FINE PERFORMANCE BY ACADIA DRAMATISTS

At Orpheum Theatre Last Friday Evening—All Parts Exceptionally Well Taken

The people of Wolfville have learned to look forward to the performances which are given each year by the Acadia Dramatic Society, and this year's play, which was given at the Orpheum Theatre last Friday evening, was equally as good as any that have been presented.

The play, "A Full House", a farce in three acts by Fred Jackson, was ably directed by Miss Olive M. Teabeaut, of the staff of Acadia Seminary, and all the characters were splendidly portrayed. Special mention must be made of the acting of Miss Muriel Stevens, who played a very difficult part with the ease of a professional. The acting of Miss Olive Archibald and Messrs. Doane Hatfield and Warren Findlay was also especially good. The cast was as follows:

Parks, an English servant—Doane Hatfield, '27
Susie, from Sioux City, a maid—Muriel Stevens, '25
Ottily Howell, a bride—Olive Archibald, '26
Mrs. Wimmacker, from Yonkers, the aunt—Anne Doherty, '26
Daphne Charters, Ottily's sister—Nita Trethewey, '27
Nicholas King, a stranger—Warren Findlay, '28
Ned Pembroke, Jr., an only son—Charles Fillmore, '25
George Howell, the bridegroom—Theodore Taylor, '27
Dougherty, a police sergeant—Lloyd Jenkins, '28
Jim Mooney, a policeman—Clarence Gould, '26
Kearney, another—Ralph Marven, '27
Mrs. Fleming, who owns the apartment—Marion Read, '28
Vera Vernon, a show-girl—Louise Fritz, '27

Before the play and between acts a most enjoyable program was rendered by the Acadia Seminary Orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Carl Farnsworth.

7th. I have come tonight to my habitation. It is not the same as I have had all summer, for hope has departed. I was looking forward to the inter when Simeon would be home. I took a walk down to the Halfway River and sat on the fence by the marsh watching the flowing tide. I sat there and I came all around me—as the tides high—and ebbed again. I read while it seemed my heart Simeon learned and wrote it off for me before we were married. It sounds so like I almost think I hear him repeat seem to envy Maria the hope she of Curry coming home, but why did I let me give up, and wish all good success. Maria is here now; friends are all very kind. I wrote Rebecca Elder today. I feel some consolation in scribbling. I pray God direct me.

Mary Hibbart and family gone to mother's for the day; they me to go to, but I feel too sad, desire to look to God for strength. I his faithfulness and power to save in the trying hour.

PRINCE OF WALES IN WEST AFRICA

First picture of the Prince of Wales' tour in West Africa, shows H.R.H. receiving the principal personages of Gambia, at Bathurst, after laying a wreath on the Colony's Cenotaph. Beside him on the dais is the Governor of the Colony, Capt. C. H. Armitage.

This shield was taken off one of the gates of Old Quebec at the time the city was conquered by General Wolfe, Monckton, Townsend and Murray, in the memorable year 1759, and taken to England. Now it is to be returned to Quebec, after being away more than 165 years. The plate below bears an inscription telling when the shield was taken and the Admirals and Generals who took Quebec, etc.

to be the widows' God. I went up to father's on Thursday afternoon. Olivia and family came up on Friday. I was comforted in reading a letter from Rebecca Elder who truly sympathizes with me. I came down Friday night and stayed at Mary's as father and Hibbart went to Cornwallis. I got a letter of sympathy from Maria Dickie. Widow Nunn called in last night; she knows how to feel for my loss. I went to meet today and heard Rev. Angel preach from the words, "For bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness is profitable in all things, having the promise of the life that is and of that which is to come." I thought he spoke beautifully. Father and Mother are here, also Father Michael and Hibbart. They have been reading of ship wrecks and disasters; truly I am not alone in trouble, but we must all feel our own. May God give me strength.

BOSTON, May 8.—The first commencement exercises of any New England College or school, those of the fashionable Curry School of Expression, were held in the Pierce Building this afternoon. The largest graduating class in the history of the school was addressed by the president, J. Stanley Durkes. Prominent among the members of the graduating class were the Misses Mona L. Parsons of Wolfville, N.S., and Marie J. M. Sexton, of Windsor, N.S. They were awarded diplomas for general culture and additional certificates of honor. But six of these certificates are awarded annually. And constituted a distinguished honor.

One of the more impressive features of the exercises was the reading of a poem by Dr. S. S. Curry, founder of the school, which served as a fitting benediction from a teacher to those going out into the world to instruct.

SUSPECTS CONFESS TO VALLEY ROBBERY

Goods Valued at $250 Stolen from Waterville Fruit Company on Monday Night

The store of the Waterville Fruit Company was entered by burglars on Monday night and about $250 worth of goods, consisting of boots, shoes, silk stockings and gold watches, was taken. One safe was broken into, while an attempt was made upon another.

The robbery was reported to the provincial police department, and Provincial Constable Spruin went to Waterville. On Tuesday morning, assisted by Constable Mark Thomas, of Berwick, he arrested Raymond Teems and a woman supposed to be his wife, at Peregau, on suspicion of being concerned in the case. Later the pair confessed, and the loot was recovered. Teems and the woman came from Ohio, and have been living at Hillaton for the last ten months.

The couple were arraigned in court at Kentville yesterday morning, and preliminary hearing was set for Friday.

LOCAL HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS GIVE CONCERT AT BERWICK

(From the Berwick Register)

The operetta presented by Wolfville High School, under the leadership of Mr. Basil Silver, in Bligh's Theatre last evening, was a delight from start to finish. The music by the orchestra was excellent, the costumes, representing fairies, robin, bumblebee, flowers, etc., were charming and the stage effects were most pleasing. The drills and dances were gracefully executed and the entire performance reflected great credit on the young talent of Wolfville, as well as the able leadership of Mr. Silver. The solos by Miss West and Mr. Hugh Bishop were greatly enjoyed. The packed house evinced the interest being taken both in the productions of the Wolfville High School and in our own Berwick school, and one-half of the proceeds were donated to Berwick for school prizes.

Nowlan, candidates for the coming elections, and Col. Robert Innes, dealing with the public issues and promising a business administration if the party was put in power.

DICKENS EVENING AT ACADIA SEMINARY

The first year English class under the efficient guidance of Miss Rosamund Archibald gave a delightful "Dickens Evening" on Saturday night in the Seminary Chapel.

The program consisted of selections from Dickens' various works given by each member of the class, a vocal solo and a song by the class sung in Latin. The credit for the last number belongs to Mrs. Grant. This is the first time in the history of the school that such an attempt has been made.

IN LOVE WITH LOVE

Marguerite De La Motte's characterization in the recent William Fox production, "In Love With Love", reminds one somewhat of Bessie Love's handling of the "Gentle Julia" role in a former Fox offering.

Like "Gentle Julia" who stepped out of a Booth Tarkington story and on to the screen, Ann Jordan discovered, early in life, that she couldn't say "No". Men liked her so much that they would persist in asking her to marry them, and she never could bear to hurt their feelings, so she accepted them—one and all. Of course she wasn't able to wear more than one engagement ring at a time, and that caused complications. But she was so innocent—seeming and sweet that no one could blame her for them. So the suitors blamed each other, and there was much confusion.

After a time, along came a young engineer who wasn't a suitor at all. He was the first man who came to the Jordan home without the remotest interest in whether Ann was at home or not. He wanted to talk with Ann's dad about a plan he had made for a bridge.

SPECIAL MEETINGS HELD BY TOWN COUNCIL

Delegation from Children's Aid Society Heard—Date of Election Postponed to June 2nd

A special meeting of the Council was held on Monday evening with the Mayor and all the Councillors present. The meeting was held for the purpose of making valid the passing of several resolutions adopted at the meeting last week that were either moved or voted on by ex-Councillor Mitchell after the resignation of his seat in the Council had been accepted. These motions were taken up one by one and passed, after which the following bills were ordered paid:

R. E. Harris & Son ..... $ 75.64
Alex. Murray & Co. .... 153.60
A. M. Jack & Son ..... 8.80
Dom. Atlantic Ry. .... 19.14
Lloyd Mfg. Co. .... 10.00

A delegation from the Children's Aid Society of Kings County was introduced by Mr. B. O. Davidson, the president, and addresses were given by Dr. D. B. Hemmson, Prof. Young and Messrs. H. Stairs and C. A. Patriquin. The movement to better the condition of the poor and mentally deficient by an arrangement between the municipalities of Kings, Annapolis and West Hants, by which the County Homes may be utilized for the segregation and better care of these classes of our population, was presented by the speakers who asked that a committee from the town be appointed to confer with representatives from the municipalities and incorporated towns respecting the proposal. Several of the Councillors spoke favorably of the suggestion, and on motion Mayor Chambers and Councillor Roach were appointed to represent the town at a conference soon to be held. Incidentally the question of child welfare, particularly with respect to children being allowed on the streets and in public places at night without proper supervision, came up for discussion, and although no definite action was taken, it is hoped this may yet be productive of good results.

Last evening an emergency meeting of the Council was held with all present, at which the resolution passed at the regular meeting with regard to the impending town by-election was rescinded and the date fixed for the same on Tuesday, June 2nd, with nomination day a week earlier. Messrs. S. C. West and Geo. A. Prat were appointed returning officers, and Messrs. M. J. Tamplin and A. G. Cowie, poll clerks.

Recognizing that tourist business can be made a real factor in community trade when it is gone after in the right way, the Winnipeg Tourist and Convention bureau has appointed as its manager one of the city's prominent business men, Thomas J. Porte, vice-president of Henry Birks and Sons. He is arranging to devote his energies to seeing that Winnipeg is given a prominent place on the tourist map.

The Winnipeg Bureau is to be congratulated in recognizing that attracting and catering to tourists is a business matter of prime importance; no other industry promises better profits for a like investment of initiative, energy, good judgment and courtesy. Too often the idea is merely to take the tourists as they come and gouge them to the limit without caring whether they return or what they tell their friends and neighbors when they get back home. Winnipeg has the right idea. Vancouver has already done big things in

The Sophomore class of Acadia University held a very enjoyable picnic to the Ridge on Saturday afternoon. Prof. and Mrs. H. G. Perry were chaperones.

Hon. D. A. Cameron has tendered his resignation as a member of the Government of Nova Scotia, which was accepted by Premier Armstrong on May 4th.

The first prize among High School students in the I.O.D.E. poster competition in connection with the Motor Show held at Kentville last week, was won by Master Robert Herbin, of Wolfville.

Mr. J. E. Hales' pretty home on Acadia street is to be improved by the addition of a commodious sun-parlor. The foundation is now being prepared and the work will be completed at an early date. Mr. E. S. Langille is the builder.

This week the daily cleaning of Main street was inaugurated with Mr. Fred Halloway in charge. We are confident that the undertaking is one that citizens will approve and will mean a very great improvement in the appearance of the business section. With a rigorously enforced by-law prohibiting sweeping or throwing paper and other refuse upon the street and a provision requiring the sidewalks to be swept daily our town would this summer present a much cleaner appearance than usual.

An accident which fortunately was not attended by loss of life but which was of quite a serious character occurred on Tuesday afternoon when the train from Yarmouth collided with one of Hancock's teams which was loading fertilizer at the rear of the warehouse of the Wolfville Fruit Co. The wagon was badly demolished but the horses and driver escaped injury. The team went in on the railway property at the wharf crossing, where there is very little room between the tracks and the building.

Considerable work is being done on the government pier which will put it in good condition for the summer travel. Mr. Franklin is determined to make the wharf available for automobiles as there are always many cars to be transported during the season across the bay. When the work is completed the roadway will be gravelled to make the wharf easy of access to cars coming in or going out. The road leading to the pier is now in fairly good condition but a little grading and filling would much improve it.

During the past year or so it has not been found to be necessary to maintain the defences of the lawns on the grounds of the public building after the closing of the educational institutions. Residents of the town have learned pretty well to realize the value of neatly clipped grassy lawns, and make use of the walks provided when visiting the postoffice or customs quarters. It has been suggested that for this year these rather disfiguring guards be removed before the anniversary visitors begin to arrive, as it is most desirable that at that time our town should be looking at its best.

FOR INTER-PROVINCIAL TRADE

In connection with the agitation for legislation to enable the Maritime provinces to overcome the disadvantage of location, the proposal has been made that these provinces be allowed to frame their own tariff policy. Immediately comes the objection that this would not be feasible because other Canadian provinces, in order to protect their industries, would feel it necessary to raise tariff barriers against the Maritimes to prevent foreign products being passed on to them. Any interference with the freedom of inter-provincial trade would hit at the very foundations of the British North America act. The case for the Maritimes is being well made; it is a good case; but it would seem that something more practical than a lowering of the tariff will have to be worked out if the situation is to be met.

One thought that develops out of this discussion is that while the freedom of inter-provincial trade was provided for at confederation it is questionable whether full advantage of the opportunities for the development of such trade has been

A Graduating Recital will be given by Mr. Doane Hatfield, of the Department of Expression, Acadia Ladies' Seminary, on Tuesday, May 19th, in the Baptist church. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Speaking before the Toronto Empire Club last week, John Imrie, of the Edmonton Journal, made the interesting suggestion that inter-provincial trade should be studied in a scientific way to the end of increasing the purchases of each part of Canada from other parts of the country in preference to importing foreign goods.

In the interests of Canadian workers, Canadian investors and Canadian farmers, we have evolved a protective tariff for the upbuilding of Canadian industry and the home market. We have compiled detailed particulars of goods exported and imported. But it is very questionable whether sufficient consideration is given to the study of goods or products which may be secured from other provinces. And there are no details available of this inter-provincial trade.

Mr. Imrie's suggestion that inter-provincial trade relations could be improved with mutual advantage by the study of production and consumption in different parts of our own country is constructive. And this, with some practical effort to overcome the disadvantages of distance, would seem to offer better advantages to the outlying provinces, East and West, than the proposal for sectional tariff action.

TAN WOOL CREPE IS SIMPLY TRIMMED WITH ECHU BATISTE

Wool crepe in a charming shade of soft tan is used for the youthful little frock shown here. This particular model was made for an ingenue in one of the new plays, and it expresses the youthfulness of the part.

The only trimming is of the finest echu batiste, daintily embroidered. Inset bands top the gathers at either side, and the strings extend around to the back, where they tie in a jaunty bow.

The Spring season is bringing in a decided vogue for the daintiest possible collars and cuffs. These may be made of organdie, fine lines or batiste.

AND IN JUNE

Father entered the door. He heard sounds of joy and glee in the parlor. Slowly he removed his hat and coat. He was a tired business man. Mother came through the parlor door to greet him, a smile on her face.

"What's the matter?" asked father. "Diamond jubilee," said mother, squeezing his arm.

"Migosh," said father, "have we been married that long?"

Piccolo, a meagre, melancholy figure, was mixing flour and water for a meal when they came to the camp.

"Well, you got a great camp here," said the policeman. "It is surely amazing how one can get out of the snow. Look, there is a cut-bank all earth already. You can even see the old fir cones lying down there below. Right sheltered here."

Spring was truly taking these heights by assault. Swerving around the knoll to lee of which they camped ran a small creek; but it was covered all by ice, not snow-laden ice, but glare ice, clear as glass. They could see the water rushing below as through a natural window (and not rocky water—the creek-bed pebbles were visible under its rush); and that water, compressed there, running full, carried bubbles of air of various sizes that flew past constantly, pressed between the hurrying stream and its ice lid. Yet maybe but a thousand feet below they could glimpse, between the holes of the forest, a flicker of foam showing where the creek ran uncovered. At one place Piccolo had cleft a hole in the ice with an ax, where he could dip a can for water instead of using snow.

As Piccolo acted as chef, the policeman and Angus sat down, and the former took from him who was so far known to Angus and his partner as the man in brown. The envelopes he first looked at.

"Mr. John Grafters has his name, it seems," he remarked. "A good name too! Then, in a changed voice, he added: 'Well, he is dead.'"

He considered one or two of the letters. "This one," he said, "to somebody else, but with a memo, scribbled on it for him, seems to me, by a process of deduction, to refer to you gentlemen. Listen"; and he read:

"Dear Cyrus: I am giving this note to Bob Merritt to hand to you. He is to show you the two guys it refers to. They are supposed to be going to the new camp called Kokanee on Flat-Bow Lake just in a natural way to see how chances are up there, but there is more in it than that I think. The little cuss, called David Thomas, with a squeaky voice which makes him known as Piccolo, has some floats of ore from somewhere between the boundary and the West Arm of Flat-Bow Lake. They will very likely get a canoe at Kokanee and row back to the West Arm and down it, to pick up south to the place. You can haze them off when they get to their location, or jump the claims and register ahead of them so as to have the law with you. They can only say their say and you can deny. Your word will be as good as theirs. Keep track, anyhow, at your end, however you work it. Send somebody after them to Kokanee. I expect you will know someone up there to help. If you can go yourself so much the better. The ore the squeaky-voice brought in looks like Ophir all right. So long.

M.B.

"The incompetent tools of this Cyrus followed too close," rumbled Angus. "I suppose they were afraid of losing our tracks. Incompetent!"

As for Piccolo, by the time the policeman read the initials "M.B.," the flush that had come to his face over the words "squeaky-voice" had gone. It was maybe more a flush of self-consciousness than rage over a soubriquet not to his mind, smacking that in brown had strangely affected him, eliminating rage.

"I see it is written across this letter," said the policeman, "Pass to Grafters. Quite a governmental kind of crook this Cyrus is. I know now who Hawke was in with. There is only one Cyrus Ogglestein. Guess Grafters must have had a talk with his boss, for there is a note in another writing, here at the bottom of the letter: 'Walter Hawke, Kokanee, big dark man, grey eyes.' Guess Grafters wrote that when he had his pow-wow and marching orders from Boss Cyrus."

But Piccolo was hardly listening to all that. He noted, but did not remark, that the boss of the "crook outfit" had probably, at that interview, told the man in brown that Hawke was conversant with the telegraph. What mainly caught him in the epistle was something else. He had a finger up pointing triumphantly at Angus.

"Now Scotty," said he, "I don't want to seem opinionated to my elders, and I don't want to go scrapping with folks any more—life being so short among these almighty mountains—but you see I was right about Movie Bill, whether he smokes cigars or not, mark you, and always says: 'No, thank you, a pipe or a cigarette for mine. Nix on cigars, or whatever you brought up in proof that he was innocent. There's the M.B.' He put that Cyrus crook, whoever he is, wise to us."

Angus nodded his head up and down several times, mouth twisting, as one accepting unpalatable truth. "It certainly looks like it," said he. "I only stood up for him because almost any one would condemn him for anything, without listening to the evidence, on the strength of his face; and it always seemed to me that there was a good expression among what ye might call—or I might call, I should say," he altered the phrasing with hard voice, "superficially a tough look. Well, say no more. We do surely get disappointed in people."

"We surely do," agreed the policeman. Piccolo tried to renew his good cheer and with forced air of gaiety chanted: "Grub pile! Grub pile!"

Over the meal Angus, after long thought, saw fit to acknowledge the truth of their odyssey in its entirety to the policeman.

"The fact is," said he, "we are heading for a bit south of the West Arm. We come from Colvalli, Washington State. But we did not come in over-land, north, because we had indications that a person, or persons, were on to it that Piccolo here had found some jim-dandy floats, as ye might say. We wanted to put them off. So we came to Kokanee."

He told him, in short, all the story as we know it from the incident of the fool-hens and the missiles that proved to be "spacaminis".

The policeman nodded, lifted his tea pannikin to drink, and held it away from his mouth. It was of tin, and hot. "Say," he said, smiling, whimsical, "ain't it astonishing how hot that water got when we boiled it?"

That was all he had to say! Angus eyed him thoughtfully. For himself, such a remark was entirely in his vein when thinking about something else and not ready for speech upon it. He wondered if the policeman was similarly inclined at such moments. It appeared that he was, for thereafter he mused a long spell and they ate in silence.

Then said he: "I told you that you could not make the divide yet."

Piccolo waved a hand toward the lower forest. He seemed desirous to stand up for, to defend, MacPherson.

"It would take about three months to cut through that forest," he shrilled. "Yes," said the policeman, "but long before that, if you sat here waiting, you could get over the divide all right. And now you've got so far—Oh, you've done darn well!—now you've made this far all you've to do is to get round the next ridge. Now I wouldn't try it on top. You can't do that for another fortnight. You'll lose only a week by working down to the bases of the slides here, and then working back up on the west side. Once you get round, move up again. Don't forget; move up again at once. If you kept low you'd have to cut a trail all the way; but if you keep up you will strike an old Indian trail."

He jabbed a finger before him in air, pointing at the rib of mountain, white wetted, where they were.

"It is right through there. If you could tunnel through you'd come out at it—there," and he dropped his hand again. "Kootenay Indians made it. They were never great on going up after grizzly; they preferred easy fishing, and deer down below; but now and then one of them had the craze for a necklace of bear-claws—grizzly ones—for the fun, or to show the sand he had in him. Maybe he had seen some Blackfoot east of the Rockies honoured for a grizzly bear necklace, and he got whetted up, too, to go and do likewise. Oh, they did some travel in the old days. Up on Kootenay Lake, now, the railroad from Kaslo into the Skeena country practically follows an old Indian trail. That road to the mine you came up," and he jerked a thumb over his shoulder, "was once Indian trail. They came up from Flat-Bow up this side of the Olsaks; then they went over the divide, later in the year though, and down to the West Arm to where they used to have fishing camps for the red-fish. The trail may be grown over a bit with willow-bush, but you can get down by it all right. It goes beside a creek, the white man name for which I only know as Creek Two—that's counting from the beginning of the arm. The Kootenays call it Salmon Berry creek. They used to go up it a long ways, from the other side, after salmon berries, consequently the further down it you go the better it will be." He paused. "That cache of yours left right," he went on, "it seems a pity to leave it. How about me helping you to tote it across to here tomorrow, and you could tote it around and leave it to the other side of the ridge in case you needed it."

Angus looked at Piccolo; Piccolo looked at Angus. Then Angus shook his head. "It seems awful extravagant to leave it," he answered, "but it is only one extra sack of flour and one whack of bacon, and one bag of beans. And forty years ago I left Aberdeen. To go for it, and come back again over these snow-slides..." he shook his head.

"All right," said the policeman. "I don't hanker to do it more often than necessary, but I've got my snow-shoes, and in the morning before more slides begin I could go back and bring it this far for you."

"Thank ye, but we'll leave it," said Angus. "We're loaded to the limit now."

"Waste not, want not, I know; but there's the other adage: 'Time waits on no man.' And whoever knows our business at Colvalli did not come with us. They sent a message for their cronies to dodge our steps—do dog our steps I should say. That might only be because we knew them by sight."

"I know him," put in Piccolo. Angus looked at him and sighed. "Don't rub it in," he said. "I thought he was a friend."

The policeman drew forth his pipe for a post-prandial smoke. "If you don't mind," he added, "I'll camp with you till tomorrow and be up good and early before the sun gets on that store, and skim back lively across it."

"If we don't mind!" ejaculated Angus. "How about your horse?" asked Piccolo. "You didn't walk up, did you?"

"No sir! But he's all right. I left him at the mine stables and hiked on my snow shoes under my arm till I hit the snow. I knew I was near the end, near finding out whatever I had to find out when I heard at the mine that Hawke and Grafters had had the gall to ask leading questions about you, and how far ahead you were."

As he spoke there was a sudden whispering sound that increased in volume. They stood up in their little close group of fir and saw as it were the surface of the mountain sliding forward.

"That covered him again, I guess," remarked the policeman. "And I guess that one has been getting ready to come for a long time, and will be the last for today. It is getting kind of cold again."

Piccolo looked very grave. "Would Grafters have a hard death?" he asked.

"No, neither of them. I saw them go. They had their feet knocked from them by the fallen ice, and got knocked on their heads too. Stunned—and then suffocated by the snow before they could come back to consciousness, I guess. It just poured over Hawke like emptying a sugar bag on a fly. The old mountains are terrible, but they are merciful too in their way." He looked along the fan of snow. "That will be all right for me to cross in the early morning. But mark you, you fellows, can't cross the next ones. They are fierce—on the south slope. Get the sun there a lot. You have just got to go down, as I say, and around their butt-ends, if it takes you all of a week. Then up to the creek that runs south and west out of the glacier on the other side. You maybe won't pick it out at once—the trail I mean; but as you go down creek there, and the timber thicken, you'll see it all right. It's wonderful. Here's the end of winter—up here and the thermometer going away down to below zero at nights; and down in Kokanee, by golly, the grasshoppers are out. By the time you reach the West Arm the bluebirds will be there."

Angus did not notice the laughter in his voice, taking it all, from beginning to end, for a serious speech, not knowing him well enough to realize that he had (that little policeman of the bent grim and humorous) a way of finishing the serious with a jest.

"I hope not," he said. "Bluebirds around by then! I hope not!"

Then he saw that the Kokanee policeman was smiling.

"Ah well," said he, "I feel serious about the question of haste for I have that premonition—that we might call a hunch—that as well as sending folks following us to Kokanee to spy upon our business, that fellow Movie Bill" (there he had said it) "might quite readily go out himself overland north to look for the place where Piccolo made his ore find. Man, Piccolo, you are over simple. You blabbed, I believe."

He was irascible. He was annoyed that the policeman had spoken the truth regarding the high snow, and that they could not make the divide and travel speedily on their way. His pride was hurt, the pride of the old prospector. He was downcast in the matter of Movie Bill. And finally he was chagrined with himself for having admitted that he had come to believe that Movie Bill had been a traitor to their friendship. There were the definite initials to be sure; but Angus looked to take out. I don't blame you. But, dang it, I blamed myself for not getting a boat the way Bill—the way the writer of the letter imagined we would do. Now, I am not—definitely—convinced he wrote that letter. I never saw his calligraphy, but that does not believe in it if it would be his hand of writing!"

And even Piccolo (dense though he was in some matters), perhaps because of a recent softening of his own heart, suddenly realized that here was not evidence of argumentativeness in MacPherson, but evidence of his refusal to believe in the treachery of one he had treated as a friend.

While they were setting up their tent as a lean-to to shelter all three, a roaring fire before it, turning it into a very cave of warmth, night poured up and enveloped them, a night of deep blue with the glimmering whiteness of the upper snows oddly illumining it; and overhead, as if frosted, slow-moving tall Orion, the tilted Dipper, and then the ghostly moon with its influence of unearthly quiet.

MRS. DONALD B. CHASE

On Wednesday, April 29, at Westwood Hospital, Wolfville, there passed away the bright spirit of Marguerite Bancroft, wife of Donald B. Chase, of Port Williams, aged 23 years.

Mrs. Chase was a particularly beautiful character—winsome, attractive, unselfish—beloved by a host of friends who deeply mourn her early death. She was educated at Acadia Seminary, where she afterward held the position of librarian.

At an early age with her brother and sisters she united with the Baptist church at Annapolis Royal.

Besides her husband Mrs. Chase leaves little Marguerite, an infant three days old, her mother, widow of the late Joseph A. Bancroft, M.P.P., of Round Hill; a brother, Willard, two sisters, Miriam, studying at the Toronto Conservatory of Music, and Kathleen at Acadia Seminary.

The funeral service, conducted by Dr. Hemmeon of the United church, Wolfville, and Dr. Patterson of Acadia University, was held at her late home, where many friends gathered, among them the Girl Guides in uniform, of whom Mrs. Chase was the loved leader.

The floral tributes were numerous and very beautiful, including those from Acadia Seminary, Women's Institute, the staff of Chase Brothers and the Girl Guides, besides many others from personal friends. The pall bearers were Professor Merle Bancroft, Mr. Robert Bishop, Mr. Roy Faulkner and Mr. George Gates. Interment at the beautiful Wolfville Cemetery.—Contr.

FACTS ABOUT TEA SERIES—No. 7

The Advent of Tea to England

Tea was not used to any extent in England till about the middle of the seventeenth century, although knowledge of the wonderful qualities of the beverage had reached Europe as early as 1517. During the seventeenth century, all tea was imported from China and cost from $25.00 to $50.00 per pound. Not until 1836 did any tea reach England from India. In that year the first shipment was made from the now famous tea growing district of Assam. India today supplies fully half the world's tea requirements and provides some of the finest teas grown. The rich body of "SALADA" is due to the select India teas used in the blend.
