ENDEAVOR.

The soul grows strong in noble strife—
This is the law forever;
Be it the motto of thy life—
Endeavor! Oh, endeavor!

Strive for the mastery of self,
From all low aims to sever,
From passion, pride, and love of self—
Endeavor, and endeavor!

Let thy mind entertain the good:
Corrupt guests harbor never;
Feed on high thought—'tis angels' food—
Endeavor, still endeavor!

Spurn all blandishments of sin,
But follow virtue ever;
Her smile 'tis blessedness to win—
Endeavor, aye, endeavor!

KITTIE'S MENDING.

Deacon Stanley was by no means a penurious man. He was only, as he said, an "economically savin'" man. He was in good church standing, devout and sincere. He had a good wife and dutiful daughter to make him a pleasant home; was considered "well to-do," though a farmer, and the comforts of the house were not forgotten in this to be economical. Nevertheless this one "savin'" bump caused Mrs. Stanley and Kittie a great deal of trouble. He would persist in wearing his clothes until they were so patched you could hardly tell the patch from the original garment. Mrs. Stanley had handed all the mending over to Kittie as her work, and Kittie did so hate mending; and, together with her pride and her chagrin that her father would persist in wearing such clothes, her troubles were great.

"Why he wears poorer clothes than any poor on the town," she exaggerated, "and he was just cheating the rag-picker," and he would only laugh.

Mrs. Stanley, too, was a trifle ashamed that her good husband should so persist in making patchwork of his garments, but the kind soul had given up the argument long ago. The church parson had been talked to about the deacon's peculiarity, but as the deacon was a Christian in every other respect, gave to the church and her missions, helped the poor and did not neglect his family, this one sin—if sin it could be called—was considered but a minor one, and so the deacon escaped a censure. He often heard remarks though, both behind his back and to his face, to which he would respond laughingly, turning the remarks into jokes, and none of them ever made the slightest ripple of anger upon his ocean of good nature.

The parsonage of L—— was being repaired, and the young minister was boarding at the Stanleys, during this process, and preparing for the convention which was to be held in their society the next week.

Suddenly he took a great interest in the family sitting-room, and found it pleasanter, I am ashamed to say, reading and talking to Kittie and her mother on afternoons, than writing sermons for the people of L—— to sleep under or even seeking out the unruly sheep of the flock, who had leaped the sectarian fence. And Kittie—well, perhaps she, too, took more interest in the afternoon talk than the Sunday sermon. Mrs. Stanley, from her placid face, one might read that she was well satisfied with both.

One afternoon, Mr. Stanley came in for some clover-seed, which Mrs. S., in her careful way, had put in a dry place, and she directed him to the garret. After a few moments' search he descended with the clover-seed, and left it in the kitchen, while he proceeded into the sitting-room with, hanging over his arm, three pairs of old dilapidated pants he had accidentally stumbled upon where Kittie had hidden them; one pair of striped, one of checked, and another plain.

"Kittie," he said, laying the cobwebs and garments tenderly down upon the stuffed chairs, "now this 'ere is some of your work, putting them away and not half worn out. You never will be the economical wife your mother is, my child. These could be mended into one pair, and, as I may want them to wear, you had better set about fixing 'em up as soon as your mother can spare you." And out he stalked as innocent of any impropriety as the meekest lamb.

Kittie's eyes flashed as she saw her father appear with the hated garments, and a suspicious tremble gathered at the corners of her mouth and blushes leaped to her cheeks, but as he departed out of hearing she glanced at her mother and mirthfulness predominated over anger and she burst into a hearty laugh, which was joined in by Mrs. Stanley and the minister, who was fully acquainted with the deacon's failing.

That afternoon Kittie wore a serious, pre-occupied air, which had changed the next morning to laughter at most unaccountable times, and secret titters which quite astonished her mother, and as at the first leisure moment Kittie was disappearing with the offending garments, Mrs. Stanley asked:

"How are you going to fix them Kittie?" And Kittie answered, giving them a spiteful shake:

"I'll fix 'em, never mind!" And the minister finding Kittie not in the sitting room that afternoon, felt it his duty to continue his sermons in his own room.

In the evening Kittie said to her father: "Those garments you wanted mended, father, hang up in the closet beside your Sunday ones."

"That's right, my dear; you'll make a good wife yet for somebody," he answered encouragingly, while Kittie smothered a hypocritical little laugh.

The convention was here, and the parishioners' houses were crowded with guests. The deacon's home contained for guests, with the minister, Professor Primstock and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Merryday, Rev. Lyeumgood, wife and sister, but extra help left the hostess and Kittie time to entertain them. In the afternoon of the second day there was a sort of intermission for the tired convention. Mr. Stanley came in from doing the 'chores' he had finished rather early, and proceeded to his room for the purpose of enrobing himself in his 'meeting clothes,' for the deacon was very careful of these, and would have thought it a sacrilege to have worked in them. In an instant the door-bell rang, and two reverends and wives came in for a chat, when, hearing his name called, he hurried into his coat and through the dining-room, where Kittie stood speechless from fright, and stood among his guests. Poor deacon!

He was not very observing, or his eyes were not as good as they were once, or the closet was dark. And, then, it being a darling hobby of his to frown upon ruffles and ribbons, puffs and trimmings, he considered it a sacred duty to give a lecture on the folly of these vanities before giving his daughter the wherewithal for procuring them. He was doomed to a great trial. He hadn't taken three steps into the room before thirteen pairs of eyes were fixed upon him, with all the horror and severity that twenty-six eyes are capable of expressing.

Mrs. Stanley feebly ejaculated, "James!" Two of the divines forcibly remarked, "Ahem! ahem!" and one of the reverend's wives added in a stage whisper, "Mercy on us!" Then Mr. Stanley, following his eyes to his feet, stood spell-bound. There he was arrayed in a garment unrivalled even by Joseph's coat of many colors, I verily believe and bedecked in the most wonderful and fantastical manner ever perceived by mortal man or woman. There were those three beloved garments he had tenderly yielded to Kittie's fashioning, and evidently about five times as many more made into one. There was a huge striped patch, bound with yellow, on one knee, and a checked one, bound with green, on the other. A strip of blue extended up one leg, and a strip of white up the other. An attempt had been made to lengthen them, and around one ankle was knife-plaiting of black cashmere; around the other a ruffle of grey poplin, both headed by a puff of gay calico. Little gay-ribbon bows and streamers were generously distributed over the garment, and a lovely little pocket of wine-colored velvet, edged with white lace, stitched on one side, completed the 'mending.'

The deacon stared, and the more he gazed the more his wonder grew, and, overcome by the sight, he pulled his handana out, mopped his face, exclaimed, "Gracious me," sank helplessly down in the nearest chair, and fell to gazing at himself again. It was quite evident he had made a mistake in the garments; but where those came from was entirely beyond his conception. I don't know but they would have set staring at the deacon until this time if the minister hadn't laughed. Laughter is wonderfully contagious, especially among divines, even if people do think otherwise, and a few seconds of this healthy exercise brought back the deacon's scattered ideas, and his first ejaculation was, "Where is that Kittie?"

But Kittie wasn't to be found, and, somehow the minister explained to them all that it was a joke of Kittie's, and the deacon had just got into the wrong garments, and they all knowing the deacon's peculiarity accepted in wonderful good nature.

As Kittie did not return, Mrs. Stanley sent the minister over to Susie Lee's, where Kittie was most likely to be,

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We see by the dailies that the United States wants reciprocity on coal and a few other things. It would be splendid for Ontario and Quebec perhaps but the Maritime Provinces should most strongly object. Coal is about the only thing that those provinces buy from us and if they could get reciprocity they would go to the States for it. Meanwhile they want the duty kept up on other things so they can send their trashy goods down here. If we are going to allow them to get American coal they will have to allow us to get American boots and shoes, American hats and caps, American clothing and other goods which we are now getting from Canada. Nova Scotia never yet has asked for any favors. All she wants is fair play and it is our humble opinion she has a very good right to insist upon having it.

NEW WHARF.

The committee appointed by the County Council for the purpose made a survey of the proposed road to the new wharf on Friday last. We also learn that the engineers have reported very favorably on the subject and that they recommend a wharf similar to the one now at Kingsport. Mr. Woodworth is now working hard to get an amount put in the estimates for this year so that operations can be commenced in the Spring. We hope to see this matter vigorously pushed forward and when it is once completed let us work for direct communication with Boston or New York by water. It can be accomplished and we feel certain it will be and that at no very distant day.

IN MEMORIAM.

REV. S. W. DE BLOIS, D. D.

On Monday evening, Feb. 4th., Rev Dr. de Blois passed to his heavenly rest. His loss will be keenly felt. He was one of those men that have many friends and few, if any, foes. His pious, faithful, unostentatious life greatly endeared him to the people of his charge. Nor was any of his popularity due to his prophesying smooth things: he was careful to declare the whole counsel of God. He was indeed a faithful under-shepherd, and lived in the affection of his people. Long will his memory be cherished by the members of Wolfville Baptist Church, to whom for twenty-eight years he so ably and faithfully ministered in holy things.

He loved to preach the Gospel. His whole soul was in the work. He chose his life-work wisely and hence his great success. As a preacher he held no mean rank. The sermons of his palmiest days were marked by great originality and power. He spoke from the heart, spoke to the heart, and then the truth was fastened upon the conscience. Many of his discourses, fraught with evangelical truth, were models of directness and power. His preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstrations of the spirit and of power. He was born, we believe in Halifax, in 1827. His thirst for knowledge and desire to be useful brought him to Acadia College at which he was graduated in 1846. He spent three years as a law-student in Halifax, and three more as one of the masters of Horton Academy. He is also a graduate of Newton Theological Seminary, and was a member of a very distinguished class. He was ordained at Chester in 1854, and became pastor of Wolfville Baptist Church in 1855. In 1857 he was made Secretary of the Board of Governors of Acadia College, and discharged the duties of that office with singular ability. In the same year in which he was made secretary the degree of M. A. was conferred upon him, the degree of D. D. in 1881.

A beautiful life has just closed. He has entered into rest, and is now in high employ. May his mantle fall upon his successor that the ways of Zion may not languish. He who has left us, and whom we so deeply mourn was indeed rich, not in gold, but in a good life.

School Book Monopoly.

Allowing one house the exclusive right of publishing any authorized school book, has long been a disgrace to our educational system, and we would like to see some steps taken in the direction of breaking up this monopoly. At present the public are paying at least double the price they should for school books, which they not only require, but are forced to buy, and the retail dealers throughout the country will endorse us in saying, that they are not the parties who are making the profits as in many cases it does not pay them to handle school books, and they only keep them out of necessity.

Let us by all means have the best books the brains and skill of our country can produce, but let us have them at reasonable prices. Down with monopoly, say we! Let the publishing of all school books be open to competition, as the National Series of Readers has been for some years past. The decision of the Hon. G. W. Ross on the Reader Question has not yet been published but we feel satisfied that with his experience in educational matters he will not tolerate a system so detrimental to the best interests of the country, as the present scandalous mode of defrauding the public.—Free Lance, Toronto.

Among the parties who lost by the absconding of Arthur C. Trenholm was Isaac Huntly of Avonport to the tune of $60 being balance due on fat cattle purchased by said Trenholm.

Freeland Lovelace of Avonport met with a serious accident while chopping in the woods at Ellershouse for Robert Shaw, the axe glanced and cut his foot badly; he will probably be laid up for some time.

A new lot of rum arrived at Avonport station on Saturday for the Oaklyn Inn. The fine lately collected from the proprietor has not had the effect of stopping the sale. It is hoped the friends of temperance will not relax their efforts to put down the sale of the soul destroying drug.

COASTING.—A young son of Jos. Jones ran into a tree while coasting and got badly used up. Johnnie Bishop got on too much speed coming down the same hill and when the sled struck bare ground and stopped he kept right along on his head. He was not hurt very much however and is out again.

A short time ago one of the boys on Long Island borrowed a gun from Mr. Leander Palmeter for the purpose of shooting a bear which they saw playing around over the Grand Pre. Obtaining the gun three of them started and soon getting within range they fired. A rush to the spot where their victim fell revealed to their wondering gaze the bear ribs of an umbrella. They say the skin was not worth preserving.

It appears that Dr. Chipman had been to the Island one stormy night a short time before and when returning across the Dyke lost his umbrella. His horse being restive he could not leave it to go after the lively rain shade.

The Straight of it.

An exchange says: We overheard a conversation between two little urchins, which for its intelligence we consider good. One of them, it appears, had been engaged in a mortal combat with a companion, and was relating what occurred. Said he: "I'll tell you how it was. You see, me and Bill went down to Turner's tobacco manufactory and fished off that old boat, but we didn't catch any; I got one bite and Bill told me to scratch, but I didn't. Well, I felt in my pockets and found my knife, and he said that I was another, and I said go there yourself, and he said it was no such thing, and I said he was a liar and would whip him if I was bigger'n him, and he said he'd rock me to sleep mother, and I said he was a bigger one, and he said I never had the measles, and I said for him to fork over that knife, and he couldn't see the fork, and I said I'd fix him for a tombstone at Volk's, and he said my grandmother was no gentleman, and I said he daren't take it up, but he did you bet, you never—well, you never did—then I got up again, and he tried to, but he didn't and I grabbed him and threw him down on top of me like several bricks, and I tell you it beat all—and so did he—and my little dog got behind Bill and bit him, and Bill kicked at the dog, and the dog ran and I ran after the dog to fetch him back, and didn't catch him till I got home, and I'll whip him more yet. Is my eye very black?"

Fruits of Advertising.

A prominent business firm in one of our leading cities, who have grown rich by liberally patronizing the printer, gives to their fellow-merchants the following concerning advertising:

"We have for many years studied the art of advertising, and still it remains a marvel to us that there is not a hundred times more of it. We never yet knew a man to advertise his wares liberally and steadily that it did not pay. Yet there are thousands of manufacturers and tens of thousands of men, having articles which they declare ought to be in every household in the country, who advertise as gingerly and closely as though they had at heart no faith in it at all. How can they expect to get their goods anywhere unless some knowledge of the article first gets into the family newspaper? If we waited till people learned from their neighbors, we might wait for years before the most wonderful and useful invention became known."—Agent's H.r

An Irish lawyer having addressed the court as "gentlemen," instead of "your honours," after he had concluded a brother of the bar reminded him of his error. He immediately rose and apologized thus: "May it please the court, in the heat of the debate I called your honours gentlemen. I made a mistake, yer honours."

with the message that she was forgiven and to come home.

Poor Kittie was mortified enough, but when she arrived home, and the guests made more of a heroine of her than circumstances deserved, and she found the deacon didn't look a bit angry, and her mother never said one reproving word, and caught the minister's eye full of laughter and of something else Kittie couldn't understand, her mortification took flight.

And that evening walking home from church, the few words the minister spoke made her happier than she ever had been before; but the words were not of the sermon, and, a little while after, when the deacon gave them his blessing, he added with sadness and mirthfulness mingled:

'She will make you a good wife, parson, but will never be as economical as her mother as I said once before.'

Mrs. Stanley ever blessed Kittie's joke, for afterward the deacon was never fond of many patches.
