CHILDREN'S COLUMN. DIGGING THAT PAID. New Grandpa Gray Fixed Up a Surprise For Young Industry.

"I am going to try 'em," said Grandpa Gray, and his eyes were twinkling. He meant his three small grandsons - Hal, Herbie and Had. So at dinner grandpa said to the boys,

"I wish I had time to take that rock out of the yard there. It's a real eyesore to me."

"Can't we grandpa?" asked the boys. "Well, yes, if you want to," said he. "I'll get the rock for you. But you must get it for me. You must dig it out for me. You must dig it out for me. You must dig it out for me."

"I'll dig it out for you," said Hal. "I'll dig it out for you," said Herbie. "I'll dig it out for you," said Had.

WOMAN AND HOME.

A WOMAN WHO EARNS HER LIVING BY WORKING AS AN ENGINEER.

Industry and Childhood—Affection in the Home Circle—European Women—Woman's Weekly Task—Cleaning a Carpeted Room—Cooking Small Fish.

Mrs. Annie Shastan of Tulare claims to be the only woman engineer in California and is proud of the distinction.

She has been running the engine for the planting mill at Mountain Home, in Tulare county, for over a year, and she likes her work, although a great deal of it is of the roughest kind.

Mountain Home is a hamlet that exists upon account of the planting mill; but nothing else, and the people there are of the rough, sturdy sort.

"We never had so many here that runs an engine like she does," said one of the men.

"It never stops a minute during the day and always goes as smooth and steady as one of them eight day clocks."

It is over three years since Mrs. Shastan and her husband arrived at Mountain Home. They came from the east, where the husband had charge of the motive power of a big flour mill and a big saw.

But his health broke down, and so they came to Mountain Home, where he took charge of the engine in the planting mill. For a time he improved in health, but finally had to give up and let his wife do his work. There was nothing else to do, for money was scarce and sickness was compulsory. And the woman has done the work satisfactorily ever since. She does everything about the engine, from moving the fuel under the boiler to making the repairs, and keeps everything in the best order.

"Do I like my work?" she replied in answer to a question of course. "I do. I like it like I couldn't do it well, and then I would be discharged." She was standing with one hand resting affectionately on the throttle valve and made a pretty picture, for she is a good looking woman and of evident refinement.

Mrs. Shastan wears no gaudy jewelry, nor has her face black and grimy with soot. Instead she is always clean in neat fitting clothes of pretty colors, and her face and hands are kept as clean as they would be if she were engaged in ordinary household duties. The engine room is as neat as any kitchen in the land.

"The clothes problem," she said, "was a difficult one to me at first. Everything got dirty, and of course skirts are likely to catch in the gears, as I have found out. However, now I wouldn't wear bloomers. It is all right to do a man's work when one has to, but wearing his clothes is another matter."

"The way I solved the problem was to make my waist and skirt of thin wash goods so that I could change them every day. I have plenty of time to do the washing here and can finish it at night. At first I made the skirts long, like those I had always worn, but last summer I caught in the crank right there, and I had my hand and knee badly hurt. If the goods had not been thin and torn, I would have been killed."

San Francisco Examiner.

There is a conviction prevalent that a child which is left to completely itself, as the method previously described would indicate, will, at least during childhood, be slow and dull and will feel forced for lack of interest. That in reality it is a disturbed child, while serene and sweet, is in every waking moment also unusually and uniformly active and busy.

He discovers and interprets gradually and naturally both the small and the great things, and knows by their own merits, not forced knowledge from the point of view of the adult mind, he will find in the process endless amusements without disturbance or excitement.

The sense of touch is the last of the human powers to be wiped out by the counting of death. It is also the first to develop in the newborn infant. The first sensations of this entire life are not agreeable to the newborn child. His feelings, a protest against the wide unknown, seems to irritate our companion and usually tempts the attendants to offer injudicious petting. If, however, the first tactile sense of touch is used to give the child a point of contact with the new world, a baby born in a new world, unless it is in pain, will be comforted if it is allowed to clutch in its tiny fist the finger of some friendly hand.

The prehensile powers of a baby are proportionally much greater than those of a mature man. Many children, when only a few weeks old, are able to sustain their weight by hanging by the arms. Through this ability to grasp and hold whatever comes in contact with their curving fingers comes their first self-taught lesson and their first means of diversion and investigation.

When we entertain and amuse an infant, we do not help in its essential development, but rather hinder it in its own growth. We excite and weaken it. But nature teaches and strengthens the infant mind. A child's months are already observing a difference in sounds and in colors and formulating, even though feebly, the personality of those around him. How literal is the whole world of material sensations and will gain more new information by his own unaided perception than either the father or mother could possibly acquire in a much longer time without the aid of nervous exhaustion. We cannot prevent this natural right development, nor would we wish to do so. But we need to avoid with the utmost care either interfering with or accelerating its progress. All the environments of a child should be as simple as possible the same day by day. New rooms, strange faces, unusual sounds or sights, should be avoided, in order that he may learn to know the "I" and "not I" in their simplest forms, and with the minimum strain upon the nervous system.

—Harper's Bazar.

Affection in the Home Circle.

A little healthy show of affection—a prevention of many evils.

I know of more than one family in which father, mother and little one assemble each morning at the breakfast table without so much as one word of greeting.

It is not that they are intentionally dull or demure or engrossed in thought and unconcerned of the presence of each other. They are quite on the alert to answer questions and to gossip. It means only that the custom of friendly greeting has not been established.

Have you ever been present when a member of one of these uncommunicative families sets out upon a long journey, perhaps upon an absence of several months? There is nothing so embarrassing and distasteful as red eyes and swollen cheeks on occasions of this kind. But the opposite extreme is also bad. Many a young fellow starting out in life has carried with him to a strange city or a foreign land the "Good luck to you, old fellow; take care of yourself," which followed him from home.

There is no crueler sight than to see the first little signs of affection which children show crushed out by cold treatment from those of older growth. I saw a 3-year-old girl the other day climb to her mother's knee and show one little arm about her neck. "You little torment!" You've ruined my hair in the back. And I haven't had it for half an hour." That is the way foolish women responded to his affection.

And the poor child was summarily deposited upon the floor. Better to lose a hundred dollars than to crush out the only thing, after all, which makes life sweet and livable.

Why for women's concern himself in every thing in which his sisters are interested, grows a distracted mood. He ignores the girls completely and won't be seen upon the street with them. The habits are usually the result of careless customs at home.

It is not a want of heart. In case of need many an individual about as demonstrative as a bar of iron would cheerfully sacrifice himself in a cause of friendship. But this is not enough. The family is after all, a community of many tastes and ideas. Life contains for the youngest and the oldest some rough roads to be traveled.

Unless each traveler contributes his quota of the cheer the best will not be realized. A little nod and smile on either side of the room, a comfortable word to one going upon a journey—these sound little, but they stand for life's sweetness.—Philadelphia Press.

European Women.

A man whose diplomatic career has given him abundant opportunity to observe the characteristics of the various races of European women has made the following criticism of their qualities: In England, he says, the average of accomplishments of the class known as gentlewomen is not high. While every girl is supposed to learn how to sketch and play the piano, the knowledge of foreign languages, modern history and of everything middle class (excepting only the study called "judicial papers") is elementary. English girls are exuberant with health, vitality and physical vigor. They are fond of outdoor life and fondness for exercise. But they do not shine in any particular art in riding and at lawn tennis.

In France there are daughters of the old aristocracy who have made a point of being graduated from the public schools and of taking up the diploma that qualifies them to earn their living as governesses or teachers. But this is the exception. What the Frenchwoman lacks, however, in this line of accomplishments she makes for in grace and elegance and chic. Austrian and Hungarian ladies cannot be considered accomplished, and an intellectual Austrian or Hungarian gentleman seems just as much out of place in the drawing room of a woman. Their only accomplishments are riding and dancing. Whatever accomplishments the German gentleman has, he has in the most of a domestic order. She is quite the reverse of intellectual and cannot be said to possess any of those grace of mind that are feminine accomplishments in the strict sense of the word.

Italians and Spaniards are distinguished above all other women in Europe by their profound ignorance, due in the main to their incurable indolence. They do not even possess the art of elegance in dress, and while the fair Spaniard may be said to excel in the management of the fan and in the wearing of her mantilla, her cap and her hair is without a single redeeming point save her beauty. Perhaps the most accomplished woman in Europe, at any rate, the most brilliant, is the Russian, who unites to her vivacity and temperamental magnetism the facility for the acquisition of foreign languages and a power of adaptability that is altogether American. But her attainments are invariably of a superficial character.

Woman's Weekly Task.

We impress these about us by what we live and do, not by what we believe. What child ever took on low, sweet tones while listening to loud, harsh ones? Was the love of perfect truthfulness ever strengthened by witnessing deception in any and every form?

Through natural tendencies too strong to be suppressed by example, yet the rule remains that each human being is largely the product of the education that begins at the cradle and continues all through the period of his life.

This being true, how much depends on those to whom God intrusts the work of happiness! Surely they need the love, the patience, the tender sympathy that can be given only by a consecrated life.

It is not a cruel task, a weary work, that has been given woman. Her heart's highest needs are best met by love. It is her best and truest self when lost to all else but that which will give happiness to those she loves. Sacrifices are a joy and pain unless if thereby another life is brightened and the way made smoother for her tender feet.

A true woman can hardly claim such sympathy for that which may seem hard, if it be done for one she loves. It was God's plan for the most that there should be Marys and Ruths and all the long list of noble women to influence for good those about them. They cannot get away from their mission to help them to fulfill it. There is no cause for murmuring, no room for complaint, for it is a joy to every truly womanly nature to give of the best that she possesses, and her recompense is that she is not impoverished thereby.—Philadelphia Times.

Cleaning a Carpeted Room.

The proper cleaning of a carpeted room, as set forth by Miss Parson, demands, first, that if possible all draperies and hangings shall be slipped from their fastenings, brushed and laid aside out of the room. Such as are not removable may be shaken lightly as they hang, folded lengthwise then in quarters as far as possible, and finally pinned high in places of mullin kept for the purpose.

Pictures are to be brushed on their faces with a soft brush, their backs wiped and brushed as they lay, folded in mullin, the studs fastened in around their frames. Upholstered furniture must be brushed out thoroughly and covered with muslin cloth, and all small pieces set out of the room. Bed-cases are dusted and also put aside in a proper place. A stiff white cloth is dusted out of the corners of the room, and the carpet is sprinkled with crumpled pieces of newspaper, wet but not dripping, and swept with the mop. After this first sweeping the corners and door linings are brushed free from dust, the walls are dusted down with a cloth wound round the broom, or a special brush, and the bed-board is brushed clean with a rather stiff hair brush. The dust thus dislodged is gathered by means of a second going over with a carpet sweeper, and finally the carpet is polished by being wiped over with a cloth wrung out as dry as possible from clean tepid ammonia water—two tablespoonfuls of ammonia to four quarts of water. Wet paper is to be preferred to salt or tea leaves. The former cannot be entirely removed, and the grains left absorb moisture, rusting the carpet's pile, while tea leaves injure and streak a delicate carpet.

Cooking Small Fish.

In the Ladies' Home Journal Mrs. E. T. Rorer, in telling how to fry the small fish, quotes the old saying, "Small fish should be eaten twice—once in water and once in oil." "Smelts, trout, whitebait, perch and catfish," she says, "are perhaps more palatable fried than broiled. Small fish may be stripped—that is, the intestines may be pushed out under the gills, so that the fish may retain their shape. Wash and dry, then dust with salt and pepper, dip in egg and roll in bread crumbs, or they may be rolled in cornmeal. Have ready a good sized pan with sufficient oil to cover. Put the fish in a frying basket, then into the oil at a temperature of 360 degrees F., and cook for about five minutes. Drain on brown paper and serve. Where a small quantity of fat is used, and the fish cooked on one side and then turned and cooked on the other, the method is really not frying—it is sauteing. The result is much more indigestible than real frying. Catfish are frequently fried in this way without being dipped in crumbs. Sunfish may be rolled in flour or cornmeal and partially fried in dripping, oil or lard. A mixture of dripping and lard makes a better frying material than lard alone. A pure vegetable oil is free from danger of disease germs, but either never use butter for frying fish. It boils at a low temperature, consequently turns quickly. The butyric acid softens the fiber of the fish, destroys the flavor and causes it to become soft as soon as taken from the pan.

Proper Temperature of Baths.

It is possible that the expressions cold, temperate, tepid, warm and hot may fail to convey to many a sufficient idea of the different ranges of temperature to which these terms are properly applied. To do this we will give a few figures, and to prevent any mistake with regard to the required temperature of each and all of these baths when ordered or required, it will be useful to give the lowest and highest degree of heat within which each of them is comprehended.

The right temperature, then, of different baths is as follows: Cold, 50 degrees to 60 degrees F.; temperate, 75 degrees to 85 degrees F.; tepid, 85 degrees to 95 degrees F.; warm, 95 degrees to 98 degrees F.; hot, 98 degrees to 110 degrees F.—New York Ledger.
