present to the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Ostiguy: Mr. Speaker, once again, as the minister pointed out this morning, the program is worth some $7 million shared equally between the federal government and the provinces, and out of the $7 million of the Department of Agriculture, $1 million will go to help Indian reservations and another $1 million will be shared with ARDA.

I cannot say at this time whether funds were earmarked specifically for water supply, except that the $7 million I mentioned earlier is certainly going to help provide western producers affected by the drought with water, fodder or grain.

[English]

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, this is my last intervention concerning this matter. I assume that the $14 million in total arrived at was based on the amount of money that could be provided by the federal government. In other words, if it provided $7 million, the provincial governments would provide approximately $3.5 million each.

If the drought that we have talked about this morning and for the last few minutes continues, I certainly hope that the government will realize that that amount of money is going to fall short of doing anything to stop the wholesale slaughter of cattle in western Canada, which will ultimately reflect a substantially higher price in terms of beef to the consumer in the coming year. It is imperative that the government, if it has not already done so, makes sure that there is more money set aside—through Treasury Board, I assume—so that the problem can be attacked in a much more meaningful way. I view this program as just the tip of the iceberg. I certainly hope that the government has more money involved for back-up in future.

[Translation]

Mr. Ostiguy: Mr. Speaker, I would like once again to say to hon. members opposite that the program announced this morning by the Minister of Agriculture was prepared, as I said, in close co-operation with the officials of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba and Agriculture Canada. So I think it is quite normal that for the time being we should work with the paper produced by those officials of the two provinces and the federal government.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) have a question?

Mr. Crosbie: He has already had a question.

Order Paper Questions

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The period allotted for questions on statements by ministers has been extended to a considerable degree. I hear someone indicating that the hon. member for Prince Albert may have already had a question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He has had two questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case, I think we should move on to the next item of business.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM BERTHIER-MASKINONGÉ TO BERTHIER-MASKINONGÉ-LANAUDIÈRE

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier-Maskinongé) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-599, to change the name of the electoral district of Berthier-Maskinongé.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Yanakis: Mr. Speaker, as a result of the new division of the electoral map which came into effect for the election of May 22, 1979, part of the Lanaudière territory, which includes the municipalities of Lanoraie, Lavaltrie, Ste. Mélanie, Saint-Ambroise-de-Kildare, St. Marcelline de Kildare, Saint-Alphonse-de-Rodriguez, Ste. Béatrix and St. Côme, was linked up to the constituency of Berthier-Maskinongé. In order to identify better this area, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the House to allow me to change the name of the Berthier-Maskinongé riding, which will be known from now on as the Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière riding.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ARDA—LEEDS-GRENVILLE

Question No. 153—Mr. Cossitt:

What is a list of all grants made under the ARDA program since October 31, 1972 up to the time the program was phased out, to municipalities within the former constituency of Leeds and the present constituency of Leeds-Grenville and what was the total amount granted under the program?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The response for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: the information requested is not readily available by federal electoral district or by municipality, the program being cost-shared with and implemented by the province of Ontario. However, departmental records provide the following details on ARDA assistance in the counties of Leeds and Grenville during the period from April 1, 1972, to March 31, 1979.

1.	Capital Grants for Farm Development	Leeds	84,353
		Grenville	55,278
2.	Farm Enlargement Program	Leeds	1,114,255
		Grenville	553,150
3.	Industry Incentives
	Leeds—Hall Orchards Ltd.	11,650
	Burnbrae Farms Ltd.	100,000
	Forfar Dairy	18,000
	Plum Hollow Cheese	17,525
			147,175
	Grenville—Jamaica Mfg. Co.	72,072
	Kemptville Creameries	117,500
	Satellite Truss	30,000
			219,572
4.	Municipal Outlet Drainage Leeds and Grenville		325,000
5.	Provincial Parks—Murphy's Point Park—Leeds		418,974
			$2,917,757

(Figures are cost-shareable 50-50 between federal-provincial governments.)

JOB EXPERIENCE AND TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 223—Mr. Herbert:

By province, what has been the response to the Job Experience and Training (JET) program?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): The number of placements made under the program was 51,429 distributed by province as follows:

Newfoundland	1,494
Prince Edward Island	440
Nova Scotia	2,299
New Brunswick	2,030
Quebec	16,077
Ontario	16,913
Manitoba	1,527
Saskatchewan	1,656
Alberta-Northwest Territories	2,213
British Columbia-Yukon	6,780
Total	51,429

Agreements could be signed under the Job Experience and Training Program (JET) between September 15, 1978, and May 31, 1979. Employers were allowed, however, to hire new employees to replace employees who left after May 31, 1979, provided that there were at least 15 weeks of employment remaining on the agreement.

DVA CHARLOTTETOWN RENOVATION COSTS

Question No. 271—Mr. Herbert:

Is a building presently being renovated in Charlottetown, P.E.I., for occupancy by the Department of Veterans Affairs and, if so, which building and what is the estimated cost of the renovation work?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Yes, the Dominion Public Building is presently being renovated in Charlottetown, P.E.I. for interim occupancy by the Department of Veterans Affairs. The estimated cost of the renovation work is $150,000.

ARCHITECTURE—FEDERAL INTEREST

Question No. 321—Mr. Herbert:

1. Does the government recognize dance, opera, music, theatre, literature, the visual arts, film and photography as art forms of federal interest?

2. Does the government intend to make the crafts and architecture significant areas of federal concern?

3. Did the government of the province of Quebec make formal representations in the past three years with the objective of reducing or eliminating federal financial support for any of the art forms mentioned?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Secretary of State and the Department of the Environment as follows: In so far as the Secretary of State is concerned:

1. The government does recognize those cultural disciplines mentioned as art forms of federal interest, as evidenced by the many programs of the federal government and its agencies dedicated to those forms of artistic expression.

2. The government is currently reviewing its role in the cultural life of the nation and will be examining, among many other aspects of artistic and cultural activity, architecture and crafts.

3. The government of the province of Quebec has not made formal representations to reduce or eliminate federal financial support for any of the arts forms mentioned in part 1 of the question.

However, a general statement concerning the recovery and control of all funds designated for arts may be found in the Quebec government cultural policy paper published in 1978: La politique québécoise du développement culturel vol. I., page 37 and seq. state: "On the basis of these points a final decision can be made. We must draw up and promote a cultural policy which will be "québécois". We must reappropriate the means that enable a culture to endure and to grow. Many of these means are for the moment in other hands, and left to other political authorities, and their repatriation is indispensable if we are to wipe out what we have labelled here the provincialization of our culture, retreat into our original folk culture.

What do we expect from the Quebec of tomorrow? That it will assume complete responsibility, and consequently provide the means, for ensuring that every citizen of Quebec has "bread and books", the basic material and cultural minimum."

In so far as the Department of the Environment is concerned:

1 and 3. See Secretary of State's reply.

2. Yes, in regard to architecture, Parks Canada Policy states that: "structures which embody the distinguishing characteristics of an architectural and engineering type exceptionally valuable for the study of a style or method of construction of its period or which are examples of the work of a master builder, designer, engineer or architect", and which are identified by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada and approved by the Minister of the Environment as being places of national significance, will be commemorated. (*Catalogue No. R62-109/1979)

AGRICULTURAL JOB PLACEMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 582—Mr. Mitges:

1. Does the Department of Employment and Immigration operate an Agricultural job placement program and, if so, how long has it been in effect?

2. How many employment centres are responsible for administering the program and where is each employment centre located?

3. For each employment centre located in Ontario, how many (a) applications for farm employment were received (b) Canadians were placed in farm employment (c) non-Canadians were placed in farm employment, for the fiscal year ended March 31 (i) 1978 (ii) 1979?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes, the Canada Farm Labour Pool Program. It was established in 1974 and provides for the operation of employment service agencies which cater specifically to the needs of the agricultural sector, augmenting the services provided by Canada Employment Centres.

2. There are 63 Canada Farm Labour Pools across Canada, supplemented by seven branch offices and 30 seasonal sub-offices. They are located at the following points:

Main Offices	Branch Offices	Seasonal Sub-Offices
British Columbia
Abbotsford		Chilliwack
		Cloverdale
		Richmond
Armstrong
Duncan		Courtenay

Note: The employment applications (worker registrations) reported for 1977-78 include "revivals"; that is, the number of times the files of previously registered workers were reactivated during the course of that year. This reporting procedure was discontinued in April 1978.

(c) Canada Farm Labour Pools have no responsibility for recruiting foreign workers. This service is provided through the commission's employment and immigration offices.

Based on the number of employment authorizations issued (1102's), some 6,299 foreign workers were placed in agricultural employment in Ontario during 1978, and 6,760 in 1979.* These totals include renewals of employment authorizations as well as transfers of workers to subsequent employers. Therefore, the actual number of foreign workers admitted to Canada for farm jobs in Ontario was somewhat lower.

* Foreign worker placements in agriculture are maintained on a calendar year basis.

MARIJUANA STUDIES

Question No. 816—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1975, what amount was spent on studies related to marijuana by the Department of the Environment?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): None.

Question No. 822—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1975, what amount was spent on studies related to marijuana by the Department of Justice?

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): None.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

Question No. 847—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1978, did the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs ban or recommend against the use of (a) clothing because of its flammability (b) medicine containers because of danger to small children?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): (a) Yes. Actions taken since January 1, 1978, were based on item 4 of part I of the schedule to the Hazardous Products Act which has been in place since 1971 to ban the advertising, sale and importation of clothing that does not meet flammability standards. Removals from sale at departmental direction during the period in question included 11,700 cotton sweatshirts, 29 chenille items (shirts, shorts, sweaters and pants), and 12 metres of cotton chenille fabric.

(b) No. Medicine containers are subject to regulation under the Food and Drugs Act administered by Health and Welfare Canada. As such, they are excluded from the purview of product safety legislation administered by Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada.

Order Paper Questions

CFB BORDEN—FRANCHISES

Question No. 854—Mr. Stewart:

Do any companies or individuals hold concessions for franchises at CFB Borden and, if so (a) what are their names and what are the franchises (b) how much is the rent per year and how is it charged?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Yes. (a) and (b)

Name of Concessionaire	Type of Concession	Rental Charge Per Year
Dr. J. Walasek	Medical Office	$1,592.04
Mr. J.E. Bouchard	Alterations Shop	1,320.00
Mr. C. Spence	Barber Shop	2,956.56
Mr. E. Cairns	Dry Cleaning Depot	2,409.00
Mr. P. Symak	Barber Shop	1,683.00
Muriel's Taxi	Taxi Stand Service	992.56
Muriel's Taxi	Taxi Service in CFB Borden	600.00 plus $ 240 per taxi

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I should have spoken a few minutes ago when my colleague from Berthier-Maskinongé introduced his bill. As a point of information to members opposite, it is the intention of the government at four o'clock on June 27 to introduce and pass through all stages bills respecting changes to constituency names. We have given notice to that effect to the opposition whips. We would ask that those bills be submitted by members today or certainly Monday so that they can be printed and brought forward on June 27.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that that arrangement has indeed been made in the name of the whip. We have been alerted, and I thank the hon. member for again bringing that matter to our attention.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the understanding. I might modify it a bit and say that it will be the members who will bring forward the bills, not the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to the comments made by the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is it agreed that certain private members' bills shall be put to the House on the date mentioned, June 27, for handling of all stages?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is so ordered.

INTERNATIONAL INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING DOUBLE TAXATION

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance) moved that Bill S-2, to implement conventions between Canada and Spain, Canada and the Republic of Liberia, Canada and the Republic of Austria, Canada and Italy, Canada and the Republic of Korea, Canada and the Socialist Republic of Romaniá and Canada and the Republic of Indonesia and agreements between Canada and Malaysia, Canada and Jamaica and Canada and Barbados and a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, you indicated the title of Bill S-2, proposing that legislation to confirm agreements between Canada and certain countries be read a second time. The aim, as has also been indicated, is to avoid double taxation with respect to income tax of subjects of countries that are parties to the conventions.

The bill also aims at ensuring that future amendments to the conventions or agreements can be implemented by orders in council, subject to a resolution of Parliament. This procedure, which is defined in part II of the bill, is in accordance with the procedure established by Parliament for the nine conventions already approved since the tax reform.

The 11 conventions are similar as to form as well as substance, and they are similar to those which have been agreed to in the past. Two of the conventions, those with Jamaica and the United Kingdom, will replace conventions signed before the tax reform. When all these conventions have been ratified, the number of Canadian tax conventions in effect will increase from 24 to 33.

I would now like, Mr. Speaker, to review briefly the major elements of these tax conventions. Generally speaking, dividends may be source taxed at a maximum rate of 15 per cent; exceptions are Malaysia, which does not tax dividends paid to non-residents, and Jamaica, which maintains its right to tax at a rate of 22.5 per cent, as stipulated in the 1971 agreement, when the dividends are paid to a Canadian firm which controls the Jamaican enterprise.

A general rate of 15 per cent—20 per cent in some cases with Liberia—is provided for in the case of interest paid to a non-resident. Certain types of interest, such as the interest paid to the Export Development Corporation, are exempted in the source country.

With respect to royalties, the treaties provide for a general rate of 10 per cent, except that those with Korea, Malaysia, Indonesia and Romania provide for a rate of 15 per cent.

Other matters are dealt with in these treaties. For instance, there are capital gains, non-discrimination, the case of teachers, the problem of pensions, and double taxation relief. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on each of these matters.

Capital gains. The provisions dealing with capital gains in each one of the conventions follow the Canadian policy to ensure that the country where the gains were made keeps its taxation right in the case of sales of real estate, business assets or shares in real estate business.

Non-discrimination. Each convention prevents discrimination based on nationality. This will ensure that a country's nationals will be treated the same way as those from other countries under similar circumstances. However, this will not prevent a country from granting tax incentives—for example, small business deductions—on the sole basis of the taxpayer's residence.

The case of teachers. None of the conventions provides for special treatment in the case of foreign teachers in Canada. The two-year exemption provided for in the 1966 convention with Great Britain will therefore be removed.

Pensions. Canada has preserved its right to tax pensions paid to residents of the countries concerned in the bill. In the case of two countries, Italy and Great Britain, this taxation right at source will be exercised only when the amount of pensions exceeds $10,000 a year. However, those provisions do not affect the taxation right of the recipient's country of residence.

Relief from double taxation. In Canada, the method used for relief from double taxation is to grant a credit on Canadian taxes for taxes paid abroad, subject of course to the limitations set out in the domestic legislation. Furthermore, dividends received by a Canadian business from its foreign affiliate are tax exempt in Canada if they come from the exempt surplus of the affiliate.

The conventions with Malaysia, Spain, Liberia, Korea, Jamaica, Romania, Indonesia and Barbados also contain a special provision commonly called a fictitious tax credit. Under such a provision, tax incentives provided by the domestic law of those countries are recognized for Canadian tax purposes, which means that investors will be able to deduct from their Canadian taxes foreign taxes that have not been collected.

As a whole, the terms of each of those conventions provide fair solutions to the different problems of double taxation between Canada and those countries. Each of the countries concerned is awaiting impatiently the implementation of the bilateral tax convention, and consequently I am very happy to see that hon. members are agreed to give this bill rapid and diligent passage.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take more of the time of the House for this bill which is very well known as the previous government had already introduced it, and I am happy to see that hon. members are prepared to pass this bill on a priority basis.

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, we would like to congratulate the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Bussières) on his speech. He is far more informative than the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). As a matter of fact, the more the Minister of State (Finance) performs, the less there is for the Minister of Finance to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: As a matter of fact he is doing less. His main job is obfuscation; that is, to seem to be answering questions in the House while telling us nothing. So the Minister of State (Finance) is a refreshing change.

Now, the legislation before the House is not exactly earth-shaking but it is an indictment of our system, Mr. Speaker, that it has taken so long for it to go through the House. If my memory serves me right, some of these tax agreements were entered into by the minister something like three or four years ago directly with countries such as Spain, Liberia, Austria, Italy and so on. It is extremely embarrassing for the Canadian government when they have to go year after year and advise these countries, which presumably ratified these tax conventions long ago, that the Canadian Parliament still has not acted because the government has not so timed its business in the House of Commons that the legislation can be dealt with. So we certainly do not want to hold up this bill; we hope it will be dealt with expeditiously.

However, I do want to ask a few questions in that field on some legislation that may be coming up—further legislation dealing with tax conventions. The legislation before us this afternoon has to do with avoiding double taxation. I wish the government party had avoided double-tracking during the election campaign and that they would avoid double-crossing the Canadian electorate.

An hon. Member: Since the election.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, since the election. There is every indication that their fondness for doubles is going to continue—double-tracking, double-taxation and double-crossing.

An hon. Member: Double talk!

Mr. Crosbie: Before getting on with that, though, I would like to say a word as somebody who was minister for a few months in the Department of Finance. I think our tax officials, the people who work for the department, should have a kind word said about them. This is not normal. I do not know of any taxpayer across the country, from St. John's to Vancouver or Victoria, who has much in the way of kind words to say about the tax department or the tax policy department. But as the minister I found them to be very hard working. They deal in an area of great intricacy and difficulty in a technical sense and they do a good job.

It is alarming to see the length of time which has elapsed since Dr. Neufeld retired. He left the department in January or February, I believe, some time during the early winter. He was the assistant deputy minister for taxation and did an absolutely first-class job. But Dr. Neufeld has gone from the Department of Finance and is now vice-president and chief economist with the Bank of Montreal. As a matter of fact, a few days ago I saw reported in the paper an address he made in London which was of very high quality, as I would expect from Dr. Neufeld. But the department has not yet been able to find a replacement for Dr. Neufeld.

An article I noted in the Financial Post drew attention to the difficulties the department has been having. It drew attention to the need for attracting first-class tax lawyers to work for the tax policy branch of the department and pointed out the difficulty experienced in getting any lawyers who have expertise in taxation to come to the department because of the pay which is offered them. The government will have to consider whether to remove the tax policy people from the ordinary salary levels of people in other departments in order to attract the person of high calibre who is needed for the tax policy division of the Department of Finance. I wish my memory served me better but it must be three or four months at least since Dr. Neufeld left the department—it is almost six months now—and we have not had an assistant deputy minister of finance, taxation, in that time. Mr. Sid Rubinoff is the acting assistant deputy minister for that branch but he is also in charge of his own section of the department and can hardly do justice to both of these very heavy positions.

We also know, from what we have seen and heard, that the department is examining tax expenditures and areas in which they can raise tax revenues and whether tax expenditure loopholes should be closed or what should be done. It is very difficult to do this work if you do not have a full-time, top-notch tax expert at the head of the section. So while there are some fine people there, Mr. Speaker, they need strengthening, they need assistance.

Having been the minister, I can assure the House that the complexities of this area are immense. Everyone in the country is interested in this field; at least, anybody who makes money, anyone in the business world, anyone who pays income tax. So very many people in this country have an intense interest in this area. They are all looking for loopholes, for ways to avoid paying taxes or ways to reduce the burden of taxation on themselves and their companies. The government is going to be very badly off unless this crisis can be overcome. It is my suggestion that the government start thinking about paying twice as much, if necessary, to get a first-class man to take over Dr. Neufeld's old position in the department.

An hon. Member: Or woman.

Mr. Crosbie: Or woman. When I say man, I mean woman. When I say woman, I mean man. I am bisexual in that respect. And when I say "Mr. Speaker", I mean "Madam Speaker". When I say "Madam Speaker", I mean "Mr. Speaker". This is the way I am—absolutely sexless.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I do not discriminate between one and the other.

An hon. Member: But you know the difference.

Mr. Crosbie: As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says, when the government says no it means yes and when the government says yes it means no. And when the Minister of Finance says something, we know he does not mean anything. So there you are!

To get on with it, Mr. Speaker, I am trying today not to make an hour and thirty minute speech if I can possibly avoid it. So I just want to pass on. In my speech, that is—I do not want to pass on here. However, if I have to sit here many more years watching this crowd trying to act as the government, I may well want to pass on.

● (1440)

What I want to ask some questions about is this. When I was minister of finance I think we had a coup, which is not generally realized. Dr. Neufeld was the negotiator, and late in December he managed to conclude an agreement for a new tax convention with the United States of America. That was of great importance and great urgency because at the time we were trying to settle our oil pricing negotiations with Alberta, and one of the matters at issue was the proposed energy tax and whether it would be a tax on income or a tax on revenue. A tax on revenue is far preferable from the point of view of simplicity and less possibility of tax evasion and so on, so that was the route that I certainly favoured.

However, the province of Alberta and the producing provinces were arguing that it should be a tax on income. The difficulty with a tax on income was that there was a large loophole there in that under the present tax convention that is now operative the non-Canadian holders of resources, particularly in the field of oil and gas, could remove income from Canada and only have to pay the withholding tax. I think this is what the problem was, the 15 per cent withholding tax, that it would not be subject to the energy tax or other income tax rates.

This made it really impossible for us to proceed with an energy tax by way of a tax on income. I want the minister to tell us when he winds up whether the new tax convention has been agreed by both governments. I understand it has, so when is legislation is likely to come forward to the House implementing it, because it has far more importance. The nine we are dealing with today are of insignificant importance to Canada. They are minuscule in importance compared to the tax convention with the United States of America and the effects it can have on the government's revenue and on our whole system here in Canada. Have both governments agreed to the new tax convention which was agreed to by officials during last December?

There was in the papers some weeks ago a story that a new Canada-U.S. tax treaty had been negotiated. Recently it has been prepared for signature. One of the provisions of that agreement was that the 15 per cent withholding tax on dividends, interest and so on would, I think, be reduced to 10 per cent. But the loophole that enabled income from resources to be moved out only paying the withholding tax had been changed, and I am quoting now from the Ottawa Journal of May 24:

> The resource tax change ensures that any profit or income from real property, including natural resource royalties, will be fully taxed in Canada. In addition, gains arising from the sale of the property, including business assets of a permanent establishment, will be fully taxed in Canada. Under the old treaty, a maximum tax of 15 per cent applied to non-residents on resource royalties—

And so on.

> Finance officials say the extra revenue generated from the resource tax changes could be worth "hundreds of millions of dollars" in the future as the price of oil—and the government's share of tax—rises closer to world prices.

In return for getting the Americans to accept our proposal that that loophole be stopped, we had to give something, of course, to the Americans, and what was agreed was that there had to be quid pro quo and that was a reduction from the 15 per cent, I think it was, to the 10 per cent rate on the withholding tax with reference to certain earnings. The Americans also agreed then and continue to agree, as I understand it, that they are going to change the provisions of their tax law which make it difficult for U.S. businesses and U.S. citizens who go to business conventions to come to Canada.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, this has been a sore point for a number of years. Our own hotel and tourist industry complains that those changes to the law severely curtail U.S. convention business in Canada, but I understand, if my memory serves me right, last December the Americans agreed to amend that. That was the amendment they were going to make in return for our dropping the rate on the withholding tax to 10 per cent.

So, if the minister when he is closing could confirm that all this is so and can tell us when that very important new tax convention will come before us for ratification, it would be of extreme importance.

The Americans also agreed that they would allow the non-deductibility rule for Canadian advertising in U.S. border broadcasting stations to be dealt with in another manner and not hold up this new tax convention. I would like to know if that is still the situation, because that is the tax convention that it would be of great importance and great interest for this House to pass.

Before sitting down I might mention to the minister that there is other legislation coming up—the Bretton Woods legislation, for example. When that comes forward we would like to have information on some of the countries we have relations with, such as Jamaica, what the present state of our financial relationship with Jamaica is and just what we are doing to help Jamaica, what requests have been made or what action the government might be taking in view of the very difficult financial position of many Third World countries.

We are going to be interested in the whole area of north-south relationships, and when the minister introduces those bills, if he does, we would like to have more fullsome information than just what is happening. How does the government see the international economic and financial scene? What are the results?

The Minister of Finance has left this House. He has gone to places such as Hamburg to an IMF meeting. He has been to "gay Paree" for an OECD meeting. He has addressed the Franco-Canada Chamber of Commerce. He has done considerable travelling to international finance forums. We know this Minister of Finance is a somewhat shy man who does not like to say what he is doing or what he is going to do. He is used to being a manipulator, a House of Commons manipulator. He has not learned yet that he is the Minister of Finance, that he has to start telling the country what his policies are and that he can no longer just be the artful dodger. He has to learn that he can no longer just be the Artful Dodger. He has to learn that Finance. It wants a Minister of Finance who is going to outline his policy to deal with recession and inflation. We are having both at the same time in these present circumstances. The artful dodger is going to be tracked down. He is not going to be able to hide in his Lear all year—

Mr. Collenette: "Lair".

Mr. Crosbie: —even if he has a Lear jet. Even a Lear jet will not help him.

Mr. Collenette: Lair.

Mr. Crosbie: I cannot help if my accent is not what it would have been had I gone to Oxford and Cambridge or one of those places. I am just a young fellow from the country!

So that dodger is going to have to learn that he has to come to roost. The cock has to start crowing and not just obfuscating. I suggest when the Bretton Woods legislation comes in as the next piece of business that our cock start crowing and that he tell us what his policy is going to be in the international finance area. What happened in the IMF meetings in Hamburg? What happened at the OECD meetings in Paris where the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and I were last year?

Mr. Knowles: What happened?

Mr. Crosbie: Well, I cannot tell anything on a lady, you know that! But we would like to know what happened this year. What happened last year is old hat. We want to know what happened this year and what the government's position is going to be, not generalities. Is the government taking any new initiatives? The minister says he is concerned about the north-south dialogue. What specific steps is he going to take? We want this kind of information. What is the position on Jamaica? What is the position with reference to Turkey, another country that is in a difficult position internationally in finance? These are the kinds of things we are interested in, and if he does that, then we will be co-operative to pass the legislation through this House, as long as it gets its minimum of needed debate and we get some information.

So, Mr. Speaker, we support this legislation. We have one or two other speakers who have a contribution to make, and then we will be ready to pass on to the next item of business. I hope the minister will address himself to the U.S. convention when he speaks to close the debate.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) when he was saying something that I believe he really meant, we thank the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Bussières) for the statement he made on introducing this bill. If the Minister of State (Finance) is called upon to introduce and pilot through this House many more pieces of financial legislation, we may begin to get the notion that he is the minister of finance and that the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) is something else. However, we do welcome his statement and his readiness, when the bill goes to committee, to explain any futher details about these treaties which need to be explained.

For a moment I thought that the hon. member for St. John's West was going to treat this bill as though it were a general budgetary proposition opening up the whole field of taxation, but his forays into that wider area were somewhat limited, and I shall follow suit. In other words, I have one or two things of a general nature that I would like to say, and then I have a comment about what I regret is an omission in the bill which is now before us.

The general comment I wish to make is that, as the hon. member for St. John's West said, tax officials are not exactly the nation's greatest heroes. But if the Department of Finance could recruit more tax officials who understand, for example, the difference between tax credits and tax exemptions, they could become national heroes. We get into great flaps over the changes, up and down, in the exemption levels provided in the Income Tax Act, but we sometimes forget that moving those levels up or down results in a bonanza for those at the top and often times not very much for those at the lower end of the income scale.

We have established, in respect of political contributions, the very fair principle of a credit against the actual tax paid, with a ceiling, so that one cannot finance the Liberal party and get the whole thing back from the treasury. We had a debate a week ago this afternoon, I believe about the desirability of applying the same principle to contributions to recognized charities. We have contended that people with lower incomes would be better served by tax credits for their cost of living, for housing accommodation and so on. These are concepts which could be built into the income tax structure which would make it much fairer than it is at the present time.

I join the hon. member for St. John's West in wishing the government well in its recruiting of efficient and able people in the department, and I hope that the minister or ministers in charge of that department will give more consideration to the concept of tax credits as one of the best ways in which to achieve fairness in the taxation policy.

However, the bill before us does not deal with taxation policy broadly but rather with agreements between Canada and various other countries for the purpose of avoiding double taxation. In so far as we comprehend what these agreements do with the countries listed in the bill, we are prepared to support the legislation that is before us.

I want to express. however, on behalf of constituents of mine, both in my own riding of Winnipeg North Centre and across the country, a regret that agreements with some countries have been so long delayed. I refer in particular, because there are many in this country who are affected, to the agreement between Canada and West Germany. The hon. member for St. John's West said that some of these had been around the department for a long time. I know that I had correspondence with the hon. member for St. John's West when he was the minister of finance about the taxation agreement with West Germany. I also had correspondence with the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) when he was in that role. I had it also with the Hon. Donald Macdonald, and the Hon. John Turner. So it has been around for a long time. At one point, an agreement between Canada and West Germany did get into one of these omnibus bills such as the one we have today, but when we got to that bill, the government said it had to be amended and the agreement with West Germany had to be taken out. Every time there is this difficulty in reaching an agreement between two countries, each country seems to blame the other.

The people in Canada who are affected—and, by the way, the ones who are in touch with me are mostly pensioners—say that the word they get from their friends in West Germany is that Canada is dragging its heels. But when I received these letters, as I did last year, from the hon. member for St. John's West or from other ministers, their story always is that it is in Bonn that the delay is taking place. When you add to the fact of this delay respecting income tax agreements between this country and Germany the fact of confusion about the reciprocal pension arrangements which were made some years ago between Canada and West Germany, it does put many of these people who are concerned in a very difficult position. I have in my mind the names of some of the constituents who have written me about this over the years who in the meantime have died. Well, it is no problem for them any more, but it does seem a shame that people have to wait so long for problems such as this to be solved.

I hope that the minister will not indulge, as did the hon. member for St. John's West when he was minister of finance and as these other ministers have done, in the old game of blaming the other side. I realize that it takes two to reach agreement, but surely if we believe in the fairness that is involved in these taxation agreements between various countries, our people should make a serious effort to come to an understanding with the officials of the government of West Germany and achieve this agreement. I press for it on behalf of Canadians of German origin, Canadians who formerly lived in Germany, many of whom are disturbed over the length of time it is taking on two counts; one, to get the reciprocal pension agreement sorted out, and two, to get a taxation agreement between our two countries which will meet the situation.

There might be other countries. I know I have heard complaints about the situation between this country and Italy. But I see that Italy is included in the bill before us. There might be other countries that are not mentioned, so I do not single out West Germany except that that is a country concerning which I have had most correspondence.

These are my thoughts on this bill. They are in two parts. First, I would like to see the taxation policy improved, particularly along the lines of more use of the tax credit principle; and second, I would like to see the agreement between this country and Germany finally achieved and put into legislation. I hope that when the minister speaks to wind up this debate he will be able to give us some hopeful word in that connection.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in rising to exchange a few views with respect to Bill S-2, I would like once again to put on the record that I find it most unfortunate that legislation, such as the bill before us, is being put through the House to which in future, by order in council, various amendments can be made. Although these amendments can be negatived by a vote in the House, nevertheless they take substantially away from Canadians, through the House of Commons, the right to consider legislation rather than simply have ratification of or a negative vote on something that the government has already put in place.

I have raised that point before, but I would draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that once again this offensive clause is put into this bill. I think that in committee we should give serious thought to whether it is needed in fact. However, the main thrust of my comments concerning this legislation is that I think it is time we in Canada stopped being naive. I know that is common wisdom. My friend to the left has just said he has no particular objection to this legislation, that its whole tone is routine, but I think it is time we stopped being naive. In effect we are asked to somehow or other rubberstamp it and get on with it. We are living in a world where tax havens have become commonplace. These double taxation treaties really facilitate that type of operation. I suggest that we should first quit being so naive and realize that if this is the way the world will be ordered, it is time we started to play a few of the tax haven tricks ourselves. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) said that we will have 33 treaties. If other countries are asking us to enter into these tax treaties, I think the time has come for us to start taking a look at why they are so anxious for tax treaties. To what extent are they setting up tax havens within their own jurisdiction from which Canadians somehow or other do not get any benefit?

● (1500)

In support of what I am saying, I should like to touch upon the four tax haven countries with which we will enter into tax treaties under this bill. The first country I should like to refer to is the United Kingdom. It may come as a little surprise to members of the House that the United Kingdom is treated as a tax haven country. But one has just to go down the corridor into the library and ask for a booklet on the tax havens of the world in which there is a very interesting section on the United Kingdom and how its tax haven facilities work. I should like to quote a few passages from the booklet entitled: "Tax Havens of the World" dealing with the United Kingdom as a tax haven. Under the heading "Tax Treaty" which is exactly what we are now considering amending with respect to the United Kingdom, it reads:

The United Kingdom has more income tax treaties to avoid double taxation in force than any other country in the world, with more than 80 income tax conventions taking precedence over normal taxation procedures and rates.

One can see that the most advanced country in the world as far as double taxation is concerned and, to some degree, the tax haven concept, is the United Kingdom. That is one of the treaties before us that we are being asked to amend. The booklet to which I referred continues as follows:

—since the new corporation tax became effective April 1, 1973, withholding of income tax has been abolished and United Kingdom companies must deduct the 30 per cent ACT. New or revised income tax treaties since that date generally allow for the shareholder to receive a 15 per cent credit against the ACT. In those treaties not yet renegotiated, the shareholder may receive an adjustment against the ACT by arrangements with the tax authorities. In most treaties the articles treat royalties, interest and technical assistance fees as exempted from withholding tax or the ACT deduction.

The reason I have touched on that, first of all, is that I want to put into context the exact nature of the tax haven found in the United Kingdom. The booklet continues:

The United Kingdom is treated as a tax haven country primarily because of a quirk in the basic concept of the corporation tax.

It goes on to say:

—thousands of United Kingdom companies conduct their overseas activities through domestic subsidiaries that are controlled and managed from abroad. Accordingly, these companies are not resident for United Kingdom tax purposes. In order to satisfy these conditions of management and control outside the United Kingdom the Inland Revenue requires that all directors' and stockholders' meetings be held outside the United Kingdom and that all administration be directed from outside the United Kingdom, which may include the exigency that officials of the foreign parent company abstain from making visits to the "non-resident" United Kingdom company.

This goes on for pages. Also the following is pointed out:

A secondary reason why overseas companies have created foreign-based trading operations in the United Kingdom has been linked to Britain's advantageous remittance tax law which offers a special inducement for executives from abroad to work in England.

Again it is indicated:

Under the United Kingdom Inland Revenue Act, foreign citizens employed in the United Kingdom by non-resident foreign companies (not managed and controlled within the United Kingdom) may take advantage of the "remittance basis" of taxation practised in the United Kingdom and, therefore, minimize the taxes paid to the United Kingdom.

It continues:

The individual qualifying under the remittance basis will not be taxed on transfers of capital to the United Kingdom but will be so taxed where income arising outside the United Kingdom is remitted to the United Kingdom. In the past many foreigners, especially American executives working in England, would arrange financing in their home country, instructing their employers to deposit salaries to their accounts and paying interest charges on the loans, with capital transfers made to employees non-taxable in the United Kingdom.

The point I am trying to make is that we are not listed as a tax haven country. Yet, we are signing many treaties with tax haven countries that, for their own advantage, be it employment, industrial production, banking, finance, or whatever, are exploiting the world market at the present time through the simple facility of creating these tax shelters. Surely the government should be asked to come before committee to give us an overview on this. To what extent is the Canadian government aware of this activity? If they are, to what extent have they considered bringing some of these activities into existence in Canada so that we can have the double-edged advantage of these tax treaties? In principle it is beautiful to be running around the world saying we want to sign these treaties and co-operate because it facilitates trade, expansion and business, but if we are only getting part of the advantage by not structuring some tax incentives or tax havens in this country, I would suggest we are only getting half the apple as opposed to the whole. If members are interested in the full story about the United Kingdom, I invite them to take a look at the book.

Let me go to the other extreme. Another tax treaty into which we are about to enter is with the Republic of Liberia. It is just the reverse contrast. We would be one of the few countries in the world to enter into a tax treaty with Liberia. The same booklet to which I referred reads as follows:

Liberia has income tax treaties with West Germany and Sweden avoiding double taxation. A treaty with Canada has been signed but is not in effect, while a treaty to avoid double taxation on shipping and aircraft income is in force with New Zealand.

We will be the third country in the world that has been courageous enough to sign a double taxation treaty with Liberia. I say that because we must remember that Liberia offers foreign investors and traders numerous inducements to operate there as a tax haven for holding, trading, shipping or manufacturing companies. The booklet indicates:

A modern tax law designed to attract foreign capital is a hallmark of Liberia's tax structure. Under the law a Liberian corporation is not subject to taxes in Liberia if (1) more then 25 per cent of the corporate stock is owned by non-Liberians and (2) corporate income is derived from sources outside of Liberia.

Also the booklet indicates:

—the Liberian minister of finance is authorized to fix the rates on the tax payments withheld to non-residents but in no case may they exceed 15 per cent—

In short, it is a perfectly orchestrated country and administration for the avoidance of taxation through the tax shelter route. The net effect of this is perhaps best spelled out in another book called "The Robert Kinsman Guide to Tax Havens" and is, if you like, the bottom line with respect to Liberia. On page 132 of that book he states:

● (1510)

—the importance of this African tax haven in the shipping world. Because it encourages the use of its flag as a flag of convenience, it has the world's largest merchant shipping fleet. Liberia is the only tax haven in Africa and has a few other significant tax features of potential interest: it levies no tax on the foreign source income of non-resident corporations more than 50 per cent foreign owned, but does tax their domestic income. The country's corporation law is patterned after that of Delaware. Assistance in establishing a company may be had through a Liberian trust company office in New York. Despite its distance from the United States (almost nine hours by jet from New York), it uses the U.S. dollar as its currency and English as its official language. The nation has no exchange controls and has been an independent republic since 1847.

Liberian corporations can be formed quickly, sometimes within 48 hours, by cable from the United States, and have several other handy features. Annual meetings can be held anywhere... but there are no government reporting requirements and bearer shares may be issued. The articles of incorporation need not specify corporate purposes, and corporations may become directors as of 1977. There is no residence requirement for officers, directors, or stockholders, although each corporation must have a resident business agent in the country, a task usually performed by a local trust company.

Let us not kid around, Mr. Speaker. What we are proposing is to sign a double taxation treaty with Liberia, a country that has made a specialty of not only granting tax haven status to those who want it, but making it so attractive for the registration of fleets that the largest merchant fleet in the world is registered through Liberia.

I ask the question again: Are we sure that is the type of country with which we want to enter into a double taxation treaty?

An hon. Member: Yes it is.

Mr. Stevens: The second question I must ask is where is the benefit to us? Where is the other side of the treaty that we can point to as showing that not only are we getting international agreements signed, but showing the advantages to Canadians of some type of attractive tax treatment for those who wish to do business here?

Mr. Evans: Did you ask those questions when the treaty was before your cabinet last year?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, we have another voice in the wilderness over there. The member has asked a very pertinent question. He wants to know if I asked the questions I am now asking of our own cabinet. I am very pleased to tell the hon. member that I did. If he wishes to go through his governmental files he will find discussion papers on what is now before us. I would urge him to bring those discussion papers along when this bill goes to committee so that we can have a free discussion and get a lot of that information on the record.

Mr. Evans: I cannot do that.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the voice in the wilderness now says he cannot do that—he cannot bring these discussion papers to committee.

There are two other countries I should like to touch on very briefly that are included as possible tax treaty countries. Barbados and Malaysia are both tax havens under the definition of that status noted in the "Tax Havens of the World" booklet I referred to. Let me deal first of all with Barbados. This is an interesting study. My hon. friend who spoke once from the wilderness and then went mute, knows that in the Bank Act which is before the finance committee, there is a proposal to allow foreign banks into Canada.

It is interesting to see what Barbados, as a tax haven, did to facilitate bank activity there. The main reason I raise this question during the discussion of Bill S-2 is to make sure we have the proper perspective. These are not innocent little treaties; they are very significant treaties. Canada is becoming one of the most active countries in the world in signing these treaties and I think we must get the other side of the story before we rush into some of them, perhaps unwittingly.

Having regard to Barbados, the booklet "Tax Havens of the World", dealing with the act that concerns corporations states:

—under the amended act of 1977, only a "resident" international business company may qualify for income tax exemption. A "resident company" is a company incorporated under the laws of Barbados or having its business managed and controlled in Barbados.

I want to discuss what they have done with respect to banks, Mr. Speaker. On the next page the booklet states:

As an integral part of its hopes to attract foreign companies through tax advantages, the government of Barbados also became a financial tax haven in 1979 when new banking and trust institution legislation was implemented. The new offshore banking laws permit foreign banks incorporated in Barbados to carry on business outside of Barbados with considerable flexibility and do not require a minimum or maximum capital investment. However, a relatively small tax of only from 1 to 2½ per cent as determined by the Commissioner of Inland Revenue is levied on the earnings of Barbados banks derived from offshore activities.

Later on the same page the article goes on to say:

Patterned after the unusually successful Singapore offshore banking law, Barbados permits nonresidents to operate banks in Barbados that are not subject to the normal 45 per cent tax applied on business profits and associations for dividends, interest, servicing and other income earned outside of the island. The traditional bank secrecy rules of the other leading financial tax havens of the world are practised. To qualify for an offshore banking institution in Barbados, foreign investors are not allowed to transact business with Barbados residents, receive deposits from residents or carry on lending arrangements which create interest and other income derived from Barbados residents.

Is it not rather strange that we have on our left a rump group which from time to time likes to ask how it is that our banks are not paying higher income taxes, and yet to this moment in this debate they have not said anything about this bill that would obviously facilitate the avoidance of tax by one or more Canadian corporations? We hear nothing from them to indicate they are interested in what Bill S-2 is all about.

I invite those interested in the ramifications of these tax haven countries, with whom we are considering entering into certain treaties, to read the book "Tax Havens of the World". Everything is set out very well in it. It deals with the type of incentives Barbados, for example, offer to win business. On page 6 of the section on Barbados, it states:

Like the other present and former British overseas territories situated in the Caribbean area, Barbados takes pride in offering a number of Pioneer Industries and Industrial Incentives Acts in addition to the International Business Companies (Amendment) Act, 1977. One of the most important of these incentive laws is the Pioneer Industries Act of 1958 which provides manufacturers of approved products with exemption from taxes for a specified term of from seven to ten years under an option plan involving two choices.

That is another example of a country that is openly trying to create tax incentives in order to get people to do business there and presumably to create employment and general prosperity. What is our side of the equation? What do we have that is comparable? To the best of my knowledge, in the context in which I am now speaking, we have nothing. That is the thrust of my remarks. Let us not take Bill S-2 too lightly. This involves treaties with various countries, some of which have serious ramifications for us. Unfortunately there is a ramification which is being overlooked. We are one of the few countries of the world which does not have comparable tax schemes or incentives to attract bankers, financial institutions and other industries to do business in this country. Yet, we are contracting through these treaties with various countries which do this very thing, countries such as the United Kingdom, which is perhaps the greatest tax haven country in the world.

I mentioned that I wanted to touch on Malaysia. Under the Income Tax Act of 1974, Malaysia provided that:

—income derived outside Malaysia by a resident company or an individual is exempt from taxation unless it is received in Malaysia. Foreign income of non-residents received in Malaysia also is exempt of tax. A single exception to the general rule is that resident banks are taxable on income no matter where it is derived.

Obviously, in that case the bank will be incorporated in Barbados and will presumably do business in Malaysia, if it is starting from scratch. The article to which I am referring points out that Malaysia has treaties with countries such as Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, India, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Singapore, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. Treaties have also been signed by Austria, Belgium and West Germany, but they are not yet in force. Once again, we are one of the leading countries in signing these treaties, such as in the case of Malaysia, yet there is very little evidence that Canada has tried to create a situation within the country that will reap benefits for the country, such as those being reaped by many of those countries which have these tax avoidance schemes.

I hope the Secretary of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) will have some comments to make on this bill before it goes to committee, and that some of the observations which I have made will be dealt with in committee where we can consider the matter further.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in this debate is to reinforce a point referred to by my colleague, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). It is a matter about which I have spoken on previous tax treaty ratification legislation which deals with a reference to section 36 of the bill. There is a difficulty with regard to the procedure which was devised, after a great deal of negotiation, when the Hon. John Turner was the minister of justice, about orders in council being made and being subject to revision in this House. How is this done? It says:

An order referred to in subsection (1) shall come into force on the thirtieth sitting day of Parliament after it has been laid before Parliament pursuant to that subsection unless before the twentieth sitting day of Parliament after the order has been laid before Parliament a motion for the consideration of either House, to the effect that the order be revoked,—

In other words, it is a negative resolution. It must spell out the procedure because the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), when he was president of the privy council, was either too indolent or did not give a damm about what was going on in Parliament. I was chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, and I begged him to give us the reference. Subsequently, his predecessor as the minister of finance, the former member for Eglinton, was chairman of the procedure committee while I was vice-chairman. Both of us, in our private ways, appealed to the hon. gentleman to give us the reference so that we could dress up in our rules precisely what is provided for under section 36.

It is the most ludicrous thing that one can contemplate, and is an indication of the sloppy way in which this House must sometimes proceed because the government is replete with inertia. A complaint was raised the other day because the committee on procedure has not even met, although there is ample work for it, particularly with regard to putting this reference in place.

I am sure there are enough of us in the House who understand what is involved here that we could come to an agreement. After all, the legislation brought in while John Turner was the minister of justice was by agreement, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I am sure will remember. The reference was put in place after it had been discussed privately and publicly, and agreed to. I am sure the temper of the House would be the same and that we could change our rules of procedure to remove from each one of these bills this long rigmarole that takes place in this House when a negative motion is brought before it, or when a particular order in council shall be subject to an affirmative or a negative motion. These matters are provided for in the statutes.

The points mentioned by my colleague with regard to the features of these tax conventions have been repeated before. Although I have not examined the statutes in detail, he assures me that some of the problems which we encountered in previous legislation and had corrected in committee, are, for some reason, reappearing. I do not know whether it is bureaucratic insistence that they shall be right at all times and that the House of Commons committees must be deemed to be wrong at all times, but there is a reintroduction of the same errors time after time, and this House will not accept it.

The finance committee though does not have much on its plate at the present time, and there is enough here to keep it busy until Christmas. If this matter is added to the agenda it will be dealt with. I would say to the Minister of State, Finance (Mr. Bussières), who is acting on behalf of the Minister of Finance, I hope he takes note of what we have said with regard to convincing the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to obtain an order of reference. I am sure there would be consent with very little delay so that it could go to the committee on procedure where we can amend the rules and eliminate all this consideration in the House and in committee of what are really rules of procedure.

I also hope the government will take note of the views of these committees and of the people who hold these views so that they will prevail, rather than the views of those in the bureaucracy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see that the minister is rising. I should inform him that if he speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if, in all fairness and out of courtesy, the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) could be given a few moments to express his views. He kept making comments during my speech, and I thought he should have a few minutes here this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the Minister of State, Finance (Mr. Bussières). His statement at this point will close the debate on second reading.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague who did not accept the invitation of the member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), but I too, just like the hon. member opposite, would have been very pleased to hear my colleague who is a very able man on the subject of tax conventions and I am aware of his precise interest in this bill and I also know his wish that this bill be passed rapidly. If he did not accept the invitation from the member for York-Peel it simply was to allow me to speak for a few more minutes and draw to a conclusion. I thank him for that. I am convinced that the member for York-Peel will have an opportunity in committee to put to the test the knowledge of my colleague.

First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention that I fully agree with the member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who opened the debate in the name of the opposition regarding the replacement of the assistant deputy minister of the taxation division of the Department of Finance. It is a serious concern and I join him in congratulating and encouraging the public servants of this division for the excellent work they perform. As for the tax treaty or convention between Canada and the United States, the officials of the Canadian Department of Finance and the American treasury have negotiated a new tax agreement between the two countries, as hon. members will know. The convention has not yet been ratified by both governments. Once it has been approved and signed, we shall have the opportunity to discuss it as we are now discussing the agreements dealt with in this bill.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned the negotiations concerning the agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany. I would like to tell him that last week officials from both countries met to see if progress could be made and to move towards a possible agreement on a convention between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany. I quite agree with him that the discussions should be speeded up and that both sides should stop passing the buck to each other and say in Canada that it is the fault of Bonn, and to say in Bonn that it is the fault of Ottawa. Instead, the process should be accelerated and there should be some good will shown to come to an agreement as soon as possible, especially as concerns the problem of pension reciprocity and the more general convention on taxes.

The hon. member for York-Peel has raised several interesting points. More particularly, he spoke at length about the countries which offer a tax haven. I wonder why the hon. member is condemning, for instance, the United Kingdom for its local taxation system and the way in which it sees fit to treat its own residents for taxation purposes. For our part, we consider that if a treaty with the United Kingdom favours Canadian entrepreneurs and investors, this is all to the advantage of Canadians, and we do not want to make a judgement on the internal taxation system of other countries.

Our major concern in these agreements and tax conventions is to offer Canadian businessmen and entrepreneurs, those who offer services and goods, the opportunity to benefit from more interesting competition, interests and incomes when they do business with foreign countries. Mr. Speaker, everyone in this House knows that Canada would benefit from an increase in the field of services. We have highly qualified firms of all types which can easily compete in other countries, and it is for those people, for those businessmen who invest in these countries or go there to offer services that such taxation agreements exist between countries. Some have also raised the issue that the amendments to these agreements could be implemented by order in council. But that is not only by order in council. It is by order in council but subject to a resolution of Parliament and I would like to remind hon. members that under part XII, clauses 35 and 36 of the bill indicate the whole procedure to be followed before an order in council is passed. So there is a procedure under which Parliament will be able to question the amendment to the agreement. Those were the few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make. I am convinced we will have an extremely interesting discussion in committee on this bill.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, before the minister sits down, unless he has said it and I missed it, would he comment on the situation between this country and West Germany in the matter of a double taxation agreement?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, when I replied to the concern of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on those negotiations with the Federal Republic of Germany—unfortunately I believe he had left for a few moments, which happens very rarely—I indicated that last week officials of the two countries had met and I fully agree with the hon. member that Bonn should stop saying it is the fault of Ottawa and Ottawa should stop saying it is the fault of Bonn, but we should intensify our negotiations and reach an agreement as soon as possible on the question of the pensions and the tax convention. I agree entirely with him, and as I said, last week officials met and I believe we must put the pressure on to reach an agreement as soon as possible.

Mr. Knowles: Thank you.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE AMOUNT OF SPECIAL DRAWING RIGHTS

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance) moved that Bill C-5, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall be as brief as I was earlier. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) kindly invited me to seize this opportunity to expand on our major international positions, considering the interest he took and still takes, I am sure, in this bill he introduced when he was minister of finance and considering the interest we all have in this House, but I shall restrict myself and be as brief as possible.

The bill before us today, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, provides for the acceptance of an increase in Canada's quota in the International Monetary Fund from $1,357 million Special Drawing Rights to $2,035 million SDRs. In terms of Canadian dollars this means an increase of approximately $1 billion to $3 billion.

As hon. members will realize, this will be a part of our foreign exchange transactions and will have only a minimal impact on our Canadian dollar requirements. In fact, the Canadian dollar cash payment associated with this increase will amount to one-quarter of 1 per cent of the total, or about $2.5 million. Twenty-five per cent of the increase will be paid in Special Drawing Rights held by the exchange fund. The remainder, about $748 million, will be paid in non-bearing demand notes.

The drop in the exchange fund's holdings of SDRs will be fully offset by an increase in what is called our "reserve position" in the IMF. This represents the amount that we are entitled to draw on demand from the IMF for balance of payments purposes. This reserve position is part of our official international reserves. As a result, their composition will change—with SDRs falling and our IMF reserve position rising by equal amounts—but their total will not.

The increase in the Canadian subscription is part of the 50 per cent increase in IMF quotas agreed to in December of 1978 by the fund's board of governors. If all members agree to their proposed quotas this will raise total subscriptions from SDR $39 billion to SDR $59 billion. This over-all increase is designed to ensure a better balance between the size of the fund's resources and the needs of members for balance of payments financing over the next five years.

The International Monetary Fund is the central institution of the international monetary system and, as such, its continued ability to operate effectively is crucial to the smooth operation of that system. Quotas are an important feature of the IMF as they serve four purposes in its operations. First, the quotas which members subscribe are the major source of the funds which the IMF lends to countries in balance of payments difficulties in order to allow them to correct their imbalances without taking protectionist or other restrictive and disruptive measures.

Second, quotas serve to limit the amounts which members can borrow under the various facilities of the IMF. Third, quotas determine the size of individual allocations of Special Drawing Rights when SDRs are created. Finally, quotas determine the voting strength of members and the composition of the executive board.

Since the absolute size of payments imbalances tends to increase as international trade expands, the amount of funds subscribed to the IMF must be increased periodically to meet the needs for international liquidity. The current increase in fund quotas comes at a time when there exists a possibility of large payments imbalances over the next few years. Resources made available through increases in quotas will place the fund in a good position to meet the needs of members during this period.

The increase in Canada's quota will preserve our share in total IMF quotas. This will allow us to maintain a position in the fund which reflects the relative importance of Canada in the global economy. A higher quota will also increase our eligibility for future allocations of Special Drawing Rights and add to the resources available to Canada in the event of balance of payments need.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the unanimous approval given to the proposed general increase in quotas by the board of governors, the need for a strengthening of the financial position of the International Monetary Fund and the importance for Canada to continue playing a prominent role in the IMF, it is in Canada's interest to accept the proposed increase in its quota. This bill authorizes the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to do that.

Before concluding, I would like to remind hon. members that this bill is similar to the one which was introduced in the Thirty-first Parliament by the previous government by the then minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West. By reintroducing this bill at this time, the government wishes to emphasize the importance for Canada to accept the proposed increase in its subscription to the IMF. Hon. members were very co-operative with regard to the tax agreements bill that was introduced before this one, and I am glad they recognize this bill is urgent and agree to give it speedy passage.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, this, as the Minister said, is an important piece of legislation. We support the legislation and the concept that Canada should increase its contribution to the International Monetary Fund, particularly if Canada is to have the same vote and take the same position in the future that it has taken in the past. However, I regret very much that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) does not feel this is an important enough area for him to make a contribution in introducing this bill.

The whole structure of the international financial system is comprised of the Bretton Woods agreement; the International Monetary Fund, and the World Bank. That system faces a horrendous crisis this year; it is facing it now.

With regard to the whole subject of north-south dialogue my colleague for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) will be addressing himself to the whole question of what is to be done to help the underdeveloped world, the Third World countries. They are going to be absolutely bludgeoned with the rapid increase in oil prices over the past year.

How is this going to take place? How are they going to be helped? This is an area of tremendous importance. The Minister of Finance has been in office since March 3 and has represented this country at several international meetings in this area. I mentioned the IMF meeting in Hamburg at which Canada was supposed to have a fairly important role. He also attended the OECD meeting in Paris recently.

The minister made speeches at those gatherings, but he has not told this House a word about his trips. He has not described for us the difficulties he found there, what are the matters that require attention and what is the attitude of the leading financial powers in the world in facing them. He has not told this House anything about the serious economic and financial problems. As we all know, that is our complaint about the Minister of Finance. He has not told Canadians anything in respect of what he is going to do about the financial problems facing Canada. When this opportunity arises through the introduction of the legislation before us, which has to do with the IMF and the whole international financial structure and Canada's place in it, the Minister of Finance is not even in the House of Commons. He has an associate minister of finance here. The associate minister of finance was not over in Hamburg to attend the IMF meeting. The associate minister of finance was not in Paris at the OECD meeting. The associate minister of finance does the legislative work that the Minister of Finance does not want to be bothered with. The minister does the ethereal work; the minister does the travelling work—the minister does I don't know what. We cannot find out what he does because he is not expressing to this House anything he does. We don't know if he has a policy, and we don't know if he doesn't have a policy. We don't know if his main thrust is the battle against inflation or the battle against recession, or the battle against unemployment.

Here is what the minister himself said on April 21 to this House. I am quoting, now, from his bootleg budget, his mini-mouse abomination at page seven:

The international environment which we are facing is a very troubled one indeed.

That is what the Minister of Finance had to say on April 21. He told us the international environment was very troubled. Yet here is his opportunity to be in this House today, Mr. Speaker, to tell us about this troubled international environment, to tell us what he has discovered about it in his two recent trips. What did he discover on these trips to Hamburg and Paris about the troubled environment and what the world can do about it? He is not here. He is like the Scarlet Pimpernel; he pitches here, he pitches there, he pitches, we know not where—however it goes. He is the new Scarlet Pimpernel. Then he goes and makes an intervention statement at the ministerial meeting of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. This statement was released in Ottawa on June 4. What does he say in that? I quote from page one:

The international environment we are facing is a very troubled one indeed.

He didn't open up with any new spirit. He didn't say anything he hadn't said before. He said exactly the same thing on April 21. He told the people at the OECD meeting:

The international environment which we are facing is a very troubled one indeed.

Where is this master of analysis who has concluded that the international environment is a very troubled one indeed? Where is he? When is he going to tell the House what the trouble is, how extensive is that trouble, what his suggestions were to the IMF and OECD as to how the troubled environment should be dealt with? What is his suggestion for softening the north-south crisis? What is his suggestion for dealing with $100 billion that is being generated in the oil-producing countries this year, how it will be recirculated and directed to the countries which will need to borrow to pay the oil import costs the poor devils are going to face? We are badly enough off in this country. This is a wealthy country and we should be self-sufficient in energy. But we are not, because of the hon. gentlemen opposite who have never had an energy policy. When one was presented to Canada they assassinated those who attempted to do the difficult job, putting them out of office under false pretences. Now they are over there struggling today. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) was downstairs after the twelve o'clock question period trying to announce that he was making a tremendous offer to Alberta, that he was going to offer Alberta a $2-a-barrel increase from April 1 until the end of September. That was because he hasn't got a policy. He is offering them what he calls "the PC policy" trying to pretend it was the PC government's policy. What kind of a government is that? They do not even announce it in this House, Mr. Speaker. They strut down to the basement and stammer out their feeble excuses for their lack of action. That's the dynamo of a minister who has been here since March 3. He was going to solve the oil pricing question, the energy situation, and here he is on June 13 with no agreement. He has made this panic offer to Alberta and pretends it is the same offer we made back last December. It is not the same, nothing like it. They are using it as an excuse for their lack of accomplishment.

But to return to the international environment. The minister should be here to tell us what he learned at these meetings, but he is not.

We are not going to be pushed around by the Minister of Finance, nor by the government. We are going to continue to point these things out. The people of Canada are not going to be pushed around by them. As I said earlier this afternoon, the "Artful Dodger" is not what we need in Canada. We do not need a minister of finance who is an "Artful Dodger", that is, a manoeuverer who can get around corners, who can appear to be walking forward when he is really going backward at a gallop. That is not the kind of minister we want. We want a minister of finance who tells the people of this country what he foresees and what he plans to do to avoid the bad things he foresees, and what he plans to carry out to encourage the good things he foresees. We do not need a master of double-talk; not a master of nothingness. I said earlier today, he is the only man in the House who can be Blynken, Wynken and Nod, all three at the same time. He is the old three-in-one. He doesn't answer questions from the NDP, he doesn't answer questions from the Conservative party, I don't know what he does in the Liberal caucus. Perhaps they don't bother to ask him questions, but the time of the "Artful Dodger" might have been all right in the nineteenth century when events were pretty slow and Dickens was writing, but the "Artful Dodger" doesn't suit the people of Canada today in our economic position with unemployment increasing rapidly and inflation rising quickly. With these serious problems facing Canada the people don't appreciate the "Artful Dodger". The IMF doesn't appreciate the "Artful Dodger"; the OECD doesn't appreciate the "Artful Dodger". The "Artful Dodger" has to stop dodging and start working, start announcing and pronouncing what the government's approach is. There is not a person in this country who can figure out what the government intends to do in the economic sense. We cannot afford to wait for weeks after an oil pricing agreement for a budget to come down. If that minister is so shy and modest he does not want to bring a budget down before there is an oil pricing agreement, let us have a clear statement by the government about what its thrust is to be in the next three or four years. Let it tell us what the framework is within which the working people, the businessmen, the manufacturers and the industrialists of Canada will have to operate. What is its position going to be on the international front? What the minister said at the OECD meetings was clear. I quote him again:

> Inflation remains the number one problem facing most countries around this table.

We know that. Then he said:

> The experience of the 1970s has brought home the point that we are unlikely to achieve a sustained improvement in employment unless we get inflation under better control.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the financial analysts, the investors and the brokers read this kind of stuff. They try to get from it some idea of what the government is going to do. What are they to make from the minister's statement? Does it mean that the government's policy will be: Look, until we beat inflation, get it under better control, we can do nothing about increasing unemployment and therefore the thrust for the next year or two will be against inflation and we will do what the governor of the Bank of Canada has recommended to the Senate committee—we are going to reduce further aggregate demand, as the governor of the Bank of Canada said we should be doing. Is the fiscal policy of the government going to correlate with the monetary policy of the governer of the bank and the government's monetary policy? Is that what is to happen, or is it something else? Surely to God the people of this country have a right to be told by the government what approach is to be taken.

We can go on examining the minister's short statement to the OECD. He points out on page two what the problem is. He was referring to the oil price increases. It says:

> Those surpluses which are now running at a record rate of over $100 trillion are contributing to the deterioration of the economic situation of virtually all oil importing countries internally as well as externally. They also threaten to create major difficulties in international financial markets.

Why is the minister not here to tell us what he proposes to do about those surpluses and how the world is going to get around this? And as for the IMF, how we are to avoid major difficulties in the international markets; what is Canada going to do to stop contributing to this situation? Here is Canada, a relatively wealthy nation, self-sufficient, overall, in energy—not now self-sufficient in oil—and we have a government that hasn't the gumption or the backbone to seize the nettle, and agree it was an unscrupulous lust for power last fall and last January and February which made them lie and deceive the Canadian people into believing they had some solution other than the one we tried to approach in our budget. They should frankly admit that they codded the Canadian people, that they fooled the Canadian people, that they were ruthless in their lust for power and that now they have to do a 360-degree circle, that they have to increase oil prices and take other steps to cut down the huge imports. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) admitted the other day that the oil import subsidy scheme is going to cost this year, before the recent oil price increases, about $4 billion. Four billion dollars that the taxpayers are going to pay, not the consumers of the product that are eating this up and causing this deficit; the taxpayers, many of whom do not drive cars and are paying $4 billion this year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: I am only getting started—to warm up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 4 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to refer to a comment I made earlier this afternoon when your colleague was in the chair. I gave what I considered to be notice of the intention of the government on June 27 at four o'clock to seek unanimous consent to proceed with second reading and all stages of bills to amend the names of constituencies. Your colleague in the chair at the time anticipated my comments somewhat and proceeded to make a House order to that effect or sought consent to make a House order to that effect. I have since been advised that is not the customary way to proceed on this routine matter, and so I ask hon. members to allow that order to be withdrawn—it was procedurally incorrect—and just take my notice that on June 27 at 4 p.m. I shall rise in my place and seek unanimous consent to dispense with all these bills, following which we will move into the business allotted for that day, June 27, motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to proceed as the parliamentary secretary has suggested?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable. There was a discussion about the procedure and how we should handle it. The parliamentary secretary has made the proposal to the Chair in accordance with that discussion.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that was the way I understood it, namely, that it was an understanding and did not need to be made into a hard and fast House order.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a further point of order. Yesterday the parties held discussions on the question of the sitting of the House on Friday, July 4, which is a day on which the Liberal party will be meeting in convention in Winnipeg. As is the custom in the House, when the parties do have their conventions and these conventions are held on sitting days, the House does not sit. Therefore, in accordance with the agreement yesterday, and I would like to thank the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for their co-operation in this matter, I have given notice to the Chair, and I move the following motion:

That any division required on July 3, 1980 after five o'clock p.m. shall be deferred until 9.45 o'clock p.m. on July 7, 1980; and that, when the House adjourns on July 3, 1980, it shall stand adjourned until July 7, 1980.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there were those discussions, and we understand the position of the party opposite. We were happy to see that the party is meeting in convention, and we hope that out of that convention will come some direction to what appears to us, at least at this point, to be a directionless government.

We think the party needs to get together, and therefore in the interests of the country, because the party opposite happens to form the government, at least for the time being, we are very pleased to give our consent.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again I can confirm that there have been these discussions and that we have agreed to the terms of this motion. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) expressed some pleasure that the Liberal party would be holding a national convention. It is interesting that it plans to hold it in my city of Winnipeg. It is good that lots of notice is being given about this because, if that many Liberals turn up in the city of Winnipeg, it is going to be a very odd experience for western Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

NATIONAL REFERENDUM ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of holding a national referendum on the issue of capital punishment and, following such referendum, amend the appropriate sections of the Criminal Code to conform with the majority views of the people of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to address fellow members of Parliament today on the need for a public referendum on a subject which has been very controversial over the years. I propose a national referendum on capital punishment. I earnestly request those who have entrenched positions on this matter to give up the security of those positions so that the people may decide on a matter on which the wishes of the majority and those of its elected representatives differ.

I firmly believe that capital punishment should be retained for those who, with malice aforethought, take the lives of fellow human beings. Although there cannot be a one-issue general election, a particular question can be appropriate as the subject of a referendum.

Capital punishment is such an issue. Its importance is not denied, and yet it has been submerged during the two most recent federal election campaigns under other major and dominating issues. A referendum would cut across party lines in a way not possible in an election. In a democracy it is essential that the will of the people be followed in this life and death matter. It appears, however, that without a referendum on the subject there will not be a clear expression of the public will and no action upon it.

It has been evident from reliable public opinion polls that the majority of Canadians are and have been in favour of capital punishment. In spite of this fact it has been abolished.

In 1973 the polls showed that approximately 60 per cent of Canadians supported the death penalty. However, that same year 53 per cent of members of Parliament renewed the partial and temporary abolition bill. Members of Parliament seem to be more abolitionist than the people. In 1975 a Gallup poll indicated that nearly seven out of every ten Canadians favoured the death penalty. However, in 1976, by a free vote in Parliament, it was abolished.

In voting according to their conscience members did not represent the will of the people. The results of a Gallup poll released in November of 1979 showed that about 70 per cent of Canadians still were in favour of capital punishment for murder. Clearly, then, the will of the people has been and continues to be thwarted.

In the year 1972 a poll taken by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion showed that almost two-thirds of Canadians felt that, where the views of a member of Parliament on an important issue are different from those of his constituents, he should vote in accordance with their views rather than his own. However, in a question such as this involving strong religious, emotional and moral aspects it is very unfair to expect a member of Parliament to represent the will of his constituents against the dictates of his own conscience. Yet if he does not, the democratic process is thwarted. This places the member in an impossible situation. In such a case the use of the referendum, a resort to direct democracy, is appropriate. Parliamentarians, guided either by conscience or by public opinion polls, cannot be fully representative of the will of the people as a whole in the matter. The only clear and democratic way for it to be decided is by a national public referendum. This would provide public access to the decision-making process and a decisive answer to this very important question.

If we are to believe the polls, then there is no question that the majority of Canadians want capital punishment restored, and that majority extends to every part of the land. It is not the majority of the east as opposed to the west, or Ontario versus Quebec, it is the will of our people, from St. John's to Vancouver Island. Capital punishment must be retained.

In British Columbia, a convicted murderer twice held hostages, and during one of these incidents, an innocent person was killed. In Alberta, a child killer was on short-term release, and another innocent child fell victim to him during that release.

In my opinion, the majority of Canadians are not convinced that abolition works, nor that the present law is effective. During the time capital punishment was considered law in Canada, the government used the cabinet's power of clemency to commute all death sentences. I would suspect that that would always be the present government's posture. That is their right! But there is a right greater than that of the cabinet. It is the right of the majority of Canadians to govern their own destiny. It is their right to help shape those laws under which they must live. It is their right to have their collective will imposed on us, their elected representatives.

Folk wisdom has it that those who would harm society expect to be protected by the very laws they break. Thieves are appalled when their own homes are burglarized; armed robbers are outraged to be the target of police bullets. But you cannot have it both ways. If you play the game, you have to be ready to pay the price, and if the price is your life, then you do not play that game. The ultimate penalty, death, will deter all but the most case-hardened criminal.

The standard argument against the imposition of the death penalty is that if we, as a society, allow capital punishment, we may allow an innocent person to die, and that person's blood will be on our hands. However, to the best of my knowledge, it has never been satisfactorily established that this has happened in Canada. I have faith in our judicial system and the built-in safeguards the system has to protect the innocent.

I fear that the fact there is even controversy over capital punishment is symptomatic of an illness that has befallen our society. It is my belief, and one shared by many Canadians, that we have allowed our society to become too permissive, that for too long we have spared the rod and spoiled the child. For too long, we have made excuses for deviant behaviour, and now we are reaping the bitter crop we have sown. One cannot pick up a newspaper these days without being assailed by story after story of juvenile delinquency, or armed robbery with violence, or the senseless destruction of public and private property. Those who willfully infringe on our laws must be made to face the music for their actions, especially if they transgress against the most precious of all God's works, a human life.

Let us consider the subject of deterrents. Who is to say how many persons have avoided committing murder because they feared the consequences? It is no argument against capital punishment to say that in places where it is still on the books there are just as many murders committed each year as in places where capital punishment has been abolished. The fact is that, where a hundred murderers are convicted but only one is executed, capital punishment is no deterrent because it is not enforced.

The threat of death is considered to be a strong deterrent among criminals themselves. This is the way gangsters and hoodlums assert and maintain their authority in the underworld. They apply death without mercy. Retribution is not a barbaric reason for punishing. It is the right reason, for only so can the community affirm, the moral order on which it is based, and citizens can be satisfied that justice is being done. Take that away and you erode society's faith in itself as a moral community where men are trusted to obey the laws and, if they disobey, are punished as agents responsible for their own actions.

The enforcing of capital punishment under proper circumstances upholds the dignity of man, and righly places a high value on human life.

An objection to capital punishment sometimes held in religious circles is that no one has the right to take human life except God. This area is related to the belief that the person who executes a criminal is as guilty of murder as the one he executes. If there is no secure instrument of justice, all law and order would soon end. That would be so if this is carried through to its conclusion. In that case it would be wrong for a nation to defend itself against an aggressor, it would be wrong for a city or province to maintain a police force. We would be defenceless, and no one would have the right to defend himself from the violence of evil men.

Some persons take the position that an individual who commits murder is mentally ill and should be institutionalized until cured. To overlook the possibility of mental derangement in one guilty of homicide would be wrong. But, to maintain, as some do, that every murderer is mentally ill, is to mishandle the truth.

Most forms of criminality are the result of a breakdown in morals, not emotions or mental imbalance. Others advance utilitarian objections. They say that capital punishment is not a deterrent to crime, so why employ it? This assumes that the first responsibility of our courts of law is to deter criminals in their actions. I question that. This ought to be one of the results of properly handled law courts. But the first obligation of law is to protect society and to punish wrongdoers. Should the courts take the position that they will not send car thieves to prison because people continue to steal cars in spite of the prison sentences meted out to car thieves? Of course not. The demands of justice are met first.

An equally wrong idea is that a prison sentence is sufficient punishment for murder. Where cold-blooded, premeditated murder is proven, a prison sentence with probationary periods is not punishment commensurate with the crime committed. Prisons should certainly be operated in as humane a way as possible, and prisoners should be treated as human beings, but punishment must fit the crime, or men will laugh at the courts and conduct themselves in society in any way they please.

Capital punishment is an emotionally charged issue, Mr. Speaker. It is my feeling that the question of capital punishment should be settled once and for all.

There are many precedents for the holding of a public referendum on capital punishment. In the United States, if I might cite a few examples, where criminal law in within state jurisdiction, public referenda have been held on this issue; in New Hampshire, Arizona, Ohio, Michigan, Oregon, Colorado and Massachusetts. In 1972, California voted by a public referendum to restore the death penalty.

● (1620)

In our nation we have asked the public for its view on two occasions: prohibition in 1898 and conscription in 1942. Capital punishment has been a bone of contention in Canada for many years. A national referendum on the subject would have the following advantages for Canadians. First, it would allow public opinion to be expressed clearly and provide a definite direction for Parliament by a process of direct democracy. Second, it would remove from a member of Parliament the unfair burden of deciding whether to vote against his own conscience. Third, in a democratic fashion it would finally resolve a problem that has been the cause of dissension and public argument for many years. Fourth, it would avoid the growth of resentment against the government and against Parliament by members of those groups in society that have struggled to be heard on this topic and have felt ignored. Fifth, it would renew the faith of the ordinary people in society in their ability to influence government decisions in a democratic way.

If the people indicate they want a change in the law, then I believe the Criminal Code should be amended to reflect that desire. I have expressed my own personal feelings on certain instances, that capital punishment should be brought back. I am hopeful this motion will be acceptable to the House. There is but one way to have the majority opinion heard; that is, by a national public referendum.

I hope the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) will speak during this debate. He will also second my motion because he believes in abolition. We are both convinced that the people must decide.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fretz: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: I take for granted, having listened to the hon. member's speech, that this penalty is a deterrent. If such is the case, does the hon. member believe that in order to really deter, the penalty should be administered in public and not in private?

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, no, I do not believe it should be in public. I believe there is justice and there is dignity of mankind. There is no dignity in displaying the death penalty by killing someone in public. I believe it should be a dignified process.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a pleasure to rise to speak on this motion because I am absolutely opposed to it on two grounds. First, I am opposed to the subject matter of the motion which is on capital punishment. Second, I oppose the other aspect of the motion, the procedural matter at hand in the holding of a public referendum on a moral issue such as capital punishment.

I want to briefly talk about the subject of capital punishment itself. On May 5, 1976, I rose in my place, as did many members of this House, on second reading debate of Bill C-83, a bill to abolish capital punishment. You may remember that, Mr. Speaker, because you were here. Perhaps this was not the first time a government bill had been introduced to actually abolish capital punishment without qualification. Prior to that there was a five-year suspension, but it kept coming up for extension. It was a very emotional time for all of us in the House of Commons. Indeed, I would say that to vote a few days after, in May or June of 1976, I had to make what was probably the toughest decision I have ever made in my life. It was tougher than deciding to enter public life, to get married or to have a family, because there was no doubt in my mind there.

On the question of capital punishment we are dealing with the right of the state to take the life of an individual. It is my contention, and I will not repeat all the arguments I made on May 5, 1976, that the state is a very omnipotent force. The authority and power of the state must be checked at every turn. Indeed, that is why we have Parliament and the adversary system of the British parliamentary system, so that the actions of government can be looked into at every turn and scrutinized, if that is the correct way of putting it. The state can abuse its power. As we saw in the early 1970s in the United States, the institution of presidency was used to abuse power. I think there is a good record of keeping the authority of the state under control in the British parliamentary system.

Without going into all the arguments, once the state has the right to take the life of an individual for a crime of murder, theoretically the state could use right to take the life of an individual for other infractions, as may be deemed appropriate by the legislature or by Parliament.

For example, in many Latin American countries, and just recently in Iran, we have seen the state taking the lives of individuals not in retribution for murder, but for crimes against the state. This was done in the 1930s in the Soviet Union at the time of the famous purge trials under Stalin. We are a long way from the climate which existed last year and which perhaps exist in Iran today, and the conditions which existed in the Soviet Union in the 1930s. When we look around the world we find that Canada is one of the few sane havens where the rule of law is upheld, where the rights of an individual are respected. I for one do not want the state ever again to have the right to take the life of an individual. I am not talking about war, because that is a different matter. That is a matter of self-defence and collective action of the state to declare war to defend its own interest. I will not go into that debate today.

I am absolutely opposed to the question of capital punishment being introduced once again in this Parliament. It was disposed of in 1976. As long as I sit in this parliament, and as long as I live, I hope we will not return to those days when we had capital punishment on the books.

More specifically I want to deal with the procedural matter of having a referendum on a moral issue. The suggestion in the motion of the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) really strikes at the heart of parliamentary democracy. In case anyone thinks I will argue against referendum being used nationally on constitutional issues or the referendum used in Quebec, let me qualify my comments. The British parliamentary system has served this country, Great Britain and many other countries very well over the years. I should like to quote that great Conservative philosopher, Edmund Burke, who believed in the fiduciary role of a member of Parliament.

Mr. Pepin: He was not really very Conservative.

Mr. Collenette: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) said that he was not very Conservative. For me to quote him I suppose he must have had a few Liberal streaks in him.

An hon. Member: He was an Irishman.

Mr. Collenette: Well, I have Irish blood, so that is good; I feel at home. In the latter part of the eighteenth century, or at the beginning of the nineteenth century, Mr. Burke made the statement to his constituents in Bristol that if they elected him as a member of Parliament, they were entrusting him to act on their behalf for the duration of that parliament. As one who was defeated last May, and one who voted for the abolition of capital punishment, my constituents had the right of recall in May of 1979. One could argue that some of the votes I lost in that election was due to the stand I took on capital punishment in 1976. Notwithstanding that, when the public makes electoral choices it chooses on a far greater range of issues, hence the fact that I am now back in the House subsequent to the 1980 election. The point I made is that one's constituents have the right, when an election is called, to question the actions of a member, not only as a representative of the government, but as a representative of the collective wishes of the people.

• (1630)

As one who paid the price last year, I am prepared to live with the concept expressed by Edmund Burke who believed that as members of Parliament we cannot run back to our constituents and poll all of them on every single issue at every moment, but that we have to use our own judgment.

My friend, the hon. member for Erie, who is usually quite reasonable and with whom I often agree, talked about an unfair burden. He wants to be relieved of the unfair burden of voting on capital punishment. I would suggest to him, with all due respect, that burden is the price a member of Parliament must pay if he is to be a good and active member under the British parliamentary system. I hope he changes his views as a result of this debate.

In January, 1979, the government introduced Bill C-9, for the establishment of referenda in this country. There was a heated debate. I spoke on January 29, 1979—in fact I have my notes in front of me—following the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) who led the opposition attack on the bill. In my speech I noted that the Conservative party was attacking the bill on the grounds that it undermined responsible government. I was speaking, of course, in the context of British parliamentary democracy.

I find it somewhat ironic when the official position of the hon. member's party attacks the concept of referenda, that he and many of his colleagues—perhaps some on this side as well—believe that referenda should be used on moral issues.

We on this side believe in the principle enunciated in Bill C-9, that the people of Canada should be consulted by means of a referendum on the structure of government and on constitutional matters. It is all very well to poll the people on their ideas about the laws by which we are governed, but when it comes to holding a referendum on moral issues I think we would not only be betraying our heritage but we could also unleash a very nasty spectacle in this country. I think of the spectacle of the riots in Paris in 1792 or the kind of venom we have seen on the streets of Tehran in the last year. I am not being anti-democratic or disrespectful of the public, but when collective behaviour occurs on emotional questions, that in a sense begs a more conservative approach to government—a more conservative approach provided by thoughtful, rational discussion in Parliament. When a question like capital punishment is put to the people directly emotions run high.

In 1976 there occurred the unfortunate death of a young shoeshine boy in Toronto. I remember the kind of feeling which permeated the calls that came into my constituency office. Some of the abuse I took was directly attributable to that horrendous crime.

In a sense the public acts irrationally when its passions are aroused. If we take this action in regard to capital punishment, then we may have to take the same action regarding abortion. The fireworks would go off then. If we are willing to condone the state taking a life for certain crimes and then hold a referendum on abortion, where do we go next? I have strong views on abortion as I believe it is a crime against an unborn child; it is ceasing life that exists, notwithstanding the fact that the baby has not technically been born.

Mr. Kelly: You are consistent.

Mr. Collenette: My friend, the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) says I am consistent. Then there is the question of what we do about euthanasia. We may have to deal with this question within the next decade. Do we give authority to those who administer medical treatment to terminate that treatment upon the advice of a parent or next-of-kin? I believe we should not, and I think of Karen Quinlan who might still be alive. A person who is clinically still alive but is not functioning mentally is a life and that life must be respected. I do not think that I, as a member of Parliament or in the government as an agent of Parliament, should interpret what is almost the very metaphysical question of what is life and what is death. I think that is beyond our scope as legislators.

I seem to have rambled on, Mr. Speaker, but I just do not believe that the state should hold referenda on moral questions. We saw what happened in Italy a few years ago with the referendum on divorce. It nearly ripped the Christian Democratic party apart and I am sure the same thing has happened in other countries.

I for one object to the whole question of capital punishment and retribution for a capital crime, and I object to the procedure whereby a country would enact legislation calling for referenda on questions of moral conscience. I am therefore personally opposed to this motion.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. parliamentary secretary accept a question?

Mr. Collenette: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Kilgour: Can the hon. parliamentary secretary imagine any murder, whether contract killing or one in particularly heinous circumstances, that would cause him to think that the perpetrator should forfeit the right to live?

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, this is essentially the qualifier that the former right hon. member for Prince Albert used. In other words, it is an escape clause. It is like the six-months' hoist clause on a bill. You get to third reading and then you chicken out and move that the bill be read six months hence.

That is what the late right hon. member for Prince Albert was referring to when he spoke in the debate in 1976. He was a life-long abolitionist who unfortunately, and I do not want to malign him, in his latter years changed his mind, using what I consider to be a very specious argument. He qualified his life-long opposition to capital punishment, for which he had, I think, admirable moral grounds. He said we should have capital punishment for acts against the Queen.

Basically that is what the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is saying now. Maybe I am attributing motives to him, but in his heart he is probably an abolitionist and is grappling with the subject, looking for some kind of justification for capital punishment. To paraphrase the words of Mackenzie King, capital punishment if necessary, and vice versa. I would say to him categorically that in my mind there are no grounds whatsoever for capital punishment. I do not discount the fact that one might have to kill in war. That is a very separate issue which is not under debate at this time.

• (1640)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I too rise to oppose the motion which is before the House today. I note, in commencing, that I was pleased to see that the previous Conservative government took no steps whatsoever in the direction suggested by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz). At no time did they introduce legislation or, indeed, suggest that there would be any legislation introduced which would provide for a referendum on the subject of capital punishment, or on any other subject. That approach on the part of the former Conservative government, in viewing the merits, is entirely appropriate.

I would like to deal with two aspects of the motion before the House today. The first is the matter of referendum itself, and the second is the substantive question of whether indeed, on the subject of substantive punishment, there should be a review of the decision which was made by this House in 1976. Dealing with the question of referendum itself, I question why on this issue, as opposed to so many other issues which might be conceivably raised in the public form, this member of the Conservative party is proposing a referendum.

I have no doubt whatsoever, if there had been a referendum, for example, on the subject of Petro-Canada and the Conservative's plan to dismantle that company, that some 75 per cent or 80 per cent of the population of Canada would have supported our opposition to that referendum. Yet, there is no suggestion by Conservative members of referenda on issues such as this, which are certainly of great concern to the people of Canada. There is no suggestion of referenda on issues which may go against the philosophy of the Conservative party.

I suggest that in attempting to have a referendum on this subject, whether one is an abolitionist or whether one supports capital punishment, one is engaging in an act of political cowardice. I do not use those words lightly. I suggest that because I believe, as the hon. member from Toronto has indicated, quite properly, that we have responsibilities in this House. Some of them may be difficult and at times the questions raised may be contentious, but we have responsibilities to take tough decisions on those contentious questions after having considered all aspects.

Had there been a referendum on certain other controversial subjects which the House dealt with, the results would have been very disturbing, indeed. Had there been, for example, a referendum at the end of the Second World War on the question of whether Canadians of Japanese extraction should be sent to Japan, I have no doubt historically that 75 per cent or 80 per cent of Canadians, in an emotional referendum on this subject and considering that they were just coming out of World War II, would have said yes. What a serious and disastrous error that would have been.

I have no doubt that in 1970, at the time of the imposition of the War Measures Act, when perhaps 85 per cent or 90 per cent of the Canadian population had they been asked whether they were in favour of the imposition of the War Measures Act and the Draconian curtailment of civil liberties which it entailed, would have said yes. Yet in retrospect many Canadians have come to realize that the imposition of the War Measures Act was a serious mistake.

Had there been a referendum taken at that time on the subject of the War Measures Act I have no doubt the majority of Canadians would have supported it. Fortunately, and I am very proud to be able to say, the New Democratic Party, and Tommy Douglas particularly, stood up at that time and said no. We were prepared to take a stand in principle on a subject, a stand which subsequently the then leader of the Conservative party, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, indicated he thought was the correct stand.

We must be very careful when we talk about the use of referenda as an abrogation of political responsibilities. I think we should also look at the history of referenda where they have been used. I would suggest that the possible consequences of a referendum on capital punishment are very serious indeed. What, for example, would be the situation if a majority of the people in the province of Quebec voted against the imposition of capital punishment, and a majority of the remainder of Canadians were to vote in favour?

Our criminal law must be uniform across the country, yet we would be in the invidious position of having that kind of regional division on a subject which is certainly of very great importance. We must accept our responsibilities as legislators in this chamber to deal with questions which may be complicated and controversial. Yet, were there to be a referendum, it could very easily tear the country apart through a kind of emotional outpouring that could result from regional divisions.

There is no suggestion that there would be any requirement in respect of majorities in each region of the country. There is no suggestion in the wording of this particular motion of what the wording of the referendum itself would be. Would the wording restrict capital punishment to cases of premeditated murder? Would it broaden capital punishment to certain other cases? What about those people who support capital punishment in certain circumstances and not in others? In other words, to word such a referendum in order that it have any meaning, would be virtually impossible.

It would not only be difficult to word such a referendum question, it could be a very, very divisive question in this country. One need only look at the conscription referendum in 1942, to which my friend has referred, as being evidence of the kinds of consequences which can result from a referendum in this country. That is an example which should never be repeated in Canada, on any subject whatsoever.

I say on the question of a referendum that, while it is certainly important that the views of the people of Canada be respected and that they be listened to, we have a responsibility within the atmosphere of this chamber, having heard all the different positions, both pro and con, and having had the opportunity to assess those in an objective fashion, as legislators, to make the final decision. In some cases that decision on questions which face the Canadian people will go in the face of what perhaps is at a particular time a majority sentiment in the country. But, surely, to suggest that a referendum at any given time should determine what legislation should be implemented in this country would be a very serious mistake. On the question of referenda, particularly on the sensitive subject of capital punishment, I would suggest it would be a serious mistake to implement the motion before the House today.

What about the substantive question attempted to be dealt with by the motion, the question of capital punishment itself? There was reference earlier in this debate to gangland murders in the underworld; gangland murderers use this kind of justice themselves. Surely, it is not up to the representatives of the people of Canada to suggest that our code of criminal justice should be determined by the code of criminal justice as followed in the underworld. What kind of logic is that?

We must rise above that kind of logic if we are to deal in an objective and sensible manner with the real concerns of the people of Canada. Of course, the people of Canada are concerned about violent crime and about murder, particularly about premeditated murder. However, I suggest it is an artificial distinction, a distinction without any basis whatsoever, to suggest that a murderer, a potential murderer or a prospective murderer who is considering whether to carry out this deed, this contract killing if that be what it is, will say to himself: Well, I only face 25 years in prison if I am caught, so I won't carry through with that decision to murder.

That is the present penalty which first degree murderers face, 25 years in prison. It is completely unrealistic to say, now that the prospect of death has been abolished by Parliament, that 25 years behind bars, the deprivation of liberty for 25 years, the condemnation to prison for 25 years without parole, will not deter a person who is capable of any kind of deterrence whatsoever. It is simply not realistic to suggest otherwise.

I would point out that when capital punishment was abolished in 1976, that was the quid pro quo; in exchange for the abolition of capital punishment Parliament enacted first degree murder and second degree murder. The penalty for first degree murder is 25 years behind bars with no prospect of parole before the termination of that 25-year sentence. Surely, if anybody can be deterred from committing murder, that is sufficient deterrence. However, we have seen, and the evidence is irrefutable on this point, that capital punishment does not act as a deterrent.

My friend, the hon. member for Erie has mentioned mistakes being made. I am sure my friend would agree that one mistake is too many. He has said there is no proof that mistakes have been made in Canada. He couched his words carefully because he would know, if he examined this question, that mistakes have indeed been made, unquestionably, in other jurisdictions; for example, in England. No doubt he is aware of the notorious case in England when an innocent man was put to death, and there was no way of rectifying the terrible wrong that had been done.

I have a clipping which gives an example of the kind of wrongdoing and injustice which could occur, and has occurred, if capital punishment were permitted in this country. I have a clipping here from the Vancouver Sun of October 19, 1974. It relates to a teenager's confession to a 1973 killing which resulted in the release of a man imprisoned for life. The evidence disclosed that a gentleman convicted of murder on circumstantial evidence was sentenced to imprisonment for life, and subsequently a young teenager admitted that, in fact, he had committed the crime. He produced evidence that was absolutely incontrovertible, that he had indeed committed the crime. Had capital punishment been in effect, there would have been no remedy whatsoever. The person who had been wrongly convicted of murder would have been condemned to death.

In response to a question from a member opposite my friend said he is not in favour of public hangings because they are not dignified. I have great difficulty in my own mind in making the distinction between a private hanging, a private electrocution and a public hanging or execution so far as dignity is concerned. If my friend is suggesting that somehow it is a deterrent, that indeed we should go all the way and have public hangings, and perhaps various other punishments which would similarly deter, and in the past we have seen the kinds of punishments that have been used in an attempt to deter—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Erie on a point of order.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I believe the member is distorting what I had said. In no way did I suggest that this would result in a circus. I said there would be death with dignity and in no way suggested that there would be a circus.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is a difference in point of view.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Some of the attempts which have been made in the past to deter murder include burning at the stake, boiling in oil or water, iron coffins, burying alive, breaking on the wheel, drawing and quartering, decapitation, impaling, hanging, crushing, flailing, shooting, exposure to insects, poisoning, throwing to animals, stoning, drowning, torturing, electrocution, asphyxiation, crucifixion and mayhem. Those are the kinds of attempts which have been made in the past.

Mr. Knowles: Everything but appointment to the Senate.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): My friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), says everything but appointment to the Senate. Of course, that is the ultimate indignity. Perhaps my friend from Erie might suggest that would be a suitable punishment for the most serious forms of murder.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I suggest that reference to the other place in those terms is hardly parliamentary.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I intended no disrespect to members of the other place in saying this. I did not mean to suggest they may have been guilty of the crimes with which we are dealing today.

I would like to relate a story to the House told by a former member for Prince Albert, a former distinguished prime minister and leader of the Conservative party. This is the story recounted often:

> My great grandfather saw a boy hanged in Upper Canada for picking pockets in 1837. I think the boy was 17 years of age and everybody gathered for the public execution. Those Scottish people in North York turned up in large numbers.
> There was a great celebration, and during the ceremonies of the execution four of them had their pockets picked, which just indicates the argument that the fear of capital punishment will greatly reduce the number of offences is not completely tenable, or indeed tenable at all.

This appeared in Hansard for May 1, 1972.

There are many other arguments against capital punishment; for instance, the discriminatory implementation of capital punishment, the use of capital punishment against the poor in disproportionate numbers, the kinds of mistakes that can be made in implementing capital punishment, and the fact that there are those who seek glory. I am thinking of the Gary Gilmores of this world who, if capital punishment existed, would murder for that purpose itself.

There are many reasons why some on this side of the House oppose not only capital punishment but also the political cop-out of a referendum on this question.

In closing, I say that we oppose this motion. We oppose the use of referenda on questions such as this. We oppose the use of capital punishment. We believe that the value of life in this society has to be respected by all citizens, and that surely includes representatives of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am more than happy to rise to speak to this motion.

An hon. Member: A point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With due respect, there is a procedure under which members are recognized in this place, and the Chair is bound to respect that procedure. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) has the floor.

Mr. Evans: Like the two members before I oppose capital punishment. I do not agree with this motion and will not in any way, shape or form vote for a motion that does allow a return of capital punishment in Canada.

I think the two hon. members who spoke before me have indicated quite clearly the kinds of problems that arise when a referendum is used to settle moral issues in the country. The referendum in the province of Quebec, which was resolved on May 20, at least for the time being, would indicate the divisive effects a referendum can have. Certainly referenda on issues as emotional as the death penalty and abortion will have divisive and long-lasting effects.

I would not want to repeat what other members have said before me. However, I would look at some of the statistics available to us that are relevant to the effects of capital punishment as a deterrence to capital crimes, or what used to be called capital crimes. If we look at that evidence and relate the rate of homicide to 1974, the time when the death penalty was abolished in Canada, to subsequent periods—in fact, relate it to information as recent as 1978—we will find that the rate of homicide in 1978 was the lowest it had been since 1974. Indeed, in 1974 the rate of homicide was 2.46 per 100,000 population, and in 1978 it was 2.62 per 100,000 population; in the interim it had increased. It has fallen since then. It is now the lowest it has been since 1974.

If one breaks homicide down into the various forms of murder; for instance, premeditated murder, manslaughter, infanticide and so on, we find precisely the same pattern. There is no evidence whatsoever, that is statistically valid, which would indicate that the abolition of capital punishment in this country has led to a higher incidence of murder, or other forms of death, whether they be homicide, infanticide or manslaughter. As a result, if the basis of the argument is deterrence, there is no evidence to support the case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

REQUEST AGENCY STOP PROPOSED SALE TO PIRELLI OF CGE PLANT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Canadian General Electric has announced its intention to phase out the building wire and power cable operation at its Peterborough plant, a decision which would lead to the loss of some 300 jobs in Peterborough. Some of the employees who would lose their jobs have more than 40 years' experience at CGE.

In the light of a petition signed by 3,655 employees and friends, and because the company which has offered to buy the wire and cable equipment from CGE, Pirelli Cables Limited, is a foreign-controlled company, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence):

That the government, through the Foreign Investment Review Agency, stop the sale to Pirelli so that the jobs at Canadian General Electric in Peterborough might be safeguarded.

Madam Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STUDY ON PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) has informed this House that veterans' pensions are being studied as part of a larger pension review by the Department of National Health and Welfare. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That this House require that the Minister of Veterans Affairs bring in an interim report on veterans' pensions and that the minister assure the House that any Veterans Affairs legislation be separate from a Health and Welfare omnibus bill, and that the resultant pension increases be retroactive to the date of the introduction of Bill C-28 in the Thirty-first Parliament.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CONDEMNATION OF APARTHEID IN SOUTH AFRICA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on the occasion of the fourth anniversary of the courageous struggles against apartheid which took place in the black township of Soweto near Johannesburg, South Africa.

In view of the fact that hundreds of schoolchildren were killed in the terrible repression which ensued, and in view of the South African government's continuing denial of basic human rights to its citizens, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

That this House express its support for all those struggling against the evil system of apartheid in Soweto and throughout South Africa; and, further, that this House unequivocally condemn the government of South Africa for its policies of repression.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

EXPULSION OF MEMBER OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY IN NOVA SCOTIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The executive of the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia has expelled from membership Paul MacEwan, a member of the provincial legislature for Cape Breton Nova, for expressing his opinion respecting a communist element in the New Democratic Party. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House condemn the actions of the New Democratic Party for expelling from membership a duly elected representative of the people, without benefit of a fair trial, for exercising his right to freedom of speech.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MARINE TRANSPORT

RELEASE OF TECHNICAL INFORMATION IN SHIP SAFETY INSPECTION REPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of some pressing urgency. In view of the fact that technical information contained in a variety of ship safety reports is often withheld from certain parties involved in the efficient and safe operation of our marine transport, concerned that withholding of such information hampers the implementation of better safety methods, and in light of freedom of information pressures which are currently in front of us, I move, seconded by the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell):

That the government immediately renew its policy and methods for the release of technical information contained in ship safety inspection reports to safety committees of unions representing officers and crew and management, since it could be incorporated in the curriculum of a jointly sponsored industry and labour seamen training school to be opened at Morrisburg, Ontario, later this summer and significantly assist in the safe operation of our ships at sea.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

OPERATION OF DISCOVERY TRAIN THROUGHOUT 1981—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 seeking unanimous consent for the following. In view of the fact that we are in the process of renewing our federation, it is imperative that the people of Canada continue to be aware of their rich heritage. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy):

That this House urge the Secretary of State to take all the steps necessary to ensure that the Discovery Train will continue to function for another year, namely, throughout 1981.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

HEARINGS ON BRANCH LINE ABANDONMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing importance under Standing Order 43. I hope to receive unanimous consent, because this motion will save the government considerable amounts of money.

Whereas hearings before the Canadian Transport Commission are costly and time-consuming to the government and to the people, whereas the Canadian Transport Commission holds a hearing on every application for rail abandonment made by the railways if it is contested, and whereas on some of these lines which the railways want to abandon there are functioning grain elevators, coal deposits and other essential products which will require rail service in the future, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That where a branch line contains functioning elevators or has coal deposits or other essential commodities which will, beyond a shadow of a doubt, require rail service, the Canadian Transport Commission reject the application without a hearing.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF AUTO PLANT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that Canada is not getting its fair share of investment or jobs in the North American automobile industry, and since massive inroads by foreign imports are being made into Canadian and United States auto markets, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That the Government of Canada begin immediate discussions with the Japanese government and auto makers with a view to establishing an auto plant in British Columbia which could, within the terms of the existing U.S.-Canadian auto pact, serve both western Canadian and western American markets.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ENERGY

GASOLINE—USE THEREOF BY NON-CANADIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The latest Statistics Canada figures show that in April, 1980, 1,000,180 American motorists came to Canada for trips of less than one day, representing a 53 per cent increase over April, 1979.

Given that these motorists most assuredly are coming to Canada primarily to fill up with our taxpayer-subsidized gasoline, representing a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of in excess of $100 million per year, and given that foreign airlines, truckers and ship owners most assuredly are doing the same thing, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis):

That this House request that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources make a statement on motions as to the best estimate of gasoline and other transportation fuel leakages across the border, the cost of these to the Canadian taxpayer, and the government's plans, if any, to deal with this situation.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OLYMPIC GAMES

CALL FOR PROGRAM DISCOURAGING PARTICIPATION IN MOSCOW GAMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to put before the House a matter of urgent and pressing concern.

In view of the fact that this government delayed announcing its support of the Moscow Olympic Games boycott for almost three months in order to assess international support for such boycott, and since Canada did not join that boycott until some 53 other nations had already made such a decision, it seems strange that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in an interview on Europe-One Radio yesterday, was heard to criticize the boycott as being too little, too late. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

● (1415)

That this House impress upon the Prime Minister that the effectiveness of the boycott could be increased by this government embarking upon a direct and positive program of discouraging participation in the Moscow games.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Mark MacGuigan said "No".

RETURN OF CLERK OF THE HOUSE AFTER ILLNESS

Madam Speaker: Before the question period begins, I am sure that hon. members will want to join me in expressing our delight at seeing Dr. Koester back in his chair.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

NATIONAL ENERGY BANK—FUNDING THEREOF—NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO ATLANTIC CANADA

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, perhaps I could put these questions quite appropriately to the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on the national television program "Question Period" on the weekend, indicated that he had put forward an energy offer which had "identical conditions to those carried in the Conservative budget of December 11".

While one would be very hard pressed to find anything identical between a three-month price proposal and a four-year energy package, nevertheless I might ask the Minister of Finance if his colleague's proposal included the funding for a national energy bank, remembering that our December proposals included the four-year funding of $1.7 billion for this very important institution.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think I am certain in replying to the hon. member that the proposal which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made was not as comprehensive as the total package in the December budget, including the energy bank.

An hon. Member: You said it was identical.

Mr. Jarvis: One finds it difficult to find anything identical if it is not as comprehensive. I should like to go on to elicit from the minister just how comprehensive was the proposal of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The national energy bank, with funding of $1.7 billion, obviously provided a viable vehicle for any number of energy-related projects. In our proposal, one of these included financial assistance for rapid and urban transit. Perhaps the Minister of Finance can tell us whether his colleague's proposal, put, I believe, by telephone late last week, included a commitment to funding rapid and urban transit?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to be fair to the hon. member and be as accurate as possible. I have not been involved in the negotiations—

An hon. Member: Nor has Marc Lalonde.

Mr. MacEachen: —but from my information, the proposal was an interim one with respect to several months, and it related to the price arrangements which would take place within that period. It was not to be an over-all settlement including all the parameters which the hon. member included in his two questions.

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, I want to be as fair to the Minister of Finance as he indicates he wishes to be to me. But when one is as dogmatic as is his colleague in saying the proposal was identical, it is necessary for us to find out in what respect it even faintly resembles our December package.

May I ask, in a supplementary to the minister—because it is a matter which I know touches him very personally—about the former government's commitment to the financing of a gas pipeline from Quebec City through to Atlantic Canada, remembering the necessity for National Energy Board concurrence on which our proposal was based. Given NEB concurrence, did his colleague propose last week the financial commitment to assist in the extension of a natural gas pipeline from Quebec City through to the maritimes given, as I said, NEB conditions being fulfilled?

Mr. MacEachen: Here again, the hon. member is introducing another element into the questioning with respect to a proposal intended to provide for an interim solution on the pricing side. Inasmuch as the hon. member has raised the question of the gas pipeline, as he knows, it is part of the energy strategy of the Government of Canada. It was referred to in the Speech from the Throne and continues to be a commitment of the government pending, of course—

● (1420)

Mr. Jarvis: A financial commitment?

Mr. MacEachen: —resolution of the difficulties put forward by the National Energy Board and the concerns and reservations, for example, raised by the Premier of New Brunswick.

CABINET AUTHORIZATION OF ENERGY PRICING PROPOSALS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and in the absence of an energy policy, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question.

Is it correct that before the Minister of Energy made an offer to the government of Alberta to do with energy pricing, it had the authorization of cabinet? Did cabinet authorize the Minister of Energy to offer a duplicate of the near-agreement between the former Clark government and Alberta, as the Minister of Energy told a news conference last week? Did you authorize the minister to offer a duplicate copy of that near-agreement, or not; and, if not, why is the Minister of Energy pretending that you did and that he did?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the negotiations undertaken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—

Mr. Nielsen: What negotiations?

Mr. MacEachen: —were authorized by cabinet. They are not yet completed. As I understand it, it is the intention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to meet with his counterpart this week to continue the negotiations. It is not my intention to reveal the instructions which have been given—

Mr. Nielsen: He has.

Mr. MacEachen: —with respect to negotiations that have not yet been completed.

Mr. Crosbie: Did the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on behalf of the government, include in his offer to Alberta that the government wished to encourage a substitution of gas for oil, and therefore the prices for gas would be calculated at 65 per cent of the commodity value of oil to make it possible for a gas pipeline to go from Montreal, to Quebec City, to the maritimes?

Did the minister indicate to Alberta that the government would compensate the maritime provinces for additional costs of electricity generation resulting from oil price increases in excess of $2 per barrel per year? As was the case with the Clark administration, were these two features included in the agreement offered to Alberta by the Minister of Energy, allegedly on behalf of the Government of Canada but about which the Deputy Prime Minister does not appear to know anything?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I repeat my answer: these matters are presently under negotiation. The hon. member for St. John's West is asking me to confirm a variety of items that may be included in the negotiations. I think that is not a very good practice. It certainly was not the practice that he followed—and quite rightly—prior to the negotiations which were not quite terminated by the government to which he belonged.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

CHAIRMANSHIP OF COUNCIL ALLEGEDLY OFFERED TO NON-CANADIAN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance in his role as Deputy Prime Minister. No doubt the minister will recall that the Prime Minister was very active in the recent election campaign in promising Canadians that if the Liberals formed the government, there would be an extension of Canadian control over our own economy.

In this context, can the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the government has now offered the important position of the chairmanship of the Economic Council of Canada to a man who is both an American citizen and is publicly on record in favour of extending American ownership in Canada?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is Evans' influence.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I cannot confirm or deny that any such offer has been made by the Prime Minister to the man in question. As the hon. member knows, the Economic Council reports to the Prime Minister, and I have no knowledge with respect to any such overture.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I thought that probably the Minister of Finance from time to time spoke to the Prime Minister, but it is clear that is not the case.

An hon. Member: Nor with the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Broadbent: I thought he was concerned about the fate of the Economic Council of Canada. Since the gentleman in question, less than two years ago, wrote a paper entitled "How about an economic deal with the United States?", and in that paper said he favoured the rules for FIRA being changed so that capital investment and ownership of American origin would no longer be included within its framework of responsibility, and given the government's alleged commitment to get more Canadian control over our own economy, does the minister think it would be wise to appoint a man with these views to such a crucial position?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, quite apart from the question of economic nationalism, I find it strange that the leader of a democratic party in a democratic country would begin to test the opinions of any individual as to his acceptability for appointment to any public office. This is a form of censorship in which this party has never indulged.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, not only would the vast majority of Canadians see such a statement as absurd, but I believe the Minister of Finance knows it is absurd. Since it is on record that Mr. Beigie is in favour of extending American control over our economy, and he is also on record as believing we have moved too far toward achieving economic equality in Canada, does the Minister of Finance really want us to believe that a man with such, quite literally, reactionary views ought to have this key position?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I really am amused at this particular line of questioning. The hon. member first infers that a particular person is to be appointed to the Economic Council of Canada—something that has not been confirmed or has taken place—and then he went through a censorship test as to his views.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. MacEachen: I am glad the public can see how the minds of members of the New Democratic Party really work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER ENERGY TAX CREDIT AMONG PROPOSALS ON OIL PRICING AGREEMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. It relates to the comments of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the increases in oil prices, particularly as they apply to the consumers in this country.

The Conservative energy agreement included an energy tax credit for those with lower and middle incomes, which would have helped offset the increase in the per barrel price of oil at the wellhead. This would have meant a $240 annual tax credit for a family of four, for example, or $80 for a single, elderly woman. I would like to ask the minister: if the Liberal energy package proposal is identical—as the Minister of Energy said yesterday—will the minister, in his role as Minister of Finance, confirm that there is a similar tax break included in the Liberal package to the one which was in the Conservative package for those with lower and middle incomes?

• (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe it would be a mistake for the hon. member to conclude that the Liberal energy package is identical to the package which she has mentioned as having been the package of the former government.

What I understand to be the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is that he had proposed a particular pricing arrangement to the province of Alberta for an interim period of several months. That is the aspect of the arrangement to which I have been referring.

If the hon. member would like me to make a general comment about the question of equity, it certainly would be my intention, as Minister of Finance, to avoid the inequities which were so prevalent in the Conservative budget. Indeed, that would be one of my main aims in bringing down a budget.

Mr. Crosbie: Just like de-indexing.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, we on this side believe that helping the poor is not an inequity, and I hope that the minister would take that into consideration. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a further question with regard to the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the phasing-out of the subsidization of imported oil to the east coast—a part of the country which the Minister of Finance knows well.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated that, rather than getting the subsidization of imported oil out of general revenue, it will be paid for by the consumer out of the price he or she will pay for gasoline in Vancouver, Thunder Bay or Halifax. If the Canadian consumer will have to shoulder the cost of this $3 billion subsidy, can the Minister of Finance tell the House how much of an increase it will mean to the consumer in the price of a gallon of gas at the fuel pump or for a gallon of home heating fuel? If that $3 billion is being phased out, what will it mean to the ordinary consumer?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the hon. member will recall that I intimated in my economic statement in April that one of the intentions of the government was to establish a blended price. Depending upon the phasing in of that blended price, obviously the oil import compensation program would be phased out.

However, the hon. member ought to bear in mind that one of the objectives of the government is still to maintain a single price for Canadian consumers, so that consumers in the Atlantic provinces would not be asked to bear a greater burden than consumers in any other part of Canada.

Mr. Clark: How high a price?

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is to ask the Minister of Finance whether or not the statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources yesterday, that the phasing-out of the $3 billion oil subsidization program would be borne by the consumer is, as he stated, government policy. If so, how much will it mean to the consumer in the way of an increase in the price of a gallon of gasoline and home heating oil?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, it is obvious to the hon. member, as it was obvious to the former minister of finance, that any increase in the price of oil in Canada is bound to involve a reduction in the oil import compensation program.

The purpose of the blended price was to share that burden among the various components of the market and to ensure that the same burden would be borne by all consumers in Canada. The point seems to have escaped—and, I think, honestly so—some of those who have expressed concerns, that we intended to ask consumers in the Atlantic provinces to bear no additional burden. It will be a single price for all Canadians.

Miss MacDonald: It is a single price now.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member also asked me what will be the increase in the price of home heating oil or gasoline at the pump. That will depend on the results of the pricing agreement and when we know what the increases in the price of oil will be in Canada.

OIL PRICING PROPOSALS SUBMITTED TO ALBERTA

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It relates to some of the questions which were asked earlier this afternoon.

Last week, officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources went out of their way to impress upon the media in the west that the present government had made an identical energy package proposal to the government of Alberta as the proposal made by the previous Clark administration. This was confirmed yesterday on television by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. For the benefit of the Prime Minister, I will quote the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources exactly. He said:

> I did put forward another offer . . . which would have put into effect identical conditions to those contained in the Conservative budget of December 11.

A few minutes ago, as the Prime Minister entered the House, the Deputy Prime Minister said that it would be a mistake to conclude—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think it is time for the hon. member to come to his question.

Mr. Lawrence: My question to the Prime Minister is: in view of what the Deputy Prime Minister just said, namely, that it would be a mistake to conclude that the same proposals were put, somebody is either lying—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: —outside of the House or—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We have just had an indication that it is much better to come quickly to the question. If the hon. member does not put his question very rapidly, I shall have to give the floor to another member.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I was trying to bring the Prime Minister up to date because obviously he did not hear the Deputy Prime Minister this afternoon. My question is: someone is not telling the truth. The government cannot have it both ways. One or the other is right. Which one?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That seemed to be a statement and not a question. Please ask the question.

An hon. Member: He just did.

Mr. Lawrence: My question to the Prime Minister is: which one of these two ministers is telling the truth?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not read what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said over the weekend, and I was not in the House when the Deputy Prime Minister asnwered the previous questions.

It seems to me, from my acquaintance with what the minister said to some of his colleagues last week, that he intended to propose an interim settlement with regard to price which would have had the same effect, in an interim fashion between now and October, as that of the previous Tory budget.

Mr. Clark: That is not what Marc Lalonde said.

Mr. Trudeau: I am told by the Leader of the Opposition that that is not what was said.

Mr. Clark: Would you like the transcript?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: You don't like the truth.

Mr. Nielsen: Weasel around that one.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I can assure you that we on this side do not intend to break the tradition of the line dividing us.

Mr. Andre: It is a piece of paper, not a sword.

Mr. Trudeau: There are some very useful pages over there who would be happy to bring the piece of paper to me.

Mr. Nielsen: We do not do acrobatics from our seat, either.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I wish we would resume the question period in the usual fashion.

Mr. Trudeau: I think the hon. member will understand that it is difficult for me to answer the previous question since I did not hear the answers which were given in the first half hour of this question period. Therefore, I cannot see the contradiction which the hon. member says that he sees. I would imagine that the contradiction is a matter of debate, and debates are always in order but not during question period.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I would point out to the Prime Minister that the so-called tradition he speaks about has more to do with pointing a sword than with crossing the floor. In any event, what I was attempting to do when you cut me off before, Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1440)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the heckling does not stop it will encourage the hon. member to prolong his question, and I should like him to be brief.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question relates to the words "identical proposals" in the transcript—the Prime Minister has now had a chance to read it—of what was said on national television over the weekend. That is clearly wrong, and I want to find out from the Prime Minister whether he believes it is clearly wrong as well, and whether he rebuffs his own minister for saying something like that on national television when he should not have done so.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, my previous answer, on the contrary, did not rebuff the minister but used the very same words that I now see in the television transcript, that the minister was talking about an interim agreement which would have had the same effect with regard to prices between now and October.

Mr. Lawrence: Identical conditions: it does not say prices.

Mr. Trudeau: All right. The whole point is that it is not the energy package that we have been trying to negotiate and will continue to try to negotiate. It is an interim settlement between now and October which was proposed by the minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Where is he? Bring him in.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, there seems to be lack of unanimity on the other side.

An hon. Member: Where is he today?

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FUNDING OF DONKIN COAL MINE IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, we in this corner will not try to take part in the Pierre, Joe and Allan show. It is ironic to us that they have an identical policy. My question is for the Prime Minister, who may be aware that this weekend, in Halifax, the Premier of Alberta—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Waddell: I will get to my question in a minute. In Halifax, this weekend, Premier Lougheed announced that the Alberta Heritage Fund is willing to finance the Donkin coal mine in Cape Breton by providing ten times the financial backing offered so far by the federal government, which is some $300 million.

My question to the Prime Minister is a serious one. Would he care to say what the long-term implications are for confederation and for the principle of regional equality if the federal government continues to renege on its responsibilities for regional development, and allows the Alberta Heritage Fund to emerge as having the real decision-making power over which Canadian projects receive financial backing and which do not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the government would take objection to the use of the word "reneging" in the question of the hon. member. We have made various proposals to the government of Nova Scotia over some months, and we are not reneging on any of them. We have offered to participate in certain ways in the development of infrastructure and resources in Nova Scotia, and these offers still stand.

Mr. Waddell: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. Perhaps some people in Nova Scotia consider it reneging if Alberta is going to finance the project, even if the Prime Minister does not.

Let me put this supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Instead of focusing on pricing, as we have been doing with oil pricing in the House for the last month, or fighting the last election as the party to my right seems to be doing, has the Prime Minister focused on the distribution of the projected increase in oil prices? Has he had any discussion with his provincial colleagues about the establishment of a joint federal-provincial fund to invest in alternatives to oil, like the Donkin coal mine and other alternatives? Has he had those kinds of discussions with his provincial counterparts?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the essence of the energy package being developed by the minister, and put forward by the government, is precisely to have a price structure and revenue structure which would permit the federal government to ensure that energy and other products in other projects in other parts of the country can be proceeded with, particularly such things as pipelines to Quebec and the maritimes. This is in order to permit substitution for the consumption of oil by the consumption of gas, other projects which have energy-saving capacity, and so on. This is very much part of the energy package and I am grateful to the hon. member for giving us the occasion to bring that out.

The point the minister has made repeatedly is that the consuming provinces cannot expect to see these various projects proceed if all the revenue is to remain in the hands of one province and of the multinationals, rather than being channelled through the federal government into projects for the benefit of the whole country.

REQUEST FOR HEARINGS ON ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL POTATO MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the apparent general support among potato growers for the concept of a national potato marketing agency, will the minister ask the Farm Products Marketing Council to initiate public hearings this summer in order to move toward that objective; and if they will not do that, will the minister immediately establish a commission of inquiry, on an urgent basis, to look into the potato industry in Canada?

Mr. Nielsen: The "eyes" have it!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we have had discussions with the National Farm Products Marketing Council about hearings being held to inquire into the potato industry.

I believe I can safely say that hearings will be held this summer on the proposals, especially by the provinces of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, that a regional agency be established for the eastern production region of Canada, including Ontario, Quebec, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

PRIVACY

ABUSE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. The minister has stated in this House that the Privacy Commissioner looking into the abuse of social insurance numbers is due to make her report some time in August of this year.

In the meantime, would the minister tell the House if he is aware that certain unions are using the social insurance number on mailing labels which are readily accessible to anyone handling these items of mail? Would the minister also tell the House if he is prepared to put a stop to this unauthorized and flagrant abuse of what is supposed to be a confidential number?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am not aware that unions are using these social insurance numbers on mail, but I shall look into the matter. I should indicate that at the request of the Privacy Commissioner we are conducting investigations within government to ensure that SIN numbers are used in accordance with the law.

Mr. McDermid: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. Specifically, would the minister look at the UAW solidarity brochure? Union members are coming to me, saying they are very concerned that their name and social insurance number appears on this brochure. Will the minister approach this union and ask them to stop using the social insurance number on mailing labels?

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, I think the matter should be drawn to the attention of the Privacy Commissioner, and I shall do so. As the hon. member knows, the Privacy Commissioner is looking into the use of social insurance numbers in the private sector, and I shall ensure that this matter is brought to her attention.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REOPENING OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH CLERICAL AND REGULATORY GROUP

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the President of the Treasury Board. As the clerical and regulatory group of public servants, numbering some 47,000, have not had a contract with the federal government since November 11, would the minister indicate what attempts are being made by his office to reopen negotiations with this group in order to avert the necessity of going to the conciliation board and possible strike route?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, as I have indicated in this House in the past, our door is always open when it comes to negotiations. We have attempted to bring the parties back to the negotiating table, which we did some time ago, but negotiations have since broken off.

The designation process is continuing, however, and I expect—at least, I hope—that a negotiated settlement will be reached once we can bring the parties back together, which I hope will be in the near future.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question. Would the President of the Treasury Board undertake to make a specific overture to this group and invite them back to the negotiating table, bearing in mind that this group in the public service has been fair in the past with regard to their demands and has given every indication that they want a settlement again as opposed to a conciliation strike route?

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is aware that negotiation is a two-way street. We will do everything possible to arrive at an equitable settlement—equitable both to the union involved and to the public.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

VOLUME OF GRAIN SALES TO SOVIET UNION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since we seem to have blown our chance of selling wheat to the Soviet Union at as good a price as Argentina, and since there seems to be some mix-up between the two ministers in charge of the Wheat Board—one suggesting we will sell 3.5 million tonnes; the other, 3.8 million tonnes—would the minister straighten things out and tell us how much grain we are going to sell to the Soviet Union this crop year at the reduced, bargain price?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, 3.8 is the figure.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, again to the Minister of Transport. The other Wheat Board minister in the other place said on CBC radio on the weekend that the new limit for grain sales to the Soviet Union will be 5 million tonnes in the new crop year.

Since Canada has not sold 5 million tonnes except once in the past ten years, this means that to all intents and purposes there will be no embargo in effect. Will the minister confirm that this is the level planned for 1980-81, and would he care to explain why the Soviet Union would want to buy that much wheat from Canada—

Mr. Nielsen: Because they are hungry.

Mr. Hovdebo: —when this government has turned its back on its second most important customer by joining this embargo and forcing the Soviets to buy Argentinian wheat at prices $40 per tonne higher than the Canadian price?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, the situation is that 3.8 million tonnes is what it is expected Canada will export to the Soviet Union in the present crop year. With respect to the next crop year, as I explained last week, the discussion is going on among members of the cabinet. A decision will be announced in due course, but no decision has yet been made.

MULTICULTURALISM

ANTI-GERMAN REMARKS OF MAURICE CARTER

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism.

An hon. Member: What is this, a Liberal holiday?

Mr. Nielsen: Another one? It's Monday, and there is another one coming.

Mr. Lang: In view of the fact that Mr. Maurice Carter has made anti-German remarks which were a slur on the Canadian-German identity and an insult to all people of German origin, I would like to ask the minister if the federal government participated in any sponsorship of Mr. Carter's involvement with the Le Mans race, as indicated in an editorial in The Toronto Sun this morning.

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State, Multiculturalism): First, Madam Speaker, I might say that if we are looking at empty spaces, there are a lot more over there than there are over here today.

An hon. Member: There are empty heads over there.

Mr. Fleming: I will not comment on empty heads. The federal government did not participate in this particular car, its program or its race at Le Mans. I am pleased to say there had been an approach made for us to participate but an agreement was not reached. I hope I speak not only for the government and members on this side, but all members of this House when I say we find the comments made by that particular individual to be repugnant. They do not represent Canada's long and close relationship with a military ally, Germany, nor our sense of commitment to our own German-Canadian community.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

LIMOUSINE LICENCES AT TORONTO AIRPORT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, who I am sure is aware of the problems surrounding limousine licences at Toronto's Malton airport. The origin of that problem is that licences cannot be issued to individuals.

The question I ask the minister is this. Is the minister aware that the companies, which are the only ones under his rule who can obtain a licence at the moment, are now requiring their drivers, if they wish to work, to enter into contracts whereby they pay all the costs of the car, all the gas, all the maintenance and, further, that they pay the owners the sum of not less than $50,000 a contract, a contract which also allows those owners to fire them on 30 days' notice without returning any of the money they paid?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am aware that the situation varies from one airport to another, but generally speaking a contract is entered into and the terms of the contract have to be applied.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, it is true that the contracts vary from airport to airport. It is also true, and surely the minister recognizes this, that to require Canadians to pay for the right to work is not a Canadian tradition.

My supplementary to the minister is this. Will he undertake a full inquiry of the terms surrounding some of the contracts at Toronto's Malton airport? Is he, further, aware that one of the drivers, Peter Patsiopoulis, who has attempted to have this clause clarified in court, has been unable to do so because the provincial courts will not deal with his suit for unlawful dismissal as it is a federal licence. Will the minister undertake to review Mr. Patsiopoulis' case and consider urgently granting Mr. Patsiopoulis a temporary licence so that he may continue to earn his living as a Canadian while this matter is pursued through the courts?

Mr. Pepin: I will do so, Madam Speaker, but I do not see anything particularly distasteful in a worker providing his equipment. Many people do that every day.

ENERGY

OIL PRICING—UNILATERAL IMPOSITION OF SETTLEMENT IF AGREEMENT NOT REACHED WITH ALBERTA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. A few moments ago the Deputy Prime Minister indicated that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made an offer to the province of Alberta on a very short-term basis, with the consent of the cabinet.

Did the minister, also with the consent and knowledge of the cabinet, yesterday over television say that if there was no agreement, the federal government was going to impose a settlement on the province of Alberta with regard to oil pricing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Here again, Madam Speaker, it is a question of the transcript, but my information is that the minister was answering a hypothetical question about what would happen if there was no agreement by the end of June and if Alberta moved unilaterally. My understanding is that the minister indicated that then Canada would have to consider whether unilateral action on the part of Alberta would mean unilateral action on the part of Canada.

Mr. Lambert: Does the Prime Minister feel that the federal government has authority to move in on any other province, including Ontario and Quebec, with regard to the export of electrical energy, which is also part of the energy question in this country, and that Alberta presents a special case only because public plundering is the theme of the day?

Mr. Trudeau: That seems more in the nature of an argument than a question, Madam Speaker. However, if the hon. member is asking a legal and constitutional question, the answer is, yes, of course the law is the same for all provinces: Alberta is no exception.

THE CONSTITUTION

OIL PRICING—SEPARATION FROM CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell us whether, during his consultations with the various provinces immediately after the Quebec referendum, he received from the governments of all the oil and gas producing provinces a firm agreement that the question of oil pricing should be kept separate from the question of the constitution?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I raised the problem and always clearly indicated to all premiers that I hoped that the basic rights of Canadians would not become a negotiable item. I think it would be fine this way. I raised the problem with each of the premiers and they told me that they did not intend to negotiate agreements on resources and basic rights of Canadians, including the fact that we then wanted to obtain a statement on the basic principles involved in drafting a new Canadian constitution.

● (1500)

[English]

Mr. Clark: I asked the question because yesterday, in his famous television interview, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated explicitly that there was an agreement on the part of the oil and gas producing provinces. The minister has said he raised the matter and there seemed to be some general positive response.

Is it the view of the Minister of Justice that he received a firm agreement of the kind referred to by the minister of energy yesterday from the oil and gas producing provinces, that the question of oil pricing should be separate from the question of the constitution?

Mr. Chrétien: I cannot say there was a firm agreement. I raised the problem of having to deal with the two matters at the same time. The indication I received from them was that they did not want to discuss the two at the same time—that the constitutional problem was one problem and that the pricing of oil was a different problem.

Mr. Clark: A final question to the Prime Minister. Why did the Minister of Energy say yesterday on television that there was an agreement, when the Minister of Justice says today there was not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I listened to the minister, Madam Speaker. Nobody is talking about a signed agreement tied down in every way. The impression I got from the minister's answer just now is compatible with what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said—that he pleaded with the premiers that they should not tie the rights of the people and the necessity to renew the constitution and to come in with a renewed federalism, with which the Leader of the Opposition agrees, to bilateral questions affecting energy, resources and other things.

To the extent that the Minister of Justice talked about this with all the premiers and that they seemed, if my understanding is the proper one, to say that it was a correct argument, then in that sense there was an agreement.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROSTITUTION IN VANCOUVER—PROSECUTION OF MEN WHO HARASS WOMEN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The hon. gentleman is aware, having met on Friday with the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, of the serious concern of residents of the Vancouver area about the large number of prostitutes, some as young as 11 or 12 years of age, in Vancouver's downtown streets.

What action does the minister intend to take in this serious situation? Specifically, will he assure the House that he will put an end to the double standard which presently exists in our law in that the woman who is harassing a man for purposes of prostitution is charged, but the man who is harassing women on the streets is let off? Will the minister assure us that these "Johns" will also be charged?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I recognize that there is a serious problem in light of the interpretation of the law by the courts. I understand that one of my predecessors, the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, was proposing to deal very rapidly with that question at the time he was responsible for the department.

As to the problem of how you treat the other parties, in this modern society we even have men prostitutes on the streets, so we have to look at all aspects. I would like to proceed as quickly as possible, because I recognize there are some problems with this kind of social development in Canada. I should like to deal with it as quickly as possible, and I hope that in order to achieve it I shall have the co-operation of the House.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ALTHOUSE—CIRCULATION BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE OF MATERIAL IN SUPPORT OF PLANT BREEDERS LEGISLATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 17(2) to present a question of privilege, notice of which was sent to your office on June 13. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) informed us as members of Parliament that it was his intention to circulate, as part of the Agriculture Canada farm letter, a draft of which is already published, an argument in favour of plant breeders' rights legislation, legislation that is still pending.

It is my contention, Madam Speaker, that to make such an argument at taxpayers' expense prior to the passage of the legislation is a breach of privilege on the part of the minister. He is presenting at taxpayers' expense an argument for a bill which is not the law of the land but is simply the policy of his party. As a result, I contend he is breaching his privilege as a minister of the Crown and I therefore move to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I would like to say a few words in support of the motion of the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). I think we are looking at something today which is the beginning of a very bad practice if it were to be carried on by other ministers of the Crown, namely, that in a newsletter of the Department of Agriculture the minister is talking about a policy in relation to which he hopes to produce a bill in the near future.

We do not have the bill before the House. We are not studying that particular bill. It is one which will be very controversial. Yet the minister is using a newsletter put out by his department to push a certain point of view about a bill which is to come before the House. Some may say we have white papers which argue a particular point of view before we consider government bills, or that we establish task forces which argue points of view before a government bill is put forward.

I suggest that those two methods are different. They are different because when a specific group of people, such as a task fore, sets out to study something, or a white paper is published, those points of view are made public in Parliament by a minister or by a department. In this case we find a minister taking it upon himself to present an argument for a bill in a newsletter put out by the Department of Agriculture. The department is not a political vehicle, it is a department of government and it is paid for by all of us. The minister is using that vehicle to make a partisan, political argument on behalf of himself and the Liberal party.

I think that is a rather dangerous practice to follow and I would ask your Honour to consider seriously whether or not the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre has a valid question of privilege on a matter which will be very controversial and important, not only in this country but all around the world. The minister has many vehicles at his disposal and many opportunities to make his arguments and to make them in such a way as to conform with the past practices of this House and of the ministers which have preceded him. I wish the hon. gentleman would utilize those practices instead of starting down a new path which could lead to an infringement of the privileges of all of us. It would be something which he, as a minister, could do but which you and I Madam Speaker, could not do since we lack the facilities of the Minister of Agriculture. We may wish to present argument which is similar to the hon. gentleman's or which is quite different from his, but we do not have the same forum, the same vehicle, because we do not sit in the ministry as Minister of Agriculture.

This is an infringement of our privileges as members of Parliament as we try to represent our constituencies equally, regardless of whether or not we have a cabinet post, whether we are government backbenchers or whether we sit in the opposition in this chamber.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, if I understood the last speaker correctly, I thought I heard him say that the bill had not been presented to the House. The bill was given first reading, Madam Speaker, on May 29. Both bills pertaining to the Seeds Act are available for public scrutiny. They are available to anyone who wants them. If I understood the hon. member correctly, I thought he said they were not presented.

The newsletter we sent out was circulated after these bills were presented to the House. Departmental publications have been used on many occasions to inform people about proposed bills, so when the hon. gentleman says we are creating a precedent, following a new practice, I do not agree. We want the information to be given to the public. Many hon. members have said we are lax in informing the public or that we do not do it in a proper fashion. This is just a way of trying to inform the public about the legislation, an attempt to answer some of the things which were said about the proposed legislation even before it was presented to the House.

The hon. member finds that annoying. How does he think I feel when someone—and I am sure it is not he—is guilty of such a misdemeanour as to criticize plant breeders' rights or any other piece of legislation before it is presented to the House, describing how catastrophic it was going to be to the public and so on? Madam Speaker, I ask you to look at what I and my department have done and at how we have tried to inform the public of just some of the pertinent facts about this legislation. Many things have been said in the past, and there have been other publications published in this nation also with the support, I understand, of some government funds. Perhaps the hon. member should also mention those funds which were made available for publication, again concerning a piece of legislation which had not been presented to the House.

I am glad this legislation is presented to the House. It has received first reading in the House, and I will be even happier when it is given second reading so that it can to go the committee and be thoroughly discussed. The letter of information, as I call it, can be discussed there. It is customary for my department and this ministry to send out to the public from time to time information concerning bills which are presented to the House. This is something which is not really new. Your Honour will also find, if you investigate the hon. member's charge that this minister uses his offices to propagate philosophies and so forth, that this minister is responsible for a department which from time to time has been awarded the highest awards for informing the public the most about what it is doing.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I should like to take a moment or two to speak in support of the question of privilege raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). I do so by recalling an incident which comes to my mind. It took place a number of years ago. It involved a person who is now quite ill and for whom those of us who have been around here for awhile have a great deal of regard, namely, the hon. Judy LaMarsh. It was when we were debating in this House a piece of legislation known as the Canada Pension Plan.

It just so happens—I hope it does not spoil the argument—that I was very much a protagonist of that piece of legislation and that I was annoyed about some of the attacks which were being made on it in the press and in other ways. I had the audacity to speak to my friend Judy and ask her if she could put out some leaflet or some advertising answering these arguments and telling of the virtues and benefits of the legislation. Her reply to me was that she had thought about it and that she wanted to do it but that she was told by Treasury Board and others that it was not proper to spend public money advocating or telling of the virtues of a piece of legislation which has not been passed.

I suggest that if that practice applied then—that would be in the middle 1960s—the same rule ought still to apply. It is hardly proper, if there is a piece of legislation before this House—there being two sides to the argument—that one side should have taxpayers' money to state that side and the other side should not have that opportunity.

I suggest that my friend is right in raising this as a question of privilege, because it does interfere with the privileges of free and open debate on the floor of this House for the government side to have that special recourse to the treasury.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I only want to give a specific detail. Let us come back to modern times, to 1980. I merely wish to point out that the bill is listed on page 10 of the order paper as Bill C-32.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must rule that I do not see a prima facie case of privilege in the motion presented by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). I fail to see how the privileges of the House have been breached by too much information. It seems to me that the minister has used customary or usual means of communicating with the population in order to tell the people what were his intentions or the main points in a particular bill. It seems to me that this is a normal practice.

The hon. member did speak about a breach of privilege of the minister. The privileges which ministers enjoy in this House are not different from those which other hon. members enjoy.

Mr. Knowles: Oh?

Madam Speaker: I think perhaps the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre would be better equipped to discuss the bill because this additional information has been given to the population in general and, by that fact, to himself.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) invoked a precedent. I always listen very carefully to what that hon. member has to say about points of procedure. However, it seems to me that if it was the practice of the then treasury board not to adopt this kind of policy of informing the public, that has to do with the practice of the treasury board; that practice might be changed today, as might be evidenced by what has happened and by what the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre is objecting to.

I really do not see a matter of privilege in this question, and I therefore must rule that it is not a question of privilege.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FORRESTALL—CORRECTION OF SECONDER OF S.O. 43 MOTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, earlier today in seeking approval for a motion under Standing Order 43 having to do with the release of technical information to maritime unions—which I am sure your Honour will recall—I inadvertently mentioned as seconder the distinguished hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell). While I know she is all for freedom of information, it would be wrong for me to have referred to her as seconding my motion when I intended the seconder to be the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). I extend my apologies to the hon. member for South West Nova and to Hansard. I ask that that correction be made.

Again, it is not that the hon. lady is not all for freedom of information; it is just that this happens to be in conflict with the government she supports.

PETITION

REQUEST THAT PROPOSED SALE OF CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC LIMITED PLANT IN PETERBOROUGH, ONT., BE BLOCKED BY FIRA

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, with your permission I would like to present a petition signed by 3,655 members and friends of the United Electrical Workers' Union, which is Local 524, in Peterborough, Ontario. This local represents employees of the Peterborough plant of Canadian General Electric Limited, and the petition asks that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) meet with the union representatives to hear their grievance and that the sale of the power cable and building wire division of Canadian General Electric to Pirelli Cable Limited, a foreign-controlled company, be blocked by the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

On behalf of the petitioners I ask for serious consideration of their requests by the Government of Canada.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 203—Mr. Herbert:

1. For each fiscal year (a) 1977 (b) 1978, what was the total revenue and net earnings or deficits for the Export Development Corporation?

2. For each year, what was the total (a) of direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits conferred by the government on the corporation (b) of loans, advances or guarantees extended by the government to the corporation (c) investment by the government in the corporation both before and after any write-off?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State, Trade): In so far as Export Development Corporation is concerned:

1. Total revenue 1977 $138.964 million
   Total revenue 1978 $183.213 million
   Total net earnings 1977 $16.847 million
   Total net earnings 1978 $31.730 million

2. (a) None.

(b) Loans by the Government of Canada to the corporation at the Crown corporation rate:

1977	$150.000 million;
1978	None.

(c) Investment by the government in the corporation:

	Paid Capital	Retained Earnings	Total Equity
Dec. 31/77	$125,000,000	$ 76,251,000	$201,251,000
Dec. 31/78	$225,000,000	$107,981,000	$332,981,000

There was no write off.

BRANCH LINE SUBSIDIES—CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Question No. 224—Mr. Herbert:

1. In the past ten years, what amount was paid by the government in branch line subsidies related to the cost of moving grain at Crowsnest Pass rates and what amount was borne by the railways?

2. What is the average cost per ton of grain moved under these two subsidies?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): In response to part 1 of the question, it should be noted that there is no specific subsidy paid for the movement of grain under Crowsnest Pass rates. Subsidies are paid under sections 256 and 258 of the Railway Act in respect of branch line losses, regardless of the commodities carried or the location of the line. Therefore, total branch line subsidies include subsidies paid for lines handling little or no grain traffic, and grain traffic is handled on profitable branch lines for which no subsidies are paid.

The amount paid in branch line subsidies over the past ten years is shown in the attached table. Section 256 payments include both prairie and non-prairie lines. Section 258 payments are all in respect of Prairie lines, and the majority of traffic handled on these lines is grain. However, as mentioned above, no separation of grain and non-grain traffic is made for subsidy purposes.

With regard to the second section of part 1 and to part 2 of the question, estimates of the average cost of moving grain, and the portions of these costs covered by revenue from statutory rates, by government subsidy and by the railways, were made by the Commission on the Costs of Transporting Grain by Rail—Snavely commission. These estimates are available in the commission's report, volume I, October, 1976, (chapter V). An update of these estimates to 1977 levels was prepared by Snavely, King and Associates in their report "1977 Costs and Revenues Incurred by the Railways in the Transportation of Grain under the Statutory Rates", September, 1978, (Chapter IV). Copies of these reports are available from the grains group upon request.

Subsidy payments made to the railways under sections 256 and 258 of the Railway Act during fiscal years 1970/71 to 1979/80

Fiscal Year	Section 256 Uneconomic Branch Lines	Section 258 Designated Branch Lines	Jointly Under Sections 256 and 258
1970/71	— (1)	— (1)
1971/72	14,800	33,282,000
1972/73	16,848	22,883,859
1973/74	11,488,036	25,247,990
1974/75	1,030,160	85,504,766
1975/76	240,108	108,684,913
1976/77	649,157	104,419,236
1977/78	6,549,314	67,022,152
1978/79	11,098,842	98,854,045
1979/80	12,689,625	105,850,758	68,900,000 (2)
Total	43,776,890	651,749,719	68,900,000

(1) For the fiscal year 1970/71 there were no payments made over and above the normal payments under section 413 of the Railway Act.

(2) This payment is in respect of claims under sections 256 and 258, filed by (1) Canadian National Railways for the claim years 1971-1976 inclusive and (2) Canadian Pacific Limited for the claim years 1970-1976 inclusive.

REFUGEES ADMITTED TO CANADA

Question No. 249—Mr. Herbert:

1. In the past five years, how many refugees have been admitted to Canada from (a) Ethiopia (b) Zimbabwe Rhodesia (c) Vietnam (d) Bangladesh (e) the Gaza Strip, the West Bank of the Jordan River, Lebanon and Syria (f) Sudan (g) Cyprus (h) Somalia?

2. Is there a quota or any limit on the number of refugees that can be admitted to Canada from these countries in the current fiscal year?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration):

1.	1975	1976	1977	1978	1979 (prelim.)	Total
(a) Ethiopia	1	1		24	27	53
(b) Zimbabwe Rhodesia
(c) Vietnam (i)	3258	2311	765	1755	24,815	32,904
(d) Bangladesh
(e) Gaza Strip (ii)	4	1	20	6		31
Egypt (iii)		2	4	1	2	9
Jordan (iii)		5	3			8
Lebanon (iv)	8	6034	3580	1122	384	11,128
Syria		9	3			13
(f) Sudan			1	1	2	4
(g) Cyprus		4				4
(h) Somalia				1	1	2

Notes

(i) includes all Indo-Chinese designated class (i.e.) persons from Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

(ii) Israel and North Sinai included.

(iii) There are no separate data for the West Bank of the Jordan River.

(iv) includes special measures Lebanese Humanitarian Program (discontinued August 15, 1979).
Figures above: (a) include both persons meeting the UN Convention definition of a refugee and others selected for humanitarian reasons; (b) reflect country of last permanent residence rather than country of nationality of the refugees.

2. At the beginning of 1979 Canada established for the first time an annual refugee settlement plan, projecting the source and number of refugees which Canada would have the absorptive capacity to resettle in this time period. The refugee plan is an estimate of the appropriate level of Canadian involvement in international refugee resettlement efforts, taking into account existing commitments, international developments, the absorptive capacity of Canada and the provinces, and the availability of federal, provincial and non-governmental resettlement services. The plan will be developed on an annual basis in consultation with the province and non-governmental resettlement provinces. The plan will be developed on an annual basis in consultation with the provinces and voluntary agencies as part of the annual immigration level exercise.

The annual refugee plan incorporated a target of 10,000 refugees for 1979, comprising 5,000 Indo-Chinese, 2,300 Eastern Europeans, 500 South Americans, and 200 convention refugees from other parts of the world, as well as contingency reserve of 2,000.

Order Paper Questions

On June 21, 1979, the federal government announced that the 1979 refugee intake of Indo-Chinese refugees would be increased by 3,000, using the 2,000 contingency reserve in the plan and adding an additional 1,000. This brought the total government commitment to 11,000 refugee landings in 1979. A further 1,000 family reunification landings were expected to come direct from Vietnam. On July 18, 1979, Canada expanded the previous commitment to make it possible for a total of 50,000 Indo-Chinese refugees to be admitted by the end of 1980. Then on March 19, 1980, a federal cabinet decision was made to modify the program to admit an additional 10,000 government-sponsored refugees before the end of 1980, bringing the total for 1979-80 to 60,000.

The refugee plan for 1980 calls for the admission of 5,000 refugees apart from those from Indo-China. The targets are for 3,000 from Eastern Europe, 500 from Latin America, 500 from other world areas, and a contingency reserve of 1,000. Up to 300 of this contingency reserve was recently committed to assist with Cubans who have sought asylum in the Peruvian Embassy in Havana.

NATIONAL LIBRARY PURCHASE ACCOUNT

Question No. 276—Mr. Herbert:

In each of the past five years, what amount was transferred to the National Library purchase account?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Library as follows:

The following amounts were approved in an appropriation bill by parliament for the National Library book purchase account for the years indicated below.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—LAWYERS ON STAFF

Question No. 621—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed on staff in the Department of Employment and Immigration?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Six lawyers, employed by the Department of Justice, are assigned to the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the associated Department of Employment and Immigration.

MINISTRY OF STATE FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—PERSONS IN PUBLIC RELATIONS

Question No. 625—Mr. Howie:

How many persons engaged in public relations, publicity or media relations, are employed on staff in the Ministry of State for Economic Development?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Four officers.

SPRUCE BUDWORM SPRAYING OPERATION—NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 848—Mr. Howie:

1. Did the government assist New Brunswick with a spruce budworm spraying operation in (a) 1978 (b) 1979 and, if so (i) in what amount (ii) what areas were sprayed?

2. Was an analysis of the spraying operation made and was it generally considered effective?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment):

1. (a) No, except for technical advice for pre-and post-spray analysis.

   (b) No, except for technical advice for pre-and post-spray analysis.

2. Yes. The analysis, carried out jointly by Forest Protection Limited, the New Brunswick Department of Natural Resources and the Maritimes Forest Research Centre, showed that the spray program in both years was generally successful in meeting its objective of tree protection.

Mr. Collenette: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ORDER IN COUNCIL RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF MINISTRY OF STATE FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Prime Minister) moved:

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Edward Richard Schreyer, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada:

May It Please Your Excellency:

The House of Commons, having considered the proposed text of the order in council tabled in the House on 21 April 1980, in relation to the establishment of a Ministry of State for Social Development, prays that the making of the said order in council be approved.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I rise to address this motion to create an important new concept in the development of social policy in Canada, a small ministry to be known as the Ministry of State for Social Development. The ministry is being established to assist the government in integrating current social programs and developing more equitable social policies for the future.

[Translation]

The 1960s and 1970s were a period of social reform in Canada. In those years we developed the Canada Assistance Plan, the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, the guaranteed income supplement, Medicare and a host of other new social programs. We greatly improved family allowances and old age security and we pioneered the use of tax credits to deliver child benefits.

These programs have contributed greatly to the well-being of all Canadians and they are something of which all Canadians can be proud. But they were not without problems. The integration among programs was not always perfect. Costs sometimes ran higher than they might have in order to achieve the desired results. It was not always clear what government priorities were meant to be. Moreover, we have not yet solved the great social problems facing our country. The distribution of income in Canada is largely unchanged despite all the social policy changes of the 1960s and 1970s. Crime and poverty have not disappeared. Today, Canada has more poor children than ten years ago and the problems of many pensioners are still with us. The majority of Canadians still have no pension coverage other than that financed through the public sector.

[English]

We felt, on returning to office, that we could do even better than we had and we vowed to continue to improve the policy-making process to allow us to achieve that.

Hon. members have already heard in the Speech from the Throne of our government's determination to deal with such pressing social issues as job creation and the incomes of the elderly. Members will recall as well the commitment of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the recent election campaign to finance, over the long haul, additional social spending by reductions in existing programs or by increases in government revenues. Our commitment to social justice and fiscal reponsibility is clear. What I am suggesting to the House today is that we cannot hope to achieve these goals—to improve the substance of policy—unless we first improve the process by which social policy is set.

This concept will already be familiar to some members of this House, particularly those on the benches opposite. In addressing this motion, I wish to acknowledge the role of the previous government in moving toward the integration of policy setting and expenditure management. I hope, therefore, that members opposite will want to give ready assent to this motion.

They, too, wish to see our limited dollars go where they are most needed. To that end, it is essential, first, that ceilings be placed on expenditures and that all expenditure growth be carefully controlled, based upon careful planning and projection; second, that new high priority programs should be financed largely out of the proceeds from the elimination of other expenditures; third, that ministers must make conscious trade-offs among various possibilities in deciding what new proposals to lay before the House; and, fourth, that the choice of such programs should benefit from the advice of all the ministers within a sector.

[Translation]

We must put well-established limits to expenditures; we also need a mechanism by which ministers can properly consider their priorities, compare one policy proposal with another and choose among them on the basis of clear trade-offs among the almost infinite array of policy proposals ministers face. Mr. Speaker, only in that way can we be certain that the dollars will go where they are needed most and only in that way can we be sure that all departments work together. Our proposals will ensure that all the relevant ministers and departments are genuinely involved in decision-making and that each is aware what others are doing. I must mention, however, that our concern is certainly not to save money at the expense of social, cultural and legal programs. Rather, it is to ensure that the money which we do spend—some $26 billion of it next year—goes where it will do the most good.

I wish now to speak about the elements of this process. A series of resource "envelopes" have been created, comprising all the programs in a given policy area. The social policy and justice and legal envelopes with which we are concerned today are the largest of these by far in dollar terms, for they include all the programs of Justice, Solicitor General, the Penitentiary Service, RCMP, CMHC, Environment Canada, the very important Department of Employment and Immigration, as well as the departments of Health and Welfare, Veterans Affairs, Indian and Northern Development, all of the cultural organizations which report to Parliament through the Secretary of State, and both research councils.

Once the cabinet committee has received the allocation for its sectoral envelope it knows its expenditure ceiling for that fiscal year. There may be room for expansion under that ceiling—for example our social policy envelope for 1980-81 will be increased by an amount sufficient to pay for our increased guaranteed income supplement which, as we know, Mr. Speaker, was raised by $35 a month by an act the House of Commons and the Senate approved a few weeks ago. But normally once that ceiling has been reached, any new expenditures must be financed through the cancellation of old, lower priority programs. Thus ministers must sit together and make trade-offs. They must clearly decide upon their priorities and they must do it together. That is what I mean when I say that all ministers are involved and that choices are now not Indian Affairs choices or Health and Welfare choices but social policy choices—for all these areas are considered together and decisions are made collectively. In a very real sense there is now an over-all social affairs budget, which in time should permit much better co-ordination of social policies.

• (1530)

[English]

I wish now to turn to the proposal to establish a ministry of state which will assist the cabinet committee of social development ministers, among other things. The terms of reference of the proposed ministry are before the House.

The kinds of deliberations I have described today require very considerable support. The committee deliberations must be informed by a thorough knowledge of all the operating programs in the social, justice, legal and cultural policy fields. They must be supported by an accurate, up-to-date allocation system so that ministers always know their exact budgetary situation. They must be informed by a competent monitoring of social, demographic and economic trends so that decisions take proper account of what lies ahead. They must be informed by properly designed evaluations of program delivery. They must be informed by thorough liaison at all bureaucratic levels so that the ministers' officials know enough about what is happening in other areas to propose good policies and to suggest places where duplication may be eliminated. They must be informed by a well-developed planning capacity to suggest creative improvements to social, cultural and legal policies. Finally, they must be informed by a thorough knowledge of provincial government activities in an area where provincial jurisdiction is crucial.

All of this requires a new structure. The one we are proposing is a small, highly competent ministry staff consisting mainly of professionals. My feeling is that eventually a ministry of some 50 to 60 officers will be needed to perform these functions. A ministry of comparable but slightly larger size is performing a similar function for the committee of economic development ministers. The ministry will advise the committee chairman. It will help ministers to set priorities and allocate resources. It will increase the capacity of ministers to establish trade-offs. It will support the re-evaluation of programs, but most of all it will help integrate social programs within an over-all social development strategy.

[Translation]

It is our intention to create new policies which will attack these problems directly by the creation of carefully directed and closely integrated policies which will allow the federal and provincial governments and all parts of our large federal social policy apparatus to work together. It is our intention, also, to foster and develop Canadian culture and to enhance our identities as Canadians. It is our hope that we will solve, by dynamic leadership, some of the social policy dilemmas which have beset us throughout recent decades. The new policy co-ordination and management systems which I have been discussing are an important element in these intentions. The new Ministry of State for Social Development will be a keystone in this process. I appeal to all members of the House for their support in the creation of this body, for it is important to all Canadians.

[English]

The creation of this ministry is a follow-up on what was started by our previous administration prior to last spring when my colleague, Mr. Andras, became the first minister in charge of the Board of Economic Development Ministers where all departments were co-ordinated that way. The following administration that was in power last spring and last year established that ministry, but they did not have the time to proceed with this motion in the House of Commons. I was pleased to take over that responsibility from the then secretary of state, Mr. McDonald. I had occasion to work with the group that was established under Mr. Rawson, who was the former deputy minister of national health and welfare. In the last little while I have been involved in the program, I think it has been quite useful to have all ministers of different departments together to see what is happening in all those fields in which we are spending $26 billion every year.

[Translation]

Because, Mr. Speaker, I know that all members of this House believe that it is very important to maintain in Canada the services and social benefits implemented during the last few generations. I think that we can all be proud of the progress accomplished in the field of social security and cultural policy and of the sophistication that we have reached in the last decades in the social and cultural fields. Our work is not over yet, but it is very healthy to review all programs within a given period.

In the past, as I saw myself when I was President of the Treasury Board, decisions have very often been made because of an immediate need to reduce government expenditures, and sometimes, this was done very arbitrarily. We hope that by establishing the Ministry of State for Social Development, all ministers who have a role to play in the social vocation accepted by the government or Parliament on behalf of all Canadians will now be able collectively to analyse our priorities and budgets, and to identify the programs which have lost their usefulness or which must now give way to higher priorities in the present context, and that the ministers will be able to do so collectively in full knowledge of what is happening. For my part, in the last few months, when I had the pleasure of presiding at the meetings of the Committee on Social Development, I saw that even though the ministry had not yet been officially established, it was already operating as it had done under the previous administration. I was able to see that the ministers involved can now know what are the priorities, what are in general the claims made on the government and what are the available resources.

We have been able collectively to appreciate the potential which exists within the administration, and to change our priorities and budget allocations so that the new priorities can take over from other programs which might be still useful in society, but which must now, in light of our experience over the last decades, give way to new priorities, because governments and Parliaments must always consider what constitute the priority for the population when they sit in the House.

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the minister with respect to his additional responsibility. I think he has three responsibilities in concrete terms—federal-provincial relations, Minister of Justice and now Minister of State for Social Development. I was quite impressed with the comments of the minister respecting the fact that he hoped the ministry would be a small and highly competent one. So say we all. Also I should like to take the opportunity to wish him well with it, particularly in connection with the new bureaucracy he inherited. Mr. Rawson and his staff are highly competent and will do their best to keep the minister out of trouble.

It seems to me the hopes for the ministry in terms of integrating ministerial responsibilities and the workload of bureaucracies may well be realized. But this may be more than counterbalanced by the fact that, at least for an early period, it will rain confusion upon most people who are trying to attach responsibility as to who is responsible for what in the social policy field. I say that in spite of the minister's comments. If we read the order in council outlining the responsibilities, we see that the minister is not responsible for simply going around and getting the best and latest thoughts from the various ministers and delivering them somewhere. He is in fact charged with the responsibility of developing and leading. Indeed, the language used in the order in council encompasses responsibility for developing and leading in respect of policy initiatives in the whole field of social policy and social development.

I do not think one ought to see the intention of the government as simply one of better management of resources. In fact, I think it is otherwise. The intention of the language in this order in council is to create ultimately a fairly vast bureaucratic network dealing with social policy development. However, other members wish to raise that point in more detail, and my concern today is otherwise.

I would like to assume that the minister would like some helpful thoughts on how he might go about his new responsibility. One of the things that has always bothered me about any new bureaucratic arrangement is that somehow there is the assumption that life begins when you start. This is a common thought by most human beings, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker.

It seems to me that the social development field, if it is going to get anywhere, has to take some cognizance of the past. I recognize that one may say, "There go the Conservatives again talking about the past", but it has always seemed to me useful to see where we have been so that we might better find out where we ought to be going.

I am glad I spent a little extra time this morning feverishly trying to find out where we were in 1960. The minister talked about 20 years ago and gave a recitation, as is the Liberal party's wont, about all the wonderful things it has done on behalf of Canadians. For that I want to thank him. I think it is also worth while reminding people exactly where we were in 1960 so we might see where we want to be in the year 2000. I would like to spend a moment or two on that.

In 1960, oh blessed day, the Conservatives were in power. You may remember that Mr. Speaker. The prime minister, of course, was the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. The Conservative party had 50 seats in the province of Quebec. Major General Georges Vanier was Governor General, it was the Twenty-fourth Parliament and the outlook for the nation was reasonably good. As reported in the Toronto Star, unemployment was down to "moderate levels", and national revenues were rising. The chances, said the Toronto Telegram, for a balanced budget for 1960-61 were excellent. The real issues of the day, again according to the Toronto Telegram, included defence and finance. Even then they were talking about what kind of defence policy this country wanted and how much we were willing to pay for it.

That year, 1960, was a leap year. That was the year the Hon. John Turner, who was then a lawyer from Montreal whose major claim to fame at that point, as I recall, was that he danced with Princess Margaret, was asked, since it was a leap year, who might ask him to marry. He said he would rather drop dead than answer the question. For the record, John Turner was married in 1963.

A United States study at the same time showed that only 3 per cent of working women had ambitions to be executives. McLean-Hunter started a new magazine which was called Canadian Homes and Gardens. As you flip through the pages of Maclean's and Canadian Homes and Gardens of 1960 you will see ads promoting brand names as quality standard. There were no no-name products at that time. Metrical was brand new, and it has become, of course, part of the flab-conscious society in which we live. Metrication started a little later. Governments were still fighting the same dilemma; they were cutting costs and personnel, according to the Toronto Star. The employment picture was pretty good, and salaries are interesting to read. A plumber in Halifax made $1.25 an hour, a carpenter in Montreal made $2.35 an hour, an electrician in Toronto made $3.40 an hour, a labourer in Winnipeg made $1.65 an hour, and a plumber in Vancouver made $3.14 an hour.

The year 1960 was the year of the duck-tail haircut, the year of the cha cha cha, and the year of the TV show "Mr. Lucky". Some hon. members may remember that. It was the golden age of live TV. Jack Parr put us to bed. Johnny Carson now does that. It was all in black and white, of course, because we were not sure about colour television, and, indeed, there was some thought that it may offer distressing opportunities, or the lack of opportunities for reproductive possibilities.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crombie: Hon. members may remember that issue.

The "Sound of Music" was on Broadway, Mitch Miller was singing along on Sunday night, just before Ed Sullivan, and Elvis Presley was big—very big. We remember Connie Francis, and Anita Bryant was on the hit parade with "Paper Roses". We had Brenda Lee, Fabian, Paul Anka with "Puppy Love", and we could never forget "The Itsy Bitsy Teeny Weeny Yellow Polka Dot Bikini". "South Pacific" came out that year in film and the album sold millions.

The streetcar fare in Toronto was six tickets for a dollar. You could get a free car wash with a $3 gas purchase. If you drove a Volkswagen I guess the problem was that you could not get $3 worth of gas into it. Gasoline was 19 cents and 20 cents a gallon.

A house in downtown Toronto, the house that you dreamed about with six bedrooms, two bathrooms and a private driveway, could be purchased at Avenue Road and St. Clair for about $22,000, and that is roughly the geographic centre of metropolitan Toronto. You could still buy a number of houses in Cabbagetown at the time for $7,000 to $8,000 each. A beautiful dress in Eaton's cost $25. Button-down collars were on their way in and Bob Newhart was a new comic with a button-down mind. Medic Alert was just a gimmick and you had to send away to California, the home of all gimmicks, to get one. The Richardsons from Regina became the champions in curling.

On the front page of Maclean's in 1960, and throughout one whole monthly issue of Maclean's, there was nothing about energy except one thing, and that was on page 24 where there were six lines as follows:

> Natural gas will answer an ever-increasing proportion of Canada's energy needs in the 60s, plans for building new pipelines, looping present lines and provisions for exporting gas to the U.S. are calling for a $1 billion expenditure.

Energy did not occupy anywhere near the space that it does today. A column by Blair Fraser in Maclean's was headlined "The backbenchers' unemployment problem—they're able, anxious and bored stiff". That was in 1960. A column by Leslie Roberts, a freelancer from Montreal, entitled "The maritimes should secede from Canada" appeared. In those days Nathan Phillips was the mayor of Toronto and Jean Drapeau was the mayor of Montreal. The mayor of Moncton was M. M. Baig, and the mayor of Yellowknife was Ted Horton.

Those were the good old days when sugar was nine cents a pound, bread was 15 cents a loaf, sirloin was $1 a pound, milk was about 24 cents a quart, and now it is 79 cents a litre, whatever that is.

Ottawa had a brand new police station in 1960. You might remember that, Mr. Speaker; you probably voted for it. Ottawa has since outgrown that one and is now looking to build a brand new one. A magazine article in 1960 dealt with the eyesores of Ottawa, one of them being the temporary war buildings. After 35 years, those buildings are just coming down.

● (1550)

The best movies were "Sunrise at Campobello", "Elmer Gantry", "Inherit the Wind" and "Spartacus". Jack Kennedy was running for president. A Bill of Rights was brought into the House by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. Alvin Hamilton was minister of northern affairs and solving bear problems in national parks by having their derrières painted red to distinguish the good ones from the bad ones. Marcel Lambert was parliamentary secretary to the minister of national revenue.

Peter Lougheed was the vice-president and director of the Mannix Company in Calgary. For those who are interested in the continuing struggle, Marc Lalonde was teaching law at the University of Montreal and, indeed, was an assistant to the Hon. Davie Fulton. Jean Chrétien was practising law and trying to get a job with the former member for Eglinton, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp.

Vance Packard wrote the "Waste Makers", Joy Adamson wrote "Born Free" and William Shirer wrote "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich". Coin-operated dry cleaners were a new fangled idea from the United States. Floyd Patterson was the heavyweight champ. The Pittsburgh Pirates won the National League and the New York Yankees won the American League.

Canadian athletes did extremely well in 1960. Barbara Wagner and Robert Paul won the world's pairs competition. The fixed bankrate in 1962 was 6 per cent. This year interest rates soared to 17 per cent, and they are now dropping to around 12 per cent. To date the Argonauts had not won the Grey Cup. In 1960 the government spent $1,242,000,000 on pensions and family allowances for Canadians. Today the income security branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare spends $9.7 billion.

In 1960 a licence to do business cost cabbies $15,000 in Montreal and Toronto and now it costs about $45,000. Cigarettes were 40 cents to 45 cents a package. A cab driver remembers TTC tickets as costing a quarter for two or a dollar for eight. The rule of thumb when shopping was that you paid about $3 for a bag of groceries. Now you are lucky if you can get the bag for that! A hair wash and a hair set in 1960 cost $3 and you tipped a quarter. To rent a house in a relatively good part of Toronto, let us say Etobicoke, with five bedrooms, one bath and parking was $135 per month.

In giving those little bits of information, Mr. Speaker, I hope I did not take too long, but I wanted to make the point that there were many things 20 years ago which we felt were important and which were not, and there were many things to which we did not pay attention and they were important. If we are going to have any social policy in this country that is useful to Canadians in the year 2000, then it is not, in my view at any rate, useful for us simply to rest on the recitation of the social measures which this House has agreed to in the past.

Indeed, there may be changes in the future, between now and the year 2000, for which we can see some sense now. It is always difficult to prophesy. I think there is an oversupply today of prophets, futurists and soothsayers of one kind or another who will tell your fortune and your future. There are people who will tell your future through cards, through tea-leaves or through polls. There are various ways in which people try to determine the future.

There are also straws in the wind, and one can get a sense of what the year 2000 might have to offer. I remember a line from Bismarck who said, when someone asked him how he figured out foreign policy for the future, "I catch the wind of God and the trees and hang on". Perhaps that is good advice for the minister of social policy. If I can give an example of when we tend not to pay attention but ought to, on August 8, 1960 a man by the name of Munro Rathbone who had an office in Rockefeller Plaza made a decision. He was the chief executive officer for Exxon. The decision he made was to cut back on the taxes being paid to the oil producing countries. Within a few days of Mr. Rathbone making his decision, the other oil companies followed suit and within three months, by September 9, 1960 the hard hit oil producing countries got together in the ancient and fabled city of Baghdad and organized an outfit known as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries—OPEC. It was not until about 1973, 1974, or 1975 that people in the west heard of this organization. As hon. members will remember, it really took the Yom Kippur war to bring OPEC to the attention of the United States. It had been formed in 1960, however.

In the same way, I think we can get a sense of what is coming by the year 2000. Most futurists, those people who try to figure out what is coming at us in the future, agree that fundamental to all changes in the future at any time is that one will find a change in the pattern of behaviour which we establish for the production, distribution and consumption of our goods and services. If there are changes in the production, distribution and consumption of our goods and services, there will ultimately be changes in art, music, the kinds of songs we listen to, the kind of art we like, our sense of neighbourhood, our sense of who we are and our sense of time and space. This all has an effect on families and institutions such as the church and so on.

If hon. members have not had the opportunity over the last couple of months to read Alvin Toffler's new book, "The Third Wave"—I get no royalties at all for this—I would recommend that they do so. I would recommend it to anyone who is interested in a quick gaze into what the future will bring. In brief, he argues that over the next 20 years, indeed the next decade, there will be striking changes relating to the workplace. Increasingly we will be able to do more work at home. As we move from the actual dealing with goods, the changes in technology and computer science, and thus in the flow of information and in communications, will allow us to do far more work at home. He refers to this change as the rebirth of the cottage and calls it the "electronic" cottage. There is kind of a whiff of the space age about the book.

This morning while I was shaving, I heard an announcement on the radio which said that the planning board of the city of Ottawa is, this very night, accepting suggestions from its citizens to relax, expand and otherwise modify—if hon. members remember the words as well as I—the zoning bylaws with respect to employment enterprises in residential areas. This is because they want to allow for an expansion in residential areas of work opportunities. It was not a big item and they do not have the trumpets out, but it is a straw in the wind. I think we will see more of a change in that connection.

Indeed, Toffler goes on to argue that the next 20 years will be characterized by a number of changes. There are four changes which he singles out. The first is that we will see a restrengthening, if not a rebirth, of the family. He is not referring to the family which we may know as well as the one we have, but to the institution of the family. As always, it will remain, but its specific form may change. In fact, he says there will be a number of forms and a variety of roles in this family.

Social Development Ministry

Recently the Toronto Star did an article on the kinds of families which are emerging today. There are an amazing number of kinds of families which are emerging with different roles. There are lots of people who are not going to have children. In fact, I gather there are lots of people who are not going to get married and have children. There are a variety of ways in which we are going to renew the family.

● (1600)

Second, neighbourhoods and places of living are going to be changed because the workplace and the living place, Toffler says, are going to be the same.

Third, the corporation will change. The corporation began as an economic instrument but it will increasingly be judged by its social policies as much as its economic policies. Indeed, that is already the case. It is increasingly being measured not only by its economic performance but by how well it manages the environment in which it is involved, by how well it deals with its employees and how well it organizes itself in relation to the social problems of its own employees. The corporation is already changing and will have changed even more so by the year 2000.

Fourth, Toffler says there will be a rebirth of the sense of community and the need for community. It may be very difficult for some people to see this but if we look around we can see that what the minister is involved in has indeed changed. Change is basic to the human condition, but so also, is order and continuity. If we look ahead 20 years we will see that our major problem of social development will be to find a way to deal with that change and convert it into order and continuity.

In the past we have relied upon the life rafts that have always been there—the church, the family, the neighbourhood and social groups. The minister's responsibility is to find ways to deal with the change that is coming—ways to pour new wine into old bottles. It is incumbent upon him to find ways of renewing our institutions—family, neighbourhood, church and social groups—so that change can be converted into order and continuity. It is within that context that I should like to use the time remaining to me to look at some very specific issues regarding social development in the 1980s.

First of all, over the next decade it will become essential to relate economic policy to social policy. For a long time there has been an artificial split between the two. The interdependence between economic policy and social policy is so clear in our everyday lives that we forget how important they ought to be in the organization of government services. Income security programs, for example, are not just a question of the right to social assistance; they can be affected by programs in relation to income tax, employment and manpower retraining as well.

Just the other day some questions were put to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) about the indexation of income tax. The questions were essentially about whether the government needed more money in order to meet its deficit. Important as that may be, Mr. Speaker, most Canadians feel that the real import of that policy is whether it removes the protections they now have against inflation through indexation of income tax. Although it may fall into the category of an economic policy, the removal of indexation of income tax will have a devastating effect on Canadians, particularly those in the low income group or those of modest means.

The second issue is one which I touched on earlier, the matter of corporations. We will not only be concerned with their economic performance in the future but also their non-economic performance as it touches upon consumer protection policies, the environment, the problem of alcoholism among employees or whatever the social problem may be. It may also lead to new observations about new forms of corporations that relate to the community. Community economic development is another straw in the wind but it will become more important as we become increasingly dependent upon communities.

Third, we will have to deal with the problem of equal pay for equal opportunities as it concerns handicapped people and women. There has been a lot of talk about this in the past few years but I think now the talking stage is over. I am sure the minister will be interested in developing policies to ensure there will be no distinction in the opportunities offered to our sons and daughters. Every father and mother knows that their daughters and sons are equally bright, equally intelligent and equally able. A society that does not offer them equal economic opportunity is no longer acceptable.

Fourth, we will have to deal with the question of income disparity. The billions of dollars which have been injected into income transfer programs in the past 20 years have not changed the range of disparity at all. The programs were welcome because things would have been worse without them. We put a great deal of time into trying to find income supplementation programs for the working poor. I like hockey players, Mr. Speaker, but we must think about the money we pay them when compared to the salaries paid to doctors. It is becoming more important that we find a way to put some relative and reasonable limit on the range of incomes.

Housing is another problem. In 1978 the government decided to get out of the housing business and now there is no housing policy. Things look worse for the future. On Saturday I had the opportunity to preside at the opening of the J. S. Woodsworth housing co-operative in the city of Toronto which is the fifth in the Cabbagetown area. The minister might want to consult with the minister responsible for CMHC to see what can be done about co-operatives because I believe they are becoming increasingly important.

The minister was far too modest in his comments, Mr. Speaker. He has an overriding responsibility in this field as set out in subparagraph (c) on page 3 of the proposed order in council as follows:

(c) he shall lead and co-ordinate the efforts of the Government of Canada to establish and to clarify co-operative relationships with the provinces and with public and private organizations, to foster conditions that allow and assist the development of the individual, the family and the community;—

That does not say that he takes notes from other ministers or that he is just there to integrate; it says he shall "lead and co-ordinate". I take that very seriously, Mr. Speaker, because it will become more important over the next 20 years or even the next five that the federal government reassert its influence in the social policy field—not necessarily its power, Mr. Speaker, but its influence. Indeed, it struck me that since the government has been in office, and even when they were in office before, it has always missed the point that there is a big distinction between power and influence. It worried about power and lost its influence. Indeed, the way in which we have attempted to negotiate medicare with the provinces is nothing short of a scandal. You cannot expect people to co-operate if you are hitting them over the head.

I emphasize to the minister that if we want to have Canadian standards in social policy, and I do, then this government is going to have to learn that if it wants to expand its influence, it will have to curtail its concern for power. That way we will be able to be assured. For example, 1977, in the negotiations for EPF, much heralded, the federal government lost a considerable opportunity to continue to establish Canadian standards in the health care field.

In many of my remarks I have attempted to show that you can learn from the past and that you have to look at the future if you are going to do anything more useful than merely reorganize a bureaucratic framework. When I was preparing some of my notes, I had the feeling I had been listening to "All That Jazz" about "everything old is new again" coming true. I remember a passage from Robert Frost, and I pass it on to the minister for whatever value it may be to him. I quote:

For dear me, why abandon a belief
Merely because it ceases to be true?
Cling to it long enough, it will turn true again,
For so it goes.
Most of the change we think we see in life
Is due to truths being in and out of favour.

I suggest that the institutions which have served us for so long, and indeed have not been in use in the past 20 years, will become very useful to us in the next 20 years. I hope it is in that spirit that the minister approaches his responsibilities.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the proposition before us this afternoon is wrapped up in beautiful paper, tied with a gorgeous piece of ribbon and has a very nice greeting card attached to it. Therefore, I suppose we are expected to accept it eagerly. However, I say to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) that inside the package there is a dangerous weapon. There is a time bomb. We do not think this motion should have the support of this House.

I shall comment in a few minutes on my reasons for the stand being taken by this caucus. However, may I first say that while the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) was telling us everything that was happening in 1960, I naturally wondered what my friends around here were doing. Therefore, I asked them one by one, "What were you doing in 1960?"

Mr. Crombie: Svend was a member of kindergarten!

Social Development Ministry

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) told me she was writing some academic treatises—

Mr. Cullen: As a Liberal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: —and also that she attended the Liberal policy gathering held at Kingston, Ontario. She went there as an academic for Carleton University. I gather that was the beginning of her disillusionment with the Liberal party.

I asked the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), whom we welcome back to the House after his illness—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: —what he was doing in 1960. He told me that he was a station agent at Richmound, Saskatchewan. When I asked the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) what he was doing in 1960, he told me the biggest issue he had to face that year was whether to walk to high school or ride his bicycle. I do not think he remembers how he solved it. I asked the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) what he was doing in 1960. He said he had just graduated from high school in Toronto and was entering Victoria College in Toronto. These, of course, are the older members of the group.

I spoke to my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He told me that in 1960 he was in grade three in Westview Elementary School in Transcona.

Mr. Benjamin: That's as far as he got.

Mr. Knowles: He did not tell how many years he spent in that grade. The record among those who are here seems to go to the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). He was in grade two that year. He does not quite remember what school it was. No one seems to want to know what I was doing in 1960, but I am going to tell them anyway.

An hon. Member: You were right here.

Mr. Knowles: You are wrong, I was not here.

An hon. Member: He was in the other place.

Mr. Knowles: I was preparing to come back. From 1958 to 1962 was the one respite I had from this place in the last 38 years. During those four years, like the Minister of Justice, I held several positions. One of them was as an executive vice-president of the Canadian Labour Congress. Another one was that I was chairman of the national committee for the New Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: That was the group which did the groundwork that led to the formation of the New Democratic Party. In 1960 the CCF held its last convention as the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation. That was in Regina. At that convention we passed the necessary resolutions to take part in the ongoing proceedings that led in 1961 to the formation of the New Democratic Party.

There is something else about 1960 that I should like to mention, and this does lead into the discussion on the motion before us. I see a couple more have arrived. My friend from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was probably a druggist then. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller)—

An hon. Member: Just another kid.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, he was another kid. I am sure the hon. member for Rosedale in his recital of all those things that were happening to 1960 led many other members to think about what they were doing, those who can remember that far back.

I would like to mention that in 1960 the old age pension was $55 a month, payable at age 70. There was what was known as old age assistance which was available on a means test basis between 65 and 70, but the old age pension itself was $55 a month, not payable until age 70. The Liberals had increased it from $40 to $46 just before the election of 1957. When the Diefenbaker Tories came in in 1957, having said that that was not enough, they put it up to $55 before the election in 1958 was held. Before the election in 1962, they put it up to $65.

At this important point in time that the hon. member for Rosedale was talking about, in 1960, the old age pension was only $55 a month. That was the maximum amount of the old age security. It was also the amount of old age assistance that was payable on a means test basis. Members of Parliament were getting an $8,000 indemnity and $2,000 in expense allowances. A lot more has happened to them than has happened to the rate of old age pensions.

I am about ready to join all this to my objection to the bureaucracy which this motion proposes to set up by asking this question: I wonder, if we had had this bureaucracy throughout the last 20 years, whether the old age pension would be $190 a month, as it will be in July of this year. I doubt it. As I say, this package is wrapped up in beautiful paper and tied with a gorgeous piece of ribbon, but to my mind the heart of it lies in one sentence, namely, that the minister of state for social development is to have the authority to advise on the allocation of finance, personnel and other resources to federal programs which provide support for individual and social development in Canada. In other words, it is not so much this minister but the bureaucracy of which he is to be the head which will have the "say" about all social expenditures. This means it will have the say about social security and the guaranteed income supplement, it will have the say about veterans pensions, about public servants' superannuation, about grants, whether to old people or to native groups, and so on down the line. It will have the say when it comes to vetting or checking all of them and my prediction is—if you can call it a prediction 20 years later—that if we had had this kind of checking to hold these people back we should not be seeing such high levels of social security payments as exist at the present time.

I believe that for all the fine talk about the desirability of having a group to plan new ventures and developments, the true effect of the order in council which this motion proposes to endorse will be to check social expenditures. That is why I say that inside this beautifully wrapped package there is a dangerous weapon, a time bomb which could do damage to our social programs and I do not think we should go for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: There are presently, in a number of our departments, excellent people who do a lot of good, hard work—all the research necessary to come up with programs. This is true of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Many of the programs which either the Liberals or the Tories have brought to the floor of the House as legislation were developed and planned by the professionals who are there in that department. The Department of Veterans Affairs is another example. We have a lot of trouble trying to get veterans legislation on to the floor of this House; I think that is because the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) has a lot of trouble getting his programs past the Treasury Board and other members of the cabinet because of the dollar question. Nevertheless, in that department there are first-rate public servants and many of them—one used to be able to say all of them—are veterans who keep coming up with ideas as to what is needed to recognize the rights of those who defended this country as members of our Armed Forces.

As time has gone on, the needs of veterans have changed. I know that in the department today the officials are thinking far more about the needs of the older veterans than they used to, because, of course, the veterans are older. Those people do a good job and I suspect that in some of the other departments with which I am less familiar, for example, the Department of Employment and Immigration and the Department of the Secretary of State, where training grants are administered, or in other departments which are concerned with public servants and their training, ideas are put together, becoming the basis of legislation which ministers try to get through. I believe it is an excellent thing that there should now exist a cabinet committee of ministers who are responsible for programs involving grants, pensions and other things that are good for the individuals who make up our society.

The Minister of Justice described that committee today, but it seems to me that the place where the hard bargaining should be done for senior citizens or for mothers or for children or for veterans or for people seeking jobs or training is in the departments which are concerned with those things. Even now, those departments have an awfully hard job getting their ideas across because of the various levels of bureaucracy which already exist. A department can come up with an idea and sell it to the minister, or the minister can supply the idea to his department and have his staff work it out. But after a project has been fully agreed to by the minister and the department there are the Treasury Board, the Privy Council office, the Bureau of Economic Development, cabinet committees, and, finally, cabinet itself to be persuaded.

To my mind that is more than enough for the departments which are interested in particular groups and individuals to contend with. To say to these people that there is now to be yet another level of bureaucracy superimposed upon the departments concerned with ideas is just going to slow down the process still further. I feel that these 50 or 60 new bureaucrats the Minister of Justice talks about are just going to get in the way of social progress instead of advancing it. That is why I used the figure of speech I did about this being a beautiful package. The words are lovely, I admit. We are given a beautiful sermon about the government's intentions. But tucked in there is the authority of the minister who is to be the head of this particular bureaucracy to say no to pension increases, to say no to family allowance increases, no to training grants, no to veterans benefits.

In my view, it is an insult to a minister like the Minister of Veterans Affairs or the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to say to them: "You may have your ideas but they don't count; somebody superior is going to do this work". It is not that I feel that way about the present Minister of Justice. A while ago we talked about years gone by, about 1960. The hon. gentleman was not here then, though he was trying to get here; I do not know what the young man was doing but I do remember meeting him very shortly after he came here for the first time in 1963, after I came back. That same year we met on one of those trips, down to Florida I think it was.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles: When hon. members get through having their fun, may I say it was a trip under the auspices of the Canada-United States parliamentary group and we went down to see the installations at Cape Canaveral in the days when they were talking about going to the moon as though they really meant it. The thing I remember most about my good friend the present Minister of Justice is that at that point the number of English words he knew was very few. When I consider how he came from almost no English at all in 1963 to his capacity now not only to speak in my language as well as his but also to debate and argue in it, he has a great deal to his credit.

• (1630)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: So much for the nice part.

Mr. Knowles: I say to the Minister of Justice—so that he does not need to be worried about what I said—that it was all to the good. Over there they never know when they should listen and when they should not. He should have been listening. I have his attention now, and I say to him that it is not that I think he is going to be a person who is going to lord it over the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), who is in charge of the RCMP, or the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox), who is in charge of many training programs, culture and so forth, but this bureaucracy is.

The minister says that this new bureaucracy will be comprised of 50 or 60 people. I did not know until today how many there were to be. I am all for jobs for public servants, we could not get along without them around here, but I do not see the need for these extra 50 or 60 public servants to do a job which is already being done by the Treasury Board, by the Privy Council office, by a cabinet committee and by the cabinet itself, and in the process really to say a few more "noes" to proposals for social development. I think that it would be far better if this did not happen at all.

This, as I say, is the reason for our taking our stand against this motion. I realize that, as so often happens, the government has gone ahead as if the motion had been passed. I listened, as I have already indicated, with a great deal of interest to the speech by the hon. member for Rosedale, but he did not seem to be very strong one way or the other as to whether he was for or against the motion. Of course, he was for it because they had the same idea last time. It is part of that envelope system. I just do not think that these things work. I think we will get a better deal for our pensioners, our veterans and all those who are involved in programs of social development if we leave the fighting for those programs to the ministers and departments concerned about them.

At one point the Minister of Justice said we could congratulate ourselves on the progress we have made through the years. That sounds to me as though he has heard the speech I make about once a month about the progress I have seen in social development since I first came here in 1942. I talk about pensions being $55 a month in 1960. They were $20 a month in 1942 when I came here, and there were no family allowances and many of the programs we have implemented since. That is fine, we can congratulate ourselves on what we have done; but we still have a long way to go, and I do not think we enhance the possibility of moving forward by setting up this 50 or 60-person bureaucracy to check on what departments like the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Veterans Affairs are trying to do for the people they represent and on whose behalf they work. As I say, that is why we are opposed to this motion.

As the government so often does, it proposes something and then goes ahead and acts as if it has already been done. I noticed that in the Hansard list of cabinet ministers the Minister of Justice is already listed as "Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development", even though the ministry of state has not yet been set up. Apparently the bureaucracy is already there.

I realize too that we are operating under a statute which provides for a motion like this to be debatable for only seven hours, and then the House has to decide on it. With the Liberal majority and the Conservatives apparently feeling that they have to go along with what they were doing last time, it will probably carry, but I say on behalf of our party that we think it is a mistake.

There are things to do. There are many senior citizen organizations in this country which feel that in terms of their interests if there is going to be another body, another ministry or another department, it ought to be a special one for senior citizens and that they ought to have a minister who is concerned exclusively about them, their needs and their rights. This is something which has been presented to the government so often that at least the Minister of National Health and Welfare has responded by setting up a special division in her department which is concerned about aging and the needs of older people. However, the point I am making is that that is the kind of direction in which we should move, if we should move at all, and that is setting up departments concerned about the particular needs of people, not a 50 or 60-person bureaucracy that is going to cut back on what they need.

In terms of senior citizens, we have done well by getting the pension way up and by getting the age down to 65. We have done well in the establishing of senior citizens' housing and in the grants which are made under the New Horizons program. But, as I say, there are still many improvements which need to be made in our pension programs. We need to get over the notion that all a person needs when he retires is a pittance, enough to keep body and soul together. We need to establish the concept that a person who has done his share of this world's work for 30 or 40 years has just as much right to his share of the wealth being produced when he is retired as the others. We need to get over some of our silly notions about women, such as the notion that their pensions should be half what the pension of the husband would be. We need to get over some of our silly notions about women not having entitlement to pensions because of their work in the home. These things are going to cost money. If we interpose into the situation a bureaucracy the purpose of which is to allocate expenses and cut things down, we will have far more trouble than if we leave it to a department which is concerned about these things and which will try to push them forward.

The same is true of the Department of Veterans Affairs. In the earlier years what we did met the bill, but there are needs now which are very pressing. Our veterans are older, and they need not just enough pension money or enough treatment to keep them alive; they need the best break we can possibly give them. The veterans themselves are becoming far more concerned about their potential widows today than they used to be because many of them are either on no disability pension at all or on disability pensions below 48 per cent, with the result that their widows will not qualify for pensions under the Pension Act. This is something which has to be pushed. It has been hard enough to get as far as we have come but, as I say, if we throw into the mix another bureaucracy the purpose of which is to say how much this department can have in terms of money and personnel, that is just going to slow the whole process down.

I have already mentioned the good work which is being done in the Department of Veterans Affairs to try to meet the conditions of older veterans. I know they are working on the War Veterans Allowance Act, a piece of legislation which needs, in the worst way, to be updated. It was brought in back in about 1930 as a service parallel to the old age pension of that day. The old age pension of that day was $20 a month payable at age 70 with a means test. The war veterans allowance was a little more, about $30 a month payable a few years younger but also with a means test. The result was that the veteran who could not establish a war disability could at least get something comparable to what the civilian could get, only a little better. Although the basic old age security pension today is without any means test—it is universal—the basic amount of the war veterans allowance is still subject to a means test. In my view that has to be changed. We have to move in the direction of a guaranteed annual income for veterans who have reached a certain age.

I am just throwing out some ideas which happen to be in my mind, but I know they are thought about and talked about in the Department of Veterans Affairs. That department is just as interested in advancing the welfare of veterans as any of us on the floor of this House, but the department now has the trouble that it has to sell its idea to the minister. That is the easiest part. The minister has to sell it to his cabinet colleagues. He has to sell it to the Treasury Board. He has to sell it to the Privy Council office. He has to get the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on his side, and now here is another bureaucracy stuck in between. He has to sell it to that bureaucracy too, and that bureaucracy is running around saying "no" to everybody else. I think it is a gross error.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration is another case. He is not one who has yet become the favourite minister to hon. members on this side of the House, but he has a pretty important job in terms of creating employment and training. This sort of thing costs money and calls for ideas. However, in addition to the Treasury Board, the Privy Council and all the others, he has to face this additional bureaucracy, which will tell him, "No, we do not have enough money in the envelope; you cannot have it".

That is why we are opposed to the motion. We do not think it does what the nice words in it say it is for. We do not think it is a move to advance the cause of social development. We think it is an underhanded way of providing an excuse for cutting back on expenditures on social programs, and that is why we do not like it.

I should like to add one other word. The hon. member for Rosedale, in that delightful speech of his in which he took us all back 20 years, said that the immediate effect of this resolution will be confusion. I know that in our own caucus we have a critic on pensions—guess who he is—we have a critic on health—and he is the boy who was in grade three 20 years ago—and then we have a critic on social policy who says to me, "After you fellows get through with pensions and health programs, what is there left for me?" We managed to sort it out. This does create confusion for us, but we know how to sort these things out. But over there in the departments, in the public service generally, I suggest that this bureaucracy is going to add to the confusion. Nobody will quite know who is in charge. The picture will be that there is the Minister of Veterans Affairs, there is the Minister of National Health and Welfare, there is the Minister of National Defence, there is the Solicitor General and head of the RCMP, there is the Minister of Employment and Immigration, there is the Secretary of State, and these are all ministers concerned with programs and problems affecting people. They think they are producing the ideas, but no, their ideas get nowhere unless they get the okay of the super minister, the Minister of Justice with his new title of "Minister of State for Social Development".

Again I say that I am not worried about him as an individual—he is too nice a guy for me to worry about him—but who is busier over there than he is already? He is so busy with federal-provincial relations that he can hardly touch his work as Minister of Justice, and now the government give him another job, that of being a super minister over all the departments and functions that deal with social development. Again I say I think it is a gross mistake. It is adding bureaucracy to bureaucracy, and instead of advancing the cause of social development it will slow it down.

So, Mr. Speaker, because I do not think we would be as far ahead of where we were in 1960 as we are today if we had had this organization, I dread how slow progress will be in the next 20 years, and I hope the House will have the intelligence to say no to this resolution.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in the debate on this motion to set up the Ministry of State for Social Development. No one can argue that there is a correlation between economic development and social progress or between justice in legal terms and justice in social terms, for without justice in social terms there is no justice.

I have listened to the interventions of my colleagues on the other side of the House as well as the intervention of the minister himself, and I want to congratulate the minister for bringing forth this motion today. I was rather intrigued by the lesson in history which we had from the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) but I want to compliment him on what appears to be a well-developed social conscience.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I understand that the next speaker from his party to follow him will be the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and I do not think that that member has to prove his sensitivity to social justice to anyone in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I hope that the attitudes they display will permeate their entire caucus and that the party will in fact support the establishment of a Ministry of State for Social Development.

I was also intrigued by the comments of the venerable member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). However, it seems to me that his comments are a classic case of throwing out the baby with the bath water. Rather than being an impediment to the development of social programs and social justice in this country, it is indeed time we had a ministry whose responsibility it is to advance in a correlated manner the social development of the citizens of the nation. I do not believe that that can be accomplished adequately so long as all the various departments which the hon. member named are working without a proper kind of correlation among them. Rather than seeing this development as one that will place another obstacle in the way of obtaining funds from the public treasury for the development of necessary social programs, I look upon it as giving those departments, in cabinet and in the Treasury Board, another powerful advocate to promote and defend their cause and to see that the funds expended by the federal government are expended wisely to promote the social development of less advantaged individuals in our society.

I noticed also that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has sneaked in his normal derogatory remarks about members' pensions and expenses when he was talking about the increases in old age security. That does not surprise me.

Miss Jewett: What was derogatory?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I was surprised by the way he did it, because as an advocate of the rights of women and of children, which he has always been, it is surprising for him to think that the spouses and the children of members of Parliament should suffer because of the fact that we are here. But it seems to me that that is what he said. Also, he neglected to mention that today senior citizens have the advantage of having the Canada Pension Plan, which was not in effect in 1960.

Mr. Knowles: So have members of Parliament.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): He also neglected to mention how the salaries and pensions of those working in the private sector, and even of those who work in the public sector of our nation, have increased since 1960. I suggest to him that there is more correlation between the benefits of members of Parliament and those of members of the provincial legislatures than there is between those in the private sector and those in the public sector.

Mr. Benjamin: What is the point of that? You just lost me.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Les, you were away for awhile and you have just come back. Catch up before you ask questions.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I do not intend to speak for a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I thank members for the applause and I hope they will learn a lesson or two in brevity from me.

I want to point out that the development of a social policy has, in my view, two primary concerns. The first of those two concerns is the redistribution of wealth, and there are certain areas in which that redistribution must take place. It must take place among the regions of the country and, to its credit, the province of Ontario has always been one of the greatest givers in the redistribution of wealth. Of course, Ontario has had more of the benefits from confederation over the years than have the other provinces of this country, but that is not the fault of Ontario, it is a result of the policies that were designed in the beginning of this country, policies which were probably necessary at that time but which require refinement now.

There is the necessity for a redistribution of wealth among the provinces and, I am afraid, we see provinces more and more trying to compete one against the other, closing their borders one against the other and preventing the movement of labour and goods from one province to another. Those are dangerous activities that are harmful to the progress of a good social development policy for our country.

● (1650)

Also there is difficulty with the redistribution of wealth within the provinces. For instance, in my own province traditionally there has been a vast difference among areas of the province, particularly the two basic areas of the province, the northeast and the southwest. Traditionally, there has been much greater opportunity, much greater earning power and much greater wealth in the southwest than in the northeast. Giant strides were made in the 1960s to redress that problem. Much redress has taken place, but that is not to say that all the problems have been solved. I am sure the same applies to other provinces.

As I become more and more familiar with the province of Ontario, I see great disparities among various regions. I am told by people I meet from other provinces that the same applies there. So social justice requires that the federal government and the governments of the provinces have good, well-developed social policies.

Finally, in this regard there must be a redistribution of wealth among individuals. Of course, that is one of the main purposes of the income tax system that is often criticized and maligned, but without doubt is the fairest of all taxation systems because it taxes or should tax on the ability to pay. I am not sure it always works that way in Canada, but I suggest to the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Chrétien) that he urge upon his colleagues in cabinet an immediate in-depth review of our income tax policies and a refinement of our income tax system so that in fact people and corporations will be paying income taxes based on their ability to pay and not on the basis of the loopholes they are able to find in the system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Ask the CPR.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I will not comment on the gibes from across the floor. The hon. member who intervened from his seat should have corrected the CPR when he was there.

Another area in which social policy and development is required is in protection, promotion and stability of our institutions of democracy, the family, education, the economy and the individual. I want to elaborate on those a little bit. It is impossible to hope for the continuation of democracy if one of the basic tenets of that democracy is not to bring about social equality among the people who live within that democratic system.

In that vein it is urgent that we as a government take steps to enhance the basis of Canadian society, that is, the family. There are many obstacles being placed today in the ability of the family to stay together, to work together and to grow together as the family did in the early days and certainly up until at least the end of the Second World War. Without the family there is really no basis for society, unless we want to go to the kind of communal living some societies have tried to develop and have found to be failures.

One important basis of the family is a respect for the heads of the family. I am referring to the father and the mother. If they are to have a strong family unit, it is important that they have the income to provide for their children the necessities of education, health care, proper nourishment and protection from the elements. Those are the most important things a social policy must provide. I suppose it would be scary if we knew the number of children who have died in this country prior to the introduction of hospitalization in 1960 or thereabouts and the introduction of medicare in 1970. They were not able to take the places they might have had in our society because their parents could not afford to take them to a doctor or to hospital, and because they were afraid of debts they would never be able to pay.

The next item with which I want to deal is the protection of our economy. I suppose I should have put that next to our system of democracy, because our economy cannot provide for the proper social development of the nation unless the economy is free, but not so free that it becomes our master rather than our servant. Of course, the economy of any nation should be the servant of the nation. Therefore, we must ensure that the growing number of multinational units in the economy are designed so that the government of the country in which they operate has effective control over them to ensure that they function in the interests of the nation and not just for their own interests.

Finally I want to deal with the rights of the individual. In a nation as blessed with wealth, resources and opportunities as ours, every individual has the right to be able to look forward, to the pursuit of health, liberty and security. In order to do that again I say we must protect the institutions which support the individual. I believe no one will be able to deny that the institutions which have served us well need to be maintained and strengthened. No one can deny that we must have and continue to have a respect for the basic laws of our country which protect the rights of the individual. Sometimes those laws are used against the individual, nowadays very often in ways against which the individual cannot protect himself. One of the most dangerous things facing society and family life today is the insidious habit of some of our social institutions—and I am thinking particularly of hospitals—to grant to those people who wish it a system which in fact amounts to abortion on demand. Here again we are showing a disrespect for life and its great potential that we are not permitting to develop. When the Ministry of State for Social Development comes into being, I hope it will take priority—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—Public service—Rehiring of laid-off personnel; the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby)—Air transport—Status of transport commission decision on Halifax-Toronto route; the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy)—Industry—Assistance to Inco plant.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

CONTRIBUTION MADE BY CHINESE CANADIANS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

That this House recognizes the contribution made to the Canadian mosaic and culture by the people of Chinese background.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to introduce into this Canadian House of Commons, the centre of our Canadian democracy, the above resolution. I do so because this recognition is long overdue. In my speech here in this House this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I will not only outline in a brief way the history of the Chinese in Canada, but will try as best as I am able to touch on the current problems and successes in the Canadian Chinese community today.

I am aware that the Canadian Chinese community is made up of Chinese Canadians from many diverse backgrounds. There are Chinese Canadians whose families have been in Canada for four generations—four generations, a fact that many other Canadians sometimes forget—and there are Chinese Canadians who came in the recent past from such places as China, Taiwan, Hong Kong and other countries.

Although the Chinese have contributed a great deal to the history and economic development of Canada, and in particular to my own province of British Columbia, it sometimes appears that the only thing most Canadians know about the Chinese is Chinatown and exotic Chinese food.

There are reasons for that, Mr. Speaker. One is that the Canadian government has effectively sealed away the history of the Chinese people in Canada, depriving them of history or "roots". In history courses in B.C. schools, for example, there is no mention of the Chinese. I find it unsatisfactory that children can go through our educational system and not know how Canada treated Chinese immigrants. That history, if properly presented, would show much hardship, discrimination and racism, but we could use it to our advantage. Only by showing that some of our ancestors were intolerant and bigoted and that their intolerance was based on ignorance can we start to deal with the problems of racism. That history will also show us an incredible struggle for equality.

Let me briefly summarize for this House of Commons some of that history. Between 1858 and 1923 there were two major influxes of Chinese people into Canada. In 1858 about 15,000 Chinese labourers came to build the Canadian Pacific Railway. Later another 20,000 came in the "gold rush" days. These early Chinese led a hard and miserable life and were regarded as strange people from a far-away land who willingly came to toil for long hours at extremely low wages and to provide abundant muscle power. But they were not allowed to have any involvement or influence in the country.

When some of the Chinese remained in the country and attempted to live a more reasonable life, the fear of the "yellow peril" became an issue. John Robson said in Vancouver in 1871, "Let this new empire be for our own race". In 1881 when a Chinese potato farmer was prevented by an inspector and five Caucasian workers from bringing a truckload of potatoes into the city of Vancouver, a scuffle ensued. The British Colonist, a newspaper, described the event: "John Chinaman is putting on airs". An 1887 poster on a Vancouver street announced: "The Chinese have come; mass meeting in the city hall tonight." Eventually these feelings led to the Chinatown riot in September, 1907, and the passage of a provincial act banning Chinese from employment. Already there was a "head tax" on every Chinese person; $50 in 1885 and $500 in 1903.

If members of this House of Commons find it difficult to believe there could be such a law as a head tax, they should also know that in 1923 the Chinese exclusion act was proclaimed. The act was so tough only a handful of Chinese entered Canada between 1923 and 1946. They were excluded from Canada. As a result, the total population of Chinese in Canada dwindled from over 46,000 in 1931 to under 35,000 in 1941. Chinese customers were refused service in so-called decent restaurants, not permitted to buy a home in the so-called good districts and were disqualified from taking up any professional training.

Very few non-Chinese challenged this racism. I am very proud of the fact that the forerunner of my New Democratic Party, the CCF party, did advocate the vote for the Chinese Canadians. I am sad to say the Liberals and the Conservatives of that day ran advertisements in the Vancouver newpapers saying: "A vote for the CCF is a vote for the Chinaman." As a matter of fact, in the Daily Province newspaper of Monday, October 7, 1935, the following ad appeared:

50,000 orientals in B.C. CCF party stands pledged to give them the vote! The Liberal party is opposed to giving these Orientals the vote. A vote for any CCF candidate is a vote to give the Chinaman and Japanese the same voting right that you have! A vote for a Liberal candidate is a vote against Oriental enfranchisement. Vote for your Liberal candidate!

In 1935, on October 10, in the Daily Province the Conservatives ran an ad as follows:

50,000 Orientals in British Columbia to whom neither the Conservative nor the Liberal party will give the vote. But, there are 40,000,000 Orientals in Japan who threaten Canada's workers and industry. Vote Conservative!

I personally believe that this, along with the deportation of Japanese Canadians, was the low point in Canadian political history. Let me make it clear; I do not suggest for one minute that members in this House of the parties represented here would follow those lines today, and I am inviting members of these parties to support this resolution today.

But the Chinese, with a sense of endurance, a respect for the law and their increased knowledge of the local community, survived the political persecution and gradually gained the support of the rest of the community. At first, however, the Chinese fell back to protect themselves. The organization that did this was the Chinese Benevolent Association, first registered as a non-profit organization in 1906 in Vancouver. The CBA was needed to protect the Chinese, provide for their needs, defend their interests and promote the general welfare of the Chinese people. In 1907 when the B.C. school board decided to bar Chinese school children from the public schools, the CBA built a school of its own. As Pat Chen, writing in the Ubyssey in an article entitled "Chinatown Fight", dated September 28, 1978, pointed out, during the race riots when some 30,000 bigots rampaged through Chinatown, the CBA demanded compensation from the Canadian government, petitioned against such unfair laws as the head tax and, during the depression, provided food, bedding, transit, and medicine for the old and sick.

In 1939 when Canada joined in World War II, in spite of the dismal record of discrimination toward them Chinese people rallied to the support of their adopted country and many enlisted in the armed forces. After the war, the Chinese exclusion act was repealed and Canadians of Chinese descent were enfranchised by the federal government in 1947 and by the B.C. provincial government in 1949.

From 1946, with the change of immigration law, Chinese Canadians were able to bring in their long-estranged wives and children—many after 20-25 years of separation. In 1967 we saw the end of Canada's openly discriminatory immigration laws. Asians were finally treated as equals to Europeans. From 1967 to 1975 another significant influx of Chinese immigrants came to Canada from many parts of the world, with a large component from Hong Kong. Included in this group were a large number with strong financial resources, professional and technical skills and good personal assets.

Much of this history of the Chinese in Canada is taken from a lecture by Dr. K. C. Li of Vancouver, reprinted in the March 18, 1980, issue of Chinatown News. Dr. Li notes that today Canadians of Chinese origin are part of the mosaic of this country. They are represented in every walk of life, including the professional fields. The greater number that remain in the traditional trades, such as grocers, vegetable farmers, launderers, skilled and unskilled labourers and restaurant operators, now work under better conditions than before. Chinese are scattered all over the country, although they still prefer to live in urban areas, particularly Vancouver and Toronto. The 1971 census recorded about 118,000 Chinese Canadians in the country with 44,000 in British Columbia. An updated figure suggests there may now be approximately 200,000 Chinese in the country.

Although the days of race riots, head taxes and harsh discrimination are thankfully over, Canada is still a prejudiced society. On behalf of the Chinese community, I raised in the House of Commons a short time ago the matter of the CTV network program "W-5", which in a televised program entitled "Campus Giveaway" portrayed Canadian students of Chinese origin as foreign students who were receiving a free education at the expense of Canadians. The program said that Chinese Canadians were taking up the space of Canadian students in universities. In the program were pictures of students who were, in effect, Canadian citizens. Of course, the viewers did not know otherwise and assumed these people to be foreigners.

Later CTV admitted that the program was "racist in tone and inaccurate in information". May I tell hon. members of this House that I talked to a Canadian-born lawyer of Chinese ancestry whose daughter was attending Simon Fraser University. This lawyer had switched from medicine to law to become one of the first Chinese Canadian lawyers. Now, a generation later, he feels for his daughter, who could easily be stereotyped a foreign student because of that TV program. This is simply unacceptable in Canada in the 1980s.

Last year, again on behalf of the Chinese community, I raised in the House of Commons communications committee the matter of the National Film Board film "Bamboo, Lions and Dragons". It was a portrait of the Chinese community in Vancouver which many Chinese leaders found condescending, patronizing, inaccurate and portraying a false picture of the Chinese community. Typical of the over-simplification contained in the film was the suggestion that anyone of Chinese origin could telephone anyone across the continent having the same surname and be sure of receiving help. Another was that all new immigrants from Hong Kong were either professionals or from the merchant class. A third was that half of Vancouver harbour is covered with pleasure craft which are owned by the Chinese. The National Film Board should know better.

The battle is not over by any means, but I should tell this House of Commons that there is a renaissance, a growth today like never before in the Chinese Canadian community. The community is alive, active and participating as never before in Canadian life. They are not about to take discrimination or stereotyping any more. A large rally in Toronto, which was organized by my friend, Dr. Joseph Wong, and attended by my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), protested the "W-5" program. As a result, there was an apology.

In other places at other times the threat to the traditional cooking and serving of barcecued meats was met by petitions. The Chinese Benevolent Society was democratized. A beautiful Chinese cultural centre is being built in Vancouver. The community is blossoming in Toronto, Edmonton and Montreal.

In the riding adjacent to my riding, represented by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), Canadians of Chinese origin have been farming some of the richest agricultural land in Canada. They have shown exceptional skills in the intensive truck farming of this valuable land. Our agricultural industry has learned a great deal about land management from these people, and these skills continue to be honed. My motion today is a recognition and encouragement of this progress by the Parliament of Canada.

The younger generation of Chinese have growing expectations, which is normal. They are increasingly turning to the larger society for fulfilment of personal and professional aspirations. There has been a worry that, in their quest for a better life, the young Chinese Canadians would be pulled into the mainstream of the dominant society. This has led to action to preserve and promote Chinese heritage and culture. Across the country Chinese cultural associations are being established. This, of course, is basic to the Canadian mosaic when a group tries to preserve its own culture within the larger context of the Canadian culture.

My friend, David Chong, who is a Vancouver lawyer, puts it rather well when he says, "The children of the immigrants of the 1950s are now graduating from universities in great numbers. They are going to do very well in the next decade in Canada, particularly in British Columbia." These young Canadians are not only entering the professions and businesses, but also the arts and sports activities. If David Chong has his usual good judgment, we will hear from these people. I think that this House of Commons should celebrate the energy and talent of these young Canadians.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that there have been conflicts. The Chinese Benevolent Association matter in Vancouver which I spoke about is one. But I think that those days are gone by and that the culture and heritage appeal will be a cause to unify the community. I might say, since I have many Chinese Canadians in my own riding of Vancouver-Kingsway, that I feel the role of a member of Parliament is to aid his community by listening to its people, not by interfering in that community. That is why I am trying to bring the House up to date on developments in the Chinese community in Canada.

One of my constituents, a teenager named Barry Hong, who worked for me briefly last year and has now gone temporarily to Hong Kong to teach English and "to find his roots", has given me, an outsider, a bit of an inside look at the present and future of the Chinese community. He wrote this for me, and I would like to share it with hon. members of the House of Commons:

> One of the problems Chinese Canadians face is the never-ending quest for identity. At least once in his lifetime, a Chinese Canadian born in Canada will have encountered this mind-crippling dilemma. Caught between two worlds, being neither Chinese nor completely Canadian, since neither group fully accepts him, the Chinese Canadian is in an awkward, if unique, position. In an attempt to deny his Chinese heritage, the Chinese Canadian, when faced with this identity problem, tends to view assimilation into white society as the solution. What Chinese Canadians should be aware of is that although the process of assimilation may be inevitable, they should at least know where they are coming from.

I think my young friend knows where he is coming from, and he is achieving what I hope the future holds for all Chinese Canadians—the full and equal rights, responsibilities and privileges of any other Canadian regardless of race, together with the value of the Chinese heritage. Or, as Dr. Li says:

> Generally speaking, citizens of Chinese origin place great emphasis on respecting the law, respecting seniors, on peaceful co-existence with others, on the virtue of productive work, on the virtue of sound education and on the virtue of avoiding over-indulgence of alcoholism and drug use.

There is a Chinese saying that one step is the beginning of a journey of a thousand days. We in the House of Commons cannot change the past, but we can recognize the toil given to this country by people of Chinese background, and we can anticipate, optimistically, their future. We can, above all, associate ourselves with the struggle for equality by Chinese Canadians. In the words of Normie Kwong of Calgary, the chairman of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, "Our settlement and progress as a nation have been a shared achievement". I urge the House to adopt this motion.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to lend my support to this resolution. I will not take up too much time because it is my understanding that it will receive quick passage. All hon. members have Chinese constituents in their riding.

I do not intend to make a political speech as my friend, the armchair socialist, has done. I take exception to some of his remarks but I will not talk about those exceptions right now. The resolution itself is great. It reads as follows:

Canadian Culture

That this House recognizes the contribution made to the Canadian mosaic and culture by the people of Chinese background.

The motion is long overdue. I congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) for moving it today.

• (1720)

When we think of the contributions made to the development of Canada by people of Chinese background, we are tempted to dwell on their involvement with the railways. It is not often mentioned that parallel to the development of the railways were the lumber and mining industries, which also opened up the west, and that they employed many people of Chinese background.

In view of the hard work done by these people and their obvious desire to contribute to the development of Canada, it is unfortunate that the Liberal government of the day saw fit to pass such discriminatory laws as the Chinese exclusion act. It was not until the 1940s that such laws were repealed and people of Chinese background were able to receive full citizenship.

Undaunted by the many obstacles they faced in their adopted country, these people concentrated on the education of their families to the point that today they have achieved the distinction of being one of the most highly educated of the ethnocultural groups in Canada, having among their numbers many lawyers, doctors and scientists. Their contributions in the fields of science and medicine are outstanding. Who has not heard of Normie Kwong, Canada's outstanding athlete, who was raised in Calgary and became famous in Edmonton?

Mr. Knowles: Were you team-mates?

Mr. Paproski: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asks if I was a team-mate of the "China Clipper". I was, and I must say that I contributed to his success. After all, there had to be somebody to block for him!

Mr. Knowles: They don't come any better.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Kwong is president of the new National Hockey League football club, the Calgary Flames. It was the Progressive Conservative Party under its present leader that appointed Mr. Kwong president of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, which is not only a recognition of the man but of the community. He is a great man and an outstanding Canadian. Their achievements have put the people of Chinese background in the category of one of the most rapidly developing groups of Canadian citizens.

As hon. members know, Mr. Speaker, we of Canadian Polish or Ukrainian background like our cabbage rolls but during the last war we could not get the rice for them. We had many Chinese friends in our neighbourhood, however, who received a weekly ration of rice and they were good enough to pass it along to the Polish and Ukrainian communities so that they could have their cabbage rolls. In return, we gave them all the butter and anything else they wanted. So it was a form of barter.

I do not intend to take up any more time of the House, Mr. Speaker, as I know other hon. members wish to speak on this resolution. I trust that it will be passed as soon as the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) has spoken.

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the representative of the riding with one of the largest Chinese communities in the western hemisphere, I regard it as an honour to support the motion before the House, and I congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) for bringing it forward. My remarks will be brief so that the motion may be put and passed.

After listening to the hon. member describe the history of the Chinese community in Vancouver, I should like to bring to his attention the fact that the Chinese community in eastern Canada has quite a different history. The Chinese in Toronto came from the eastern United States before the CPR was finished. They were artisans who did the kind of handwork that was not too readily available in the Canada of that time. In fact, the earliest Chinese as far as we can discover was a goldsmith in Toronto who specialized in making particular kinds of religious articles.

The Chinese community which had settled around York Street in Toronto in the 1870s and 1880s went through a bad period brought about by the Chinese exclusion act mentioned by the hon. member and the extraordinary persecution of people with oriental backgrounds. They were subjected to this persecution not only in North America but in the rest of the occidental world, I believe, until World War II. The United States had passed laws similar to ours against people of Chinese and Japanese backgrounds.

Most of the Orientals who originally came to Canada were males who worked hard and sent money back to China and Japan. As there were very few females, there were consequently very few children. The laws which prevented more Chinese coming to Canada were a gross form of discrimination and an expression of an attitude that wanted the Chinese community to disappear.

A couple of years ago I wrote an article about the history of Toronto's Chinatown for the magazine Toronto Life, which I would recommend to the hon. member. I am sure many hon. members know that it is not too long ago that the single men from Chinatown used to stand around street corners because they had nothing else to do, the government having forbidden the entry of their families to this country. This was a dreadful and unprecedented example of discrimination that we have a hard time understanding today.

Hon. members might like to consult the debates that took place in this House on the subject many years ago. I believe it was an hon. member from Saint John in New Brunswick who around 1910 said things about people of Chinese background that today we would find it hard to believe could be said by a normal individual about others who live in this country. That kind of thing that went on for so long and with which we are familiar is the reason why a motion such as this is particularly appropriate. It talks about the Chinese and Japanese, the Oriental Canadians who for so long were discriminated against in such a gross manner in Canada and in almost all western countries.

• (1730)

I have had the honour of visiting that part of China from where most Chinese Canadians come. There is an interesting feature about those who have come here from China. Until recently, most came from the province of Canton which has 100 counties. That province has the same population as Canada. Until recently, 90 per cent of those Chinese who came to North America came from only one out of the 100 counties, the county of Toishan.

That place is not far from Hong Kong. However, it involves a rather difficult sea voyage. When I visited the county of Toishan four or five years ago, I was taken to a village. There are 450 people who live in that village, and 453 from that village who now live outside China. It was interesting to see photographs in the houses in that small village in rural China showing relatives standing outside their house in Don Mills, Ontario, in a Canadian winter.

The story of the trials of those Chinese who emigrated to Canada starting in the mid-nineteenth century is incredible. There were many acts of discrimination against them, particularly in British Columbia. I do not think any other areas has quite as bad a record.

The poll tax in British Columbia and the race riots around the turn of the century were not very inspiring. I know the situation has changed dramatically. As I say, it was a sad story.

Approximately two weeks ago a man who has lived in Canada for 77 years visited my Toronto office. He is now 97 years old and still has his certificate from when he had to pay the poll tax. Fortunately, he got back in before the cut-off in 1922 from one of his visits to China. Because of the exclusion act, he was not able to bring over any of his family. At 97 years old, he lives alone in Toronto. Most of his family in China have died. It is not very nice to see those certificates from our past. That man had a special passport that was not given to any Canadians other than those of Chinese background.

The hon. member spoke about the tremendous contribution the Chinese had made to Canada. The Chinese community is going through a tremendous growth period in Canada. It is making an enormous impact for the good on our multicultural country.

It is with sadness when one looks over the past year at an advertisement that appeared in The Globe and Mail, paid for by the National Citizens Coalition. It concerned the Vietnamese refugee situation. It was nasty and provoked a racist reaction against people of Oriental background. That was followed by a program on "W-5", which our Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming) worked very hard to resolve. We are very happy that CTV made an apology.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the hon. member that it was the multicultural minister of the day who solved that problem.

Mr. Stollery: I am not going to get into an argument with the former minister of multiculturalism. I do not care which minister solved the problem. I hope he had some role in resolving it before his government was defeated in December. However, as the actual apology was not delivered until a couple of month ago, it would be technically difficult for him to have had as much a role as he would like to imagine. However, I do congratulate him. I am sure he worked very hard to correct the implications in that program.

The motion before us gives us, as members of the Canadian House of Commons, an opportunity to express our dismay at the discrimination against these people. I hope we are not looking at a new period of discrimination. I do not think so. We have to be positive. As members of Parliament, we must protest against this kind of discrimination starting once more.

Again, I wish to take this opportunity to register my disgust at some of what has gone over the airways in the past year, as well as the advertisement sponsored by the National Citizens Coalition, implying that those of Oriental background would not make as good immigrants to Canada as anyone else, even though we are supposed to have a non-discriminatory policy. Generally speaking, we do have a non-discriminatory policy. I thank the hon. member for giving us this opportunity to say a few words on this subject. It is immensely interesting and complex, and I thank him for once more bringing it to our attention. We on this side will certainly support the motion.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly complete my remarks well within the time allotted because I too would like to see this motion voted on and passed. I cannot let the opportunity go by without paying tribute to those Canadians of Chinese origin. The motion mentions their contribution to the mosaic.

I would like to thank the hundreds of Chinese people who came to this country in the early years. For many years they were the only ones who operated restaurants in our small towns, and laundries in small and larger towns. I do not know what we would have done during the hungry thirties for a cup of coffee in many places in this country had it not been for the Chinese people. There are many stories told about Chinese restaurants, but most people in their hearts really appreciated what the Canadians of Chinese origin did with regard to feeding the rest of us during those hard years.

The attributes of the Chinese people are qualities for which we should all be grateful. I go as far as to say we can all learn from them. They are hard workers; they do not expect handouts from government. They work hard and try to earn their keep. They want to contribute to their country and they want a good life for themselves. I congratulate them for that. Another attribute is respect. I do not know any race of people which shows greater respect for the aged, for parents, grandparents, and the things that are good. I hope we can bring more of that spirit into our mosaic of cultures in this country.

We can learn, as I say, from Canadians of Chinese origin. I like their long memories. I have never known a Canadian of Chinese origin to forget a good turn that was done for him or for his family. Years afterward they will continue to express thanks and make gifts to the person who brought about something that pleased them. Then there is their public spirit, their desire to contribute to a greater Canada. Again, this is an attribute we might all try to emulate.

I think of people of Chinese origin in Edmonton, men like Victor Mah and Ned Lee and Tom Mack, who came over and made good by dint of hard work and who, today, are contributing to the sports world, to the food servicing world, and to the worlds of arts, medicine, and science. I remember going to the first Grey Cup game which was played in Vancouver. The Edmonton Eskimos were playing the Montreal Alouettes. I sat behind a large group of Canadians of Chinese origin. There was a tremendous finale to that game when Normie Kwong by dint of his boxcar strength pushed himself across the line and won the game for Edmonton. The crowd went wild. There was a Canadian of Chinese origin in front of me. If he was a year old, he was 90, and he jumped up and down and said, "He my uncle! He my uncle!" He wanted to establish a relationship with Normie Kwong. Afterward I saw boys of all ancestry stroking Normie Kwong's jacket. They had respect for this young man who had done so much in the world of sport.

I remember Normie Kwong saying to me once when I was in Highways in Alberta, "Would you please get that highway to Calgary fixed up and paved because I have to get down there to clean your shirts?" He operated a laundry there, and he had a tremendous sense of humour.

My thought in supporting this motion is that some of these attributes will, as time goes on, play an important part in the Canadian mosaic—hard work, respect, long memories. And if the dragon depicts all those things let us make sure that the dragon, or whatever the Canadians of Chinese origin wish, becomes part of our great Canadian mosaic.

Some hon. Members: Question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Waddell) agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Therefore the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business is expired. I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 5.46 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

DECREE RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pinard (for Mr. Trudeau):

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Edward Richard Schreyer, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada:

May It Please Your Excellency:

The House of Commons, having considered the proposed text of the order in council tabled in the House on 21 April 1980, in relation to the establishment of a Ministry of State for Social Development, prays that the making of the said order in council be approved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the debate on item No. 1 under government business was interrupted at five o'clock this afternoon, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) had the floor. That hon. member is not present; therefore, we will move on to the next hon. member who seeks the floor.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is a very important debate and that it deserves far more attention than it received from the minister who is the sponsor of this resolution today. It might be well to refer to the order in council, which really is the heart and soul of the resolution which is now before the House and which, in fact, sets out the terms of reference for the new ministry of state for social development. If we read the terms in the order in council, we find that the new minister, and I quote:

(a) —shall advise on the allocation of financial, personnel and other resources to federal programs that provide support to the welfare of the individual and social development in Canada;

(b) he shall develop approaches to improve and to integrate the delivery of social benefits to Canadians;

(c) he shall lead and co-ordinate the efforts of the Government of Canada to establish and to clarify co-operative relationships with the provinces and with public and private organizations, to foster conditions that allow and assist the development of the individual, the family and the community; and

(d) in respect of research and policy development he may,

(i) initiate and co-ordinate research and policy studies,

(ii) initiate proposals for new policies, programs and activities, and

(iii) evaluate existing and proposed policies, programs and activities to ensure their consistency with federal social development policies and recommend changes therein.

The terms set out in (c) are of crucial importance.

This is more than just another ministry. This is much more than another bureaucracy we are putting together today. I was surprised to hear my good friend, the esteemed and hon.

member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in his speech today indicating that he and his colleagues were going to oppose this resolution. He set out his reasons for doing so. Quite frankly, I found it difficult to appreciate what he was saying because what he was saying, in effect, was that he was opposed to this kind of planning and co-ordination. It has to be a first for this House when the distinguished and learned member who is the spokesman for the NDP on matters relating to all aspects of social policy indicates that, in this particular field, he is against the kind of planning that is called for in this resolution.

We support the resolution. We support it because we believe that this kind of planning and co-ordination of social programs is vitally essential. What concerns us, however, is what appears to be the rather indifferent approach of the government to the proposal setting up the new ministry.

For example, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who has a very important role to play in this program and who, indeed, will have to develop a very special kind of relationship with the new minister of state for social development, was not in her seat today. I am sure that the minister has very important public business which is keeping her elsewhere, but the fact is that when we raised this question in the standing committee on Friday last, when we had the minister before us with her estimates, she indicated to us in reply to a question as to just exactly what was the relationship of her portfolio with the new ministry of state for social development that these questions would be addressed when the debate was before the House on Monday. I listened very carefully to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). He made no reference whatsoever to his role as he sees it vis-à-vis the role of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

When we consider that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, apart from perhaps veterans affairs and certain responsibilities relating to the Ministry of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, is vested under the statutes of this House with the responsibility of preparing and delivering social programs in this country, it is difficult to understand how the Minister of Justice could rise in his place today and speak as he did without defining just exactly what the role of the Minister of National Health and Welfare is vis-à-vis the new ministry of state for social development. Indeed, I would expect, considering that this is only a seven-hour debate, that the minister would be in her place and would speak to this very problem because that is the one aspect of the proposal before us which, quite frankly, disturbs me and, I believe, disturbs other members of the House.

As I see it, what we are doing today is institutionalizing a cabinet organization structure, but in so doing we are developing a new responsibility for a minister who is already, in my view, overburdened. We are going to burden a minister who has the responsibility for the administration of justice and the responsibility for federal-provincial relations—he is, in fact, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations—a minister who is charged with the responsibility of constitutional renewal—with another responsibility which, in my opinion, will make the role of the Minister of National Health and Welfare extremely difficult. It would seem to me to be logical and eminently sensible that the responsibility should be vested in the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She would then be in a position not only to discharge her own responsibilities with regard to social programs in Canada but she would be better able to co-ordinate the social policy programs of the other departments.

Reference was made by my colleague, the member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), with respect to the relationship of social policy and economic policy. Indeed, you cannot divorce the two. We are talking in the House about doing away with indexing in income tax, for example. That will have a direct impact upon the working poor of the country. When we talk about the relationship of economic policy with social policy, does this mean that the minister of state for social development will operate within the cabinet structure, completely removed from the economic development committee? What will be the relationship between the minister of state and the economic development committee of the cabinet? The minister, in his remarks today, did not touch on that aspect.

It is interesting that the Canadian Council of Social Development, which will be commencing its national meeting in St. John's tomorrow, made reference to this in one of the working papers. It said:

> —the objectives, means and consequences of social and economic policies are increasingly intertwined as never before. The need for public policymakers to deal simultaneously with social and economic policies will be a major challenge of the 1980s.

I hope, sir, that we will have somebody from the government side of the House, either the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Weatherhead), or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Robinson), or perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) himself, speak on the role and the responsibility that are now about to be assumed by the Minister of Justice, in regard to the co-ordination of the social programs of the government with the economic development programs.

For example, we can think of a number of departments which have an impact on the working poor of Canada, an impact on social programs. Coming as I do from the Atlantic provinces, I can think of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and its ongoing pursuit to end regional disparities in this country. Surely one would expect regional development programs not to operate in isolation from the over-all social development goals of the government. Yet there is no indication of how that kind of co-ordination is to take place.

Of course we can go on to think of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) who, I presume, is a member of the economic development committee of the cabinet. Here is a minister whose programs and policies have a direct impact on social programs, and yet that minister will not be a part of the social development committee, as I understand it.

I can go on down the list. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans, for example, which has a direct impact upon the rural areas of Atlantic Canada and a direct impact on the social welfare of these rural areas, surely is another department which cannot operate in isolation. Other such departments are the Department of National Revenue, the Department of Finance, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Treasury Board, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and, of course, the Department of Veterans Affairs. So there is, and there must be, a very special relationship between social policy development and economic policy development, yet that fact was not spelled out nor indeed was it even alluded to by the minister when he introduced the resolution in the House today.

I am sorry that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not in her place tonight because there are a number of studies and reports which she has tabled in the House on which no actions has been taken. I should like to know, for example, what the role of the new minister of state for social development will be with regard to the implementation of the recommendations in these reports. Let us think, for example, of the report of the task force on retirement income policy which was tabled in the House on April 21. Yet we have had no indication from the Minister of National Health and Welfare of what she proposed to do with the recommendations set out in the report of the task force. I tried, by way of a motion under Standing Order 43, to have the report referred by the House to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. At least this would have given the House an opportunity to be seized of the recommendations of this very important report. Unfortunately, the necessary consensus was not forthcoming. Is this report to go the way of all reports?

I can go back in memory to a number of reports, which have a direct impact on social policy, which have been commissioned by the House and the other place, such as, for example, the Senate report of 1972 having to do with retirement policy. What has become of the recommendations in that report? As I recall it, the report was the result of some very substantial and intensive hearings held by the Senate committee. It was an excellent report which I would commend to the minister of state for social development.

I come to another report which was tabled in the House by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on May 30, namely, the report of the Canadian Commission for the International Year of the Child. That report has some very important recommendations. We were given to understand that this report would at least be the subject of a reference by the government to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. Indeed, the agenda worked out by the standing committee makes provision for the committee to take up the report. Quite frankly, we are supposed, according to that schedule, to be dealing with that report tomorrow. Yet, of course, we cannot deal with it in the absence of a reference by the House to the standing committee.

One of the important recommendations in that report is recommendation 14.4 which reads:

> The federal government establish a responsibility centre within the most appropriate federal structure to examine and initiate legislation and departmental policies affecting children. This centre should have a co-ordinator with deputy minister status and a policy link with cabinet.

Is the report of this very important commission to be the responsibility of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or is it to be part of the ongoing co-ordinating responsibilities of the new minister of state for social development?

● (2020)

Speaking of the report of the Commission for the International Year of the Child reminds me of an initiative I took in the Thirtieth Parliament. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development will recall that, because he was a member of the committee at the time. It was a bill dealing with a bill of rights for children. It was referred to committee. Although we had exhaustive hearings and heard many witnesses, events overtook us and the report of the committee died with the Thirtieth Parliament. It is interesting to reflect upon the recommendations of the draft report. I underline the fact that it was only a draft report; it was never accepted by the committee. I should like to refer to recommendation No. 1 of the draft report which reads as follows:

> The federal Minister of Justice should examine the Criminal Code, the Juvenile Delinquents Act and the Divorce Act, as well as all other federal legislation affecting children, to ensure that their rights and entitlements are clearly enunciated. Where his study reveals this not to be the case, he should introduce remedial legislation in Parliament to ensure that this goal is attained.

It goes on to recommend that the minister meet with his provincial counterparts to discuss areas of overlapping jurisdiction.

Recommendation No. 3 reads as follows:

> The federal government should convene a federal-provincial conference on "Children's Rights in a Changing Society" before the end of the International Year of the Child.

The International Year of the Child is gone; it is behind us. All we have now are the recommendations contained in the report of the task force. I want to place special emphasis on this because I believe it to be very important. Interestingly enough, in his speech today the minister made reference to the fact that we have more poor children in Canada today than ten years ago. That speaks to a problem of income distribution. I realize the government has already brought in the child tax credit plan, which I think is an excellent program. In terms of addressing the problem of poor families, the child tax credit program tends to benefit more the middle-income families in Canada. Quite frankly, that is something about which we should be thinking in this Parliament.

Before this seven-hour debate concludes—and it is only a seven-hour debate—I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be in her place in the House so that she can address some of these questions.

I have referred to two or three studies which have been made on social policies. There is a whole array of studies commissioned by the House, the government and the other place over the past decade. They have been pigeon-holed and left to gather dust, while we still do not have a co-ordinated approach to the development of social policy. As I indicated at the commencement of my remarks, that is one of the reasons why I feel this resolution should commend itself to the House. It should commend itself to the House because surely the time has come when we must address all the problems which have been the subject of various studies and, quite frankly, will not go away.

I am referring to the problem of the single parent family, for example. It speaks to special housing policies which we should have devised to provide for single parent families that are on the increase in Canada as a result of changes in our society.

We have heard reference made to the problems of the elderly and the inadequacies of the present system to address those problems. Last week there was another increase in the cost of living. If one takes a look at the increases in the consumer price index over the years and compares them to the increases, for example, in the old age assistance program under the indexing provisions, one will find that the gap is growing wider and wider. Old people in this country are finding it more and more difficult to cope as inflation continues to be a serious problem. Of course there are the problems of working women and families where both spouses are required to work because of inflation.

Also there are income disparities between the sexes which have been the subject of a study by the Human Rights Commission. It speaks to inadequacies in the government service itself where we have allowed this injustice not only to continue but indeed it would seem as if we are condoning it by allowing, for example, a situation to develop in the public service where women are paid less for the same kind of work.

These are just some of the very many problems which I believe are important. Hopefully we will find the kind of co-ordination called for in this resolution to ensure that these problems are in fact addressed by the government.

I am concerned because the government has seen fit to give the responsibility for the co-ordination of social policy to a minister who, in my opinion, is already overworked. He has more to do than any minister should be expected to do, when one considers the responsibilities of constitutional renewal, the responsibilities of dealing with the provinces on revisions of the constitution, the responsibilities of federal-provincial relations, and the responsibilities in the administration of justice.

These are serious problems that we are talking about in this debate. We are talking about the problems of the working poor and the elderly. We are talking about the social plight of retired single women. We do not seem to be able to address it, although we have made a half-hearted attempt at it in terms of the spouse's allowance that I am pleased to say was one of the first bills introduced by the government of which I was a member.

We have not addressed the problems respecting the Canada Pension Plan. If my memory serves me correctly, an undertaking was made by the government over there that it would make it possible for the homemaking spouse, who, by and large, happens to be the housewife, the mother of the family or the female spouse, to qualify for benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. In my view it would certainly go a long way down the road in addressing the problems faced by women as they reach retirement age. I recall a speech that was made most eloquently on this subject by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) during the Thirtieth Parliament. I can tell the House that we as a government were well under way to making provision for the homemaking spouse to qualify under the Canadian Pension Plan. We hear suggestions from time to time that the Canada Pension Plan itself is in trouble, that down the road, as more and more people retire and look to the plan for retirement benefits, it may not be able to deliver. On an actuarial basis I am told the plan is not in a very healthy condition.

The principal problem which concerns some of my colleagues and me is the very special relationship which must exist between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the new minister of state for social development. I doubt very much whether we will have the opportunity before the seven hours lapse to hear from the minister, because I understand she is going to Newfoundland tomorrow where she will be participating in the opening ceremonies of the national meeting of the Canadian Council of Social Development. Perhaps we will have that opportunity when she once again appears before the committee, because I believe this is a problem that certainly should be addressed before we are called upon to vote on this resolution. In any event, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues let me say that we intend to support the resolution, with some of the reservations I have placed before the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF FORMER QUEBEC MINISTER

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before I recognize the hon. parliamentary secretary I wonder if I might call upon all hon. members to recognize, as is the tradition in our House, a distinguished visitor now sitting in the Speaker's gallery, the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs for the province of Quebec, the Hon. Bill Tetley.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

DECREE RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pinard (for Mr. Trudeau):

Social Development Ministry

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Edward Richard Schreyer, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada:

May It Please Your Excellency:

The House of Commons, having considered the proposed text of the order in council tabled in the House on 21 April 1980, in relation to the establishment of a Ministry of State for Social Development, prays that the making of the said order in council be approved.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to lend my support to the motion by the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Chrétien), a motion which, if passed by this House, would create a new, small, co-ordinating social policy secretariat to be known as the ministry of state for social development.

I would like to take this occasion to explain why I feel the establishment of this new agency is essential in order to improve the economy, efficiency, effectiveness and control of federal activities in the area of social policy.

I listened with great interest today to the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) who said a number of things. In particular, I was almost entranced by his taste of nostalgia for the 1960s, his reflections, if you like, on what was happening in Canada some 20 years ago. He suggested in effect that change should not be taken just for the sake of change, but rather change in society, a change for a return to the family and changes that would take place in the workplace. I think all of these are somewhat idealistic. However, they are achievable and are things we are all looking forward to in the not too distant future.

The government too is looking for change, not change just for the sake of change, but change to something worthwhile for all Canadians. The hon. member for Rosedale also mentioned that we need to have economic and social policy. Let me mention to the hon. member that I have been a member of the social planning council of metropolitan Toronto for 14 consecutive years and have worked toward this end for a great deal of time. I would suggest to him that we have to put the practical and the theoretical together, and what we are really talking about is not just economic and social policy, but public policy; it is for everybody.

The hon. member also mentioned there was considerable disparity. I suggest to him that the disparity could have been a great deal worse if in fact we had not put into place some of the programs we have put into place over the years from 1960 to 1980, for instance, the transfer programs from the federal government to the provincial governments. Had this not taken place I really wonder what might have happened so far as the provinces are concerned.

The hon. member talked about co-ops. I would say to him that, as far as co-op housing is concerned, the first co-op housing project in Etobicoke, the borough where I live, is in my riding of Etobicoke-Lakeshore, and it was the first one funded under the bill proposed by the Liberals when they were last in power. There was nothing done in the last short Parliament, unfortunately. I am not blaming the former Parliament for that. I think it would have liked to have done more. I just suggest to the hon. member that I too feel this kind of social consciousness as far as co-op housing is concerned, and I was very pleased, indeed, that the first one in Etobicoke was located in my riding.

The hon. member also talked about power and influence. I suggest it is very difficult to have one without the other. What we have been doing federally for a long period of time is to give money by way of transfer payments to the provinces. We have the power to give away the money, we have the power to raise the money, but we do not have much influence on how they carry out programs once they receive the funds. This is something we may have to address. This is a good point brought before the House today. It is something we will have to look at in the future when we are talking about transfer payments to the provinces. Certainly we can learn from the past, and we can look into the future. I agree with him to some extent in this regard.

I was, however, somewhat disappointed by the pessimistic approach taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). It is not usual for him to take this approach. I would have thought he might have looked at this organization, this new responsibility, as one that would co-ordinate efforts which up until now seem to have been somewhat helter-skelter. It seems to me this proposal is one step in the right direction. He talked about senior citizens, veterans, mothers and so on. I am not suggesting we should have a department for each, but we should certainly have a co-ordinating process. It seems to me this new office we are suggesting, that of social development, is a step in the right direction, and hopefully it will not slow the process, but rather will hurry it. There will not be cutbacks but there may be some savings. There will be co-ordination which I think will be in the best interests of all Canadians.

In my view this new department will be concerned about responsibility, and we have a responsibility in this House to see how our departments are spending the money. If we cannot make the department officials responsible for how they spend the money, then certainly we as parliamentarians and politicians responsible to the taxpayers have to be concerned about how we and how the departments spend it.

Mr. Knowles: What does the Treasury Board do now?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): I am not so sure it is co-ordinated the way it should be, and as I understand it that is the reason for the department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has even suggested that we might have a department for senior citizens. I suppose that would add additional bureaucracy as well. Believe me, I am not one to consider adding bureaucracy for the sake of adding bureaucracy, because we have enough of it already. However, if we can do this from the point of view of having some influence on our planning, progress, and programs, then I think this may be a step in the right direction. I will support it, but I will want to take a good look at it, just the same as hon. members over there.

I want to say to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) I was disappointed when he suggested there might be an indifferent approach on the part of members on this side of the House. I do not think that is the case, and it certainly is not from my point of view. I certainly know that is not the intention of the minister either. It is true we would like to see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) take part in this debate. I assume that she will, but I know there are certain representations to be made on her behalf as the minister, and certain on behalf of her department.

I do appreciate, however, the hon. member's support for this motion. As I said before, I think this is a step in the right direction. There is no question that the Minister of Justice is, as you have pointed out, somewhat overworked. He has very many responsibilities, but he is capable and competent, and he is prepared to take on this task. I am sure he will do a good job on this as he has on other jobs.

Let me also mention to the hon. member for St. John's East that I appreciate his concern about children. He has a social concience, but we on this side do too, and I think he will agree with me that when we have discussed matters concerning child abuse and others concerning health and welfare, we have pretty well agreed that this is the kind of thing with which we want to deal. It is unfortunate, however, that more action had not been taken on the task force report with regard to the international year of the child. Maybe in due course this kind of thing can be addressed as well.

In addition, let me say with regard to his suggestion concerning the single-parent family and other groups in society which have not been considered as much as they ought to have been in the past, hopefully under this new departmental arrangement that subject will be addressed as well. I will certainly make every effort I can to see that many of these things are addressed in the proper way.

As a country, Canada is a miracle and an enigma. In spite of physical barriers, a hard climate, a sparse population, linguistic and cultural diversity, and the homogenizing influence of our powerful neighbour to the south, Canadians have for over 100 years bonded together to develop this land and to share its benefits. They have built for us a peaceable country of opportunity unequalled anywhere else in the world. The better life enjoyed by Canadians is possible in no small measure because of the social policies they have collectively instituted through their municipal, provincial, and federal governments.

Today, Canadians are guaranteed a minimum income and minimum social services essential to ensuring at least a minimal necessary quality of life through our social welfare and social services programs. Through the federal old age, veterans, blindness and disability pension systems, through federal unemployment insurance and through provincial workman's compensation, the economic insecurity which can result from life's contingencies has been greatly alleviated.

Through federal-provincial co-operation in funding and providing essential health services, and through federal-provincial and municipal co-operation in support of education, Canadians are assured equal access to the means of maintaining a healthy existence and securing a prosperous future for themselves.

Although Canadians have historically viewed public policy as a legitimate tool by which to improve the quality of Canadian life, and although the public demand for expanding the scope of social policy has been generally uniform across the country, the federal nature of our political system—in which the greater constitutional responsibility for social policy lies with the provincial governments—has allowed the diverse, provincially bounded communities of Canada to define their own specific social goals and priorities and to vary their program approaches in line with their own values. This is a very healthy and innovative factor.

While we have had great success in social policy in Canada, we have had some problems as well. The problems are rooted, I believe, in two increasingly erroneous assumptions which the creation of a ministry of state for social development should help to correct. First, during the 1950s, and especially the 1960s, there was a tacit assumption dominant in almost all western governments that any social problem could be solved by throwing enough money at it.

In those days of affluent governments, policy makers seemed more concerned with getting social programs established quickly to meet obvious pressing needs than in finding the most effective and efficient means of deliverying programs and applying public funds. Given the primitive nature of the analytic tools which decision makers had to work with, mistakes and waste were probably inevitable. But the state of the art of policy analysis and its techniques are becoming more sophisticated. Tools for measuring policy and program efficiency and effectiveness are being developed, and public decision makers have come to recognize that spending money or providing services will not solve social problems unless the delivery is targetted accurately at, at least, public cost. This will be a major concern of the new ministry of state for social development.

The second erroneous assumption was that any social problem could be effectively dealt with by a neat compartmentalization of responsibility within functional government departments. In the past, insufficient attention was, in my opinion, paid to the interrelationships and interdependence between programs. As society and its problems become increasingly complex, the inappropriateness of this myopic assumption becomes more evident.

For example, the Department of National Health and Welfare cannot achieve its income security mandate without taking into account the functions of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Department of Labour. We are becoming increasingly aware of the fact that the public purpose is interlinked and therefore cannot be compartmentalized or fractionated. That is, some social problems cannot be solved without aggravating others, and some must be approached on different fronts simultaneously if success is to be achieved.

Our government is most aware of these realities. In order to ensure that its decisions are comprehensive and that the activities of the federal government are integrated interdepartmentally, are effective and efficient, the government must be able to draw upon the policy analysis services of a support staff whose focus is on the interlinkages of social policy between programs, a support staff whose objectivity is not jeopardized by ongoing program delivery responsibilities, and an agency capable of applying the newest techniques of policy and program analysis. These, among others, will be the responsibilities of the ministry of state for social development.

Finally, I would like to speak for a few minutes of the financial and administrative scope of the federal government's social policy activities. Recent statistics show that Canadian governments—municipal, provincial and federal—annually spend about 23 per cent of the GNP on social policy activities related to social security, health, and education. This amounts to 51 per cent of all government expenditures. In these areas of social policy, the federal government provides the funding for 42 per cent of all activities, yet directly administers only 26 per cent of those social programs. Practically all of these federally administered programs are in the form of direct income transfers to individuals.

The provinces and municipalities, on the other hand, directly administer 74 per cent of government expenditures on health, social security and education, but fund out of their own revenues only 58 per cent. If education is excluded, the federal government funds over 52 per cent of all social expenditures in health and social security, but administers only 34 per cent. The federal role in social policy is thus characterized as largely that of providing funding to provinces and providing income transfers directly to individuals.

This year $26 billion, or 45 per cent of the federal government's total expenditures, has been allocated to the social development and legal affairs envelope. Additionally, in fiscal 1980-81 the federal government will transfer to the provinces an additional $4.4 billion for health and post-secondary education in the form of tax points. Given the financial magnitude of the federal role, the fact that its social policy initiatives are under the direction of seven federal departments and 14 other agencies, and seeing that in many areas the federal role is indirect, it is incumbent that the federal government have the support of a central agency mandated to advise the government on ways of achieving federal social priorities in a coherent, interdepartmentally integrated, efficient and effective manner.

The concern of the minister of social development would be in the areas I have just mentioned. In reference to the minister who will be involved in this new creative social development policy, I would refer hon. members to page three, item (c) of the motion, which reads:

> he shall lead and co-ordinate the efforts of the Government of Canada to establish and to clarify co-operative relationships with the provinces and with public and private organizations, to foster conditions that allow and assist the development of the individual, the family and the community;

That, in essence, sums up what has been said by those who support this motion. I support it as well.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that I have a great deal of respect for the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien). I know that he has a genuine concern for Canada, Canadians, and social development.

I would also like to say that it is an honour for me to participate in this debate and to follow my colleague, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) because, during his distinguished career as mayor of the city of Toronto, he gave a real meaning and purpose to the social development of that great city. He insisted that Toronto stop and take a look at itself, and he sharpened that city's social conscience. I do not really think that any member of this House has the experience which the hon. member for Rosedale has, both at the street level and at the administrative level. However, I did not think that the year 1960 was quite as long as he made it this afternoon, but I do respect his efforts in this area.

I want to commend the government for bringing forward this motion at a time when it faces the challenges of the 1980s. The development of the individual, the family and the community are fundamental to the future of Canada. Without a demonstrated concern for social development, the government faces the charge that it is not concerned about these vital issues. The government must demonstrate its concern by creating an agency which is charged with the responsibility of co-ordinating government policy, of eliminating duplication, and of improving the effectiveness of its social policies. The ministry of state for social development can be such an agency.

I say "can be" because those of us who are relatively new to politics, after a lifetime in the private sector, view the creation of another government agency or another ministry with a certain amount of ingrained suspicion.

Mr. Murphy: You don't look that old.

Mr. Lewis: This leads me to suggest some guidelines to the government. The word "development" implies a process which looks to the future. I implore this government to look to the future in this ministry because we are faced with some unique challenges and unique opportunities in Canada over the next 20 years. We must anticipate the challenges and the opportunities. There is the challenge of an aging society. This challenge must be identified now in order that we can cope with the problems this will present as a greater proportion of our population comes to be made up of senior citizens. That is the challenge.

● (2050)

At the same time there are opportunities open to Canadians because of our wealth of untapped natural resources which we have to develop. The Minister of State for Social Development should undertake an immediate study so that we can integrate the people resources with the natural resources. That is the opportunity. For too long we have been dependent upon natural resources and have failed to think about people. For too long we have been hewers of wood and drawers of water. We have not thought about the people drawing the water and hewing the wood.

Our immigration policy has to be co-ordinated with the provincial educational systems so that we will have the technicians with the ability to put these resources to work. Where the need is immediate we must adjust our immigration policy at once. Our long-range goal should be to employ Canadians and provide job opportunities.

I suggest that the government avoid creating a bureaucratic nightmare. The objective should not be to see how many people can be employed or if another office building can be erected in Hull. The government should not come back year after year with requests for more man-years until they become enmeshed in red tape. People should be hired on the basis of past peformance rather than their ability to multiply, or their political allegiance. We must search for opportunity to co-ordinate existing services rather than trying to recreate the wheel. People want us to cut through red tape in order to get things done, and to meet for the sake of accomplishment rather for the sake of holding meetings.

I suggest that this ministry should not only co-ordinate, Mr. Speaker, but it should eliminate. Where the federal government duplicates a provincial program or finds that a certain program is ineffective in regard to the social development of Canada, then it should be eliminated. I believe the ministry of state for social development can play a very important role in co-ordinating the efforts of various levels of government.

In the Speech from the Throne this government came up with a very telling admission when it suggested that the Canadian people wanted more effective government, not necessarily less government. In view of the longevity of this government's reign we can only hope that perhaps this is one of the things they have said which they will put into action. Every Canadian wants effective government. That means that we stop playing games and start governing Canada for the benefit of all Canadians. If the governing should be done at the municipal level, let the municipalities govern; if the governing should be done at the provincial level, let the provinces govern; and if the governing should be done at the federal level, let us get on with it.

In the text of the proposed order in council there is reference to the welfare of the individual. This ministry should try to re-establish the true meaning of the word welfare for Canadians. The concept of concern for the welfare of the individual is a key to the development of a strong Canada. The concept of a welfare state for Canada will destroy us. For too long we have been concerned with the welfare state, the hand-out, the free lunch and now, finally, under the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet), we have the ultimate—the paid free lunch. If we strive for sound development of a social policy we will ensure the welfare or well-being of the individual.

Earlier I referred to "street sense". That term is often used in reference to politicians. The civil servants to be employed by this ministry would do well to develop street sense and combine it with the wealth of degrees which I am sure we will find in that ministry. In fact street sense may be more important to it than a Ph.D. in sociology. If our society is to develop, those charged with the responsibility for its development must know what is actually going on in the streets of the villages, towns and cities of Canada.

As the housing critic for the Progressive Conservative party, I would urge the ministry of state for social development to play an independent role in examining and integrating the various housing and shelter programs of the Government of Canada and the provinces. We must strive for the best possible affordable housing for Canadians within a sound community environment. Innovative concepts such as the mortgage interest and realty tax credit which we introduced, and co-operative housing, should be examined from an objective viewpoint rather than subjective political viewpoints. Canadian housing policy, or the lack thereof, affects every Canadian because shelter is a basic need. We have social housing policies and programs, but we have not solved the basic problem. We do not have enough adequate housing at a reasonable price for Canadians.

An independent examination of the situation is necessary. With no axe to grind, the ministry could look at such areas as CMHC priorities, provincial-federal duplication, and integration of tri-level administration in the housing field. The ministry should work toward co-ordinating the responsibilities of all government bodies at each level of government. The ministry of state for social development can help all Canadians if it examines the purpose of a housing policy.

If a housing policy is designed to meet the universal need of every Canadian for shelter, then it is fulfilling its purpose. If, however, housing policy is merely an economic tool used by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to stimulate or dampen the economy, then we are only paying lip service to the needs of millions of Canadians for adequate shelter.

Housing starts are too often used as a measurement of federal government success in providing shelter for Canadians. In fact an independent shelter review by an agency, independent of CMHC, would reveal that the majority of Canadians do not get adequate housing if multiple dwelling starts are depressed in areas such as Vancouver while single family dwelling starts increase in Ontario and people are not moving in. Social development progress in housing must meet the needs of all Canadians, especially those at the lower end of the economic scale.

In the fall of 1978 the Progressive Conservative party introduced the concept of a tax reduction based upon mortgage interest and realty tax paid by Canadian home owners. Ninety per cent of Canadians want to own their own homes. Our program would have made that goal, home ownership, more easily available. We introduced that legislation into this House. It was debated vigorously by my friends on the other side of the House who whipped up a paranoia unequalled in modern parliamentary history. In the end, the legislation disappeared with the Thirty-first Parliament, but not before the vote in which three members opposite with a social conscience voted in favour of the legislation. We knew on that night who those members were. I commend them for their good sense, but fear for their political future in that party. We remain committed to the concept of a mortgage interest and realty tax credit based upon the social goal of adequate housing for Canadians. We see it as a stimulation and a social tool rather than an economic tool.

The ministry should co-ordinate a study on the impact of a shelter allowance to solve the housing needs of Canadians. A shelter allowance could be substituted for present housing production subsidies, or used to supplement them. I suggest that we look at what the individual can afford to spend on housing and make that our criteria when deciding on a shelter allowance. The ministry must be able to stand aside from the ingrained thought of CMHC and look at things on an independent basis.

I would suggest that the ministry review the activities of CMHC and see whether it makes sense to co-ordinate a lending and a mortgage insurance function with the concept of social housing. Is it fair to ask CMHC to apply the principles of profit and loss and balance sheet analysis to the social question of adequate housing for Canadians? More important, is it fair to Canadians?

Another area where the ministry of state for social development could play a major role is in co-operative housing. It is safe to say that it is doubtful if society will ever reach the stage where every Canadian is capable or desirous of owning his or her own form of shelter. There will always be a segment of society which cannot afford adequate housing. We have to work with this government to reduce that segment which requires public housing.

● (2100)

I suggest that co-operative housing may be an attractive alternative to public housing. Co-operative housing describes housing constructed or obtained by a group of people who own it collectively. It has the potential for keeping good housing within the economic reach of families of all incomes. Pride of ownership may overcome some of the problems of public housing shelter. We have not really looked at this concept of co-operative housing. I want to see the ministry of state for social development examine that concept to determine its role in the development of adequate housing for Canadians.

I want to deal briefly with a subject that is close to me, the role of the volunteer in society. In my view that role is threatened and, should we lose it, society will be the loser. As the past president of the Canada Jaycees, I wish to read the creed of the Junior Chamber International into the record. I quote:

> We believe
> That faith in God gives meaning and purpose to human life;
>
> That the brotherhood of man transcends the sovereignty of nations;
>
> That economic justice can best be won by free men through free enterprise;
>
> That government should be of laws rather than men;
>
> That earth's great treasure lies in human personality;
> That service to humanity is the best work of life.

Kiwanis, Lions, Rotary, Kinsmen, Y'sMen, and the quota clubs, to name a few of the many service clubs in Canada, have similar creeds. The Cancer Society, the Community Chest, the Association of Conservation Clubs, etc., all have aims and ideals reflecting a belief that men and women should contribute of themselves to make Canada a better place to live.

But the role of the volunteer is being downgraded in Canadian society. The valuable contribution which these volunteer groups can make is threatened. They are threatened by a federal government which attacks their views and undermines their efforts. Two years ago the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) was quoted as follows:

> For the last two years, we (the federal government) have not heard the voices of the poor, the old . . . just those of businessmen. Small and big.
> That worries me very much.
>
> "We're getting very strong public opinion from small and big business in Toronto and western Canada that we don't need family allowance and social expenditures in Canada doesn't make sense . . . they cost too much.
>
> It's coming from groups like the chambers of commerce and Kiwanis Clubs and I'm very concerned with messages like that.

The chambers of commerce, the Kiwanis clubs, the Rotary clubs, every service club of Canada, have every right to make their feelings known.

They are business people. They represent General Motors, and they represent the corner store. If they have been telling the government something, perhaps they should sit up and take notice. They employ, and they are also employees. They know the increasing bite of the tax dollar. They are well aware of the shrinkage that occurs from gross salary to net salary, just as they are aware that their net salary buys less because of inflation. They know they have to make a profit and operate efficiently.

They know they must face their bankers. I might point out that they do it more than every five years, which is the Liberal habit. In my opinion, the minister's remarks were an affront to every service club in Canada, not just the Kiwanis clubs, the Rotary clubs and the chambers of commerce, but every service club.

I want to take just a minute to examine how we have come to the point where a federal cabinet minister can make such a statement. What we have in this country is a LIP grant psychology which has hurt service clubs and voluntary organizations over the years. Traditionally, service clubs found a need in the community, whether it was to raise funds for crippled children or to build a sheltered workshop for the mentally handicapped. We had to examine the value of the project and we had to prove it to the club executive and the membership. Then we took it and we did it. It usually took a great deal of time and effort. We begged, borrowed and scrounged the materials and manpower. When we were finished, the community had something of lasting significance and the members were left with a sense of satisfaction.

Then we got the LIP grant process and it was much different. Grants were initially made under the Local Initiatives Program for seasonal workers during the winter. Then they were replaced by Canada Works grants which were year round. We got to the point where the service club did not mean anything any more. The government had the money and it kept churning it out.

We have spent a great deal of the taxpayers' money, but we have not really solved our employment problems with these one year "bites at the apple". What concerns me most of all is that our initiative may be stifled and the public is losing sight of the role of the service clubs, community organizations, and chambers of commerce in Canada. I am convinced that service clubs, community organizations and chambers of commerce can perform community and service projects more efficiently and cheaply than most Canada Works projects.

We cannot reach the point where Canadians allow these handouts to stifle the concept that we try harder to do things for ourselves. We should know the need of our community and make an effort to fill that need. We should not expect that the need will be filled by the government.

The Speech from the Throne refers to a "new partnership with voluntary agencies and local organizations in a program of community service". The aim of that partnership should be to strengthen the role of the volunteer agencies and local organizations within a strong Canada. I suggest the ministry of state for social development can play a very important role in creating that partnership.

In closing, I commend the minister for his diligence in presenting this motion, but I urge him to make the preamble live in the eighties once this bill is approved. The execution of the concepts which are expressed in that preamble are vital to the future of Canada.

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, the programs of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission are some of the federal activities most crucial to both the economic and social well-being of our country. They embrace three major program areas; unemployment insurance, the area of employment service designed to assist in the functioning of the labour market and, of course, immigration.

The $4 billion Canada spends annually on unemployment insurance is designed to help workers when they are between jobs. Since 1940 Canada has been one of the world leaders in the field of unemployment insurance and this government is determined that the unemployment insurance program will be fully effective to meet the needs of the 1980s.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has already announced that there will be a review of the fundamentals of the unemployment insurance program and a high level task force is now being readied by the commission to take a careful look at how unemployment insurance should be arranged in the decades ahead. Since the early seventies, with the extension of the unemployment insurance program to virtually universal coverage, there have been a number of changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Now it is time to review the effects of these and see how the program can be vectored better in light of social, economic, and unemployment conditions in the years immediately ahead.

Bill C-3, now before the House and awaiting second reading, proposes only two adjustments to the unemployment insurance program. It seeks to postpone the expiry of the ten- to 14-weeks entrance requirement until the review of fundamentals of the program is complete. Bill C-3 would adjust the financing of the unemployment insurance program. Earlier, a regulatory change was made which had transferred the administrative costs of the employment service—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should like to call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that it is not Bill C-3 which is before us. I wonder whether the hon. member is aware that the measure we are discussing relates to a proposed social development ministry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I had not anticipated I would be entering the debate so soon. I thank the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Gourd) for the inappropriateness of his remarks. I wish him better luck next time.

I begin my remarks this evening on the motion to establish a ministry of state for social development by commenting on some of the statements made earlier by Conservative speakers on this subject. I am somewhat confused, now, as to the rationale behind the support the Conservative party has been giving to the establishment of this ministry of state, especially after listening to the well-articulated criticisms of this initiative by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

First, I think it is important to examine the claims which the government itself makes in support of this initiative. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) said this afternoon it would be a ministry of co-ordination, and used the analogy of the Ministry of State for Economic Development; the ministry of social development would take an overview in the same way as the ministry of economic development is said to do. I do not know how other members feel, but to my mind the value and the power of the Ministry of State for Economic Development are very little indeed. Sometimes I wonder whether there is such a ministry; if it is happening it must be happening only at departmental level. In part this may be because the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Olson) sits in the other place, but it reinforces my impression that these ministries of state whose intention is to oversee other departments are, in a sense, fictitious, in that they simply provide the context for another bureaucratic device to escape responsibility for decisions made in relation to certain departments.

Another claim made in support of this motion is that its intention is to integrate. But what is it to integrate? If we could truly believe that this was the beginning of a process by which the government would finally and intelligently integrate all the multiple social policy concerns of the Canadian people and their government, we might be in favour of this proposal in a wholehearted way. As things are, I invite you, Mr. Speaker, to look at the statement setting out what is to be integrated. What is to be integrated is social policy with expenditure management. That is not the integration of policy at all, or, at least, that is not the primary intention, which is, I suggest, to subordinate social policy to the perceived fiscal needs of the government. All this would be done within the third claim made by the government, that this is an extension of the so-called "envelope system" that the Progressive Conservatives brought into government in their short stay in office.

We believe that is not an expansionary move, not a move to innovate and create in the field of social policy but, in fact, a means by which to reduce the commitment of the Canadian government to social policy goals and social policy directives in the years to come. As I said before, this is explicit in the capacity of the new ministry of state to decide on the allocation of funds between departments and what I take to be the most revealing statement of the rationale, namely, is that as new social policy needs and goals are established they can only be arrived at by a trading-off process whereby money must come from old programs to go into new programs; it must be taken from old priorities to go into new priorities. It will be the function of the new ministry to decide what programs are to lose in order that other programs might gain. I submit that this is a product of either a certain amount of smugness on the part of the government with respect to the present state of Canadian social policy, a smugness which implies that the present position is so satisfactory that we can afford new programs only by syphoning off money from programs which are already established, or else it is the counsel of despair, a feeling that there will be no more new money, that there will be no more of the wealth created in this country going toward social programs and that, therefore, some very difficult decisions are ahead of us as to the allocation of social policy funds.

Perhaps it is thought that a special mechanism—in this case the ministry of state for social development—is needed tc supervise those very difficult decisions and take some of the heat off the on-line ministers when those decisions have to be made. It would not surprise me if in the future, in the context of the new ministry, we were to see a renewal of the fascination with selectivity in social programs as opposed to the maintenance and expansion of existing universal programs, a fascination such as we began to see under the Progressive Conservative government. The minute we start to talk about trade-offs, and say that new things will only come at the expense of old things, and when so many of the old programs are universal programs, then I think this sets a dangerous political context in which one can see the erosion of universality in our programs. I hope this is not the direction in which the government is moving. I know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is a supporter of universality in social programs, but under this legislation the hon. lady would have less "say" than if this ministry had not been formed. That is something to keep in mind. She will be a junior minister, and I think that is shameful when we think of the role ministers of national health and welfare have played in the past history of Canadian social policy.

There are too many things to be done, and too many needs to be met. There are too many things to be done to rely on a system that in its very opening rationale speaks of trade-offs. We will need more money in the absolute sense. The so-called economic pie or the funding pie for social programs will have to grow bigger. It will have to have an absolute growth as opposed to only apparent growth in order to do the things which are needed.

Some of the things which need to be done have been mentioned already by hon. members in the course of the debate so far. Particular groups have particular needs. The most recent group whose needs have been brought to our attention is that of the children of Canada. Their needs were brought to our attention by the report of the Commission on the International Year of the Child. The recommendations made in the report of the commission are not going to be able to be financed by robbing from veterans affairs, from income security for the elderly, from health care, or from any number of other things which the so-called social policy envelope will be dealing with. It will not be the way to look after the needs of Canada's children to take from those other groups which have, fortunately, been able to establish the legitimacy of their needs with the Canadian people.

The needs of some groups have not yet been mentioned, or have been mentioned only in passing. I refer to the needs of single parent families and women, natives, and the handicapped, with regard to special training and employment programs. All these things are to be handled within the context of trade-offs and of what can be done by taking money from old programs and old priorities, and I think this is not the way to go about developing an adequate social policy for Canada.

I would like to mention just one thing which has come to my attention as a member of Parliament for only a year or so now, and that is the fact that many people find themselves in a tremendously disadvantageous and humanly unfortunate situation as a result of disability. I am one of those people of whom the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) spoke when he spoke of the year 1960. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned, in 1960 I was only in grade three.

I grew up within the context of the so-called welfare state and under the impression that we, as a people, looked after each other, that we were a progressive, advanced, caring and sharing society, and that no one in Canada would be left in some of the positions of hardship which have come to my attention since I became a member of Parliament. I am surprised that some of the programs we have, and about which we do so much bragging, are in fact so stingy. They go out of their way to make people crawl, beg and scrape in order to prove that they need the very barest of incomes. I am thinking primarily of the Canada Pension Plan disability pension. People have to prove, not that they cannot get a job, but that they are not able to do a job. We find a great many people who certainly are able to participate in some kind of employment, but they are not able to get jobs. It is as simple as that. There is no benefit in being able to do something if there is no one who is willing to employ you at doing it.

Many people, particularly men in their fifties, have worked hard all their lives in warehouse work, or in other work which requires very strenuous physical exertion, and when they get into their fifties, and their backs go out and they are not able to perfom that kind of work any more, they find themselves tossed on to the heap of surplus Canadians.

Those people are not useful to the system any more, yet this Canada Pension Plan disability fund, which is supposed to provide for people in that state of affairs, is unable to help them because the rules are written in such a way as to ensure that only the barest minimum number of people come under the benefits which are provided by this plan. I cite that as just one example of a place where much improvement is needed and something that is going to require a lot of money—and a lot of new money at that—and not just trade-offs between existing programs.

I have been doing a lot of talking about new money, and I can hear the cash registers ringing in the minds of my colleagues to my right and across the way. They say, "Well, there goes the NDP talking about spending, spending, spending again". Indeed, if we are going to do the things we want to do and if we are going to be the kind of society we want to be, we will have to spend, but the other side of the government spending question and the other side of the restraint mentality is the revenue question and how much revenue the government has at its disposal to do these kinds of things. The other side of the revenue question brings us to the tremendous amount of money made in this country which never sees the door of the revenue department.

The other side of the restraint question and the paranoia about government spending is all the money that never sees the door of the revenue department because we do not have a fair tax system in this country. All that money never sees the revenue department because, in a year like 1978, we spent $32 billion in tax expenditures, and that is not even recorded in such a way that the people of Canada are aware that there is that much money out there not being collected. There is money enough to pay for deficits and for new programs, and yet we sit here—at least some of us do—and whine and moan about the deficit. It never occurs to us to go out there and tax the wealth that is already there so that we can begin the process of living up to the throne speeches of so many varied and inadequate Liberal governments over the years.

We are talking about new social policy goals and meeting the needs of groups, some of which were not even on the scene 20 years ago in 1960, the year that the hon. member for Rosedale spent so much time talking about this afternoon. We are talking about the tremendous needs, for instance, of single parent families, a phenomenon which, I submit, was not prevalent to the same degree in 1960 that it is now.

There are all kinds of new social phenomena upon us. There is the problem of native people in the cities, the problem of single parent families, which I mentioned already, and the problem of children who, because of advances in learning theory, are perceived to have learning disabilities, and should no longer just be streamed off into more docile occupations. They should be helped to improve themselves, with the knowledge of their particular disabilities. That is just to mention two or three things that are more with us now than they were 20 years ago.

We will not be able to meet these needs unless we have fundamental economic change, and to that degree everyone here today who has said that social development cannot be separated from economic development is right. Without fundamental economic change we will not be able to pay, to build economic structures which will ensure that enough of the wealth which is created in the country comes to the public purse in ordre for us to be able to pay for the kind of society we want. Here the Liberal government and the Liberal party are at the crossroads. I look forward to the next few years because it is in the next few years that the Liberal party and its government will come up against realities which they have been trying to postpone for a very long time and which, indeed, they have been very successful at postponing. The happy coincidence of Canadian liberalism will soon disappear.

• (2130)

The happy coincidence is that hon. members, such as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and others, over the last few decades have been perceived to be social reformers, while at the same time pursuing the same old economic orthodoxies of which the official opposition is so proud. They will come up against the fact that they have been able to have their cake and eat it too, to the extent they have because the economy was growing and because we were in a period of unequalled expansion. So they could take that incremental growth and distribute it about. And so long as the pie was getting bigger, even if you were only getting 5 per cent of the pie, it was 5 per cent of a bigger pie and you were happier with the government than you might have been otherwise. But now the pie is not getting any bigger and it does not appear likely to become any bigger, not just because of the incompetence and mismanagement of the Liberal government but because of the international and global realities, because of the redistribution of resources which will have to take place globally, unless we want the world to go up in a tremendously violent fight over limited resources. And so now we will be up against it.

Now when the pie is not getting any bigger, we will have to decide what kind of society we really want, because we will not be able to defer to the glorious economic future which awaits all the poor if they would just wait for more foreign investment, if they would just wait for the economy to come out of the recession, if they would just wait for the next boom cycle. All these are vain hopes.

Soon we will have to decide what kind of society we want, and we will have to start making our political decisions much more attentive to basic moral and philosophical questions because we will not have this expanding pie with which to defer these very difficult questions. This is the crucible in which I expect the Liberal party to find itself over the next few years, that the promises they have made to the Canadian people in terms of social policy and the promises they have made with regard to economic nationalism and everything else, will come tumbling down and will stumble over the fact that their first loyalty is to the same kind of economic orthodoxies to which their opponents on the other side, the Progressive Conservatives, are committed.

But that is not the only reason that all the laudable goals which are supposedly to be reached as a result of the establishment of the ministry of state for social development will not be reached. Another reason that they will not is administrative. What is happening here is an injection of another layer of bureaucracy between the idea stage and the implementation stage. It is not enough that we have the Privy Council and the Treasury Board. It is not enough that we have the cabinet, and it is not enough that we have the sheer, unending inertia of this government. Instead we have to insert within that process yet another level of procrastination and unnecessary deliberation.

Those of you who have read Franz Kafka's "The Castle" will perhaps be reminded of the difficulty which the main character in that book had in trying to get a hold of what was happening, and trying to figure out just where reality was, just who he could speak to who would make a difference. With the injection of this ministry of state for social development we have another layer of Kafkaesque administration laid upon the Canadian people, and laid upon their already legitimate dissatisfaction with the decision-making process of this government.

It will be just another layer of deliberation and accountability which will remove from this House the ability of the various on-line ministers to rise in their place daily in the question period and answer for the policies of their particular department, or for the lack of policy of their department. Now they will be able to hide behind the coat-tails of the minister of state for social development; they will be able to say, "I would sure like to do that, but it did not come to me through the envelope. Talk to the Minister of Justice, if you can find him when he is not off looking after federal-provincial relations, after justice concerns, or now after his added responsibility, the ministry of state for social development." We have in fact made all the on line ministers here junior. It is a very serious erosion of accountability, and if Parliament is not about accountability, then I do not know what it is all about.

Perhaps the on line ministers will be relieved—given what I had to say earlier about the inability of the Liberal government to deliver on its promises—not to have the full responsibility for this failure, and to defer to their busy elder, the Minister of Justice, who is already overworked.

It is incredible to me that one person should have oversight over social development, justice, and federal-provincial relations, and it lends credence to the theory that all that is happening here is that a particular administrative mechanism is being set up to supervise restraint within this government, a restraint which, I admit, will not be accompanied by all the self-righteous and destructive hoopla in which the Progressive Conservatives are inclined to participate when they embark upon a program of restraint, but nonetheless very subtle restraint. The Liberals always like to—

An hon. Member: Shift into easy.

An hon. Member: Silk gloves.

Mr. Blaikie: Silk gloves is the analogy which has been suggested to me by an hon. member.

An hon. Member: Iron fist.

Mr. Blaikie: But really an iron fist to the poor. It was said earlier, I think by the hon. member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was being unduly pessimistic when he spoke of some of the concerns we had about this new ministry of state for social development. I realize that to be pessimistic in this particular day and age is almost to sin against the Holy Spirit. What we have is uncritical optimism about the future, and this kind of optimism invades and infects everything we do.

I think it is important, whatever the future may look like, to be accurate and realistic. I would prefer to be realistic and to sound pessimistic to the uncritical optimist than to participate in the uncritical expectations that we have heard today about what this particular restraint mechanism will do for social policy in Canada. I realize they have been hard pressed to justify this ministry, particularly as it originated within the Conservative ranks, but it is not the first thing we have seen the Liberal government predisposed to adopt from their Conservative brothers, again lending credence, I submit, to our theory, which becomes more true every day, about Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

It may appear that to be against the co-ordination, integration and planning of social policy in this country is to be unfair and mean to the government. But the burden of truth will be upon them to show, over the next few years, that this initiative on their part is intended indeed to enrich and enhance social policy in this country and not simply to become a mechanism by which they may do, underhand and with less accountability, what they set out to do in 1978 when they first began the cutbacks phenomenon in August of that year. We will have to wait to see whether they can overcome the limitations of reality. They will not be able to do it.

• (2140)

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to offer my personal congratulations to the minister for the job he did in the recent referendum in Quebec. He was one of the few cabinet ministers on the other side of the House who spoke with his heart and not the pocketbook. I first came to know him when he was in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He should have stayed there; he was doing an excellent job. I am pleased to rise today to address the motion he introduced.

Naturally I am concerned with the area of social development in this great country of ours, but I have a few reservations on the proposals of this government to set up another ministry. I like to think of myself as a compassionate Canadian. It is my hope that the people I serve perceive me as such. I am very aware of the need for direction in all social areas, but I am hesitant in agreeing to let this government increase its spending power in any area without specific proposals and policies.

Can the minister tell us just what his jurisdiction will be over the other ministries obviously involved in social development? What co-ordination policies and terms will be set up for this minister to ensure that the proposed ministry does not just become another filler, a stop-gap measure to very real concerns? Other federal departments and agencies have control over substantive funds which could affect the operation of this new department. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is aware, her territory is definitely in jeopardy if this new creation is given precedence. What kind of funding will be appropriated to social development either to the detriment of other departments or in duplication of duties already mandated to existing departments?

The Liberals are notorious for their ability at duplication. One only has to look at their proposal to establish the Board of Economic Development Ministers back in 1979. The board, the superministry, was to have responsibilities for such things as upgrading the forest products industry, helping the Canadian shipbuilding industry, and implementing new policy for development of the Canadian automobile industry. It was to manage federal programs to develop a stable economic climate for growth and the creation of jobs. We can all see the success of that board. It was given direction for areas already supposedly covered by other departments or agencies. Our stagnant economy has done nothing but deteriorate the social climate and foster unemployment.

The principle of the motion is an important one. It is crucial that this government look at its responsibilities to the Canadian people. However, what guarantees will be given to the department and its minister? Will the minister direct its priorities to the people? What role does this department intend to play in the lives of the citizens of the country? The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said "our greatest hope lies, not in new laws or greater use of the power of the state, but in ourselves, in the capacity of each of us to adopt different social and economic values in response to the new reality of our times". What priorities has the government planned for this new ministry? Although in principle there is a real need to have social directions, we must have some indication of where they are to take this country.

As youth critic I am very concerned about the future of our most natural resource. There will be an estimated 4.6 million young people between the ages of 15 and 24 next year. Of what policy direction can we be assured to guarantee that these young people will have a future to look forward to, a job, a full-time meaningful job? I am not referring to government jobs, although young bright Canadians are needed in government. I am not referring to a part-time job, not one that lasts 48 weeks, but a full-time meaningful job. Today it is a national disgrace that 431,000 young people under the age of 25 in this country are unemployed, or 44 per cent of all people unemployed. We must know what programs and principles will be attained through the development of this ministry. A ten-year plan of its goals and objectives is not an unreasonable request. It would appear to me a three-year intensive plan of its aims should be made known to this House immediately. It is too important an area to be given only vague generalities. What jurisdiction will be given to the minister over employment, immigration, education, health and justice? We do not know.

I do not want to tread on any toes, especially in those areas that belong to our provincial counterparts through the BNA Act, but in the context of the present and forthcoming constitutional discussions, will the minister be examining the area of education under this new super ministry? If this ministry is to foster social development, our educational system across the country must be examined. Education must be tailored to present needs. There is absolutely no point in creating a glut of graduates with Ph.D.s if these extremely brilliant minds have to drive taxicabs to earn a living. Will the financial agreements between Ottawa and the provinces for post-secondary education be examined? Will the government encourage some of the universities experiencing drastic enrolment drops at present to become community colleges? It is interesting to note that the famous Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in Toronto, of which I am an alumnus, is now experiencing a number of students coming from universities with B.A.s that have not stood them in very good stead. They are getting some practical training in a great educational setup such as the ones at Ryerson and in community colleges.

As I said, I am aware the educational system falls under provincial jurisdiction, but it must have direction and must be tailored so that young people are educated and employable. We must give our young people marketable skills. The government of the United States has commissioned a study in this area for the eighties. Maybe we should be encouraging the same thing in Canada.

The critical skills committee of the government is a start. I am pleased to serve on it and to be one of the representatives from the Progressive Conservative party. However, it is not enough just to examine the critical skills area. All areas of employment and education must be examined if we are to aim at full employment. How can the minister strive for less?

I am well aware that each and every one of us has social obligations and responsibilities, but will the minister and this ministry foster a stable Canadian indentity, a stable family unit and a stable participation with the provinces so that our children can feel as though they belong and develop a sense of usefulness? Will the policies of the ministry return to the youth of this country a sense of Canada and remove the instability they presently face? As minister responsible for families, what programs and incentives will he offer to foster the family unit? Parents teach their children to be independent; a country should do the same.

What programs are there going to be for exceptional children? What encouragement is going to be offered for children at both ends of the exceptional spectrum; the brilliant child who has a natural talent for music or anything else but whose parents cannot afford to have his or her talent flourish because it costs $3,000 a year or so? What tax incentives will be offered to those parents who are frustrated because they cannot afford the same calibre of cultural education as those in higher income brackets? Why is cultural understanding a prerogative of the rich? Is this minister going to help the parents whose child needs special instruction because of a physical or emotional problem? Just what are the minister's areas of responsibility?

Is this the ministry that will finally develop a firm federal affirmative action policy? We all know there are disadvantaged groups that require assistance within specific areas of federal responsibility; representatives of women, native people and the handicapped. Affirmative action programs exist in certain areas but, heaven knows, progress has been slow and these programs lack co-ordination. The federal government is long overdue in accepting its responsibility in this area. Few of the recommendations made by the task force on the handicapped have been implemented.

Will the minister set up standards to surmount the obstacles faced by the handicapped in employment, transportation, housing, and recreation? Our party is willing to listen, and to try to improve policy on the employment of the disabled. In all fairness, some progress has been made in this area through programs such as LEAP and Outreach, but short-term jobs for the disabled are not enough. A myth stills exists that must be corrected regarding the hiring of a handicapped person. What direction will the minister have to foster awareness in this area through the employment ministry? Before this new ministry is created this House should know its terms and goals, lending credibility to the intent of government to help the mainstream Canadian.

We are all aware of the constantly changing challenges facing individuals, private groups and governments, and one of the most challenging will be job creation in the 1980s. As I have said, what initiatives will the government bring forth to ensure permanent jobs for the ever-increasing labour force? By the end of the 1980s almost half our population will be in the labour market. Our young people have had access to higher education and yet unemployment is their dismal future. The problem must be dealt with now.

I am not suggesting it should be handled totally by the federal government, but action must be taken to stimulate the private sector to create jobs for the young people. Governments must create the climate for the private sector in this area, and encourage entrepreneurs and investment, employers, unions and government, to work together to meet the demand for skilled labour and properly to implement programs that will meet the needs of our young people. We must foster a willingness to work, and not fall into the same trap set by Bryce Mackasey in 1971 when he assured us that the UIC program would not discourage people from working.

There is a need in this country for a sense of involvement in the community. An awareness of social structures must be fostered. Established voluntary organizations must be adequately funded.

Will this be the umbrella ministry to correct all the social injustices that do exist, and that have been perpetuated by Liberal administration too intent on its own salvation to worry about the direction of the country? What surveillance programs are going to be introduced either through Health and Welfare, environment, or through this new umbrella ministry to monitor areas that affect Canadians every day; problems such as acid rain, methylmercury contamination; yes, the old bugaboo, metrication? The list is endless. There are very few areas if any of an individual's life that are not affected by government.

If I might, I should like to come back to the youth of this country for just a moment. Will the minister in his capacity as justice minister be introducing amendments to the existing young offenders act, marijuana laws, prostitution laws and, if so, has he reconciled these changes with their impact on the family structure? As I have said, this ministry will obviously be responsible for families. What are the priorities intended to foster family unity and, consequently, national unity? Is the minister prepared to look at our social problems in the context of our legal framework? Is the minister prepared to look at our divorce laws and the issue of capital punishment?

Human rights are another area where the minister will have to state his intention. I believe the justice department is currently looking at all federal legislation for possible conflict with the human rights act. Will this proposed department be involved with immigration policy which, in effect, is discriminatory to certain groups? How does he plan to handle the racial tension that, whether we like it or not, does exist in large cities such as Toronto and Vancouver? One of the ministers, I noted this weekend, while speaking in Toronto said that racial tension is caused by youth unemployment; that they are too idle, they have nothing to do, and therefore they have time on their hands and they get into trouble. I could not agree with him more. What is the government going to do to encourage employment for the young?

The authority of the Human Rights Commission is being challenged by federal departments, and this challenge can in no way be said to be productive of progressive, free social thinking.

The publication, "A National Understanding", in 1977 stated that Canadians have a right to education in the official language of choice, and facilities should be provided where numbers warrant it. Bilingualism programs are available to almost anyone, and in most cases with no direct cost to the individual, but right here in the House of Commons the Liberals are fostering a practice of discrimination. Neither

French nor English language training is available to the assistants on the staff of members of Parliament, but it is available to all other House of Commons personnel. They vetoed a Standing Order 43 motion to have this discrimination looked into just the other day. I would ask the minister to take another hard look at this with a view to allowing members' staffs take advantage of the language training programs available. I wonder how a party that has not been able to implement its own policies in the past will do so in the future? Is this minister going to have any more success at fostering or developing Canadian culture?

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might call it ten o'clock before I get to another subject I wish to cover.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

PUBLIC SERVICE—REHIRING OF LAID-OFF PERSONNEL

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that you are in the chair, sir, because you have a constituency responsibility which is parallel to mine, and that is the subject matter on which I want to address this House this evening.

There will always be reorganizations within the Government of Canada. As a result of those reorganizations many well-trained professionals, clerks and others within the public service, will find their careers interrupted through lay-off, being declared redundant, being put on priority lists, etc. etc. All of these events create uncertainty for families and great difficulties with devastating sacrifices that can only be experienced to be understood. Throughout the period of time that I have been a member of Parliament, I have seen many people in that position, and there is nothing more distressing than the feeling of hopelessness that they bring with them to my office.

The Public Service Commission has recognized the importance of providing some hope to public servants through the work of Ken Sinclair. There have been some astonishing success stories when a person has been found redundant and that same person finds a spot somewhere else. But as good as the existing programs are, they lack one essential ingredient for success. That ingredient is retraining.

During the course of the Clark government the process of devising a scheme began, but we have heard very little from the government from retraining of public servants since the last election. That is why I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) the following question:

—When is the President of the Treasury Board going to make announcements with respect to the retraining programs for public servants which were promised during the course of the election and about which he has been strangely silent since the election?

There has not been an answer since that question was asked. The minister's answer at that time was:

—I take exception to any suggestion that I have been silent. In fact, I discussed with the hon. gentleman the importance we attach to training and to retraining.

That is correct, he did. He went on to say:

We are, I hope, bringing forward some significant programs in this regard, and I hope to be able to make announcements in the House in the very near future. I shall be delighted to discuss further with the hon. gentleman some of his ideas which sometimes, I must say with respect, are quite good.

I appreciate the flattery. I am available to help in this program as I am sure you are, Mr. Speaker. I believe there is a great opportunity for the public sector to provide leadership to business and industry with respect to retraining. Aside from the maintenance of an experienced public service, I think it is important that the government, as an employer, show a concern for the human side as well.

In February, 1980, the government of which I was a member took a quantum leap forward in that regard. The Treasury Board announced a policy of no lay-off protection which read as follows:

Our policy, that all surplus employees would be offered an alternative employment opportunity, was designed to ensure that there would be no lay-offs solely to achieve reductions. From time to time, there are a number of situations in the public service where positions have been declared surplus for reasons which are not directly related to specific plans for more efficient government. These could result from changes in the work load of programs, from re-organization of work or other internal management changes, as well as from the normal phasing out of some programs. It is the government's policy that employees in these situations would also be covered by the no lay-off policy and would be offered an alternative employment opportunity.

The underpinning for this proposal in terms of public interest and in terms of public servants must be the institution of retraining programs. That policy was made dependent upon retraining programs that the government of which I was a member was developing within the Public Service of Canada to assist public servants to prepare for new employment opportunities. The same obligation rests with this government, and public servants are watching and waiting for some action.

I believe that the government should continue and improve upon the initiatives which my government began. I have some suggestions, and I am sure there are others. A public service-wide retraining program should be announced quickly. It should encompass public servants not yet placed who want to work in the public service and who were laid off as the result of the Trudeau government cutbacks of August 1, 1978, and those public servants should remain eligible and continue on an extended priority list.

● (2205)

The government should use its influence with Crown agencies to ensure that those employees who are laid off, and who fall under Treasury Board guidelines, are eligible for appointment to positions in the Crown agencies as well.

The government should consider using community colleges and other facilities at universities, wherever they are available, to augment, where necessary, the facilities that now exist within the public service.

Clearly, the first step is to announce a no lay-off policy, as we did, with the improvements that I have suggested at the beginning, for those laid off by reason of the Prime Minister's announcement on August 1, 1978. There must, of course, be consultation with the Public Service Staff Association and the National Joint Council so that Parliament knows what the government is doing with respect to those who serve the people of Canada in the public service. It should consider tabling the proposals in this House and referring them to a committee, with a limited time-frame of reference, so that they could be considered very quickly.

A beginning has been made with respect to an important aspect of leadership in employer-employee relations by the development of the retraining program. That development should continue apace and that announcement should be made.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will be able to give us some concrete information tonight, at least regarding the time when such an announcement will be made by Treasury Board. As I said, the public service is watching and waiting.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to say a few words on the subject of work force adjustment—both the placement and retraining of public servants who become surplus to government needs in their current jobs. I would emphasize current jobs, because we are concerned as a government to utilize the skills of public servants as fully as possible in the public service as a whole, not just in jobs they happen to hold at a particular moment in time

We recognize a number of needs in regard to improving the placement and retraining of surplus employees. And that is not to say the departments and Public Service Commission have not done a commendable job in placing these employees in new jobs: they have. But we need to do better, through tighter procedures, better communication and more imagination, in the way we look at the skills these employees have. You know, people are adaptable. They may have spent many years in a certain line of work, and that could lead us to slot them into almost the same kinds of jobs, which may not be available. Such people can be useful in other work, of course, because they may have general skills applicable to a variety of job situations.

The need to recognize and take advantage of the adaptability of surplus employees is especially important in the matter of retraining. In the past we have retrained surplus employees placed in new jobs once they are actually working at them; we have not made a great deal of use of the formal, off the job retraining provisions of current work force adjustment policy. That degree of usage is understandable from the point of view of the effective use of resources; it makes sense to place a person first in work he or she can readily do rather than divert them into courses. However, we do intend to encourage a more imaginative approach to formal retraining, especially in cases where surplus individuals have many of the qualifications for a vacant job, and formal retraining could bring their qualifications up to the required level. Longer retraining than envisaged under current policy may be required. So might a greater commitment of resources.

As I say, these are needs and principles that we have recognized as a government in examining how to reshape our policy of improving how we deal with surplus public servants. We also have in mind some specific measures to fulfil the needs and give effect to the principles. Before announcing any new measures, however, we want to consult with those who could ensure they will work—departmental officials and employee representatives, as well as officials of the Public Service Commission which has significant responsibilities in both placement and training. These consultations have begun and we are hopeful that they will enable a more definitive statement, working out ideas I have shared tonight with this House.

The hon. member is quite correct in raising this question. We are rather thankful that he has and that the opportunity has been given to us to provide these notes for record.

AIR TRANSPORT—STATUS OF TRANSPORT COMMISSION DECISION ON HALIFAX-TORONTO ROUTE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, on June 6, 1980, I questioned the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) with respect to the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission on the matter of the air routes between Halifax and Toronto and Halifax and Montreal. The decision made by the Canadian Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission allowed CP Air to serve the Halifax to Toronto route and at the same time deprived Eastern Provincial Airways of access to the same route.

Curiously, the decision of the CTC also allowed CP Air to serve the Halifax-Montreal route one year hence. That route is now being served by both EPA and Air Canada. The minister in his response confirmed that an appeal had been taken from the decision of the CTC and that June 16, this very day, was the deadline for the submission of briefs and documents. Therefore the decision will now be made by the cabinet or the Minister of Transport either to reverse, or allow the decision of the CTC to stand.

If I were to criticize the decision of the CTC, I could not castigate them more than did the Toronto Globe and Mail in an editorial. This editorial, written on May 23, 1980, said that the CTC rightly decided to open the Halifax-Toronto route, but then proceeded to "botch the case." The CTC, said The Globe and Mail, was stubbornly committed to obstructing the development of regional enterprise when it chose CP Air over EPA. Let me quote the editorial:

The CTC's decision in this case demonstrated an utter and utterly lazy incomprehension of Canada's problems at a time when Canada's problems require the most spirited and innovative attention possible. As EPA has appealed the decision to the federal cabinet, we trust that transport minister Jean-Luc Pepin and his colleagues will act upon their born-again commitment to federal reform, and overturn the CTC. Heaven knows the commission has earned some overturning.

Let us face the cruel facts of government. It will take a determined Minister of Transport and real effort by the cabinet to reverse the decision, but I believe the minister will rise to the challenge and support regional enterprise so that EPA will continue to grow and contribute to the economy of Atlantic Canada. In this respect, I am sure the minister has the support of members on both sides of this House.

Why should the decision be reversed? Because it is patently wrong. First, it refers to a non-existent policy whereby regional air carriers cannot go beyond their adjoining regions. Yet Nordair flies direct from Quebec to Winnipeg. Second, the CTC placed three carriers on the Halifax-Montreal route which is rated seventeenth in Canada, but said it would be uneconomical to have more than two carriers on the Halifax-Toronto route which ranks tenth in Canada and is growing. Third, it said EPA could develop local regional traffic. Then the CTC refused special promotional fares. It should not be hard for the minister to reject these reasons for the conclusions of the CTC.

Then there is public opinion. The four Atlantic premiers have urged reversal of the decision. Nearly all members of Parliament in the Atlantic region, members of provincial legislatures and many municipal councils have supported EPA. In fact the only dissenting voice has come from the tourist industry which promotes travel in its own interest, and the Halifax Board of Trade. I found it hard to believe that the Halifax Board of Trade should fail to support such an important regional industry since EPA employs 900 persons in the Atlantic area and spends millions on services and supplies. I asked the membership of the board to respond to a questionnaire to determine whether the membership really did support CP over EPA.

The executive of the Halifax Board of Trade took great exception to my intervention. In fact, one member responded to me and said that I abused the privileges of a member of Parliament. Let me say to that member that I do what I think is right in the interests of all my constituents. However, the response I have received from the Board of Trade and other constituents has been very positive: there is general support in the area for the EPA application to serve the Halifax-Toronto route. But this is not to say that the people have anything against Canadian Pacific. They recognize the contribution CP has made to air transport in Canada and they would like to have the company in the area, but not at the expense of a Halifax industry.

● (2215)

Canadian Pacific has already announced that it proposes to build a $15 million terminal in Toronto. This is the sort of activity to which we are opposed. We want EPA to be a local industry, a growing industry, and this requires the assistance of the Canadian Transport Commission. So we hope the minister will reverse this decision of the Transport Commission and allow EPA to continue its contribution to the economic development of Canada.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on June 6 the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) whether the Canadian Transport Commission's decision concerning Toronto-Halifax air services had been appealed and, if so, to what authority.

I would like to confirm that Eastern Provincial Airways has appealed the CTC's decision to the Minister of Transport under section 25 of the National Transportation Act. EPA has asked the minister to rescind, in part, this decision, in order to allow EPA rather than CP Air to provide non-stop Halifax-Toronto service or, alternatively, to vary the decision in order to allow EPA and CP Air equal rights to serve Halifax-Toronto. I would add that CP Air has also appealed the CTC decision to the minister, although its appeal does not concern the Halifax-Toronto route but rather CP Air's authorization to serve Halifax directly from other points on its domestic licence.

The hon. member for Halifax West also asked when any such appeal will be heard and determined, and what considerations will be involved in the appeal process. Appeals to the Minister of Transport are governed by legal rules under the National Transportation Act. Under section 64 of the act, the governor in council may also vary or rescind CTC decisions of his own motion.

This very complicated issue is now under active consideration and will be decided in the very near future.

INDUSTRY—ASSISTANCE TO INCO PLANT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on May 12 of this year I brought the issue of the closing of a number of iron ore mines and mills in Canada to the attention of the House. The mills which are closed down include the Steep Rock iron mines in Atikokan, National Steel in Capreol, and Inco in Sudbury.

It was the decision of Inco to close down its mill coupled with the fact that they had 500,000 tons of iron ore in their stockpiles which prompted my question. When I directed my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) I was asking, basically, what he was willing to do considering that 35 per cent of the iron ore used in making Canadian steel comes from offshore. The minister replied, in effect, that he would review the situation. I went on to ask the minister whether he was prepared to call in the heads of the various steel companies to consider what could be done to encourage the use of Canadian ore in Canadian industry. In the press the next day the response we saw was, "Gray to Study the Use of U.S. Ore". That was in The Ottawa Journal. In The Citizen it was, "Gray to Probe Steel Firms Using U.S.

Ore". In another paper it says, "Gray To Ask Why Steel Firms Using So Much Imported Ore".

● (2220)

I assumed that we were going to get action. By June 5 I saw that no action was taking place, and I realized that Canadian jobs were being lost and that our balance of trade was getting worse as a result of this situation, so I wrote to the minister asking what was happening. "I interpreted his response at that time as being quite favourable. As a result I had been waiting eagerly for an announcement by his office about the details of such a meeting. Unfortunately, I had not heard of such an announcement during the intervening weeks since my question."

Then last week the intention of Iron Ore Company of Canada to lay off 3,000 workers in Quebec came to light, and our New Democratic Party spokesman on economic affairs, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), raised the same questions in the House. At that time, on June 11, the minister replied that he was still trying to set up a meeting with the heads of the Canadian steel industry. That was on June 11, one month after I had originally raised the question in the House.

What did the minister say? He said he would ask these people if the steel companies are importing 45 per cent of their ore. It took him one month. Presumably he still has not set up a meeting to find the answer to a very simple question. It is not a new matter. It is a matter which was raised prior to the sitting of this House. It was raised in the last two Parliaments, yet the minister is still trying to set up a meeting. When the shoe is on the other foot and when the industry wants to meet with the government then we see action.

I would like to quote from Business Week and give certain quotes from spokesmen of various Canadian steel industries. The head of Stelco, Mr. Gordon, said:

> Government authorities and Canadian steelmakers have cultivated a warm relationship, and it works so well that the industry apparently feels no need for either a trade organization or company lobbyists in Ottawa.

Mr. Macnamara, the head of Algoma Steel, said:

> When we see a problem that might be damaging to the industry as a whole . . . we meet with the government to try and resolve it. I don't know why that is impossible in the U.S., but at least in Canada we have an audience.

The steel industry has no trouble getting the ear of the minister, but when the minister wants to have the ear of the steel industry, he cannot even set up a meeting. This Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce talked very toughly about foreign investment in the past. He has talked toughly about the need for control of our own economy, yet it takes over one month to set up a meeting.

We have iron ore sitting in the slag heaps in Sudbury. In the provincial parliament the New Democratic Party has refuted the argument that Canadian iron ore cannot be used in the development of steel in Canada. Bud Germa, Elie Martel and Michael Cassidy have refuted this and other arguments which have been used as excuses for closing down Canadian industries and for laying off Canadian workers. What we need is a strategy to develop the use of our resources. What we need is an industrial strategy to meet the needs of young people, native Canadians, miners and women in the underdeveloped regions of this country. What we do not need is a government which cannot even set up a meeting with the steel companies. Once that meeting is set up, what are they going to do? If it takes one month to set up a meeting, how long is it going to take for them to come to a decision to do something? How many more Canadians have to be laid off? There have been 3,000 notices of lay-offs since we first asked this question a month ago, and nothing has happened.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State, Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce had an opportunity to look seriously into the matter of lay-offs in the iron ore mining industry. The U.S. recession and the general reduction in demand are at the roots of the problem; indeed, the present state of the automobile industry is an obvious illustration of that. Consequently, in both Canada and the United States the mining industry is operating at a reduced rate. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources are constantly monitoring the variations in supply and demand. The Government of Canada intends to raise with the Canadian steel industry the issue of ore supplies and their sources.

Very soon, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) and his colleague, the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), are scheduled to meet the supply officers of the companies involved. In addition, at a later meeting, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce along with the officials and leaders of the steel industry will be discussing among other things ways to allow a more rational use of Canadian sources of iron ore. It is the common wish of the government and the industry to find appropriate solutions to all questions having to do with supply and related problems. We are confident those discussions will result in concrete results. Incidentally, and to reiterate what my colleague from Windsor West said on May 12 last, we can be proud of the Canadian steel industry which is 100 per cent controlled by national interests and passes for the most productive, efficient and modern in the world. It is in that spirit that we are advocating policies to increase the processing of Canadian resources at home.

Mr. Murphy: When?

Mr. Lachance: To answer the hon. member, very soon.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R. ATROCITIES IN AFGHANISTAN—CONDEMNATION THEREOF—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

I have received from the townships of Flos and Tecumseh, in my constituency, an endorsement of a resolution from the town of Exeter, and in view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) has been criticizing the foreign policies of peaceful nations friendly to our country, while ignoring the recent action of Soviet troops in the killing of 60 innocent school children in Kabul, Afghanistan, on April 26, 1980, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this government show courage and determination in expressing to the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics our disgust and horror at these atrocities.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PARKS CANADA

CHANGE OF NAME OF ELK ISLAND NATIONAL PARK TO PRINCE PHILIP NATIONAL PARK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of particular significance to Albertans.

During the summer of 1978, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip made an official visit to Alberta on the occasion of the Commonwealth Games which were held in Edmonton. The Queen officiated at the opening, and Prince Philip officiated at the closing of the games. In addition, the Queen and Prince Philip made an historic and highly successful tour of the multicultural and multilinguistic communities north and east of the city of Edmonton and endeared themselves to these pioneering citizens.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the name of Elk Island National Park be officially changed by the federal government to the Prince Philip National Park, and that Prince Philip be invited to officiate at a name-changing ceremony as part of Alberta's seventy-fifth anniversary celebrations.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ECONOMIC BOYCOTTS

PROTECTION FROM FOREIGN BOYCOTT OPERATIONS AGAINST CANADIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion. In view of the numerous statements made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), prior to his appointment to the cabinet, which called for legislation to protect individuals and companies from foreign boycotts, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the government immediately introduce legislation to protect individuals, companies and businesses from the consequences of foreign boycott operations against Canadian citizens or companies.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SMALL BUSINESS

HARDSHIP CAUSED THROUGH PAPER WORK INVOLVED IN COLLECTION OF FEDERAL TAXES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

S.O. 43

Because this government claims to be committed to reducing the amount of paper work inflicted on small businessmen by the federal government, since this government in its April 21 mini-budget introduced provisions which shift the responsibility for the collection of federal sales and excise taxes from multinational oil companies to small, independent oil dealers, and due to the fact that this responsibility placed upon the backs of small, independent distributors causes undue hardships on small businessmen as they are forced to become licensed collectors of federal sales and excise taxes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson):

That this government regain its sanity and return the responsibility for collecting federal sales and excise taxes to the large oil companies, which have the resources to handle this paper work, rather than placing the burden on small, independent distributors.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

WORLD BANK

REPORTED CANDIDACY OF HON. JOHN TURNER FOR PRESIDENCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. A recent press article reports that former finance minister John Turner is a candidate for the position of president of the World Bank. Given Mr. Turner's record of fiscal mismanagement when he was finance minister, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Canadian government protest in the strongest possible terms Mr. Turner's possible appointment as head of the World Bank, which would give him the opportunity to do to the world what he did to Canada during his disastrous tenure as finance minister.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FUNDING OF DREE PROJECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): In light of the fact that the Deputy Minister of Regional Economic Development today provided information to the Standing Committee on Regional Development which proved that Canadian taxpayers are not receiving their money's worth from DREE incentives to large multinational corporations—money which is often given only because the companies threaten to locate elsewhere—and since the figures provided today indicate that the $21.5 million given to small businesses provided 4,680 jobs in 1979-80, since the $72.3 million given to large corporations provided 4,690 jobs—a mere ten jobs more for the extra $50 million given to large corporations—and since, in addition, the deputy minister also confirmed that the $23 million in federal funds was provided in the last four years to assist the now closed ITT plant in Port Cartier, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House instruct the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to fund only those operations with less than $2 million in approved capital costs, in order that Canadian taxpayers receive the best number of jobs per dollar spent on regional development projects; and, further, that the government reopen the ITT plant in Port Cartier as a Crown corporation to provide jobs for this hard-pressed region, and ensure that the $23 million spent in the last four years on this new plant not be wasted as another offering to the gods of multinationals.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SMALL LOANS ACT

REQUEST LEGISLATION BE REPEALED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I should like to move a motion under Standing Order 43. The Small Loans Act in totally irrelevant. It is causing persons wishing to borrow from credit unions and finance companies to borrow in excess of what they really need because of the strictures on interest rates.

The government has indicated that the act is no longer required nor, indeed, appropriate for today's times. This party has agreed with the government that it would, with limited debate, abolish this unnecessary statute if a bill were introduced to that effect. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House direct the government to forthwith introduce a bill to abolish the Small Loans Act, and forthwith bring the bill on for debate and immediate passage; and this House agrees to pass the said bill through all stages without delay.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND—TRANSMISSION OF HYDROELECTRIC POWER THROUGH QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, on April 16, the Premier of Newfoundland wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada indicating that talks between Newfoundland and Quebec over the transmission of Newfoundland hydro power had broken down and were not productive.

Yesterday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources seemed to be taking the side of Quebec in this dispute. I would make the point, in support of my motion, that Newfoundland has the same right to transmit its power through Quebec as Alberta has to transmit natural gas through Ontario to Quebec. Therefore, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis):

That this House direct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on behalf of the government, to comply with a written request to the Prime Minister of Canada from the Premier of Newfoundland to exercise its authority under the BNA Act to provide for transmission of Newfoundland hydroelectric power through the province of Quebec.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

DISARMAMENT

OBJECTION TO CONFERENCE ON ARMAMENTS BEING HELD IN OTTAWA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to put a motion to this House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week the American Defense Preparedness Association will be hosting an international conference on "Trends in Large Calibre Gun Systems" right across the street from this House, at the Government Conference Centre.

In view of the fact that security clearances for the conference will be processed through the Department of Supply and Services, that senior Canadian officials will be participants in the conference, and that Canadian companies—notably, Space Research of South Africa—will be plying their trade at this conference, and in view of the government's announced intention to name an ambassador at large for disarmament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House direct the Government of Canada to have this conference either cancelled or moved from the Government Conference Centre or, failing that, at the very least prohibit Canadian officials from participating in conferences of such an inappropriate nature.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ENERGY

PRICING OF ENERGY AND SECURITY OF SUPPLY—GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS—POSSIBILITY OF TAX CREDIT PROGRAM

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who knows that the present energy agreement runs out in less than two weeks. The minister has had six months since he voted against our energy proposals. He indicated the other day that he has now brought himself to proposing to Alberta an interim agreement by telephone.

● (1415)

In his meeting tomorrow with the province of Alberta, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to propose a detailed and comprehensive energy program, on behalf of Canada, which will deal with both price and security of supply and will extend at least three or four years into the future?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madame Speaker, I have already had meetings with my Alberta colleague. During our last one, I had the opportunity to make him some specific offers concerning the price of oil and gas in Canada. Up until now, my offers have been rejected. I contacted my colleague again to offer him an interim arrangement which would allow us to pursue negotiations and, in particular, to make sure that constitutional talks could go on unhindered by discussions on oil pricing.

Again tomorrow, I will be meeting with my colleague to explore with him other alernatives to those he has rejected to date. As I indicated, these alternatives will comprise many factors which will cover the points raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the minister has indicated that in his earlier meeting he discussed only questions of price, and that tomorrow he intends only to explore solutions to the problem of renewing an agreement which expires in less than two weeks.

Does the federal government have a firm and detailed proposal to submit to the producing provinces? If not, what has the federal government been doing these last six months?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I regret that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition counts so badly. This government has not been in office for six months: it took at least two months to bring down the terrible government we had last year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the point raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is concerned, I want to assure him that the offer I will put forward will be comprehensive.

Mr. Clark: Perhaps I was giving the minister too much credit for foresight. I assume that when he voted down an energy policy which would have given Canada security of supply and an effective pricing increase, he had an alternative in mind six months ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Obviously, he did not.

Mr. Clark: What troubles me is that there is no evidence he has an alternative in mind today, 13 days before the expiry of the agreement now in place. I should like to ask him a couple of specific questions about the comprehensive agreement he intends to discuss tomorrow with the government of Alberta.

Can the minister tell the House of Commons whether there will be a provision for some kind of special help to lower income Canadians who will be affected by the price increases that will come: special help either in the form of the kind of tax credit proposed by my government or by some other means?

Can he tell us whether the federal proposal he intends to put before the province of Alberta tomorrow involves using some of the tax moneys from the petroleum industry in Canada to establish an institution similar to the Canadian Energy Bank that will allow and encourage Canadian individuals to invest in the development of the Canadian energy? Will those details be part of the precise package which he will put before the government of Alberta tomorrow?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition seems to be very exercised about the fact that we have been negotiating for four months. I need only remind him that it took him six months not to reach an agreement with the government of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

Mr. Lalonde: We are going to meet again tomorrow, and meet as long as necessary. There have been indications by myself and by the minister of energy for Alberta that July 1 was a target date, not a deadline, and that we were trying to reach an agreement by July 1. I am sure the hon. Leader of the Opposition has read the press reports both from me and from Mr. Leitch to the effect that if some progress shows up, we would continue our discussions even after July 1.

As to the specific contents of these exchanges, I indicated before that I did not intend to reveal the content of the specific proposals that might be made by the government of Alberta: I do not think I should do so unless and until we have met, discussed them and agreed to make them public. I think for the purpose of frank and honest discussion I should at least pay the courtesy to my colleague of having meetings with him first before revealing any of these contents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the minister is prepared to reveal details on national television, but not in this House of Commons. Can he tell us, in respect of the proposal he is going to put to the Alberta government tomorrow, first of all whether it will be a firm proposal; and, secondly, whether that proposal will include elements other than simply price?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition claims that I have not been willing to give information to the House of Commons. Last week I sat every day in the House expecting a question asking me what offer I would make to the government of Alberta, but I am afraid the opposition was not on its toes. I do not know whether the opposition was asleep, but they did not rise at the time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Tell us now.

Mr. Lalonde: It took somebody from the press to ask me the question whether an offer had been made and what the answer might be. As far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, I have already said that the offer I would make would be comprehensive.

DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF ALSANDS AND COLD LAKE PROJECTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The June 30 deadline is well known. Perhaps less well known is another deadline—but of vital importance—and that is the August 1 deadline by which government concurrence is required in order to permit both the Alsands and the Cold Lake projects to commence this year—projects of $6 billion each. Is it the government's position and policy that either, or both, of those projects commence in 1980?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would hope that our discussions with the government of Alberta will have reached a definite conclusion by the end of July, at the latest.

Mr. Jarvis: Then I do not understand, Madam Speaker, why the minister is, or has been talking in terms of an October agreement and simply an interim agreement. He will be aware that his colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development, in the other place, indicated that Alsands alone in the construction and engineering phases, together with the multiplier spin-off, would create 110 million man-hours of employment or 55,000 jobs, many of which would be in Ontario and Quebec, in manufacturing, engineering and other professional services.

I want from the minister his commitment that this employment and economic project will not be delayed one full year while the minister talks about interim agreements, when these two projects need concurrence by August 1.

Mr. Lalonde: Again, Madam Speaker, I have had the opportunity of meeting with officials of Alsands and discussing this matter with them. The hon. member also knows, from the past, that the problem with regard to Alsands has not been with the federal government but has been with the government of Alberta which has up to now refused authorization to proceed with the Alsands project.

An hon. Member: Who invoked the force majeure?

Mr. Lalonde: If the government of Alberta gives the proper authorization, I am sure the Alsands group will be very eager to proceed. As a matter of fact, they have decided, as the hon. member knows, to proceed this year with expenditures without even having firm authorization from the government of Alberta to proceed. I think that is a clear indication of where the responsibility lies at the present time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISARMAMENT—OBJECTION TO CONFERENCE ON ARMAMENTS BEING HELD IN OTTAWA

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the government's commitment in the Speech from the Throne to world peace and disarmament, and the pending appointment of an ambassador for disarmament, can the minister tell the House why the Canadian government is hosting a secret armaments conference sponsored by the American Defence Preparedness Association here in Ottawa at the Government Conference Centre from June 24 to June 26?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is not the Canadian government that is the host of this conference; it is the American Defence Preparedness Association. We happen to be involved in assisting them because we believe that Canada has an interest in seeing that that conference takes place successfully.

RCMP REPORT ON SPACE RESEARCH CORPORATION

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I beg to differ: the government is hosting the conference and has made available the Conference Centre in order that the conference might take place on the minister's permission. A number of senior officials from National Defence, Space Research Corporation and IT & C are taking part. Speaking of Space Research Corporation, I would like to address my supplementary question to the Minister of Justice or, in his absence, the acting minister or the Prime Minister if he is interested.

In view of the participation of Space Research Corporation in this secret armaments conference, and in view of its recent conviction in the United States courts for illegally selling arms to South Africa in violation of the UN arms embargo, will the minister or the Prime Minister inform the House why the RCMP report on the activities of Space Research Corporation has been kept secret and when, if ever, it will be released?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of most of the facts to which the hon. member has referred, but I will be happy to take note of the question on behalf of the minister.

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, I shall then ask a question of a minister who is present, the Minister of Supply and Services. Can the minister confirm recent reports that the government is considering having Canadian Arsenals Limited acquire a substantial interest in Space Research Corporation, and whether that interest will include the 20 per cent that is now owned by the South African government's armaments corporation, Armscor?

Will he, further, tell the House what contracts government departments or agencies currently have with Space Research Corporation?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, with reference to the first part of the hon. lady's question, this is a matter which is to go before cabinet; therefore, I would hope that the hon. lady would wait until the end of this month in order to permit me to bring the matter before cabinet, which will enable me to be in a position to provide further information to the House.

With regard to the second portion of the hon. lady's question, I would like to take notice of it and I will provide the information at a later date.

ENERGY

GASOLINE—USE THEREOF BY NON-CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources: it concerns energy costs. I have a particular concern with respect to Canadian-subsidized fuel being sold for foreign use.

The minister is aware that the Canadian taxpayer subsidizes foreign businesses and foreign consumers for up to at least 50 cents a gallon for every gallon that is used by foreign businesses and foreign consumers. It is my understanding that this practice is costing the Canadian taxpayer in the order of $100 million. I should like to ask the minister if he can confirm that figure; and, if so, could he advise the House what he is doing about it?

● (1430)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): On the first point, Madam Speaker, I notice that one hon. member yesterday referred to a figure of $100 million with regard to car use. The advice I have from my officials is that that figure is much in excess of what it would most likely be: it is more likely about half of that amount, in realistic terms. However, that amount is substantial and is not indifferent, even though out of that the road tax going to the provinces would probably represent something like $20 million, so there is an element of revenue.

I should like to assure the hon. member that I am reviewing this whole question both with regard to marine and airline transportation. Consultations are going on with other departments at the present time, and I hope to be able to make some recommendations to cabinet before long.

As far as the question of car transportation is concerned, consultations have taken place with the government of the province of Ontario, where most of the problem arises, and also with representatives of the industry. Consultations have also taken place with other departments, and I am expecting reactions from the industry by the end of this month, after which I should be in a position, again, to make recommendations to my colleagues and advise the hon. member of any steps that should be taken, if some steps are required.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the advice from the minister that he has the matter under review. There are a good number of Canadians who are not aware of the magnitude of the practice and that we are, in fact, now subsidizing both foreign businesses and foreign consumers to a considerable degree.

I would ask the minister if he would bring forward information to the House on whether it is $20 million, $50 million or $100 million, or whatever the figure may be, prior to whatever course of action he is going to take, so that we can at least have the information as it relates not only to cars and trucks but also to vessels and airplanes. Would he make the information public, so that at least Canadians may be aware of how much they are subsidizing foreign businesses and foreign consumers?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the hon. member recognizes, I am sure, that this is not a piece of statistical information. We have to operate on guesstimates and assumptions. The figure I have given to the hon. member is what appears to be a reasonable guesstimate on car-implied subsidization.

As I said, we must also take into account the substantial contribution to provincial revenues by increased road taxes that would be collected on additional gasoline sales. As far as providing statistical information to the hon. member, I do not think we can do that, because that information is not available on a sure basis. At best, one has estimates.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STATISTICS CANADA INDICATION OF DROP IN REAL GROWTH

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It touches, obviously, on the very alarming figures released by Statistics Canada today, which indicate that in the first quarter real growth in Canada was down half a point—which is 2 per cent if you annualize it over the four quarters of the year.

Bearing in mind that we have not had such a drop since a similar quarter in 1974 just prior to the last recession, would the Minister of Finance indicate whether he holds to his forecast that real growth this year will be a positive .5 per cent?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in reply to the hon. member I want to tell him that I have not yet revised these forecasts. The Department of Finance has not produced new projections. It may be that as the year advances, further projections, will be relevant and necessary.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I hope that all members of the House noted that the Minister of Finance said he had not yet revised his forecast. Obviously, the war may be over before he gets around to changing his own forecast.

Let me draw the minister's attention to the fact that Statistics Canada says that residential construction is down 6.1 per cent in the quarter. As the Conservative government anticipated there would be a drop in residential construction, and brought in the municipal tax credit and the mortgage interest credit to try to encourage residential construction, would the minister indicate if we may expect comparable legislation or action in order to encourage residential construction in this country?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Madam Speaker, we would not want to reintroduce a comparable measure containing the inequities that were in the measure referred to by the hon. member.

FINANCE

INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. In light of the figures released by Statistics Canada today showing the real decline in the level of the economy, in light of the fact we are now told by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that it will be some time before an agreement is reached with Alberta and that there is an attempt to find an interim solution, also in light of the lay-offs that are occurring every day—which are causing hardship throughout Canada—is the minister reconsidering his earlier indication to the House that he will not bring in a budget until after an energy agreement is signed and, in any case, not before the fall? Does he not think the time has come, as we begin this cyclical downturn, to bring in a budget so that it will have some effect?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the question of the hon. member contains a large number of implications, including the question of whether at this time it would be my decision to undertake further stimulus to the economy or, to put it another way, to add further to the already high deficit.

As the hon. member knows, the current budgetary deficit is running at about $14 billion, which in itself is providing considerable support to the economy. I have not reached the conclusion at this point that it would be appropriate to add further to the deficit in the present circumstances.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, I would refer the minister to the report of the Canadian Institute for Economic Policy on Inflation and Unemployment, which points out that government policy, including provincial government policy, since 1975 has not been in a net way, stimulative at all.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO STIMULATE ECONOMIC GROWTH

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that on December 13, when the Prime Minister was leader of the opposition, he said that his party would support a policy of cutting taxes and stimulating the growth of the economy, may I ask how he and his party could have supported such a motion on December 13 and now have the Minister of Finance tell the country that it is not the policy of the Liberal party to support cutting taxes or stimulating the growth of the economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the statement the hon. member attributes to me. I do not recollect saying those things. It seems to me they are things the New Democratic Party was saying.

An hon. Member: They got your vote.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member wants to say what his party said, he should say so: he should not say that I said it.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT HAS ENTERED INTO AGREEMENTS ON DEVELOPMENT OF EASTERN QUEBEC

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

On several occasions the minister said that he wanted to conclude an agreement with the Quebec government for the regional development of eastern Quebec so that the area would no longer be only considered in sectorial agreements now in effect. Could the minister tell the House if such an agreement was officially suggested and what was the response of the Quebec government? In addition, if such an offer was made, could he also tell us what part was played by the Canadian government in that agreement?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, indeed the federal government in 1968 with the government of Mr. Daniel Johnson and later with that of Mr. Bourassa succeeded in concluding an agreement under which both governments set up a fund of regional development for the Lower St. Lawrence, the Gaspé Peninsula and the Magdalen Islands. Since 1976, the Quebec government has refused to sign such agreements but yesterday I had the opportunity to explain to the people of the Lower St. Lawrence how since 1976 the investments, expenditures and disbursements have been dramatically reduced since the Quebec government, contrary to the two previous ones, refuses to sign such agreement. This is why I was so much comforted when the Lower St. Lawrence and North Shore Association of Economic Development Officers who belong to various political parties took a position yesterday in favour of another regional agreement, a written proposal which I made three weeks ago—

• (1440)

Madam Speaker: If the hon. minister means to give us a complete historical account of the Eastern Quebec Planning Bureau, I will have to ask him to mention names which are very dear to me. Could he reply very briefly to the question of the hon. member for Rimouski?

Mr. De Bané: Madam Speaker, I understand your remarks; may I suggest, however, that I find quite unacceptable for a government—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. In my opinion, what is acceptable is for the minister to reply very briefly to the question which has been directed to him, because he has already used a good deal of the House's time.

Mr. De Bané: To conclude, Madam Speaker, I will say that in a formal letter, I advised the Quebec government several weeks ago that I was willing to sign with that government another regional agreement concerning the Gaspé Peninsula, the Lower St. Lawrence area and the Magdalen Islands.

DREE PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR PUBLICIZING OF AGREEMENTS WITH QUEBEC SINCE 1976

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. It is always interesting to hear what the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has to say.

To cut it short, could the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion commit himself today to make public, on motions or in a statement, all agreements since 1976 that the Quebec government has refused and the proposals it has made to the federal government and that this government has rejected?

To save time, could the minister make a public statement on the negotiations between Quebec and Ottawa since 1976?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have no objection whatsoever to making public various projects suggested by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which the present government in Quebec rejected for the sole reason that they would make the presence of the federal government in the province of Quebec more visible.

INCOME TAX

REMOVAL OF INDEXING—UNFAIRNESS TO LOWER INCOME CANADIANS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, My question is to the Minister of Finance and is further to the statement he made in answer to an earlier question. The trial balloon which the government has floated in relation to the removal of indexation on personal income tax is causing Canadians considerable concern, particularly as it would result in a tax increase of over 100 per cent for a married taxpayer with two dependants with a taxable income of $10,000, a tax increase of around 10 per cent on a taxable income of approximately $20,000, and a tax increase of only 5 per cent on a taxable income of about $50,000.

Since the burden of such an increase falls on those in the lower income tax brackets, would the minister not agree that increasing taxes in this manner is most insidious, unfair and regressive? Would it not result in the inequities that he spoke of in such a negative way in his earlier answer?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to state two things in reply to the question: first, no decision has been made with respect to indexation of the income tax system; second, whatever tax changes were introduced in a budget, I want to assure the hon. member that they would be equitable and they would not attempt to solve the economic problems of the country or the fiscal requirements of the government on the backs of the low income people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I very much appreciate the response of the Minister of Finance. We will remember it if and when he ever brings down a budget. I would hope that in the course of the preparation of that budget he will remember the interests of the fixed income taxpayers of this country, such as our pensioners.

Will the minister agree that the removal of indexation would be a devious tax dodge which would increase taxation revenue, but would deprive Canadians of a tax measure which is widely regarded as being one of the few disciplines left to encourage this government to control its spending increases?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, there is a difference of opinion in the country, as I have learned, on the question of the appropriateness of de-indexation. It is not something that has happened. It may not happen and, therefore, the hon. member ought not to paint difficult scenarios for the people of the country.

But I would say that just recently the financial critic for the NDP, I believe just a moment ago, referred me to the institute on public policy, suggesting that I should read its publication for my instruction. I understand that that body, as one example, has recommended certain changes in the index system in order to deal with the current situation. I make that point simply to tell the hon. member that it is not something one ought to drive out of one's mind as being totally unworthy of consideration. Even his colleague, the former minister of finance, told us that he had considered the proposal: that is what I am doing at the present time.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

GOVERNMENT FUNDING OF SPACE RESEARCH CORPORATION—CRITICISM THEREOF

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Supply and Services: it concerns Space Research Corporation. Given that this firm and two of its officers have been found guilty in a United States district court of violating the United Nations embargo on the sale of arms and technology to South Africa, and given that a pré-enquête is under way in Quebec to determine whether or not there is sufficient evidence to pursue criminal charges against the firm and its officers in Canada, will the minister give us his clear and unequivocal assurance that during this period of time no new government funding will be provided to Space Research Corporation until at least the full judicial process has been concluded and the outcome determined?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. lady that my department is not responsible in any way for the funding of Space Research, nor is it presently considering funding Space Research. Perhaps the hon. lady would direct her question to the minister whose responsibility it may be to consider such funding.

Mr. Clark: We have not been able to find one.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I will gladly direct my question to the Prime Minister so that the House can be assured there will be no funding of Space Research Corporation during the period of time the pré-enquête in Quebec is under way. Also, is sufficient information available to determine whether or not criminal charges should be laid against the firm in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, earlier in the question period I had an opportunity to give an answer to a question along those lines.

Miss MacDonald: No, this is about funding.

Mr. Trudeau: I indicated that I was not aware of the facts and that I would take notice of the question.

ENERGY

PROPOSAL TO EXPORT LIQUEFIED NATURAL GAS FROM FAR NORTH

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns a proposal by the Arctic Pilot Project group to produce liquefied natural gas from the far north for export to foreign markets.

A report in last Thursday's Globe and Mail stated that the gas would be sold either to the United States or to offshore buyers at the prevailing export price. Does the minister feel that it is in the interests of public policy to exploit northern gas reserves for the sole purpose of supplying foreign markets?

• (1450)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the question of the export of natural gas or oil is one which comes first of all before the National Energy Board, which analyses the situation in the light of total supplies—whether there is a surplus of gas or a surplus of oil. The Energy Board makes such reviews regularly and its reports are published. Then it is up to the government of the day to decide whether or not to approve exports.

At the present time, no application has gone before the National Energy Board and, obviously, no recommendation has been made to cabinet. I suspect it will be several months, if not years, before the cabinet is faced with the need for a decision of the kind the hon. member mentioned.

Mr. Ittinuar: The Globe and Mail of Thursday last also reported that "only a few details remain to be settled" before a supply contract can be signed with Panarctic Oils Limited, and that a letter of intent has been initialled by the Arctic Pilot Project group and its United States customers.

Since the project is now going through the environmental assessment and review process, and still must await the National Energy Board's decision, does the minister not feel that these agreements are premature, and do they not presuppose the outcome of the regulatory process?

Mr. Lalonde: I think there is some misunderstanding of the usual practice in this regard. This type of understanding or letter of intent is a regular feature of exchanges between potential buyers and potential sellers. As the hon. member knows, these letters of intent do not have any effect unless and until the Energy Board gives approval for exports.

As a matter of fact, the Energy Board will not hold hearings unless there are specific proposals for sale and specific offers for purchase. The Board will not entertain, I suspect, a hearing on what would be a purely hypothetical offer; there must be a specific proposal, and that is what is happening in this case. It is the standard practice of the Energy Board.

CONVENTION CENTRES

FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO DEVELOPMENT OF RIDEAU CENTRE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, in view of announcements made yesterday in Toronto and Montreal by several ministers concerning federal financial assistance to convention and trade centres, can the minister tell us what plans he has for Ottawa and, more specifically, for the long-standing commitment of the government in regard to the Rideau area development project?

Can he tell us, also, what he has in mind with regard to securing provincial financial contributions to the development of the Rideau Centre and indirectly to the convention centre?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have been authorized by cabinet to pursue, as the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for reporting for the National Capital Commission, negotiations for the redevelopment of the Rideau area Crown lands in downtown Ottawa.

I have made attempts to continue negotiations with Ottawa region and city officials and with ministers of the province of Ontario. These negotiations are continuing, and I hope in short order to be able to give full particulars to the hon. member.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

PLANS RESPECTING CHANGEOVER FROM OIL-HEATING TO GAS-HEATING EQUIPMENT

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As one of the most effective ways to make this country self-sufficient in oil is to switch over from oil-heating to gas-heating, is it the intention of the government to start this very important process moving along by subsidizing the changeover from oil-heating equipment to gas-heating equipment; and, if so, when may we expect an outline of the government's plans in this regard?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): First, I would be very pleased to send the hon. member a copy of my very important speech to the Canadian Pipeline Contractors Association in which I announced a number of firm decisions by this government, whose effect would be to encourage the substitution of gas for oil in a large number of homes and commercial enterprises in eastern Canada, particularly in Quebec. I also indicated that there would be upgrading of heavy fuel oil to provide gasoline and diesel oil in greater quantities to the Canadian public.

As for the specific question raised by the hon. member, that is obviously a matter which, if it were part of it, would be covered by a general announcement of new policies and strategies with regard to energy.

Mr. Hees: The minister in his reply outlined everything except what I asked for. He mentioned a few things which he had suggested here, there and all over the place, none of which are 10 per cent as effective as subsidizing the cost of the changeover from oil-heating to gas-heating equipment. That is the key to the whole problem.

I ask the minister once again: is he considering subsidizing a changeover from oil-heating to gas-heating? If he is, would he say so? If he is not, would he admit it plainly and straightforwardly?

Mr. Lalonde: I am sure the hon. member knows that since 1974 this government has been subsidizing gas consumption by the introduction of a regime whereby the cost of gas is set at 85 per cent of the Btu value of oil. In that sense, for the last six years—thanks to the policies of the Liberal government—the consumer has benefited from a substantial subsidy when consuming gas rather than oil. Whether we should add further to this subsidy is a matter I am presently reviewing and an announcement will be made in due time.

Mr. Hees: In other words, the government has no intention of subsidizing the changeover.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

PROTECTION FROM PRODUCTION OF ELEMENTS IN VIOLATION OF HUMAN INTEGRITY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Yesterday, the United States Supreme Court issued a verdict which gives inventors control over life creation resulting from gene-splitting or genetic engineering. As a result of this decision, the inventor of living organisms is guaranteed the right to make and sell his creations.

Apart from the immediate practical advantages of this decision, such as General Electric's solution to oil spills by developing a new bacterial strain, there are serious implications to all of us ranging from uncontrollable organisms and bacterial warfare to the manipulation of test-tube life. Does the government recognize the dangers of this U.S. Supreme Court decision, and does the minister intend to allow multinationals like General Electric to control, through patents, technology which might prove to be the ultimate violation of human integrity?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): I thank the hon. member for drawing this decision to my attention. Clearly, this is a complicated matter and I should like to examine it before reporting back to him. What I can say, though, is that—last week I announced the formation in Canada of a committee—a task force to examine the problems raised by advances in biotechnology and report back to me. They, too, are active in trying to assess not only the technological possibilities of their potential impact on society, but also the moral impact and the general social implications which these developments might have for us.

AGRICULTURE

CLASSIFICATION OF LOW-INCIDENCE BRUCELLOSIS REGIONS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and it deals with the classification of low-incidence brucellosis regions by the Health of Animals Branch of his department. A part of my riding in Victoria county qualifies under this classification and has been waiting for some time to have restrictions lifted with regard to the movement and sale of cattle. Would the minister say whether or not this area is to be designated a low-incidence area? If so, when we can expect an announcement?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, all I can say is that I will investigate the matter the hon. member has raised, and if it is true—as I have no doubt it is—there must be some delay occurring or some slip-up somewhere and it will be rectified immediately.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT AND REVIEW HEARING IN RELATION TO ARVIK MINE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development my question will go to the Minister of the Environment. I am sure he is aware that start-up approval was given by the previous government to the Arvik mine, in the High Arctic, and that there never have been comprehensive or adequate environmental investigations.

Could the minister give the House a "yes" or "no" answer on whether he supports an environmental assessment and review hearing in relation to the Arvik mine?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): I am sorry, Madam Speaker; I missed the first part of the question. Normally, this would be a matter dealt with by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It would make an assessment as to the environmental impact, and thereafter opt into the environmental assessment review process. I would be happy to undertake to look at exactly what the situation is now and report to the hon. member.

STATISTICS CANADA

INQUIRY WHY AGENCY NOW UNDER DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I address my question to the President of the Treasury Board. I would have liked to put it to him last evening at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates but the meeting was cancelled. Therefore I should like to ask him now to confirm to the House whether his responsibility for Statistics Canada has been transferred to the Department of Supply and Services, why that transfer was not announced in the House and what are the reasons for such a change.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, it is true the change was made. I think an announcement was made to the press. I believe the right hon. Prime Minister should be asked the reason for this change.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RAE—LETTER CIRCULATED BY ROYAL BANK OF CANADA—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I indicated on May 13 that correspondence from a manager of the Royal Bank in Winnipeg raised a matter of privilege in that there was a fundamental ambiguity in that correspondence, which I read into the record, concerning the lobbying activities of that bank and of the Canadian Bankers' Association.

I also indicated at that time that in our view the letter, which referred to whether or not any bank information could be obtained concerning two of my colleagues in the House of Commons from Manitoba, raised an issue, and that is the question of the confidentiality of members' dealing with their banks and whether that confidentiality would be breached because of such correspondence.

I think it was indicated during that debate that it would be preferable if this matter was dealt with by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs rather than as a matter of privilege. I have always taken the view that if you, Madam Speaker, find that the letter in itself is ambiguous and does raise a possible matter of privilege, the ambiguity should be resolved by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and no where else and that Mr. Beattie, who is the author of the letter, should be asked to testify before that committee as well as Mr. MacIntosh, the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association.

The fact of the matter is that the meetings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs have been such that it simply has not been possible to call Mr. Beattie. I was working under the assumption that you, Madam Speaker, were going to rule as to whether it was a prima facie matter, which in my view would dispose of the case. I ask for a ruling on this as soon as possible since, in my view, the lobbying activities of the Royal Bank and of the Canadian Bankers' Association do pose a prima facie question of privilege which should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. It should be discussed there, and in our view it cannot be dismissed lightly.

Madam Speaker: It was on May 13 last that the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) raised a question of privilege to complain about a letter from the Royal Bank of Canada which requested from certain bank managers information on two new members of this House. The information seems to have been sought in order to lobby members of the House. All members are subject to such lobbying, particularly in this case by the chartered banks. It may be that in this case it was not even that, but merely an internal communication circulated among certain banks. In my view there is nothing to suggest that it was done to influence or intimidate members of Parliament, as was alleged by some hon. members, and we would have to have proof of that.

At paragraph 71 Beauchesne says quite clearly, and I quote:

> Direct threats which attempt to influence members' actions in the House are undoubtedly breaches of privilege. They do, however, provide serious problems for the House. They are often made anonymously and it is rarely possible for the House to examine them satisfactorily. The common practice today is to turn the responsibility for investigating them over to the ordinary forces of the law.

Therefore, if the hon. member has any indication that there was an attempt to influence or intimidate the members, then we probably could pursue the matter further.

Erskine May says the following:

> It may be stated generally that any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

Therefore, one has to prove that these actions, and in this particular case the letter written by an executive of the bank, did in fact impede the members from fulfilling their normal duties in the House of Commons. There is no indication that the information collected has been misused or has been used in such a way as to intimidate a member. There is no evidence which leads me to conclude that any member of the House has been impeded or obstructed in the performance of his parliamentary duties by the action complained of.

The suggestion has been made that my decision on this question of privilege be deferred until some evidence is brought out before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which is currently considering the Bank Act. I accepted that suggestion, and that is the reason I did not rule any sooner on this question. I took the matter under advisement until it was again raised in the House today.

It will be of interest for the House to know that on May 13 last, the same day the question of privilege was raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, the Canadian Bankers' Association released a statement which gave some explanation about the information sought in the original letter which formed the basis of this question of privilege, and I understand that a representative of the association did also give some explanation in the committee to which I referred earlier.

Equally interesting to me is the fact that since the matter was first raised in the House on May 13 it has not been raised in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs up to this day. For some reason members have not found it useful to call upon anyone to raise this question.

After giving the matter the serious consideration it deserves, I cannot find any evidence to persuade me that the privileges of members of this House have been breached, and I must therefore rule that there is no prima facie case of privilege in this instance.

MR. CLARK—TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR STATISTICS CANADA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a new question of privilege. It refers to a matter which just arose in the House when a government member, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), posed a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) regarding a transfer of responsibility for the operations of Statistics Canada. I raise the matter because I think that the privileges of the House of Commons have been affected in two ways by a transfer of jurisdiction and a transfer of responsibility which has never been explained or presented to the House of Commons.

As the hon. member for Laurier indicated in posing a question to his own minister, he was denied the privilege as a member of Parliament of putting questions which he wanted to put in a standing committee of the House of Commons because the apparent indecision of the government as to which minister is responsible for Statistics Canada led to the cancellation of not one but two meetings of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Again the capacity of the House of Commons to carry out its responsibilities has been limited by the mystery or the indecision about Statistics Canada in that members of this House who might want to pose questions in relation to that agency do not know to which minister those questions should be directed because we do not know at this stage who reports for Statistics Canada in the House of Commons.

The President of the Treasury Board was obviously embarrassed and unhappy about the fact that responsibility for Statistics Canada has been taken away from him. That indicates that the matter has been one of some dispute within the government and it suggests that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must have had some good cause for taking away from the President of the Treasury Board responsibility for an agency which previously reported to Parliament through that minister.

● (1510)

It would be very helpful to the House of Commons to know why Statistics Canada has been moved from the Treasury Board, why that decision could not have been announced to the House or could not have been finalized in time to allow the standing committees of the House to carry on with meetings that had been previously arranged. I think that probably the matter could be resolved if the Prime Minister or some other responsible minister would come into the House and tell us exactly what is going on with Statistics Canada; what was wrong with the President of the Treasury Board; why he is not able to carry out his responsibilities of reporting to the House of Commons for Statistics Canada; why, if the decision had been taken some time ago with enough advance notice to cancel two meetings of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, that information was not conveyed to the members; and why that information was not conveyed to the whole House.

There is unnecessary mystery here which I think simply reflects an unwillingness on the part of the government to indicate the reasons for its actions to the House of Commons. I simply want to draw Your Honour's attention to it because it has limited the capacity of members to function effectively in standing committees and has limited our ability to direct questions effectively in this House since we do not know which minister is responsible for that very important and sometimes controversial agency of the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I had hoped during the question period—and I understand that the demands of time was the reason it was not possible to be recognized—to clear this matter up by asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether in fact he had sacked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) as the minister responsible for Statistics Canada and, if so, why he felt that he was inappropriate in that responsibility.

I would like simply to supplement the remarks made by my leader because I think the House has been gravely mistreated in this instance. According to the CP report which went over the wire yesterday:

> Information director David Davidson said Blais assumed the responsibility Friday and that Johnston had said in a letter to the statistics agency's employees that Johnston had known when he was appointed his post would be temporary.

If indeed it is true that the Prime Minister had told the President of the Treasury Board that that responsibility would be removed from him at the time he was appointed, then the Prime Minister and the President of the Treasury Board had the responsibility to level with the Canadian people and the House of Commons. Instead, we learned about this announcement through a dispatch in the Canadian Press. The fact that no clear announcement had been made and that the government, for some reason, decided to make the change on a Friday, which they knew was slowest possible news day on which it would get the least possible coverage, certainly indicates that there are many questions here which remain to be answered and that the government has not discharged its responsibilities to Parliament and the Canadian people in terms of giving us the reasons for this very important change.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to indicate to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and to the previous speaker that contrary to what they have said, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and, in fact, the public at large were very much aware of the fact that responsibility for Statistics Canada had been entrusted to me by the Prime Minister and that yesterday afternoon, I advised Madam Speaker as well as the chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates that since I had been notified only on Monday that these new responsibilities were entrusted to me, I could not appear before the committee.

Of course, the Leader of the Opposition knows full well that during any oral questions period, he could—in fact, he could have taken the opportunity today since this change has been publicly announced today and I had in fact talked about it yesterday with the chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates—he could seize the first opportunity during oral question period to address himself directly to the Prime Minister who is responsible for public administration and for delineating ministerial responsibilities. He did not take this opportunity, rather he elected to raise this through a question of privilege without any basis to do so, at a time when the Prime Minister was gone, when the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) was gone, in order to try to make a bit of a show off—

Mr. Ouellet: Petty politics!

Mr. Blais: —and petty politics, as the hon. minister puts it, without any legitimate ground.

[English]

From my standpoint, Madam Speaker, I might indicate to you that I am most pleased that the Prime Minister has asked me to take on this responsibility. It is only fitting that Statistics Canada, which is an administrative agency, should fit within an administrative department. It is a service organization, and those services for which I am responsible to the House are basically service agencies and administrative departments. I look forward to replying to questions from the opposition and from members on this side of the House relating to the discharge of my responsibilities with reference to Statistics Canada, and also to show up the excellence of that agency and to advise the House of the measures that will be undertaken within Statistics Canada to continue to make it one of the best statistical institutions, not only in Canada but indeed in the international arena.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I did not intend to speak on the point of order raised by the right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark), but I must try to clear the air, having heard the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) imply that somehow it was our obligation to announce this change to the public of Canada. Surely it is up to the government to disclose in the appropriate way—which would have been a statement on motions yesterday—that a change has been made in ministerial responsibility for Statistics Canada, and not wait for a question to come from the opposition.

Let me put this into perspective. One feels that this is not accidental. The fact is that for the last four months, notwithstanding that three reports have been commissioned, as you will recall, by the Clark government and have now been brought down, indicating that some serious things have to be done with respect to Statistics Canada, we have been told by the former minister responsible for Statistics Canada, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), that he has the matter under review. Now we are being told, literally on the day on which the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates was to have the first opportunity to question the minister on the progress he has made with respect to the three reports, that the responsibility for Statistics Canada has been moved to another minister. We hear that the Minister of Supply and Services has used his power as the new minister to squelch the meeting by simply intervening with the chairman of the committee and saying to him, "I do not want to appear before your committee."

Consider the position in which that is putting all members of the House, including members of the minister's own governing party. In effect, we have been relegated to an inconsequential role. We were not given an opportunity to put questions to the minister with respect to Statistics Canada in committee. Apparently the minister had said that he thought it would be a month before he would be ready to come before the committe. In all likelihood this House might not even be sitting a month from now. My point is that some very serious questions are coming up with regard to Statistics Canada.

I have referred to the reports. As we know, a census will be taken in 1981, before which 33,000 census representatives, 1,800 enumerators and 1,900 commissioners will be appointed. This is something on which there has been considerable discussion. The tradition of the Liberal party has been to follow strictly a governing party approach in appointing those people. We have criticized this in the past and we believe that this is an antiquated system. We are much more in favour of having a completely open system where community organizations and manpower offices can be asked to supply names, as well as all members of Parliament, instead of treating this just as a convenient pork barrel or patronage type of appointment system.

That is why I say that I believe the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has an extremely vital point of order at stake here. We were denied the privilege of knowing in the usual way when the role of a minister has been changed, and I think the House deserves an explanation.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the discussion on the point of order raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) who seems to find mystery in the fact that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) decided to transfer the responsibility for Statistics Canada from one minister to another. There is absolutely nothing mysterious in that and I believe the Leader of the Official Opposition and the former president of the treasury board (Mr. Stevens) will have every opportunity to put appropriate questions both to the Prime Minister here in the House because there will be other question periods and in committee to the new minister responsible.

I heard the former president of the treasury board say this is unfortunate but he thinks the minister will not be able to go before the committee before a month and in a month we will probably not be here. I cannot confirm whether or not we will be here in a month but what I want to confirm however is that under an agreement made with his own parliamentary leader, the estimates are before the committees until December 10, and the House will be sitting well before December 10. The minister will have every opportunity to answer all the questions of the former president of the treasury board and dissipate the sort of mystery that seems to be blinding the former prime minister.

So there is absolutely nothing irregular in the decision of the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) earlier put a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston). The President of the Treasury Board told him it was the Prime Minister who had made that decision, and the question period had expired. An hon. member on the other side tried to get the floor but it was past three o'clock and instead of putting a supplementary question, he came back on the point of order raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition to make his point.

All that makes an interesting discussion, of course, Madam Speaker. It is a point of clarification. We know the House will have other question periods. The Prime Minister will probably be here tomorrow, and the Leader of the Official Opposition will probably also be able to put the question to him. There is nothing mysterious in that. The Prime Minister will give an answer and the former president of the treasury board will have every opportunity to question fully the minister now responsible for Statistics Canada before the committee as the estimates will be there at least at the latest until December 10. Once again, Madam Speaker, I find this question of privilege is being somewhat abused. There is absolutely nothing mysterious, everything is in order, and the facts can be put again before the House either during question period tomorrow or in committee later on.

Madam Speaker: I think the House appreciates the point of order raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) but I have to point out right at the outset that I cannot rule on anything that happened during a sitting of a committee. If hon. members have grievances to express concerning proceedings in a committee, the matter has to be debated by that committee and not in the House.

However, a part of the speech of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is based on the proceedings during the oral question period and having listened to what he had to say, I must say that his grievance seems to me to be quite legitimate, but I must remind him that the whole question of allocating responsibilities within the cabinet is incumbent upon the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself and that the Chair cannot in any way interfere in order to make one minister or another answer given questions. Again I wish to assure all hon. members that when in doubt they can always ask the question directly to the Prime Minister who will answer it himself or tell the House which minister is responsible and should answer in his place.

I think it is now clear to all hon. members that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) is the one to whom all questions relating to Statistics Canada should be directed. They can therefore ask any question they wish in the future and I can imagine they will not miss any occasion to do so.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to House business. Since there seems to be some misunderstanding, I wonder if the government House leader might confirm that, after dealing with the motion now before us, we will be proceeding with Bill C-15, the livestock feed assistance bill, and then with Bill C-20, the bill on the FBDB. Is that correct?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, that would be correct if we terminate debate on the order in council before ten o'clock tonight. If we finish debate on the order in council today, tomorrow we will consider Bill C-3, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act of 1971. If we finish consideration of the order in council before ten o'clock tonight, rather than going to Bill C-3 for the remainder of the time, we will consider third reading stages of Bill C-20, and Bill C-15.

Mr. Nielsen: In the reverse order or in the order expressed by the government House leader? Which is first?

Mr. Pinard: If we are to get the two bills, it does not matter, but if we are not to get the two bills, we would prefer to consider Bill C-20 first.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I think my question of privilege can wait until tomorrow. I will try to raise it then.

VIETNAMESE REFUGEES

Question No. 60—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the total amount of public money spent to date in bringing into and settling in Canada Vietnamese refugees and what is the estimated cost figure for the entire project?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): The preliminary figures to date on the bringing in and settling of Vietnamese refugees in Canada are as follows:

1979-80	$57,775,000.
1980-81	$63,666,000.

It is estimated that the total cost for the entire project will be some $122,000,000. This includes staging areas, resettlement, language training, transportation and other costs.

UIC—BENEFIT CONTROL OFFICERS

Question No. 112—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many benefit control officers are there in the province of Ontario dealing with unemployment insurance?

2. Is there a requirement that they must (a) do 35 investigations per month (b) launch at least one prosecution per month and, if not, what is the requirement in each case?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. There are currently 151 investigation and control officers in the province of Ontario.

2. There is no requirement that the commission's investigation and control officers must complete a specific number of investigations or launch a specific number of prosecutions. As part of the normal budgetary and resource planning and allocation process, the commission's field offices are, of course, required to make estimates of work volumes and to translate these volumes in terms of financial and personnel resource requirements. This is a normal budgetary exercise that is essential to the responsible management of scarce resources. It is quite possible that these budgetary estimates are at times misinterpreted. However, the commission has said before, and reiterates now, that there are no investigation or prosecution quotas or requirements in Ontario or elsewhere in Canada.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—SXs

Question No. 364—Mr. Herbert:

1. As of March 31, 1979, (a) how many persons in the SX classification were employed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources (b) how many were (i) Francophones (ii) females?

2. What are the present totals?

3. Was there a structural change in the Department since March 31, 1979, and, if so, what effect did such a change have on the number of SX's employed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

1. (a) As of March 31, 1979—38;

(b) (i) 4

(ii) none.

2. (a) As of May 5, 1980—39;

(b) (i) 4

(ii) none.

3. Since March 31, 1979, there has been a reorganization within the energy policy sector of EM&R. However, the reorganization has had no effect on the number of SXs employed in the department.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—PUBLICITY

Question No. 632—Mr. Howie:

How many persons engaged in public relations, publicity or media relations, are employed on staff in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

Information EMR Branch—4;

Energy Communications—18.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—SERVICES CONTRACTS

Question No. 693—Mr. Clarke:

1. For the fiscal year 1978-79, how many contracts were let by the Department of Transport for professional services, to persons who at any time within the past five years, had been employed in indeterminate positions under the Public Service Commission?

2. How many contracts were (a) for less than one year (b) for one to two years (c) over two years?

3. How many contracts were let outside the National Capital Region?

4. What was the total cost of all such contracts?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport):

1. 35.

2. (a) 31;

(b) 3;

(c) 1.

3. 13.

4. $181,027.

THEFT OF TELLUROMETER

Question No. 715—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of Public Works in footnote number 11 at page 12.62, Volume I of the 1978-79 Public Accounts of Canada (a) what is a tellurometer and how is it used by the department (b) was the thief apprehended (c) what was the result of the investigatory steps undertaken by the department (d) in what location did the loss occur?

2. Did the department undertake steps to ensure that such a loss does not recur and, if so, what were they?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) A tellurometer is a device that measures distance by means of microwaves for land survey work.

(b) No.

(c) RCMP and Campbellton police investigated and were unable to determine who stole the property.

(d) Campbellton, N.B.

2. Regional directives regarding security of government property have been amended to include instructions for care and safe custody of equipment.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Question No. 717—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 due to damages of contents recorded by the Department of Agriculture at page 12.62, Volume I of the 1978-79 Public Accounts of Canada, for what reason was the loss of $20,000 unexplained?

2. What is the explanation for the loss?

3. On what dates and in what locations did the losses take place?

4. Did the department undertake procedural or structural changes to ensure that such losses do not recur and, if so, what were they?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The location, identification of buildings and estimated cost of damage sustained is all that is required to be reported for the Public Accounts of Canada. All fire losses are reported in detail to the Dominion Fire Commissioner.

2. A fire of unknown origin destroyed a hay barn containing 325 tons of hay.

3. November 6, 1978, at the Animal Research Institute, Greenbelt Farm, Nepean, Ontario.

4. An investigation by the Regional Fire Commissioner's office could find no cause for the fire and deemed it accidental from an unknown origin. The facility will be rebuilt by Public Works Canada in accordance with current National Fire and Building Codes of Canada.

Question No. 718—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the losses of more than $1,000 due to damages to buildings recorded by the Department of Agriculture at page 12.62, Volume I of the 1978-79 Public Accounts of Canada, for what reason was the loss of $54,934 unexplained?

2. What is the explanation for the loss?

3. On what dates and in what locations did the losses take place?

4. Did the department undertake procedural or structural changes to ensure that such losses do not recur and, if so, what were they?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The location, identification of buildings and estimated cost of damage sustained is all that is required to be reported for the Public Accounts of Canada. All fire losses are reported in detail to the Dominion Fire Commissioner.

2. A fire of unknown origin destroyed a hay barn.

3. November 6, 1978, at the Animal Research Institute, Greenbelt Farm, Nepean, Ontario.

4. An investigation by the Regional Fire Commissioner's office could find no cause for the fire and deemed it accidental from an unknown origin. The facility will be rebuilt by Public Works Canada in accordance with current National Fire and Building Codes of Canada.

CANADIAN CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATION GRANT

Question No. 802—Mr. de Jong:

Does the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs plan to continue to grant funds to the Canadian Consumers' Association and, if so, will the grant be increased next year?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Yes. At this time, however, the allocation of the department's contribution funds for 1980-81 has not yet been finalized.

MARIJUANA STUDIES

Question No. 815—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1975, what amount was spent on studies related to marijuana by the Department of National Defence?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): $74,990.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

Question No. 846—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1978, did the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs ban or recommend against the use of (a) children's toys (b) consumer appliances?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): (a) Yes. Actions during 1978 included removal from the market of four styles of plush toys containing excessive amounts of lead in paints used for decorative lettering. For the 1979-80 fiscal year, enforcement activity with respect to toys was as follows: inspections—1,479; products examined—8,332; recall actions—65 (involving 90,150 product units); removal/disposal actions—248 (involving 101,790 product units).

(b) No. Household appliances, both electrically-operated and gas-fueled, are subject to provincial laws requiring compliance with safety standards of the Canadian Standards Association and the Canadian Gas Association. To avoid duplication of effort, the department has not intervened in this provincially-regulated area of product safety. The department does, however, maintain close contact with the responsible provincial authorities and provides some input to the safety standards development process.

CANADA-EEC CHEESE ARRANGEMENTS

Question No. 879—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the government bound by the present total of approximately 45 million pounds of mostly specialty cheeses imported into Canada as a result of GATT negotiations and, if so, will it take steps to reduce this quota as soon as negotiations can be carried out in order to assist Canadian dairy farmers?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: the actual level of the global cheese quota was set at 45 million pounds as part of the over-all dairy program for the current dairy year and thus independently of the Canada-EEC arrangement on cheese. Within the context of the MTN, Canada negotiated an arrangement with the EEC which provides improved access to the EEC market for up to 6 million pounds of Canadian cheddar, as well as an undertaking on the community's part not to undercut Canadian prices through its export subsidy scheme. It is in return for this concession that Canada undertook to maintain the global quota at 45 million pounds until 1982 and to allocate the EEC 60 per cent of this level.

The size of the cheese quota will be subject to review in the near future as part of the next dairy program at which point the government will need to be mindful of our arrangement with the European Community.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ORDER IN COUNCIL RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF MINISTRY OF STATE FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

The House resumed from Monday, June 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pinard (for Mr. Trudeau):

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Edward Richard Schreyer, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada:

May It Please Your Excellency:

The House of Commons, having considered the proposed text of the order in council tabled in the House on 21 April 1980, in relation to the establishment of a Ministry of State for Social Development, prays that the making of the said order in council be approved.

● (1530)

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, before I take up where I left off when I called it ten o'clock last night, I should like to draw to the attention of the House that we are debating a motion establishing the Ministry of State for Social Development, a very important ministry which has a great role to play if properly put together. I must say I am disappointed as I look across the floor to see that the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Chrétien), who is going to be the minister responsible for this ministry, is not in his seat, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), whose department will be affected drastically by this ministry is not in her seat, that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is not in his seat, nor is the Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). All these ministries will be affected by this ministry, yet not one of those ministers is in the House to hear this brief debate.

There is a time limit on the debate; Liberals call the business of the House, but they do not have the courtesy of being here to hear the debate. I find that shameful. I am disappointed and I am disgusted. It is the same old gang over there which does not give a hoot about what goes on in this House. I am just shocked and saddened at this type of display this afternoon.

Mr. Knowles: There is only one minister over there.

Mr. McDermid: They are probably afraid they might learn something.

When I left off last night I was discussing a number of areas of concern. I finished off the evening by pointing out that Liberals were fostering a practice of discrimination right here in the House of Commons because they allow all House of Commons personnel to take French or English language training, yet the assistants to members of Parliament are not afforded that privilege. I think that is a shame. I was wondering how a party which has not been able to implement its own policies in the past will do so in the future. I ask the minister—and I trust someone over there will pass it on to him—if he is going to have any more success at fostering or developing Canadian culture. Culture was defined by the commission on bilingualism and biculturalism as a "way of living, thinking, feeling. It is a driving force animating a significant group of individuals united by a common tongue and sharing the same customs, habits, and experiences".

The term "multiculturalism" under Liberal implementation has become a cliché, a slogan. I do not want to be misunderstood in this regard. Multiculturalism is Canada and Canada is multiculturalism. The diversity of all of us cannot be denied. We cherish our differences. The acceptance of difference is the mark of civilized man. However, our differences, if stressed to the point where groups no longer see any similarities with each other, in themselves foster bigotry, disunity and isolation.

There are many different views of multiculturalism. Unfortunately, the most widely articulated and of great concern is that ethnic groups, as stated by Rosemary Brown to the second conference on multiculturalism, retain their identities because they are alienated, isolated, oppressed, ostracized, categorized and manipulated as a result of their particular background. The program has done very little in the area of social development, and that is what we are discussing today.

Of a budget of $10 million, only $633,000 was directed to immigrant aid last year. Whether we like it or not, the kindest, most humane thing we as older Canadians can do for new immigrants, new Canadians, is to help them integrate into the Canadian way of life. I am not saying assimilate; we do not have to give up our background or deny our identity, but for our own survival a certain amount of integration, whether through language instruction in either French or English, historical, political or economic instruction, is necessary for active participation in the Canadian social system.

Present policies are not doing enough to help the average person out there in a new land. Dispensing funds to song and dance groups, writers, academics, etc., is a very commendable thing, but is it helping the person out there looking for a job who cannot speak the language and does not know what assistance is available to him? I do not question the importance of cultural and artistic endeavours of ethnic groups being encouraged and funded, not at all. I do question, however, the priorities. There is a certain amount of nostalgic feeling being fostered by multiculturalism. It has become, as in all things Liberal, an elitist idea feeding on the emotions and insecurities of Mr. Average, under the guise of helping him to retain his ethnicity.

We are all Canadians, whether of Lithuanian, German, Portuguese, Russian, Welsh, Chinese, East Indian, Scottish or, as the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Paproski) reminds me, Ukrainian or any other background. Our concern should be directed at equal opportunities being available and known to each and every one of us, regardless of our background, not at whether our child can still be taught to do a highland dance or a polka, but can our child be taught to feel that he or she belongs in university, in the House of Commons or in any other profession and still feel comfortable if he or she wants to do a polka? Multiculturalism has been relatively successful in the cultural areas, but has it removed the idea of tokenism? I do not think so.

The third force, people with ethnic backgrounds other than French or English, as referred to by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), are sadly represented here in the House of Commons.

The principle behind the multiculturalism program is a good one. Liberal implementation has left a lot to be desired, even in the minds of those affected. It has not made sufficient progress in overcoming the inequalities, or ultimately in establishing a true Canadian identity within a culturally diverse nation.

The principle behind this proposed social development ministry is good, but will the implementation get bogged down by bureaucratic mismanagement? Will this new social development ministry have final decision-making powers and become a super ministry over all the areas I have mentioned both today and last night? Will it aid all Canadians, all of us, who must of necessity undergo attitudinal changes in the 1980s in order to survive as a united and free nation, and if we are to economically and socially prosper? We cannot have a healthy social climate without a healthy economy. We cannot have a healthy economy without some drastic realignment of priorities by this government.

Will the minister, if he ever shows up in the House, see fit to answer the questions we have and give this country an idea of just what this ministry is going to do for Canadians?

We on this side of the House support the principle of social development and only hope that the Liberals are not setting up another smoke screen, a gimmick, to dupe Canadians into thinking the government are doing something about much needed social reform. I hope they are sincere in wanting this ministry to activate social reform and that they are not just establishing another propaganda machine.

We approve this motion but expect action from the department, and we put them on notice that we will be monitoring its performance. We on this side will not put up with just another bureaucracy. We want a functioning and relative department. That is their challenge, Mr. Speaker, and I hope they can live up to it.

• (1540)

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my few remarks on the setting up of a new social development ministry by asking a question: Is this trip really necessary? My distinguished colleague, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), in his magnificently nostalgic speech about the 1960s yesterday, was fond of quoting the great old song titles, and the one which keeps running through my mind at the moment is "That Old Feeling". Because I cannot help getting that old feeling that once again the Liberals are coming along to give us a social cure when for the past 20 years at least they have been the social disease.

When I question the need for this new ministry of social development, I am asking the question in an historical perspective, after watching the succession of Liberal governments operate as they have during their many years in office. It is true that the short-lived Clark government was actively working on setting up a ministry of social development, so it is not my intention to shoot down the idea in principle, now that we are in opposition. It is a good idea in principle.

But where the principle may be the same, the practice and the implementation of this new social ministry, I suspect, will be vastly different from the plan proposed by the previous Conservative administration. We on this side were setting up such a ministry as part of the total long-range thinking that the Conservative administration had embarked upon, in the same way we had launched a five-year program in the economic sphere. We felt it was important to look at the Canada of the next decade, as my hon. friend for Rosedale did so well yesterday afternoon, and up to the year 2000 in terms of how the federal government's social policy can best benefit all Canadians.

Part of our long-term planning included select special committees of this Parliament, including the study of volunteerism in society and a special study on the disabled and handicapped citizens of Canada, a subject which is so dear to the heart of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). Those select committees were hampered at every turn by the then Liberal opposition and they never did become really operational.

Now, all of a sudden, the Liberal government finds it expedient to have a super ministry of social development. Whereas we on the Conservative side were planners always considering the long-term benefits to Canadians as opposed to the short-term appeal to the country's headline writers, the Liberals are resorting to ad hoc political expediency and, I fear, may end up paying lip service to, and watering down the whole idea of, a super ministry on social development in terms of what its mandate should be.

I fully support the program description as it is outlined in the blue book estimates of 1980-81 in section 27, page 4. This section, under the heading "Policy Formulation, Program Review and Assessment", says that the new ministry shall:

> Develop approaches to improve and integrate the delivery of social benefits to Canadians and lead and co-ordinate the efforts of the Government of Canada to foster co-operative arrangements with the provinces and with public and private organizations to facilitate the development of the individual, the family and the community.

I could not agree more with the principles expressed in that intention and that mandate.

An hon. Member: It sounds good.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Yes, it sounds very good, but let us see what happens to it. I also feel strongly that part of this ministry's mandate is to get rid of the bureaucracy that is involved in some of the social portfolios and get rid of the duplication of services as between federal governments and provincial governments. In this sense, I believe that this ministry must really have a constitutional consciousness.

This was the thoughtful way in which we were approaching the setting up of a super ministry of this sort. We were always working for gross in our economic and social programs as expressed in the gross national product, but I am afraid, based on past experience, that the Liberals will regard this ministry as gross, as in the size of the bureaucracy.

When we refer to the bureaucracy, it is most often in a negative sense. I do not think that should be the case. I know well from my reporting years around here and as a member of government that one can feel the capacity for work in the civil service. There is a very real conscientious care for Canada on the part of bureaucrats who can be, and in many cases are, the nicest, most mild-mannered people in the world. They are not vicious, ill-tempered types out to rob the taxpayers blind; they are following the rules.

But these hard working, well meaning civil servants get caught in the vastness of the machine. As soon as a new ministry is hatched—and one sometimes must wonder about the kind of boondoggling and patronage that follows the birth of new department—automatically the talk is about a budget of $8 million to $10 million in today's terms. Human nature being what it is, especially in the public service, any new department must have some status. That is measured in human relation terms by the size of the budget and the number of people in the new department, ministry or agency.

A Consumers Association of Canada survey of 900 of its members, which was released just last night, reveals that their greatest fear about inflation is the rise in the federal deficit. So yet another bureaucracy will come as cold comfort to consumers. Knowing how Liberal governments work, I am very concerned that this new ministry signals the creation of a vast bureaucracy and will grow like crab grass on the lawn.

Let me give hon. members a personal glimpse at the industry I have been a part of for a quarter of a century to illustrate the suffocating effects of government becoming an increasingly vast, amorphous empire. What has happened to the broadcasting industry is that it has been snowed under and smothered by paperwork and slide-rule regulations. Independent broadcasters or family-owned operations found they were not broadcasters at all. They spent all their time reporting to government, filling out forms and appearing before public hearings. They became fed up trying to satisfy the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, and all its predecessors, that form XA-B2-4(1), subsection iii, and similar documents which broadcasters are required to fill out every week, was impossible to keep up with. Many individual broadcast operators I know simply sold out to the larger broadcasting chains.

The effect of a bureaucracy trying to justify its existence is to sap individuals, and eventually their communities, of their spirit. For example, a broadcaster's mandate is to stay in touch with his or her community, and the listening audience with the broadcaster. By knowing what his community wants, needs, feels, the broadcaster can do what she or he was trained to do—be creative, come up with experimental ideas, some of which work, many of which do not; but often a good idea leads to being solidly competitive.

It is an illustration of how ideas from the arts and cultural communities can come from the bottom, not be imposed from the top. No government committee or tribunal could have told Skakespeare "Write some great plays, Will Baby!" Broadcasters—including many of the people involved in the technical end—just do not have time to complete the idiotic paperwork and attend public hearings justifying their existence, and at the same time serve their communities by exercising their ingenuity and imagination. So they give up or sell out to those who can afford bookkeepers.

I have a very real fear that the proposed super ministry could result in the same sort of suffocation of individual spirit, initiative and privacy. I worry about the cross-indexing power that a central ministry of this size could have. They will end up with our OHIP numbers, they will have our SIN numbers, they have our OAS numbers, and they will have our driver's licence numbers. I feel that a ministry of this size, improperly used, could mean the end of legitimate privacy.

In view of what this social development ministry is supposed to be doing, it raises a very interesting question as to the relationship of the new minister of social development to the rest of his cabinet colleagues. I dare say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) stands to become the second most powerful man in the country, exceeded only by the power of the bureaucrats who run this social development ministry.

Let me try to illustrate the amorphous nature of this super-duper ministry in terms of the family. I have been wondering for the past few weeks just who over there on the government front benches is responsible for the family unit. There is where the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) sits—at least, where he did sit; he is not here now—he who presumably looks out for the consumers' interests. There sat the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). He is not here either. He is responsible for the status of women in this country and most women I know are consumers. There should sit the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan) who is responsible for fitness and amateur sport affecting the health and well-being of Canada's young people especially. There should sit the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) protecting the health of Canadians and determining their welfare needs. She is not here either.

There used to sit the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Fleming) to ensure the preservation of Canada's many non-Anglo-Saxon communities and cultures as expressed through their very close sense of family life. There should sit the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox), but he is not here either; he dictates what Canadians should and can watch and hear as families. There should sit the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), but he is not here either; he is forever hearing about his industry's concerns about the family farm. There used to sit, but he is not here, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) who has thus far refused to make the sale of family farms or capital gains tax burdens any easier on Canadian farmers.

There sits, bless him the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), the one minister who takes his responsibilities seriously and who must be constantly vigilant on behalf of Canadian war veterans and their dependants and the futures that these families face. There should sit, but for some reason he is not here either, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), who is technically supposed to be looking after the welfare of Canada's native and northern peoples and their social concerns.

I may have missed three or four other portfolios, Mr. Speaker, but the point is that throughout the list of responsibilities of ten different federal ministries the common concern, the element that knits all those portfolios together, is the family unit. Nobody could describe the importance of family to government better than that very honourable lady, the former member for Scarborough Centre, Mrs. Diane Stratas, when she said on November 20, 1979, as reported at page 1517 of Hansard:

> As the basic unit of society all government activity all year round should be directed at the perpetuation and protection of the concept of family, not necessarily family in the traditional sense but family as a concept of life wherein family members are encouraged to live fully as responsible members in community with each other. We must be willing to accept and respect all forms of family life, but above all we must recognize family.

Canadians express their self-worth through their families, and the family unit is the most intimate and important focal point in life for many millions of Canadians as individuals. And yet, as we have seen, Mr. Speaker, of all the senior cabinet ministers and junior ministers and ministers of state and parliamentary secretaries and committee chairmen those people have over there, no one in the federal government has been charged with responsibility for the family—the average Canadian family unit—until now, Mr. Speaker.

Given this social development minister's umbrella portfolio, its all-encompassing impact on Canadian society, its bringing together so many family-oriented departments and agencies of government, it seems obvious to me, Mr. Speaker, that this new minister is responsible for the family unit in this country.

Indeed, we should look at the Minister of Justice's (Mr. Chrétien's) own family on that side—his family of portfolios. At least 10 of his cabinet colleagues will be regarding this minister as the government head of the social policy family, and yet how is this minister going to operate for the benefit of the individual Canadian family? How is any Canadian individual and his or her family going to get any new ideas through to this super ministry and their senior bureaucrats?

The family is the consumer, Mr. Speaker, but there is a real difference between the family in the health sense, the family in the welfare sense, and the family in a consumer sense. We need a department of consumer affairs to keep an eye on pricing, advertising or misleading advertising, the cost of living and so on. We need a department of health involving doctors and hospitals and grants to provinces and advice to Canadians on hygiene. We really need a separate department of welfare, in my view, which relates to personal tragedies which are most frequently and most closely tied in with the job opportunities branch of government—that is, the Department of Employment and Immigration whose responsibility it is to get people off the welfare rolls.

If anything, Mr. Speaker, we do not need bigger ministries in this country. We need ministries which are more compact and more in touch with the people and with reality. The bigger a ministry gets, in my view, the less it can be in contact with the people and the realities of every day Canadian life.

It was the former leader of the party and a most distinguished parliamentarian, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, who said in Victoria in a speech about six months ago that government has got to get back to the people. I wonder if the Minister of Justice can assure us that this new social development ministry will be getting back to the people, or will this become a sprawling and appalling thing to the taxpayers of Canada? Does the public have the remotest chance of getting through to this new bureaucracy, let alone having any impact on it? That, Mr. Speaker, is what is almost frightening to me about the way this Liberal administration could deal with the scope and the magnitude of this all-embracing social ministry. What input can the average Canadian have in terms of his own individual social development in the next decade or two, and how can the individual Canadian feel any sense of security about what the government is setting up?

My role as the consumer affairs critic for this party makes me think automatically in terms of how government impacts on the little guy, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of little guys, we have no finer example on this side of the House than the hon. member for Rosedale, who I might point out was very big with the health ministry when he was head of that department. He was the first minister they could ever see through a microscope. But see him they could. My colleague from Rosedale was, as minister, and is now as a fellow member of Parliament, as unremote and as accessible, as concerned and feeling a public figure as anyone I have ever known while watching this House of Commons. The Minister of Justice, the new minister of state for social development, could well learn from my hon. friend from Rosedale the way to communicate ideas to people. I know from personal experience that the hon. member for Saint-Maurice is no slouch at personal rapport with his colleagues and with other public officials at home and abroad. My point is that the minister and his new department must learn to communicate with the average Canadian on the all-encompassing impact of his portfolio on the Canadian people.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all members of this House would quite happily agree to promote the aims and objectives, both short term and long term, of the "people" side of this new ministry. We could, for example, devote some space in our householder mailings to all of our constituents, to let them know the importance of this legislation we are now debating in terms of how it will benefit the individual Canadian consumer and family unit. I know I for one will be awaiting with interest some specifics which I can announce to the people of Hamilton-Wentworth, and to reassure them that this is not simply another level of bureaucracy, another giant super department, another eight to ten million expenditure for openers, another duplication of already established government services. I want to be able to assure the 75,000 people I represent that this exercise of setting up a Ministry of State for Social Development will encourage people to get involved in their communities, will encourage volunteerism, will encourage initiative in the private sector, and will make individual Canadians feel that we are not just OHIP numbers or SIN numbers or statistics of one kind or another. People are sick and tired of that kind of mass anonymity. We are people, Mr. Speaker, we are individuals, and we want an opportunity to express ourselves about the future course of social policy of this government.

So, Mr. Speaker, we will do what we can to educate the consumer, to give Canadians a sense of confidence about this legislation, provided that we on this side are absolutely convinced that, as I said at the outset of my remarks, this trip is really necessary.

I would ask the minister: how will he measure his success as head of this new super ministry? How will he define that success this time next year? How will he look at it five years from now? Obviously the minister must have some idea of his objectives and goals or he would not have taken on this portfolio. Obviously he has discussed this social development ministry in cabinet with his colleagues, like the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister of Employment and Immigration, since they will be coming to the new minister for their funds for the most advantageous use in any given year. I think it is incumbent on the government in general and on this minister of social development in particular to tell the House what gauges, what criteria, he will be using to assess his performance in his new ministry.

I note the minister's own statement raises a couple of questions which it would be worthwhile having him answer. In his statement he said:

> Since the ministers work within a predetermined expenditure ceiling, new high priority proposals can be financed only by cutbacks in lower priority programs elsewhere within the social sector.

What are those low priority proposals which may be cut, Mr. Speaker? The minister says that he will announce this "conscious ranking of social priorities". I should like to know when he will announce that ranking of social priorities. How will this new minister improve upon the cost effectiveness of the current programs of these social departments and agencies which now exist?

As the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) said, we on this side will surely be assessing his performance in the light of what has been said here yesterday and today. It does not usually take long for the media to judge the effectiveness of a new department, and if the minister is really doing his job well, we will also note the consequent ineffectiveness of other socially oriented departments that he is embracing. As a result, in about a year from now our constituents will clearly draw their own conclusions as to the wisdom of setting up yet another ministry with its attendant bureaucracy.

● (1600)

Bigger government is not always better government, Mr. Speaker. But I have confidence in the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, the Minister of Justice. I hope that his new super department will be a rare exception to the rule that bigger is not always better. I want to wish the minister luck in finding enough time to contribute, to give proper input and to set down guidelines for the development of this ministry along with his responsibilities for federal-provincial relations, as Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada. In principle, the new ministry of social development is go for those of us on this side, but how that principle will be implemented is something we will be watching very closely indeed.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in introducing the resolution which we are now debating to provide for the establishment of a Ministry of State for Social Development, the minister gave as one of the main reasons the following, and I quote:

> —to assist the government in integrating current social programs and developing more equitable social policies for the future.

Members of our party would agree completely that developing more equitable social policies and integrating present programs is a very laudable ambition. After the minister said that, the rest of his speech was devoted to demonstrating why the government really has no intention in the foreseeable future of developing any new programs. Indeed, what the minister was saying when he introduced this resolution was that the real purpose of the ministry was to control expenditures for social programs and to see that we do not have any new programs unless the government can eliminate some that we now have.

On the one hand, the minister seemed to be indicating that we had made great progress in the 1960s and 1970s. He listed medicare, the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, the guaranteed income supplement and the Canada Assistance Plan as important steps, which they were in improving the lifestyle of many Canadians. Then he went on to indicate that the purpose of this ministry would be to see that ceilings be placed on expenditures. The minister said at page 2133 of Hansard the following:

—that new high priority programs should be financed largely out of the proceeds from the elimination of other expenditures—

The only expansion which the minister could foresee in the coming year was this:

—our social policy envelope for 1980-81 will be increased by an amount sufficient to pay for our increased guaranteed income supplement—

That was a strange objective from a minister who had said a moment or two before the following:

The distribution of income in Canada is largely unchanged despite all the social policy changes of the 1960s and 1970s. Crime and poverty have not disappeared. Today, Canada has more poor children than ten years ago and the problems of many pensioners are still with us. The majority of Canadians still have no pension coverage other than that financed through the public sector.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, and having given a very concise description of the problems which are still faced by millions of Canadians, the minister then went on to say that, despite all that, in effect the government is not going to do anything about them because it does not have the money.

I think we ought to look at some of the problems which are still with us and which the minister alluded to very briefly. For instance, if we look at the distribution of income in Canada and at what has happened over a period of almost 30 years, we see that the families and unattached individuals who make up the bottom one-fifth of the income earners of this country, or the 20 per cent at the bottom, got 4.4 per cent of the gross national product in 1951, while the top fifth, or the top 20 per cent, got 42.8 per cent.

After all these tax programs, all of the income distribution programs, after the implementation of medicare, the Canada Pension Plan and the increase in the old age pension and unemployment insurance—all the programs which governments, federal and provincial, have inaugurated since 1951—what do we see? In 1978 the percentage of the gross national product which the bottom one-fifth of Canadians got had not risen. In fact, it had dropped from the 4.4 per cent in 1951 to 3.9 per cent in 1978 whereas the top fifth of the population received 42.5 per cent of the gross national product. How the minister can let the House and the people of Canada believe that we have solved most of the problems and therefore do not have to think about any new expenditures or new redistribution of income to at least move toward more equity in our society, I simply do not know.

Let me give one more illustration of how the income disparities affect people in this country. If we look at the distribution of money among income earners, we find that the young and families whose heads are over 65 years of age dominate the lower quintile; that is, the lowest and second lowest fifth of the population. The biggest gainers of income are those families in the 45 to 65 age group, followed closely by the 24 to 44 age group. The situation of the young and the aged is not improving at all.

The argument in favour of the Ministry of State for Social Development is put forward by the government on the basis of planning and co-ordination of federal spending on social programs. The minister indicates that he hopes to control the expenditures, that he wants high priority programs to be financed from other expenditures and he wants to make trade-offs when presenting new proposals; in other words, eliminating some of the programs that we have been operating until now.

The minister wants to control the expenditures. This is an extremely unfortunate argument when one reviews the social and economic problems in this country. As I have indicated, the income distribution has not improved at all in almost 40 years. That being the case, we find it strange that the government wants to proceed with the objective of holding the line on new programs, which would at least move us toward a more equitable system for our people.

When one looks at the distribution of income, it is evident that those families with heads over 65 years of age dominate the lowest quintile of the income earners. Of the bottom one-fifth of the income earners in this country, 33.5 per cent come from families whose head is over 65 years of age. In 1977 a Statistics Canada study of income distribution indicated that 50.3 per cent of those 65 to 69 years of age, and 63 per cent of those 70 and over, were living in poverty.

Given that kind of information, we find it alarming that the minister would indicate that the government has decided that this country cannot do better for the people who are in need. We find that two-thirds of the unmarried women 65 and over, that is, 400,000 women, were living in poverty in 1975. This is the government which says it cannot do any more. The situation obviously will get much worse in years to come because of our rapidly aging population.

Let us look at another field over which the minister will have a good deal of influence, the situation with regard to housing. A discussion paper prepared by the Canadian Council for Social Development shows how government housing policies have benefited people in the upper and middle-income groups who are largely the people who own their own homes. It is pointed out that in the spring of 1970 the average net worth of home owners was $23,476, while the average net worth of renters was $3,949. The average net worth of home owners thus exceeded that of renters nearly six times over. By the spring of 1977, this economic advantage for home owners had accelerated considerably. Their average net worth was over $71,000, which exceeded the $8,900 average for renters by a little over eight times.

Yet given this situation, we see the government doing everything it can to get out of social housing, to turn housing over, almost in its entirety, to the private sector, knowing that the private sector has never been interested in it or able to produce houses for people in the lower income brackets who cannot afford to buy their own homes. This is not the occasion on which to go into the matter in detail, but we know now what a disaster the Assisted Home Ownership Plan has been for people in this country. It inveigled them into getting into programs which they were simply unable to continue once the initial period of subsidy was over. So we see thousands of people in the province of Ontario who are giving up their homes and turning them back to the mortgage company.

I want to say something now about another group in this country whose treatment we can regard with nothing but shame. I refer to the native people of this country. I want to put some figures on record because, in my view, the minister was telling us yesterday on behalf of the government that really there was no new money available for the disadvantaged. That is a disaster for a segment of our society which has lived in misery and poverty ever since the white man came here.

In 1976 the infant mortality rate for Canadians as a whole was 16 per 1,000. The infant mortality rate for native people was something over 32 per 1,000. The average live expectancy of the population as a whole was 67; the average life expectancy of native people was 43. In 1971 96 per cent of the homes in Canada had potable water systems. Six years later, in 1977, only 50 per cent of native homes had potable water supplies. In 1971 90 per cent of Canadian homes had sewer systems. Six years later, in 1977, only 45 per cent of native homes had sewer systems. In 1971, 94 per cent of Canadian homes had indoor plumbing. Six years later, in 1977, only 45 per cent of native homes had indoor plumbing. In 1975 12.2 per cent of Canadians were attending universities. Less than half of that percentage, 5.3 per cent of natives, were attending universities and colleges. What does the government say about that?

What does it say about housing for natives? Well, in a cabinet memo concerning housing construction for native people we find the following statement:

> The Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission has now advised the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that from April, 1980 house construction projects will no longer be eligible for relief funding.

Madam Speaker, relief funding was of major assistance not only in providing employment for some thousands of native people but also for improving their housing stock. Yet the department which controls so much of the funding for employment programs has decided that none of this money can be used for employment on native reserves to improve native housing. The results can be seen by anybody who visits native communities on the reserves or elsewhere in the north. In the constituency of Nunatsiaq, which is represented by my hon. friend, only about 1 per cent of the people own their own homes. The cost of operating them and, in particular, the cost of utilities is a major deterrent.

Social Development Ministry

When one visits these communities one is immediately struck by the difference between the way in which the indigenous people live and the way in which the government bureaucrats, 99 per cent of whom are white, live. A visitor to any of these communities sees one set of housing in which there is no running water, no plumbing and no central heating—this, of course, is where the riff-raff, the native people, live—and quite another set of housing which accommodates government employees and a few people from the private sector. This is where one finds indoor plumbing, running water, central heating, all the things one does not see in the native community. These are the circumstances in which native people live, yet the message the minister gave us when presenting this resolution, if one studies it and thinks through the implications, is: We do not intend to do any more for native people than we have done in the past.

Another of the departments over which the minister will have responsibility is the Department of National Health and Welfare. We have heard a great deal in the past year about the decline of a program of which all Canadians have been proud—the program of medical insurance. This program, Canadians thought, had established once and for all that no one in any province or territory of this country would have to worry about the possibility that they would be deprived of the best available medical care on the ground that they could not afford it. However, in recent years we have seen a marked change. Why? Because in the mid-seventies the then Liberal government, with Conservative support, decided to reduce the federal government's share of health care costs. By early 1977 it had replaced the health care cost-sharing program by a system of block funding. Under this arrangement, instead of being given 50 per cent of the cost of provincial programs, the provinces were allowed a certain amount of money along with the right to levy taxes.

We in the New Democratic Party opposed block funding at that time for three main reasons. It removed from the federal government the ability to ensure uniform standards of care across the country, it provided unequal financial assistance to the provinces, and it tied future increases in financing to an arbitrary standard unrelated to the realities of the health care system. As the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) admitted at that time, he was gambling with our health care system. He gambled, and the Canadian people have lost.

Since block funding was introduced there has been a dramatic erosion of the universality of provincial plans and of reasonable access guaranteed to Canadians. In Ontario 20 per cent of physicians have opted out of the provincial plan. In both Alberta and Prince Edward Island 42 per cent of the doctors charge more than the amounts set out in provincial medical fee schedules. The patient, of course, has to pay the difference in cost. In the last five years premiums have increased 82 per cent in Ontario, 50 per cent in British Columbia and 33 per cent in Alberta, and the number of new hospital user charges introduced over the past five years has reached 23.

In my own province we have seen the Conservative government not only not match the grants it gets from the federal government, but it has also used the federal government funding to reduce its share of the cost of paying for medical insurance very substantially. During the campaign the Liberal candidate in Winnipeg-Assiniboine, together with the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), promised that a Liberal government would stop that kind of theft—because that is what it is—on the part of the provincial government. Well, we have seen what has happened since this government was elected. Despite repeated requests and proposals from hon. members of our party, the minister has refused to act. The minister has had the lame excuse that she would wait until the Hall commission made its report. I happen to think that the present Minister of National Health and Welfare is one of the best ministers in the present government, but that is not what she was saying during the election campaign. She was not saying that she would wait and that the Liberal government would wait until the Hall commission reported; she said that they would take action and that they would take it quickly.

An hon. Member: More Liberal flimflam.

Mr. Orlikow: As my colleague says, more Liberal flimflam, and from a minister from whom one would have expected a good deal more.

I want to deal with one more example of the kinds of programs we need and which are going to be hurt by what I believe to be the virtual freezing of fundings for programs, which is implicit in the speech which the minister made yesterday. An increasing percentage of the female population of this country is working. In fact, the percentage of women working is rapidly approaching the percentage of the male labour force. That is not surprising, given the cost of living. Given the cost particularly of purchasing a home in most Canadian cities at the present time, it is almost axiomatic that if a young married couple wants to buy a home, both husband and wife have to work in order to earn the down payment and then to meet the high monthly payments which are required because of our high mortgage interest rates. I am sure there is not a member of this Parliament who has not given up trying to canvass during an election campaign in the day time in most parts of his or her constituency because there is nobody home. Both husbands and wives are out working.

One of the effects of wives with young children having to be out at work is that we have tens of thousands of young children who are not properly or adequately looked after while their mothers and fathers are both working. In every city we can find fairly young children who finish school at three thirty or four o'clock and who wander around the streets by themselves because their mothers are not home until five or five thirty in the afternoon.

What has the government done about that? How have governments, federal and provincial, reacted to that situation? Well, we know that child care centres are few and far between. It is not uncommon for parents to experience a six-month waiting period for child care centre space. In 1978 there were 695,000 children under the age of six. Of these, only 73,000 were enrolled in supervised child care programs. Lack of accessible and affordable child care has forced 90 per cent of parents to place their children in unregulated facilities. Child care centre space costs on an average between $3,000 and $4,000 per pre-school child per year. Let us compare that with the $1,000 maximum child care income tax deduction. Government subsidies are available to those in need or those likely to be in need, but subsidy eligibility is so restrictive that 70 per cent of available moneys go to the children of single parents or "at risk" children. The result is that day care centre space is available only to the rich and to the poor. Present cost-sharing arrangements between the three levels of government are totally inadequate. Under the present funding scheme the federal government takes no responsibility for site, salary or equipment costs. Subsidies for those with proven need which are cost-shared 50-50 by federal and provincial governments are insufficient.

In addition, provincial governments are under no compulsion to match federal subsidies for child care. Child care workers are traditionally female, underpaid and unorganized. In addition to poor benefits and largely unsatisfactory working conditions, the pay is low. Average incomes range from $7,000 to $10,000 a year. The majority of child care workers do not belong to unions and have no job protection.

Along with many non-political organizations such as women's organizations and organizations representing poor people, members of this party have been urging federal and provincial governments to begin at least trying to meet the problems of child care, which I have outlined very briefly, in a well thought out and organized manner. At least let there be a beginning. I can only conclude from listening to the minister's speech that the government has given up the task before it has really started, because the minister has said that there is really no new money available. We in our party do not accept the argument that there is no new money available. We believe that this country is wealthy enough and has the resources to provide for the needs of its people, some of whom I have mentioned in my speech today.

Let me indicate two ways by which we can find the money which is necessary. First, we have one of the highest rates of unemployment of any of the industrialized countries in the western world. It has been estimated that if, instead of the over 8 per cent unemployment we now have and the 9 per cent unemployment estimated by such organizations as Wood Gundy for the last part of 1980 and the first part of 1981, we were to have 4 per cent unemployment, which for many years was the figure for unemployment which the Economic Council of Canada calculated as meaning full employment in this country, we would be producing $5 billion more in the way of goods and services than we are producing now. We would have at least 100,000 and probably 200,000 fewer unemployed. These people would be purchasing goods which are produced by Canadians. They would be paying taxes. The companies for which they would work and the companies from whom they would purchase goods would be doing more business and paying more taxes, and government revenues would rise by something in the neighbourhood of about $1.5 billion a year. That is part of the way in which we would find the money necessary to finance the kind of programs which we believe we should be operating at present.

● (1630)

But there is another way in which the money can be found. The National Council of Welfare, in a document entitled "Hidden Taxation", pointed out that there are more than 60 deductions, exemptions, credits, exclusions and preferential tax rates which make up the invisible tax expenditure budget. They have estimated that these are only 20 per cent of the tax expenditures, and the amount of money which we lose in these various tax exemptions and credits was $7.1 billion in 1976. They have estimated that the full amount would be more than double that figure. Of that $7.1 billion spent in 1976, 53 per cent of the savings were given to the highest 20 per cent of the tax filers. The tax saving was $4,781 for the tax filers with incomes over $50,000; that is 12 times the amount that a person in the middle-income bracket received.

Here is how they estimated where the money went in millions of dollars. We gave up in tax revenues in 1976 through the registered pension plan, $707 million; for the registered retirement savings plan, $859 million; for the registered home ownership savings plan, $156 million; for interest and dividend deduction, $721 million; and for the dividend tax credit, $111 million.

If you look at the registered retirement savings plan, you see that almost $7 out of every $10 that was forgone by the government in taxes went to the highest income 10 per cent of the tax filers, and more than half the benefits went to the top 5 per cent. In 1976 the lowest income 50 per cent of tax filers had an $148.47 average tax saving; the top 5 per cent income tax filers saved $1,449.13—ten times as much. Some 62 per cent of the 1974-76 increase went to the top 10 per cent of tax filers and 43 per cent to the top 5 per cent alone.

In case any member of Parliament thinks that the National Council of Welfare misrepresents the figures, I refer members to a study done by the federal Department of Finance which reported late in December of 1979. They calculated that the federal government is losing at least $32 billion in revenue because of so-called tax expenditures. This is the revenue loss in 1979 associated with about 190 tax exemptions, deductions, write-offs and special incentives listed in the 96 page report entitled "Government of Canada Tax Expenditure Account" released on December 6, 1979.

Let me summarize some of the illustrations of how they got this $32 billion. The special frontier drilling incentives cost the government $100 million a year—$30 million to individuals and another $70 million to corporations. Those are precisely the individuals and corporations who can best afford to pay taxes, yet we give them exemptions or reductions.

In the housing area, the registered home ownership savings plan costs the government $115 million in lost revenue annually; the multiple unit residential building provision costs $10 million; and the deductibility of carrying charges on land costs $35 million. Again this is a gift to people who can most afford to pay taxes.

For individuals, the revenue loss to Ottawa in 1979 for the following selected items is: tax deductions for registered pension plans and registered retirement savings plans, $2 billion; tax deduction for contributions to the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, $480 million; non-taxation of capital gains on principal residences, $2.5 billion; marital exemption, $1.36 billion; deduction for dependant children, $870 million; child tax credit, $810 million; non-taxation of lottery and gambling winnings, $300 million; and employment expense deduction, $500 million.

I could go on and on, but I think I have indicated quite clearly that in the view of our party the argument that we cannot afford to make improvements in our social security system, that we cannot afford to do better for the people in need, that we cannot afford to do better for the aged, that we cannot afford to do better for our native people, that we cannot afford to do better for the poor in our society who still number in the millions, simply does not wash. We believe that the Canadian people can afford to do a better job than we have done in recent years. We believe that the needs of Canadians who are in want can be met; and we believe that this proposal of the government is an attempt to put a stop to improvements, to put a stop to the expansion of our social security system, to put a stop to the very meagre steps which have been taken to try to improve the lot of the poor people, the people in need in this country. It is because we believe that, Mr. Speaker, that we propose to vote against this resolution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before I recognize the next hon. member to speak, I should like to give the proceedings on the adjournment motion for this evening.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ORDER IN COUNCIL RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF MINISTRY OF STATE FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pinard (for Mr. Trudeau):

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Edward Richard Schreyer, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada:

May It Please Your Excellency:

The House of Commons, having considered the proposed text of the order in council tabled in the House on 21 April 1980, in relation to the establishment of a Ministry of State for Social Development, prays that the making of the said order in council be approved.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be able to rise in the House to speak to the order in council which has been submitted to us for approval. A Minister of State for Social Development has been badly needed for a number of years.

Together with my colleagues yesterday, I was very happy to take the trip back through the last two decades to the early 1960s. Because I remember them so well, I am sure I can say without giving offence that the theme song that was brought home to me was entitled, "But, Deary, You're So Much Older Than I." That is why in this world of politics I am looking to the future.

The world of politics is filled with band-aid, ad hoc remedies and that is why the former government made the decision and drafted an order in council to initiate such a department to give some long-term planning to the social and cultural needs of the Canadian people. I am very pleased that the present government has seen fit to reintroduce this order in much the same form.

A department for social justice, a department for social development, would quite obviously be instrumental in securing for all Canadians the conditions necessary for human justice and human fulfilment. But the spectrum of concerns which would flow within the general category of social development is so broad that one can easily understand the need for one agency which will be responsible for the long-term policy which may well outlive various governments and which is absolutely essential for ensuring fundamental human rights for Canadians of the future. We have seen all too many band-aid programs in the last decade.

I, for one, see some hope for the future in the proposed establishment of a social development department. I hope I am not proven to be too optimistic in that regard. More than any other ministry, this one will touch upon the aspects of government which directly affect the rights, the worth and the happiness of individual Canadians in their everyday lives. I believe the minister responsible should be one of the most important people in cabinet. If issues such as old age security, pensions, employment, housing, women's rights, opportunities for the handicapped, poverty, health care, physical fitness and immigration are not government priorities in this country of ours, then what on earth are?

The spectrum of social development concerns is so broad that I have decided to concentrate my remarks on one important aspect, that is, policies regarding the elderly. That is the third stage of life which should be the golden age but for so many Canadians is not. Being somewhat close to the traditional retirement age myself, and feeling not in the least like being put out to pasture, I find myself becoming increasingly aware of that factor in life on which certainly happiness depends and which, I believe, falls into the category of a basic human right. I am speaking about choice. All too many Canadians upon approaching retirement age suddenly find the choice they have with respect to their lifestyle drastically changes and is curtailed. I am referring to the rights they have previously taken for granted to work, to be useful and productive in society, to earn a decent living and to receive a decent living. All of these things disappear far too quickly upon attaining age 65.

The question of choice naturally brings me to the subject of mandatory retirement. Surely in this age—and I hope in this decade—there should be more personal choice involved as to whether a person finishes his or her career upon attaining age 65. There are many factors involved, such as health, financial position, desire to continue work, ability to continue being productive, enjoyment of leisure, family situation and on and on. An automatic retirement age meets neither the needs of our economy nor the wants and needs of the majority of people.

For this reason our party had planned to devote particular attention to the question of retirement age in its review of the public and private pension plans of the country. The issue is arousing public concern both here in Canada and abroad. I see this as a demand on the part of the senior public sector to be able to exercise greater choice in terms of the decision to retire. As it stands, the individual does not have the right to choose. Human rights legislation leaves retirement policy to the employer, and employees are not protected against discrimination in employment or hiring practices after age 65. To me the key word in the resolution of this problem is "flexibility". Not everyone wants to work over age 65, which is their right and privilege. Not everyone is able to work beyond or even up to age 65 due to health problems or the difficulty of finding work. A 1975 survey by Statistics Canada showed that a full 37 per cent of men had retired by the age of 64, and nearly 70 per cent did so because of ill health or lay-offs. Fewer than one-third of these men had employer-sponsored pension schemes, systems or plans. Most were not eligible for the Canada Pension Plan because they were either not sick enough or old enough.

There is a category of workers who are mentally and physically able to continue working and, for any number of reasons, wish to continue doing so even after age 65, but these workers are forced into what for them is premature retirement.

Studies have shown that barring physical speed and strength most jobs can be accomplished just as competently by a person who is healthy and strong and between ages 65 and 70 as by a younger employee. In many fields it is experience that counts. In this way our country has an invaluable resource in its senior citizens. Furthermore, it has been predicted that by 1984 the Canadian labour force is likely to be short of such experienced and skilled workers. However it is to be done, we must try to maximize the resources offered by citizens in the senior age group. This can only be done by taking an open, flexible approach. Let those who are willing and able to work after age 65 do so.

We should increase opportunities in the work place for part-time work and allow a gradual approach to retirement whereby a person can increase holiday time over several years and take up to five years, more or less, to ease into retirement.

It is the elderly women of this country who have been most discriminated against in the past. It is these same persons who are most discriminated against now through absolutely no fault of their own. Many shared the family work load by staying home to raise the family. Some took years off work to do this and lost all pension-related credit for this time. Most who worked did so for much lower wages than their male counterparts, and a large proportion worked in industries not protected by union agreements. All this adds up to the fact that few women over age 65 qualify today for significant retirement benefits. Therefore, they are forced to rely on their husbands' incomes after retirement. If their marriage dissolves, more often than not they are left out in the cold financially and indeed are in want of protection. If their husbands die before them—and statistically this is more likely to happen—they lose all or at best half of their husbands' pensions.

For women between the ages of 60 and 65 the situation is often quite desperate as they do not even receive old age security benefits. Since one-fifth or 20 per cent of Canadian women are widows before age 65, it goes without saying that when we talk about hardship we are talking about a lot of women, a lot of women who have worked all their lives to live and die in difficult circumstances. In 1975 more than two-thirds of all unmarried and widowed women over age 65 had cash incomes below $3,500. I trust the new minister responsible for social development will give immediate and thorough attention to the pressing problem of pension needs for the 1980s and beyond, particularly with respect to women and to improving the inadequate and inequitable private pension system.

In our short term in office the Conservative party addressed itself to the needs of the elderly in the 1980s, particularly the urgent needs of the women of this country. We introduced legislation which ceased the practice of cutting out spouse's allowance upon the death of a pensioner mate. We reinstated payments to all those who had lost their benefits and still qualified. We undertook a complete review of the pension situation of women, we allocated $15 million for home care programs for the elderly, and we introduced a veteran's pension bill which would have extended benefits to widows of disability pensioners who had not formerly qualified for payments. While we were bringing in these particular measures we were conducting a comprehensive review of the whole retirement income system; that is, into the present and future income needs of the elderly and the extent to which various public and private pension systems were responding, or not responding, to these needs.

• (1650)

We will be anxious to see what policies this new ministry will formulate to alleviate the present plight of women on pension and to change the system for a better retirement future for our Canadian women. I would ask the minister responsible to examine without delay the possibility of allowing the husband of a woman who is working in the home to contribute on behalf of his wife to the Canada Pension Plan, so that when she enters or re-enters the work force she will not be penalized for these years of service in the home. This would also give women some protection in the case of a divorce after years of staying home to raise a family.

I trust that the Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Chretien) will see to it that the piecemeal approach to the income needs of the elderly which marked the last decade is put aside, and that this enormous and complex problem is broached in a thorough and comprehensive way.

Along these same lines of permitting the elderly to maintain some control over their own lives, I should like to mention the increasing problem faced by the elderly in keeping their own homes. In my community of St. Catharines, which has a large percentage of elderly and senior citizens, some 8 per cent to 10 per cent live in some form of residential or institutional lodging at a substantial cost to the government. In some cases this is the best answer, but an increasing number of senior citizens who are perfectly capable of maintaining their own homes are caught in the inflationary spiral and are being forced out of their homes.

The Enersave program to help people insulate their older homes has been an enormous success. This was a much needed program and one that has proven popular. More programs of this nature are needed, programs which will have the end result of keeping people in their own homes for as long as possible. The psychological importance of this kind of independence is enormous, and if the government would offer elderly home owners financial assistance and encouragement, this would benefit the home owner and would cost the country a good deal less.

To my mind this problem is a political one. Governments have been caught up in band-aid programs to keep the electorate happy, while much needed long-term planning has been constantly shifted aside. The other day I was talking with a senior director responsible for homes for the aged and for care of the aged in the regional municipality of Niagara. He stressed that there was little or no such long-range planning at the provincial or federal levels. Is it not time, then, that some form of mechanics or strategy was established to facilitate the necessary thinking and planning as we enter this next new decade.

The problems associated with pensions are among the most complex and urgent facing the country today and they are not going to get any better. By the year 2000 the number of senior citizens, now 2.2 million, will have grown to over three million. In Ontario the number will have almost doubled. If something is not done the aged are going to impose an extremely heavy burden on society in terms of pensions and social security.

It is my hope that the prime objective of this new department of social development will be to consolidate what we have learned in the past regarding the successes and failures of social programs, and to assess what the real social needs of the future are going to be. Only then can it realistically be determined what the social priorities for the next two decades will be and how the Canadian government is going to fund these programs. With regard to our growing elderly population, if there is not sound planning and a shift in attitudes, the economic and social implications by the turn of the century will be devastating.

With this anticipation, I am happy to support the passage of this order in council, and I hope to participate in that support this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Trudeau), which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried. The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, the time normally allotted to hon. members for discussing or debating private members' bills is now reduced by at least 45 minutes and I am wondering whether, to preserve the principle of democracy, the debate on Bill C-214 could be postponed until the next sitting of the House and whether we might call it six o'clock.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the hon. member. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 5.47 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING INCREASE OF ADVANCES TO CORPORATION

Hon. Charles Lapointe (for Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-20, to amend the Federal Business Development Bank Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few opening comments, but first of all I wish to take this opportunity to thank my colleagues on this side of the House and my colleagues of the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party for the interesting proceedings we had in committee when discussing this bill, and I would also like to thank them for having allowed this bill to go through the committee stage in reasonable time.

One of the main questions asked during the discussion in committee, Mr. Speaker, concerned the fact that the bill provides for an increase of the financial ceiling from $200 million to $475 million at the same time as an increase in the debt to equity ratio from 10:1 to 12:1 and even to 15:1.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my opening remarks at second reading stage, the bill provides the government with the flexibility to be as sensitive as possible to the needs of the bank's small business clientele while recognizing the government's strained financial position. Because of fiscal pressures the government has retained the provision introduced by the last government to increase the bank's capitalization by increasing the bank's debt to equity ratio from 10:1 to 12:1 and ultimately to 15:1. However, reflecting the government's commitment to small business, and recognizing the difficulties that small businesses have financing their operations especially during a period of high interest rates, the government decided that it would also be appropriate to have some flexibility enabling it to increase the capital of the bank through an injection of equity, even to the extent of lowering the debt to equity ratio to as low as 7:1.

● (2010)

The capacity to lower the debt to equity ratio from present levels would enable the bank to operate at a debt to equity ratio more in line with recent experience. Until very recently the bank operated at an eight to one ratio, and as of March 31, 1980, the ratio was nine to one. The legislation before the House will allow the government to lower the debt to equity ratio should the government decide such additional support is warranted. Another reason for providing additional equity is the likelihood of the bank experiencing an operating loss in the current fiscal year. Such a loss would have the effect of eroding the capital base of the bank unless it was replenished with new capital. Finally, as the former minister of state for small businesses noted in his speech in the House during second reading debate, there is also flexibility for the government to fund the venture capital portfolio of the bank with equity if it is deemed appropriate.

I have provided at second reading and committee stages details on the factors the government considered in drafting this bill, particularly those factors leading to a decision to increase the capital ceiling of the bank to $475 million.

[Translation]

In these few opening comments, I would like once again to remind my colleagues about the urgency of approving this bill because in a few days the bank will have reached the financial ceiling now allowed and will have to reduce significantly its activities if the bill is not passed.

[English]

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to say that it was with some regret I learned the steering committee for the committee which studied this bill put the bill before committee last Thursday when I had an irrevocable commitment to attend the west coast for some functions and duties. Thus I missed the committee hearings which the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Lapointe) mentioned in his opening remarks.

Many of the questions which I put on the record in second reading debate appear at page 1361 of Hansard. I believe that Parliament still must decide the degree of subsidy it is prepared to deliver to the Federal Business Development Bank as its mandate requires it to be a lender of last resort. But I do not think Bill C-20 addresses that question. The degree of flexibility Parliament will give the minister and the government under this bill is excessive. Certainly the matter will have to be tidied up. That question should be answered in the review to which the Minister of State referred several times. It is desperately needed in order to stop this patchwork attempt at addressing the credit needs of the industrial and resource communities of the country.

Bill C-20 will give the government maximum flexibility. It will give them more than they need. Their capital base will be increased by $275 million. In my speech on second reading I could see a need for a $205 million increase. I could go along with $275 million, but on top of that they have asked for us to increase the ratio of capital to lending from one to ten to one to twelve, with governor in council approval to go to a ratio of one to fifteen. It is still my opinion that it is not needed and it is excessive flexibility. Had I been present at the committee hearings, certainly I would have had an amendment for report stage of the bill in the House. However, I have not had that opportunity as I returned from the west coast only a few hours ago this afternoon.

I should like to refer to one of the questions asked of the president of the bank before the committee. It reads:

—do you expect to draw from the consolidated revenue fund of Canada?

The president of the bank answered as follows:

Mr. Minister, Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer that question obviously, as I am sure you appreciate, that I just explained the point of view of the bank and that is really up to the government to find out if we should be at a seven to one ratio, if we should be at a ten to one ratio—

In other words, the president of the bank at committee hearings could not answer the simple question as to whether there would be a draw on the consolidated revenue fund. I have been able to get through about two thirds of the proceedings of the committee, having received the "blues" at approximately 6.15 this evening. I find that I have no further answers to the questions I asked than I had at the time of second reading debate.

In allowing this bill to go through third reading, we will give excessive flexibility to the minister and the Federal Business Development Bank without the basic and prime questions being answered. I still think the capital they will be given, the increase of $275 million over the $200 million, is enough, and that the ratio should have been left at one to ten. The minister will reply that in the bill there is a cap of $3.2 billion. I would suggest, and warn members of the House, that it would be very easy for a supplementary amendment to be made to the bill at some future time, even before the review is complete, whereby the bank would be out of control. Why they need to move from one to ten to one to twelve is beyond me in light of the new capital they have been given. It was my understanding that that capital would be a cancellation of debt and that there would not be a draw on the consolidated revenue fund. I now find from the committee proceedings that that question has not even been answered.

I regret I was not at the committee hearings. I apologize to my colleagues on this side. But a member of Parliament only has one life to live, and if it is 2,800 miles away he cannot be here when he is required on the west coast. I wish the bill were a little tighter and that we were not moving from the ratio of one to ten up to one to twelve. I have no concern with $200 million of the $275 million increase in capital requested. Probably the extra $75 million should be the limit of the flexibility the bank and the government require in this matter. However, it is all history now. The bank needs the money, as does the small business community. I am sure it will be managed judiciously because I have great confidence in the president and senior officers of the bank. We will just keep our eyes on this situation. We will support the bill through third reading.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express some concern about the bill. In some ways it is a housekeeping measure, but we do not believe it will really solve the problems that increasing numbers of Canadian businessmen, particularly small businessmen, will be facing in the years to come.

Already we note from statistics that the bankruptcy rates in the business sector have increased dramatically so far this year. Up to the end of April there have been over 2,273 business bankruptcies in the country, with a total liability of approximately $233 million. These are businesses which very often are a result of family effort, a family putting in its life savings to start a small business. It is unfortunate our economic system encourages a lot of small businesses to arise during periods of boom, like mushrooms which sprout after a good summer rain, only to be wiped out in the times of the busts. Indeed, we are going through a period of bust and we see family investments and savings being wiped out. I do not believe the amendments before us today will make one iota of difference. They will not stop the number of bankruptcies. In fact I suggest that the rate will increase during this year.

The amendments will not stop the type of economic concentration we have seen occurring in our country in the last number of decades. These amendments will do nothing to stop this trend. There is always the suggestion, of course, that members in the opposition to our right and members opposite make, that our political party is opposed to business and particularly small business. We have repeated in this House that this is not so. Our party is definitely committed to that sector of the economy which employs over 30 per cent of our labour force, the small businessmen who employ under 200 employees in their businesses.

We have always objected to the type of economic concentration which has occurred in this country, a type of concentration that in 1978, for example, saw less than 2 per cent of all Canadian businesses, excluding financial institutions, foreign owned, yet that 2 per cent accounting for close to 50 per cent of all the profits made in the country. That is the type of foreign control and foreign domination which is continuing to destroy small businesses in this country, and that is why we have one of the highest business failure rates of any country in the world.

We exist not in a system of economic planning, but small business requires some economic stability. If we do not have economic stability then we will continue to have the number of bankruptcies that we have in this country. As long as we do not have some economic stability and planning we will find the rate of bankruptcies in this country among the highest of any in the world. The bill before us will not stop this, and it will not deal with it.

It is not going to stop the oil companies, for example, from driving small businesses out. For example, they have driven out small garages, resulting often in increased cost and decreased services. Where can you go today to get your car repaired? In the past there were many garages and service stations which did repair work, but they have all been wiped out.

At the turn of the century there were over 200 car manufacturers, and now there are less then half a dozen. We know what happened to the car industry when the big boys took over.

We will not oppose this bill, but we wish to go on record as noting how inadequate it is, how it does not deal with the problems of the small businessman, how it does not come to terms with these problems, and how it makes empty the government's promise of help and support to the small business community. This bill is of no real help and it is of no real assistance, because it does not meet the real problems the businessmen face.

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-20 to amend the Federal Business Development Bank Act because of its importance to small business which is the life blood of our nation and the economy. Putting this act in perspective is important. Our government's policies toward small business are really an integral part of our industrial strategy that was enunciated during the past election campaign. Of course the main thrust of this policy was to encourage Canadian owned small business.

As the economic council reported recently, although the percentage of sales and profits going to foreign controlled firms increased during the 1970s, the percentage of total Canadian assets and equity held by foreign controlled firms decreased. The objective of the Liberal government is to continue the latter trend and to reverse the former.

Canadian owned business, regardless of size, will need encouragement in this endeavour. It has generally been the case though that large corporations are much better able to capture a growing share of the market place than small business. Particular attention and vigilance must be directed toward maintaining and enhancing the position of Canadian owned small business in our economy.

It is important to recognize that about two-thirds of all the new jobs created in Canada in the last five years were created by small business. Some 97 per cent of these businesses are Canadian owned, operated in a highly competitive environment, and are community based. Because of this they tend to be more innovative and flexible than larger corporations. It is also noteworthy that a significant proportion of new inventions and innovations have come from these individual entrepreneurs and small business organizations. An important trend that augurs well for the future is that younger people are becoming increasingly interested in small business. Encouraging the growth of small business through the Federal Business Development Bank fulfils a number of important objectives—providing jobs, diversifying growth regionally, decreasing economic concentration, stimulating innovations, creating more livable communities, making work more interesting and, of course, increasing Canadian control of the economy.

As hon. members well know, the Federal Business Development Bank was established in 1974 to encourage the growth of small business by providing financial assistance and management services, which include counselling, training, and information. The bank replaced the old Industrial Development Bank which dated back to the 1940s. The bank's aim is to provide financial assistance in cases where it is not available at reasonable terms from other sources. The counselling service it offers supplements those available in the private sector. The role of the bank then is to act as a complement to financial institutions in the private sector, and to government agencies, and in co-operation with one another to encourage and diversify business ventures in Canada.

In order to understand how the bank responds to the requirements of small business it is first necessary to have a look at the amount of loans provided. While about 90 per cent of loans are in amounts under $100,000, almost half are under $25,000. The average loan works out to about $53,000.

Because the bank acts as a supplement lender it takes much greater risks than private sector lenders. As a matter of fact, with the experience the bank now has from a scant five years in operation, and with other lending institutions venturing into term loans, the bank's activities have become much bolder. The bank has fulfilled a very important function in this respect because many already established or newly formed businesses cannot meet the stiff criteria required by conventional lenders. While the potential for expansion may be there, the feasibility and the guarantees offered often do not meet the requirements of these lenders.

Within a relatively short span of time the bank's activities have spread out and generally have become more daring in responding to the needs of small business. As a consequence, private loan operations tend to become involved in large lucrative loans to business in urban areas. The result is that the demand for supplementary financing by the Federal Business Development Bank in small centres and rural regions has increased. In response to this the bank decentralized its services to the point where 60 per cent of its 100 branches are located outside the major cities. In addition, 98 per cent of the loans are approved at the branch or regional office level, thus speeding up the processing time for each application.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the bank plays a very significant role in terms of financing regional enterprises and encouraging regional development. In terms of my own riding, in the 12-month period ending March 31, 1980, there were 790 inquiries made for financial services in the Kitchener-Waterloo area and 236 loans authorized, for a total of $12.3 million. With respect to management services, there were 240 visits by the Federal Business Development Bank officials to 12 centres in the Kitchener area. The information officers in the local branch responded to 874 inquiries for assistance and made 754 referrals to other federal agencies that provide assistance. As well, for the benefit of local businessmen the bank also held 16 seminars.

The counselling assistance for small business enterprises branch of the FBDB responded to 515 inquiries and made 417 consultations as of March 31, 1980. There were 586 clients in the FBDB portfolio with approximately $30 million in loans working for the expansion and development of small business in my riding. So as you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Federal Business Development Bank is a very important link between the small businessman and government in the area I represent.

The changes that have become necessary to the act that governs the Federal Business Development Bank are really alterations that are needed to allow the bank to expand to meet with greater sensitivity and resources the requirements of small business within the framework of an industrial strategy. They are geared expressly to allow the bank to fill its mandate according to the Federal Business Development Act of assisting smaller enterprises unable to obtain financing on reasonable terms and conditions, while operating on a cost-recovery basis as a schedule D Crown corporation. The situation we are currently faced with is that the bank has simply exhausted the resources made available to it when it was created in 1975.

Under the original act, the bank's resources were limited to $200 million in authorized capital at any time. Since the bank's total resources of $2.2 billion are already committed, this operating limit may be extended by increasing the debt to equity ratio or increasing the amount of authorized capital, or a combination of both. Bill C-20 does both, by allowing the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), at the request of the corporation and with the approval of the cabinet, to increase the amount of authorized capital, up to a limit of $475 million. It also establishes the debt to equity ratio of the bank at 12 to one with the provision that the cabinet may increase this to 15 to one if necessary.

The bill provides operating limits, as well, in that the total aggregate liabilities of the bank combined with its capital must not exceed $3.2 billion. The reason these changes in the act became necessary was that the bank incurred losses of $30 million in the fiscal year 1979-80. Many of the factors responsible for this were beyond the control of the bank and largely unanticipated, such as high interest charges, the increase in bankruptcies and, more specifically, the loss of big loans to the private lending institutions.

In the last few years the chartered banks have entered the term loan market with vigour. They have concentrated on larger, lower risk loans on which administrative costs have less impact. Also, for smaller loans under $75,000 covering the acquisition of property or equipment, the chartered bank advances are guaranteed under the Small Business Loans Act program. The FBDB thus finds itself limited to loans where the profit is too low to interest chartered banks, or which are too risky to be covered by the Small Business Loans Act program. This is due to the purpose of these borrowers' programs, such as the need for capital and equipment.

Finally, the bank's involvement is far greater in remote areas, as well as provinces where conventional lending institutions are less active. Again this reflects the supplemental nature of FBDB's lending. Formerly, the Industrial Development Bank required borrowers to have sufficient equity to provide the bank reasonable protection. Under its new charter, FBDB only requires an investment sufficient to ensure a continuing commitment to the business. In light of this, the security held by the bank has decreased significantly. Thus in 1973, 52 per cent of loans authorized were fully secured. This proportion had decreased to 31 per cent by 1978. Moreover, in 1973, 11 per cent of loans had a security shortfall of 50 per cent or more of the loan amount; in 1978 this percentage increased to 26 per cent. In 1973, 56 per cent of borrowers did not have a proven track record at the time their loan was authorized. In 1978 the proportion rose to 64 per cent.

Losses from write-offs, Mr. Speaker, have therefore more than doubled over the past five years. These losses are four times greater than those of the Small Business Loans Act program and the bank's provisions in this respect are proportionately five times more than those of the chartered banks. However, one must keep in mind that the FBDB's market is inherently high risk. Nevertheless, the bank's write-offs are considerably less than those of the Enterprises Development Board and three times less than those experienced by the Small Business Administration in the United States.

The bank's ability to operate on a cost recovery basis according to the Financial Administration Act depends largely on its level of debt. Because its market is more costly to serve than that of private lenders, FBDB requires a debt-equity ratio, which is at least comparable to the private lender's over the years. The bank has operated with a relatively low ratio, reaching its maximum level of ten to one, one year ago. As I mentioned before, the bill is aimed at boosting this ratio to 12 to one or 15 to one if necessary.

In terms of improving its operating revenue, the bank has already taken steps to upgrade its position by setting the interest rate on a loan at the date of disbursement rather than the date of authorization, which provides protection in the event of sudden rate fluctuations. It is also considering other steps which include imposing fees for analysing proposals and setting higher interest rates for high-risk loans. Such measures, however, are often detrimental to the bank's small customers. Just as important, measures have already been taken to decrease operating costs. Many duties previously performed by credit officers have been taken over by administrative staff. To date, the cost per loan authorized by FBDB is three times less than at RoyNat, a private lending institution. However, the size of the average loan, the geographical coverage of the bank's activities, and the close monitoring it provides for each customer, limit the cuts which can be made without affecting customer service.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill C-20 provides a balanced albeit temporary solution to the current financial difficulties being encountered by the Federal Business Development Bank. The balance has been achieved because, on one hand, the bank is not burdened with excessive debt and, on the other hand, the bank's customers, the small businessmen, have not been hurt by improving the bank's position. In recent months, however, it has experienced problems in exercising its mandate to the fullest possible extent. We must give them the tools to get the job done and I urge the support of all members of the House.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

LIVESTOCK FEED ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING TRANSPORTATION COSTS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-15, to amend the Livestock Feed Assistance Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the third reading of Bill C-15 I want to refer very briefly to what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said on second reading. I want to thank hon. members on both sides of the House for their co-operation on this bill at the committee stage in bringing back this bill as rapidly as possible before the House, and I do hope that tonight before the time of adjournment we will be able to give it third reading and start the second reading of Bill C-22 in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) who will be here in a few moments. All that to point out that the purpose of the amendments to the Live stock Feed Assistance Act being requested in Bill C-15 are to bring the Yukon and the Northwest Territories within the scope of the provisions concerning transportation costs. So I would not want to prolong the debate further because I would like to allow some of my colleagues on the other side of the House to speak, with the hope however we can once again give this bill third reading in very short order before the adjournment tonight.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the government House leader meant to include the Yukon as well as the Northwest Territories in his explanation of the bill. He did not say so, however. That was not what came over on the translation.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had mentioned the Yukon in French. I want to make sure it is clear that these amendments to the Livestock Feed Assistance Act would bring the Yukon, as I said in French, and the Northwest Territories within the scope of the bill.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have the opportunity to take part in this debate. We intend our remarks to be very brief, as is usual with members of the agricultural committee. I have always felt that when it comes to agriculture, whether in this House or in committee, members of the agricultural committee, regardless of their political affiliation, co-operate in order to get bills through as quickly as possible.

We support this bill because it extends the provisions of the Livestock Feed Assistance Act to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. The Yukon territorial government has been asking for this since 1975 and it is something that our party has sought for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories for many years.

I remember going up to the Territories in 1974 and being met by a delegation which was very anxious to see agriculture expanded in the Territories. It is unfortunate that it has taken so long to bring this bill before the House because, as I said, the government of the Yukon asked for it in 1975.

Basically, the bill should not be required. It is required however because federal government restrictions over the years have made it impossible for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon to develop a viable agricultural base. The potential is there. There is rich agricultural land in the Mackenzie Valley, the Liard River Valley and other valleys. Studies going back almost 75 years indicate the richness of the soil and the potential that is there. About ten or 12 years ago a comprehensive study was made which indicated that potential and the richness of the soil.

About 1972, members of the Indian affairs committee questioned the Minister of Indian affairs and northern development and asked why he was not allowing the development of agriculture in the two northern territories. He said they were busy doing a study. It was pointed out to him that a comprehensive study had been done by the Department of Agriculture five years before then, but he was not aware of it.

It is interesting that it was not until the Conservative government came into power in May of 1979 that an undertaking was given to allow the development of agriculture and recreational land in the territories. That undertaking was to go into effect this summer, but I gather that the present government is not prepared to carry it out.

At the present time there are in the two territories a total of 25 farms, I believe. That is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker. These farms have not been allowed to expand, although there is potential for market gardens that would supply the people of the north with fresh vegetables so that they would not be burdened with exorbitant freight rates on produce coming in from the south. It is unfortunate that we must have this bill today but it is necessary because, over the years, the government has not seen fit to allow the expansion of agriculture.

I wonder if the Livestock Feed Assistance Act has not distorted the livestock industry in Canada. There is no doubt that this act has caused hog production to move from Alberta and Saskatchewan into Ontario and Quebec. It has also had an effect on beef production in the west. I suggest that there are certain natural advantages for the production of pork and beef in western Canada, but I will not pursue this at the present time.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the present agricultural situation in western Canada. While perhaps this bill does not apply to the very serious drought in southern and central Saskatchewan, the government will undoubtedly be called upon to give feed freight assistance to livestock producers in western Canada. As I travelled back to Ottawa from my constituency last weekend, I could see that the crops which were planted on stubble have turned yellow. Even a heavy rain or a series of heavy rains will not bring those fields back to life now. There will not be a particularly good crop on the summerfallow. There is practically no forage. Even the ditches, which usually provide a good source of hay and alfalfa, are not worth cutting. The situation is desperate and will become more so.

While the government recently announced that it will put up some $7 million to assist with drought programs, I would suggest that it will require much more than that if we are to assist our livestock industry and ensure that the necessary basic herds are retained.

● (2050)

It will be necessary for the federal government to work in conjunction with the provincial governments. It will be necessary for them to ensure that screenings are not shipped to Thunder Bay, that they are retained on the prairies, because once the screenings are shipped to Thunder Bay, to Churchill, and so on, if they are required—and they undoubtedly will be—then we have to pay the freight back. In my opinion, this is a needless waste of money.

I would hope that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will take note not only of what I have said this evening but of what members have said over the past several weeks about the seriousness of the situation on the prairies.

I do not think that I have anything further to say except that we on this side support the amendments in this bill and we will not delay its passage. There is no question that it will be passed by ten o'clock tonight.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to speak on this bill before this Parliament because it may have some significant factors to offer in the development of the north. Not many of us appreciate the great possibilities for agricultural development in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. Probably we should all spend some time with hon. members who represent the north, such as the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who can give us some specific insight into the possibilities of agricultural development in those areas.

As an educator with a great interest in agriculture, I spent a considerable amount of time in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I lived in such places as Dawson City, Whitehorse, Aklavik and Inuvik. Some of the things that I will mention here were mentioned before the committee, but I think they bear repeating before this House because they will give some insight into the possibilities of agricultural development in the north.

For example, Dawson City in the gold rush days had a population that varied from 25,000 to 40,000 people. A good portion of the food, particularly green vegetables, was grown in that area at that time. The area also supported a number of cattle as well as a large number of horses that were used in the gold fields at the time. Therefore it has the potential to support many more people than it is supporting at this time.

The Yukon Valley in the Dawson area is very fertile. Because of the almost 24 hours of sunshine or daylight in the north, there is a much quicker growth than one would expect in the south. For example, while living in Dawson City, my wife planted a cauliflower on July 1 and we ate it as a mature cauliflower on August 15, which is Discovery Day for the Dawson City area.

Mr. Nielsen: You missed it by two days.

Mr. Hovdebo: August 17, sorry.

There were a dozen or so farms in the Yukon at that time, possibly there are more now. There is more land that can be developed if it is needed and development is encouraged.

In the Northwest Territories the whole of the Liard Valley from the B.C. border up to Fort Simpson, part of the Mackenzie Valley, has been tested and could support a considerable amount of agriculture. That area is about 4,000 square miles of possible farm country.

I think many of us have a wrong idea about the climate in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. For instance, I can remember very distinctly being outside at two o'clock in the morning when I lived in Inuvik. It was broad daylight and the temperature was 88 degrees Fahrenheit. That is not unusual in either the Yukon or the Northwest Territories. Inuvik is several miles north of the Arctic circle.

In Inuvik and Aklavik it was quite common to see cabbages grow to a foot or a foot and a half in diameter. The missions in that area kept their population going almost entirely on food that they grew locally. We should not neglect the possible development of agriculture in the north, at least not in the northwest part of Canada that I know.

I am also pleased to speak on this bill because it includes a couple of basic principles. These principles are partially established in it. First, what is fair for a large group of people somewhere in Canada is also fair for a small group of people living in quite different conditions. By extending this assistance to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, we are recognizing the right of those areas to be treated as if they were just as important as the rest of Canada, which they are. This is an important principle, be it articulated in an assistance bill, such as this, or in any other piece of legislation which gives equal opportunity to all the regions of the country.

There is also a broader principle brought forward in this bill which I hope this House will consider every time it approaches any legislation which deals with transportation. Much of western Canada's alienation has to do with being put upon by Canada's transportation policies. For example, the western farmer feels very uneasy about the fact that he pays the freight to ship his grain to the east and then pays the freight on the machinery that he buys that comes from the east. This can be machinery, a TV set, or anything else that he purchases that was made in the east. Westerners have become used to paying the transportation or the freight both ways, but they are not happy about it. It is one of the basic complaints and reasons for alienation in the west. Let us not allow this kind of alienation to establish itself in the north. Let us start dealing with it as soon as possible. Let us not allow it to become a factor in the development of the north.

I sometimes dream of a transportation policy based on service rather than on profit which would not penalize anyone because of where that person lives. Maybe the time will come when the northerners will not pay any more to live there than we have to pay to live here in Ottawa.

There are a few other things about this bill I should like to mention. First, if it turns out that the bill was intended to assist in the development of the cattle industry, the poultry industry and other farm operations of that kind for which grain is needed, well and good, but if it turns out that the greatest benefit of this bill will accrue to outfitters who have very little stake in the development of the life of the territories, we should be cautious about the support we give it. Second, there is a danger of it being detrimental to agriculture because the bill subsidizes the movement of grain into the territories and there is an outside chance that it might cut into the profits of those growing grain locally. Again, we should be cautious about that.

There is another area in which caution is required. Should agriculture be developed extensively until the land claims in the Yukon and the territories have been solved to the satisfaction of the native people in those regions? There are certain aspects of the basic legislation which we are amending by this bill which trouble me somewhat, but they are not dealt with in the measure before us. What we are considering now is extending to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon assistance which is given to other parts of Canada, and we support the bill because it bears out a principle we support.

We must be fair to all regions and attempt to treat them in somewhat the same manner. This kind of recognition will be good for the unity of all parts of the nation. The time may come when we shall need to pay far more attention to the agricultural potential and production capacity of the north, and it makes sense to begin recognizing this now. We shall therefore support Bill C-15.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-15. It is an important bill to the areas to which it will extend freight feed assistance, namely, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

It is important we should look at the principle of the bill which is to make it easier to produce livestock in the territories and the Yukon. I should like to underline what the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) said with regard to realizing the potential for production in this area as part of an over-all assistance package rather than simply doing things on a piecemeal basis, for example, assisting the transportation of feed into the region. The potential of the region to be self-sufficient in terms of what it is capable of producing should also be part of any over-all program.

I had the opportunity to travel into the territories, not very far, but certainly up the Peace River Valley and for a few miles into the Northwest Territories, and it struck me as an area with rich potential for feed grain production. It appears to me that if we were to contemplate making the area self-sufficient in feed grain as part of an over-all policy, it would be a good thing. First, we might try to encourage the production of livestock in that area through feed grain assistance and then, as part of that policy, we might encourage the production of feed grains in the area itself. Such a program would make much more sense to me than simply extending feed freight assistance to the area, probably encouraging farmers there to rely on production of feed grains grown outside their own area, which would be to their own detriment if, in fact, they could, if encouraged, become self-sufficient in feed grain.

The second point I have to make is this: if there is to be any stability in agriculture it is through diversity so that producers are not entirely dependent upon the market for one crop for their livelihood and to meet the expenses of their operation. If there were a feed grain production industry in the Northwest Territories, as I believe is possible, it would be capable of supporting a livestock industry. So, if markets or production turned out to be bad in any one year, producers would have a second source of income. On the prairies, for instance, if there is excess production of feed grains there is an alternative to exporting feed grains to a poor market or a glutted market. A healthy livestock industry means there is a method of marketing feed grains through livestock. This makes sense to me in terms of an over-all plan of encouraging over-all production in the Northwest Territories. If we could do it on more than one front it would provide stability to the area and help it to become self-reliant.

There is another area I should like to touch on briefly. We have to be careful that we do not attempt to subsidize the production of everything we have some chance of producing in this country. When this bill was before the agricultural committee a couple of weeks ago I attempted to make this point. Somebody said, "What is wrong with Newfoundland having a beef industry?" Well, there is nothing wrong with that provided it could be done at a reasonable cost. But simply because the rest of the country has a beef industry seems no reason why Newfoundland should have one if it does not possess the resources or the land mass which are needed to support such an industry. I tried to point out that Manitoba does not have a deep sea fishing industry but that is no reason for us to attempt to establish one.

The problem with subsidization is that if it is done in such a way as to encourage production in areas of the country which are less efficient than areas where production is traditionally established, it hurts our capacity to produce in total. Therefore, as a country, we have less to distribute. Again, it seems to me we should be looking at this bill not only in terms of assisting the Northwest Territories to develop a livestock industry based on feed grains but in terms of the potential of the whole industry to become self-sufficient.

I should like to refer to a speech the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) gave to the British Columbia Cattlemen's Association on May 23. I have to admit I agreed with what he said—sometimes we do, sometimes we don't. With regard to stabilization programs he made this point:

> British Columbia is a wealthy province with revenues derived from many areas besides agriculture. Right now, B.C. is stabilizing agricultural production and farm income at levels the less fortunate provinces simply cannot afford. When times are hard, British Columbia farmers will be able to survive and end up taking over markets lost by farmers in less wealthy provinces.

Earlier he made a point which it seems to me could have been made before the quotation I have just read. He proposed a solution to what I would consider to be a developing problem. He said that he remained committed to a policy of harmonizing stabilization in supply management programs across Canada and that this is essential to ensure the future of Canadian farm families in all of our regions.

I think both those points are important to emphasize, because when we subsidize the movement of feed grains off the prairies it means that with the movement of that feed grain we also take the production of livestock. If in fact the livestock we are subsidizing to be produced in other areas of the country can be produced on the prairies, in this case more efficiently than in the north, we are taking away production opportunities and therefore jobs and income from producers on the prairies, and I submit very strongly that that is where this kind of production is carried out the most efficiently in this country.

This relates somewhat to what is going on right now in western Canada in terms of the dry weather. It seems to me that we are going to be in very serious shape as far as feed supplies for our livestock industry in western Canada is concerned. We may well be in a situation where we do need some help on an emergency basis for our livestock industry in western Canada, and if what we are doing now is subsidizing and encouraging the movement of feed grains away from the prairies and hindering further the production of livestock on the prairies, it seems to me that we could be compounding the problem in terms of maintaining production where it has been done the most efficiently in the past in this country. That is something which I think needs to be looked at.

The minister makes the point that B.C. is a wealthy province away from agriculture, and I have to agree with him. When I look at the annual report of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, which is the body charged with administering the feed freight assistance under this program, I see that British Columbia has received $4.5 million under this program, which is more than any of the other provinces or areas of the country have received under this program, and it seems to me to be inconsistent with a policy of maintaining equal opportunity across this country when we, as a federal government, can subsidize the movement of feed grains into British Columbia while at the same time the B.C. provincial government, by the minister's reckoning, has a very expensive and a very favourable stabilization program for agricultural production in the province of British Columbia.

That, to me, is something which needs to be addressed by a strong federal government, and I submit that if we are to have a strong federal government this is one of the areas which could be looked at. It is equally as urgent for us in western Canada as some of the grievances of the people of the province of Quebec.

When we talk about top loading, we simply mean that any stabilization programs which the federal government has are administered in most cases equally across the country. That provides a basic level of stabilization for the provinces. However, when we are looking at provinces like B.C., and I think in some cases the province of Quebec, if on top of this basic level of subsidization that the federal government has, the provinces then are able to come in on top of that and add their own incentives and encouragement to production in terms of provincial stabilization, we get a further distortion of the production patterns that we have traditionally had in this country. That seems to me to be a very serious matter in this country, and it is a growing problem which needs to be looked at.

The Canadian Livestock Feed Board, as I said, is the body which is charged with administering feed freight assistance. Several of my constituents have complained to me about the way the Canadian Livestock Feed Board is able to price feed grains off the prairies. In fact there have been cases recently where it has been equally as cheap for producers in eastern Canada to buy feed grains off the prairies as it has for our producers on the prairies. This is something again which we find very hard to accept. We need a healthy livestock industry.

The livestock industry in western Canada has traditionally been a buyer of close to half the grain grown in my part of the country, and if we are going to subsidize the movement of that grain away from those areas of production, it means that the livestock sector in western Canada is going to be disadvantaged. This is not good, not only in terms of the country but also in terms of our ability to maintain a stable and healthy economy in western Canada. As I said previously, in my mind the key to having a stable economy is to have a diverse economy, and that means a healthy livestock sector which is able to take up the excess production when we are in times of good crops. Moving feed grains away from those areas with government assistance is not doing anything in terms of maintaining a stable livestock industry in western Canada.

While I wholeheartedly support the principle of this bill, because I realize that it is very expensive to live with high food costs in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, I would much sooner see this problem of high costs of food attached as an over-all policy whereby feed freight assistance would simply be one part of an over-all policy to encourage more efficient production in that area of the country. Again I have to emphasize the potential of that area to feed itself and, in fact, perhaps even to become a net exporter of certain agricultural products. This is something to which I do not think the present government has paid enough attention.

When it was my pleasure to be part of the previous government and to support the then minister of Indian affairs and northern development, he took it upon himself to see that some of these lands were brought into agricultural production. Had we remained in power, it is my understanding that the objective was to have some of that land in production for the current year 1980. To my mind that would have been an eminently sensible thing to have happen because it would have given that area of the country a chance to become a contributor to the country rather than simply a benefactor of a program like this which, if it is to be used—and I am sure it will—will simply make the production of livestock in the area dependent upon this kind of feed freight assistance.

Again I say that while I have no problems in supporting the bill, I would like to see the development of the north also a priority of this government, and I would also like this government to see that when it has subsidies and stabilization payments made available to different sectors of the economy that it is done in such a way that it does not distort the comparative advantage in the efficient areas of production in our country.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few remarks on Bill C-15 with regard to feed freight assistance. The Canadian Livestock Feed Board was established in 1967. At that time a number of farmers in eastern Canada and British Columbia were having difficulty getting a constant and adequate supply of feed grains. In addition, they did not have sufficient storage facilities to store a certain supply of grain in case the transportation system was unable to deliver grain, especially during the winter months. So the Canadian Livestock Feed Board under the Feed Freight Assistance Act was established to do both things. It was established, first, to supply an adequate and available quantity of feed grains at an equitable price. That is where the subsidy came in. In addition, it was established to assist eastern Canadians, and to some extent British Columbia, in the building of adequate storage facilities to have those feed grains in place.

Western Canadians were producing large supplies of feed grains. At the same time we were a large producer of livestock, but we went along with this bill saying that there should be a livestock industry in all parts of Canada including the maritimes, eastern Canada and British Columbia. At that time the north was left out. We went along with that, saying we had more than sufficient supplies, and the amount of livestock in eastern Canada and British Columbia was not significant enough to cut into the production of those areas where we had a comparative advantage, and those areas where we were the producers of calves and the feeders of those calves to the slaughter stage. This was also the case in the hog industry and to a lesser extent in the poultry industry. However, over the years we found that this comparative advantage that we had, given the Crow rates, the "At and east" rates and feed freight assistance, was in fact detrimental to our livestock industry because it was becoming more reasonable to ship our calves to eastern Canada than to feed them in our areas due to the various subsidies that were being put in place. However, again it was of no significance to western Canada because we were maintaining our traditional levels, and nothing was said. But in the last number of years, that has been changing.

The reason it has been changing—it is difficult to argue with that reason—is that those other provinces wanted to establish livestock industries in their areas and become as close to self-sufficient as possible. I know that, taking the example of my farmers, they want to produce as much as possible. So, given the provincial top loading subsidies that are coming into place, particularly in the last number of years in Quebec and British Columbia, we are finding that more and more production is taking place in those provinces and, in fact, it is stealing away a livelihood which has been traditional in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

In the 1940s we had a third of the hog production in Canada; today we only have 12 per cent. We have lost a number of packing plants in a number of our western cities and, in fact, we now only have one major delivery point for hogs in Alberta, and minor points in Red Deer and in the Grande Prairie. We have only one large slaughterhouse in Saskatchewan—I believe it is in Saskatoon—and one delivery point in Manitoba, substantially down from what it used to be. Not only is that hurting our livestock industry but we are losing a great number of jobs in the slaughterhouse industry. We are finding that it is of great concern to people who have worked in that industry for 20 or 25 years and perhaps only have a few years to go to retirement but are now finding the slaughterhouses are closing down.

You cannot blame that entirely on feed freight assistance because, when you look at the assistance that was given at one time when there was not much production in eastern Canada, you find that it was a substantial amount per hog or per steer. But now that the numbers are increasing so rapidly, if you look at the last figure for the assistance that is given the livestock producer in eastern Canada or British Columbia, you find that it amounts to 64 cents to $1 per animal. However, when you look at the total numbers, you find that about $4.5 million is being spent in assisting feed to Quebec, about $4.6 million goes to British Columbia, and almost $4 million to the maritimes. That is a substantial assistance for the livestock industry, and this allows for the comparative advantage to be lost in western Canada.

From talking to our hog marketing board in the province we find that they are very concerned about the loss of a substantial industry in our province. They are saying that the basic reason for that has been top-loading subsidies from the provinces, and when you add to that federal subsidies, it is almost impossible for our industry to compete because the large consumption areas are, of course, in Montreal, Toronto, southwestern Ontario and Vancouver. So we have to ship our livestock without subsidy, after slaughter, to those areas. Consider that a feeder in eastern Canada, given feed freight assistance, given support by provincial governments, and being at the area of consumption, has an advantage over us who, although we have a comparative advantage in feeding the animal in western Canada, must pay full freight to get the slaughtered animal into those markets. Besides that, for some reason which has never been adequately explained to me, there is always a 4 cents to 5 cents per pound difference between the price that an eastern Canadian farmer gets for an animal in markets in Toronto and Montreal and what he gets in markets in Edmonton, Saskatoon and Winnipeg.

If you add up all those factors, it is easy to explain why the livestock feeding and slaughtering industries in our western provinces are in jeopardy. What is the answer? Is the answer to do away with these freight assistance programs? Perhaps it is. If the federal government, under the leadership of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), were able to convince all the provinces to act alike in the way they treat their livestock industries and allow the federal government to deal with the subsidy programs that they consider to be necessary, then we would have no difficulty. But when you have these federal programs in place, and as well have provinces decide that it is their plan and their goal to become as close to self-sufficient in livestock as possible, and even beyond that, and that what we call their top loading programs are added to the federal programs, we find no alternative but to do away with these federal programs until the national government can sort this out. The only other alternative for farmers in western Canada is to ask their provinces to get into the same game. When you have province competing with province on subsidy programs, you can understand the dilemma we face.

The only other opportunity available to us is the export market in western Canada. Here is an area in which the federal government is not prepared to take leadership, as I think it should. The federal government could become very active in finding other markets for western livestock in order to keep our comparative advantage in the production of livestock. There is a potential there. The population of the world is growing rapidly and the capacity for growing food is not growing as rapidly as the population. As we look into the late 1980s we can expect—and many scientists assure us of this—that it will be more difficult than it is at present to produce adequate amounts of food to feed the world. So we should be looking for more export markets for the livestock we are growing in western Canada.

With regard to the extension of feed freight assistance to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, I think this is a harmless bill. There are probably only about 200 head of cattle in the Yukon and probably not many more in the Northwest Territories. I can understand the governments in those areas wishing to have the same advantages as other parts of Canada have.

So while I have great difficulty in supporting feed freight assistance as a proposal, I can see the justice of supporting this bill, given that this feed freight assistance is in place and has been operating for a number of years. That is why I give my reluctant approval to this bill.

I understand that the potential for agriculture in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon is there. As was mentioned by other members, there are some 3,000 to 4,000 square miles that have the capacity to produce hay and grain, probably not grain for sale but grain for forage for the production of livestock. Maybe there is a possibility for expanding agriculture in those areas, the greatest potential being in the cattle industry because the lack of capacity for drying hay and the short frost free periods would make it difficult to produce much in the way of feed grains or wheat. So, if we can establish, through this bill, a livestock industry of some sort in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and get farming going there, that will be fine.

Before concluding I should like to say that I am surprised the Minister of Agriculture is not in his place to listen to the problems we are having with this bill. Many important suggestions have been made by members tonight, so I hope he reads the debate very carefully. Also, I hope he will understand our concern for the depleting livestock in western Canada. When we called for a stabilization price, we were very concerned that it took a number of months to get the statistics in place to allow a stabilization payment. It amounted to very little; it will not assist hog farmers. Alberta provincial government assistance has been required, but it has only been in place for a year. Hopefully the Minister of Agriculture will give the necessary leadership in a country as great as ours to ensure some justice in the subsidy programs which a number of provinces are putting into place.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in considering Bill C-15 I intend to take a few minutes to place in front of the government some of the views of my area of Canada regarding the Livestock Feed Assistance Act amendments before us today.

There have been two dominant principles in Canadian life in terms of federalism. One is sharing, and the other is regional advantage. Every area of the country accepts the concept of sharing with other parts of Canada. But when it comes to the concept of regional advantage, and when we take a look at the manner in which the country is constituted, it is obvious there are regional advantages in western Canada relating to the growing of feed grains and the livestock industry. To some degree that regional advantage has been eroded through legislation passed some time ago, namely, the Livestock Feed Assistance Act. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) made the point very well when he showed clearly that the concept of eroding regional advantage should be seriously examined and that possibly this is not the time nor the bill to do it with, even though he supported the amendments.

I have been concerned for some time about what has been happening. Through the national marketing boards, and legislation such as the Livestock Feed Assistance Act, to some degree we are balkanizing one region against another. Through the top loading of provincial programs on top of federal programs, a number of provinces have now made a decision to become self-sufficient in the production of hogs, turkeys or broilers. They are doing this to a great extent because of the advantages they now have from the National Marketing Board through national allocations for their provinces and the feed freight assistance they receive. So that comparative advantage is lost in those areas where the feed has been grown. Additionally it has repercussions for industries related to agriculture.

For years and years in western Canada we have been saying that we should process to a greater degree the agricultural products we produce. Also for a long time we have said that freight arrangements, which allow for the movement of unprocessed or semi-processed food stuffs from west to east, are much lower than when we buy back the finished product. Every western Canadian province has experienced the closing down of plants that have large killing floors and killing operations. This happened in Winnipeg with the closing of Swifts and the loss of 600 jobs. Because of comparative advantage and the fact that costs are the lowest in western Canada, we think that is where production should take place so that western Canada will have the benefit of the related jobs in the agricultural community.

At this period of time when we are facing severe drought in many parts of western Canada, we find it somewhat surprising that the federal government is concerned about this type of legislation. Yet we saw the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) coming forward just a few days ago with a program for $7 million of assistance to alleviate the consequences of the drought. The $7 million is to take care of the situations in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. If one looks at the consequences and the large effect of drought, $7 million does not seem to be a lot of money. I did not think I would ever stand in my place saying that $7 million was not a lot of money, but the fact remains it is just another example to western Canadians that this government does not have any appreciation of their ability to produce foodstuffs and that they should have that comparative advantage; but when they run into difficulties they are not given the same consideration as other regions of the country.

I indicated that I would be brief, but lastly I should like to refer to the agricultural potential of the north. The government in its previous incarnation put a freeze on agricultural development in northern Canada. Previous to our government taking over last year, there were a number of representations from farmers in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories that agricultural land should be opened up. The government through its actions continually demonstrates to those of us who have a special interest in Canadian development north of the sixtieth parallel that it simply does not understand the desire of the residents of the Yukon or the Northwest Territories to develop the natural advantages in those areas. The government just does not seem to understand. In fact I have come to the conclusion that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) developed his vision of the north back in 1954 when he paddled up the Teslin River and thought that area of Canada should remain pristine, pure and beautiful for those who wanted to escape the concrete jungles of the cities in the south. He developed the vision that that is the way the north should remain.

I cannot impress enough upon the government that it must change its view of the north. The government keeps on saying that it is not ready to do it because native people are not ready for the development. My experience is just the opposite. The native people wanted to take advantage and be partners in that kind of development. Some of their leaders did not want to because they saw a personal advantage as long as these things were strung out. But the average people living in hamlets have quite another story. They wanted to take advantage of their natural resources, whether it be in agriculture, mineral or oil development. There is no way one can run from those facts because that is how it is.

When we came into government we met with a number of farmers who were trying to struggle along with lease arrangements. It is almost a beg, borrow and steal operation; they are trying to keep going. These people are very independent. I know farmers by nature are independent, but these fellows kept on working under tremendous adversity, the greatest of which were the regulations of this government and its federal bureaucracy in those areas. They keep on struggling and they hope lightning will some day strike this government and they will be able to get land, which the rest of us take for granted. That is all they are asking, for the same opportunity. In fact 100 years ago immigrants were able to come to this country to homestead, and there are people in the two territories who do not even have those opportunities in 1980. It was our plan for the summer of 1980 to start opening land with a comprehensive program that would get the land into agricultural production.

In fact we had more agricultural production at one time in the north than we have today. All one has to do is look at some of these communities and their truck farming, or gardening, and it will be obvious that the long days obviously lend themselves to the production of fresh vegetables in the area. All one has to do is go into the stores and look at the prices. Obviously there are advantages, yet I do not believe as I stand that this government here has caught that vision at all. Members in the government see the north rather as an area where, through regulations, they control its development and the people who live there.

I share the views of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin in supporting this legislation which will include farmers in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, but I do not think it addresses a fundamental principle which this House should address. It does not address the regional advantage that should and does exist, for instance, in the production of livestock and feed grain. This should not be eroded, and there should be no reciprocal action with other industries being placed in those areas which have lost their regional advantage through federal legislation.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in support of the feed grain assistance proposal before us, not because I think it will make any great change in the life of the people in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, nor because I think it is an important breakthrough, but simply because it puts people in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon in a similar position to farmers in the rest of Canada. For reasons of equality we support this bill, though we are very much aware that the proposal will not make any great change in the agricultural output of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

This is not because there is not potential there, because there is. As has been mentioned, the area has in the past produced its own food for a population of somewhere between 25,000 and 40,000 people. The main impediment to the development of agriculture in the Yukon and Northwest Territories now is not so much the lack of feed grain assistance, the provision of which I contend will make virtually no difference to the development effort there. In fact this may be of some detriment to those producers who are attempting to produce oats and barley now. However, it will provide some back-up for them in the event that frost wipes out their crops. They will know that assistance from the rest of Canada is available and they can bring in feed if they have been developing their livestock industry, making use of locally grown feeds.

Probably the main impediment to the development of agriculture in the territories is the lack of speed that has been evident in the settlement of land claims in that part of the country. The original peoples and the Government of Canada have been taking part in long drawn out negotiations. If agriculture is to become important enough to provide food, making the area more or less self-sufficient, that is the first thing that has to be solved. I am not suggesting that the settlements should be other than fair, but there should perhaps be a little more effort made in negotiating these land claims in order to settle them so everyone knows who will be holding the agricultural land, or the land that has agricultural potential.

We know that land which once grew crops is growing up with trees. We know the climate is adequate for the growth of a large variety of vegetables, many varieties of oats and barley, and a number of forage crops, including several types of hay and alfalfa. These things can be grown in that part of the north and could be used to assist in the development of the local economy.

There are a lot of problems in establishing agriculture in any new area. I myself am only two or three generations away from the development of what was once a heavily timbered part of Saskatchewan. I know the problems the farmers of the Yukon and Northwest Territories will be facing are not the kinds of problems faced by farmers in those areas where agriculture has been developed.

Mr. Nielsen: Have you ever been there?

Mr. Althouse: No, but I know from looking at the geological soil maps and the climatic conditions that it is not much different from where I am located, where there is about a ten-day greater frost-free period, with the rest of the conditions, including soil and climate, being very similar. There is a little more sunlight, but otherwise the possibilities are there, given some changes in the question of who owns the land and who has the right to develop it.

Mr. Nielsen: Be my guest and come up this summer.

Mr. Althouse: Okay, will do. I think one of the things we perhaps pay too much attention to in agriculture is the development of what we try to call viable farms as opposed to subsistence farms. Perhaps we have been spending too much of our efforts in agricultural policy in this country in the past 40 or 50 years dealing with the farms and the areas, and not enough in dealing with the farmer. We have seen areas developed after a couple of generations that were supposed to be areas of subsistence farming. We find that rather than an area being suitable for subsistence production, a class of farmer has learned to use the land and the resources to very good advantage. Perhaps what we should be considering, instead of classing certain areas, writing them off as areas where only subsistence farming can take place, is the development of all the resources, thinking particularly of the farmer.

Farmers have a number of special requirements when they go into new areas. Many of these things they take with them. Most people who move into that type of agriculture take with them a great amount of initiative and an ability to adapt. They know how to make things grow out of nothing. They spend a lot of their time clearing and developing the land, putting up buildings and adapting equipment. Very often the general equipment available for farming does not work well in new areas where you have to tear down the trees, tear up the land and make it suitable for crop production.

These farmers do not have the back-up of an established agricultural community such as those that exist in established agricultural areas. They do not have the parts available, they do not have the equipment manufacturers, and they do not have the technical back-up which is available in the rest of Canada. These people are pretty well out on their own, not only fighting the weather and the geography, but also having difficulty with markets.

These farmers in the north have to develop their own markets, and some of the markets appear to be there. People are consuming goods and paying very high prices for food. The potential is there, but there has to be back-up from the rest of the country. These people have to know that if their crops fail feed can be brought in. This change in the legislation will allow that. The farmers also have to know that there are programs such as crop insurance to offset the violent disruption a total loss can have to a beginning or even an established farm. Producers must know that there are stabilization programs available to protect them from the vagaries of the market. Even though one might farm in an isolated area, the ups and downs of the market in the rest of the country or in the rest of the world filter into those isolated areas and affect that farm operation just as much as if it were out in the mainstream of the marketplace.

As well as these forms of assistance provided by government, the producer must have available to him some form of intervention on the part of government. Sometimes it may be on the producer's behalf, as, for example, in the form of passing certain powers on to the farmers as groups to offset the monopoly or near monopoly situation which all farm producers face when they deal in the marketplace, either as buyers or as sellers. It could be in the areas of purchasing equipment, fertilizers or farm input or, on the other hand, the producer could be trying to sell some of his products. In either case the people he faces in the market place are usually very large enterprises and concerns that operate in a near monopoly situation. As a small competitive producer, the farmer is virtually at the mercy of these enterprises unless government allows farmers to stand together either in the form of co-ops or as marketing boards.

To sum up, we agree that the proposal before us tonight should go through. We recognize, as I am sure do all hon. members, that this bill will not change the agricultural situation in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and that it is merely cosmetic. We say again that the land entitlement question must be settled soon. We say again that the technology and the expertise of the farmers in the area must be improved upon and developed. We say again that market structures for farmers which are operated by farmers must also be provided if they are to be viable operators in that part of the country or in any part of the country.

We would also like to reiterate that back-up support from the government is necessary in situations which exist not only in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon but also in the rest of the country, because farmers need assistance in the form of crop insurance and in the form of stabilization programs when the market goes up or down drastically, which it very often does in agricultural production. In this case we need the movement of feed grains when required in this region of the country as in the other regions of Canada.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-15 with regard to its direction and its importance as it relates to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I have noticed something which I think is most important while in the agricultural committee, and that is the understanding and direction given by farmers from all parts of Canada, whether they are from the Northwest Territories, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Quebec or Ontario. Canada could learn a lesson from agriculture.

I am very pleased to speak on the passage of this bill because I realize how important it is to the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon in terms of production. There has been a lack of vision with regard to the north since the years of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who had a very bright vision of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. We have not taken the time to visualize the potential of this great area of Canada.

It is most important at this time that we give speedy passage to this bill to ensure that there is an opportunity for production in this area. It is something which is very important, not only to agriculture but to every facet of Canadian society today. While the movement of feed grains is important to the North, I would like to relate it to some problems which we have experienced and are experiencing in Saskatchewan now with the drought situation there.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Saskatchewan is experiencing a drought, particularly in eastern and central Saskatchewan and in the greater part of Manitoba. It is most important that we learn something from the experience of the movement of feed grains. I am somewhat sorry to see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is not in the House to hear this debate tonight. I think we will face some very serious problems in the area, not only with regard to the movement of feed grains but with regard to subsidizing to maintain the breeding stock on the livestock farms. This is most important to livestock farmers.

Just this past week I had a chat with an older farmer in my riding. He indicated that livestock farmers over the last six years have been through a tremendously serious situation. He said, "If we are forced to sell our livestock again, we will not be back in business". It is very important that the government and the Minister of Agriculture take a look at this point not only with regard to the transportation of feed, but with regard to the tremendous cost of feed today. I understand that the cost of feed ranges from $2.50 a bale to $5 a bale. If one calculates the cost of maintaining a herd at those prices, obviously it is much cheaper to sell the herd.

It is important that the government develop policies in terms of maintaining the breeding stock on the prairies, in light of this extreme drought they are presently facing there. In concluding my remarks, I look particularly to the Northwest Territoires and the Yukon for production which is so necessary to the agricultural community and for all of Canada. We must take heed of the lesson that we look to methods and direction of incentive being given to people to produce, in whatever facet of society it may be, particularly as we relate to the agricultural community this evening. Therefore I recommend that we pass this bill because, as I understand it, it will certainly help our farmers and producers in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—PROCESSING OF RESOURCES NEAR SOURCE—POSSIBLE RELOCATION OF SARNIA COMPLEX

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, on June 6, 1980, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) reaffirmed that the reason for the government moving the Eldorado Nuclear Plant from Port Hope to Blind River was to permit raw resources to be processed near their source. He has earlier indicated that the government was prepared to spend millions of public tax dollars to achieve this policy.

On June 9, 1980, I asked the minister when, under this enlightened policy, the government would be moving the huge Sarnia petroleum complex with its thousands of jobs and its millions of barrels of oil that it receives from Alberta, to the province of Alberta. The minister's reply was to laugh and to state that the policy applied only to a "planned or projected installation, not one that existed at the time". That smart alecky reply from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources concerning Alberta's resources is typical of the total insensitivity of this government to the legitimate concerns of Albertans.

● (2200)

Because of the seven-minute time limit on my remarks I will attempt to convey my deep concern about growing western support for separation. Leading citizens in droves are joining the western separatist party.

First, Eldorado was moved for nothing more than patronage, to a constituency held by a cabinet minister. That is an immoral act, because the policy does not apply across the whole country.

Second, the government is prepared to pay $35 per barrel for Mexican oil but only $14.75 to the people of Alberta for their oil. That is 39 per cent of its value. The money being exported to Mexico increases our national deficit and gives Mexico the jobs. Just think of the thousands of jobs there would be for Canada had the government adopted the Progressive Conservative policy of self-sufficiency and funnelled the money through Alberta.

Money paid to Alberta is immediately recirculated through the entire economy. The benefit to central Canada is immediate due to the purchase of technology, pipe, engines, turbines, cars and trucks. Money going to Mexico is lost forever. Surely supply is much more important than price. Under the Clark-Lougheed agreement the whole range of such price, supply and recirculation of money was covered. For instance, the price was staged over several years. This would add billions to the $17 billion that Albertans have already forgone. The price would never exceed 85 per cent of the U.S. price.

Another way of saying this is that central Canada's industry would always have a 15 per cent competitive edge over its U.S. and the world competitors. Natural gas would be priced at 85 per cent of the price of oil, and for a period of five years at a rate of 65 per cent, in order to encourage conversion. This means that Albertans would pay for that conversion. Alberta would pay the cost of transportation to Quebec City. Alberta would fund the development of at least five alternate energy plants in other provinces. Just think of the jobs that would mean in those provinces.

Alberta would fund the immediate development of more tar sands plants in that province which again would mean thousands and thousands of jobs. As well, Alberta would bear the entire cost of the roads, schools, hospitals and the other amenities following the development of those tar sands plants. Alberta would also bear the cost of the social dislocation involved in building these plants.

The fact is clear that Canada is not self-sufficient in oil. We now import about 450,000 barrels per day at the world price. By 1985 this will amount to over 600,000 barrels per day. It is also a fact that the conventional Alberta oil fields are beginning to lose their production capacity at a frightening rate. Only a few short months ago the rate of production was two million barrels per day, but today it is only 1.4 million barrels per day. Many wells have now been inundated by salt water.

The solution is to co-operate with Alberta, not attack it. My most bitter disappointment as a new member of this House is the total cynicism of the government—the attitude of holding power and retaining power at any price—lies, deceit, misrepresentations—anything to hold power.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was barely settled in his office when he invoked a force majeure clause to renege on a signed agreement setting the price for syncrude oil. This act of betrayal throws real uncertainty into the industry about the worth of the government's word.

● (2205)

The Minister of Energy, being from Quebec, should understand that Alberta's attachment to its resources is equally as real as the attachment of Quebec for its language and its culture. It is ironic that on almost the same day that the Minister of Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) was doling out $4 billion to Ontario and Quebec, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) was reneging on a signed agreement concerning Prince Rupert, an act that almost blocked the proposed terminal at Prince Rupert and therefore prevented Albertans from exporting their grain.

No doubt hon. members will recall the time in 1974 when the then minister of energy reneged on another written agreement concerning natural gas. He stood in this House a mere 24 days after signing that agreement and reneged upon it.

Another example is the unilateral reneging by this government of an electrical utility rebate statute, which therefore increases the price which Albertans, and only Albertans, pay for their electricity.

Our whole system of agreements, contracts and justice work only if you can trust another person's word. Clearly, the Canadian people cannot trust the word of the present Liberal government and this reality, more than any other, will force Alberta out of confederation.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on June 9, the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) asked when the government would be announcing the movement of the entire Sarnia complex to Alberta. Apparently he was making an assumption that the government's policy to locate processing plants near resources, when feasible, would apply to existing facilities.

I would like to reiterate the response made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) that the specific case of the decision to locate the new Eldorado refinery at Blind River rather than at Port Hope related to a new facility and not to one that existed at the time the decision was taken. The principle that a plant should be located in proximity to the resource that it serves will be a prime factor in making a location decision. Another factor, of course, is the location of the plant in relation to the market it serves.

In the case of a uranium refinery, the product can be shipped economically over fairly long distances, whereas the large volumes of petroleum products produced in petroleum refineries, or from associated petrochemical plants, are generally more strongly market-oriented. The products produced from the refineries and petrochemical plants in Sarnia are marketed close by in southwestern Ontario. It is more economic and efficient to move the crude oil by pipeline from western Canada for processing at that site rather than to move a variety of petroleum products over long-distance pipelines or railway routes.

This is not to say that all large-volume products should be produced in the immediate vicinity of major markets. In Atlantic Canada, offshore oil and gas developments will, under the government's policies, stimulate new industries and jobs in that region. The government will also encourage diversified development in western Canada where resource wealth is already a strong magnet for investment.

The determination to support industrialization of the west is a continuation of a national policy that has been supported for many years. The activities of the Wheat Board, the grain equalization fund, the prairie farm rehabilitation programs, the programs of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the federal investment in Syncrude, federal manpower training programs, federal incentives for oil exploration and mining, are all examples of activities that have played a significant part in the resurgence of the west. One of the latest examples is the decision by Petro-Canada to plan for the construction of plants in the oil sands area of northern Alberta in a joint venture with the Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company.

The government's policy of encouraging the location of new processing plants in the vicinity of resources is a further step in the direction of regional diversification, and in particular, of helping those regions that need new developments most. In this respect, the location of the Eldorado refinery at Blind River is one example of how this policy can be beneficially implemented.

EMPLOYMENT—REINSTATEMENT OF OUTREACH PROGRAM—RESTORATION OF FUNDS FOR 12 PROJECTS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I raise tonight very serious concern about the future of Women's Outreach projects and hence the very future of many Canadian women entering or re-entering the labour force.

The minister responsible for employment and immigration stated in the House on June 3, in response to a question of mine, that funds to Outreach have been restored and that projects cut by the previous Liberal government are being reinstated. I am concerned that this reinstatement is not actually taking place and that women's Outreach projects are again being subjected to unnecessary bureaucratic wrangles, as well as being expected to meet unfair, unrealistic, and irrelevant criteria.

Let me cite one example as reason for these doubts. On May 26, just days before the minister announced the restoration of Outreach funds, the Director of Employment and Immigration for the Manitoba region, Bob Morin, told one of the ten remaining women's Outreach projects in all of Canada that it need not apply to renew its funding. This project, Affirmative Action Outreach of Winnipeg, was told that there was no point in resubmitting an application because "no regional affirmative action program has yet been defined." Curiously enough, this was admitted even though the Affirmative Action program sponsored by the Department of Employment and Immigration is three years old with a national budget of roughly $360,000, and 12 to 18 regional officers. Although this budget is clearly not enough, it is strange that an Affirmative Action strategy for the entire province of Manitoba has not even been defined.

However, my primary concern tonight is that this Outreach project is, at worst, facing a total cutback or, at a minimum, months of red tape, cataloguing, evaluations, reviews, reports, and countless battles with departmental officials who do not understand the need for women's employment services let alone the need for affirmative action.

This Manitoba project is a microcosm of the entire Outreach program established in 1974 which has had a very difficult and rocky history—and for that only the Liberal governments, past and present, can take responsibility. Let me mention just a few of the problems:

1. In 1978, it was declared that "women" and "youth" were no longer a priority or special needs target of CEC or Outreach. This began the cutbacks which reduced the 22 projects to 10. This occurred despite the fact that of all the special programs established by CEC which could particularly benefit women, Outreach had the greatest potential.

2. Opposing cutbacks and pleading for additional funds has been a tremendous waste of time for Outreach workers. Since 1978, the New Democratic Party has defended the right to exist of many Outreach projects and raised questions in this House about cutbacks to AWARE in B.C., Women in Society Today, in Saskatchewan; Womanpower, in London; Times Change, in Toronto; Womens Career Counselling Service, in Ottawa, and now, Affirmative Action Outreach in Winnipeg.

3. Outreach projects are mistakenly considered to be placement offices and are therefore evaluated on a purely statistical basis. While many Outreach projects have higher job placement rates than Canada Employment Centres, their purpose is much broader. They specialize in providing in-depth supporting counselling and assertiveness training; they work to change attitudes and hiring practices of employers, and they help women to help themselves by providing support services as well as information on educational and vocational opportunities.

4. Reviews of Outreach projects are carried out, often in secrecy, by CEC officials who have negligible contact with the projects, are unfamiliar with the special needs of women, evaluate projects primarily on a cost-benefit basis and wrongfully compare Outreach services to those of CEC.

● (2215)

I hope that my doubts about the new minister's renewed commitment to Outreach are unfounded. I would therefore appreciate receiving answers to the following questions. First, of the 12 women's Outreach projects cut back by the Liberal government, how many have resubmitted applications and how many are being reinstated? Second, what portion of the $9.7 million which the minister says has been allocated to Outreach will go toward women's projects? Third, will the funding for Affirmative Action Outreach in Winnipeg be continued? Fourth, what criteria are being applied in the evaluation of both new and existing programs? Fifth, are all of the minister's officials aware of his intentions to restore Outreach funding and of his apparent commitment to special employment services for women?

I urge the government not only to make good on its promises but also to work toward an expansion of this necessary service. At a minimum there should be one women's Outreach project in every Canada employment district. Such a program is central to the development of any employment strategy for women and the key to removing the economic and sociological barriers faced by women in their search for decent and rewarding employment.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in 1977-78, there were 22 Outreach projects categorized as women-oriented projects. Of that number, only 17 in fact provided services exclusively for women. So, to meet the situation, five projects were restructured to orient them toward more appropriate target groups, in this case people nearly always unemployed, inmates and former inmates, isolated communities. I point out that out of the five projects, four are continuing.

There are now 14 Outreach projects offering manpower services exclusively or principally to women and thus falling in the category of women-oriented projects.

Furthermore, we are now considering another project for women in Truro, Nova Scotia, which would bring the total of projects in this category to 15. The hon. member asks if those projects will continue. The answer is yes, until the Canada Employment Centres in each of the communities where a women-oriented Outreach project is ongoing can efficiently provide the necessary services. This is one of the basic objectives of the Outreach program: the integration of experience and acquired skills and, one day, the takeover by the local CEC of the services being provided. In this way, we get the most out of even the most modest amounts.

To extend the Outreach projects, there must therefore still be a need for the services provided, the objectives and the contract commitments must continue to be met, and Parliament must continue to authorize the funds required. I mentioned earlier the basic relationship between the Outreach program and the CECs. I should add that women's Outreach projects are not the only means available to the commission to provide employment services to women. Indeed, since 38 per cent of manpower counsellors in the CECs are women, there is no reason to believe that—

Miss Jewett: It is not the same!

Mr. Bockstael: —there is no reason to believe that women who prefer to deal with a woman counsellor cannot do so. Moreover, more that 42 per cent of the users of the Outreach program are women, because those women who cannot make effective use of the CECs can benefit from the services of an Outreach project as much as men.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SHEEP CONTAGIOUS DISEASES—COMPENSATION FOR FARMERS AFFECTED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that many sheep owners in the maritime provinces are losing sheep to two contagious diseases, enzootic abortion and pulmonary adenomatosis, and in view of the fact that all the affected sheep were purchased from, or have been in contact with sheep from two government-run importation groups who kept the sheep in quarantine for three years, and it is only after the sheep have been dispersed to the Canadian public that these diseases have been confirmed, and in view of the fact that the same virus that causes enzootic abortion in sheep causes it in cattle, I move, seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That this House instruct the Minister of Agriculture to immediately launch a full scale investigation into this matter so that farmers who purchase sheep for the purpose of improving their stocks will be protected from purchasing diseased sheep and compensated for those already purchased.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SALE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA WINES ON AIR CANADA FLIGHTS AND IN PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to urge the unanimous support of the House on a matter of importance and pride to citizens of British Columbia.

In recognition of the recent wine critics' acclaim of Penticton's Casabello Fleur de Blanc wine, and in recognition of the fact that other superb wines vinted from specially selected sunny Okanagan grapes are available from wineries of British Columbia, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer):

That these superb British Columbia wines be served on Air Canada flights and in the parliamentary dining room as a means of furthering better east-west relations within Canada.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SEVENTY-SECOND BIRTHDAY OF HON. STANLEY KNOWLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering that today is the seventy-second birthday of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: —I assure hon. members he had nothing to do with this motion—and in view of his 34 years of distinguished service not only to this House and to his constituency but to all Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), who named the hon. member to the Privy Council last fall:

That this House congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on his seventy-second birthday today, for his years of service, and asserts that we look forward to at least another 34 years of devotion, decency and dedication.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BANKRUPTCIES

PENDING COLLAPSE OF MARITIME AGENCIES LTD.—ACTION TO AVOID—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of truly urgent and pressing necessity concerning the pending and unnecessary bankruptcy of a successful Canadian trading firm employing 11 people in Montreal and 28 people in Vancouver.

Because of the inability of the Department of Supply and Services to honour a firm contract it made with the transportation contractors for the carriage of aid wheat from west coast Canadian ports to Bangladesh, all because of a bureaucratic entanglement involving the Department of Supply and Services, CIDA, the Canadian Wheat Board and the Department of Justice, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Justice, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the minister responsible for CIDA, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of Supply and Services and, if necessary, the President of the Treasury Board, call an emergency meeting with their officials and out of that meeting give an assurance to Maritime Agencies Ltd. that past due damages in excess of $450,000, and a commitment to Maritime Agencies Ltd. on substantiated costs due to lack of grain being delivered to the port on present contracts, will be forthcoming immediately, in order to prevent an unnecessary bankruptcy with loss of jobs and subsequent action against the Crown by creditors.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF FISH—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES TO ALLEVIATE PROBLEM OF ACID RAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Given the fact that due to environmental pollution, sports fishermen are being warned not to eat the fish they catch out of certain lakes and river systems, that aside from this problem certain lakes and other bodies of water are being stripped of all aquatic life by acid rain, and because of the detrimental effect this will have on the tourist industry of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer):

That this House urge the minister responsible to do all he can in ongoing discussions with American authorities to impress upon them our deep concern in this regard and to urge them most strenuously to take all proper action to avoid the proliferation of this problem.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST PRIORITY GIVEN TO SIGNING INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact the Canadian government is actively negotiating international tax treaties with dozens of countries throughout the world, while the negotiation of social security agreements with many countries flounder for lack of clear government commitment and priority, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky):

That this House urges the government to make the signing of international social security agreements a top priority, in order that Canadian citizens and the parents of Canadian citizens are not prejudiced from being reunited with their families by the lack of such agreements.

INQUIRY THE MINISTRY

FORMER NDP LEADER APPOINTED TO BOARD OF HUSKY OIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, regarding a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Announcements appearing on the financial pages of major Canadian newspapers indicate that the former leader of the socialist New Democratic Party, the Hon. Tommy Douglas, has joined the board of directors of the capitalist Husky Oil company. In view of the fact he has become a "Texas buccaneer" and a "corporate welfare bum", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the words of that popular and well-known union song be amended to read:

GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT IN SALE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL TO JAPAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas Senator Perrault stated that the Canadian government is committed to "massive involvement" in the proposed sale of coal from northeastern British Columbia to Japanese interests, and whereas this coal deal would be one of the biggest sell-outs in Canadian history, this being the first time Canadian taxpayers would be actually subsidizing the export of non-renewable energy resources, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House condemns the government, and Senator Perrault in particular, for assisting the government of British Columbia in this shortsighted policy, and instructs the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works to hold immediate public hearings on the financial implications of the deal.

REQUEST MINISTER CONSULT HAITIAN ASSISTANCE SERVICE TO ASSESS COMPLAINTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the leaders of the Haitian assistance service in Montreal fear that among the approximately 2,000 Haitians who are in Quebec illegally, a few could do something desperate to avoid deportation to their country of origin, the leaders of the assistance service feel that the screening by immigration officers at Dorval and Mirabel amounts to a form of persecution and racism towards those Haitians, following an official request made to the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) for the sake of human dignity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the House unanimously invite the appropriate minister to meet with the leaders of the Haitian assistance service to assess the complaints the leaders have formulated and to make the necessary changes for the good reputation of Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

MEASURES TO PROTECT CANADIANS WITH REGARD TO INCOME TAX

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister of state for social development policy. The minister will know that the inflation rate in Canada is now at about 9.4 per cent. He will also know that yesterday Statistics Canada indicated we were beginning a cyclical downturn and would be experiencing an economic recession in this country. Indeed, it is being said, as the minister is aware, that both the United States and Canada are headed for a double-digit situation in respect of all three fundamental economic areas—unemployment, interest rates and inflation.

In the midst of all that, what gives me great concern—and this relates to my question—and what gives great concern to many Canadians is the announcement by the Minister of Finance that he wishes to de-index income tax rates. The minister for social development policy well knows the devastating effect that de-indexing of income tax will have on low-income Canadians. I would ask the minister whether he has any initiatives at all he would like to bring to bear so that Canadians will continue to have protection with regard to income tax.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think the question asked by the hon. member relates to matters concerning the budget. I do think that the Minister of Finance, when he presents a budget, will be dealing with this problem. The indexing does exist today, and when we have a budget we will know what will happen.

I do not know the intention of the Minister of Finance with regard to these things, but I will take the comments of the hon. member to the minister and when we have a discussion on this I will raise the matter.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance has made quite clear what he intends to do: he wants to consider the question of de-indexing income taxes. My question to this minister relates to his understanding. I know he understands the effect this will have on Canadians: indeed, for those who earn $10,000 a year the effect will be a loss of $156 each year, amounting to $896 over five years, at current rates. This will be money right out of their pockets and it will result in their inability to provide food and clothing.

An hon. Member: What is the question?

Mr. Crombie: That is my concern. The reason I ask the question of the minister is the fact that this would mean—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The first question was rather long and I accepted it, but the hon. member's second question must be shorter.

Mr. Crombie: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question is simply this: what initiatives will the minister be taking this session to deal with the economic circumstances in which Canadians will find themselves over the next six months—a situation which Statistics Canada has indicated we are beginning to experience already?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, first I must say that the first part of the question is purely hypothetical. A possible budgetary change is under discussion and I am unable to comment on it before the Minister of Finance makes a decision in that area.

About the economic policy in general, the second part of the question, the Minister of Finance dealt with that subject yesterday and I have nothing to add to what he has already told the House.

● (1420)

[English]

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance will be requesting, I am sure, the view of the Minister of Social Development. Will the minister give this House the assurance that he will maintain the protection which Canadians of moderate means now have, and not support any move to de-index income tax rates which will have that kind of effect on low-income Canadians?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House have always been anxious to maintain for Canadians a tax system which is as fair as possible. This concern has been with the government for a great many years past and will remain so for a great many years to come. After the budget has been made public, the hon. member will be able to pass judgment.

EMPLOYMENT

POLICY TO ALLEVIATE HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUTH

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am concerned, as are my colleagues, about the latest statistics which show that 431,000 young people under the age of 25 are out of work. This amounts to 44 per cent of all those people unemployed in Canada.

What is the minister doing specifically to alleviate this national disgrace? What policy course, if any, is he following in that obviously uncaring government which thinks it is safely ensconced over there for four years?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member raises a concern which we all share. I do not think any party in this House has shown more concern over the years than we have for the problems of young people.

As the hon. member will know, we have had an opportunity to discuss this matter at some length in Parliament over the past three weeks. The government has announced a number of special measures which are designed to bring young people into the marketplace and to give them the skills and training they need in order to provide them with proper employment.

At the same time, the government has also introduced a major summer employment program. The figures referred to by the hon. member do not take into account this program, because it is just now coming into effect. We cannot solve all the problems of young people through direct government intervention; we must rely upon the workings of the private sector. However, this matter is a major priority of the government and it will continue to be a major priority.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, all the plans and all the programs which the government has brought into effect are strictly of a band-aid nature. Is the minister actively urging the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to get on with the program of self-sufficiency in energy in this country so that we can create permanent jobs for our young people in all provinces of Canada with our money, instead of creating jobs in Mexico, Venezuela, Saudi Arabia and Iraq?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to report to the hon. member that I spent a full day yesterday meeting with representatives of the oil industry in the province of Alberta. We discussed the kind of employment prospects which we will be developing in that province, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. The assessment which was made was that there would be a substantial demand for new employment, and that one of the things we must do now is work out co-operative measures between the industry, provincial governments and our government to make sure that we are able to provide the skilled labour which will be in substantial demand.

Those commitments and those plans are already in progress and the capital investments are already proceeding with a great deal of effectiveness.

NATURAL RESOURCES

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON OWNERSHIP OF CANADIAN RESOURCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. He will remember that in 1974 he made a commitment on the question of ownership of Canadian resources. He said:

—that major new projects in the natural resources field should have at least 50 per cent and preferably 60 per cent Canadian equity ownership.

Almost two years ago today I asked him if the government stood by that policy, and his answer was yes. During the recent election campaign the Prime Minister took a similar approach. I should like to ask him today if that is still goverment policy.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, this is still our objective. I had occasion the last time I answered the question, and again during the election campaign, to indicate what we had done and would continue to do, particularly in the matter of energy resources.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the commitment was not for a future objective. In 1974, in Sault Ste Marie, the Prime Minister said that all future development projects would have "50 per cent and preferably 60 per cent Canadian equity ownership". That is a commitment that applies the next day—to all future projects.

In this light, since the government said it was going to do that, how can the Prime Minister justify the present position it is taking on what is probably the most important energy development project in Canadian history, namely, the development of tar sands in which the Alsands project will be 80 per cent foreign-owned, and the Cold Lake project which will be 100 per cent foreign-owned?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I disagree with the hon. member when he suggests that "future" means tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Does it mean yesterday?

Mr. Trudeau: Even the members of the NDP have often argued that for them the future was some way in the distance, not necessarily tomorrow. That is the reality. I indicated the intention of the government to work in this direction. I have pointed out many times with statistics that we had in the past decade reduced the level of foreign ownership in the petroleum area from something like 90 per cent to 70 per cent. We want to continue to work in that direction.

The Canadian government's investment in the oil sands project, of something under $1 million, is an attempt to increase Canadian ownership. I never thought that overnight we could turn massive foreign ownership in petroleum, of the order of some 90 per cent, to 60 per cent. The hon. member suggests we try it. The way to do that would either be to expropriate without compensation, which is not the approach of this government, or to massively borrow to buy out the foreign investment. The House knows that at this time we do not want to increase the debt to that extent.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is confusing two points, although at this point I will say perhaps not deliberately. I should like clarification. The commitment that was made in 1974 was that all future projects be at least 50 per cent Canadian control—not that in the immediate future all the industry would be 50 to 60 per cent Canadian controlled.

Therefore, if the commitment was for all future projects to be 50 to 60 per cent Canadian controlled, I should like to repeat the point about the development of the tar sands: why is the Government of Canada now selling out our future energy resources is this key field, particularly when we have Petro-Canada that could be doing the job for us?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, Petro-Canada could only do that job if it had the resources to do the job. The federal government has increased those resources considerably over the past two or three years. It has permitted Petro-Canada to buy into one of the major foreign nationals, and to place Petro-Canada and Canadian shareholders now amongst the top ten, which was not the case before Petro-Canada.

What I am saying is that for Petro-Canada to do the job which might be desirable and which, hopefully, will take place in the future, of increasing Canadian ownership even further, it would need billions of dollars more to be put in its hands through the Canadian taxpayer.

An hon. Member: Go to the capital market.

Mr. Trudeau: That means increasing massively our borrowing, and at this particular time the government has judged—

An hon. Member: It is a good investment.

● (1430)

Mr. Trudeau: I can understand—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Double-tracking first!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I think this is turning into a debate. If hon. members want to ask supplementary questions, I will attempt to answer them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO ASSIST HOME OWNERS—POLICY ON MORTGAGE TAX CREDIT

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, may I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance? Four months ago today, the public of Canada elected this government and we have been looking forward to the announcement of policies for stimulating the economy, to create jobs, to provide aid to alleviate cost of living problems besetting wage earners and to provide help to home owners faced with the loss of homes as a result of high mortgage rates.

We wanted to know what this government could contribute to the renewed health of this rich but bureaucratically-strangled nation. What we did not want was the formal announcement by the Minister of Finance, yesterday, of a recession for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member going to put his question now?

Mr. Gilchrist: Will the Prime Minister now admit that the Conservative plan to help home owners and prospective home owners by a mortgage tax credit was the kind of action needed, and will he respond positively—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Gilchrist: —to the Ontario government's offer of $500, matched by a federal $500 to mortgage holders hard-pressed to keep their homes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is suggesting that the government should stimulate the economy. Through hearing the Minister of Finance yesterday, I would remind the House that in this very year the government is stimulating the economy to the extent of a $14 billion deficit. That is stimulus indeed.

EMPLOYMENT

PROGRAMS TO REDUCE HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Statistics Canada tell us today that unemployment is 7.8 per cent. Perhaps a more human way of saying that is that about 900,000 of our fellow Canadians are looking for work, without success. I think it is the highest rate in the industrialized western world.

My question is this: how will the minister's $137 million plan seriously help Canadians looking for work in this fiscal year? If it will not help, what plans does the minister have to change the proposed plan?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, to begin with, the unemployment rate, which gives us all a good deal of concern, is not one that is solely an experience of this country. It is something that is affecting all industrialized countries, because we are dealing with the same conditions such as inflationary prices of oil and energy around the world. Downturns in economic growth are being faced by every country. I would point out to the hon. member that in the last report in the United States the unemployment rate exceeded substantially the rate we are experiencing in Canada, and we are obviously affected by that.

As far as how our programs will affect the situation, the programs speak for themselves. Those employment-creation programs announced June 2 are designed to try to provide job opportunities for tens of thousands of Canadians who will be entering the workplace this summer and fall. The program is being targeted particularly on those who have most difficulty in the workplace. We are using our scarce resources to help those most in need. That is a commitment of this government.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, the minister said in a press conference on April 24:

> I believe that, as far as possible, employment programs should do more than just create employment. They should also seek to further other government objectives.

In light of the changing scene in the economy, would the minister now tell us what other government objectives he had in mind?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, that statement referred to the fact that we wanted to use our employment programs to help other objectives such as energy conservation, the promotion of additional research and development, the promotion of better access to the workplace for women and native people. Again, the programs that we put forward and announced are designed to do exactly that.

The new technology program will provide work opportunities in areas of research and development. The additional training programs for native people will open up access. The incentive wage subsidy for women to move into the non-traditional work roles is designed to fulfil the general and social economic conditions of the government, and at the same time to provide a general basis for employment within the public sector.

FUNDING OF EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS FOR WOMEN

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given the fact that 400,000 of the 900,000 unemployed are women, and given the statement made by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women this month in which it was indicated that only 33 per cent of the full-time trainees in the government's institutional programs, and 29 per cent among other industrial trainees and only 3 per cent of the apprenticeship training opportunities were given to women, what steps if any does the minister intend to take to provide a better balance in the funding of the recently announced employment strategy which is soon to be debated as a result of the occupational training guide?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North, I would remind him that the employment package that we announced does include an experimental program to provide incentives to employers to bring women into the non-traditional fields. As I announced in the House, if that program turns out to be a success, then we would add substantial funds to it. But we want to test out that particular formula to see if it does provide the incentive that is required. At the same time, we introduced the community services program which is designed to provide support services in the community field. Again, this will enable more women to come into the work force.

Finally, as we said in the throne speech, we intend to take action in the area of Affirmative Action programs to provide for a lowering of barriers that now face women as they try to get into the workplace. This lowering of barriers will give them more equal opportunity. We are trying to move on several fronts. I met with the Advisory Council to explain those programs. There was a very good discussion and I received a good hearing from the council on these programs.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, in the same statement the council indicates that many women are unable to participate in training courses because of the inadequate dependant care allowances for trainees: this is $10 per week per child. Is the minister giving consideration to increasing that allowance so women can participate in the training programs in the same way as men?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we have established a major procedure of review to look at the entire spectrum of employment and training programs. Certainly, one of our major objectives in that review will be to examine how we can improve our training programs, particularly in the industrial area. That also includes the provision of better support services so that women and minority groups can come into the work force in a more open and accessible fashion.

We have indicated that that review will take a matter of three or four months. Hopefully, at the end of this year or the beginning of next we will be able to present a white paper to Parliament to explain these programs. It will be something on which we can then base an entire package of programs, rather than taking ad hoc, piecemeal measures.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY WHETHER AIRCRAFT WILL CONTINUE TO BE MAINTAINED AT DORVAL

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. During yesterday's meeting of the transport committee, I pointed out to him a decision reported to have been made by Air Canada to build at Malton airport a hangar which would be used for the maintenance of Air Canada's new fleet of aircraft. It is a well known fact that the maintenance of Air Canada aircraft is being carried out at Dorval airport. Could the minister assure us that Montreal employees in general and in particular those in Dorval will not be affected by the future changes contemplated by Air Canada.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, following the very relevant question which the hon. member for Gamelin put to me yesterday in the House, this morning I contacted Air Canada officials who confirmed that the Dorval facilities will be expanded. The maintenance of the DC-8s and DC-9s will continue to be carried out there. The maintenance of the L-1011s which will be put in operation next February will also be carried out there. Such will be the case of the Boeing 767s in 1982. The number of jobs at Dorval keeps on increasing. From July 1979 to date, some 542 people have been hired and 75 more are likely to be hired before the end of the year. Moreover, I am pleased to report that similar increases at Winnipeg and Malton airports will meet other needs.

STATUS OF WOMEN

WOMEN'S TRAINING PROGRAMS—CRITICISMS BY ADVISORY COUNCIL

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is also the minister responsible for the status of women. I wish to pursue the questioning which has just taken place and press the minister in terms of last Wednesday's with meeting the Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

While the meeting was a friendly one, the council was very critical of the minister's programs for women's training, especially as they failed to meet the needs of older women and women with children, stating that these two groups were virtually ignored. I wonder if the minister has had time to reflect on these specific criticisms, and in light of today's government announcement that the depression is upon us, what specific direction will he take in the programs that he has indicated he will be announcing to assist older women and women with children?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am not sure what announcement the hon. member is referring to, but I can tell him that as a result of the discussions we had with the Advisory Council we have, as part of the review procedure, established a very specific group to look at the problems raised relating to women's needs, particularly those of older women.

As I indicated to the Advisory Council at the time, it is my intention to try not to bring in single, individual programs to respond to those issues but, in order to provide for a proper comprehension of the entire employment needs of women, to establish a comprehensive program. It would be much better to do it jointly, rather than in an ad hoc way. That will be part of our plan in this review procedure so that Parliament will be able to consider by next fall.

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, the minister will know that the Advisory Council was addressing the minister's employment strategy which was introduced in this House, and they were making specific comments on its failure to meet these two areas—older women and women with children. Their comments were that it will do little more than any earlier programs and strategies.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must remind hon. members that, especially on second questions, their questions must be brief and as much as possible supplementary.

Mr. McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question is: will the minister accept the council's recommendation that minimum participation rates for women be established before the initiation of any employment programs? Will he introduce quotas?

Mr. Axworthy: No, Madam Speaker, I will not introduce quotas. That is not the way to proceed. The best way to proceed is to provide guidelines for the counselling, employment and training of women. Once you begin setting quotas, you begin a system of reverse discrimination. What we must do in these types of programs is establish the kind of opportunities that are not there presently.

As I indicated to the Advisory Council—and the hon. member was at the meeting—the community services program that we established is designed to do exactly what they recommend, that is, to provide for additional support in the child care area and provide for opportunities for older women to come into the work force for the first time. If the program works as we think it will and as it is designed to do, we will then be able to expand the program and build upon it. However, these programs are introduced in order to test certain ideas. Once those ideas are confirmed, we will be able to build upon them.

HOUSING

ASSISTANCE IN RENTAL SECTOR

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister of housing. Figures the minister released yesterday show that effectively private sector rental housing starts ground to a stop in Canada and we now have vacancy rates below 1 per cent in some of our major centres. The minister yesterday indicated that his response to that problem would be to increase the non-profit and co-op program by 5,000 units for approval this year.

Can the minister tell this House whether that is the entire program of the federal government for this year to help the rental housing sector, when rates are as low as they are?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as hit upon by a number of people today, the response of this government is to achieve a number of things with our very limited budget in view of the large deficit. Our answer to the problem of areas of tight rental markets is to target our response to those particular areas.

We well appreciate that in a number of areas across the country the situation is quite tight. We feel, with some confidence, that with the input of all members of this House and the officials of the corporation, the response of the 5,000 units tailored to those areas which are particularly tight—and I know this from representations made from the opposite side—should be and would be a welcome relief to a number of communities. We think it is a modest relief, but such that it will indeed be welcome in many areas.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, I well remember the minister in the previous incarnation commenting upon speeches like that as being inadequate. May I direct the following supplementary to the minister. Will the minister now face one small fact about a mortgage deductibility scheme, that is, that what it does do above all else is encourage those tenants who wish to own to move out of apartments and own them? Will he face the fact that such a scheme would go much further to creating an increase in vacancies in rental housing in this country than an additional drop in the bucket of 5,000 units approved by his ministry?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Madam Speaker, I would not agree with that proposition. Nor do I agree that the problem he has identified is a priority that is shared by most Canadians. This government said in the election campaign that we would target our response to those most in need. For example, the other program announced yesterday was directed to people of moderate income who had to rehabilitate their homes. It was to assist them in their home ownership, but in conditions that made living worth while. That is why we announced an increase in the eligibility of those people who would qualify to take government grants to rehabilitate homes, and thus to assist with employment in the housing industry.

CONVENTION CENTRES

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IN DEVELOPMENT OF TORONTO CENTRE

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As one of the representatives of metropolitan Toronto, I was delighted to hear the minister's announcement of financial assistance to the development of the convention centre in that city. However, the provincial minister of industry and tourism responded to the announcement by stating his preference for the assistance program offered by the Clark government. Will the minister comment on any differences which might exist between this offer and that of his predecessor?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As far as I am aware, Madam Speaker, the commitment made to the Toronto trade and convention centre, and therefore to the greater well-being of metropolitan Toronto, is certainly not any less than the contribution spoken of by the previous Conservative government. Therefore, rather than sniping at our constructive announcements, the province of Ontario, through its industry minister, should come forward and put its commitments on the line so that this work can go ahead.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, unlike the previous questioner, I have an unplanted question for the Minister of State for Social Development. In view of the dire economic forecasts for the country in the coming year from Statistics Canada and other bodies like the Conference Board, and in view of the fact that in times of recession, spending on environmental matters tends to be among the first to be reduced by successive Liberal governments, will the minister assure the House that the federal government will allocate the funds required to confront the serious environmental problems plaguing all Canadians?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I think the question was addressed to the Minister of State for Social Development. As the minister responsible for the environment, I want to assure the hon. member—as I explained to him both in committees of the House and in private—this government is determined to meet the needs of the country in relation to the environment. We are seeking a variety of ways of strengthening our efforts in that area.

INDUSTRY

REASON FIRA APPROVED TAKEOVER OF AUTO PARTS OPERATION IN OSHAWA

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Houdaille Industries Ltd. recently announced its intention to close its Canadian auto parts operation in Oshawa, laying off 283 workers, many with over 30 years' experience. This company received a three-quarter million dollar Industry, Trade and Commerce grant and has been recently purchased by a U.S. corporation which was approved by the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

Will the minister please inquire as to why the Foreign Investment Review Agency approved this takeover, when only months later the entire Canadian operation was closed down despite its being one of the most modern, efficient plants in North America?

• (1450)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I have already asked for a full report from the Foreign Investment Review Agency about the undertakings obtained as a result of approving the takeover and the implications for these undertakings of this announcement.

In addition, I met yesterday with representatives of the workers at Houdaille Industries, and I am meeting this afternoon with representatives of the company to see what can be done to enable this plant to continue operating.

Mr. Parker: Madam Speaker, Canada has a $4 billion deficit in auto parts. General Motors Oshawa operation imports its steel and aluminum bumpers from the United States, while just down the street Houdaille is about to close down.

Will the minister call in the executives of General Motors and demand to know why this preference is being given to foreign suppliers, when Houdaille makes superior bumpers just around the corner?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, I understand that Houdaille Industries has been making a larger bumper of a kind not being used by General Motors, but I have already instructed my staff to be in touch with the purchasing executives of General Motors to pursue this very question.

ENERGY

FEDERAL FUNDS FOR DEVELOPMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA COALFIELDS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last night, in the other place, the B.C. representative in cabinet admitted that, contrary to the perception of our colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, little or no federal government funds will be advanced for the development of B.C. northeast coalfields on terms acceptable to the B.C. government.

Since the government of B.C. has decided to finance the construction of the $300 million railway spur with revenue from natural gas exports, could the Prime Minister assure the House that Ottawa will not seek to preempt this revenue source and thus jeopardize thousands of new jobs in B.C.?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the contribution of the federal government to the development of the northeast coal area of British Columbia is going to be in the form mainly of—

Mr. Clark: Talk.

Mr. Pepin: —taking the responsibility for the through-put rate at the port of Prince Rupert. In order to do that, the federal government will construct the facilities at a price which will be close to $35 million. The federal government has also given a fixed rate to the companies so that they will be in a position to negotiate with the Japanese instantaneously.

There will be another indirect federal contribution in the sense that CN will have to improve the quality of the main line in order to make transportation possible, which is going to be an important investment for CN.

OIL PRICING FORMULA FOR ALL OF CANADA

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is at a meeting today presumably hammering out an oil pricing formula for all Canadians. The previous pricing mechanism in Canada made it possible for certain parts of Canada to get oil at one price, whereas many northerners were paying double the price paid in eastern Canada where oil is being subsidized.

I can give the Prime Minister an example. At Wollaston Lake, in Saskatchewan, the price is 30 cents per litre, compared with 16.5 cents in Montreal and Ottawa. In gallons, that is 75 cents in Ottawa and Montreal, compared with $1.36. I wonder whether the Prime Minister can tell me whether in any formula which will evolve from these discussions northerners will be taken into consideration so that they, too, will benefit from any subsidizing program, averaging program, blending program or whatever program evolves, and whether they will get oil at the same price as the rest of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. member is asking a question which is indeed important in terms of the higher cost of living to be borne by people in parts of the country other than the more populated parts of Canada. That is a question which has interested all governments.

There are special arrangements, but we do not expect that every commodity in every part of the country would be sold at the same price, whether it be gasoline at the pump, bread, wheat or anything else. There is always the cost of transportation which makes a difference, and that applies to petroleum and every other commodity in Canada.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR PARTIAL PAYMENT FROM WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAM TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the present and pending unemployment in automobile and truck factories and machinery factories in eastern Canada, would the minister consider making a partial payment from the western grain stabilization plan soon this summer, to help alleviate this unemployment problem in the east and so that we in the west can get enough money from the program from last year to help these fellows get back to work?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I will consider the hon. member's recommendation and discuss it with my colleagues who are also involved with the program.

TRANSPORT

VANCOUVER HARBOUR—FUNDS TO MAINTAIN FIREBOAT SERVICE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I am sure the minister has heard of the motion moved last week under Standing Order 43 concerning the Vancouver fireboat situation.

I want to ask the minister if he is aware that the fireboat service will be cut off at the end of this year unless funds additional to those provided by the city of Vancouver are found. Is it the intention of the government to provide funds for the fireboat in the Vancouver harbour? If not, how will the minister see to the protection of federal government assets which are located in the port of Vancouver?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the position of the National Harbours Board, which is the party involved in this debate, is that the municipality must provide these services. The National Harbours Board pays grants in lieu of taxes for that purpose, among others. This view is shared by a great number of people at the port of Vancouver, so we stand on that as being reasonable.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

HEALTH HAZARDS IN CERTAIN CHEMICALS AND PESTICIDES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In a letter written on January 25, 1980, the chairman of the Federal Committee on Pesticides stated, and I quote: "The validity of all studies carried out by Industrial Biotest Laboratories of Northbrook, Illinois, remains in doubt". He further stated that "government officials found serious problems which were not identified or reported."

In light of the fact that over 90 chemicals and pesticides tested by this company are now in common use across the country, and in light of the fact that these materials may pose a serious threat to the health of Canadians, would the minister explain, after three years of study, what the defects in these chemicals and pesticides are and what are the health hazards; and is she prepared to make public the list of the chemicals involved and their particular health hazards?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I take for granted that the House will permit me to use written notes to make sure I give precise information on this very complex subject. Incidentally, I am also preparing a press release—I am working on it today—to inform the public on the state of the matter.

The situation is partly as the hon. member said, namely, that many pesticides, about 100, were tested for safety both by us and by Americans in a laboratory called Industrial Biotest Laboratories, and the tests were judged invalid. The job of validating all the tests is very long and I must inform hon. members that to complete the job will take another four years.

We have already found that eight of the 100 pesticides have been assessed as free of further concerns. The information presented to me as Minister of National Health and Welfare is such right now that I have no evidence today, based on all the work done—but incomplete—of serious negative effects on people. It is quite a complicated situation for a minister to make a decision on as to recommending to my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, a ban or no ban at this point in time on these pesticides. I will give further information in the form of a press release to everybody in Canada. I think that is the best channel we have. Then we can continue the discussion.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

DE-INDEXING OF INCOME TAX—EFFECT ON LOW-INCOME CANADIANS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, a moment ago the Minister of Employment and Immigration stated that the government's goal was to use "its scarce revenues to help those most in need." I wonder if the minister will tell the House of Commons how that goal is advanced by a proposal to de-index the personal income tax.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would suggest that the Leader of the Opposition has already had more than a complete answer from other ministers of the Crown to exactly the same question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: My supplementary question is to the Minister of State for Social Develoment. We have now been told by the Minister of Finance that he might, or might not, introduce—but he is at least seriously considering—de-indexation of the personal income tax system, which would increase taxes for Canadians earning $10,000 a year by 180 per cent over five years.

The Minister of State for Social Development says he has not been consulted on this matter, that it is of no concern to him. Obviously it is of concern to him. My question to the minister is this. Since the Minister of Finance has indicated that he is considering a proposal which would increase by 180 per cent personal income taxes by Canadians in the lowest taxable bracket in the country, is the Minister of State for Social Development now making contingency plans which would help those Canadians whom the Minister of Finance proposes to hurt, and will the Minister of State for Social Development tell the House of Commons, either now or on motions this week, what the contingency plans are?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I said in a previous answer that this matter is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition will get an answer to his question on the evening of the budget speech. He should wait until then.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MACKAY—RESPONSIBILITY FOR CALURA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I rise on a brief point of order. I would be grateful if the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais), or the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), would clear up what appears to be an ambiguity. That is to say, we have two part-time ministers responsible for Statistics Canada, and also for the federal government's economic and industrial statistics. The order in council to which I am referring is dated June 13, 1980, and it refers to the responsibility of the Minister of Supply and Services and also designates him to have responsibilities under the Financial Administration Act. But, as the House knows, a very important part of Statistics Canada is the tabulation of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, known as CALURA. It appears that the Minister of Supply and Services who is responsible for Statistics Canada has his authority under the Statistics Act, but there is some question in my mind, and perhaps in the minds of other members, as to who is responsible for CALURA reports.

I am wondering whether the House leader, the President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Supply and Services, or someone, could enlighten the House, myself in particular, as to who is officially responsible for CALURA. Does anyone know?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the authorization that I have received includes responsibility for CALURA.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KORCHINSKI—RECOGNITION DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege. It is with the deepest regret that I have to rise in my place concerning my inability to pose a supplementary question. Your Honour knows that last week my office telephoned your office with the intention of notifying you that I had a question which I wanted to pose. I have waited for four days, rising like a yoyo in my seat, and finally I was informed that I was on some sort of a preferred list. I did not realize that there were different categories of members in the House, that there was a first level, second level, or a third level of members.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Korchinski: The point is that I have a very serious question to pose which I consider must be taken up on behalf of my constituents. My constituents have no one else to go to but, rightly or wrongly, they chose me. They chose me for 22 years, not because I sat in my seat not being able to pose a question, but because I did work.

Perhaps there is some sort of a working arrangement between I do not know who and the Chair. If that is the case, then I would like to know why it is that a senior member cannot rise in his place and be given equal time to that given to another member who is allowed to pose supplementary questions. It does not matter whether they are on the front benches or in a circular firing squad, whatever it is, the point is that as a member I represent 50,000 or 60,000 people and occasionally I have a question to ask of a minister.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Korchinski: On another occasion I rose to ask a question and I was recognized, but again only for one question. I sat patiently. I went through this all through the last session. I was only allowed a few questions. I went to see the previous speaker on two occasions in his office and I wondered what was going on, what was wrong with the way my questions were phrased, or why it was that the representative of Mackenzie was not allowed to be heard.

I sat here patiently, hoping I would not have to bring this matter up publicly. I regret, Madam Speaker, having to rise now but I do not intend to sit here for four years waiting for somebody to pull a string. I am not in the habit of being a puppet, and I do not intend to be that at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The time has come for me to lay down some of the facts, and I do have the facts because I keep very careful statistics of how many backbenchers I recognize, how many frontbenchers, how many members of the Conservative party, of the NDP, and of the Liberals. I study them every day because, the next day, if something had happened to create some sort of imbalance, I want to correct it immediately. As I said before, I apply instant justice in the House, and instant justice sometimes has to be revised. If I find that the balance has been tilted to one side or the other, I try to correct it immediately the next day. Thus, I have before me every morning the statistics of the question period of the day before, and they make a mockery of statements that have been made to the effect that backbenchers are not recognized because I do not know their names. For your information, I know all your names now and all your constituencies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) said that he has risen like a yoyo for three or four days, but I have to tell him that he is not the only one.

I do feel sorry for those who have to rise constantly but do not manage to get on the list which I make. Therefore, the hon. member must be patient because every member in the House wants to be recognized on questions of national interest, or even questions concerning his constituency. I try to be fair, and I could bring out the statistics regarding the hon. member so as to find out whether he has been recognized less than the others. But I do not think so.

Today I did not allow the hon. member a supplementary question, but there again he was not singled out. I did warn hon. members the other day that perhaps one way of allowing more hon. members to be recognized during the question period would be at some time, at the end of the question period, to stop allowing supplementaries. That is what I have done today, and the result was that more members were able to put their questions during the question period.

I have to study what is the meaning of supplementary. I do not think all the supplementaries put are supplementary to the first question asked. I will look into that matter as I go on learning my job to see whether or not I should allow questions that are not really supplementary. Perhaps that will also give more hon. members a chance to ask questions during the question period.

So that is my policy. Perhaps it is not perfect every day, but I do try to correct it as I go along.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. SCOTT (VICTORIA-HALIBURTON)—BLOOD DONOR CLINIC CONGRATULATIONS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, I rise with great pride in my heart, and I think you will share this feeling with me and other members of the House in this question of privilege. I would have liked to have put it in a motion under Standing Order 43. Last week when the House of Commons staff on Parliament Hill held a blood donor's clinic, a record high was reached, and probably that was a result of arrangements made by you, Madam Speaker, by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and also by Sergeant Bob Davis of our security staff.

Last week there were 333 donors who gave blood at the blood donor's clinic, of whom 172 were new donors. People are very proud of this, I am very proud of this, and I am sure we all share in it. Perhaps I shouldn't take this time of the House, but I should like to congratulate those people responsible for taking time out to give blood so that others may live. Also I want to thank those people who were involved in the organization of the clinic as well.

● (1510)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Of course this is not a question of privilege, but it is a marvellous thing to have on our record. I am sure we want to congratulate all those people who have given of their blood.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I also extend my congratulations as Minister of National Health for the outstanding work done in connection with the blood clinic. Madam Speaker, it may have looked like I misinformed the House earlier.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

HEALTH HAZARDS IN CERTAIN CHEMICALS AND PESTICIDES

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): On the question of pesticides, because of its particular importance to the health of Canadians, I should like to explain that 12 more months are required to finish assessing the studies produced by the American laboratory I named in my answer. Separate from that, another four years are needed to cope with the studies for which the data will have been judged invalid. I want to put the whole question in the proper perspective.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PHYSICAL HANDICAPS AND HEALTH

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-603, to amend the Public Service Employment Act (discrimination as to age or physical handicap or health).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Herbert: Madam Speaker, a sub-objective of the Public Service Commission is to ensure that physically and mentally handicapped persons are given effective equality of opportunity to compete for positions in the public service.

The purpose of this bill is to incorporate in the Public Service Act, as an example to the private sector, the grounds of physical handicap and health under which the Public Service Commission shall not discriminate in prescribing selection standards.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 197—Mr. Herbert:

1. For each fiscal year (a) 1977 (b) 1978, what was the total revenue and net earnings or deficits for the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

2. For each year, what was the total (a) of direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits conferred by the government on the corporation (b) of loans, advances or guarantees extended by the government to the corporation (c) investment by the government in the corporation both before and after any write-off?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I am informed by the Cape Breton Development Corporation that the response is as follows:

		Year Ending March 31, 1978		Year Ending March 31, 1979
		Coal Division	Industrial Development Division	Coal Division	Industrial Development Division
		$	$	$	$
1.	Total Revenue	87,941,249	4,004,769	119,831,985	4,466,136

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—POSSIBLE LOSS OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Question No. 268—Mr. Herbert:

Will a unilingual French-speaking spouse of a Department of Veterans Affairs employee who moves to Prince Edward Island lose any unemployment insurance benefits because of the inability of that person to speak the English language?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): A claimant does not lose the right to unemployment insurance benefit by the mere fact of not speaking the language of the majority of the population in the area where he or she resides. What has to be determined is the person's availability, taking into account all the factors affecting it, including local labour market conditions. For example, a unilingual French person could quite conceivably work in an English-speaking environment, if the work required little or no knowledge of English.

It is the guiding principle that is at issue here. Each case must be studied separately, in the light of the facts, by the local benefit entitlement officers.

For each year, what was the total (a) of direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits conferred by the government on the corporation (b) of loans, advances or guarantees extended by the government to the corporation (c) investment by the government in the corporation both before and after any write-off?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. In response to questions 383-389 and question 401 concerning the Canada Development Corporation and its subsidiaries, it should be noted that the Canada Development Corporation is a private sector corporation in which the Government of Canada, along with some 18,000 other shareholders, holds an equity interest. Canada Development Corporation is neither a crown corporation nor an agent of Her Majesty. The government does not have any official knowledge of the corporation or its subsidiaries not available to the public. To assist the hon. member, the 1978 Annual Report of the Corporation, which is obtainable from the secretary of the company, Suite 2272, 200 Granville Street, Vancouver, B.C. V6C 1S4 shows results for the subsidiaries as follows:

	Year ended December 31

2. Information concerning (a) direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits conferred by the government on any of these legal entities; (b) loans, advances or guarantees extended by the government to these companies; and (c) investment by the government in these companies is published in the Public Accounts of Canada and is equally accessible to the hon. member.

ANNUITIES BRANCH

Question No. 730—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Can government annuities be purchased from the government and, if not, will the annuities branch be wound down and, if so, how long before this can be done?

2. How many employees are employed in the annuities branch?

3. Is the government contemplating paying to annuitants an interest rate equal to the interest rate presently paid on Canada Savings Bonds and, if not, for what reason?

4. Does the report of the annuities branch relate to the recruiting and the training of staff and, if so, for what reason, if the service will eventually no longer exist?

5. Is the annuities branch being moved to Bathurst, New Brunswick and, if so, for what reason, if the branch will eventually disappear?

6. What is the total cost of administering the annuities branch including salaries paid to those doing the administrative work?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Canadian government annuities are no longer being sold. As indicated in the annual report for 1978-79, however, the annuities branch is still administering the contracts of some 115,200 persons now receiving payments; additionally, some 102,980 certificates under group pension plans are still to come under payment to participants in those plans; and a further 38,369 individual annuity contracts are yet to mature. On this basis, it is estimated that the branch's workload will increase until the early 1990s. The last deferred annuity may go into payment as late as 2035. There is therefore no intention to 'wind down' the branch at the present time.

2. At 31 March 1980 the branch had 114 employees in Ottawa and 64 employees in Bathurst, or a total of 178. The number employed is somewhat higher than usual, because of the overlap necessary to maintain continuity of operations as the Bathurst staff is built up and the Ottawa staff is run down. The 1981-82 level should be 109, almost wholly in Bathurst.

3. In the autumn of 1979, a review of the interest rate situation as it affected the annuities program was undertaken by the officials responsible in the departments concerned, to see if the rate of interest paid in the administration of annuities contracts should be altered under the provisions of subsection 3(2) of the Government Annuities Improvement Act of 1975. The review is now complete, and it has been decided that no change in the interest rate paid in respect of these contracts will be made at this time. The review involved extensive interdepartmental consultations. The government regards government annuities as but one of a broad range of fixed contractual obligations into which it has entered. To grant special concessions at this time to the holders of government annuities, financed from general revenue, would raise questions of equity vis-à-vis other investors who have been equally affected by rising interest rates. The present situation is not to be compared with that which prevailed in 1975, when the rate was raised to 7 per cent. The 1975 initiative should be seen as the correction of a completely anomalous situation which had developed over many years, and not as the first in a series of periodic adjustments to correct the adverse effects of fluctuations in interest rates. In fact, in the entire period from 1908 to 1975, annuitants were bound by the rates prevailing at the time they contracted with the government, some rates being as low as 3 per cent, and this despite the sharp increase in rates in the 1960s. To undertake a continuing series of adjustments would offer holders of government annuities privileges, financed from taxpayers' moneys, which are not available to those who have invested in other comparable financial instruments. Such a policy would call into question the binding nature of contractual arrangements of the federal government and, if broadly extended, could ultimately lead to serious disruptions in capital markets.

4. Since (as explained in (1)) the operations of the branch must continue for many years to come, replacement of employees who leave must also continue. The relocation, to Bathurst has, moreover, required considerable restaffing and retraining of the branch, since no Ottawa employee has elected to move to Bathurst.

5. Yes. The relocation is part of the general program of decentralization of selected units of the public service from Ottawa. As explained in (1), the branch will continue to exist for many years.

6. Administrative expenses for the fiscal year ending on 31 March 1979, were: $3,062,536. This figure reflects certain one-time expenses incurred in connection with the move to Bathurst. The corresponding 1977/78 figure, of $2,481,940, probably more nearly represents a normal year for the branch.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—STUDIES RELATED TO MARIJUANA

Question No. 818—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1975, what amount was spent on studies related to marijuana by the Post Office Department?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): None.

CFB GAGETOWN—PMQ UNITS

Question No. 895—Mr. Howie:

On January 1 (a) 1979 (b) 1980, how many PMQ units at CFB Gagetown were (i) unoccupied (ii) occupied by non-military personnel or their dependents?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence):

(a) (i) 480

(ii) 116.

(b) (i) 550

(ii) 112.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion for the production of papers No. 5?

AUTOMOTIVE AGREEMENT

Motion No. 5—Mr. Herbert:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all orders in council since 1965 relative to the remission of duties under the Automotive Agreement.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the documents requested by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) are very voluminous and would require a lot of time and a lot of public funds to prepare. So I would ask the hon. member for Vaudreuil to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, I would ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Collenette: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the other notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-3, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Madam Speaker, in introducing Bill C-3, first I should like to point out that this bill is not an ambition to change in any substantial way the major direction of the unemployment insurance program. Basically it is designed to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act in two very simple ways to respond to some very immediate problems. The first provision is to extend the variable entrance requirements for a further 18 months, and the second provision is to alter the funding arrangements under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I recognize that the question of unemployment insurance is one that has occupied a great deal of time in the House over the years. If we took a measurement, I suspect we would find that there is no area of public policy which has occupied more time in Hansard than that particular issue.

● (1520)

I think it is important that we do consider the relevancy and the importance of unemployment insurance as it applies to the changing employment conditions in this country as they will take place in the 1980s. As we have indicated previously in this House, we do intend to make a full review of the unemployment insurance program, a review which was started under both my predecessors, the hon. Mr. Cullen and the Hon. R. Atkey. We hope to complete that process by this fall so a paper can be presented to Parliament for consideration.

I would suggest to hon. members that they will have more than a full opportunity to discuss the many concerns they will have relating to the application of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and to present their cases, when the white paper, the green paper, the orange paper, whichever colour it happens to be, is presented to Parliament.

What we have in this bill does not represent major changes in policy, but very necessary and expedient alterations in order to maintain the continuity of the present act. Perhaps the one thing that is most important to members, and the one that we should spend some time on, retracing the history of it, is the proposal to refinance the benefit portions of the unemployment insurance program, as contained in Bill C-3. It is important to take a few minutes to look at the evolution of the financing of this act in order to understand the context in which these present amendments are being introduced.

Before the 1971 changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act the program was financed by means of equal contributions by employers and employees of approximately 40 per cent each. The federal government contributed 20 per cent of the over-all cost of unemployment insurance benefits at that point in time.

In the 1971 legislation these financial provisions were modified as part of the over-all revision of the benefit structure. That is something my colleague before me was very much instrumental in bringing about. The private sector under the 1971 amendments financed a share of the initial regular benefits up to the point where the unemployment rate reached 4 per cent. Beyond that the government picked up the cost of benefits, beyond the 4 per cent rate. In addition, the government assumed full responsibility for the other two phases of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the labour force extended benefits and the regional extended benefits. Administrative costs were charged against the premium account of unemployment insurance.

In 1976 that formula was changed to replace the 4 per cent unemployment rate by an eight-year moving average of national unemployment rates. In 1978 this eight-year formula for financing the first phase was extended to cover also the second phase of benefits, the labour extended phase of the program. Previously this phase had been totally financed by the general revenues of the Government of Canada.

The current situation, therefore, we now find ourselves in is that the government pays the full cost of the regional extended benefits, and shares with employers and employees the cost of both the initial regular benefits and the labour force extended benefits. Thus the total government share of the cost of the program in 1979 was 31 per cent.

Under the financing amendment that is being put forward in Bill C-3, the government will continue to bear the full cost of the regional extended benefits, while the private sector through its premium contributions will pay for the initial regular benefits and the labour force extended benefits of the program.

There is, I believe, an important principle underlying this formula, and that is that the first two phases of unemployment insurance benefits are those which are based on the insurance principle, a principle that goes back to the original concept of the Unemployment Insurance Act, namely, a voluntary insurance program to deal with short-term unemployment problems. It is important to recognize that principle because, in terms of the over-all direction of the review, the restoration of the idea, or the insurance concept or principle, is a very important guideline to use in any proposal or direction we would want to follow.

If the change in this financing formula is approved by Parliament and is effective as of July 1, 1980, it will mean the Government of Canada will save some $378 million in direct government expenditures, a saving that I think members of this House will recognize as very important in this time of very severe restraints on government funds available for other programs. As a result, the government's share of the cost of unemployment insurance benefits will be reduced to about 20 per cent. It should be noted that this formula, this figure, or this percentage point, is in line with the 1971 position in respect of unemployment insurance.

I should also remind members of the House that the review or revision of the financing formula is also in line with changes made previously for charging the costs of job referral and employment services to the unemployment insurance premium account effective as of April 1, 1980. The additional administrative charges under these amendments to the regulations total some $246 million in the current fiscal year.

The reason for that change, as hon. members will recall, is that in 1977 Parliament approved the integration of the Unemployment Insurance Commission under the Department of Manpower and Immigration. That legislative change brought in the Unemployment Insurance Commission with full responsibility for the National Employment Service. That integration of the two operating parts of the department is now nearing completion, and it means, through integration, that we hope to be able to achieve greater efficiency and effectiveness in the ability of placing people and providing job referral service for the private sector.

The integration of the employment and insurance services is further strengthened by a program introducing online computer systems in our major employment and insurance offices across Canada.

One of these computer systems will provide faster and easier access to job vacancies for those looking for work, and will enable employers to draw upon a much wider labour pool for their jobs and employment requirements. The other on-line computer service we are introducing will enable insurance agents to provide claimants with much quicker and more up-to-date service on their claims. Needless to say, it will also provide the commission with the ability to provide a much higher degree of quality control of those claims, and we will be able to cut down on some of the problems that were posed to us in the Auditor General's report last fall.

Both these systems are now in limited use, but we are continuing the planned expanded operations beginning this year, and continuing into the mid-1980s.

We have also established a computerized national job bank to provide national exposure to jobs which cannot be filled from a local base.

With these changes in the operation of the commission, the integration plus the introduction of the new computerized service, it is logical that the costs of the employment services, as well as the unemployment insurance program administrative costs, be charged to the premiun account, because we are in effect providing a basic, necessary and essential service to the private sector. These services, I can attest to members of this House, are of substantial benefit to both employers and employees. If they were not provided by the commission, other and substantially more costly arrangements would have to be made by companies and private individuals. These considerations, therefore, buttress and reinforce the appropriateness of a financial contribution from the private sector to the administrative costs of the employment service.

It is also important to point out to members of the House that these proposals for the refinancing of the unemployment insurance program and the regulatory change as it applies to administrative cost, are unchanged from those that were proposed by the previous government last December. However, there is one significant change from the approach of the previous administration, and that is that we will not in this calendar year increase premiums to cover the cost. We have decided that no such increase is required for 1980.

● (1530)

The second aspect of the amendments under this bill is the proposed changes to extend the current variable entrance requirement of ten weeks to 14 weeks beyond December, 1980. It will be remembered that as a result of Bill C-27 the variable entrance requirement provision took effect in December, 1977, for a period of 36 months. If no contrary action is taken, the entrance requirement will become a flat, fixed, 14-week requirement across all regions as of December, 1980. Therefore I am requesting Parliament to extend the variable entrance requirement for a further 18 months to June, 1982.

[Translation]

Of course, I am fully aware of the concerns expressed by a number of members about matters directly related to the variable entrance requirement. I wish to point out that we have almost completed our review of steps aimed at alleviating problems caused by economic areas in determining the entrance requirement. Hon. members will then be in a position to assess those proposals.

As all hon. members know, the issue of the most appropriate entrance requirement for the UI program is difficult and contentious. It would be premature to take decisions in this area for the longer term without seriously examining other basic aspects of program objectives and design. Consequently, I am proposing to undertake a review of the fundamentals of the UI program. I will have more to say about the nature and content of that review in a few moments.

[English]

I should now like to outline my intentions with respect to one final area within the changes contemplated within the unemployment insurance program, and it is a regulatory change affecting minimum insurability. Before 1979 this insurability was determined by a specified amount of weekly earnings. In 1978 the amount was in fact one-fifth of the maximum weekly insurable earnings. This arrangement was criticized on the grounds that the insurability was extended to those who worked for relatively few hours, but was denied to those who worked long hours at relatively low wage rates.

Consequently an amendment was put into effect in January, 1979. The 1979 regulation changes provided for a minimum of 20 hours a week for employees on a time worked or fixed salary basis and 30 per cent of maximal insurable earnings for others. While this change solved one problem, it created several others which call for remedial action. The amended regulation has had a negative effect on particular categories of workers, especially women. Indeed many women who are in permanent part-time employment have been denied insurance protection under that 1979 change.

The significance of part-time work for women is illustrated by the fact that one out of every four women in this country is a part-time worker, whereas only one out of 17 men is a part-time worker. Therefore the onus of part-time work and the lack of insurance coverage under it obviously fall most heavily upon women in our society, and I think it is important that we provide some correction to that problem.

I have examined a number of options for changes in the current regulations. The best solution that we have been able to devise in terms of equitable treatment of workers and the provision of adequate coverage of part-time employment would be to determine minimum insurability on the basis of either hours or weekly earnings. Specifically, therefore, I am proposing that an individual who earns either one-fifth of the maximum weekly insurable earnings or works 15 hours a week would be eligible for coverage and benefits under the unemployment insurance program. I should emphasize that these are regulatory changes that can be made under the existing provisions of the act.

When fully implemented, the effect of this change would be to extend unemployment insurance coverage to approximately 300,000 workers at an annual additional cost of $100 million, of which $75 million will be charged to the premium account and $25 million will be charged to the federal government. The earliest practical date for changing the regulation is January 1, 1981, since earlier implementation would cause serious administrative difficulties for employers and Revenue Canada.

In the short time that I have been the Minister of Employment and Immigration, a spectrum of interrelated and conflicting views about unemployment insurance have been brought to my attention. I concluded, therefore, that it is time for substantive changes in the design of the program and that they should take place as soon as possible. At the same time it would have been irresponsible to have attempted to bring about that kind of change without taking the opportunity to review and assess the large amounts of material, submissions, briefs and proposals which have been collected by my predecessors, the hon. member for Sarnia and Mr. Atkey during their terms of office.

During this time a large number of valuable assessments and analyses of the programs were undertaken, and they are now in the possession of the department. It is our intention to take that large volume of material and to distill it down into a succinct and simple series of proposals which can be presented in a paper which can be examined by a committee of this House and which can then receive further review by the private sector.

However, I should say that certain positions taken by the previous Conservative government relating to its own review have caused me particular difficulty and, therefore, they will not be included as part of the terms of reference. In particular I refer to the attempt by that government to introduce that examination of the two-tier benefit structure which, I believe, would have a severe discriminatory effect upon women. That study will not be included as part of the examinations and proposals for review. Moreover, many of the other proposals would have contributed significantly to the increased complexity of the program, despite the fact that one of the major objectives of a review of unemployment insurance should be to streamline and simplify the act to facilitate its administration and its public understanding.

Therefore I instructed the officials of the employment and immigration department to prepare terms of reference for a review of unemployment insurance which will be carried out by a special task force over the next several months. Once this task force, as I have said, has been able to compile and distill that material, we will then present the findings by means of a paper which can be examined by Parliament and, through a parliamentary committee, which can be given further extensive review by the private sector. That does not mean that we will exclude any representations made to us during that period of time, but we do feel that we have a wide spectrum of material from a wide variety of sources which will enable us to carry out the examination that we require.

Among the tasks to be undertaken in this review is the clarification of the insurance elements of the program and the confirmation of the important role that the unemployment insurance program will continue to play now and in the future. At the same time we must also ask ourselves whether or not other programs could respond more effectively to some of the needs which, for a variety of reasons, are presently being carried out by the unemployment insurance program.

As hon. members will know, our government is intending to organize a major conference on pensions in the fall. We are also undertaking major examinations of the social security programs. It is in the context of that ongoing assessment by the government of a number of service programs that the unemployment insurance capacity and ability must be measured. It will also be very important to take into account the initiatives which we are presently examining in the area of industrial adjustment.

Members of the House will recognize that in the discussions and debate so far concerning the serious problems of the automobile industry and some of the dislocations which will be experienced by certain industrial sectors as a consequence of the major changes in the tariff laws of this country, there will be requirements for readjustment. We are presently examining these questions with certain trade unions and employers to see what the best procedure would be and how it should relate to the over-all program of unemployment insurance.

Among other items to be included in the review are the streamlining and simplification of the benefit entitlement and qualifying provisions including those relating to regular and special benefits for sickness, maternity, and retirement; the role and impact of regional extended benefits; the use of unemployment rates in the determination of UI benefit entitlement; the treatment of those who voluntarily quit their jobs without just cause; the coverage of and benefits for workers in highly seasonal occupations, and the impact of the unemployment insurance program on income distribution and redistribution. Madam Speaker, I should add as well the major importance we put upon examining the whole question of economic boundaries used for the allocation of benefits, and the need to provide for a serious review and reform of that area of the act.

I shall make available to members of the House the detailed terms of reference covering these and other matters as soon as they are completed, which I hope will be within a very few weeks.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to underline the importance of the review which I am announcing today and the direction in which we want to go which will be a matter of substantial importance to all members of the House. Unemployment insurance is one of the foundation programs that underlies the protection of workers in this country. We will want to ensure that employees and employers and all other interested groups are given a full opportunity to be heard and to be represented with their views.

It is our intention to use Parliament as the forum within which that representation and consultation can take place. I would urge members to work with us in the examination of the unemployment insurance program as the review proceeds and as that paper is produced and, at the same time, through their own contacts and through discussions in their constituencies, to begin developing assessments in their regions.

I would remind hon. members that the review lies ahead and that the bill does not concern the review itself. Rather, it is very simply directed toward the specific objective of an examination of the variable entrance requirement so that that particular program can be extended while more major and fundamental changes are taking place. It will also provide for a refinancing of the program both to assist in the support of government financing and in restoring the basic essence of the insurance principle to the program.

With those short comments, Mr. Speaker, I would urge hon. members to approve the measure. There will be a full opportunity at the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration to examine the bill in detail. I hope hon. members will give speedy passage to this bill on second reading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, may I begin with a point of order. In the minister's speech he made two announcements, one regarding regulatory change as it affects part-time workers, and the second about the creation of a task force. Would it be in order to have a brief question period about those two announcements before we proceed with debate on Bill C-3?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) suggests a brief question period and asks whether that is in order. It would be in order if he sought and acquired the unanimous consent of the House, but not otherwise.

Mr. Hawkes: Would the minister be agreeable to just a few brief questions regarding those two announcements, the provision of regulatory change and the appointment of a task force?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It is not a question of whether the minister is agreeable. The Chair does not establish rules on a personal basis. The will of the members is reflected in the standing orders but, from time to time, members may want to change the manner of proceeding, and that is agreeable as long as it is unanimous. It may be that the minister is prepared to answer questions, but I could not permit him to do so unless the hon. member sought and acquired the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Collenette: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have not discussed this with the minister, but had he chosen to make a statement at three o'clock in the usual way during routine proceedings, he would have done so, and questions could have followed. I suggest to the hon. member that he will have adequate opportunity to question the minister and his officials when this bill goes to committee. There may be a disposition at the end of his speech for the minister to answer a question, as is done from time to time. I think it would be setting a dangerous precedent, however, if we transferred the work of the standing committees into this place when we are discussing the broad principles of the bill on second reading. This bill will not be going to Committee of the Whole but to the standing committee, where there will be ample opportunity for the hon. member to cross-examine the minister and his officials.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I might begin by pointing out that we are already two and one half months into this Parliament and the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration has yet to meet, other than for purposes of organization. Our opportunity to question the minister regarding his estimates and his bills has been severely limited as a result. I would urge the government House leader and the party opposite to get on with holding these meetings so that we can get the information we require.

Mr. Collenette: You are a member of the steering committee.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, that is incorrect. I am not a member of the steering committee.

Mr. Collenette: You should be if you are interested.

Mr. Hawkes: We are here today to give second reading to Bill C-3, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. This is the eighth time since 1971 that the government has brought forward an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act, which I think points to the fact that the bill is not exactly a shining star but might be referred to as a tarnished star. It requires constant change because it was badly drafted in the first instance and its continued use gives the minister, his departmental officials, and the Canadian public, considerable difficulty.

The bill was drafted by the previous government in the Thirty-first Parliament. As the minister has said, it addresses itself to two basic principles. The official opposition would agree with those principles at this point but, nevertheless, I should like to review them for just a second.

The bill extends to June, 1982, the variable entrance requirements. What that means in the case of some Canadians who may be less familiar with the language than are members of this House, is that in the high unemployment regions of this country one is required to work for as little as ten weeks before becoming eligible for benefits from the unemployment insurance fund, while in other areas the minimum is 14 weeks. I think some other members on this side of the House will address themselves to the difficulty this causes in their ridings.

Whether or not difficulties are caused by this provision, it has become increasingly clear that, as a result of the economic policy set by the government opposite, we have had a decade in which to begin to correct the regional unemployment imbalances in this country, yet in the year 1980 we are no further ahead than a decade ago and in many instances we are further behind.

The variable entrance requirement is a humane provision and is designed to help those who need help most. Members on this side of the House are consistently committed to that principle. On this side of the House we believe that social policy should be directed toward those who need the help of that policy the most. Therefore we are prepared to support the extension of that principle until June, 1982.

As an aside, I might point out that that is the clearest indication, despite repeated questioning in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-19, from this minister that he expects a high unemployment rate to continue through at least until June, 1982. If the minister opposite felt that there was going to be some kind of dramatic turn-around, he would not have asked us for this longer term extension of the variable entrance requirement provision.

The second aspect of Bill C-3 is, as the minister says, taking the money, taking the benefits or the premiums paid in and the obligations or the benefits which are paid out and taking those out of general revenue and moving them back into a readily identifiable insurance fund. That was an idea which members of the Conservative party came up with, and is a measure which we fully support. If we are going to call this an unemployment insurance fund, then I think there should be a recognizable fund. The value of such a recognizable fund is that Canadians can look at that fund and they can tell whether or not that fund is in or out of balance. They can tell what their premiums are doing in relation to that fund. They can tell what the benefits are costing, and Canadians can decide whether or not it is in or out of balance, and what should be done about it. In a sense, it corrects one of the chronic habits of the party opposite, that of flimflam. This change in the law will reduce the degree of flimflam. To that extent, I think Canadians will be the richer.

These two fairly simple and fairly quick changes will make the existing measure slightly better. However, we would like to emphasize that much remains to be done. The minister has indicated that he will appoint a special task force, that he will invite the participation of parliamentarians in the work of that task force. When I have had a better chance to check Hansard, I think that I will discover that at the same time he invites that participation—that he says that all Canadians should be involved, that there should be discussion—he rules out discussion on two or three of the aspects which require examination. We on this side of the House are convinced that they should be part of that discussion package. It is not good to hear on the one hand the kind of rhetoric which suggests participation and, on the other hand, to hear the specific details which restrict participation. I can assure the minister opposite that we will do our best to make sure that, to whatever extent he allows us to participate in that discussion, we broaden the terms of reference to include all of those items which we believe should be discussed.

Given that as background, I think it might be wise to take a minute or two to examine why we need and why we have such concern about an unemployment insurance program and fund. I agree with the minister opposite that this is a very important piece of social legislation.

Just before coming into the House I checked the figures and found that there are somewhere between 800,000 and 900,000 Canadians who are drawing benefits from this fund today. That figure is getting close to 8 per cent of the work force. Any piece of legislation that affects that many Canadians, families and dependants, is an important piece of legislation. But at the same time the very fact that this piece of legislation is important also addresses itself to the fact that we have a tremendous and growing unemployment problem in this country.

I have travelled this nation from coast to coast and I have done research work with the unemployed in this country. It is my conviction that a very large percentage of the unemployed in Canada—a very large percentage of those who draw unemployment insurance benefits—would rather work than be forced into the situation where they could not work because there was no work available.

We have said to the minister opposite on more than one occasion in the second reading debate on Bill C-19 and, in particular, in the Committee of the Whole procedure we asked the minister and suggested to him repeatedly that he has a kind of residual ministry. In other words, he picks up the problems that are caused by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and caused by other ministers in his government. We have suggested that he should be fighting for the unemployed in this country and quarrelling with the other ministers of the Crown by pushing them, and by getting them to do things that need doing in Canada. May I remind the minister of two or three of those.

Freedom of speech in this House was denied by a closure bill when we were debating the issue of borrowing $12 billion. We object, for many reasons, to the federal government borrowing that sum of money. As a previous government, we were reducing that figure. The figure would have been two-thirds the amount of what this government intends to borrow in this fiscal year.

The federal government is borrowing close to one-third of the money which is borrowed in this country. Money is borrowed on the basis of an auction market. When the federal government tries to buy money, it drives interest rates up. As a result, it makes the cost of purchasing a home more expensive, a car more expensive, and furniture more expensive. And yet the cost of money which goes up because of the federal government borrowing is the primary factor in the weakness of the Canadian economy, the lack of jobs existing in this country today and the lack of jobs which has existed for close to a decade.

No matter how often we bring up that subject or how forcefully we attempt to bring it up, hon. members opposite smile and take the easy political way out, and borrow more money tomorrow and make the situation worse.

On this side of the House we have said that a small expenditure relative to the better than $60 billion which this government intends to spend—a small portion of the $12 billion which it intends to borrow—a small portion of that should be dedicated to the housing industry. If we could put the building of 100,000 houses back on stream which this economy has lost this year—an expenditure of close to $100 million—we would create employment for 150,000 people as well as the housing units which this country needs.

On this side of the House we feel that it is always a tragedy when there are so many skilled people and dedicated Canadians who would like to work, but who through the actions of the government opposite are not allowed to work because the government is dedicated to the easy political solution rather than the long-term solid solution for the Canadian economy.

In the budget which members on that side of the House along with the NDP defeated in this House of Commons in December last, there were provisions for assistance to the fishing industry. They were designed to create jobs in the building of vessels. They were designed to create jobs for fishermen and jobs for those who work in the processing plants where the fish is canned and made available for the tables of Canadians. Those measures were eliminated by the Minister of Finance and they have not been replaced. The mortgage deductibility provisions designed to help housing were eliminated by the Minister of Finance and members opposite. Those measures have not been replaced and housing jobs are being lost.

● (1600)

I come from a region of this country, being the member for Calgary West, where the oil industry is a major industry, both in my city and province. I have begun to hear rumblings that, for the first time since 1975, there are drilling rigs which exist in this country that are sitting idle. I have sat in this House and heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) tell us, "All is well. We won't have rationing. Those megaprojects, the security of oil from the oil sands, will occur. Price is not important."

That is absolute nonsense. That industry is worldwide. It is an industry unlike any other with which I am familiar. That is because the three major elements of that industry are mobile. The people are mobile and can go anywhere in the world. The drilling rigs are designed to be mobile so that they can work in muskeg and the oceans, and therefore can go anywhere in the world.

In the absence of a reasonable policy affecting that industry, I suggest to this House that that industry will for the most part leave this country. When it does, our dependence on unstable foreign sources of supply will increase. Our balance of payments will be in a more difficult position. The value of our currency will continue to fall and our unemployment rates will rise.

Anybody who ignores the reality of what I have just stated is inviting this country on a fairly long road toward increasing disaster. A country with the potential of the people and the resources that we have which heads toward a disaster is something that no thinking Canadian should tolerate. There is no logical reason for it. It is a consequence of political expediency dominating rational thought and rational action. As long as I am a member of this House and this party exists in this House, we will continue to fight to reduce the incidence of political expediency and increase the incidence of rational thought. The problems of this country require us to do no less.

As I sat here today, I looked at the unemployment insurance program. On the basis of a previous press release I knew the minister would stand in this House and tell us that the unemployment insurance fund would be in surplus and, therefore, premiums did not have to be increased. The minister used the rhetoric and said that he believes in the insurance principle. Well, one of the principles of an insurance fund that is really dominant, whether we are talking about house insurance or car insurance, is that we pay in premiums today because we know that somewhere down the road there will be a rainy day. That is what insurance is for, protection against that rainy day.

Under our government, that fund was left in surplus. However, it is a tiny surplus. The kind of unemployment rates which are projected by the private forecasters in this country suggest that that surplus will not last for any extended period of time. I thought, what will be the policy response of members opposite when that fund runs dry, when the claims are greater than the money that is in there to pay the claims? What will they do?

A rational man would say there would be three options. First, we could increase the premiums. The workers would pay and that would be a penalty on the workers. Second, we could decrease the benefits, and that is a penalty which the unemployed would have to suffer. Third, we could borrow more money. Nobody that you can touch or feel has to pay, but the whole society has to pay through increased interest rates and long-term debt which our children will have to pay.

When that happens, with that government opposite, will there be any question in the mind of any Canadian as to the option they are likely to prefer? None whatsoever. Clearly and consistently the option taken by that side of the House is to increase borrowing, not to help Canadians realize the relationship between costs and benefits, but simply to increase borrowing to hide, to take the problem of today and transfer it to the generation of tomorrow instead of facing up to it now. That is what will happen.

I wonder if the minister will consider in his task force and review inviting dialogue on what will be the proper policy response when and if the economic policies of his government cause the unemployment rolls to grow so much that the fund is out of balance. Certainly members on this side would like to make suggestions for positive economic change and to participate in that kind of dialogue.

I would like to raise just a few other matters for the minister's consideration. He told us today that the terms of reference for that task force are not complete. Hopefully the debate on Bill C-3 and the second reading stage will allow the minister to open his ears wide and listen to the positive suggestions as they come from any side of the House, and perhaps utilize some of them in the drafting of those terms of reference.

We support the need for a complete review of the unemployment insurance fund. One of the items which should be addressed in terms of its philosophy is whether the existence of such a fund and one's participation in it is a right or a privilege. From that decision flows a number of others, but it is fundamental. There must be some sense of philosophical underpinning to a piece of social legislation of this importance. Is the existence of this fund and this program a right or a privilege?

The minister has already indicated, and we support the fact, that there should be a review of the regulations as they affect those who voluntarily quit a job or whose job is terminated because of misconduct. I would like to think that some day the minister might make the data which he has on that issue available to the members of this House so that we can study it as well as he, and perhaps sometimes take a different interpretation of that data.

As I understand some of the rumours which float around, there is some indication that those who voluntarily quit or are dismissed for misconduct draw benefits for longer periods of time on average than those whose jobs are terminated due to other factors. If that is true and if the data supports that, we would like to know. If the data does not support it, we would like to know that also. The minister has such data in his possession, and I think it is time that reports of that nature were tabled in the House of Commons so that all Canadians, including hon. members on this side of the House, could have access to such data.

Not 20 or 30 minutes ago the minister stood in this House and indicated that he absolutely would not consider what he referred to as a two-tier benefit system. I ask the minister to reconsider for just one moment. If the minister believes what he said in another part of his statement, that in fact this should be an insurance fund, then I suggest to him that one of the common characteristics of insurance of any kind is that premiums relate to the possibility of benefits. If one has a very expensive car, one pays an increased premium, but if that car is wrecked one gets an increased benefit. The same is true of houses and of insurance generally. What we were examining when we were the government was the fact that with the inflation rates which the minister's government has caused in the last decade in Canada there is an increased need for income which does relate to the number of dependants one has, whether we are talking about a wife or a husband and children, or whether we are talking about parents, handicapped nieces or daughters.

If you have a job today and you have a family, you have a unit of some kind which is dependent on the income from that job. When that job disappears and you are unemployed, then it is not just you whose income suffers but it is also the incomes of all those who are supported by you. They suffer as well, and it seems to me that the minister could at least invite some sense of dialogue on whether this fund should have its premium rates and benefit rates based upon income need and upon whether one is supporting several people or supporting oneself. I have children of my own. They are young adults, really. They are out working in the work force. The cost of living for them is not as great as it would be if they were out of our home and living on their own. It is true also that their income is not as great, and it seems to me that unemployment insurance for them could involve a lower premium and a lower benefit.

A family man with eight or ten people to support should be able to pay a higher premium and receive a higher benefit. To deny that basic principle is to suggest that the minister is not telling us the truth when he tells us that he believes in an insurance fund. That is all right too, but I wish we could have it clear as we engage in his task force and in this dialogue.

I would like to suggest three or four other things, and then I will pass the podium on to other members of this House. I think it is time we examined the variable entrance requirement. The extension the minister has asked for today will take us through to June of 1982. That gives us sufficient time to look at the wisdom of the variable entrance requirement. In the constitutional debate there are many members of this House who have decried the fact that provincial governments are setting up barriers to employment. They are making provincial policies which give preference to buying from provincial firms. They are making the mobility of people difficult, and I suggest that the variable entrance requirement utilizes the the same kind of mentality. Yes, today it has a useful and needed social purpose, but it in itself is a barrier to labour mobility. If there are two or three fundamental principles on which this nation should be based, I would certainly think that the federal government should take a very solid leadership role in making it possible for goods, services and manpower to move freely from coast to coast and from north to south. If we are one nation, surely that must be one of the principles upon which this nation is based, and in that context the variable entrance requirement is a clause in a piece of legislation which bears examination, and not too long from now.

I was interested in the fact that the minister has moved, by regulation, to change the picture of our unemployment insurance fund in the direction of inclusion of more part-time workers. I am disappointed that the minister did not see fit to make a statement at three o'clock this afternoon about that significant change and thus open the floor to at least a brief question period in which we could have discovered some of the details of that and have had a more adequate chance to respond to that provision. It seems to me to leave several questions hanging. The minister might choose to put out a press statement or in some other way to communicate and answer questions about that part-time provision. However, can an employee, who will now be eligible if he works 15 hours a week rather than 20, work ten hours for one firm and five for another, or are those 15 all to be spent working for one firm? That is one question. After the minister's announcement this afternoon Canadians out there will be confused.

In his statement the minister just told us that he wants to eliminate confusion. Perhaps it is time for the minister or perhaps a speaker from the other side of the House to speak briefly, but it is time to address that question. Will that apply to a single employer or can multiple employers be involved?

The minister threw some numbers at us. He said this will amount to a $100 million expenditure in the next fiscal year, and he anticipates that $75 million of that will come out of the fund itself and $25 million will have to be contributed by government. Where did those numbers come from? Where are the increased benefits? It is possible that the fund may grow by $150 million and the benefits by $75 million, in which case the minister is very cleverly increasing the funding and doing so by riding on the backs of part-time workers and women in this nation whom he so clearly indicates so often he desires to help and protect. We need an answer to that kind of question before we can decide whether the minister has invented a new way of ripping off the women of the world or benefiting the women of the world. In the absence of that data we on this side of the House cannot tell.

If the minister has made this decision to include part-time workers in this way, I ask again whether he will make the data on which he based that decision available to hon. members on this side of the House so that we can see it and draw our own conclusions.

I would like to move on to the last two or three items. In his statement on employment creation and in the background paper the minister has given us some indication that unemployment insurance funds are being experimented with on a very small scale in different parts of the country. Again I would like to see the data that those experiments are producing, but I would also like the minister to include clearly in his terms of reference an examination of the issue of the alternate use of funds payable as benefits out of the unemployment insurance fund. It is possible that society would mandate and the beneficiaries of the fund would like the opportunity to use that benefit period to involve themselves in job training and in the creation of work which would benefit the community in some way.

My personal experience from coast to coast suggests that Canadians do aspire to getting ahead in the world, they want to progress. If there comes a time when their job disappears and they are eligible for unemployment insurance, there would be a lot of backing for a principle which encourages people during that period of time to do something socially useful by creating useful work, or to do something in the way of getting increased personal training which would increase their chances of employment and the possibility of contributing to society. I hope that this issue is one that will be clearly highlighted in the terms of reference which the minister has promised to produce.

Another issue which I do not believe he mentioned is the principle of allowable earnings. I should like to recount briefly a small personal experience. Some six years ago I was in a small community in the maritime region where I stayed in a small motel. On the day that I arrived, the storm door in that motel was swinging in the breeze. I stayed in the motel for a week. As the week progressed, that storm door chewed up the door frame. Eventually it started to damage the inner door.

I went to the owner of that motel and asked him why he did not repair the door at the beginning of the week, before it got worse. He said, "You have not looked out the front door. Right across the street is the unemployment insurance office. If any carpenter were to come and give me one or two hours of his time to fix my door, he would have to wait two or three weeks to become eligible again for unemployment insurance. The carpenters in this town have a family to support and cannot afford to work for one or two hours and have to give up three weeks of benefits." That is the principle involved in the allowable earnings provision. There is a penalty for unemployed people in this country who are drawing benefits and who take some work for a brief period. That provision should be changed as quickly as possible, and I hope this will be highlighted by the minister's task force.

Last, but perhaps not least, as I understand this complex act which has been amended many times, is the matter of the penalty provision for employers. We talk a lot in this society about the individuals who rip off the fund and about controlling them. We have penalties for those who lay false claims and who take benefits to which they are not entitled. But where do we examine the issue of employers who fabricate information and who keep the work force together by inflating potential earnings? Where in this review are we going to examine the issue of such employers? Because the suspicion has existed, ever since the Auditor General's report came out stating that there were $300 million in overpayments last year out of this fund, illegal overpayments, that those overpayments were caused in a systematic way as a result of information provided by employers.

Every employer in this country is now accused and guilty by association simply because he is an employer. All of us in this House know that not all employers are guilty of this, that it is possible that there are a few employers in this country who are responsible. I hope that the minister's task force will highlight that issue and that the terms of reference will permit the task force to engage in a full and complete discussion of that principle.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the intent of this bill is to extend to January, 1982, the existing variable entrance requirement for the unemployment insurance program, that is, the number of weeks a claimant must pay into unemployment insurance before he is eligible for benefits. The number of required weeks varies with the regional rate of unemployment, so that a worker in an area of high unemployment of 9 per cent or over could qualify for benefits with ten weeks insurable employment, whereas a claimant who works in an area of relatively low unemployment, a rate of 6 per cent or less, would be required to pay into unemployment insurance for 14 weeks.

In July of 1977 Bill C-27 was passed, which increased the entrance requirement from eight weeks for all areas to the variable of ten to 14 weeks requirement.

In 1978, under Bill C-14, the Unemployment Insurance Act was further amended to eliminate the variable entrance requirement for all areas by December, 1980, setting it at a uniform 14 weeks of UI contributions in order to qualify for benefits.

The extension of the variable entrance requirements with which we are dealing today is, I believe, in response to protests that the 14-week requirement would be highly discriminatory and would eliminate many workers from any income protection under the unemployment insurance program. Seasonal workers, whether employed in the tourist industry of Prince Edward Island, in the fishing industry of the Atlantic or Pacific coasts, or farmers in any part of Canada, would have been largely ineligible for benefits under this provision.

It is also the intent of this bill to shift to the private sector, that is, to the premium payers, the government's financial responsibility of sharing the costs of unemployment insurance. Bill C-3 will take the government out of this cost-sharing by eliminating the threshold rate which is an eight-year moving average of unemployment rates above which the government pays the costs of benefits. According to the government's figures, this shift is expected to cost Canadians an additional $378 million in the fiscal year 1980-81.

Under the proposed amendment, the government will continue to pay only for regional extended benefits. The initial and extended labour force phases of unemployment insurance will be paid entirely through employer-employee premiums.

At present all special benefit phases, that is, sickness, maternity leave, etc., are financed entirely through the premium account, as are all administrative costs relating to the unemployment insurance program. As a result of an order in council announced by the minister on April 3, 1980, the administrative costs of the national employment service estimated at $246 million this year, will also be a charge against premiums.

Historically, unemployment insurance has been financed from two sources; first, the premium account into which employer-employee premiums are deposited and, second, advances from the Government of Canada.

When the government passed the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971, it predicated the legislation on an average 4 per cent rate of unemployment throughout the decade. Benefit costs of unemployment insurance up to the rate of 4 per cent unemployment were to be paid by employer-employee premiums. Costs that resulted from a rate higher than 4 per cent were to be recovered from the Government of Canada.

I see that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) is in his seat. He was minister at the time when the act was originated and introduced to Parliament. He must be squirming in his seat when he sees what this government is doing to the legislation, which was extremely progressive when it was introduced to Parliament, and what that party has done to the legislation since that time.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: The act required that when the premiums collected were higher than the benefits they were intended to cover, the premium rates would be lowered. Instead of this, the government increased premium rates over the years, changing the legislation and increasing the premium costs to cover program costs the government was originally supposed to cover.

● (1630)

In 1971 the Unemployment Insurance Act passed and unemployment was forecast at 4 per cent throughout the decade. Benefit costs of up to a 4 per cent rate of unemployment were to be paid from premiums, with the government to pay for benefits above that level in recognition of the government's responsibility to ensure adequate employment. In 1975, under Bill C-69, the rate at which government contributions helped to pay for initial benefits rose from 4 per cent and was changed to an eight-year moving average of unemployment rates. In 1977 Bill C-27 eliminated the two extended benefit phases for which the government and not premium payers were previously responsible for paying. In 1978, under Bill C-14, the government again shifted the cost of the extended phase of benefits to premium payers at a cost to Canadian workers of some $400 million.

In the 1979-1980 Conservative budget all benefits except regional extended benefits would have been financed by employer-employee premiums and the administrative costs of job referral and employment services also would have been financed by premiums. Under the Conservative budget the premiums would have been increased to cover increased costs. This announcement was made by the Conservative government on December 11, 1979, and the premium increases were rescinded on December 19, 1979, when the Conservative government found they were vulnerable to voter backlash in an election campaign. These are the same changes this government is making with Bill C-3, only they have announced that premiums will not increase in 1980 over 1979. But what the government and the minister do not talk about, or even mention, is what will happen to premiums in 1981 or in future years when the present surplus is expended.

The shift from the government side of the ledger to the premium payers is rationalized by government officials as a shift from the income transfers aspect to some insurance principles. The fact that unemployment insurance was set up originally to protect workers against the risks inherent in an economic system over which they had little control, and the fact that the government has the ability and responsibility to influence the working of the economy to ensure full employment, are ignored in this kind of thinking.

When Bill C-14 was passed in December, 1978, the Liberals touted it as a measure to save $580 million. In fact the savings were $180 million or less; the other $400 million was merely a transfer of costs from the federal account to the premium account. From the early seventies on, when the government contribution to unemployment insurance payout was 53 per cent, the government's share has since declined to 38 per cent after the 1977 amendments and to something today which is well below that after the 1978 amendments. The intent of this legislation is to reduce it even further, to less than 20 per cent of the government costs.

The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission projects the total unemployment insurance program costs for 1981-1982 to be in the area of $5.2 billion, while government contributions are projected at $951 million. The government line in bringing forward these kinds of programs is that they are improving the unemployment insurance program with better program equity and cost effectiveness. In fact the government is destroying the vested interest it has in ensuring full employment and is shifting the additional costs to those who are still employed.

Unemployment traditionally has been defined in several categories: (a) seasonal, which covers fishing, tourism, etc.; (b) frictional, which is short-term, resulting from workers moving into the labour force or from job to job; (c) cyclical, which includes idle workers and idle machines as a result of low demand; (d) structural, resulting from skill or geographical mismatching.

With the rise in the unemployment rate over the 1970s, we now have to deal with the new definition of insurance-induced unemployment, supposedly provoked by misguided generosity which encourages some workers to collect unemployment insurance instead of taking available jobs. This definition has been used consistently by government officials who rationalize changes to the unemployment insurance scheme by talking about people who rip off the system by making unemployment a way of life, or who want to change the system to remove disincentives to work. This tactic is reminiscent of the way in which the war on poverty became the war on the poor in the 1960s. Today we witness the problem of unemployment becoming the problem of the unemployed. These arguments do nothing to address the problem of unemployment which stands officially, as of May, 1980, at 7.8 per cent, or 904,000 people unemployed. When we take a look at the hidden unemployed, the real jobless rate is somewhere in the area of 11.7 per cent, or 1,411,000 Canadians out of work.

A government committed to reducing unemployment in this country could quite easily set targets for lower rates, as was done in the United States with the Humphrey-Hawkins bill passed in October, 1978. This bill endeavoured to establish opportunity for work as a basic right and set a target of 4 per cent unemployment by 1983 in the United States. Instead of doing something like that, the Canadian government decided that full employment is now double the figure which the Economic Council set at 3 per cent in the 1960s. The Economic Council of Canada in "Two Cheers for the Eighties" set the equilibrium unemployment rate at 6 per cent. In economic terms this is the rate of unemployment that can be maintained without creating inflationary pressure in the labour market. From the point of view of policymaking, these rates are enormously important in so far as at least the government uses them as targets. In effect these rates determine the degree of goverment commitment to policies which encourage the growth of employment. Since the government is eliminating its vested interest in maintaining low levels of unemployment in this country, it appears that the government has simply thrown up its hands and no longer knows what to do.

During the 1980 election campaign, members of the NDP called for the introduction of a full employment bill which would set targets for reducing unemployment to 6 per cent by 1982 and to 4 per cent by 1984. It is important to note in this connection that for every one job created in producing a resource, another six jobs are created in processing it, and yet these are the same jobs we have been exporting from Canada for years.

Unemployment and the costs of unemployment now amount to something in the order of $5 billion annually in lost production, goods and services. It costs us an additional $1 billion a year in lost federal tax revenues, and it costs us a further $5 billion per year in unemployment insurance pay-outs. It should also be pointed out that a Conference Board study in 1976 showed that for every 1 per cent drop in the rate of unemployment, unemployment insurance pay-outs would be reduced by some $500 million annually.

In the press release in which the minister announced Bill C-3, he also announced the government's intention to right part of the wrong his government had inflicted on part-time workers under the unemployment insurance program when the government previously amended the Unemployment Insurance Act. According to this press release, the government intends to introduce regulating changes to be effective in January, 1981, which would change the minimum insurability requirements from 20 hours per week to 15 hours per week, or 20 per cent of maximum insurable earnings.

The minister in that press release cited this move as an improvement that would eliminate charges that the existing rule discriminates against women who make up 71 per cent of the part-time labour force. About 42,000 part-time workers lost their eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits in December, 1978, when Parliament passed legislation disqualifying those who work fewer than 20 hours a week.

According to the minister of manpower and immigration at that time the change was part of a package of cutbacks designed to reduce payments from the unemployment insurance funds, to the tune of $1 billion annually. The estimated cost to part-time workers on an annual basis at that time was some $60 million. The present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who is also the minister responsible for the status of women, likes to put himself forward as the champion of women's rights, and somewhat of a liberal reformer in this area. From what I have seen of the minister's actions since I came into this House, there is certainly very little to justify those claims. In fact, for all the verbiage he has gone through, he is no better and no worse than his predecessors in that portfolio.

An hon. Member: He is no worse?

Mr. Young: He is about the same. The minister follows the Liberal tradition of giving close attention when listening to the problems of women, but the end result when it comes to doing anything is the traditional pat on the head, but nothing of substance ever comes forward.

Some 20 per cent of working women are employed on a part-time basis in Canada as compared to 6 per cent of men who work part-time. Most of these women work part-time, not because they want to, but simply because there are not enough full-time jobs available.

Not too long ago the Social Planning Council of metropolitan Toronto published a document entitled "The Problem Is Jobs . . . Not People". It was a response to proposed revisions in the Unemployment Insurance Act by the then government which was formed by the same party in government today.

An hon. Member: The problem is Liberals.

Mr. Young: Right. Even though the figures may have changed somewhat, and are probably worse today than they were even then, I think these figures are still worthy of some attention. The Social Planning Council document said at that time in Toronto alone there were nearly 15 job hunters for every job vacancy, and 45 per cent of those job hunters were women, yet only 36.8 per cent of unemployment insurance claimants in Toronto were female because women actually under-use the system and are hesitant to claim benefits even though those benefits are rightfully theirs.

In addition, I want to tell the minister it is not only women and young people who are forced to be part-time workers today. Because of the high interest rate policies of this government and the resulting cutbacks in the construction industry, many construction workers are now employed part-time. The minister must be aware of this, and he must also know that the measures he is proposing in these amendments are misdirected and perpetuate further the injustices to our employed and unemployed, and do nothing to treat the root cause of the problem.

An hon. Member: He doesn't care.

Mr. Young: He doesn't care. The solution to the problems of unemployment will not be found in this government continuing to blame the unemployed for their own unemployment, or by shifting the costs of unemployment on to the backs of people who are fortunate enough to continue to be employed. The problems of unemployment will not go away by government officials distorting the facts about people who claim unemployment insurance benefits, or by continuing the myth that there is wholesale abuse of the system.

I picked up a newspaper the other day and saw that we are again about to be swamped with more horror stories on unemployment insurance abuse. In that paper there is an advertisement, inserted by the minister's department, and in huge black type it says: "A new way to detect Unemployment Insurance abuse". Generally speaking, in the text of this particular advertisement there is very little that is actually offensive, except that the average person probably took a look at that heading and came away thoroughly convinced the problems of unemployment insurance are somewhat synonymous again with people ripping off the system, when in fact the government's own figures show and prove, and I believe I am correct, that something just over 1 per cent of all claimants who collect unemployment insurance actually abuse the system. I think the hon. member for Lincoln would agree with me in that analysis of what happens under the unemployment insurance program. However, a substantial number of readers would not be left with that impression after looking at that heading. Whether or not that is intentional, the effect is to discredit the victims of unemployment, and is not justified by the facts, nor is this strategy used by the commission at all recent.

In the report I spoke about earlier from the Social Planning Council of metropolitan Toronto, they also found at that time that this same pattern the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of Employment and Immigration are following today has been in existence for at least the last three or four years. I rather suspect, based on my experience before coming to this House, that the pressure which is applied on people drawing unemployment insurance was really created by the Conservative party in this House after 1972 when it created so much pressure on commission officials they started wholesale cutting off of people claiming benefits which were rightfully theirs, and in fact stigmatized people who found themselves unemployed with no other source of income except unemployment insurance benefits.

For the education of the minister, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read into the record the findings of the Social Planning Council of metropolitan Toronto in the statement released at that time headed "The Problem is Jobs . . . Not People". That Social Planning Council said—

An hon. Member: You had better wake up the minister first.

Mr. Young: If he reads it in Hansard it will educate him equally as well as listening to me. That council said:

> There is a pattern of citing individual cases of abuse and representing them as the universe. This is improper and irresponsible. Abuse is a relatively small problem for not only unemployment insurance but all income security programs. We do not assume all parents are child abusers or all taxpayers are tax abusers. We should not assume all the unemployed are insurance abusers. There is evidence that the limits of acceptability in controlling abuse have been far exceeded. The administration of unemployment insurance requires more socially acceptable forms of efficiency controls and an orientation that does not blame the victims of unemployment for their situation.
>
> Unemployment insurance is an income security program conditioned upon unemployment. As such it has important implications for family and child welfare. Cutbacks in the levels and access to unemployment insurance are unjustified attempts to punish all of the unemployed who are collecting benefits.

● (1650)

On that statement, Mr. Speaker, I thoroughly agree.

Mr. Huntington: Who wrote it?

Mr. Young: The Social Planning Council of metropolitan Toronto. I would be happy to provide the hon. member with a copy if it would be beneficial to him.

Attempts to refinance the unemployment insurance program through more extensive employer-employee contributions are both attempts to finance a social program through a regressive form of taxation, and an abrogation by the government of its legitimate responsibility for unemployment and its causes. Structural and seasonal unemployment results not from the normal operation of the employer-employee relationship, but from economic forces which the federal government has a responsibility to control.

The unemployment insurance system introduced in 1971 recognized the government's responsibility for the costs of unemployment by underwriting the costs of initial benefits resulting from an unemployment rate of over 4 per cent. That measure made it clear that the government was responsible for controlling unemployment, and it provided an incentive for the government to keep the unemployment rate down. Now the government is completely abrogating its responsibility. Unemployment insurance is seen by this government as a substitute for job-creation measures, and to follow such a policy, in my view, is to court disaster.

No unemployment insurance scheme can withstand the pressures created by massive and sustained unemployment, nor should it be expected to. The shell game that this government and that party continually play with unemployment, the cost of unemployment and the people of Canada, is really quite shameful. Unemployment insurance is social insurance. It cannot be weighted against the insurance principles that are used in the commercial insurance industry, which is profit motivated. In addition, commercial insurance is voluntary whereas unemployment insurance is compulsory, and even to expect them to operate in the same fashion displays a real lack of appreciation for the worth of social programs and commitment to make them work for those in need.

Continually running away from the problems of unemployment or shifting the costs of unemployment onto Canadian wage earners will not do anything to solve the fundamental problems which are creating the crisis we find ourselves in today. The government knows or should know, as it has been told often enough, that we are suffering from some very basic structural weaknesses in the Canadian economy which, if not corrected, and if not taken hold of quickly will put us in an even worse mess than we are in today.

I look forward to the time when we will not have to be concerned with legislation that provides for programs like unemployment insurance, to times when government will have recognized, and will have been sensitive enough to recognize, that people's needs cannot and will not be met through the mish-mash of costly social security programs that exist in our country today. I look forward to the day when it is finally recognized that the Liberals and Tories with their piecemeal programs are costing the working people of Canada the right to a decent life for themselves and future generations to come.

I look forward to the day when the great potential of our country is used and developed in the interests of Canada, rather than the continual abuse of that potential by successive Liberal and Conservative governments. I have no doubt at all that day is coming and that Canada and Canadians will be the better for it, when they realize the mess those two parties have created in our country. We in this party oppose the measures proposed in this bill and we strongly urge the government to begin attacking unemployment rather than attacking Canada's unemployed.

In the throne speech the minister made some grand pronouncements about bringing forward long-term employment strategies. To date, the progams which the minister has brought forward are pure tokenism and will do nothing in the long range to cure the unemployment crisis which we face in this country. What we in this party are waiting anxiously to see is the day when that minister finally carries through with the promise that he made to the unemployed people in Canada, and come forward with policies which go toward creating useful job-creation programs to get the unemployed in this country back to work.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to spend a great deal of time talking about this bill on second reading. I want to compliment the minister for not waiting for a total review of the program before taking this particular initiative. I think that the minister has taken the appropriate action. I also want to compliment him for the changes which were made to a regulation which I, in fact, brought in when I had the honour to serve as the minister of that particular portfolio.

I was somewhat surprised by the stand taken by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) who indicated that on eight occasions legislation had been brought forward with regard to unemployment insurance. The fact is that we are in a changing economy and therefore changes must be made. The government's initiative to make the changes at the time they were made should be welcomed because they were, in fact, necessary.

The hon. member also bemoans the fact that the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration has not met. I would suggest that there is a certain amount of mea culpa on the part of the hon. member because since he is a member of that committee, I wonder how many times he has approached the chairman and asked for a meeting. After all, the members on the committee control when that committee meets and how often. Had we not spent so much time in the House dealing with Bill C-19, due in a large measure to the interventions of the hon. member for Calgary West, there would have been more time available for the minister to appear before the standing committee to answer the kinds of questions that he and other hon. members may wish to put.

The area in which I would like to compliment the minister for having made changes is the 20-hour week measure which worked to the disadvantage of temporary workers. At the time that measure was introduced, as the minister has indicated, the government was attempting to bring a sense of equity into the position whereby people who were earning small amounts of money per hour or were having to work longer hours in order to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits—yet those at the higher end of the wage scale could qualify for UI benefits by working for a few hours—would be protected. We thought that this measure would introduce some equity into the system as it affected the people who would qualify for unemployment insurance. One of the things that occurred was that it was abused by employers.

During the time that I did not serve as a member of Parliament, from the spring of 1979 to February, 1980, I had occasion to meet with part-time workers and union leaders and to spend a good deal of time looking at government legislation and its resultant impact on various areas. As a result of those meetings, particularly with the union leaders, one of the first things that I did when I came back to the House was to write to the minister and indicate that the 20-hour per week was being abused by employers, that the legislation should be changed, and that I hoped we would come up with some equitable arrangement which would not be detrimental to the people at the low end of the wage scale. The suggestion of one-fifth of the maximum earnings or the 15 hours is a step in the right direction, and I compliment the minister for taking that particular action.

This bill deals primarily with two areas, the first of which is the extension of the variable entrance requirement. Although the hon. member for Calgary West attacked the idea of the variable entrance requirement, he had to concede that perhaps it was socially necessary at the present time. In different areas of this country there are different levels of unemployment or employment and, because of that, the variable entrance requirement has met a particular need. The people in those areas where it is difficult to get a job or difficult to get another job if one is laid off, will be able to qualify with ten weeks of work. People in areas such as the one I represent, where there is comparatively low unemployment, will be required to work 14 weeks before qualifying for unemployment insurance. I think that is appropriate.

It is even more appropriate that the minister took the initiative of extending the variable entrance requirement rather than simply relying on the act which would have required a 14-week entrance requirement right across the board. As the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young) indicated, this would work to the detriment of people in places like Prince Edward Island where they would find it difficult to get work for the number of weeks required in order to qualify for benefits. It could have happened that people who could least afford it could have been cut off from benefits, so I compliment the minister for extending the period.

I am pleased to see that the minister will embark on an extensive review of unemployment insurance. A vast amount of information is available as a result of studies which have been carried out, and I know that the minister will make that available to the public. In the past we have made information available when unemployment insurance legislation was being discussed so that people who wanted to be critical could at least be critical in a constructive manner, through knowing the facts. I welcome the minister's initiative in indicating that the review will take place.

I am particularly pleased that the minister has abandoned even considering the Conservative party's idea for a two-tier system. The hon. member for Calgary West spoke of something impacting more on women than on men in the work force, but if there is anything calculated to impact on women more than a two-tier system, I have yet to see it. I think the hon. member should consider what the results of a two-tier system would be. It probably was not implemented when his party took power, although they had talked so bravely and loudly about the two-tier system when they were in opposition, because they saw the difficulties with it.

I would remind the minister that a surprising amount of help is available from people who have the time to do research in other areas. Two writers in particular come to mind, although when I was minister I did not always agree with their conclusions and sometimes thought their research was suspect. Mr. Leonard Shifrin and Mr. Richard Gwyn are two writers with whom I did not always agree, but I always read their articles because I thought they had done the necessary research. A great deal of help is available from writers who specialize in particular subjects. I am sure that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and others interested in energy read Jeff Carruthers' columns. I would recommend to the minister that he read a certain group of writers because they have done the research and express a point of view. They may not always be right or fair, but I think it is worth while reading their columns.

When the minister referred to some of the areas that the intensive review would examine, he did not mention vacation pay. When I was minister I was able to make changes to ensure that separation pay would no longer be considered as income as this had the effect of delaying the payment of unemployment insurance. The same is probably more true of vacation pay. People earn vacation pay when they are working, not when they are on vacation. If they are laid off and then take their vacation pay, however, there is a certain delay before they can collect unemployment insurance because the vacation pay is computed into the income they receive after being laid off.

It is appropriate that vacation pay should not be counted as income when one considers how easy it makes the possibility of "diddling" the system. Some unions have taken the initiative of working hand in glove with the employer and trust companies and have arranged that employees take the pay on a regular weekly basis. The money is put into a trust fund while the employee is working and then, if he is laid off, the vacation pay is no longer payable to him and so he is able to collect his unemployment insurance more quickly.

Only 33 per cent of workers in Canada have some form of union membership, so it is the people who cannot organize who suffer. I do not know what the cost of this measure would be although I have heard figures of $90 million and $130 million. I feel strongly, however, that vacation pay earned while working should not be considered as income after an individual is laid off.

Another difficult decision facing the minister is how to weigh prompt service to those entitled to unemployment insurance against the control mechanism. Although the hon. member for Beaches spoke somewhat critically of a particular advertisement, I think the Unemployment Insurance Commission was trying to warn people that they were bringing in more control. Anyone who reads the report of the Unemployment Insurance Commission or the committee reports will realize that the commission is vitally concerned with control. They are also concerned with the fact that those people who are drawing unemployment insurance need it just as quickly as it is possible to get it.

The minister is going to have a difficult time determining just what the correct balance is as did a series of ministers before him. He must always be aware that people need this money and need it quickly. It is taxpayers' money, however, and control mechanisms must be built into the system.

There have been comments about the lack of new jobs in the economy, but the fact is that in excess of 250,000 new jobs have been created annually in recent years. The minister either has entered into or will enter into agreements with the provinces under the Adult Occupational Training Act. It is a very effective program which involves hundreds of millions of dollars and the close co-operation of the federal and provincial governments. It provides for the training of young people so that they will be ready to take jobs in the economy as they arrive. To suggest that jobs are not being created is not correct.

The area of apprenticeship is one in which there could be improvement. Although this is an area of education which primarily comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces, the programs could be improved by additional funding.

The facts are that hundreds of millions of dollars are available for the creation of new jobs and that young people are being trained for the work force. This is more than tokenism.

I welcome the minister's initiative in bringing the bill forward at this time and. I am particularly pleased with the changes to the regulations. I commend to his attention the views I have expressed about the difficulties of balancing service with control, and I say, with respect, that something should be done about vacation pay.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak for a few moments about the very important extension of the principle of the variable entrance requirements to the province of New Brunswick. There are some areas where this important principle could be improved and, after a few brief remarks, I shall make some recommendations to the minister on how to bring about this improvement.

The variable entrance requirements extended to June, 1982, by this bill confer a benefit on the province of New Brunswick. The benefit is measured with respect to the areas where the ten-week rule applies. Our experience has shown that the increase in demand for social service benefits in these areas has been less dramatic than in areas where the 14-week rule applies. This has resulted in a smaller drain on the funds that are available for social service benefits in the province of New Brunswick.

People who live in the areas where the ten-week rule applies receive the benefit of having greater assistance available to them sooner for the sustenance of their families and the provision of necessities. When people find themselves in the unfortunate position of having to rely on unemployment insurance benefits, I think it is important that those benefits should be conferred upon them as efficiently and as promptly as possible.

New Brunswick has a resource-based economy which is punctuated by seasonal employment and by industrialization that has advanced in recent years quite dramatically, but still does not fully challenge the capability of the labour force. Federal government policies enacted in the national interest have an immediate impact on New Brunswick because of its resource-based economy. Policies related to restraint, while necessary, as well as policies that restrict credit and policies that impose tight money, have negative effects on the economy of New Brunswick, and that economy is very slow to recover from them. Consequently, the variable entrance requirements are very necessary and an important measure for that province.

Many people who do not receive this benefit are treated unjustly in New Brunswick, because the method of identifying areas to receive the benefits of the variable entrance requirements fracture and divide the areas of high unemployment along administrative rather than economic lines. As an example, in the county of Madawaska, a work force composed of women travels to the county of Restigouche to assist in harvesting crops, in particular picking potatoes in the hot sun. This is done for very little pay. These women do not receive the benefit of the ten-week entrance requirement, while their co-workers who come from Restigouche county do receive that benefit. These people are very hard working. They travel not only to Restigouche county, but also to Ontario where they have engaged in picking tomatoes. Because they happen to live in Madawaska county, they have to meet the 14-week rule while their co-workers who live in Restigouche county have only the ten-week rule to meet. This is a division that is based upon administrative difficulties in the department, the location of unemployment insurance offices and districts, and not upon an economic basis.

In the Doaktown area in central New Brunswick we have great activity in lumber mills, lumber yards, and in woods work. Workers in these plants and places working side by side whose kids go to the same schools, who worship in the same churches and buy their groceries in the same country store, are treated differently. The workers who live in Northumberland county have to meet the ten-week rule. But those who live in the same general community with the same economic conditions, but who are on the York county side of the line, have the 14-week rule to meet. This is a basic unfairness.

Again, in terms of time, fishermen in our fishing villages along the coast may enter the program under the ten-week rule. But because that fishing village might be located in the same district as one of our principal cities, in a month's time an increase in employment in the city may change the statistics with no real change in the village or the economy of the village. This can find the son of the fisherman having to meet the 14-week rule. So we have a division in the same family in the same house.

This is the type of hardship which is created by this artificial type of zoning within the province. I am speaking about the need for more flexibility in drawing the guidelines, and relating them to economic factors rather than administrative ones.

My recommendation to the minister, and I make it most sincerely, is that he ask his senior staff to address the question of a better method of identifying the economic areas to which the variable entrance requirements will apply. I am certainly prepared to give him any assistance I can and I believe the minister of social services for the province of New Brunswick will only to be too glad to share his records also.

My first recommendation, therefore, is that we address this problem of zoning and attempt to identify the economic pockets of high unemployment more reliably.

Second, if it is really a complex and difficult problem fraught with insurmountable obstacles for his department, I would ask the minister to give serious consideration to identifying the whole province with the most favourable provisions in those cases where the province is small. Already major parts of the province are identified, and this would not be a very extensive development.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-3 before us today is to extend the application of the variable entrance requirement for unemployment insurance benefits. So this bill proposes to keep in force until June, 1982, the present requirement under which claimants must have accumulated between ten and 14 weeks of employment to qualify for benefits.

Under the variable entrance requirement, people living in areas where the rate of unemployment is high need a lesser number of weeks of insurable employment to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits than people living in areas with a low rate of unemployment. For example, when the rate of unemployment is 6 per cent or less, claimants need 14 weeks of work. When the rate of unemployment is above 9 per cent, they need only ten weeks of work. So unless Bill C-3 to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act is passed, the variable entrance requirement will become a fixed requirement of 14 weeks as early as December, 1980.

If, on the one hand, the qualification requirements for unemployment insurance benefits must not encourage unstable work patterns and encourage workers to remain unemployed, a fixed entrance requirement of 14 weeks would, on the other hand, have very different effects in the various parts of the country. It would affect a much greater proportion of workers in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces than in the prairies. In addition, under a fixed requirement, re-entrants—people who have drawn unemployment insurance benefits during the year—would need to have between 14 and 20 weeks of employment rather than between ten and 16 to qualify for benefits.

Mr. Speaker, the economic situation in Canada generally is difficult. What about the effects on a territory like the Lower St. Lawrence, the Gaspé Peninsula, Rimouski and Témiscouata where the rate of unemployment generally varies between 15 per cent and 30 per cent? Despite the good will and a real desire to work, our labour force cannot have steady employment. The socio-economic reality in that territory is creating a lot of seasonal jobs that we are trying to turn into permanent jobs through economic development policies but we do not always get the result we are hoping for. Our region is far from the large centres and therefore from the marketplaces. Moreover, there is already a major movement of the population away from the area because we cannot create enough permanent jobs to keep our workers, especially the young people who join the labour market.

• (1720)

If, in addition to this, we create an even more difficult situation by restricting eligibility for unemployment insurance by considering Canada as a whole as an economic region, again I say that this will be unfair to many Canadians who work at least periodically when they are able to do so, and it is certainly not because our labour force is lazy that our unemployment rates are scandalous. Mr. Speaker, I shall therefore have to vote for Bill C-3, even though a large proportion of the population of Rimouski and Témiscouata still suffers from Bill C-14 passed in 1978. At that time, a poor description of economic zones greatly disadvantaged thousands of workers. It is simply unthinkable to consider the unemployment of a constituency like Rimouski and Témiscouata with the Quebec economic region, and I find it unacceptable that the people of my riding will again be disadvantaged.

Even though Bill C-3 does not solve all my problems, the situation of the people of my constituency would worsen if this bill were not passed. Their already difficult situation would further deteriorate. I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker—and I would like to call on the solidarity and the support of my colleagues—that the workers of Rimouski and Témiscouata will be considered fairly as concerns eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits according to the economic capacity of the region to provide permanent employment.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I would much prefer that the money of Canadian taxpayers be used to create jobs and to eliminate the social plight of unemployment, but we have to be realistic and recognize that some of our workers do not have the opportunity to find stable employment and that society must try to help them get through this difficult period. I have noted that the minister has stated his intention to publish relatively soon a white paper on the issue of unemployment insurance. I invite all my fellow citizens to welcome this document and to take positive steps so that unemployment insurance, which must be considered a major economic subject, will meet effectively and fairly the needs of the workers temporarily without a job. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the minister of my fullest co-operation, and I would like to remind him once again about the hardships suffered by the people of my constituency when they must be included in an economic area as large as that of Grand Portage, which includes the economic area of Quebec, which is quite dissimilar and cannot be compared to it.

[English]

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate in this debate regarding Bill C-3, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. The question of entitlement to benefits has been rather hazy in the past and I hope this act will move toward clarifying many questions Canadians have regarding unemployment insurance.

First of all I would like the record to show that I consider unemployment insurance as an insurance, not a welfare, program. Unemployment insurance should be available to Canadians who are available for work. A person who is available to work, and chooses not to, should not be entitled to benefits. Unfortunately the vast majority of Canadians who are forced to collect do so through no fault of their own and would want nothing better than a job to go to in the morning. The past performance of the Liberal government has shown that it is becoming more and more difficult for Canadians to retain their jobs. This mismanagement of past Trudeau governments has discouraged growth in Canada.

In the last Parliament I had the opportunity to sit on the other side of the House with a government that saw that the backbone and the future of this country are with our small business community. If the climate is correctly set by the government, small business will flourish in this country, and fewer Canadians will be forced to collect unemployment insurance.

I would now like to point out some deficiencies in how the unemployment insurance program is operated at the present time. I am sure that many members in this House have had constituents who have received UIC benefits and then had to repay all, or a portion of the benefits they have received, back to the Unemployment Insurance Commission because of some error made by the commission. After receiving benefits for a number of weeks, the commission informs the recipient that he or she did not qualify for the benefits and that the money must be repaid. The average person who is collecting UIC is not in a position to repay the commission what he has already received and spent. Assuming errors will occur from time to time, perhaps some provisions could be written into the bill to protect the claimant from repaying when an overpayment has been made, provided the claimant has brought forward all the relevant documents when the claim is being processed.

There have been numerous changes to the program over the years which have drastically changed the rules for qualification. Many of the errors in processing have been made because even employees of the commission are unsure of the regulations from one day to the next. A person who qualified for benefits last year may not qualify this year, but the commission employee may not know the change in regulations. Surely the UIC regulations could be simplified so that even employees of the commission could understand them.

Another deficiency in the UIC program is that in some instances the employee is discouraged from working. In my own riding of Malpeque last fall, a number of constituents who worked for 13 weeks were able to collect, and a number of constituents who worked at the same location and for the same employer were kept on for an additional two weeks for a total of 15 and found that when they filed they were ineligible and would not be receiving any benefits at all. I find this totally unacceptable, that a person who works for 15 weeks cannot collect while a person who works for 13 for the same employer, doing the same job, can. There is something wrong with the system.

I would like to inform this House of the explanation I received from the local office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Prince Edward Island. The number of work weeks necessary before a person can file a claim is determined by the unemployment rate in the area the person makes the claim. Because it would be very difficult to determine the unemployment rate for any given day, the commission uses the unemployment rate for the area three months earlier than the time the person files his or her claim. If the unemployment is high, the number of work weeks necessary is lower than if the unemployment is low. What can happen is that unemployment rates change with the seasons.

The person who worked for 13 weeks in this case was judged at the end of August when the unemployment rate was high, and it was deemed that only 13 weeks work would be necessary in order to qualify for a claim. The person who worked 15 weeks, two weeks more than the person who worked 13, was judged in mid-September after the unemployment rate had been lowered. The result of all this was that this person had to have worked 16 weeks in order to qualify. This person received nothing. The person who had worked two weeks longer than an employee at the same place was a conscientious worker and worked two extra weeks. If he had been laid off with the others, he could have claimed and received benefits. Because this person worked the two extra weeks, he was penalized by the system.

It is extremely difficult to explain to this person the fairness of the unemployment insurance program. It is impossible to explain to that person that the system is fair, and I agree with that person that some changes have to be made. As one of Canada's 282 elected legislators, I feel that somehow we in the House have let that person down. Surely our purpose as members in this House is to draft legislation which is fair to all Canadians. Before the bill is passed I hope we will be able to say that it is a fair and just bill.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the inequities which have been pointed out in the act as it has existed, and the eligibility or ineligibility of individuals to benefit from the intentions of the act as it now stands, are things which I hope the minister will take into very serious consideration. This bill has a multitude of impacts upon the various programs which are under the minister's direction, one of which is that the rate of employment may indicate to those who assign public moneys and make-work projects how much money should be spent in a particular constituency.

I want to draw to the minister's attention the fact that a constituency such as mine, which happens to be largely villages, rural, and small towns, is rated not by the actual employment within the constituency itself but is rated for allocation of funds for make-work programs by the impact of employment in the cities of Fredericton and Saint John. There have been times in the last ten years when the city of Saint John has been considered to be almost overemployed. As a result of the statistics emanating from Saint John, the constituency of Carleton-Charlotte, which is next door on the west, has been denied the proper number of make-work programs such as Canada Works, Young Canada Works, and the various other government programs which create employment for seasonal workers and summer workers particularly. This has militated against my constituency ever since this method of appraising the unemployment rate in my constituency has been in place.

As the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) pointed out, it has also pitted one community against the other. As the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) pointed out, if one worked in community A one might be eligible for unemployment insurance in community A. However, if perchance you lived in community B ten miles away, you might find that you have not in fact worked long enough beside your fellow man to be eligible for unemployment insurance. This is just absolutely inequitable, unfair, and needs reconsideration with regard to the eligibility of an area with respect to how much Canada Works money, how much Young Canada Works money, and how much make-work money from other projects can be made available to a constituency or a community.

As the hon. member for York-Sunbury mentioned, I happen to have a number of fishing communities in my constituency, but their eligibility is not assessed entirely by "how long did they fish" but, rather by "what is the estimate of the departmental statistician as to their eligibility", and that does not work. It is just not fair play to those communities.

The Auditor General suggested that there was a multitude of ineligible claims, amounting to $300 million, and I am going to tell the House from where one of those came. There happens to be a veteran of World War II in my constituency who is about 64 years of age and who worked for a farmer. He worked in two capacities, one as a farmer, and also for that farmer when he was constructing a house. He was considered eligible for unemployment insurance by all the regulatory bodies within the department until eventually it went to National Revenue. National Revenue came back to this poor fellow and said that somebody down the ladder made a mistake. He had drawn almost $1,200 which he has to pay back. I want to tell the minister that that man does not have and is not apt to be able to get $1,200 to repay.

This man has now been pushed into the courts by a change of interpretation of the regulations at a different level of government. I am advised that it is not the Department of Employment and Immigration which changed it but the Department of National Revenue. There is a conflict between the interpretation of the rules. This is militating against the fellow who needs unemployment insurance, and I can find no way to resolve this man's problem. These are things which I think the minister must consider with great care.

There are those in my area who would like to stay in the constituency of Carleton-Charlotte but, by virtue of the new interpretation of the unemployment insurance regulations, they can no longer get by with seasonal work. The seasonal worker is now leaving the community, and I have not been able to figure out, if this flow continues, just how long it will be possible to continue the seasonal operations of farming, fishing and forestry, which are the backbone of Carleton-Charlotte.

When unemployment insurance was introduced in the House, it was not intended that it should be instead of work. It was intended that those who could not get work in the communities in which they resided should have some help.

I point out to the House that there is another inequity in this structure which has again militated against rural communities, and I am sure that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc), who is looking at me in a rather critical way as usual, will support my statement.

Mr. LeBlanc: I am looking at you in a friendly way.

Mr. McCain: Good. I will probably need that friendship before we are through. It is a fact that if one lives in Toronto, Ottawa, or in other areas, there are commuter services which transport applicants for work to the centres in which work exists. I am sure there are people working in this city who travel by bus ten, 20 and sometimes 30 miles. They are therefore able to get to work, but if an unemployed individual who does not own a car lives 20 miles from an opportunity to work in rural Canada, that person is not eligible for unemployment insurance, even though he may be living in the home which he owns. It has been established—I am not sure just what it is—that if there is work within 25 to 35 miles of where you reside, you are not eligible for unemployment insurance.

These are inequities which were never intended, but they are the frugalities which have crept in because of a group of people who are administering this act and who are absolutely unaware of how the rest of Canada lives. It seems to me that some top person in the department drew the regulation and passed it down the line without having any knowledge of its impact or consequence.

I wish the minister would be concerned about these matters. I wish he would express some concern, show some interest, change the administration of this act and change some of the regulations because of the over-all consequence to seasonal workers, make-work projects and allocations to various constituencies. The hon. member for Rimouski (Mrs. Côté) was saying some of the same things I am trying to say. If that worker is seasonal and if there is work within a certain range, then with or without transportation, this means that no compensation through unemployment insurance is available.

• (1740)

I hope that the minister will take quite seriously the things that I am saying and give consideration to the requirements of rural Canada and of seasonally employed Canadians, and take the necessary steps to ensure that just because there have been some people who have tried to beat the system, those who have tried to act within it, and have been interpreted by the local office of the Canada employment service as having lived within it, should not be punished for having applied, been accepted, and having legally drawn money, and then be asked to pay it back, as my veteran has been asked to do. I hope there can be some recourse, I hope there can be a change in the tender hearted mercies of the minister and that he will correct the problems in Malpeque, Rimouski, York-Sunbury, and Carleton-Charlotte. We cannot have people in neighbouring communities, whether it be in Westmorland-Kent, York-Sunbury, or Carleton-Charlotte, having ineligibility forced upon them, not by the employment within their own community but by the level of employment in the city of Fredericton or the city of Saint John.

That is the position in which I find myself as the member for Carleton-Charlotte. I put it to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, to take a look at it. Let us be a little more mobile than we have been, a little more susceptible to the needs of Canadians than the minister has shown himself to be when he turned down the Canadian Association for the Mentally Retarded when they asked for a grant under Young Canada Works.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks this evening by touching on a few areas that have been of some concern to me and to many of the people with whom I have worked for some time.

We oppose the bill, largely because of what we find to be an increasing inequity in terms of the payment of the cost of this very important and vital program. But later on in my remarks I want to deal with that issue a little more because what we have is a program in which the people who have the least end up paying the most to get less benefits than do others. That seems to us to turn the tables completely on what any social service or social insurance program should attempt to do.

One of the things I want to mention this evening has to do with some of the administrative and regulatory decisions which take place from time to time under the act. The first item is something with which we began to run into trouble one or two years ago. We used to have the practice, in many industrial operations, that when there was a lay-off, arrangements would be made within that plant so that the senior person could choose to take that lay-off and allow the junior employee to continue working. I think that to many people, at least in the labour force, it is a good thing to have happen, for a variety of reasons, including perhaps some economic savings to the program itself.

Why should it matter to the government who is laid off? If a company with 400 employees is going to lay off 200, why should it necessarily be the junior people, so far as the government is concerned, who have to go on unemployment insurance? Very often what happens is that you find employees who are 50, 60 and 65 years of age, old-timers in the lumber industry who have been around since the days when they were pushing lumber onto carts pulled by horses, working at the hardest and toughest jobs in those operations, and young people who would be much happier to continue working because many of them have recently come into the labour force.

Surely it is in our interest to let young people who are moving into the labour force have the best experience possible and find that they can work continuously and build up some experience and realize what it is to work. Goodness knows, there is enough complaining about young people who are not turned on to the work ethic nowadays. So we should make some provision and show some flexibility to allow those who are young and most able to work to continue working, while the older, more experienced workers are allowed, if they so choose, to take the place of the younger employees and go on unemployment insurance.

It also fits one of the other social goals about which we spoke, that as people approach their retirement age they should be allowed time to get used to it, to phase it in. Why not, when it is not an increased cost to the program or to the taxpayer, allow those older employees to take that opportunity? But for some unforeseen reason, the bureaucracy within the commission within the past year or two has started to become very rigid. We are at a loss to understand why. If the commission is concerned with having those who are unemployed getting other jobs, those with seniority very often have more skills and more abilities, can be placed more easily than those who have just entered the labour force who are very often unskilled workers. It seems self-defeating as well as socially unjust to force that kind of change.

Another area on which I wanted to touch has to do with job search requirements which vary in a regulatory way or for administrative reasons from place to place. In order that someone who is unemployed can continue to collect his benefits, job search requirements are enforced too often when unemployment is too high and at unrealistic levels to expect much success to come from those sometimes very thorough job searches, especially during short duration unemployment when it is very often unreasonable to expect anyone, for some of the reasons that have been suggested earlier, to accept the short-term work when they might find their benefits cut off from time to time.

Suggestions keep coming forward that signed notes from prospective employers be obtained. In my view, they are rather stupid and unrealistic suggestions. We had an experience in Trail, B.C., about a year and a half ago where we had to take some action to prove, both to the local business community and to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, that it was not realistic. We took steps to make sure that pressure came forth from the people, particularly in that small business community, to tell the government and the commission to quit.

What happened was nothing out of the ordinary. The same people who were going around from employer to employer, drawing up their lists of calls for jobs, were doing it as before but they began doing it together. They drove the people in that business community bonkers in the middle of the business day when 30 people at the same time converged and insisted on applying for a job and obtaining a written note. It really seems rather silly and degrading for adults to be forced to do that sort of thing rather than to do what they used to be able to do, simply draw up a list after making their phone calls. In rural areas it often does not make economic sense for somebody without a job to go from place to place getting a handwritten note from a prospective employer saying "He has been here and he asked for a job but I did not have one to give him." But when 25 or 30 people started doing it at once and disrupted the business day, the message got through.

Why should people be forced into that sort of situation in order to make a point that should have been obvious with many of the kinds of arguments that were presented, both through the elected members and through officials of the commission on the spot, many times? But that sort of thing continues in many areas and there really does not seem to be much point to it. It wastes a lot of time, energy and money on behalf of people who simply do not have the money to spend, because they have been thrown out of work through no fault of their own.

● (1750)

I should like to refer to another situation which exists from time to time but hopefully is not too widespread. It may result from some over-enthusiasm when there is a drive on the part of government to cut back on expenditures and to attempt, as is sometimes suspected, to remove many people from the rolls. I am referring to a situation which occurred in the city of New Westminster in the fall of 1977 that was particularly gross. I should like to draw it to the attention of the minister because this kind of thing happens. It seems that the forms get more complex every year. There is a profusion of paper and various trick questions are floating all over the place.

Of course one of the standard questions has always been: "What rate of pay do you expect when you go out and apply for work? What rate of pay will you accept?" If a prospective job applicant wants to be safe and not be put into the danger of being cut off from benefits or never being allowed to collect them in the first place, he must answer this very standard question by saying, "the prevailing rate". If he sets any rate in his answer, very often the axe comes down and he does not get the benefits. One should say, "the prevailing rate", no matter how many times one is asked the question. One should come back with the same answer whether it is asked 100 or 200 times. Sometimes it is almost that ridiculous.

In the case in question, a young jobless woodworker went into the UIC office in New Westminster. He was asked this question innumerable times by the official. I suppose the questioner finally got tired and asked him, "What was the rate of pay at the last job in which you worked?" The young man told him, and he watched as the official of the commission wrote that answer into the blank following the question he had been trying to get answered for some time. None of us, least of all myself, will suggest that there are ogres working in this department who have a blood lust to cut people off UIC. But there is some kind of pressure on people when public servants, who are normally very conscientious, feel somehow driven into that kind of situation.

If this young woodworker had been an employee who was not aware of how the system worked, very likely he would never have received the benefits. He happened to realize something about his own rights. He went to the business agent of his local union and there was a little hell to pay, quite understandably. I hope that sort of thing does not happen often, but we wonder just how many cases there are which perhaps are not that bad. I am thinking of cases which happen from time to time that we do not hear about. There are many, many people not at all aware of their rights for every one who realizes he or she can stand up and demand some recognition and justice.

From my own experience in being in lunchrooms over a number of years, in the federal sphere I do not think there is an institution which is perhaps more despised and hated in the country, with the possible exception of the compensation boards in the provinces. Both those institutions are presumably set up to assist people who are in need and thrown out of the workplace through no fault of their own. It is a shame those attitudes prevail, but something symbolic must be done from time to time. There should be some very clear statements and directives which people on the outside hear, if working people are to begin to renew their faith in government processes and in departments that are hopefully set up to help them in those circumstances. Certainly we would be far better served to do that than to have the profusion of advertisements to which the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young) referred a few moments ago. I am referring to the advertisements which only lead to increasing the backlash which seems all too ready to surface in times of high unemployment.

While I am on that topic, I should like to refer to another matter which is of great concern. It always surprises me that conservatives of Liberal or Tory stripe—I realize that not all people in both parties are conservatives and that there are some reasonably progressive people among both—can go out of their way from time to time to create backlashes. Particularly it is appropriate to some of my friends to my right who over the last three, four, five or six years have gone out and created a backlash. Then when governments of whatever stripe respond to that backlash, they make a career out of complaining about the results. That sticks in my craw, and it sticks in the craw of a lot of people with whom I have worked. It does not increase respect for the political and democratic process, nor of the people within it. We could do with a lot less of it. I do not want to dwell on that, but I hope some people will take it to heart, not as a castigation but just to think before we give such enthusiastic publicity or go on extravaganzas of complaining about the abuses which take place.

If I may I think I will call it six o'clock, because I want to change tack tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before calling it six o'clock I want to apologize to the hon. member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Gendron). My understanding is that the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) has asked to call it six o'clock and wishes to continue his speech tomorrow.

Mr. Kristiansen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the hon. member have the consent of the House to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In order to complete what I was about to say, as members know, ordinarily the Chair alternates between hon. members on either side. I did not notice the hon. member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup was seeking the floor, so following the hon. member for Kootenay West tomorrow the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROVISIONS RESPECTING HAND-GUNS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Under present gun control laws, the black-powder hand-gun is classified as a restricted weapon. In the words of the National Firearms Association, "if one has any knowledge whatever of the intricacies involved in the operation of these firearms, it would be like comparing the use of a model-T in modern car races". Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That this ridiculous provision be brought before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to be reviewed and amended immediately.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CRITICISM OF GARRISON DIVERSION PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the Garrison diversion project in North Dakota.

Whereas the Congressional supporters of the Garrison diversion project in North Dakota have attached an additional amount of $9,7 million appropriation for the project to Mount St. Helens' disaster relief bill as an obvious move to bypass the United States administration opposition to the Garrison project, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House deplores the tactics employed by the Garrison promoters in the United States Congress, and that the Secretary of State for External Affairs contact the United States Secretary of State, Edward Muskie, directly today in order to express the sentiments of this House and impress upon him the serious concerns we have affecting this very important issue relating to the relations between our two nations.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FUNDING OF GARRISON DIVERSION PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity and with a view to giving the House a second chance with respect to the issue of the Garrison River diversion project.

Today the United States Senate is considering a supplemental appropriation bill which would provide $9.7 million in funding to the Garrison diversion project in the state of North Dakota. In view of the fact that the completion of this project in its presently approved form would be almost inevitable should these funds be approved, and that the completion of the project would spell environmental disaster for the lakes and waterways of Manitoba and would be in violation of the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House unanimously communicate to the United States Congress its disapproval of any action on the part of the United States Senate or House of Representatives which would provide further funds to the Garrison diversion project, until such time as all possibility of inter-basin biological transfer and the ecological disaster it represents is eliminated from the Garrison plan.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TAX CONVENTIONS

DEBATE THEREON—ALLEGED FILIBUSTER BY CONSERVATIVE MEMBER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will be attending the Summit conference in Venice next week, and that Bill S-2 relating to tax conventions with a number of nations, including Italy, is before the House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang):

That this House urges the hon. member for York-Peel to end his personal filibuster of Bill S-2 in committee so that the good will of Canada to Italy can be exhibited in Venice next week.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

STARVATION AND SUFFERING IN UGANDA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 is seconded by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) and the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle).

On two nights this week, CBC national television news has shown horrifying pictures of starvation and human suffering in Uganda, a country which has never recovered from the devastation it experienced under the former regime of Idi Amin. Therefore, I move:

That this House express the deep concern of many Canadians for spreading starvation and malnutrition in several parts of the world by specifically urging the government to direct emergency humanitarian assistance to Uganda.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

SALE OF FUEL TO FOREIGN VESSELS AND AIR CARRIERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that offshore oil subsidies will reach approximately $3.7 billion this year, and because millions of dollars worth of subsidized fuel is being sold to foreign interests while in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis):

That this House instruct the government to immediately establish a practice whereby all fuels sold to foreign vessels and air carriers in Canada be sold at the world price.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CRASH OF SOVIET SATELLITE ON CANADIAN SOIL—CLEAN-UP EXPENSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): I rise, Madam Speaker, to propose a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the 1978 crash of a Soviet satellite carrying a nuclear reactor caused extensive contamination damage and, hence, expensive clean-up operations in northern Canada, and since reports indicate the failure of Canada's attempts to negotiate damage costs recovery, despite the fact that both Canada and the U.S.S.R. are signatories to a 1972 international liability convention, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House condemn the Soviet Union for its failure to settle its $6 million clean-up obligations, and that the Department of External Affairs request the creation of an international claims commission in an attempt to settle this contentious matter.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF VANCOUVER ART GALLERY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since the Government of Canada has declared itself in favour of federal funding for the new permanent home of the Vancouver art gallery, and since the $5 million in private money raised locally was contingent upon federal government support, and since the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) has had ample time to review cultural funding requests, as he promised in the House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney):

That this House instruct the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications to cease his procrastination, and to announce forthwith his decision regarding the funding of the Vancouver art gallery.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

MEASURES TO ASSIST HOME OWNERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The sectoral conference on housing held in Edmonton at the end of January, 1978, attended by federal and provincial ministers, reached agreement on the need to permit home owners property tax deductibility on the principal residence up to an approved maximum. As the housing industry is now in serious need of stimulus, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance include in the forthcoming budget a home owners property tax deduction feature of up to $500 on principal residences; and, futhermore, that a similar deductible feature of up to $250 be included for renters.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LAYCRAFT INQUIRY—ALLEGED BUGGING BY RCMP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that the Laycraft inquiry into alleged bugging by the RCMP of certain Alberta police officers was prevented from receiving important documents because of a certificate filed pursuant to section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act by the then solicitor general Francis Fox on grounds of national security, and in view of the fact it now appears that the grounds for RCMP secrecy in that case were not national security, but an illicit liaison between staff sergeant Maduk of the RCMP and a local RCMP staff person, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House call upon former solicitor general Francis Fox to appear before the justice committee to defend his abuse of the provisions of section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act, and to call upon him to explain why he was either misled by the RCMP, or why he misled the Federal Court of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REHIRING OF LAID-OFF EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that three weeks ago CNR laid off one-half of its rail car repairmen in Prince Edward Island, and in view of the fact that CN has now rehired these men at least until July 31 so that negotiations about the future of the men can proceed without further loss of their pay, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That this House commend CNR for rehiring the employees and that it urge CN to make every possible effort to retain the employees in Prince Edward Island after July 31.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

OIL PRICING—NEGOTIATIONS WITH ALBERTA—WELLHEAD PRICE

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. From a brief discussion I had with the minister during the luncheon hour, and according to press reports over the last hour or two, it appears that his negotiations with the minister of energy of Alberta, yesterday and today, have failed to result in an agreement with respect to energy pricing.

Can the minister confirm that talks have indeed broken off, whether or not the existing agreement will be extended for the one-month period as reported, confirm whether or not the Prime Minister and Premier Lougheed will be meeting during this extended one-month period? Finally, would he indicate, if the agreement is being extended, whether or not it will include a semi-annual price increase at the wellhead, likely due on July 1?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I shall try to answer seriatim the questions raised by the hon. member. I held meetings both yesterday and today with my colleague from Alberta. I think we had a very helpful exchange of views and very helpful discussions. We considered two additional proposals which I put forward. These additional proposals, which were additional to two previous proposals I had put forward, were not considered satisfactory. It was felt, therefore, that it was advisable to extend the present arrangement by one month to August 1 and during that time to arrange for a meeting between the Prime Minister and the Premier of Alberta.

We also agreed that in the meantime, before the first ministers' meeting, we would try to have further exchanges in order to advance the discussions. I would also advise the hon. member that there will be no increase in the price of oil or gas during the month of July. The present arrangement will merely be extended to August 1.

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, the minister has repeatedly said that he is not prepared to make public the details of his proposals until he has had a chance to discuss them with the other producing provinces, namely, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. Can the minister inform the House whether or not meetings are now scheduled with the two other producing provinces and, if so, the dates of those meetings? Can he also give us a firm date, now, upon which he will make public to the House the details of the proposals that he has set forth so far?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am meeting with the minister of energy of Saskatchewan, Mr. Messer, tomorrow in Ottawa. My office is in touch with my colleague in British Columbia, and we are trying to find a mutually convenient date for a meeting. I shall be available to meet with my counterpart in British Columbia during the course of next week if he can make it.

With regard to the hon. member's question about releasing the details of the negotiations, after discussions with my colleague from Alberta we agreed that it would be preferable not to reveal the details of the discussions until after the first ministers have met some time in July and concluded their discussions.

INDUSTRY

LOSS OF JOBS IF RECESSION CONTINUES—EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It relates to my concern about the state of Canada's manufacturing industry and the potential loss of jobs if this current recession continues.

With the first quarter's drop in the GNP indicating general weakness in the economy, does the minister feel that a further reduction in interest rates is appropriate, particularly as Canadian rates are so high relative to those in the United States?

● (1420)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, due to the floating rate policy of the Bank of Canada which is supported by this government, interest rates are already much lower than they were when the Conservatives were in office.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, again we have a great indication of how forthcoming the minister can be when answering a very straightforward question. In the formation of his economic development strategy, does the minister regard the level of the Canadian dollar as a key element in the international, competitive position of Canadian industry and in the decision-making process of companies considering investment in plant and equipment? If so, will he indicate to the House the appropriate level for the Canadian dollar which is consistent with the competitive position of Canadian manufacturing companies so that these companies can plan their future with some assurance?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, I certainly consider this to be a key aspect to the success of companies, but I do not think the previous government was willing to state an appropriate level for the dollar. I think this can be left to the very capable Minister of Finance.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I think we are trying to look forward to what we can expect from this government in the future, rather than continually looking back. In view of the answers the minister has given, will he tell the House how the current policy of relatively high interest rates, compared to those in the United States, and the climbing exchange rate is beneficial to the current long-term interests of the Canadian manufacturing industry?

Will the minister make strong representations to his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to reverse this policy? If that does not happen, will he again promise to resign if the Minister of Finance does not act in that direction?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, we have seen a great breakthrough since the Conservatives, for the first time, are trying to look forward, rather than back. I want to assure my hon. friend that I am talking frequently and directly with the Minister of Finance on the matters he has outlined. We will continue to have policies that will further the well-being of the manufacturing sector of this country and the entire economy, unlike the circumstances when the previous government was in office.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON GARRISON RIVER DIVERSION PROJECT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At this very moment a special subcommittee of the United States Senate is considering a special measure, which it is anticipated will be passed by that committee, which will provide $9.7 million for the Garrison River diversion project in North Dakota. It is further anticipated that, if this happens this afternoon, the measure will be passed through the United States Senate later tonight.

Given the devastating effect this project will have on Manitoba, can the minister tell the House what action he has taken today to ensure that this contemplated action by the United States does not take place?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House that I will be issuing a press statement later on saying that we presented a note on this subject to the United States yesterday. If I may quote briefly from the note, we expressed the serious concern of the Canadian government that important new funds may be appropriated for the Garrison River diversion project. We are especially concerned about this because it is a rider to a bill on another subject and so might not receive proper consideration. We therefore took this unusual step of expressing our views in strong language in a note to the United States government. We welcome the endorsement of the opposition, which I think we have, in expressing our feelings on this matter.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Americans are shaking in their boots after that strong note. Officials of the Canadian embassy in Washington expressed their view this morning that the measure is going to get through the Senate and will, therefore, become effective law because this particular measure is attached to a broader bill and cannot be vetoed by the president.

● (1425)

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs please wake up to the fact that he may have sent a note yesterday, but recognize that maybe he should get on the phone today and call his counterpart directly in the United States to head off this action?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, we take an extremely serious view of this matter. But the hon. member must recognize that, in terms at least, these additional funds are specified to be for work which is unrelated to any effect on Canada. We have made strong representations, and we shall continue to do so.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, there is at least a New Democratic Party member of Parliament who is in the U.S. Senate today trying to do the job which the minister should be doing. I would like to get clarification from the minister since, if the funds are approved for this particular part of the project, it means inevitably that the rest of the project will have to be completed and therefore the damage will be done to the province of Manitoba. Is the minister telling us today that he is really not very concerned that this part of the project is completed, in full knowledge that if it is, the final project will be completed, doing irreparable damage to the people of Manitoba?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, I am telling the hon. member that some members of the U.S. Congress may not realize the situation because the funds are specified to be for work in the United States. That is the reason we have made strong representations. The member of his own party to whom he is referring consulted me before going to the United States and received my encouragement for doing what he is doing. We are making our representations to the United States government as well.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

WHEAT SHIPMENTS UNDER AID PROGRAMS—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PRIVATE COMPANIES

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce if he and his assistant, the Minister of State for Trade, are using their advocacy role to untangle the interdepartmental confusion when aid wheat is shipped offshore. If they have not, will they take a lead role in solving the bureaucratic and legal entanglement that exists between the Department of Supply and Services, CIDA, the Canadian Wheat Board and the Department of Justice?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Huntington: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if he would seek an interim emergency payment which would prevent the bankruptcy of a private sector company that has performed its services to the letter of the law, but is unable to receive payment for damages due over the past three years from the government; that is, damages caused by the Canadian Wheat Board not being able to meet shipping schedules as agreed.

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into this matter on an urgent basis.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCENTIVE PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. For many years now the business and scientific communities have made numerous constructive and sensible submissions on how government can increase the level of vitally-needed research in Canada. When will the minister announce a practical R and D incentive program consistent with Canada's industrial needs, instead of simply continuing the same old tactics which have dropped Canada's level to less than half the level of other industrialized countries?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I recently met with representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to discuss with them the work they have done. I have also met with representatives of the Business Council on national issues. They put forward some very useful and constructive ideas on improving our efforts to assist research and development.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Gray: I am working actively on this matter with the Minister of Finance. But, as the hon. member has said, these are incentive measures which relate to a budget and they are matters of tax policy. I hope we will be able to proceed on them very soon.

Mr. Gilchrist: Madam Speaker, those are the kinds of measures I am talking about, submitted by responsible agencies such as the CMA. Because research and development is the most important factor in Canada's future industrial and economic development, even more important than oil exploration or movie-making, when will the minister implement the personal income tax legislation for research and development investments as that which exists for film-making?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, I do not want to treat a serious question facetiously. I could say that I will implement those changes if and when I ever become minister of finance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: John Evans just fainted.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

● (1430)

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, I am happy to say—and I think everybody agrees—that we have an outstanding Minister of Finance now, and he is treating the subject very seriously. I am working with him to get the kind of further action the hon. member is talking about, but about which his government did nothing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CONSTITUTION

DISCUSSIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I note that the Prime Minister will be going to London and having talks with Her Majesty the Queen and with the British prime minister. According to government sources, he will be talking about the constitution. I wonder whether he can confirm this to the House. I am talking about the report this morning that the Prime Minister will be talking to Her Majesty the Queen and the British prime minister about the constitution. Can he confirm that? If he will be having talks about the constitution, can he tell the House some of the details of those talks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there is no agenda set, that I know, which might include constitutional talks. With regard to the meeting with Her Majesty, it is usual with Her Majesty, as the Queen of Canada, to inform herself of how things are going in Canada in various areas, in Parliament and with respect to the constitution. I will inform her that we are meeting, the ten provinces and the federal government, and that we hope to carry out our pledge to bring in a new, renewed form of federalism in the very near future. Patriation, as the hon. member knows, is one of the subjects that the Minister of Justice and the other provincial ministers are discussing. Naturally, that would involve the British Parliament.

Turning to the hon. member's second question, I have no specific plan to discuss this with Mrs. Thatcher, the British prime minister. It is possible it will arise. If it does, I hope we will have the support of both sides of this House to end the situation where Canadian affairs must be cleared through the prime minister of another country, and that we will bring back the constitution once and for all. I will explain, of course, to anyone who wants to hear about it, that we hope on this side of the House—and, hopefully, on the other side—that we will get the consent of all provinces to assist the federal government in making this final step—I repeat—to put an end to a situation where Canada cannot amend its own constitution without getting permission from the British Parliament, something that should have been ended a long time ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Will the Prime Minister be making a proposal to the Queen or to the British prime minister about patriation? If so, what will that proposal be? Also, can he assure the House that he will not raise the possibility of any unilateral action while the negotiating process is under way? In other words, will he give that process a fair chance to work itself out, so that we can have a consensus of the provinces as well as the federal government before there is any patriation?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, if the hon. member is seeking reassurance from me—which I gave in my previous answer—that we will seek agreement among all provinces, certainly if asked I will say that that is the federal government's intention. I understand that even the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the members of that party supported a motion presented in this House by the hon. member for Edmonton East that we should get on with the process of patriation. I hope the NDP is not backing down from that commitment.

INDUSTRY

CAE INDUSTRIES BID FOR CONTRACT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister indicate why he failed to co-operate with CAE Industries in their bid to win a $300 million contract for Canada that would have resulted in 200 additional jobs? In indicating why he failed to co-operate, will he agree that this is discrimination against a healthy Canadian company?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I am glad to see the hon. member's conversion to the cause of Canadian nationalism—belated, but welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: The hon. member's premise that I failed to co-operate with the company is quite inaccurate. We worked actively to see if we could find, within the programs that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has to administer and within the envelope that he left me, capital funds to enable this project to go ahead. Unfortunately, I do not have a program yet available to provide capital assistance for non-defence related projects. I was able to offer the company loan guarantees which did not fit in their plans.

I intend to continue working with the company to help it to continue expanding and to succeed. I might point out that this company has already received some $21 million in assistance in the aeronautics and aerospace area through programs like the defence industry productivity program and an innovation grant under the enterprise development program to assist another automotive related project in St. Catharines.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: My supplementary is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who indicates that he is short of funds within his capital budget. Perhaps he can indicate why he gave preference to certain 100 per cent foreign-owned concerns such as Chrysler. As he knows, money was set aside for General Motors to assist them in expansion in the province of Quebec. He is now telling us there is no money available, even $13 million, to help a Canadian company that has been profitable and has been producing Canadian jobs with 3,500 people working for that concern.

Mr. Gray: If the hon. member is talking about General Motors, Madam Speaker, he is talking about a possible application by them under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the hon. member urging that the plant move from where it is located now into a DREE area? Let us have that on the record. Second, with respect to Chrysler, they received loan guarantees which would not be available until 1982. If CAE had wanted that kind of help, it was readily available to them, and still is available to them.

CONVENTIONS

DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES BY UNITED STATES VISITORS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is for the aspiring minister of finance, the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On May 23, the Department of Finance stated an agreement had been reached between Canada and the United States which would allow the deduction by Americans of expenses incurred while attending conventions in Canada. Will the minister confirm that this issue has been resolved?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, as I understand it, the matter has been resolved at the level of negotiation among officials. It still must be approved by governments—in the case of the United States, not only by the administration but by the U.S. Senate. I hope the agreement in question, which is part of negotiations for a tax treaty, will be in place very soon.

Mr. Fretz: Will the minister make strong recommendations to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to encourage him to discontinue making intemperate remarks so that he does not poison the atmosphere of Canadian-U.S. relations?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, there is no reason to urge my colleague and neighbour, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to cease making remarks which are aimed at helping the climate of relations between Canada and the United States.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTIONAL NEGOTIATIONS—APPEARANCE OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, who I understand is the minister responsible for constitutional negotiations, the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations and the minister who is chairman of the cabinet committee for Indians, Inuit and native peoples of Canada.

My question is: will the minister appear before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to indicate his dossier on the constitutional negotiations, so that members of the House might become more informed and more involved?

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, next week I will appear before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and if the hon. member wants to come and put some questions to me on that occasion, I will be glad to reply.

INDUSTRY

DEVELOPMENT OF TAR SANDS AND PIPELINE PROJECTS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that Canada has many multibillion dollar projects such as pipeline construction and tar sands development presently in the planning stages, I ask the minister: is it the government's intention to have all these major projects begin construction on the same day? If not, when will he announce a schedule for the orderly commencement of such projects?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): This is an important matter which we are working on constantly with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The hon. member has raised an important point. Orderly scheduling of these projects is important in the Canadian national interest.

Mr. Clarke: When will the government stop importing technical and engineering services and ensure that Canadian skills are used in these Canadian projects?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to find the hon. member supporting the commitment we made during the election campaign and in the throne speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: We already have a precedent for this type of action in the legislation setting up the Northern Pipeline Agency, and we will follow through with this precedent in the form of concrete action. We already have a group in my department working with the people who are putting together major projects to make sure that Canadian expertise and Canadian suppliers are used.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

FUNDS FOR LOANS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): My question, Madam Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and has to do with the Farm Credit Corporation. In some parts of the country the demand for Farm Credit Corporation loans is reported to be up by some 25 per cent or more, yet the allocation of funds for this year has been set at $5 million less than at the beginning of last year, and $55 million below the final allocation if we include the $50 million addition to the original allocation.

When does the government intend to increase the current allocation in accordance with the Liberals campaign promise of last February when they said, "We will increase the amount of money available to the Farm Credit Corporation"? When? How much money will be added?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member has followed closely what everybody has been saying about the Farm Credit Corporation—how good it is, what a great job it has done for agriculture in Canada, how it has on record 75 per cent of all long-term loans for farm and agricultural operations in Canada. We intend to improve even on that record. We intend to present, possibly before the House adjourns, new legislation which is necessary for us to allow Farm Credit to operate in a way in which I am sure, Madam Speaker, the hon. member himself would want it to operate, and so that all farmers in all parts of Canada will be treated in an equitable fashion.

We will not have programs such as they have in his province which give farm-start loans at reduced interest rates which put at a disadvantage farmers in other provinces which do not have the same resources as his province has to subsidize agricultural interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the minister that most of the provinces do not have programs competing with the Farm Credit Corporation, though they certainly do with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. There are very few provincial programs for the purchase of land under long-term loans. The question is still there, Madam Speaker, the promise was made during the election—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will have noted that all questions were quite short today. I would like the hon. gentleman to conform to that good rule.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The question of when the funds will be increased is still left in the air. We have not received an answer.

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, given the utmost co-operation of all members of the House, I would hope it would be soon.

RAPID TRANSIT

FUNDING OF HAMILTON, ONTARIO, PROJECT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the withdrawal of federal funds by the minister from the joint project with the province of Ontario to develop the Bathurst Street Go-train connection in Toronto, will the minister confirm that the $38.2 million contribution to the Hamilton rapid transit project will be made and that the letter of intent between the previous government and the province of Ontario will be honoured?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, this is still a subject for negotiations. Certainly I would like to see that project proceed.

Mr. Kempling: The minister is saying that the matter is not going to be confirmed by the new government. I want to know if he can tell us when they will recommit the $30 million contribution to the Bathurst Street Go-train connection in Toronto.

Mr. Gray: First of all, Madam Speaker, I did not say that we are not confirming the Hamilton project. With respect to the other matter I will look into it and report to the hon. member as soon as possible.

SMALL BUSINESS

SUBSIDIES FOR OFFSHORE SHIPPING COMPANIES—JOBS IN SHIP REPAIRING INDUSTRY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Businesses. I am sure the minister is aware of the importance of maintaining a strong domestic capability for the construction and repairs of ships in Canada, which involves some 15,000 direct and 45,000 related jobs in that industry. When is the minister going to announce the continuation of the 20 per cent subsidy which is due to expire on June 30 of this year?

What other badly-needed measures will the hon. gentleman announce to match the subsidies which offshore shipping companies are receiving from their governments so that Canadian companies will have a fair and equal chance when tendering for orders?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State, Small Businesses): Madam Speaker, I have had some meetings with the Canadian Association of Shipbuilders. Cabinet is now considering various possible options to give a new impetus to the program which, as we know, will end on June 30.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

USE OF NUCLEAR TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister tell the House what Canada is doing to ensure that Pakistan does not join the nuclear club, or market that technology through the capability of the reactor Canada sold to them?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, from time to time there have been press reports, as there are now, that Pakistan is involved in the production of nuclear technology leading to a nuclear bomb. We have not been able to verify those reports, but because we have been concerned about them, the government, and the previous government, have both conveyed their strong feelings to Pakistan that no action should be taken which would lead in this direction. As the House knows, we have not been involved in nuclear co-operation with Pakistan since 1976 and, of course, we continue to be very concerned about their use of the technology they have. We are monitoring the situation closely.

SALE OF NUCLEAR FACILITIES WITHOUT SAFEGUARDS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the concerns expressed by him and by many countries around the world about the danger to world peace of the development or potential development of a nuclear bomb by Pakistan, and given the early involvement in the nuclear cycle in Pakistan by AECL, will the minister give a clear and emphatic guarantee to the House of Commons and to the people of Canada that the government will not enter into the sale of nuclear reactors or nuclear facilities to any country that does not abide by full-scope safeguards, such as Argentina?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, that is certainly the policy of the government—not to enter into agreements with any such country. This has been made clear many times, and I expressed that view recently to representatives of the Argentine government.

INDUSTRY

EXCISE TAX ON NORTH AMERICAN-BUILT CARS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the ailing auto industry where further staggering lay-offs are continuing; in fact, weekly UIC pay-outs to laid off auto workers are approaching $6 million to $7 million a week, while auto parts manufacturers are closing down and going under. Yet we find no concrete action being taken by the government—just talk.

My question therefore is this: Since there are a number of options which could and should be taken in this country, such as imposing quotas on offshore imports, eliminating the 9 per cent federal excise tax on North American-built cars, along with many others, when will the minister stop pussyfooting around and take the immediate action which is necessary in order to stimulate the industrial sector of our economy?

● (1450)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): We are actively working, Madam Speaker, on all the kinds of options which my hon. friend mentioned. We want to make sure that the actions we take will not have adverse consequences on the economy as a whole and on sectors other than the automotive sector. I am working on the whole matter actively with the Minister of Finance.

I want to confirm that our formal consultations on the auto pact with the United States government will begin in Washington on June 27, and I am personally leading the delegation. I will be going to Japan in the last week of July to begin discussions personally with the heads of the major Japanese automotive manufacturers.

I might say that while hon. members seem to keep on sniping at the assistance we are giving to enable the Chrysler Corporation to expand, to restructure and retool, that effort will help preserve the existence of a large number of independent Canadian parts manufacturers and the jobs connected with them, and the sourcing clause in that agreement will also enable us to put pressure on the company to expand their sourcing. So we are taking concrete action in a number of important areas.

Mr. Jelinek: The minister has been saying this for four or five months, but no action has been taken—it is just talk. I wonder, if he would tell that to the unemployed, what they would think about it.

In any event, I wonder if the minister can now justify the $4 billion auto parts deficit with the United States, and tell us as well what specific proposals—and I mean specific proposals—he intends to make to the Americans later this summer which would reverse the negative position in which Canadians find themselves so far as the auto pact is concerned. In other words, what incentives can Canadian auto parts manufacturers look for? They certainly need some.

Mr. Gray: I could ask my hon. friend exactly whose side he is on. Why does he want me to tip my negotiating hand with the Americans before the meetings even begin? But I can also say to my hon. friend that during the election campaign, in our automotive policy statement we said we would put into place a facility in the enterprise development fund to help the auto parts manufacturers to get the capital they need to retool and re-equip. Work on that project is quite far advanced.

With regard to my hon. friend's concern about action and talk, in this part of my hon. friend's government's life they had not even called Parliament—they were not even talking. We are talking about concrete steps and we are taking those steps right now in the interests of Canadian workers and the Canadian economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You said you would resign if the interest rates went up, and you did not.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REVIEW OF DRUGS, PESTICIDES, FOOD ADDITIVES—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In 1977, it was found that the Industrial Biotest Laboratories had falsified and shredded documents relating to the testing of thousands of federally-approved products, including drugs, pesticides, food additives and industrial chemicals. The same year the Canadian government recognized the problem and set up a review procedure. Here we are, three years later, and these products are still on the market, despite the fact it was discovered that two-thirds of the tests were found to be invalid. Under Canadian law, I understand—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put his question?

Mr. de Jong: I should like to ask the minister whether she is prepared to recommend to her colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, that he ban the use and registration of these products in Canada.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, as we say in French, the hon. member is in the potatoes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Madam Speaker, I was saying that the member is not in pesticides but in the potatoes. Yesterday he asked me a question on a matter which I consider to be very serious and one that should be studied and dealt with as such, that is, the many data analyses to decide whether or not the use of pesticides is acceptable in several countries, including Canada. I gave him the findings and was even kind enough to hand over to him my documentation so he would understand the question better. This afternoon he acted in the typical fashion of the New Democratic Party which is always seeking to alarm Canadians about their health in connection with the colour of the food they eat or the size of the package it comes in. I would like to say to him that he has erred, that this question is seriously wrong and will deceive the people. He has just said in the House that two-thirds of the pesticides have been found unacceptable. It is a mistake. Eight pesticides have been found safe and can be used, so we know there is no mistake about that. I told the hon. member that I am now drafting a press release on the matter.

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, I might be in the potatoes, but I really wonder where the minister is. I understand she is concerned with, and responsible for, the health of the Canadian people. Here we have a lab which has deliberately falsified information, and we are using products based on that—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It seems that we cannot win. When we get short questions, we get heckling.

An hon. Member: We get long answers.

Mr. de Jong: Would the minister give us the assurance that she will not pass the buck and ask the Department of Agriculture to take the responsibility for the testing of these products but that, indeed, her department will carry the investigation through as soon as possible?

Miss Bégin: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is a relatively new member. He should know that the drama of my life is that I do not pass the buck enough. So this is obviously not my usual way of conducting the affairs of the department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

INQUIRY WHETHER MEASURES WILL BE TAKEN TO RESTORE SUPPORT PRICE OF RED FISH

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

In view of the fact that red fish prices in Canada have dropped from 10.5 to 7.5 cents a pound, and that this price decrease has led to the closing down of a plant on the Magdalen Islands and the lay-off of 265 workers, could the minister tell the House whether he intends to take energetic measures to restore the support price of red fish?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question, all the more as I know that this situation worries many fishermen and plant workers.

The price of red fish on the American market has dropped sharply. Iceland and Canada have entered into competition that is harmful to Canadian fishermen and workers. We are trying to straighten things out. I asked the Price Stabilization Board to report to me on this question and I am waiting for that report to see if we can be of any assistance to red fish plants which are experiencing difficulties.

ENERGY PRICING—IMPACT ON AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY AND JOBS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the automobile industry's problems and lost jobs are clearly a result of the uncertainty of the government's policy surrounding energy pricing, is the minister pressing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister to produce a long-term energy pricing policy so that industry can plan and can avoid more industrial problems and lost jobs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we already have the elements of a good energy policy. That is why we are here with a majority.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: The minister is having trouble seeing in any direction—forward, backward, up or down. The minister should also be concerned about the supply problem. When can we expect the minister to begin speaking out publicly about the need for a secure domestic supply of oil?

Mr. Gray: Whatever problems I have, at least I do not have the hearing problem of my hon. friend. I was speaking about this problem even before we took over the government—when we were in opposition, and well before that.

TRANSPORT

FUNDING OF BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL DEVELOPMENT AND SHIPMENT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the acting minister of transport. I should like to point out that our Minister of Transport has trouble differentiating between grain shipments—the gold commodity—and coal shipments, which is the black commodity. So I would like to say I am talking about the black stuff.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: This week, the B.C representative in the other place admitted there was no direct federal funding available for B.C. coal development on terms acceptable to the B.C. government, but he indicated that some funds might be available in the future. When will the minister announce these funds, and for what purpose will they be used?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the Minister of Transport is out west for discussions. I will be glad to bring this matter to his attention as soon as he returns.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Again let me say that the Minister of Transport has trouble telling the difference between natural gas exports and grain exports, and I should like to ask the minister this question. Since British Columbia is going to use natural gas revenues to construct the railway line for transporting coal, will the minister assure the thousands of British Columbians that they will not lose their new jobs because he will pre-empt this source of revenue?

• (1500)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am sure that in whatever arrangement we arrive at with the producing provinces there will be ample revenues to ensure that British Columbia will prosper with the help of the British Columbia government and the national government of this country. I can assure the hon. member that she has no reason to fear.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, by way of a point of order, I wonder if I might direct a question to the government House leader. Could he tell us the business of the House this day, tomorrow and into next week as far as he can see?

Also there is the matter of the designation of an allotted day. If one has not been designated, perhaps he might look into that.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, today we will continue debate on second reading stage—and hopefully reach the conclusion of that debate—of Bill C-3, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. In the following order we will be looking at Bill C-35, Bill C-5 and Bill C-22. The first day the House will be sitting next week is Wednesday.

[Translation]

Wednesday of next week will be a day allotted, I think, to the New Democratic Party. Then we will try to complete the debate at Committee of the Whole stage as well, I hope, as on third reading of Bill C-19, to amend the Employment Tax Credit Act, and Bill S-6, to amend the Two-Price Wheat Act. If tomorrow we do not complete the debate on Bill C-22, to adjust the Accounts of Canada, we hope to be able to do so sometime next week. That is the work for next week, subject to the return to the House from the committees of priority bills which the government might decide to consider ahead of those I have just listed.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there have been some reports of statements being made by the leader of the government respecting proposed reforms in the Standing Orders and practices of the House of Commons. The most recent report I have seen appeared in the current edition of The Legion magazine. Prior to the adjournment of Parliament for the summer, is the government House leader planning to table a document in the House of Commons respecting his precise proposals for reform of the House? If he is doing that, would he consider quickly a reference to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization in order to give that committee an opportunity to organize itself and to look at certain firm proposals, on the understanding that we would have some proposals to make as well? The reports seem to indicate that perhaps it is time, rather than talking about parliamentary reform, that Parliament start to take a look at it. What are the plans of the minister respecting that?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I have not read the article to which my learned colleague has just referred concerning a time frame for the proposed reform of our Standing Orders in order to streamline them and make them more efficient and probably more human. I am prepared to entertain his suggestion. I should like to remind him, however, that in 1974 and 1975 our Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization had the opportunity to deal in depth with this. Three reports were published following these committee meetings, and we have also benefited from the opinions expressed by both sides of the House on these proposed reforms. Some of them are even favoured by the former government House leader and we have found them interesting. The study stage is not necessarily over, but it is well advanced, so that we might now consider quicker ways to make this Parliament more efficient, but always after consultations with both sides of the House.

If my hon. colleague will help me set the tone, I am willing to repeat the same suggestion I made to him last week to set a 20-minute time limit on speeches until the summer recess. If he can agree to that today on behalf of his party, and if the Leader of the New Democratic Party can do likewise, I undertake to limit the time allotted for speeches to 20 minutes until the summer recess. This could be a step in the right direction and help make Parliament more efficient and more equitable. I would point out to my colleague that it would not penalize the opposition. If speeches were shortened to 20 minutes it would not take time away from the Progressive Conservative or the New Democratic Party. It would give more members and particularly members from western Canada an opportunity to get involved in the debate. That would only be fair in a House that now has 282 members.

Finally, to answer the question of my colleague on parliamentary reform, I would say we are open to reform and the methods to be used. We want them to be the most expeditive and the fairest. We want to make changes in the spirit of Parliament and in consultation with all members of this House.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the problem with parliamentary reform in this House is that it has not been parliamentary reform in the real sense; it has been little piecemeal bits such as shortening the length of time of speeches. I am prepared to discuss proposals with respect to limiting debate regarding the length of speeches, but this Parliament wants to discuss much more than that in terms of parliamentary reform and in terms of the private members of this House. I think it is important that my friend recognizes this willingness to discuss, as he has, that he presents his proposals to Parliament—we have presented our proposals—so that there is an opportunity for input from all members of the House of Commons and changes are made in an appropriate manner, that is, by considered discussion within the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. That is my point.

Dealing once more with matters respecting parliamentary affairs, there has been a great amount of agitation. Indeed the former government, in which I occupied the position of my friend, proposed a parliamentary inquiry into the whole question of nuclear energy in Canada and the question of the nuclear age in relation to Canada and the world. I know there is an ongoing investigation within the government respecting that matter. Does the government have any plans to create a select committee, a joint committee or some committee of the House of Commons, so that those matters being pursued within the bureaucracy can be pursued publicly in the House? He may not be able to answer that question today, but will he take it as notice of our interest in making that discussion public, so that the public will have an opportunity for some input into that very important question?

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, may I indicate to the government House leader that we agree with the statement just made by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton that the place to sort out our rules and recommend changes is in a committee where consideration can be given to those changes on a rational basis. We can hardly change the rules of Parliament by a snap decision of the floor of the House. We are prepared to discuss these matters in committee, including any change which might be made in the length of speeches.

However, there are two other questions I should like to put to the minister at this time. As he may know, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs two days ago, said that his legislation respecting pensions for the widows of disabled veterans and respecting changes in the War Veterans Allowance Act is sufficiently far advanced that it could be dealt with before a summer recess. We do not know when that date will be, but if there is to be a summer recess, it will have to be dealt with within the next few weeks or a month. Can the minister assure us that he will co-operate with the Minister of Veterans Affairs in making available time to deal with that legislation?

My other question to the government House leader is one that has been put to him before. When will the promised legislation respecting freedom of information be put on the order paper?

● (1510)

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, concerning the remarks made by the Conservative parliamentary leader, I want to say two things. First, he indicated how his party thought a more in-depth parliamentary reform might be made. I agree there are deep changes to be made. However, experience has shown that if we are overly anxious to make changes in this institution we might in fact end up with absolutely no change at all. I would not want opposition parties to try to prevent changes from being made to the rules of this House by ridiculing what could be done as a first step because they think the changes do not go deep enough. I do not believe that is the intention of my colleague. However, I want to tell him there is no doubt in-depth changes will have to be made sooner or later but that should not prevent more urgent changes from being made to bring this institution more in line with the requirements of the eighties. I would not want that once again steps be taken so we would be in a situation where, to avoid the simplest changes, we would be caught in endless committee, subcommittee and commission of inquiry meetings and in the meantime have hon. members become disabused and see their role become increasingly less interesting. In any case the spirit of changes that could be made, regardless of the method or the means used, would be to enhance the role of hon. members and make this institution more efficient, more modern and more humane. That is how those changes will be made, without penalizing opposition parties and in consultation with members on both sides of the House.

So, whatever the means used, whether it is a special committee or the existing Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization or meetings between parliamentary leaders or joint party caucuses, whatever the method used for the in-depth reform, the objective would be to make this institution more modern and more in line with the requirements of the eighties. I want to assure my colleague that we are prepared to forsake traditional means finally to arrive at changes that are in the spirit of what was indicated in the Speech from the Throne.

With respect to the second point, the hon. member talks of a select committee or committees on a matter of great interest. He knows full well that we now have six parliamentary task forces which are special committees of the House of Commons considering matters of national interest. His suggestion concerns another matter and I believe it would be wise to wait for the reports of these committees which must be tabled by December 19. If the experience is worth while, there is nothing to prevent us from considering setting up new parliamentary task forces which could deal with the subject he has mentioned.

As for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, he raised three points. First, he wanted some assurance that any changes to parliamentary procedure would be made through a committee of the House. I cannot give him that assurance for the reasons I have just stated, but I can assure him that any change that might be made will be implemented only after reasonable consultation with all members of the House. I do not want to set any restrictions concerning the means to bring about such changes. As for any major reform, it is, of course, more logical for such changes to be considered by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. However, changes which might be needed more urgently could be implemented without spending several months in committee, but always after consultation, and in any case, Parliament would be advised.

According to the hon. member, the Minister of Veterans Affairs stated in committee that drafting of the bill was nearly completed and that he thought it could be dealt with before the summer recess even though he did not know when Parliament would adjourn. If this is so, and I believe the Minister of Veterans Affairs, I shall co-operate with him so that the bill can be introduced as soon as possible. As for the summer recess, I do not know when it will come. As to his third point, when we can expect the bill on freedom of information to be introduced in the House, I can assure him that this is one of the priorities of the government and that we shall introduce this bill as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the government House leader with regard to the veterans' legislation. I wonder if he is aware of the fact that both the spokesman for the Progressive Conservative party and I, as spokesman for our party, gave the assurance in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs the other day that the House would deal with that legislation in less than a day, and will he take that into consideration in arranging for that legislation to be brought forward before the summer recess, whenever it is to take place?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, on the same point of order, my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, raised the question of freedom of information legislation. The Secretary of State and Minister of Communications has been charged by the Prime Minister with responsibility for both the freedom of information and privacy legislation. He should be aware of the proposal made by the previous government in both areas. Would the government House leader indicate to the House whether, at the same time as legislation on freedom of information is introduced, the House will also be presented with legislation on privacy, and will an effort be made to introduce both bills prior to the summer recess in order to ensure that parliamentarians and Canadians at large can look at the contents of those bills over the summer recess?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the suggestion made by the hon. member is very interesting. I must admit that others have had the same idea and that there are very good chances that we might do what has been suggested.

[English]

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, when the government House leader announced the list of business for tomorrow he said he would call Bill C-5 in second position. I would ask the government House leader whether he would consider calling Bill C-5 next Friday rather than tomorrow, which would allow me to participate in the debate. I think I can say from this side of the House that it will be a very short debate.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am willing to accommodate the hon. member but I would not like all the work of the House to be delayed as a consequence. I will talk with the House leaders and, if possible, we will try to find something else to deal with as the second item tomorrow so the hon. member can attend his meeting. I will try to do so, but I cannot undertake to accommodate him at this stage.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES FUNDING FOR GARRISON DIVERSION PROJECT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, pursuant to my notice to you at noon today, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the matter of the Garrison diversion project and the effects of the Senate appropriation bill presently being considered by the United States Senate.

The United States Senate is presently considering a supplemental appropriations bill that would provide $9.7 million in funding to the Garrison diversion project. Should the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States approve such funding, the completion of the full irrigation project would be irreversible. It would cause pollution in Canadian waters and the introduction of nuisance fish species which would effect an estimated $6 million in damage annually to the commercial freshwater industry in Manitoba.

In addition the interbasin biological transfers that would result from the linking of the Hudson Bay and Missouri River basins would be a clear violation on the part of the United States of America of the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty Act which promises that one country will not pollute another's waters to the detriment of health and property.

Because of the extreme likelihood that this bill will pass the Senate this week, it is imperative that this House discuss this matter at the only opportunity available to it, which is this afternoon.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I did not intend to interrupt the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) who has introduced the motion under Standing Order 26, but I would draw your attention to section (3) of Standing Order 26 at page 18, which states:

> When requesting leave to propose such a motion, the member shall rise in his place and present without argument the statement referred to in Section 2 of this Order.

I believe it was the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) who three weeks ago introduced a motion under Standing Order 26 and who, in the introduction of this motion, presented considerable debate. I would ask your indulgence, Madam Speaker, to rule on this matter or at least give an interpretation of the rule. I know that you are very gracious and like to give all hon. members an equal break, but I do believe that, since there is a rule on the books, it should be observed unless we intend to change it.

Madam Speaker: I do not feel that the hon. member abused the rule. I believe that in the presentation of such a motion an hon. member is allowed to give a very brief explanation, but not to enter into argument, and on that point the parliamentary secretary is right.

With regard to this motion under Standing Order 26, it is undoubtedly a very important matter that the hon. member has raised, as it has been raised many times in this House and in committees over the past several years. In determining whether a matter should have urgent consideration and is appropriate to ask for the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26, the Chair must have regard to the extent that it concerns the administrative responsibilities of the Government of Canada or could come within the scope of ministerial action.

The written statement submitted by the hon. member shows concern in relation to a bill which is before the United States Senate. In this connection it is clear to the Chair that neither the Canadian government nor this House can interfere with proceedings in the United States Senate. There are already in place mechanisms as, for instance, the Department of External Affairs, for which the minister replied today during question period, and the International Joint Commission, which has been very active with regard to the problem raised by the hon. member, by which Canada may protect its interests in such matters.

Until such avenues are known to have been exhausted, it would be very difficult for the Chair to set aside its scheduled business, particularly in view of the fact, as noted in paragraph (5) of Standing Order 26, that there is a probability of the matter being brought before the House within a reasonable time by other means which could be more effective. For instance, the main estimates for the current year are before various standing committees where the various questions relating to this matter can be dealt with in depth.

For these reasons, I regret that the hon. member's request for leave cannot be accepted at this time. Should it not be possible to consider this matter in that way, or should the situation change substantially, the House may want to reconsider it then.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

Question No. 185—Mr. Herbert:

1. For each fiscal year (a) 1977 (b) 1978, what was the total revenue and net earnings or deficits for Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd?

2. For each year, what was the total (a) of direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits conferred by the government on the corporation (b) of loans, advances or guarantees extended by the government to the corporation (c) investment by the government in the corporation both before and after any write-off?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows:

1. (a) 1977

Total revenue—$132,795,000

Net deficits—$180,678,000

(b) 1978

Total revenue—$203,239,000

Net earnings—$ 20,249,000

2. (a) 1977

$110,057,000—Total parliamentary appropriations

1978

$128,491,000—Total parliamentary appropriations

$126,199,000—Loans forgiven

(b) 1977

$177,971,000—Loan advances

1978

$209,000,000—Loan advances

(c) 1977

nil

1978

$149,159,000—In 1978 Parliament granted AECL authority to convert loans from Canada into equity.

ELDORADO AVIATION LIMITED

Question No. 199—Mr. Herbert:

1. For each fiscal year (a) 1977 (b) 1978, what was the total revenue and net earnings or deficits for Eldorado Aviation Ltd?

2. For each year, what was the total (a) of direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits conferred by the government on the corporation (b) of loans, advances or guarantees extended by the government to the corporation (c) investment by the government in the corporation both before and after any write-off?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Eldorado Aviation Limited reports as follows:

1. (a) and (b) 1977 and 1978—nil

EAL operates on a non-profit basis with revenues being equal to expenses. Revenue is billed to Eldorado Nuclear Limited in flying hours and not in dollars. The costs of EAL are assumed into the costs of operating the Beaverlodge mine by ENL. The financial statements of EAL are consolidated in the ENL statement.

2. (a) 1977 and 1978—nil

(b) 1977 and 1978—nil

(c) 1977 and 1978—$28,000 (no write-offs)

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED

Question No. 202—Mr. Herbert:

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—HEALTH INSURANCE PROGRAMS

Question No. 235—Mr. Herbert:

1. Were officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare successful in defining the outer boundaries of portability or accessibility to the health insurance programs and, if not, for what reason?

2. Is it intended to define the uniform conditions in the federal medical care legislation?

3. How many physicians are known or believed to have emigrated from Canada in each of the past five years?

4. How many physicians are now known to practice outside medicare?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. Departmental officials have documented precedents and interpretations with respect to the program conditions which have evolved since the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Medical Care Act were passed. These have been provided to Mr. Justice Emmett Hall who is conducting the Health Services Review '79. It is hoped that the suggestions and recommendations of Mr. Justice Hall will serve as a basis for developing, in concert with the provinces, a better common understanding of the program conditions and what they entail.

3. Active Civilian Physicians Emigrated Abroad

Year	Total (excluding interns and residents)
1975	242
1976	363
1977	549
1978	663
1979	605

Source of Data: Computer tapes purchased from Sales Management Systems, Don Mills, Ontario.

4. Known physicians practicing outside medical care: About 2,200 practitioners.

RESEARCH INTO METHODS OF IMPROVING EFFICIENCY OF ENERGY FOR HOME HEATING

Question No. 307—Mr. Herbert:

Is the government conducting research into methods of improving the efficiency of using (a) oil (b) gas (c) electricity for home heating and, if so, have any findings been made public and would such information enable the householder to compare the present day comparative costs of these fuels for heating purposes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

(a) A major program to improve the efficiency of oil heating equipment has been developed by EM&R in conjunction with the Canadian Standards Association, oil furnace and burner manufacturers, and the oil industry. When installed, this package should reduce the energy consumption by an average of 20 per cent, both as a result of the more efficient combustion of oil and as a result of matching the size of the furnace more closely to the heating demand of individual houses. Before promoting such a program on a widespread basis, it has been essential that the retrofit package be tested and shown to be completely safe. An acceptable procedure for testing retrofit equipment has been developed by the Canadian Standards Association, and seven manufacturers are currently preparing to submit equipment for testing against this standard. The cost of these tests will be financed by EM&R. In addition to encouraging development and certification of acceptable equipment, the successful implementation of a retrofit program requires the upgrading of oil burner mechanics. To achieve this, EM&R has conducted a series of seminars to train provincial instructors of furnace servicing mechanics on appropriate techniques for installing the retrofit package.

Beginning this year, a publicity and promotion campaign is planned to advise the public of the package, and to inform them of the benefits of installing this equipment.

(b) No similar retrofit package has not yet been devised for gas heating equipment. A co-operative program with the gas association, the gas utilities and the provincial regulatory bodies has recently begun, and a research program designed to develop such a retrofit package will soon be initiated.

(c) With respect to electric heating, the federal government has over the past several years, provided substantial funding for the Canadian Electrical Association to support the development of heat pump systems which are appropriate for the Canadian climate. It is expected that when such systems are prepared, they will offer a significant efficiency improvement over current electric resistance heating. Studies have also been undertaken on the cost effectiveness of hybrid heat pump oil systems which would further improve the over-all performance of such systems during the entire heating season.

Since the above studies are generally at a research stage, no specific proposals to implement programs to encourage the widespread installation of such systems are in preparation.

The information which is currently available to householders will not generally permit a realistic assessment of the relative efficiency of specific oil and gas furnaces or boilers in their home. Steady-state efficiency measurements of gas heating systems are not made publicly available by the Canadian Gas Association. Further, the seasonal efficiency of a furnace varies considerably, largely as a result of proper sizing of the furnace to the heating requirements of the house. No simple method of estimating seasonal efficiency has yet been developed to allow householders to make reasonable predictions of final use in a specific furnace.

Other initiatives have been taken by the federal government to reduce the heating bill of householders, regardless of the type of fuel they use. The CHIP program under which grants of up to $500 are provided for insulation materials, was designed to encourage the installation of insulation materials which will reduce the average energy consumption by 37 per cent. In many cases of detached housing units, savings of over 50 per cent can be expected. This program can thus allow substantial savings in energy-related expenditures, regardless of the type of fuel which is currently used.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—NUMBER OF LAWYERS EMPLOYED

Question No. 605—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed on staff in the Ministry of State for Economic Development?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): None.

Order Paper Questions

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—CONTRACTS FOR PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 706—Mr. Clarke:

1. For the fiscal year 1978-79, how many contracts were let by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for professional services, to persons who at any time within the past five years, had been employed in indeterminate positions under the Public Service Commission?

2. How many contracts were (a) for less than one year (b) for one to two years (c) over two years?

3. How many contracts were let outside the National Capital Region?

4. What was the total cost of all such contracts?

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. 14 contracts.

2. (a) 11

(b) 3

(c) None.

3. None.

4. $90,683.00.

ENVIRONMENT—FIRE DAMAGES TO BUILDINGS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 720—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 due to fire damages to buildings recorded by the Department of the Environment in footnote number 3 at page 12.62, Volume I of the 1978-79 Public Accounts of Canada, did the department take steps to determine the cause of the fire in the hydrogen shed at (a) Baker Lake, N.W.T. (b) Fort Smith, N.W.T. and, if so, in each case, what were they?

2. Was the department able to determine if anyone was culpable in the fires and, if so, what action was taken against them?

3. Did the department undertake procedural or structural changes to ensure that such losses do not recur and, if so, what were they?

4. What use does the department make of the hydrogen sheds?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): 1. (a) The fire at Baker Lake, N.W.T. was investigated by a team comprised of R.B. Hall (Electrical Engineer—Instruments Branch), J. MacLeod (Air Inspector—Central Region) and J. Keefe (Safety and Security Officer Atmospheric Environment Service). In that the building was totally destroyed and the contents very badly burned, the task of determining the exact source of the fire was a difficult one. After careful examination of the fire scene and consideration of the information obtained from witnesses the investigating team concluded the probable cause of the fire to have been a malfunction in the electrical cubicle of the Stuart Electrolytic Hydrogen Plant. Because of the combustible nature of the building construction, the fire was able to spread to nearby walls and flooring.

(b) The fire at Fort Smith, N.W.T. was investigated by E. C. Holly, (Chief, Airport Emergency Services—Transport Canada, Fort Smith), P. Chporney (Meteorological Inspector—A.E.S. Western Region) and the station officer in charge. The cause of the explosion was immediately evident as having been a procedural one. A weather balloon being inflated with hydrogen was not adequately clamped to the filling stand and broke loose during the inflation process. The balloon, being lighter than air, immediately rose to the ceiling where ignition occurred (probably from static electricity) and the hydrogen gas exploded.

2. There was no evidence to indicate culpability in either incident.

3. The structural design of a hydrogen inflation/storage building has been under review for the past three years by Environment Canada and Transport Canada. As a result of this review a basic design package has been formulated which meets or exceeds all existing standards for such structures. Included in the new design is non-combustible construction material which probably would contain and prevent the spread of an electrical cubicle fire such as Baker Lake and adequate explosion venting which will enable a building to withstand the pressure of a balloon explosion as occurred at Fort Smith. The explosion venting also provides protection of anyone in the building at the time of such an explosion by preventing pressure increases which reach a hazardous level. In addition to the design changes, all upper air employees have been warned of the hazard associated with the balloon not being adequately clamped to the filling stand.

4. Hydrogen is needed for inflating aerological balloons because it is the lightest of all known gases. The balloons carry aloft an electronic instrument to measure the pressure, the temperature and humidity of the air through which it passes. The information thus obtained is picked up by a receiver at the ground station. Hydrogen sheds are used to house the Stuart Electrolytic Hydrogen Plant which produces hydrogen by means of the electrolysis of water. Hydrogen thus produced is stored in a 650 standard cubic foot tank at a maximum pressure of 100 pounds until it is used to inflate the balloon.

CN-CP—TELECOMMUNICATIONS—TCTS—COMPUTERS CONNECTED TO NETWORKS

Question No. 808—Mr. Beatty:

1. Do departments or agencies have computers which are connected as hosts to the (a) Datapac network of TCTS (b) Infoswitch network of CN/CP Telecommunications and, if so, which ones?

2. In each case, what was the average network traffic, measured in packets-per-day, in the first four months of 1980?

3. In each case, what application packages or data bases were remotely accessed during the first four months of 1980?

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. The following department or agencies have computers which are connected as hosts to the

(a) Datapac network of TCTS:

Agriculture

Communications

Energy, Mines and Resources

Environment

National Research Council

Post Office

Veterans Affairs

(b) Infoswitch network of CN-CP Telecommunications:

Employment and Immigration

Supply and Services

2. In each case, the average network traffic, measured in packets-per-day, in the first four months of 1980 was:

(a) Datapac:

Agriculture: 682

Communications: nil

Energy, Mines and Resources: 7,707

Environment: nil

National Research Council: 30,000

Post Office: 4,305

Veterans Affairs: 328

(b) Infoswitch:

Employment and Immigration: 57,026

Supply and Services: 5,000

3. In each case, the application packages or data bases which were remotely accessed during the first four months of 1980 are:

(a) Datapac:

Agriculture: AGNET scientific computing network

Communications: testing Telidon videotex system

Energy, Mines and Resources: a large number of mostly scientific data bases of which the followingare examples:

Financial and Personal Systems

Hazardous Materials

Mineral Deposits

Oil Import Compensation

Surveys and Mapping Project Control

St. Lawrence River Basin Study

Ottawa River Basin Study

Water Resources

Glaciological Data

NAQUADA (National Aquatic Quality Water Quality)

Fish Quota Management System

Foreign Fishing Vessels Licensing System

Tides and Water Levels

Wave and Climate

Environment: not operational at the time.

National Research Council:

CAN/OLE (On-Line Enquiry) system with 18 bibliographic data bases, such as:

Biological Abstracts

Alberta Oil Sands Index

Chemical Abstracts

Engineering Index

Canadian Transportation Documentation System

Northern Research

Post Office: Manpower Utilization and Analysis System

Veterans Affairs: veterans data base

(b) Infoswitch:

Employment and Immigration: Field Operational Support System for Immigration

Supply and Services: FINCON financial control system

TREASURY BOARD—STUDIES ON PENSIONS

Question No. 840—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1978, were studies made by the Treasury Board regarding the cost of continuing the full pension to the widow of the recipient of a public service pension?

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): No studies regarding the cost of continuing the full pension to the widow of the recipient of a public service pension have been completed since January 1, 1978. However, all aspects of survivors' benefits including their costs are now being reviewed in light of the recently promulgated regulations to the Human Rights Act as they relate to employee benefit plans.

INTERNATIONAL IMPORTS—WATERLOO ONTARIO

Question No. 933—Mr. McKinnon:

Did DND let a contract with International Imports of Waterloo, Ontario, for the purchase of $49,701 worth of rifles and, if so, for what type and for how many?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): The Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of DND let a contract with International Imports of Waterloo, Ontario for the purchase of 72 match rifles in the value of $49,701.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Wednesday, June 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Axworthy that Bill C-3, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, as we came to six o'clock yesterday, I indicated that I would be changing my tack from the cataloguing of various administrative and regulatory problems within the department which I discussed yesterday. I began my remarks yesterday by saying that one of our main reasons for opposing Bill C-3 is that the UIC program has come more and more to be one in which the people who have the least end up paying the most and receiving the least benefits, particularly in recent years.

I would like to refer to some figures which will demonstrate rather clearly how this is happening within the administration and the effect it is having on our unemployment insurance system. The figures to which I will be referring are based on 1978 statistics, so there may be some minor discrepancies, but basically the message will hold true. For example, for someone who had an earned income in 1978 of $6,000, the required contribution was $90. Of course, because of the income level, such an individual does not receive any deductions from taxable income because he does not have a taxable income. Therefore, the net contribution is $90, and should he become unemployed he would receive a weekly unemployment insurance benefit of $76.92.

For someone who earned $50,000 a year, the required contribution was $187.20. The tax savings received as a result of the deductions based on those contributions was $97.04. Basically the net contribution would have been $90.16 in order to be eligible for benefits. The benefits which he then received were $160 per week. Therefore, someone earning $6,000 would pay $90 to get $76.92, while the individual who earns $50,000 would make a net contribution of $90.16 in order to receive benefits of $160 instead of $77 per week.

Another example concerns an individual who earns $10,000. The net contribution would be $111.12 for the year which would then entitle that individual to $128.21. That figure is compared to someone who earns $20,000 and who makes a net contribution after taxes of $119.81 to receive $160. In other words, the lower a person is on the income scale, the more they pay, but the less the benefit to which they are entitled. The benefit evens out at annual earnings of approximately $15,000 a year, but there is an obvious inequity in such a system.

Any time we consider drawing up a social insurance plan or a means of redistributing income—and this is more properly an insurance plan—whether it is family allowance, UIC or anything else, members of this House would normally feel that people should pay according to their ability and not that the poorest pay the most to get the least.

Rather than pursuing the direction set by this bill, the government would be better advised to reduce dramatically all premiums and then not allow them as a deduction from income. I know that the minister cannot take such action on his own, but in order to overcome the inequities in the unemployment insurance system perhaps it would be wise to reduce the premiums and not make them deductible from income. This would make for a more fair distribution and a greater degree of equity in the unemployment insurance system, as those earning the most would pay accordingly; and in the event of becoming unemployed they would receive appropriate compensation. Because of the problems experienced in applying exemptions and deductions as opposed to tax credits, almost all our income redistribution and social insurance programs have suffered.

In 1971, when the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) was minister, he introduced what most people in the country and in this House considered to be a rather good package. Since then, the government which saw fit to give has also seen it as their prerogative to take away. As the years pass they have been taking more and more away. Premiums were slightly reduced at the beginning of 1978, but at the same time it was decreed that, instead of unemployment insurance benefits being set at 66⅔ per cent of normal earnings, they should be reduced to 60 per cent. Premiums have risen since then, so we are now paying more and receiving less.

The bill before us provides that in future the administrative costs of the national employment service will not be paid out of general revenue but rather will be covered through increases in employer-employee contributions. I fail to see the rationale for this, other than that it brings more revenue into the government's coffers. There is certainly no rationale in terms of equity or social cost accounting. Other items that come under the unemployment insurance program such as maternity leave, sick leave, etc., and which have gone beyond the bounds of the initial concept of unemployment insurance, should really not be paid for through employer-employee premiums. They are not related to the experience of any particular industry. On actuarial grounds it is difficult to justify such payments coming out of premium income rather than out of the general revenue of the government.

I should like to turn now to some examples of individual problems or localized issues which occur in the administration of the system. Yesterday I decried the backlash which sometimes occurs in the country and also in this House in times of high unemployment when people attempt to attack the unemployed instead of unemployment. We hear phrases like, "The unemployed are lazy and do not want to work"; or "They are freeloaders who have it too soft and can live better on UIC than on wages". This is an ironic commentary in itself on income levels in this society, Mr. Speaker. Statistics on unemployment issued within the past couple of months have predicted a growing problem for the next few years. If the usual line of thinking in the country is expressed, we will hear those phrases again and again in the future and there will likely be a call for a further crackdown on alleged abuses.

It has often struck me and many others, Mr. Speaker, that if the business community attempted to eliminate shoplifting it could go broke in the process. A percentage of abuse or loss must be allowed in any business. I think we ought to look at the unemployment insurance system in the same way. We should attempt to persuade the rip-off artists running around that they cannot get away with such abuse. But it is folly to engage in a program such as the one introduced a few years ago when hundreds of thousands of dollars were spent to hire investigators and run advertisements to bring the abuse below the level that is normal in any other business activity. Surely, at some time we reach the point of diminishing return.

I worry that we will face a period of backlash on this question very soon. Attempts to tighten up the system do not usually affect those who make a profession of ripping it off. Unfortunately, there are a few of those people and they quite often become specialists in this line. No matter how the regulations are tightened up or the laws redrafted, they can always find a way around them. Those who suffer are those who seldom claim benefits. They may mistakenly think that because they have contributed to the plan for years and years they have earned the right to benefits, but as they are not experts on the rules, when faced with stalling, red tape, trick questions or hassles their reaction is often to say, "To hell with the UIC and the government", and walk away with it. As a result, they and their families suffer because of their stubborn although rather admirable pride. It is through no fault of their own that they are out of work, even if it is only temporary, and they tend to resent interrogation and the often trick questions that they are faced with.

I should like to draw your attention now to a few specific areas that should be changed. In terms of the deduction of income tax from unemployment insurance benefits, it can be argued, and it is now the case, that we treat that as income. If we treated other sectors in our society in a somewhat equal way, I suppose one could say that that is fair. When we deal with the unemployed, we say a buck is a buck. The Carter royal commission tried to suggest that we do that in other areas of our economy a few years ago without as much success as it had in the administration of unemployment insurance.

Is it not possible for the government to consider holding back on the deduction, holding back on receiving those revenues, until the end of the tax year when people fill out their forms? When someone is thrown out of work, that is the time when a person is least able to take an even further cut in income. Certainly if one's annual income comes up to an appropriate figure, that person should be paying taxes. That is fine, but when a person is already taking at least a 40 per cent reduction in income level, I suggest that that is the wrong time to be drawing back into government coffers even further the rather small amounts of income on which these persons and their families have to live.

Other members mentioned earlier in this debate that they felt the matter of workers' vacation pay should not be considered as income for the purpose of delaying payment of unemployment insurance benefits. I would agree with that. Again, it is difficult to find any reasonable rationale for the delay that is caused in making payments simply because someone over the course of the year has accrued moneys to be used for that person's vacation. Why should people be expected to give up their vacation simply because they happen to be unemployed for two months of the year? They pay for that. Those who negotiate agreements make some sacrifice. They make a trade-off. It is not extra money, but it is for a specific purpose, and surely those people are entitled to proper vacations the same as anyone else.

The final issue I want to raise is that of double jeopardy when it comes to the situation of employees who are fired. When an employee finds himself dismissed—maybe quite properly, and in many cases it is—from his employment because of some action or inaction on his part within the company for which he works, that is enough penalty. But to suggest that people's unemployment insurance payments should be held back for a period of six weeks when they have already been faced with the maximum penalty that someone in the work force can pay for whatever indiscretion, is a form of double jeopardy and totally without any justice.

Some people feel that the Liberals giveth and the Liberals taketh away. In my opinion, that is what we have seen over the period of the last few years. I do not know what the hon. member for Lincoln is going to say, but I suspect that he will have some regrets to express about some of the things that have happened to this program over the last few years. If he does, then I wish him every success in trying to bend the social conscience of that party which forms the government into the direction which hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers wish it would take. It is not a welfare program. It is not basically an income distribution program. It is a program of social insurance, but it is more than insurance for working people who find themselves out of work. It is insurance for the democratic process and it is insurance for the society in which we live. It did not come into place, this program or others like it, because of the soft hearts either of the population at large or members of this House of Commons. It came into place because it was necessary to keep society operative and its economy functioning.

It takes only a very quick glance at the kind of material we find in newspapers daily to see suggestions that we are moving into perhaps the deepest recession—if that is the term—in decades. It would be necessary, not only for the working people of this country, but for the people of the business community in Canada and all others, that we maintain those people who have been in our work force at an appropriate and dignified standard, at least in the short term. This should be done until we can put into place in Canada the kinds of mechanisms, job-creation opportunities and intelligent planning which will hopefully ensure some day that the benefits of Canada's production will be equitably shared in some rational way among the people who do the basic work and pay the bills of keeping our society operating.

I urge the minister and the officials of his department to finally show more flexibility and allow more flexibility at the local level within the administration of the unemployment insurance system. Is it really necessary that everything, whether in a regulatory or legislative way, be locked in? Many members of boards of referees, whether they are employer representatives, employee representatives or even people who serve at chairpersons on those boards over the years, have developed a great wealth of experience. Perhaps it would be advisable, to get some constructive and informed input on the kinds of problems that are faced on the ground floor, to call together representatives of these boards of referees from across the country on a regional or on a national basis. By doing this, an attempt would be made to get input and see what kinds of changes they feel are necessary to give them the tools with which they can do a better job, not only in terms of guarding the treasury of the country but in terms of serving the legitimate needs of the people in their areas.

One of the recommendations may be that new members of these boards of referees should be given a little more opportunity to learn the ropes before getting started in the business. These are mostly part-time people. At the moment I believe all they are eligible for on a paid basis is one day to gain experience and get some training. Many would like the opportunity to sit in for one, two or three days just to listen, watch and get a feel for the kind of process that takes place. I think that would be a worth-while investment and a very small one.

I urge the minister to allow for more flexibility at the local level, both for officials within the commission and for people operating on the boards of referees. They can then use the combination of their hearts and their heads and apply the rules, hopefully, in a more constructive and humane way for the benefit of everyone—government, society and unemployed workers alike.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, when Bill C-14 was first introduced, I and several of my colleagues had many reservations in respect of this bill. We feared that it might hurt heavily disadvantaged areas like ours, and we wanted to get the assurance and guarantees that indeed disadvantaged areas would not be unduly hurt by the implementation of this legislation. We were then given the assurance that all the money saved through stricter implementation of the law would not go to the treasury, but would be re-invested in disadvantaged areas to create employment through Canada Works projects, that more emphasis would be put on manpower retraining projects, in short on training, and that emphasis would be put on work rather than on unemployment.

The second safeguard was that regional redistribution, what is called the zoning of unemployment insurance, would be done in such a way that statistics would reveal the exact unemployment situation in the various regions. The minister gave us the assurance that a joint task force from Statistics Canada and the Department of Employment and Immigration would be set up to evaluate the situation and give equal chances to disadvantaged areas and more justice to the unemployed.

It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that we as members of the House have been frustrated for a long time. This commitment by the minister can be found at page 2419 of Hansard for December 22, 1978. The minister referred specifically to the hon. members for South Western Nova, Charlevoix, Compton and Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata. The elections have added the hon. member for Rimouski (Mrs. Côté) who is in a rather odd, peculiar and unfair situation in that the Témiscouata part of her riding, where seasonal employment is more common, is in a non-privileged area, while the Rimouski part, maybe better off, is in a privileged situation. We waited for the report of that task force for so long that we began to have doubts about its very existence and expressed our concerns to the present minister.

I also made a number of representations under the last government in order to have the work accelerated and the situation rectified. The statistics which are still being used as a basis to figure out the unemployment rate revealed a rate of approximately 9 per cent while the media and myself, using information from the local UIC and manpower offices, came to a rate of unemployment running between 31 per cent and 41 per cent.

I ask hon. members of the House where in this country would people tolerate such a rate of unemployment without demonstrations and possibly riots. Still, when we made representations and showed our figures to the officials in order to correct the situation, we were told that the statistics of the department were scientifically established and that some form of averaging was used. If that were as accurate as science could get, boy, we would be in serious trouble. As far as averaging is concerned, it cannot fill one's stomach. As far as the people of my riding are concerned, they currently have to live on baloney. But we kept on fighting and we hope that the two being interrelated—region, redistribution or zoning and statistics—the department will in the end establish the actual rates of unemployment and put an end to the feeling and general atmosphere of frustration which is quite real in my riding and also quite justified.

And when I am told that Statistics Canada is in 46 areas and ten cities, I believe, in terms of setting up these unemployment samples, I find it hard to understand that the unemployed themselves should have to meet Statistics Canada's needs rather than Statistics Canada determining the actual unemployment situation in the areas. A simple telephone call to the local UI office in Rivière-du-Loup would give them the actual figures and if they have to go by samples, let them at least go in areas of high unemployment and take that as a sample, in order to do justice to workers and the unemployed.

In terms of areas, I do not think a Ph.D. in geography is needed to understand that Grand Portage is part of the Lower St. Lawrence area and the Gaspé Peninsula. But I do not see why they go on using areas that do not truly reflect the local and regional situation, thereby diluting the high unemployment rate in underprivileged areas with the rates of others that are better off. This creates a double injustice because it means that in terms of statistics the worst off areas are giving points to more prosperous ones, subsidizing them both with UI benefits and with public funds under the job-creation programs, including the Canada Works projects. The most in need are paying for the rich. That kind of nonsense must stop. It must be corrected.

One does not have to be a wizard in order to find a solution to the problem of one area reflecting on the other. Let the make-up of one area reflect on another. This is what we say: Let us determine the true unemployment rate of each one, and this will put an end to cross-subsidization. This way the areas with real needs will be treated justly.

Of course the frustration of members of Parliament has been widely shared by the unemployed themselves, who established a regional common front including the following groups: Comité le réveil du transcontinental; the Kamouraska East committee against unemployment problems; Kamouraska Action Committee; Operation Dignity II; Rivière-du-Loup Unemployment Action; JAL and Basques workers and unemployed groups.

I should like to read parts of a letter that was sent on June 11 to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy):

> The regional common front against the designation of unemployment insurance area of Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup, Témiscouata and part of Rimouski wants to remind you of its annoyance at the delayed announcement of changes to the present limits of economic areas for unemployment insurance purposes. The common front also wishes to repeat its claim regarding the designation of the area and indicate what makes other proposed solutions unacceptable to us.
>
> We think it is important first to remind you of the effects that resulted from the designation of new areas following the passage of Bill C-14. Because of the many seasonal jobs and despite a very high unemployment rate, many workers were denied unemployment insurance benefits because they did not meet the new requirements attached to the integration of our area to that of Quebec. Such a situation has brought those workers very serious financial difficulties, insecurity and all those social and family problems that could entail. Those cuts in the right to unemployment insurance have led, of course, to a slowdown in regional economic activity through a reduction of the purchasing power of those unemployed workers.
>
> Even this time of the year the new zoning is still having substantial effects. Some people have gone back to work but many of them were unable to do so due to the economic slowdown, particularly in the construction industry. Workers who could not accumulate enough weeks to qualify under the new zoning still find themselves in a very difficult position. The others who were able to get benefits are having their weeks of benefits greatly reduced in the supplementary phase and, in a lot of cases, are no longer entitled to them. So there you have a quick picture of the situation to show the urgency of amending the present unemployment insurance zoning.
>
> What the regional common front (KRT plus part of Rimouski) has been asking for since the beginning, about a year now, is that the zone of Grand Portage (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata, part of Rimouski) be taken out of the Quebec City area and put in the Lower St. Lawrence-Gaspé area.
> Several reasons have already been given in support of that request, the main one being that the regions of Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata and part of Rimouski have a socioeconomic situation much more similar to the Lower St. Lawrence-Gaspé area than the Quebec City area. That claim can be readily verified if you take a look particularly at the number of unemployment insurance claimants, the number of unemployed workers registered with the Canada Employment Centre in relation to the population and the regional rate of unemployment.

Those representations resulted in commitments by no lesser people than the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and five or six ministers who committed themselves during the election campaign to correcting that situation. We have since had the task force report but that report is still based on data produced by Statistics Canada which I question and which do not reflect, far from it, the unemployment situation in the area. So I urge them to review their statistics and I urge the minister to put pressure on them so they will do a sampling in the area.

Since they want to use samplings, I would suggest to them and to the minister—the administration would be much simplified—and some will certainly say that according to the act, the figures of Statistics Canada must be used. I do not want to wait for amendments to the act before this problem is solved, but if the figures of Statistics Canada have to be used they should at least change their method of operation and communicate with the manpower centres. Officials in those centres are the ones who are really aware of the situation and who could give their due to the workers.

I know that the minister is also in communication with other members of the cabinet, especially from the Quebec area, to review this situation. In fact, this bill is valid if it aims at extending the application of the variable eligibility requirement, but we find it unacceptable if the problem of zone designation is not rectified because this would perpetuate an inequity. I therefore ask the minister and his cabinet colleagues to make every effort to correct this unacceptable situation, especially for an area where 95 per cent of the young people, whose education has been paid for by their parents and the region, have to go elsewhere to earn a living.

When we know the level of unemployment, and I repeat that it would never be tolerated anywhere else, I ask whether a rate of 40 per cent would be accepted in Winnipeg or Windsor. There would be a revolution! Does anyone think that we will accept such a situation because we live in a peripheral area and because people talk about the beauty of our region? Heaven knows that we are ready to work and heaven knows how many struggles there have been to develop our country. Yet, how many problems we still have and how many obstacles are laid in our way! We have to conclude that we are talking to a brick wall. However, when we have unemployment problems, we would like this at least to be recognized and our workers to be treated fairly. We would also like the authorities to show particular understanding for all the regional programs aimed at correcting the situation of unemployment and providing a future for our young people and security for the adults, so that the region that we love so dearly may truly make some progress. In the meantime, something is urgently needed and this is not to perpetuate an obvious inequity through Bill C-3, but rather to correct the situation immediately.

● (1600)

[English]

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of unemployment insurance is surely to look after those who are genuinely unemployed. There are so many "ifs", "ands" and "buts" connected with the Unemployment Insurance Act that the genuine cases sometimes experience a great deal of difficulty in getting assistance. Most people want to work and most people will go the second mile to secure a job. The purpose of unemployment insurance, then, is fulfilled to the greatest degree by making sure that men and women who are unable to find employment despite every effort on their part when they are able to maintain a reasonable standard of living. I do not think anyone wants those who are unemployed through no fault of their own to live in dire poverty or in an abnormal way.

The fact that unemployment insurance is sometimes used unfairly, or abused, makes it all the more important that we endeavour to recognize which are the genuine cases and which are the fakes. In my opinion, policy with regard to unemployment insurance has not been carefully thought out over the past several years. For a number of years, economic conditions have been good. The economy has been affluent. During those good years we should have been building up the unemployment insurance fund to look after the lean years. Economists know, as I think everyone knows, that there are some good years and some bad years. We remember the biblical reference; people filled their granaries during the years of plenty so that they would have food in the years of scarcity.

Such foresight is applicable to the management of funds such as the unemployment insurance fund. Today we worry about the fund being able to do the job for which it was set up. Well, we have experienced many years of affluence during which it would not have been difficult for the government to have set money aside in the fund to make sure that those who were unemployed in the future through no fault of their own might have a reasonable standard of living.

Some people criticize the government of Alberta for setting up a heritage trust fund, but in my opinion the premier and the legislators of that province should be commended. They realize they will not have oil and gas forever and that unless proper disposition is made of the revenues now there will be difficult times facing the province in the future.

We also realize that the oil and the gas which come out of the ground today do not belong solely to the present generation but that the future generation has a claim on them too. Premier Lougheed and his cabinet set up the Alberta heritage trust fund of which one-third of the revenues will be used to look after the future, to provide jobs when present jobs are gone, and to make sure that we do not place a heavy load of taxation on the shoulders of our people when the going is tough.

I cannot see why this could not have been done with the unemployment insurance fund. The revenues of Canada have been exceptionally good for many years, in fact since the Second World War, but there has been no planning. Instead of setting some money aside, shamefully we have gone into the markets of the world to borrow, as if we could borrow our way out of debt. And we are still trying to do that. Now we are trying to work out ways and means of taking as many people off unemployment insurance as possible.

I sympathize with the minister's having to decide on policies which will take away unemployment insurance benefits from people who are legitimately unemployed. That should never be the policy of an unemployment insurance fund. There is really no reason why this fund today should not be large enough that we would not have to worry about the unemployed having at least a reasonable standard of living. If the fund is worth anything at all, it has to provide benefits to men, women and their families during periods of unemployment. History tells us that every country suffers periods when there are large numbers of people who are unemployed. The policy of making provision for the future was not followed, and today the unemployed in many areas are suffering. The old saying "Where there is no vision, people perish" was never more true than when applied to the situation of unemployment insurance, which was designed to help those who cannot find work in spite of all their efforts.

Now I should like to deal for a moment or so with the positive aspects of unemployment insurance. The best possible way of handling an unemployment insurance scheme is to make sure that we have as much employment as possible and that jobs are available. Yet many things are done today by government which result in the elimination of jobs. Then we castigate people because they cannot find work or because they go on unemployment insurance. In many cases they must apply for welfare. I suggest to the minister—who I notice is not in the House—that he should do his utmost to get people back to work. Every day we hear questions about what we are doing to provide employment for more people, and every day we learn that the matter is under consideration or is being studied. We do not hear concrete proposals which will get people across this country working. In a country as rich as Canada there should be minimal unemployment. There will always be some unemployment but it should be kept at a minimum.

What are some of the things that we do today to stop people from investing money? When people invest money in an industry, men and women are hired. That is what creates employment. If we can have hundreds or thousands of small shops across this country employing one or two people, it would cut down the unemployment rate drastically and add to the buoyancy of the economy. But we do not encourage this.

Today it is difficult to go into business. There are obstacles from every level of government and people become discouraged; they do not want to go into business or invest in business. They say: "If they do not want my business, I will go elsewhere." I was stopped by a man in the streets of Calgary in 1978 who said, "I am completely disgusted with this country." "How come?", I asked. He said, "I have tried to invest money in three provinces. All I have run up against is obstacles, difficulties and frustrations. So I went to the United States where I have invested $100,000. I have $200,000 more that I wish to invest, but I will not invest a cent in this country until things change."

What was one of the beefs he had? Capital gains tax was one. It is killing initiative, stopping the expansion of businesses and ruining the retirement plans of people who have spent their lifetime building industries, farms or businesses in this country. Today the government still wants in taxes half of every cent you make, when you are expanding or selling your business. How many hundreds of people are unemployed today because of the capital gains tax?

Look at the amount of money which comes in from the capital gains tax and the money which is being spent to look after the unemployed. I have no hesitation at all in saying that the government would be smart and clever to eliminate the capital gains tax. If the owner of a lumber yard wants to expand his business, or if someone wants to build a heritage for his sons and daughters or put away money for his retirement, he would have the incentive to do so. Today there is no such incentive and many people who wanted to retire at the age of 65 or 70 do not retire because of this capital gains tax. When they do not retire, they keep their business as small as possible, just large enough to make a living, whereas if they could sell it to a younger man or to someone who wants to advance, more people would be employed and there would be more production. Sometimes we forget that if this country is to develop economically, we must increase our production. It is from production that all good things come. Unless we increase our production in this country we will not have as good a life as we could have.

The unemployed also deserve a good life; they are entitled to it. It is important to get people working again. Let us provide work and jobs for those who want to work by removing the impediments which today prevent businesses from expanding. If we removed some of these obstacles, such as high interest rates, this will have a tremendously beneficial effect on our economy. Look at the effect high interest rates have on the housing industry. High interest rates prevent people from building houses and they eliminate jobs.

For the last several days I have wanted to ask a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) but I have not been fortunate enough to be recognized. I wanted to know how much interest was being charged on the line of credit of $25 million which we gave to Mexico a few weeks ago. That information was passed on to us in a press release, but it did not indicate anything about the interest rate. My assistant phoned the department to find out what interest rate was being charged, and someone in the department said that that was confidential information and could not be given out.

Why not? It is the people's money we are lending and the people will be responsible for the line of credit. Since when have members of Parliament been denied information concerning interest rates? Is it because the interest rate is similar to that which was announced the other day by a member and carried in some of the papers? Is it a zero per cent interest rate or a 3 per cent interest rate, while the people of the country have to pay 12 per cent or more? If we can cut interest rates for other countries, surely we can cut them so that people in this country can have homes and the unemployed can go to work.

I am not asking the hon. minister to tell me that it cannot be done; I am asking him to find ways of doing it. That should be the positive approach of any government in this day and age. It is not to say that we cannot do it or it has never been done, but it is to say that we will find some way of doing it. I am satisfied there are ways if there is a determined effort. I wonder how many hon. members of this House have ever been unemployed for any length of time. Fortunately I have not, but I came from a home in which I was one of ten. My father had a hard time feeding all of us. It was hard enough when he was working, but when he was unemployed for several weeks or months I saw the aging effect it had on my mother. She was worried we could not pay our grocery bill. We did not know where money was coming from. In a way I am thankful I had to go through that, because today I have feelings for those men who are unemployed, their wives and their children. They do not know from where the next meal is coming.

An hon. Member: They will have to eat baloney.

Mr. Taylor: I hear an hon. member saying that they will have to eat baloney. I should like to tell him that today many of our unemployed cannot even afford baloney; baloney is not cheap any more.

An hon. Member: Except around here.

Mr. Taylor: Except possibly in the House of Commons where at times we get quite a bit of it, but one cannot eat that. Perhaps it would be good if some members of the House of Commons were unemployed for a while and felt the pangs of hunger. Maybe they would have more heart for those who are unemployed today and double their efforts to provide them with jobs, because most of them want to work.

There are many other ways in which to provide incentive, but we do not have the time to go into all of them today. We should provide an incentive for people to invest their money in this country instead of other countries. I believe the money is in this country and Canadians are anxious to see industries, shops and businesses expand, if we would just provide the incentive. But when we make it difficult for anyone to go into business, no wonder the money is leaving our country, and no wonder every time $100,000 leaves Canada a number of people are left unemployed. That will grow and grow unless we start changing it.

I want to say a word or two in connection with the regions. I cannot follow this matter. If a man with a wife and a family of five is unemployed, he feels the dint of unemployment just as much as if there are 1,000, 2,000 or 10,000 unemployed. Why is there a difference? Is it because we think people do not want to work? Why do we say that we will pay the unemployed so much in one area and less in another area? They are all human beings. They all have wives and children or husbands and children. They all get hungry. Their stomachs ache when they do not get food. They bleed when they are pricked. Too often we try to work out ways and means of cutting down the amount, until we get to the point where we wonder if they have enough on which to live. A genuine, bona fide case of unemployment, whether there is one person or 1,000 unemployed, should receive equal and fair treatment.

I feel very keenly for the point I believe the last speaker was making on behalf of the people of his area. When one comes from an area without the large daily press, sometimes one's case does not secure very much publicity or attention. But if there is unemployment in the area, the people feel the dint of it just as severely as those in the big city where there is a daily press to espouse their needs.

I should like to deal for a moment or so with administration. I realize the administration of the unemployment insurance fund is difficult because everybody is not honest. I think most people are genuine and most people want to work, but there is a percentage who do not want to work and find technical reasons for drawing unemployment benefits without really being genuinely in need or unemployed. One winter in the city of Edmonton, I put on a leather jacket and went down to the CNR depot. That evening there were 20 or 30 reasonably young men there between the ages of 20 and 30. I sat and talked with each of them in turn. Out of the bunch who were there, 15 of them were on unemployment insurance. They made no bones about it. They did not lose their jobs; they just did not like working in the wintertime. I said to one of them, "Well, I do not like working in the wintertime either but I have to do it to hold my job." He said, "We do not. We work in the summer to build up enough unemployment and then we draw it in the winter."

That was not the purpose of unemployment insurance. I can understand genuine unemployment in a coal mining area in the off season when there is no work. I have seen that many times in my lifetime because I come from a coal mining area. I can understand genuine unemployment in a fishing area where off season there is no work to be had. But in an area like Alberta where young men decide to work in the summer and enjoy the winter in the bright lights of the cities, that is not genuine unemployment. It might be a nice life, but it is not the purpose of the unemployment insurance fund to support that sort of life. No wonder farmers and businessmen are frustrated when they go to unemployment insurance offices and see a line-up of people but no one will go out to their establishments to work. One motel in Lake Louise last year had to close up a month early because they could not find anyone who would work.

There are abuses. I agree with the hon. member who said a few moments ago that we should not spend a lot of money and go on a witch hunt, but when these abuses show up let us throw the book at them. These people are taking food out of the mouths of those who are genuinely unemployed. I have no sympathy for those who abuse this system for their own particular advantage, but I think the situation could be rectified if the desire is there.

• (1630)

I wrote a letter to the minister of the last government. The government was defeated, so I wrote another letter to the present minister in connection with young students. Employers hiring young students who are going back to school at the end of the summer season have to deduct unemploymemt insurance premiums, which are then refunded when the students return to school. Employers in the area of Banff have told me it is hard enough to get employees there without having to deduct these unemployment insurance premiums, particularly when it is known that those young people will return to school and the deductions will be refunded. Let us put some sense into this thing. Those employers told me they could not see any sense to this procedure. I hope the minister will show some common sense in this regard. Ordinary everyday horse sense is the most wonderful thing this country ever had, but we do not have enough. We need more to straighten out a lot of these things.

Unemployment insurance was intended to provide a reasonable standard of living for those who are unemployed through no fault of their own. Let us make sure that objective is attained.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before I recognize the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) may I deal with the late show this evening.

It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Administration of Justice—Dealing with grievances of RCMP officers; the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling)—Air Canada—Service out of Hamilton—Effect on Nordair; the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose)—Fisheries—Closing of Fraser River, B.C. fishery—Request for tabling terms of reference.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Axworthy that Bill C-3, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, my first words are to congratulate the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) for the very excellent work he has done since he assumed office and this session commenced. I want to express my satisfaction too on the choice by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for this particular portfolio. This ministry requires particular dedication on the part of the individual. I say that not necessarily or exclusively because I was a former minister of manpower—and there are many in the House—but because I know the pressures on the minister of manpower, and I know they will grow over the next six months or year or two as we move into a recession, hopefully short but obviously very painful.

This portfolio requires a minister whose basic philosophy is such that he can stand up to the pressures, not only from outside the government but from within. I am sure from my many, many years of friendship with the minister, which goes back over long decades, that he has those qualities and qualifications. I am sure he will take any of the remarks I make today in that light. I might be able to warn him of some of the pitfalls that are ahead of him.

Last evening I was sipping a glass of good Canadian wine from the region of Lincoln in honour of the birthday of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and, incidentally, the celebration of my eighteenth year in this House. It is not quite 18 years. Let me put it another way; it was 18 years ago yesterday that I was first elected to the House. That is, of course, true of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), but we are among a diminishing group in this House. I am not suggesting we are getting older, but perhaps the standards have changed in the House and we are not going after quality as much as we did in 1962.

What I thought I would do last night was review, if I could, the impact of the unemployment insurance plan at the end of the decade. In a way, that was inspired by some of the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) who mentioned philosophy. Legislation, concepts and principles must be based on a clear philosophy. When I looked at the filing cabinets of documents gathered before the 1971 amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act and gathered since, supplemented by writings, documents and debates in forums on economic views as to the impact of the plan, I decided to be philosophical for half an hour when talking about unemployment insurance.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) reflected in a way the philosophy behind the original act brought into this House in 1941 or 1942. Members know that in the hungry thirties, to which the hon. gentleman alluded and so graphically described as the ten lost years, there was no such thing as unemployment insurance. That was a shame because of the degradation to the worker and the farmer, those people out of work for no reason of their own. Many farmers were victims of climatic conditions. It is amazing how people survived during that period of time, but some did not and riots broke out.

In 1942 the provinces ceased to concern themselves about their provincial jurisdiction or their rights and gladly ceded jurisdiction in this area to the federal government. The legislation reflected the philosophy of the 1930s, and it prodded very gently into the field of social policy and social reform. There was still that old biblical concept, despite the 1930s, that there was something wrong about going on unemployment insurance, even if you were unemployed through no reason of your own. I was not too sure, as I reviewed some of the documents, editorials and writings last night, that we have shed the principle that somehow it is immoral, illegal or wrong to accept unemployment insurance or even welfare.

The legislation in 1942 was based on philosophy reflecting the 1930s. The legislation of 1971 attempted to reflect the problems of the future, the problems of the seventies. Legislators did not dare predict the problems or the challenges of the 1980s. I welcome the minister's determination to come in with perhaps a new white paper, based hopefully on the same philosophy but not necessarily so.

I hope that the task force which the minister will set up has the courage to stand up to vested interests which still believe that there is some merit in a free enterprise system in having a large pool of unemployed in order to keep wages down. I hope that the task force will portray the right degree of cynicism when that particular lobby approaches it, as it did members of this House in 1971.

Before I get down to some fundamentals, the legislation of 1971, for which I received some credit, in this House, was not my legislation; I would like to say that it was. It was a piece of legislation which reflected the collective views of the members of all parties. It was a piece of legislation which was adopted unanimously in this House and which reflected very intense areas of the white paper, as hon. members will know. I think it was the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) who was the chairman of that committee.

I like to think that we brought in a good piece of legislation in 1971 which is based on insurance principles. I would like to expound a little on that and remind the minister of it, because he mentions in his document the need to get back to insurance principles. The old act reflected sound, basic insurance principles. Its formula was simplistic. The government paid 20 per cent of the cost, the employees paid 40 per cent and the employers paid 40 per cent, and benefits were perhaps 40 per cent, 45 per cent or 50 per cent of the average wage in the country. Administrative costs were shared. However, when the depression hit in the 1950s, the leader of the government of the day, the Hon. John Diefenbaker, wisely introduced such things as seasonal benefits which, however, had no rhyme or reason in any plan related to insurance. So the members of the House decided in 1971 to get down to fundamentals and broad insurance principles.

The hon. member for Bow River talked about the unemployment insurance fund and the need to accumulate money. I feel a little guilty about the matter because in 1971, in retrospect, I should have done what is commonly done today, and that is spend $2 million or $3 million to explain to the people a little more fully the intricacies of unemployment insurance.

For instance, there is no such thing as an unemployment insurance fund; that disappeared from the act. What there is is a commitment by the employers and employees of Canada to meet the financial requirements of all the obligations which were defined as theirs in 1971. There was an interesting proposal that the government, in turn, would be exclusively responsible for the obligations which the act designated as theirs. So in essence, if we are going to use the word "fund" for explanatory reasons, unemployment insurance is the financial obligations of two groups, the employers and employees, one group and the government, the other.

Members who are really interested in the subject might look at sections 62 and 63 of the act, which were referred to, I think, by an hon. member opposite. They will find something that should please them, as well as economists and people who believe in insurance principles. Succinctly put, it says that the financial obligations of employers and employees should be met entirely by the premiums charged to the employees and employers. If at the end of the calendar year this obligation has not been met—the government has had to advance funds—the law states specifically that the premiums must be raised to meet that deficit.

The act also states that if during the year the contributions are beyond what was needed to meet the obligations, it should be reflected the following year by a decrease in premiums. I think it was the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young) who made a very interesting contribution yesterday which, stripped of its partisan paragraphs, might be required reading for people who wish to evaluate what happened during the 1970s to our plan.

I am not great at mathematics, but even with a 10 per cent rate of unemployment, which we do not have in this country, and because we made the plan universal and as broadly based as possible—including even the armed forces, school teachers, public servants and millionaires—it is obvious that nine workers and the employer should be able adequately to carry the financial burden of one person in the work force who is unemployed through no fault of his or her own.

Of course, that has been the case. But unnoticed by the press, by hon. members and perhaps also by the Canadian Labour Congress, which has been notorious for its silence over the past ten years in protecting this plan, and despite the abuse referred to at times—and I will not get sidetracked on that issue at the moment—every single year since perhaps the first year the employer-employees contributions have been more than sufficient to meet their particular obligation, regardless of what members in this House might think of maternity benefits and sickness benefits. The cost of maternity and sickness benefits are borne exclusively by the employers and employees of this country. There is no financial input by the government at all, and it is almost theoretically none of its business but theirs.

However, I would like to turn to the other chapter, and it is a significant one. What happened to the financial obligations of the government? How well did the government meet its obligations? Its obligations were based on a prediction by the Department of Finance that the average level of unemployment in Canada in the 1970s would be 4 per cent. I am afraid there is very little resemblance between the prediction and the reality of that prediction.

I am not being contemptuous of the department's anticipation of the future. Few people, I think, were able to anticipate the effect of technology. For instance, there is the situation at the Montreal waterfront where the work force has been reduced from 3,000 people to 1,300 people today with about three times the productivity in volume. As desirable and welcome as it should be in an industrialized society, nevertheless 1,700 people must be looked after.

There is also the proper and welcome influx of women into the work force. There was a tremendous growth, perhaps the largest in the western world, by our work force through the influx of young people reflecting the post-war baby boom. Regardless of the fact that Canada was able to generate more jobs in the 1970s than any country in the world, we still did not contain unemployment. The cold, sobering fact is that too many Canadians were out of work.

More Canadians will be out of work if fiscal and monetary policy continues to be concerned more with inflation than with unemployment. The tragedy of this fact is that the Department of Finance did not appreciate or want to accept that the unemployed people of this country were sometimes unemployed as a result of policies of the government. They were not to be stigmatized, but the benefits they received would be in recognition of the fact that they are unemployed through no fault of their own, but by international forces, if you like. Instead, through the 1970s the unemployed continued to be stigmatized by Canadian society. That is deplorable, Mr. Speaker.

● (1650)

The emphasis on abuse is frankly degrading. When we discuss medicare in this House, as we will, I hope we will not dwell for hours and days on end on the doctors who rip off medicare—and there are a few. When we discuss automobile insurance surely we will not spend days and weeks discussing the dishonest garageman or repairman who helps pad a dishonest citizen's repair bill. Of course, there are people who abuse the unemployment insurance system.

What irks me is the fact that statistics are available now, in 1980, based on the experience with unemployment insurance in the 1970s, but not many people have bothered to study them. Where is the great Canadian Labour Congress that the NDP endorsed? Why was their voice so silent in the 1970s about protecting unemployment insurance? Was it because they represent the 30 per cent to 33 per cent of the work force who have job security and therefore are not prepared to do something about their social conscience? Did they worry about the unemployed person who is not unionized and has to work for substandard wages? I have seen no evidence of that as one who has observed the Unemployment Insurance Act. There has not been a decent voice in the Congress on this subject since Andy Andras departed.

I have looked at those statistics, however, and I am particularly interested in the impact of the eight-week eligibility feature. I am particularly interested today because most of the hon. members who have spoken in this House have made rather emotional and logical pleas for something to be done about the 10-14 week attachment requirement to be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie), who is a former privy councillor and a very sensitive human being, made a strong plea yesterday that New Brunswick be considered an area where ten weeks be the criterion for eligibility for unemployment insurance. Mr. Speaker, in the sixties it was 30 weeks, over a two-year period. We brought in eight weeks as the benchmark in 1971. When I checked the figures in 1974, the particular group of people that qualified for unemployment insurance after only eight weeks was the one group that remained on unemployment insurance for the shortest period of time. They were prepared to find work, to leave unemployment insurance after eight, nine, ten or 12 weeks, rather than stay as they perhaps could have, by using a little deceit, for the full term. The full term could have been almost a year in regions of high unemployment. That they did not is testimony to their honesty.

In the seventies, eight weeks was regarded as something terrible and a series of amendments was brought in to the Unemployment Insurance Act which in effect meant giving in to those reactionaries who thought that way. The period was increased to 20 weeks, but no, that was too much. Then it was reduced to 14 and now it is ten to 14 weeks. We are coming very close to the original concept of eight weeks.

I want to speak now of something that bothers me, Mr. Speaker, and I think the minister should be aware of it. This is not based on hearsay but on facts and years of digging into statistics and reading documents. Several people are engaged in writing a document on unemployment insurance and just last week one of them borrowed some of my documents.

When the bill was brought in in 1971, there was within months a concerted effort in the country—in the editorial pages and other places—to stress the alleged abuse of the system as a result of the eight-week period. Mr. Speaker, the French people have a saying, "Qui profite du crime?" which means, "who benefits by the crime?" I have to say that a certain group in the civil service, concerned that they were unable to justify their 4 per cent prediction and hard pressed to find the money needed to offset the government's commitment, felt that a series of amendments was needed to shift the financial obligation for some of the provisions in the Unemployment Insurance Act from the government. They were not honest enough to admit they had miscalculated and had not anticipated, because of reasons beyond their control, a long period of 5 per cent, 6 per cent, 7 per cent or 8 per cent unemployment in the country.

It would have been more refreshing if they had admitted this and let Parliament bite the bullet and make the necessary changes. Instead, they set out to condition the people first by telling them that the changes were needed because of abuse of the system. When people became really upset about this alleged abuse, then they brought in the logical amendment to shift certain financial obligations from the government to the employer-employee. This probably cost $1 billion in the decade of the seventies. But because of the sound economic concept of weekly premiums and universality of the work force, the employers and employees were able to absorb the transfer of these financial obligations to them from the government.

It was difficult for me to accept the fact that in preparing the groundwork for their amendments they had to stigmatize hundreds of thousands of people by suggesting they would prefer to draw unemployment insurance benefits rather than work. That is wrong, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad hon. members opposite have made that point so eloquently in the last two days. I would warn the minister to be careful over the next few years, because within weeks of the passage of our bill those many years ago there was a determination to destroy its very basic principle.

Just a month ago I spoke to a former employee of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. He reminded me of the party that took place when the bill was passed. Civil servants are hardworking and dedicated and it was the usual sort of thing. In the jubilance of that evening I had remarked to my staff that I was not sure the act would be intact by 1980. I was not sure if the bureaucrats were prepared to stand by the predictions and I was not sure if the government was prepared to assume its obligations for its fiscal and monetary policy. I was not sure if the government was that dedicated to controlling unemployment beyond 4 per cent or if it was prepared to shoulder the cost of bringing unemployment down to that level by stimulating the economy.

Some people may think that I am overreacting but I am not, Mr. Speaker. I have here a research paper which is extremely objective and which explains the various amendments to the act since 1971. I shall not go through them all but there are a few that I should like to comment upon. Dealing with the changes which came into effect in 1976, the document defines the purpose as——to provide a better balance in the sharing of costs among the federal government, employers and employees.

That is a euphemism for saying that more of the costs will be shifted from the government to the employer-employee.

The document also deals with some of the changes in the bill that altered the eligibility period from eight weeks to ten to fourteen and with the cost saving, regardless of the impact on the work force and regardless of the fact that there was no evidence that the eight weeks resulted in any more abuse than 19, 20, ten or 14 weeks. On page 12 of the document there appears the following statement:

● (1700)

The amendment was made because it was felt that the former eight-week entrance requirement provided an all too readily financial inducement reinforcing unstable work patterns.

When one asked our economist about this, the answer given was that there was no evidence about unstable work patterns. That evidence is available—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time has arrived for private members' hour.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed in today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

DECENTRALIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings and other communications relating to the decentralization of the Department of Veterans Affairs to the province of Prince Edward Island.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the government has refused to produce to Parliament all documents, correspondence and details of negotiations with regard to the movement of the Department of Veterans Affairs to Prince Edward Island. This is a most regrettable decision considered against the background facts, namely, that the thousands of members of the Canadian Legion from coast to coast have asked that the department be left in Ottawa. In addition, no one can quite accept the necessity of doing something that will probably, as estimated, cost Canadian taxpayers anywhere between $30 million and $40 million and in the long run will give nothing to Prince Edward Island.

First of all, why has the government refused these documents? We were told a few days ago that it would be too costly to photocopy the documents. In my view, this is nonsense. It seems to be a convenient way of answering, a ploy which this government has often used in the past to shield many matters; namely, it is too costly to copy.

The simple, plain truth is that publication of such documents would, in my view, reveal that the whole thing in the first place was a crass political manoeuvre or somewhat of a political pay-off. the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) lived in Prince Edward Island, so what better way to bolster his political fortunes than to move the department from Ottawa all the way there? This of course, will result in a decrease in service to veterans of Canada and a high cost to the taxpayers, but such factors were apparently quite incidental to the political facts of life.

I must say with regret that my own party, while in office, did not reverse this perverse decision, but then, I can only offer the excuse, and it is not a very strong one, that we did not have much time. Now the present administration carries on in the same blind, stupid way, a fact that would be clearly revealed by making public the documents which the government is still keeping hidden from public view.

I admit that the government has condescendingly said that I could look at the documents personally if I wished to do so, but I do not think that answered the question. I am not the hundreds of thousands of members of the Canadian Legion from coast to coast or the millions of taxpayers in this country who have a right to know. I must, in all conscience, take the stand that I am talking at this time, namely that it is a matter of principle, and one should not slavishly follow something that one believes is utterly and completely wrong.

I can find every reason to be against the move to Prince Edward Island and not a single reason to be in favour. Let me deal with the views of the Royal Canadian Legion on this topic. One of the complaints, in my opinion a very valid one indeed, made by the veterans of Canada is the length of time that it presently takes for something to be dealt with by the Department of Veterans Affairs. The processing of a pension seems to average anywhere from 12 to 18 months, and if a veteran wishes to appeal a decision, the appeal can last up to as long as two years or more. I have known cases in my own constituency, and I am sure other members have faced somewhat similar situations, where veterans have died between the time they first applied and the time the decision was made. This is an intolerable and unacceptable situation. How does the government believe that by moving things to Prince Edward Island and leaving the minister with a small, skeleton staff here in Ottawa is going to improve the situation?

I would like to read into the record a few excerpts from some of the letters that I have received from various branches of the Royal Canadian Legion. The following is an excerpt from a letter received from G. L. Marr, secretary of branch No. 484, Royal Canadian Legion, Mallorytown, Ontario. This letter reads in part:

The Mallorytown branch is most perturbed at the proposed move of the Veterans Affairs Department to Prince Edward Island. It is understood that only a small portion of the present staff have agreed to such a move. This can only lead to reduced efficiency in a department which has obvious room for improvement as it stands now.

Next is a letter signed by Louis Mitchell, president of branch No. 231 of the Royal Canadian Legion, known as the Rideau Lakes branch. I quote:

Since outstanding claims are taking far too long in Ottawa, why the move to Charlottetown where it is admitted it will take even longer?

Further on in the same letter, Mr. Mitchell says:

Since government is seeking ways to curtail spending and save money by any means possible, what does the move to Charlottetown do for the economy?

Then Mr. Mitchell says this:

Veterans are all reaching the age where their needs will flood the department. In view of this, what preparations are being made to handle this?

Here is further quotation from the president and secretary of the Royal Canadian Legion in Delta, Ontario, namely, Mr. Harry Vollick and Mr. Peter Bredyk, who say:

We seek your assistance in having the proposed move of the Department of Veterans Affairs, and more particularly the Canadian Pension Commission, to Prince Edward Island, cancelled in the best interests of veterans.

Legion branch No. 96, in my home city of Brockville, expressed it this way in a letter from Henry Elliott, president:

The Brockville branch No. 96 . . . with 1,082 members we have by unanimous consent at a general meeting directed the writer to register opposition to the proposed move of the Department of Veterans Affairs and more particularly the Canadian Pension Commission from Ottawa to Prince Edward Island.

One could go on at length, as I am sure every member could, and quote from letters which they have received. I have one final quotation which comes from a letter written by the dominion president of the Royal Canadian Legion. He says:

We are in sympathy with the plan to create jobs in Prince Edward Island but not at the expense of disabled war veterans.

Obviously the purpose of the Department of Veterans Affairs is to be of service to the veterans. If this is not being fully accomplished now, and it will only deteriorate by moving the department to Prince Edward Island, then other than for political reasons why should a move take place? This seems to be a case of nobody wants anything done, except the politicians.

It is reported, and I have no reason to believe that the figures are inaccurate, that the staff of the Department of Veterans Affairs in Ottawa is highly opposed to the move. It would uproot their lives and force them to emigrate to a far part of the country from homes in which, in many cases, individuals were born and lived for many years. It has been stated that not any more than 5 per cent of the present employees of the Department of Veterans Affairs are actually willing to move.

By releasing the papers and documents that I have requested, perhaps we could find out how the government feels the move would benefit Prince Edward Island itself. The government has trumpeted the supposed fact that it will benefit the economy of the island by adding another industry, so to speak. It is an unfortunate fact of life that the number of veterans is decreasing every year as time passes, from the time of the First and Second World Wars and the Korean war. Unless another war occurs, which we all hope and pray does not, there will simply be no veterans left. In short, we are giving Prince Edward Island a white elephant at the expense of $30 million to $40 million.

I think all MPs are in favour of a certain diversification of government services to various parts of the country, but not for political purposes, and certainly not by moving a department that will not be of a more permanent value to the area to which it is going.

Perhaps the making public of all the behind-the-scenes documents that exist would reveal the monstrously unnecessary expense. Already the Department of Veterans Affairs is well housed here in Ottawa, but nevertheless the government is prepared to move it to a far-away place and spend millions of dollars on the move and on construction work to build accommodation at that place.

The ridiculous situation exists that right across the street from the veterans affairs department here in Ottawa is the National Archives. They say they need more space, so the federal government is going to Hull and spending $40 million on new buildings while at the same time vacating the DVA building here. It will be left empty when it moves to the province of Prince Edward Island. If this inane move goes through, surely the National Archives could enlarge by simply moving across Wellington Street. It would save the taxpayers a great deal of money.

It seems that the government continually indulges in the spending of money on schemes that create unneeded, brand-new buildings, leaves other buildings unoccupied, and in addition vacates many rented premises here in the city of Ottawa with long-term rents when the government is obligated to pay those rents for many years.

About the only certain thing concerning this move of DVA will be that the government will have to lease more telephone lines between here and Prince Edward Island. After all, there is a skeleton staff in the ministry here and nothing else. By making this move, I suppose Bell Canada will benefit; but that in itself would be a pretty foolish reason for the move.

I have heard this matter talked about by many members of this House privately in conversation. I think almost everybody has reservations, at least to some extent, about this situation, why it is being done and whether it should be carried on.

One of the excuses given by the government for not making public the various papers that I requested was that it would involve obtaining the permission of the government of Prince Edward Island. This may well be so in regard to some of the material, but I can only reply with the question: Why has the Government of Canada not asked for such permission from the government of Prince Edward Island? The inevitable answer is that the Government of Canada just does not want these papers to become public because it would probably reveal a staggering tale of political patronage that would not be pleasant for the Canadian people to see.

It seems most strange to me that a government which speaks of increasing freedom of information continually gives examples of restricting information, and this is certainly the case when the government turns down the release of the various documents on this particular matter. One can only conclude that the present administration in actual fact only pays lip service to the principle of freedom of information, and if it were not so, the Minister of Veterans Affairs or someone speaking on his behalf would rise in this House today and say that the government has talked this over, has changed its mind and will release the necessary papers.

Yet another factor that seems to have received practically no consideration is the fact that this country has two official languages. By law, Canadians must be served in the language of their choice. It is obvious that French is not the language of Prince Edward Island. Therefore, to stay within the law created by the government, we would obviously have to import to Prince Edward Island bilingual people to render the services that would be needed by Canadians in provinces such as Quebec and certain other parts of Canada. What benefit is that to decreasing unemployment in Prince Edward Island?

I have already touched several times on what is obvious political motivation behind the move to Prince Edward Island and for a moment I would like to enlarge on this. It seems to me to be utterly incredible that a government is willing to put first a political favour to the Minister of Veterans Affairs rather than to put first the veterans of this country who suffer everything from shattered bodies, blindness, mental anguish and, in so many cases, permanent disablements because they stood up for Canada when they were needed. For it to come down at this time to a decision based on the political welfare of a few individuals rather than on the welfare of those who need and deserve the best of service and consideration constitutes an unbelievable chapter in the history of political manipulation.

If this government were truly interested, as it says it is, in promoting the economy of Prince Edward Island and other sections of the country, then why does it not do so by coming up with policies that will assist various provinces, rather than policies that will assist various Liberal cabinet ministers?

Without much difficulty, this government put up millions and millions to bail out the Chrysler Corporation and just recently more millions of dollars to Michelin Tire in a declared attempt to help the unemployment situation of this country. In the case of the Department of Veterans Affairs, they would throw $30 million to $40 million down the drain that in the long run will not be of help to anyone.

I believe it is essential for the government to produce the papers for public view in regard to the Prince Edward Island move, and I am sure it would help result in putting an end to any further—I hate to use the word—bribery to other sections of the country to assist members of the Liberal cabinet who are either in danger of electoral defeat or who have some foolish notion that they deserve a personal favour from the government for the services they have rendered here in Ottawa.

I have touched on what I believe to be the main reasons that the Department of Veterans Affairs should not be moved to Prince Edward Island and why the government should make public the various documents and correspondence which led to this most unfortunate decision. In summing up, I can only say that there is no excuse for spending millions and millions of taxpayers' dollars without a beneficial purpose to the taxpayer. There is no point creating a situation where service to the veterans of Canada is even worse than it is now, and above all, there is no point whatsoever in this House condoning the shuffling around of government departments, not on the basis of sound judgment but entirely on the basis of resulting benefits for members of the Prime Minister's entourage of cabinet colleagues.

I hope the government will see fit to reverse its decision and allow these documents to be made public so that we can all judge for ourselves. If I am wrong in what I have said, and others are wrong in what they believe—that this was simply a political move in the first place—I am sure we will all readily admit it. However, as yet I have not heard anything by the government to indicate in any way whatsoever that they have valid, justifiable reasons, other than political reasons, for the move that was announced several years ago and is still being carried on today, probably soon unfortunately to reach the point of no return. I hope the government will stop before it goes that far.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I support the move to Charlottetown.

I would like to take a few moments now to speak about some of the benefits and particularly some of our preparations for the relocation of the headquarters of veterans affairs to Charlottetown. Every effort has been made at every stage to make this relocation as smooth as possible. The planning has been designed to accomplish the move to Charlottetown without affecting the quality of service and at the same time avoiding serious disruptive effects on the people of Charlottetown.

The relocation is already well under way. Plans call for a phased relocation spread out over several years. There are now 50 veterans affairs employees operating in Charlottetown. Included in this group are 11 war veterans allowance board employees who will soon be joined by the other board employees. This is a milestone in the relocation program. This board will be the first complete unit relocated to the island. By September, 1980 a total of 160 jobs will have relocated to Charlottetown and an additional 30 will have relocated by September, 1981. The remainder of the portfolio will relocate in 1982-83.

This plan for a phased move to Charlottetown was developed to ensure that service provided to the veterans and their dependants would not suffer. A phased move is the most practical method. It guarantees the continuity and quality of our service to our veterans and it spreads out the effects of the move on Charlottetown over a longer period of time. The community can absorb significant numbers of new residents if given enough time to increase the supply of housing and community facilities available.

Numerous studies have been undertaken into such areas as communication facilities, housing, education, industry, labour markets and the social and economic impact of the relocation. Veterans affairs is now using these results to everyone's benefit. They can anticipate situations, they can gain insight into the possible effects of the relocation and they can assess what is needed and what is available before proceeding in any given direction.

Several programs have been established within the Department of the Veterans Affairs to monitor and facilitate the relocation. There are key positions in which it is imperative to have a fully trained person upon relocation to Charlottetown. These positions have been identified and are now being staffed in Ottawa by employees willing to move to Prince Edward Island. In fact, only recently the department appointed a new assistant deputy minister of finance, personnel and administration, a new assistant deputy minister of veterans services and a new director of financial management, all of whom will be moving to the island in 1982-83.

Another fairly recent appointment, that of director of policy, planning and evaluation, is being double-banked and the newly-appointed director will be working very closely with his Ottawa counterpart until he moves to the island to assume his duties there on August 1, 1980.

A comprehensive training package provides the necessary training to new employees before they assume the full responsibilities of their positions. To assist trainees in new positions, all systems and procedures are being documented to ensure that the most up-to-date manuals are used by these employees while training.

All these new employees and their families will all have a certain impact on Charlottetown, its economy, its educational, cultural and social facilities. These employees have diverse backgrounds, age, education, family status. They will comprise a variety of occupations—doctors, lawyers, senior administrators, accountants, secretaries, clerical workers, finance officers, personnel officers. These people will bring with them not only their work expertise but a variety of interests.

Veterans affairs is determined that the last thing that should happen is that the relocation should have a disruptive effect on the social fabric of the city or the island or that the present way of life be affected to any great degree. The relocation could potentially add another thousand residents to Charlottetown—an immigration of professional people moving with their jobs and families, people who will be taking their place in the new community, starting a new life.

A key element to the integration of the Department of Veterans Affairs employees into Charlottetown is communication and information. It is important that the people of Charlottetown and Prince Edward Island know something about the type of people who are considering moving to their community. Equally important, however, is the need on the part of our employees to be aware of what they can expect to find in Charlottetown—the lifestyle of the island, the type of community they will be moving into, the type of people who will be their neighbours.

In Charlottetown a tri-level co-ordinating group has been established and meets on a regular basis to deal with all matters pertaining to the relocation. This committee has representation from the provincial, municipal and federal governments. Five subcommittees have been formed to deal with such things as housing, education, economic impact, social impact, and the new veterans affairs facility. In particular, great strides have been made in the housing area as a result of the housing subcommittee's attempts to stimulate the housing industry to meet the needs of our employees, while at the same time ensuring that this does not cause a drastic upward trend in housing prices.

In Ottawa all employees have been provided with a comprehensive information package on Charlottetown telling them about the island climate, education, linguistic make-up, housing, health services, cost of living, recreational and commercial facilities, transportation and municipal services. Relocation advisers are available to assist any employees seeking advice on relocation. The portfolio has a relocation resource room where employees have access to Charlottetown newspapers, real estate listings, university and community college calendars, local magazines and other publications provided by groups from Prince Edward Island.

Assistance is also being provided to employees who do not wish to relocate. They can have counselling and information about securing alternate employment within the national capital region. A resource room has also been established specifically for these employees where they can find publications to assist them as prospective job hunters.

In the fall of 1979, DVA held nine days of activities, called "Operation Information", to inform employees of the facilities, services, life on Prince Edward Island and also to provide information on the employment situation in Ottawa and various means of seeking and finding reassignment. "Operation Information" was organized to give all employees information to assist them in their relocation decision and to prepare them for whatever course of action they might choose.

These programs and activities are all intended to make for a smooth transition into Charlottetown for the portfolio and its employees. Certainly with the magnitude of this relocation there will be eventualities which have not been anticipated and problems may develop. But with the support of people in Ottawa and Charlottetown, these problems can be resolved and DVA will successfully and smoothly relocate in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today of the decentralization of DVA headquarters to Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. Public servants work for the entire country and must therefore get closer to the realities, the needs and the desires of the various communities they serve. Public servants in Ottawa have been blamed for their so called ignorance, insensitivity and isolation from the rest of Canada. The proposed move, as all others, is aimed at reducing the reason for these accusations and to make the public service more aware of the concerns harboured by the people it serves. Also, the proposed move of the veterans affairs headquarters is extremely important because it corresponds to the wishes of each of the previous governments which have tried to bridge the gap between the levels of economic well being enjoyed in the different areas of the country. The move of DVA headquarters will give Prince Edward Island the economic boost it needs. Also, Charlottetown can provide headquarters with all it needs to continue to give adequate service to Canadian veterans and their dependants.

Charlottetown was chosen because it has administrative support and clerical workers who can easily be trained and assigned to the various divisions of the department and organizations—

[English]

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to draw attention to the fact that at the time when I rose a moment ago there was not a quorum in the House. I believe that 20 members are required. At that time there was not a quorum, unless someone rushed in hurriedly since then.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Either the hon. member rises to call a quorum, or he does not. Would he kindly inform the Chair whether he is calling the quorum?

Mr. Cossitt: Yes I am, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I explain to hon. members that there is a procedure for counting members to see if there is a quorum, and it will take a moment to go through it. If I understand the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) correctly, he rises again on a point of order, we hope not the same one.

Mr. Cossitt: Since I raised the quorum call, about four members rushed in on the other side. I think a count should be taken of those who were here at the time the question was raised, not counting those who came in later.

Mr. Lefebvre: Read the orders.

Mr. Hopkins: I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that when the hon. member rose on this point of order, I took a count of members in the House and I found that there were in fact 20 members here when he was on his feet the first time.

Mr. Cossitt: No, 18.

Mr. Regan: Let us not quarrel over two.

An hon. Member: Did you count yourself?

Mr. Cossitt: Yes, I counted myself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair has a difficulty. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville has raised the difficulty himself, that is to say, that at the moment he rose, he himself says, to call the quorum, there was a quorum present.

Mr. Cossitt: No, I did not say that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If I understood the hon. member correctly, he used some language to say, at the moment he rose, that he was calling the quorum but that at that moment there was not a quorum.

Mr. Cossitt: That is correct. There were 18 members in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Then it is clear that the Chair has a difficulty because the Chair does not have in its possession an electronic Hansard which would permit the Chair to do a retroactive count. If the hon. member wishes to call a quorum and to ask, on the basis of good faith, those hon. members who were not present when he called the quorum to retire, then I suppose that perhaps this might be observed. Perhaps those members who were not present when the hon. member called a quorum could remove themselves from the chamber. But the Chair is in no position to ask each individual member whether he was or was not here at the time that a quorum was called.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, this is matter which concerns me quite often. Many a time in the last month or so I have been tempted to raise the same point of order. I think that our attendance should be a lot better than it is. But, in all fairness, I think that the rules should be noted. If the rule is noted, then, I am afraid, you do not have to ask members whether they were here at the time the point was raised. Citation 209, on page 73 of Beauchesne's fifth edition reads as follows:

> While the House is being counted the doors remain open and members can come in during the whole time occupied by the counting.

So if there are 20 members here now, all I can say to my friend, the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville, (Mr. Cossitt) is, try again some time when there are only 12 or 15 members here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: May I then withdraw the quorum call. I realize that the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan), the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), and numerous others, darted in to their seats after I called quorum. But according to what our learned friend, the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is an authority on the House rules, has said, they are permitted to do that. So, of course, I will withdraw my quorum call. I was simply trying to point out that often there are very few members in attendance in the House. Here comes another gentleman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not know whether it is necessary to recognize the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to pursue the matter. I have checked Beauchesne and I find that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) appears to be correct. My recollection is that the last time a quorum was called in the House under similar circumstances the Chair called on the Assistant Clerk to identify every member who was present at the time when the Chair called for that count to be made. The Chair cannot check the situation retroactively. I would then become a judge as to whether each and every individual member were here. I would have to start a count now through the offices of the Assistant Clerk. Unless there are other members, or the President of the Privy Council who a moment ago seemed to be rising on a point of order, wishing to speak, the advice of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is accepted.

Mr. Knowles: There are now 30 members in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): At this moment, the Chair sees a quorum.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that Charlottetown can provide headquarters with all it needs to continue to give adequate service to Canadian veterans and their dependants. Charlottetown was chosen because it has administrative support and clerical workers who can easily be trained and assigned to the various divisions of the department and organizations. It has a regional university which will train competent professionals for us and some of its residents are bilingual. Another factor which is essential to the proper operation of a head office with district offices throughout Canada is an advanced network of communications and transport, something Charlottetown has. Moreover, employees will be able to rent adequate lodgings at reasonable prices on the island, and should the need arise, others may be built.

The decentralization of the Department of Veterans Affairs brings many benefits to the city.

The strategic location at the limit of Charlottetown's commercial zone will bring an economic development whose need is strongly felt and will revitalize the retail shops in the area. The new headquarters building will improve the immediate vicinity—

[English]

An hon. Member: Read the rules.

An hon. Member: I don't need to read them, I know them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The point of order which was raised on the quorum is, no doubt, of interest to all members. But if they want to discuss it they should rise on a point of order and seek the attention of the Chair. Otherwise, as a courtesy to the hon. member speaking, we should allow him to complete his remarks without interruptions.

[Translation]

I must say that it is the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) who has the floor.

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Thank you again, Mr. Speaker.

The new head office building will enhance the immediate area and the veterans affairs project will probably generate other development initiatives from the private sector. Some time ago, veterans affairs announced the plan to move gradually its head office staff to Charlottetown. Under that plan, all veterans affairs head office employees should be relocated in Charlottetown by 1983.

When the decision to move was announced, the Minister of Veterans Affairs guaranteed that the quality of services would not be reduced and that veterans would continue to receive before, during and after the move, the services of superior quality with which they have always been provided. The minister repeated that he was standing by that commitment and those same guarantees. The task force on the relocation of veterans affairs is responsible for planning and executing the move while at the same time maintaining the present quality of service. Obviously, the planners of the task force are convinced the client service will not be affected in any way during the move because otherwise that relocation would not be going ahead as it is at this time. To make sure the minister's commitment is met, it is important that the veterans affairs head office has a qualified staff to carry out its legislative and administrative mandate. That task will be carried out through the relocation of certain employees and the special training programs that have been put together to train the new employees replacing those who are not moving to Charlottetown.

An important question keeps coming back about the move, namely, what will be the social impact of this proposed move on the people of Charlottetown and Prince Edward Island? The move to Charlottetown will result in the relocation of a rather large number of employees and their families. Those civil servants will make new friends, join associations, send their kids to school, and their spouses will look for jobs. In other words, they will become part of the community and will start a new life.

Studies have been undertaken by the Department of Veterans Affairs itself, or on its behalf, to determine the effects of the move. They dealt with such things as communication services, housing, education, industry and the labour market on the island; in other words, on all the social aspects of the move. Because of these studies, we were able to foresee various situations and better determine the impact of the move and the services to be offered or already offered before committing ourselves in any direction. However, in the final analysis, the success and validity of these studies will be confirmed only when the move is completed. I believe that I should now explain the basic plan for the move. The Department of Veterans Affairs is planning to make the move over a certain period which is now expected to last from two to three years.

A small first group and a small operational unit are now installed on the island. Another group will move this summer, which will raise the total number of positions to 160 by September. Moreover, 30 positions will be transferred in September, 1981, and the other positions will follow over the years 1982 and 1983. Before closing, I wish to add that a central group will remain in Ottawa to help the minister in his work and to fulfil directly their responsibilities toward those people or groups which can be served only by the office of the minister. I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that this move of DVA headquarters to Charlottetown must be considered as a great step toward providing equal opportunities for all Canadians. This decision was not cancelled by the former government, not because it did not have time to do so, but because this decision was the best that could be made.

I am convinced that the veterans will be very well served and that the grievances mentioned by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) are unfounded. Maximum use will be made of modern communication methods, and not only will the move to Charlottetown of the main office of veterans affairs be a great step toward providing equal opportunities for all Canadians, but it will also serve the interests of the veterans, and not certain political interests, as some have suggested.

● (1740)

[English]

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, first of all I remind the House in reference to a remark made earlier that no money has been made available to Chrysler; only loan guarantees have been offered, which is quite another thing.

Because I believe a number of government offices can and should be moved to other parts of Canada, I should like to speak today on the subject of the relocation of veterans affairs headquarters to Prince Edward Island, and in particular the economic impact of this relocation on Charlottetown. The jobs moving from Ottawa to Charlottetown are grouped into a small number of independent agencies and programs, each with different but related and interlocking functions, and all working to serve the veteran clintele. At this time I intend to deal with questions such as: what will be the economic impact of the relocation of this head office on Charlottetown; will there be a notable increase in demand for goods and services; what will be the effects from the demands of the households moving to Charlottetown; what will be the effects from the demands of this department which is going to Charlottetown?

The economic effects will be felt over two distinct periods in addition to the initial arrival of employees. There is the limited period of the construction phase, and the operating phase which will be continuous for as long as anyone can project. The economic effects in each phase will be both direct and indirect and will be the result of the demands of both the employees and their households and of the portfolio headquarters office for services and goods on the island. For the construction phase of the relocation, studies indicate that the direct impact will be in the creation of approximately 300 jobs. It is estimated that these 300 jobs will receive in the neighbourhood of $5 million in wages and salaries for the duration of the construction period.

The total construction bill for the new veterans affairs facility is estimated at approximately $15 million. For the purposes of studying the result of this expenditure on the economy of the island, the expenditures were allocated over a three-year period: $2.5 million to design and prepare the site in the first year, $10 million to the second, and $2.5 million to the third. At the present time these expenditures are allocated to 1981, 1982, and 1983 budget years respectively. The spread of retail purchasing for construction over the three years is estimated at about $184,000 for 1981, about $737,000 for 1982, and $184,000 for 1983.

Of course the construction phase is a one-time shot in the arm for the construction industry and related businesses because it will last only over the period related to the construction of the new building. However, what is more significant is for us to gauge and to prepare for the long-term, direct and indirect economic result of the operating phase of veterans affairs on the economy of Prince Edward Island and Charlottetown in particular and the effects created by the demands of the new households and the newly situated head office. Again, the direct consequence is the number of new jobs created by this phase of the relocation for which islanders will be able to compete. These jobs cover the full range of positions in the organization, from the most senior decision-making officials to service staff.

Some of the jobs to be filled in the veterans affairs headquarters will be filled after relocation has taken place, after the job has moved to the island. Training will take place in Charlottetown.

All key positions will be staffed before the job moves from Ottawa, and the successful candidate for the job will be trained in Ottawa.

Studies have shown that the number of people in the labour force on the island and throughout the Atlantic provinces in jobs similar to those at veterans affairs is quite large in relation to the anticipated demands for new staff at the headquarters. We must not forget that there is a significant number of federal public servants already employed in the Atlantic region in classifications similar to those supporting the veterans affairs headquarters operation. It is likely that many of these people will be interested in transferring to veterans affairs because of the senior positions which may become available within the portfolio, or perhaps just a desire for a change in employment.

There is also a substantial number of new entrants to the labour force on the island being generated by the various educational institutions, and the salaries and the promotional opportunities offered by veterans affairs as part of the federal civil service will attract many of these graduates.

It has been found from the experience of other relocating federal departments that 40 per cent to 50 per cent of the personnel recruited after relocation were working somewhere else at the time they were hired. This has been especially true among the senior classifications where the draw will undoubtedly be on the other government departments in the region.

Despite this inducement on the market of the already employed, studies also indicate there is no lack of qualified personnel available to take up any of the vacant or vacated positions in veterans affairs headquarters or elsewhere in similar positions on the island. To give one example, in the secretarial category, the annual outflow of trained persons far exceeds the anticipated veterans affairs headquarters requirements.

Once the operating phase is under way, there will be the indirect impact of the veterans affairs employee expenditures which will create employment and generate new income. The veterans affairs annual wage bill which will be paid on the island is estimated at approximately $14 million. Statistics show that around 71 per cent of wages is spent on consumer goods and services. Therefore it is projected that out of the veterans affairs wage bill, the sum of about $10 million will be spent on various commodities every year, and presumably much of this will be spent on the island. The impact of this spending, it is estimated, will be the creation of approximately 250 new jobs over and above those new jobs within veterans affairs headquarters. In addition it is expected that the total indirect income generated will be in the area of $2.8 million a year.

These figures can be broken down to indicate roughly where and in what proportion it will be spent. Food will take about 25 per cent of the total, creating approximately 90 jobs and generating about $900,000. Housing will take 31 per cent of the total, creating 34 jobs and generating $575,000 income. Clothing will take 10 per cent, creating 31 jobs and generating $270,000 income. Transportation will take approximately 14 per cent, creating about 40 jobs and generating $350,000 income. Personal and health expenditures will take about 4.6 per cent of the total, creating around 20 jobs and generating about $270,000 income. Recreation and education expenditures will take 6 per cent of the total, creating 22 jobs and generating $260,000 income; and tobacco and alcohol expenditures will take approximately 5.5 per cent of the total, creating about 14 jobs and approximately $132,000 income.

Additional local employment and income are expected to be generated by the ongoing expenditures of the veterans affairs headquarters. It is anticipated that approximately 77 new jobs will be created and that additional income of about $675,000 annually will be created. This is as a result of an expenditure by the head office of about $1.8 million.

In the final analysis, therefore, it is expected that the relocation of veterans affairs headquarters will result in around 1,000 new jobs being added to the island work force, including veterans affairs personnel relocating with their jobs from Ottawa. The dollar figure for additional income created by the move has been estimated by studies as about $15 million per year.

I hope I have covered the subject of the economic impact of the veterans affairs move to Charlottetown in enough detail to give members an understanding of the figures the Department of Veterans Affairs is operating from and using to anticipate any eventuality. In the long run, and under any analysis, I think this House will agree that these facts and figures represent a positive impact on the island.

While I have dealt with the economic implications to Prince Edward Island, I wish to assure this House and our veterans that the need for sensitive service and quality service will not be lost, but rather that the service will be enhanced. Further, this move is another step to benefit the many regions of the country which should be assisted economically to share adequately in the growth of this country we call Canada.

Miss Campbell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I seek the unanimous counsent of the House to revert to presenting reports by standing and special committees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member seeks unanimous consent of the House to revert to that stage of the proceedings for the purpose of submitting a committee report. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

DECENTRALIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cossitt:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings and other communications relating to the decentralization of the Department of Veterans Affairs to the province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Raymond Savard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on the move to Prince Edward Island, of the headquarters of veterans affairs and especially the economic impact of that move to Charlottetown.

The jobs moved from Ottawa to Charlottetown belong to a small group of independent organizations and programs. Each of these has a different but related and interdependent role, and all serve veterans. I would like to address the following questions: What will be the economic repercussions of the move to Charlottetown? Will there be a significant increase in the demand for goods and services? What will be the impact on demand from the move of families to Charlottetown? What will be the impact on demand from the move of the department to Charlottetown?

Economic repercussions will be felt over two different periods in addition to that of the arrival of employees. There will be first the limited period of the construction phase, then the operating phase which will be permanent as far away as we can anticipate. During each of these two phases, the economic impact will be both direct and indirect, and will derive from the demand for goods and services on the island from employees, their families and the veterans affairs headquarters.

● (1800)

As far as the construction phase of the move is concerned, studies indicate that the direct impact will be the creation of some 300 jobs. It is estimated that these 300 jobs will supply some $500 million in salaries and wages over the construction phase. The total cost of building the new facilities for veterans affairs is estimated at some $15 million, and in order to consider—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must do so under the Standing Orders.

[English]

Before noticing the clock, I wonder if the Chair might be permitted the observation that the attendance in the House at this moment during private members' hour is certainly more attractive than is often the case. Perhaps the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) has caused some interest in the matter.

The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6.03 p.m. the House took recess.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Axworthy that Bill C-3, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock when the debate was interrupted for other business I had reminded the House and the minister and, perhaps equally important, the officials in the gallery, that since 1971 when the Unemployment Insurance Act was brought in, reflecting the views of all members of the House, there have been no less than five or six amendments to the bill, if I recall correctly. In each and every one of these amendments there has been a clause or provision, among others, subtly to shift the financial burden of unemployment from the consolidated revenue fund and the government to the employer-employee to the point that it is almost absurd. I would say that close to $1 billion has been so shifted.

I want to emphasize that again for a second, Mr. Speaker, so that officials know that at least some of us understand what they are doing. I want to say, before I get to the amendments, that it might have been more fair if the officials had told Parliament that they had miscalculated the rate of unemployment in 1970 when they said it would average 4 per cent and that, for reasons beyond their control—the energy crisis is a good example or the unexpected growth of the work force—unemployment should more realistically be predicted at 6 per cent. They could have made the necessary adjustments, and I think Parliament would have understood, the country would have understood, and the opposition would have understood.

Instead, either by coincidence or design, prior to every one of these amendments we had a well-orchestrated campaign based on the alleged abuse of the plan, thus preparing and conditioning people for the amendment and supposedly aimed at reducing the abuse or tightening up the regulations, when in fact the main purpose of most of the amendments was to shift the financial burden from the government to the employer-employee. I think that has been very unfair.

I should like to quote again from the document I referred to earlier, entitled "A Brief History of Unemployment Insurance Legislation in Canada", which is a research paper issued by the Library of Parliament. Referring to the 1975 act it states on page 19 that the purpose of the act was as follows:

—amended the financing formula so as to increase the share paid by employees and employers and reduce the government's share.

The paper does not state why that was necessary but just that it was one of the purposes. In the next paragraph, referring to the Employment and Immigration Reorganization Act of 1977, the paper states:

A variable entrance requirement of 10-14 weeks was introduced, depending on the regional unemployment rate. The benefit structure was simplified, reducing the number of phases from five to three.

The practical application of changing the requirements from eight weeks to ten to 14 weeks was to reduce the financial obligations of the government. The government had another alternative, simply to raise taxes or find the money elsewhere. What the amendments did in 1978—and this is perhaps the most massive change to the act—was to stipulate a higher entrance requirement, once again, for those claimants who were entering the labour force for the first time or who were re-entering it after a period of absence. The 1978 legislation changed the minimum insurability, it reduced the rate of benefits to 60 per cent of average weekly insurable earnings from 66 per cent and it required higher income recipients to repay a portion of the UIC benefit. Again, all amendments were designed to reduce the cost of the plan.

● (2010)

To emphasize that point, the financial obligation of the employers and employees as specified in the act in 1971 has always been met by the contributions of the employers and employees. What bothered officials of the Department of Finance was their inability to get their hands on that surplus of $1 billion over those ten years. They did the next best thing in their opinion which was to shift the financial burden of this plan from the government as responsibility linked to the level of unemployment and the government obligation to control that level. They shifted it to the employers and employees thus once again reducing their need to raise funds elsewhere.

Ironically, the plan is still essentially intact. What is needed now is a shift in emphasis in this House, in this country and in the Department of Finance, a realization that the average French-speaking Canadian, the average English-speaking Canadian wherever he or she comes from or whatever philosophy he or she may share, whatever their background in whatever province they live, would prefer to work rather than draw unemployment insurance.

It bothers me particularly that in 1980 we still attach some stigma to those people who draw unemployment insurance benefits because they are out of work for reasons beyond their control, whether they be regional differences, a very high level of unemployment or whatever. Somehow in Canada we cannot seem to shed the old biblical concept that man must earn a living by the sweat of his brow. If only we could bring ourselves to appreciate that periodically in this country, like in any other country, people are out of work because of technology or because of competition—the auto pact is a good example of this—and that it is our responsibility to finance those people to see that they have an income. Succinctly put, I do not think Canadians would stand the inhumanity of the 1930s prior to unemployment insurance. I do not think anyone in this House is suggesting that we go back to that period before the 1930s. I plead with the new minister and this government to leave the plan alone for a while and let the officials get on with its application.

One of the unfortunate things about this series of amendments was that they had to be backed by regulations and it made it virtually impossible for the people whose responsibility it is to administer this whole operation, to do so efficiently. As soon as they get familiar with one set of regulations, along comes another.

I want to put one other statistic on the record and remind the House that in 1971 the financial obligation of the government for unemployment insurance—I am referring to the new plan—was about 12 per cent. For employers and employees it was 88 per cent which was reflected in the appropriate level of premiums needed to meet that 88 per cent. By 1978, prior to the 1978 amendment, the financial obligation of the government had risen to 50 per cent leaving the employers the other 50 per cent. Why did it rise to 50 per cent? Because of the high level of prolonged unemployment, and not for any other reason. In 1979, reflecting the 1978 amendments the governments share of the total financial obligations was reduced to 33 per cent, with the predicted financial obligation of the government in 1980 going back to 20 per cent.

I know that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker, and I want to say that I intend to support this bill. The bill in isolation makes sense, but as part of the total amendments in the seventies it appears to me to be part of a very concerted effort by some officials to get their hands on that pool of money—

Mr. Andre: I thought the bill came from the minister, not the officials.

Mr. Mackasey: —which in reality does not belong to the government in the first place. It belongs to the employers and employees. It reflects their weekly contributions. That surplus, if the act operated properly, should have been reflected in lower premiums in order to offset that surplus.

Finally, I plead with the minister not to listen to those who would suggest that the contributions of the employer and employees of this country to unemployment insurance should provide the moneys needed to finance manpower programs. That is the government's responsibility and it should be met out of general funds. The minister said that he would get back to me about that. I welcome his statement on the need to return to insurance concepts. Then there would be no room in the plan in the future for a continuing shift of government responsibilities to the private sector. Manpower is a government responsibility reflected in the department of manpower. Unemployment insurance is an entirely separate program which belongs to the employers and employees of the country, and the funds should be made separate. We in this House should be vigilant in making certain that they do remain separate.

I can only remind the minister, from past experience, that over the next few days, few months or few years, he will run into strong pressures, both in and out of the government, that would emasculate the plan if he permits it, and I do not think the workers of this country would be very appreciative.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to join in the debate on Bill C-3, one of the principal provisions of which is to transfer the cost of initial and extended benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act from the consolidated revenue fund to the employees and employers who are covered by the provisions of the act. Incidentally, that rather major provision will have the effect over a full fiscal year of transferring total costs of something in the neighbourhood of three-quarters of a billion dollars. I make mention of this fact because we are confronted with a series of estimates which indicate budgetary deficits for the year in which we find ourselves in excess of $14 billion. If indeed this bill were not introduced and passed, those estimates will show a deficit of something in the neighbourhood of $15 billion. That fact, of course, is not generally made known nor will the government loudly proclaim the benefits or disadvantages of the system.

Since the introduction of the substantial amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971, there is little doubt that the unemployment insurance fund has not in all cases had the desired effect, hopefully attributable to the government, as long as I do not misinterpret the government's intentions.

While no one can challenge the need to provide income security for those gainfully employed in Canada, the government is derelict in its duty if it does not recognize the abuses to the system and move to remedy the same. I am personally familiar, as I am sure many members of this House are, with cases in which legitimate claims under the act have been made by persons covered thereby. Those claims have not been met expeditiously and with dignity. Those who contribute what has commonly been referred to as premiums are entitled to make a claim when the event with respect to which the premium was paid should occur.

The Canadian public is generally familiar with the provisions of insurance policies and insurance claims in the private sector. The concept is that when one pays a premium and the occurrence transpires, one is entitled as a right, and within the printed, usually simple but sometimes legalistic terms of the policy, to reimbursement for the loss sustained.

We are invited not to treat this plan as an insurance plan. If in fact it were, then those protected by the plan would be in a position whereby the quantum of the premium coverage would give rise to the payment of an additional benefit. In fact the minister would appear to reject the concept of escalated voluntary premiums giving rise to escalated provisions by way of benefit under the act on the theory that we are creating some kind of a two-tier system.

I suggest to the minister instead that what we should have is a sliding scale system for the voluntary contribution of premiums so-called under the act, with a corresponding increase in benefits if this act is properly designated as an insurance act. However, the suggestions have been rejected. If we examine it and its purposes and the way in which these amendments contained in the bill are to operate, the act is nothing but an act pertaining to the raising of revenues by way of taxation. The only difference between this act and the provisions of the Income Tax Act, aside from the extreme complexity of the latter, is the fact that we have selected a group of taxpayers who are not the general taxpayers of Canada. They are a special class of taxpayer, the employed and the employer.

As a simple piece of taxing legislation, we are surely inclined to ask whether it is serving any other purpose in society. The purpose can be measured by the results. In part, those results are damaging to the work ethic which has been endangered by the development of a system whereby a gap that exists between the net revenue, income or sustenance that one may retain by way of benefits under the act, and the net revenue sustenance or benefit that one may retain after one labours or invests, is growing perilously close in many instances.

The natural inclination is that there is a disinclination to become engaged in productivity, and society thereby develops a code of non-production, and claims are devised to avoid the unpleasantness of work. The task of government is to widen the gap that exists between earned income for labour and enterprise and income derived under the act. I am not suggesting for one moment that that gap be widened through the process of reducing the amounts to which one becomes entitled, but rather that the gap be widened through tax legislation and the retention of a larger portion of what one produces in the hands of those that do the production.

Accordingly, it is necessary to reduce taxation in Canada. This piece of legislation, standing as it does in the form of nothing more than a taxing statute, should be viewed in that light. Unfortunately, we are confronted by a government which has given every indication that it will pursue potentially and likely a policy of reversing the very suggestions that I have made.

It would appear that ministers are inclined to favour the de-indexing of the provisions of the Income Tax Act which currently grant some measure of relief to the taxpayers of Canada. Statistically that measure of relief will be removed from those less able to pay for the further intrusion into their pocket by the Government of Canada. Very clearly the suggested de-indexing of the provisions by way of rates and deductions under the Income Tax Act will open the floodgates to additional government spending. It will obviate the necessity of government to come before this House to face the fact courageously that they may from time to time require additional revenues to cover what has in the past been massive waste and extravagance.

It is interesting that the very course they would take would be quite contrary to the provisions of an intended piece of legislation passed by the United States Congress, introduced by Jack Kemp and William Roth. If I may, I will read from a brief commentary related to the legislation which they introduced. I quote:

Under current tax law, personal income tax rates are continuously rising because inflation is permitted to push all workers, savers and investors into higher tax brackets. This incentive-robbing combination of inflation and steeply progressive tax rates—known as "bracket creep" or government's "inflation dividend"—is the greatest single cause of declining productivity, declining growth, and chronic budget deficits in the past 15 years.

The real problem in this country that gives rise to the need to make the changes that confront us in Bill C-3 is the prospect of continued growth in the number of Canadians unemployed. Rather than take steps which will deal with the cause, the government has, in its traditional patchwork form, endeavoured to deal with but a symptom, making it easier to conceal the fact that there is a tax imposed upon Canadians who are working and Canadians who are supplying work in Canada.

Investment responds to incentive. Business, I submit, the employer of labour and the creator of the jobs that are required, in order to minimize the demands upon the Unemployment Insurance Act—so called—requires a form of incentive. It is the same incentive as I spoke of in regard to the difference between those who, as employees, are prepared to work and contribute, and those who voluntarily choose not to, and that incentive must surely flow from the retention of more of what is produced, the retention of more of what is earned. This can happen only in the event the government introduces a plan designed to reduce the tax grab in this country. But instead of endeavouring to persuade business that Canada has a stable future and a government known for its determination to curb waste and excess, we are confronted with Bill C-30 which provides among other things for the borrowing of some $12 billion by the administration. When I say "among other things", I would include, as the most damaging of all, the provision entitling the government to go abroad to borrow whatever funds are required.

It was not long ago that the same government went abroad. They went to Germany and borrowed $825 million. They went to Japan and borrowed $500 million. They went to the United States and borrowed $1.5 billion. Then they wondered why our dollar came under attack. Ultimately it became necessary to pay interest on the loans which had been taken out and the prospect of repayment confronted investors who might otherwise have been examining favourably the total cash flow in and out of our country. We are stuck with the loans which have been taken out in the past, and when those loans are ultimately paid off it will be to the detriment of the exchange rate on the Canadian dollar. We will once again go into the market exchanging Canadian currency for German marks, Japanese yen, and United States dollars, and that will have the unfortunate effect upon the value of our dollar which will immediately prompt the Bank of Canada in its traditional fashion to demand higher interest rates in Canada so as to attract investment to this country. The vicious circle in which we find ourselves is never-ending.

The government has proposed in this bill to do the worst conceivable thing it could for the long-term benefit of the country. This has traditionally been the policy of the government which confronts us now. I say "confronts", because it is something over which we on this side, unfortunately, have little control. Hopefully, given time, they may be persuaded, if they listen enough, to realize the damage they are doing not only to Canadians of today but to those of tomorrow as well. It is uncomfortable for business to recognize that this year disclosed a deficit of $14 billion plus. We have failed to come to grips with the reality of this kind of news, coupled with the certainty, almost, that the deficit will, as it has in the past, exceed the expectation of government. It shows mismanagement, inability to cope with the revenue-raising and expenditure functions of government. Stability and certainty are essential if business is to expand and develop.

If business does not expand and develop, I suppose the only way the government can hope to cope with unemployment, so that the payments made under the act confronting us this evening may be reduced, would be to hire the jobless as public servants. I know that the payroll of the public service on an annual basis is in the amount of some $8.6 billion. I wonder how long the public will tolerate the increments which are constantly being made. We saw one example a short time ago. It showed an increase of 26.6 per cent from 1979 to 1980 in salaries paid to the lowest group in the Post Office, inside workers, at a cost to the taxpayers of some $36 million a year. That did not in any way abate the inflationary pressures which will grow from wage settlements of that nature.

When I originally realized that the threatened strike would not materialize I am sure that, like many others, I was gratified to find that business would once again be able to rely on the postal services and that employees of businesses might continue to be gainfully employed. But it is not that simple. We have set in motion once again, as in the past, an inflationary spiral motivated directly, approved and encouraged by government.

The ill of inflation which has a direct bearing on the way this country can perform, the hazards of excessive government expenditures, the remarkable inability of the government to deal concretely and decisively with energy policies, have the effect of driving from our nation those who by their enterprise in the past would be prepared to provide employment for today and for the future. The government has demonstrated clearly that it is incapable of dealing with any of the problems which confront the country.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, believing, as I do, that the House of Commons is a place where members should debate the issue which is before them, I wish to make a few comments about several of the speeches we have heard this afternoon and this evening.

The hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble) who has just completed his speech wants the tax system changed so that those who already have most in this country would be able to keep more of the wealth they have. He proposes to do this by reducing their taxes. Does he not realize that the top fifth of income-earners in this country already get 42 per cent of the total gross national product while the bottom fifth gets less than 4 per cent? In other words, the bottom fifth have average incomes of less than one-tenth of the top fifth. What greater degree of inequality does the hon. member for York North want? Does he not realize that the share of the gross national product which goes to business and industry has risen steadily in the last three or four years while the share which goes to wages and salaries has gone down? Yet the hon. member comes here and complains that postal workers' wages have been increased too much. Of course, he does not say a thing about the fact that profits are virtually at an all-time high right now.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who spoke this afternoon, urged the government to get though with people who abuse the unemployment insurance system. I am not going to defend anybody who abuses the unemployment insurance system, but I would be much more willing to listen to the hon. member for Bow River if occasionally he would get up here and talk about the fact that there are some doctors who abuse the medical insurance system and suggest that the government ought to go after them.

I would be happy if the hon. member would rise in the House sometimes and talk about the fact that there is a number of large corporations in this country which have been prosecuted, charged, tried and convicted, not once but two or three times, because they have been involved in an illegal conspiracy to maintain prices at a fixed, too high level. We never hear a word about that from the hon. member for Bow River. I should like him to talk about that.

I find it somewhat puzzling that when the president of the Postal Workers' Union broke the law, it did not take very long for the government to charge and bring him to court and then to have him convicted and have him actually serve a sentence. There were some very big leaders of industry in Hamilton, however, who conspired to fix the price for dredging and who bilked the public of several million dollars. They had a long, long, trial which went on for several years, and they were found guilty. I wonder when, if ever, they will serve the sentence which the judge imposed on them. Some of us wonder at the way justice is done and at the equity which we have in our justice system. We do not hear the hon. member for Bow River talk about that.

I want to say a few words about the speech we heard from the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey). He was loud in his criticism of the Canadian Labour Congress, of its supposed silence on the question of unemployment insurance. I do not have to defend them; they can look after themselves. I have a pretty good idea, because I have spoken to some of their elected officials and to some of their research staff, of what they think of the present law which we are discussing, and of the whole system of unemployment insurance. The hon. member for Lincoln implied that the reason they were not talking very much about unemployment insurance was that their members are working and were guaranteed their jobs.

I wonder where the hon. member for Lincoln has been in the last year or so. Does he not know that there have been major lay-offs in the auto industry, rubber industry, the glass industry, the plastics industry, the forest products industry, and the construction industry? Does he not know that there are tens of thousands of workers in this country who have not been employed in the past, some of whom have never drawn one week of unemployment insurance benefits before 1979 and 1980, and who continue to be unemployed now? I think the hon. member knows that, and I think he was talking tongue in cheek when he made those comments.

I wonder whether he was not so vehement because he knew deep in his heart, but did not want to admit it publicly, that what the Liberals had been doing almost from the time that the major rewriting of the Unemployment Insurance Act took place under his direction when he was minister in 1971, has been to cut down that act step by step. Of course, the hon. member for Lincoln now is a Liberal member of Parliament and he cannot say that publicly about his own party, but that is what the government has been doing. So what does he do? He sets up a strawman which he can beat.

He blames the civil servants, the bureaucrats, and he implies that the reason the whole plan is in trouble is that the senior civil servants duped their political masters, the cabinet ministers, that they were wrong in the estimates that we would only have 4 per cent unemployment, on which figure the premium rates were set back in 1971. He implied that if only they had not made that mistake, to which, of course, they do not want to admit, and had their political masters, their cabinet ministers, been as bright as the hon. member for Lincoln, they would have seen the facts as they were and we would not be in the trouble in which we find ourselves. I do not believe that for a moment.

I believe that the cabinet ministers knew exactly what was happening and they were very happy to follow the advice of the senior civil servants which was that the premiums paid by both the employer and employee should be raised, as they have been steadily raised since 1971, because, for a number of years now, they have been in a mood of retrenchment and restraint, in a mood to show the public that they can control government expenditures. One of the best and easiest ways to control government expenditures closely is to stop paying as much unemployment insurance costs by the government as possible, and to shift the cost to the employees and employers in the form of increased premium payments every pay day. In that way the government appears to be reducing its expenditures.

I will come back to what has happened to the funding of unemployment insurance needs in this country and how much less of the total cost the government is paying than it used to be. If we are in trouble, if the cost of unemployment insurance benefits to the people of Canada is now at about $5 billion, or $5,000 million a year, it is because this country and the governments which have been in control here have not believed and do not believe in full employment. Canada has the largest rate of unemployment of any of the industrialized countries in the western world.

We in the New Democratic Party believe in full employment, and when we say that full employment is possible in this country, that it is possible to produce a job for every person who wants to work, we do not mean full employment with unemployment at the rate of 4 per cent, as was calculated some years ago by organizations such as the Economic Council of Canada, we not mean unemployment of 6 per cent or more, as calculated by some organizations such as the Economic Council and probably the Conference Board today. When we talk about full employment in this country, we mean work for every Canadian who wants to work at a decent wage. We believe that full employment is still possible and should still be the objective that all Canadian political parties should have as a very high priority.

The hon. member for Bow River spoke about the fact that we still have a very large number of unemployed in this country, over 900,000 according to Statistics Canada, and that there were many employers who were looking for workers and could not find them. I am sure that is true. We must look at the situation as it really is. I am sure that there are some people who do not want to work, but I say to the hon. member for Bow River that that is a small number of people, because the figures from Statistics Canada indicate very clearly that while we have 900,000 or more people unemployed, there are fewer than 50,000 job vacancies.

So I say to the hon. member that if every job vacancy were filled tomorrow—which of course is impossible because many of them are for jobs which require skills which Canadian workers do not have—we would still have more than 800,000 unemployed. That is a fact which governments have to face up. We are not alone in our desire for full employment. Back in 1942 or 1943, a Liberal government which had remembered the depression of the 1930s and the tremendous unemployment which Canada had experienced after World War I, brought out a white paper on its post-war plans in which it set out its objective of full employment. It was very clear and explicit as to what was meant by full employment, the providing of a job for every Canadian who wanted a job.

● (2050)

In 1971 the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) reiterated the fact that "Full employment is the goal of this government." Yet, if we look at the record, we see the dismal record of the Liberal government under the present Prime Minister in meeting that supposed objective. When the present Prime Minister took office in 1968 the number of unemployed was 360,000 and the rate of unemployment was 4.5 per cent of the labour force. The unemployment situation today is very much more serious. There are over 900,000 unemployed, or almost 8 per cent of the labour force. Those are the official figures. I am sure every member of Parliament knows there are several hundreds of thousands of people unemployed in slow-growth areas such as Quebec, the Atlantic provinces and the Interlake area of Manitoba. These unemployed people are not counted in the figures because the unemployment figures of Statistics Canada are based only on people who are not only unemployed but are actively looking for work.

We all know many parts of Canada where a very large percentage of the labour force is unemployed. Many people have given up looking for work because there is no hope of getting jobs. Because of the recession in the United States, there have been very serious lay-offs recently in the automobile industry and its related industries, in the forest product industry and the construction industry. When we talk about one million unemployed, it is difficult for people—including many of us—to comprehend the magnitude of the problem, the serious situation facing unemployed people.

Each unemployed person faces hardship. Each person drawing unemployment insurance benefits has had his income reduced by at least 40 per cent. According to Statistics Canada, the average unemployment insurance benefits received by people was $120 a week and their average earnings before going on unemployment insurance was approximately $200 a week. Given the high cost of living in Canada at this time, a reduction in income of 40 per cent or more is not something people accept very easily. When the unemployment insurance benefits run out, people are reduced to living on welfare at a level which is just a fraction of what they were accustomed to living on when they were working. Largely because we do not have full employment, we have hundreds of thousands and probably millions of people living in poverty.

In see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is present this evening. She has spoken frequently and much more eloquently than I about what it means for people to live in poverty. In a speech to the YMCA in May of 1977 she said:

> —nearly two million children who live in families with incomes inadequate for their needs and for the 600,000 working families who spend two-thirds or more of their incomes to provide the basic necessities of food, clothing and shelter . . . In 1977, the poorest 20 per cent of Canadian families received less than 6 per cent of total Canadian family income—

That is the situation. When I hear members on either side of the House implying that large numbers of people do not want to work and are happy to live on unemployment insurance or welfare, it is just not true, and certainly they should know better.

I want to come back to the bill we are discussing at the present time.

Mr. Epp: Good.

Mr. Orlikow: I hear the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). My remarks have been closer to the bill than those of most of his colleagues today.

I should like to indicate how far the present Liberal government has moved from its earliest commitment to aim for full employment at the time of the last major revision to this act in 1971. I should like to refer to a few sentences from the speech of the then minister of manpower and immigration, the present hon. member for Lincoln, when he introduced the bill on unemployment insurance in 1971. He said:

What we propose to do in the main, is to limit the cost of the plan, up to a particular threshhold which I will discuss in a moment, to the employer and the employee.

He went on to say:

—the employer and the employee both will be paying their share when unemployment in the country is under the level of 4 per cent . . . above which the state will contribute. But to that point, the employer and the employee will finance the plan.

Further on in his speech he said:

If the rate of unemployment happens to be 6 per cent, that will mean an injection into the economy by the government, through the unemployed people in this country, of approximately $200 million.

I think the rate of unemployment at that time was 6 per cent. He went on to say:

Since the figure of 4 per cent has attracted a good deal of attention, I imagine somebody is going to suggest that the government has determined 4 per cent to be an acceptable rate of unemployment in Canada. Well, it is not my criterion. Like everybody else, I believe the acceptable rate of unemployment is the least possible rate.

He continued by saying:

We have used the 4 per cent figure because 4 per cent, according to our computer estimates, triggers the government's contribution to the fund at a realistic level.

Now we have an unemployment rate which is twice what it was in 1971 when the hon. member for Lincoln was the minister. I did not hear much complaint on his part about the unacceptable high rate of unemployment at the present time as compared to 1971. When the member made the statements to which I have just referred, the rate of unemployment was substantially higher than 4 per cent, and it has grown steadily since then. Instead of devising an industrial strategy to remodernize our manufacturing industry so that more well-trained and educated young people can find work, instead of cutting taxes and reducing interest rates to increase the purchasing power of Canadians which would lead to more jobs, Liberal governments have again and again amended the Unemployment Insurance Act to remove people from the opportunity of collecting benefits, to make it more difficult to qualify and so on.

Mr. Benjamin: Where was Mackasey when we needed him?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, where is he now when we need him? During the recent election campaign the New Democratic Party called for the introduction of a full employment bill which would set targets for reducing unemployment to 6 per cent by 1982 and to 4 per cent by 1984. We submit that this country cannot afford having over one million people unemployed. Because there is 8 per cent unemployment rather than the 4 per cent which was considered full employment some years ago, it has been estimated that we lose $5 billion a year in the production of goods and services. Because of that, federal tax revenues are $1 billion less than they should be, and we pay out $5 billion in unemployment insurance benefits.

What is the response of the government to this disaster? Government spending on job creation is to be reduced by $85 million, down from $281 million to $192 million. The job-creation programs announced so far by the government are as usual too little and too late. The job-creation programs that have been adopted have not been of a size to have any real effect on the economic system. The Canada Works program and the Young Canada Works program have been geared in an attempt to deal with the regional imbalance, so Quebec and the Atlantic provinces have received the lion's share of the fund. We do not complain about that because they have the largest number and the highest percentage of unemployed, but the jobs created there have essentially been of a short-term or temporary nature. They have been mainly in community improvement projects, necessary and useful, but they have not expanded the economic system to accommodate our growing labour force.

● (2100)

On both the Liberal and the Conservative sides we have seen a desire to push off the failure of our economy to provide the jobs which are required, first of all on those who are unemployed, and secondly on the employed, by putting more of the costs to pay for unemployment insurance benefits on the employer and the employee.

Historically unemployment insurance has been financed from two sources, first the premium account into which the employer-employee premiums are deposited, and secondly by advances from the Government of Canada.

When the government passed the major revisions to the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971 it predicated the legislation on an average of 4 per cent unemployment throughout the decade. Benefit costs of unemployment insurance up to the rate of 4 per cent, as I have already indicated, were to be paid by employer-employee premiums, and the cost that resulted from a rate higher than 4 per cent was to be recovered from the Government of Canada. The act required that when premiums collected were higher than the benefits they were intended to cover, the premium rates would be lowered. Instead of this the government has increased premium rates over the years, changing the legislation and increasing premium costs to cover program costs which the government itself was originally supposed to cover.

Before I give a short summary of how the government has done this, I want to point out that the hon. member for Lincoln, who was the minister responsible for introducing the act in 1971, today defended the changes which have been made since 1971, the very changes which have perverted the intention of the act back in 1971.

Let me indicate how this was done. In 1971 the Unemployment Insurance Act was passed and unemployment was forecast at 4 per cent throughout the decade. Benefit costs up to 4 per cent were to be paid from premiums, and the government was to pay for benefits above that level in recognition of its responsibility to ensure adequate employment. I do not want to quote again from the then minister's speech, but that is exactly the argument he gave to show that the government would feel itself responsible for keeping the rate of unemployment to 4 per cent. Of course, that did not happen.

In 1975 we had Bill C-69. The rate at which government contributions helped to pay for initial benefits from 4 per cent up was changed to an eight-year moving average of unemployment rates.

In 1977 we had Bill C-27 which eliminated two extended benefit phases for which the government, not the premium payers, was previously responsible for payment, and in 1978 we had Bill C-14 which shifted the burden of the extended phase of benefits to premium payers from the government, at a cost to premium payers of $400 million, and the premiums were lowered because of greatly reduced benefits.

What was the effect of all those changes? When Bill C-14 was passed in December, 1978, under a Liberal government, government members touted it as a measure to save $580 million. In fact the saving was $180 million or less, and the other $400 million was merely a transfer of costs from the federal account to the premium account.

From the early 1970s on, when the government's contribution to unemployment insurance pay-outs was 53 per cent, the government's share declined to 38 per cent after the 1977 amendments, to something well below that after the 1978 amendments, and the intent of this legislation is to reduce it to less than 20 per cent. That is the only thing the hon. member for York North said with which I can agree. The government department responsible projects total unemployment insurance costs for 1981-82 at $5.2 billion. Government contributions are projected at only $951 million. We can see what has happened to the 50 per cent or more of the costs which the government paid a few years ago.

Incidentally, the short-lived Conservative government we had, proposed to do exactly the same thing in the 1979-80 session of Parliament. Under the provisions of the budget, which did not pass, but was presented in December, 1979, it was proposed that all benefits except regional extended benefits would be financed by employer-employee contributions, with the administrative costs of job referral and employment services also being financed by premiums, and premiums would be increased to cover the increased cost. The premium increase was rescinded on December 19, 1979, by the Conservatives when, of course, they were vulnerable to a voter backlash during the election campaign.

Why did both Liberal and Conservative governments act in the way they have acted? I suggest it is because they accepted as fact what I suggest is fiction, that many people are ripping off the system and unemployment insurance benefits are a disincentive to work. We heard that tonight from some of the Conservative speakers.

Let me substantiate my claim that both Liberal and Conservative governments felt that way, and probably still feel that way, by quoting first from the then Liberal cabinet minister, and later from the then Conservative finance minister.

This is what the then minister of employment and immigration, the present member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen), said in December, 1978. He said that the unemployment insurance scheme has changed from an insurance scheme to a welfare act which people are ripping off "by making unemployment a way of life". I do not believe there are many people who do that.

Then the minister of finance in the Conservative government said on December 11, 1979, during his budget speech, that federal government expenditures on unemployment insurance were going to bankrupt the country, and what was required was a government "committed to bringing greater financial integrity to the unemployment insurance program". I do not believe that for a moment. I do not believe the unemployment insurance system does not have integrity.

What is the intent of the bill we are now discussing? This bill would amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to extend until January, 1982, the existing variable entrance requirement for the unemployment insurance program; that is, the number of weeks a claimant must pay into unemployment insurance before he or she is eligible for benefits. The number of required weeks varies with the regional rate of unemployment, so that a worker in an area of high unemployment, over 9 per cent, could qualify for benefits with ten weeks' insurable employment, whereas a claimant who works in an area of relatively low unemployment, 6 per cent or less, must pay into unemployment insurance for 14 weeks. Some of the areas defined by unemployment insurance officials are so large there could be full employment in one city and major unemployment in another, so that people would not qualify for unemployment insurance benefits until they had their full 14 weeks employment because the area is classified as not having a high rate of unemployment.

• (2110)

One of the amendments made to the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1978 in Bill C-14 would have eliminated the variable entrance requirement by December, 1980, setting it at 14 weeks for all areas. There were many Conservative members who supported that bill, although a large number of them came from the Atlantic provinces which have a high percentage of people unemployed. In Bill C-27 which was passed in July, 1977, the entrance requirement was increased from eight weeks for all areas to the variable ten to 14-week rule. This extension of the variable entrance requirement was in response to protests that the 14-week requirement was highly discriminatory because it eliminated many workers from any income protection under the unemployment insurance program. Seasonal workers, whether employed in the tourist industry of Prince Edward Island, fishing off the Atlantic coast or the Pacific coast or farming in any part of Canada, would have been cut off.

This bill would shift to the private sector the government's financial responsibilities of sharing unemployment insurance costs. Bill C-3 will take the government out of this cost sharing by eliminating the "threshold rate", an eight-year moving average of unemployment rates, above which the government pays the cost of benefits. This is expected to save the government $378 million in fiscal 1980-81. Of course, it will add exactly the same amount to the premiums paid by the employers and the employees. In other words, what the government takes away with the one hand it gains on the other hand.

Under the proposed amendments the government will continue to pay only for regional extended benefits. The initial and extended labour force phases of unemployment insurance will be paid entirely through employer-employee premiums. At present, all special benefit phases—sickness, maternity leave, etc.—are financed entirely through the premium account, as are all the administrative costs relating to the unemployment insurance program. As a result of an order in council announced by the present minister on April 3, 1980, the administrative cost to National Employment Service, estimated at $246 million this year, will also be a charge against premiums. Because they are a charge against premiums they will add to the cost of administering the program which, until now, was paid by the government.

I would like to make one more observation on this bill and how it affects a particular group of workers. I refer specifically to women. In the press release which the minister issued announcing Bill C-3, he noted that the government plans to introduce regulating changes that would change minimum insurability provisions so that instead of being required to work 20 hours a week, 15 hours a week, or 20 per cent of maximum earnings, would be the new basis of entitlement for part-time workers. He cited this as an improvement which would eliminate the criticism that the existing rule discriminates against women who make up 71 per cent of the part time labour force, although they make up 50 per cent of the total labour force.

This change is expected to take effect on January 1, 1981, and it is a step in the right direction. However, we would point out that other sections of the Unemployment Insurance Act have regulations which specifically discriminate against women, and they need to be changed—for example, the "magic ten" rule with respect to provisions for maternity benefits, and that adoptive mothers are ineligible to collect benefits.

While there are some very minor improvements in this bill, the whole direction of the bill is to continue the process by which since 1971 the Liberal government—and the Conservative government had the same intention when it was in office—and it would have followed through had it stayed in office—has whittled away at the Unemployment Insurance Act to get the government out of its responsibilities of ensuring that we have full employment in this country and that we give every Canadian who wants to work and opportunity to work for decent wages, and to put the costs of the unemployment insurance program on those who are unemployed and on the employers and employees of this country. To the extent that they succeed the government will have less pressure and less of an obligation to adopt programs and devise plans which would put the unemployed of this country back to work, where they want to be. It is for that reason that we are so critical of this proposal and of many other proposals of this government.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, it is always great to follow an NDP member in one of these debates. I would like to start off by quoting a little poetry which goes:

They are so pure, so pure as can be,
For they are members of the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: Have hon. members ever wondered what happens to an NDP member when he either retires or is defeated? One of them became a director of Husky Oil. There was another member of the NDP who came here from the west coast and who was here for years. He was finally defeated. That former member ended up working as a stockbroker. He came back to this Parliament and padded up and down the halls trying to sell stocks to members. That same man stood in the House here and damned corporations and companies for years.

Another NDP member would stand in this House and cry for 6 per cent mortgages. That member sold his farm, and what did he do with the proceeds? He invested in 16 per cent second mortgages. The way things are going, I would expect that the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) will probably end up as director of the Canadian Pacific. That is where he is destined to go. We had the president of the Canadian Pacific before a committee of this House.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have been waiting patiently to speak on this bill. I have some very important points that I would like to make on the Unemployment Insurance Act. The present speaker is taking up time which I would like to have.

An hon. Member: Wait your turn.

Mr. Kempling: The hon. member can wait for his turn. When it comes, then he can put what he has to say on the record.

The day that the president of Canadian Pacific came before a committee of the House, I said to the hon. member for Regina West, "Hey, your buddy is here, the fellow you are always damning in the House. Why don't you come before the committee so you will have something else to do tonight?"

Mr. Benjamin: I did, Bill.

Mr. Kempling: How do you spell NDP, Mr. Speaker? It is spelled "phony". There are some matters with regard to this bill that I would like to talk about. Members from all sides who have discussed this bill have brought forward some very valid points, and I assume that the bill will go into committee where there will be some very good discussions.

Mr. Orlikow: Not tonight.

Mr. Kempling: Not tonight, perhaps, but it will go into committee where, through the discussions there, it will be honed a little finer and eased where it is necessary. I would like to say a few words, not on precise parts of the bill or about the regulations, but about the attitude of the people who work in the unemployment insurance offices across this country. I had some experiences with them, but at least I have not had any complaints in the past few months. There have been some dehumanizing experiences, and I have to say that I believe things would not have happened this way if the people concerned had been directed differently. I do not believe they went into the job with the idea of dehumanizing other people who come to them for assistance. I believe it is due to some extent to direction, or to the fact that things are run so loosely so that someone who is a real hardliner is given a free rein. At one time things were so bad that I thought they must have a hit team that was sent from area to area.

● (2120)

I want to mention a few particular cases, Mr. Speaker. Regardless of what hon. members say in this House, or what the provinces say about labour practices, we all know that discrimination is practised against people over 50 years of age. Indeed, it is practised by this government. How many people over 50 years of age have been hired by the government recently? Very few. We all know that it goes in industry. It is against the law, but it is done. In the end, these people go to the unemployment insurance office to seek aid and assistance.

You have been in this House a long time, Mr. Speaker, so I am sure you have handled a lot of cases where women over 50 years of age cannot find a job and end up on unemployment insurance. I have dealt with a number of them in my constituency, and the way some of them have been treated is almost criminal.

There is the case of a 46-year old woman who had been the manager of a department store. She listed her qualifications as manager, buyer, clerk, accountant and supervisor, so she was a very talented person. The department store had closed down and she became unemployed. When she went to the unemployment insurance office to apply for assistance the clerk asked her what she could do. She said, "I have been the manager of a store, a buyer, a clerk, an accountant and supervisor. I can do almost anything in a retail operation." He asked, "What can you do?" She replied, "I have been a manager, a buyer, a clerk, an accountant and a supervisor. I can do almost anything in a retail operation." He said, "What sort of work can you do?" Mr. Speaker, she repeated that six times. Of course the object of the exercise was to get her to blow her stack, as they say—to become so emotional that she would walk out. He could then fill out a form showing that she had a bad attitude toward work. That actually happened, Mr. Speaker.

Then there was a case of a man who was 62 years of age. Try to get a 62-year old a job in this country! He had worked all his life with one employer but the firm was bought out and the new operation cut down and he was let go. He was a veteran and had been a prisoner of war in World War II. He had never applied for unemployment insurance. He was harassed and degraded so much that when he came to my office he was in tears. I was very annoyed about that.

An hon. Member: That is private enterprise.

Mr. Kempling: It was the unemployment insurance office that was harassing him. I went to the office with him and they asked him what he could do other than the job he had been doing. He said he was also a photographer. We got him some work going around to real estate agents in the town and taking photographs of the houses they had for sale. We tried to get the unemployment insurance to make a partial payment to him because he was not making enough money at this photography, but they would not do it. The man was almost inconsolable. He said, "What have I done but work all my life? I have given everything I have to my country, and this is the way I end up?"

The next case is a rather delicate one and I shall skip around the edges of it. A talented young lady had held an administrative job in the $20,000 per year bracket with an American company that decided to move back to the United States. They wanted her to go with them but she could not because she could not get a work permit for the United States, so she applied for unemployment insurance. As she was single, talented, and wanted a job in the same income bracket, she went to London, to Niagara Falls, to St. Catharines, and to Kitchener, looking for work. She was a rather attractive looking girl. The people at the unemployment insurance office suggested to her that she was a prostitute, and that if she did not do so much hustling she might be available for work. Can you imagine that sort of thing happening? It did. Ultimately, through her own efforts she secured a very good job at a higher salary. They had been giving her a rough time because she would not take a job as a waitress or a gas pump jockey in a service station.

I think these cases illustrate that the management of the UIC must be very careful about the people they hire. If they find they have such attitudes, then they should get rid of them. There is no excuse for dehumanizing people. We cannot tolerate that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: Another man came to me who had gone to the unemployment insurance office to look at the job listings. He had driven a school bus for seven years, and prior to that was a driver-mechanic in the Canadian Armed Forces. There was a job listed for a transport driver. He had an interview with one of the clerks, and because he did not answer a question the right way the clerk—who could not drive a truck, incidentally—said, "I could not recommend you for the job." The job was available and the man had the talents, but the clerk would not recommend him for it and would not give him the name of the employer. This man went through the yellow pages of the telephone book and placed call after call until he eventually found where the job was. He got it on his own.

Then there was another man who was a stationary engineer by trade but he was getting on in years. He had been only a short time with an employer when he became ill and was obliged to spend some time in hospital. When he recovered he wanted to get to work. He was desperate because he is the type of person who just has to work. In the UIC office he saw a listing for a dishwasher. He said he would take anything—would even wash dishes. The clerk asked, "Do you have any experience?" He said, "I have been married for 40 years." The clerk said, "That does not give you any experience, and I cannot give you that job."

I hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) saying that men do not wash dishes, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Sexist.

Mr. Kempling: This man also went through the yellow pages and called all the restaurants until he found the one that wanted a dishwasher. He got the job.

Another difficulty concerns the computer, Mr. Speaker. Whatever goes wrong in UIC is the fault of the computer. If everyone gets an overpayment, it is the fault of the computer. If anybody gets a nasty letter, it is the fault of the computer.

• (2130)

Here is a case of a lady who left her employer because she had a disagreement with him. It is her right. She left and applied for unemployment insurance. The unemployment insurance office replied by telling her that she should not have left her job and that it would cost her a certain penalty of so many weeks before she could become eligible for unemployment insurance. She told them that she understood that. In the meantime she went out to look for a job. She was a reasonably aggressive girl and in the matter of a few days she found a job. After this she began to get wads of paper from unemployment insurance. She called the person who signed the paper but she could not get whoever it was on the phone. However, she told them that she did not want them to send her any more of these papers because she had a job and did not need unemployment insurance. She told them that they had not sent her any money and she did not need any money. She also told them not to send her any more paper. This whole series of events is amazing.

First, she received a piece of paper telling her that she should not have left her job and because she left she would not get certain benefits. Then she received another piece of paper which told her that her occupation was a general office clerk and that it was determined she must make a minimum of 15 contacts per week to be considered eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. Next she was sent a letter that told her that she would have to pay back the money she did not get. Each time the lady received one of these papers, she called the office and told them that she had not received any money. She told them that they had not sent her any money and how could she send money back that she had not received. Next she was sent a letter saying that because she failed to appear on July 24 at 10.45 a.m. her benefits would be suspended. Again she told them that she had not received any and asked them how they could be suspended. On and on it went until finally the phone calls and the cards got to the point where they caught up with each other and the harassment ceased. Of course all of this was all blamed on the computer.

I think probably the most famous case that we had concerned a man who had three unemployment insurance files. Imagine the frustration. He would call the unemployment insurance office and tell them that he had not received any benefits. They told him to wait while someone got his file. Someone then grabbed his file and he was told that it showed he was not entitled to benefits. The man would then tell the unemployment insurance office that he had been unemployed for such and such a time, that he had paid into the fund for a certain length of time, that he was an architect and he was looking for work, etc. The unemployment office would tell him that they would check into it and advise him later.

The architect would call back and this time file number two would be drawn. File number two showed that he owed them money. First, the man had not received any money, yet he owed the unemployment insurance money.

Believe it or not, there was file number three which said that he was entitled to benefits but that there was a mix-up in the computer and it was hoped that it would all be clear by the fifteenth of the following month. Finally I went in and raised a little Cain, and an investigation was called. As a result, three files for this fellow appeared on the manager's desk.

These are things which happen within the bureaucracy. The point I am getting at, and the message I want to convey to the minister is this: the attitudes of some of the employees should be looked into, and in this connection I think one has to start at the top. By starting at the top one can see where this direction comes from. It is either direction or lack of direction. Either the people are being directed to harass and there is a hit team, or the system is being run so loosely that these people can do as they please.

A lot of the criticisms of the Unemployment Insurance Commission is the result of a few hundred people in some urban areas across Canada. They are the ones who have created the greatest amount of criticism for the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Canada. We all hear about those who abuse the system.

I would be naive if I said there was no abuse of the system. I also believe that these abuses are small in number compared to the total number of claimants. When people come to me about abuses of the system, I always ask them to give me an example or a name. They all know of several who abuse the system, but they can never come up with a name. The answer is usually that they have heard it from somebody else who heard it from somebody else. We all know there is abuse. But I think the numbers generally across the country, especially when one takes the whole thing into consideration, are relatively small.

I will close by telling hon. members how I treat people who come to my office with unemployment insurance problems. I have never had any difficulty in this procedure. I tell them that if they are legitimately entitled to unemployment insurance, then I will see that they get it. I tell them that I will do everything that I can. I tell them that if they are entitled under the act, under the regulations, to get unemployment insurance, and they are genuinely unemployed and trying to get job, I will help them. That is the purpose of unemployment insurance. However, I tell them that if they are trying to fiddle the system that I am not their man. I have followed that procedure for eight years and I have never had any difficulty. I have never yet had anyone who has come in to see me say that they did not like that attitude. They all agree and tell me that no one should fiddle system. If we all take that attitude I think we could help the administration along.

I just want to leave those few thoughts with hon. members. I think there is a job to be done inside the commission as well as to look at the act, the statute and the regulations. Attitudes today are most important. Attitudes toward people who are past 45 or 50 years of age—in that age bracket—are very important. They are very sensitive. Most of them have not been unemployed before. They are embarrassed and feel out of place before a younger person when they come into the office asking for advice, assistance and help. Somewhere along the line we have to get a little more humanity and humility back into this operation.

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-3. As we all know, unemployment insurance provides financial assistance to workers during periods of temporary unemployment. Temporary unemployment may be due to a lack of jobs or it may be due to seasonal variations in employment. That, I think, is also due to the size of the country and the types of regions in which we live.

One must never forget that we need such a program. We have to protect the individuals who are looking for employment. Tonight I would like to talk about some of the discontent that I feel about the unemployment insurance program. In particular, I am disappointed in two aspects of the program that have been brought forth to date under the Unemployment Insurance Act. One would be the use of the money that has been saved in the past from unemployment insurance amendments, and also the money which will be saved with this bill in the financing of the premiums.

It seems to me that there should be a return of this money for more job creation. Areas such as my own which will be affected by this bill have been affected in the past. They are not seeing job creations and are not seeing year-round jobs created. I must say that I am discontent with the money and where it is going. I am concerned there is not more job creation.

The second aspect is that there does not seem to be any solution to the harshness of the unemployment insurance rates that are applied to the various unemployment insurance regions or economic regions used by manpower offices. The unemployment insurance regions are those used by the employer, but they are based on the economic regions as derived from Statistics Canada. In the course of my remarks tonight, I will discuss some of these injustices, or the harshness that I feel is incorporated and being continued by the present system of unemployment insurance and this bill in terms of the use of economic regions.

I would first like to deal with the extension of the variable entrance requirement of ten to 14 weeks beyond December of this year. The variable entrance requirement was used in the past for three reasons. The first was the establishment of benefits. Whether you are entitled to receive benefits depends on the variable entrance requirement in a given area. It is related to the economic regions and the unemployment rate that that manpower office must deal with in the area.

It is also used for the extended benefit period. The last reason is in the former amendments for repeaters in the program. I feel that this area has been the most harsh. In my view, this variable entrance requirement implied a fictional unemployment insurance rate in some areas of Canada. The minister is well aware of my concerns in the use of these statistics and the consequence it has had.

The amendment before us tonight will allow for the continuation of the variable entrance requirement from ten to 14 weeks, at least from December, 1980, to June, 1982, coincidentally the 18 months while the study is being carried out. In other words, if we do not pass this as of January, everyone across Canada will be required to have 14 weeks for a variable entrance requirement in order to receive benefits.

There are pros and cons to that. There are areas of this country that need the variable entrance requirement. However, it is most unjust for one area in proximity to another area to not be included in the same entrance requirement. This is what happened in Nova Scotia. There, all of Cape Breton and most of mainland Nova Scotia have an unemployment rate, yet in the southern end of Nova Scotia there is a different unemployment insurance rate based on an economic region UI rate. They are penalized for being in another area, an economic region that includes Lunenburg, which has a very good economic base.

I wish to continue on with this variable entrance requirement. I do not say that it should not be extended. I just say that when talking about the variable entrance requirement, we must remember that it is not uniform across Canada. In other words, it is variable. I will now deal with the harshness of that application.

For example, two unemployment insurance regions in Nova Scotia, that of Annapolis and Digby, would correspond to the economic regions used by Statistics Canada. I believe they are economic regions four and five. Digby includes Digby county, as well as the counties of Yarmouth, Shelburne, Queens and Lunenburg. The Annapolis area includes Annapolis, Kings and probably Hants. Manpower use two unemployment insurance regions. In Annapolis the averaged unemployment insurance rate from August, 1978, to July, 1979, was 11. In the unemployment insurance region of Digby it was 8.4. Therefore there was a variable entrance requirement in order to receive benefits in Annapolis of ten and in Digby of 11. Looking at the regional extended benefit entitlement, you have 28 weeks in Annapolis and 18 in Digby. With regard to the repeaters provision, there was no exemption because the unemployment rate was not high enough in those areas to exclude the repeater provisions.

The Digby rate is heavily influenced by the Lunenburg area where unemployment is far less than in other counties in that economic or unemployment insurance region and the population is greater there than in other counties. I am sure the wages are also greater there. One must look beyond that unemployment insurance or economic region to the other regions. The commission should begin to take that into consideration.

In 1977 or 1978 the Yarmouth manpower office had approximately 12 per cent of the pay-outs for UI benefit in Nova Scotia, yet it is penalized by an unemployment insurance rate. When analysing statistics, we must look at the other side as well, namely, the labour surplus rate in the unemployment insurance region of Annapolis and that of Digby. The labour surplus rate is derived from the number of unemployment insurance beneficiaries as a proportion of the labour force in a given unemployment insurance or economic region.

In the August, 1978, to July, 1979, period, the labour surplus rate in South West Nova was 14.3 per cent. Compare that to the economic or unemployment insurance region of that area of 12.8 per cent, or the Annapolis unemployment insurance or economic region which was 11.8 per cent. The variable entrance requirement for Yarmouth or South West Nova was related to the unemployment insurance rate in the economic or unemployment area, not to the labour surplus rate. It would be distorting that figure because that economic region is heavily weighted because the Lunenburg area, as I said, is much better off.

I now wish to deal with the concerns I have in terms of application of the variable entrance requirement. The manpower offices are using statistics that are at least three months old. A unique problem develops. In December the unemployment insurance rate would be based on the variable entrance requirement for that area in September. In other words, the peak employment period in September is used in December. The statistics are three months old.

We then get to the other side. In May there may be a variable entrance requirement of ten weeks because the January unemployment rate, a high rate, is being used. Therefore someone in May now needs ten weeks in order to qualify for unemployment insurance. Using the September rate in December, when there is full employment in that area, a person needs 13 weeks in order to qualify under the variable entrance requirements in December. I am not talking about repeater provisions and extended benefits periods. This is only to qualify for unemployment insurance in the month of December.

Last year in the southern end of the province, Yarmouth in particular, manpower offices had to bring in additional help in order to implement the new variable entrance requirements along with the repeater provisions because where they had been able to settle on a set variable entrance requirement the year before, they now have repeater provisions depending upon the change in each month that could change depending on how many weeks they had received unemployment in the last qualifying period. So you had the unique position that in the month of October the unemployment insurance rate changed, the variable entrance requirement changed, and it went up to 17 weeks.

• (2150)

In the month of November a person had to have 18 weeks, and in the month of December it went up to 19 weeks. But what happened? You have the person who goes into the manpower office comes the middle of November, and he is told: "We will look at your claim." At the time he goes into the office, he needs maybe 17 weeks to qualify for benefits. However, he comes back in three weeks time and it is the turn of the month and he now needs 18 weeks. So then he goes through the whole process of putting in a claim again, only to find that if there has been a slow-up in the manpower office he is going to need 19 weeks. It is all good and well where you have a set unemployment rate in an area over a given year, but when the unemployment rate changes and the variable entrance requirement changes you get the harshness of this application. I think the commission should be looking at this harshness, and this brings me to my third criticism of the variable entrance requirement.

Before getting into the third criticism, I would like to reiterate that in order even to process the claim at the manpower office, it took four times the time to process a claim over the year before, and they had to bring in additional manpower from the Sydney area and the Antigonish area where they did not have that problem.

But let us look at the individual. Sometimes, with legislation, the individual is forgotten. When I say "he" I mean "he" or "she" because in this case it was mainly the women who were being hurt the most. But there is harshness to the individual. At this time of the year, he or she should know how many weeks he or she has got to work in order to qualify. People should not, in the month of December, have to go out looking for an additional week when there is no fish, when there are no jobs and there is no tourist season at that time of year. So, what we are doing to them, they come in and officials say, "Go out and find another week." Where do they find it?

Another thing is that the employer, in order to keep that labour force in the area, should know how many weeks he will have to create employment. I refer to the idea that Canada is a seasonal type of place and there is seasonality in the creation of jobs. This implementation has hurt the idea that the individual does not know today how many weeks he is going to need in order to qualify come the month of November or December. There is another aspect of it. Neither does the employer, and the hustle and bustle of trying to find that additional week when a person is going to be without money for the next two months are very hard.

There is also the harshness to the community because the municipality then has to bring in assistance to the families of those people who are not qualifying for unemployment insurance, and then the social assistance program comes in which we, as the federal government, cost-share 50 per cent under the Canada Assistance Plan. So one way or another we have to pay the cost of the individual not being able to qualify for unemployment insurance. These are some of the aspects which I feel under the variable entrance requirement should be looked at in committee in connection with this bill, by which we are extending the process for another 18 months.

I just want to quickly talk about the financial aspect. The government still plans to continue the full cost of regional extended benefits. What they are doing in this bill is allowing the private sector, through premium contributions, to pay for the initial regular and labour force extended phases of the program. In other words, those two areas will be self-financing. That is fine. That is very good. But the saving, we are told, effective July 1, 1980, in government expenditures will be reduced by some $378 million for the balance of the current fiscal year. If you took a whole year from July to July it would come to practically $500 million. I should like to say to you, Mr. Speaker, where is that half a billion dollars going? Is it going to create more jobs? Is it going to add some money so that true statistics may be obtained in certain areas? I have not been told. I should like to know where that saving is going. I should like to see it go into job creation and reduce the unemployment rate. Again, I am looking forward to the committee and a study of this bill to see just what those savings are going into.

I should like to comment on a couple of other areas in the minister's speech yesterday. He told us he would be establishing a task force which will study the unemployment insurance program over the next 18 months. I welcome that announcement. I worked quite diligently for four and a half years trying to get new ideas accepted with regard to the application of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I would hope there is to be some consultation with Parliament on the direction of that task force. The hon. gentleman has not said where the people would come from or who will be involved in the work of this task force. I hope it will not be just people within the department or within the commission who will be reviewing the principles and objectives of the program because, if that is the case, and if we look at what they have given us in the past, we shall not have very much left of the unemployment insurance program. The fact that this program was created to eliminate the difficulties people experience when they are unemployed across Canada must be the top concern of any task force. So my question to the minister and to the members of this task force or study group, whoever they are going to be is: what are you going to look at?

The minister outlined some guidelines but it seems to me those were not the only guidelines. It is the application of the unemployment insurance program, it is how does it apply in South West Nova as it does in downtown Toronto—how do we look at who the recipient or the beneficiary will be, why does one area of Nova Scotia have a different qualifying period or a different variable entrance requirement from another when people are the same, they basically earn the same living from the same process—it is either farming or fishing or forestry in the southern end.

I look forward to the task force but I do not look forward to it if it is not a truly consultative group which will incorporate parliamentary concerns with the ideas before they bring forth any new legislation.

The last thing I should like to speak about, and I shall not be too long, is the change from the 20 hours of the part-time worker, or 30 per cent of maximum insurable earnings in order to qualify for a stamp. This has truly hurt the women in particular who make up the greater number of those in part-time employment. The minister mentioned yesterday that one in every four women is a part-time worker whereas the figure for men is one in every 17, if I am not mistaken. I am open to correction on that. In order to qualify for a stamp, last year the change was 20 hours a week minimum for employees on time worked or fixed salary basis, or 30 per cent of maximum insurable earnings for others. I am glad the minister is able, under the regulations, to change this, but had people on the Unemployment Insurance Commission listened to some of us members at the time of this change, it might not have to be changed again.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: My friend and I wish to ask the same question. The question on both our minds is about tomorrow. There have been some discussions and the order of business has been altered. Can the government House leader tell us what it will be?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I acceded to the request made by opposition members who were not ready to proceed tomorrow with Bill C-5. Consequently, we will proceed with Bills C-35, C-22, C-13, S-6 in that order and then we will go on to consideration of items on the order paper in the order they are entered.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR CANADA—SERVICE OUT OF HAMILTON—EFFECT ON NORDAIR

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I asked a question in the House of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on May 1 regarding the Hamilton airport and the activities in the future of Nordair and Air Canada. I think it would be appropriate for me to recount briefly what has happened in this area in the last few years.

For more than ten years the expansion of the Mount Hope airport has been discussed by the people of Hamilton and the people in the area beyond that city which could reasonably be serviced by a scheduled airline. The Chamber of Commerce formed an airport committee, as did civic authorities, and several other interested groups joined them. In 1973 the federal government set aside some $10 million for land acquisition. There followed a series of studies costing many hundreds of thousands of dollars on this area. It seems to me there have been about two studies a year for the last nine years. I believe they have studied every tadpole, garter snake and groundhog from Copetown to Tapleytown, and back again, and now we are told there will be some more studies.

I think it would be appropriate if I put on the record the Hansard for May 10, 1978, where the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain of the day, the Liberal member, Gus MacFarlane, asked the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Early in the year he committed the government to the support and development of the airport at Hamilton. At this time, can he give the House any kind of time-frame as to what is occurring there, particularly with regard to runway 06 which seems to be in all the plans; and is anything being done that will prevent the costly diversion of Nordair aircraft to Toronto which seems to occur on a daily basis?

Here is the reply from the Hon. Otto Lang who was then minister of transport. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, I believe that runway, in fact, is one which has been identified as being a clear part of the development plant at Hamilton, and accordingly we will be moving forward immediately with improvements to the landing system. I can assure the hon. member that in Toronto not long ago, I stated that in my view the Mount Hope airport stands in a really good position to help with the overload that we see at different times at Malton. I will certainly try to see that my officials move forward as rapidly as possible with the Hamilton development plans, and, indeed, encourage additional flights by regularly scheduled airlines through Hamilton.

That was in 1978, two years ago almost to the day.

My colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott), asked the Minister of Transport a question on April 28. In his reply the minister said:

> Yes, Madam Speaker, I was about to mention that there is another aspect of very great importance, namely, the servicing of that airport by Air Canada. There are a number of negotiations to take place in that connection because it would be rather useful to have the assurance of regular service if the airport is to be expanded.

Then, in my question on May 1 I asked the minister a supplementary question as follows:

> —Air Canada opened an office in downtown Hamilton a few months ago, and a senior official at that opening said Air Canada would be offering a service out of Hamilton once the new airport facilities were arranged at Mount Hope.

I wanted to know what was going to happen to Nordair because, in his reply, the minister said that they really have to do these studies to know what traffic there is before Air Canada could make a decision. Mr. Speaker, I ask you, who is kidding whom? Air Canada controls all the share stock of Nordair; we know that. Is the minister saying that Air Canada has to do more studies now to decide whether there is enough traffic out of Hamilton for Air Canada to put flights in there? Surely to goodness they know from their connection with Nordair what is going on in that airport. I know they know what is going on.

● (2205)

The thing which concerns me is that in 1978 the government purchased Nordair through Air Canada. At the time of the purchase they said that they would sell it within one year. They have not done that. I believe it is the purpose of Air Canada and the government to try to run the share stock of Nordair down. If they can dwindle the service away to the point that the shares are worth nothing, it will be just blended into Air Canada and there will be no more Nordair. That was not the purpose of the purchase of Nordair. I think the government should come clean and tell us exactly what its plans are.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on May 1 the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) raised the matter of possible air service by Air Canada out of Hamilton should new airport facilities be put in place at Mount Hope. The hon. member went on to ask "what effect this"—and presumably he meant the possible future service of Air Canada—"will have on Nordair." He asked what effect it will have on the purchase offers which have been tendered to the government for Nordair shares held by Air Canada on behalf of the government. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) replied that the matter would have no effect at all on Nordair, that this is entirely a different question, and that Nordair would continue to operate out of Hamilton.

The provision of air service at Hamilton by Air Canada is very much in the future. Should Air Canada in fact enter into such service, I am advised that in all probability these services would be in the nature of charters to southern points and perhaps service to western Canada. In short, should Air Canada introduce air service to Hamilton, this service would not be in competition with Nordair.

During the course of the last several weeks the minister met with several of the prospective purchasers of Nordair. At these meetings none of the interested parties made mention of the future presence of Air Canada in Hamilton. In view of the fact these interested parties are astute businessmen, one can readily draw the conclusion that Nordair and Air Canada services from Hamilton are not related.

Mr. Kempling: Oh.

Mr. Bockstael: The sale of the shareholding of Air Canada in Nordair is a matter now under consideration by the minister. This disposition question is a complicated one, but it is hoped a solution will be found soon. However, it is clear the presence of Air Canada in Hamilton, whenever that may occur, will not have any effect on the proposals now before the minister, nor on any course of action the minister may choose to follow in the matter of disposing of Nordair Ltd.

FISHERIES—CLOSING OF FRASER RIVER, B.C. FISHERY—REQUEST FOR TABLING TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, as I rise in my place this evening to express my concern for the British Columbia salmon fisheries, the fisheries in general, and the gillnetters in the Fraser River in particular, I should like to take this opportunity to welcome the parliamentary secretary back from the west coast. He complained to me a little earlier that he felt a little red-eyed, that it was a long trip. I should like to tell him that some of us do it every weekend. So, while we are compassionate, we do not have any particular compassion for him at this moment.

I think he can probably emphasize and underline the fact that it is not inaccurate to say that the salmon industry is probably experiencing its worst year in the last 25. I think he has ample evidence of that. Anyway, I should like to suggest to him that of all the people in the industry, probably among the most distressed, depressed and even oppressed, are the gillnetters in the Fraser River. Last year by this time they had more than 17 openings and had captured something like their average for the last four or five years, 15,000 fish, out of the early run. This year when the river was slammed shut in their faces, because of insufficient escapement of stocks, they caught some 2,600 fish.

That is a very serious matter for these people. They have bills to pay. They are last in line, and because of bad management practice, in order to ensure escapement they just had the door closed and they had no way to recover the amount of money they were expecting in order to discharge their responsibilities as heads of households and to pay off their capital debts in terms of equipment.

The recent closure of the Fraser River was bad enough in terms of the chinook or spring fishermen, but in addition the river's inlet has been closed. Many of those gillnetters would have moved, but the river's inlet has been closed at least temporarily, and perhaps even permanently, so that option of moving in order to recover income is not available to them.

This is a brand new policy in respect of the fisheries. I do not know how we can really argue with it, except perhaps to express our concern for those people who have been disadvantaged. The new policy seems to be, let the escapement in first and then do the fishing. It seems to be to let the required number of fish escape to the spawning grounds and then do the fishing. That policy seems intelligent, but it creates a great hardship.

The same thing is occurring on the Nass River. While the Nass River is not usually available to gillnetters, because they do not move there from the Fraser, that is a new policy which will cause some upset, at least initially.

There must be something very wrong with fisheries management on the west coast. As a former investigator under the licensing program, Sol Sinclair, said, we are in the midst of a dissipation of resource rent because of overcapitalization. What that means in English is that because of the necessity to provide better and more efficient gear we are spending more money than the resource is providing. We have too much expensive gear chasing too few fish.

A prime example of a very good fishery is that of Barkley Sound, but I heard today that vessels costing over $100,000 each are catching 30 and 40 fish a day. That is a serious matter; it is not something you can laugh off.

We are spending millions on fisheries management. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans' blue book budget account this year, not all spent on salmon I hasten to add, is something like $366 million. What is the purpose of this great expenditure? What is the purpose of ten floors of fisheries offices in Vancouver? The purpose is to ensure, if not an increased escapement, a stock of fish on the west coast for our people to harvest. There is an attempt to justify this expenditure on the basis of preserving what we now have, but we are not doing that and that is why everybody is particularly alarmed.

We now have bays being leased to fish farmers farming salmon. We have killed off our wild stocks and we have spent millions on salmon enhancement; we have done all kinds of good things, yet the stocks are declining. We have 3,000 people working in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans with an annual budget of $366 million, and our resource is declining. Something has to be wrong. I do not see how we can justify this. What are we spending this money for? This expenditure is not succeeding in terms of improving the salmon stock.

Let me give you some figures from the department's own records. These figures relate to the early runs of chinook in the Fraser, which usually end about the end of July. In 1954 there were 44,000 caught; in 1964 there were 36,000 caught; and in 1974 there were 15,000 caught. That was the average for the last five years. This year there were 2,600 caught. Something has to be wrong. What has happened, and who knows? Perhaps it is the result of the interruption or interception by the Americans, except that they are not fishing this year so we cannot blame the Americans. Perhaps we might have blamed them in years gone by, but not for this year. Perhaps it is the result of pollution from the pulp mills or from the sewage dumped into the river by the city of Kamloops, or other cities dumping sewage into the Fraser. That is perhaps true. Perhaps it is the result of unsupervised, illegal fishing, or overfishing by the Indian food fishery. These are all excuses. The fact is that lots of people have various ideas.

● (2215)

Let me read from a letter I recently received. To protect the author, I will keep his name anonymous. He wrote:

> The number of fishery officers is at about the same level as 1947 despite the massive growth of the west coast fishing industry. The equipment these front-line guardians must use to patrol the entire west coast is often out of service, because of age, or simply too outdated to be practical for modern policing. As a result there is quite a bit of poaching along the coast by a minority of fishermen.

Over the years there have been a couple of reports produced which outline the problems resulting from shortages, but they have been either ignored or suppressed. They say that poaching is a crime, but at the moment there is no way these people can possibly manage to protect our resources simply because they are so few. The Conservative candidate who ran against me—unsuccessfully, I am pleased to say—said that unless we protect the habitat from illegal fishing, there is no way—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, commercial gillnet catch data for the Fraser River indicated that the number of chinook salmon returning to the river this spring is well below average. The cumulative catch to May 27 was only 55 per cent of the 1975 to 1979 average for the same period. Despite the closure this season of the United States fishery off Point Roberts and in the San Juan Islands, which targets mainly on Fraser bound chinook, there was no increase in fish entering the river. Immediately prior to the closure of the Fraser River gillnet fishery, commercial nets were producing 1.5 fish per boat, which amounts to 50 per cent of expectations. During the period April 21 to May 27, eight days of fishing were permitted as compared to ten days in an equivalent period in 1979.

We are not aware of any specific request to reopen the Fraser on two subsequent Mondays although numerous suggestions from fishermen were heard at meetings held with them. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans closure is in effect until June 22 at which time the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission assumes management of convention waters including the Fraser River. Fishermen are aware that unless the chinook test fishery indicates a substantial increase in stock abundance, there can be no further openings for chinook fishing.

In addition to the closure to chinook gillnet fishing, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has closed the Fraser and adjacent waters to chinook sport fishing until further notice. While there are still coastal areas that will remain open to commercial and sport chinook fishing, these fish are generally of a different age composition and to some degree of different origin, including United States streams and hatcheries. However, the approach waters of Johnstone Strait and Juan de Fuca Strait where Fraser River bound chinook can be intercepted, are closed and will remain closed until July 13 to commercial net fishing. In these ways, fishermen other than Fraser River gillnet fishermen are contributing to chinook conservation.

On the matter of compensation, the current Fraser closure differs considerably from the commercial fishing closure for Atlantic salmon which was for a period of five years and which was subsequently extended through 1980.

The Fraser situation is a short-term problem. That is, it is an in-season closure that is typical of salmon fisheries throughout the Pacific region. More than 80 per cent of the Fraser gill-net fishermen will, if the usual fishing pattern is followed, fish in other areas of the coast during the course of the salmon season. It is recognized, however, that this closure will cause some short-term economic hardship, but the Fraser gillnetter is not the sole bearer of the conservation burden.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.19 p.m.
