For the sake of humanity and the American people and army, the authorities are endeavoring to keep the matter hushed, but in the investigation, which is almost sure to come, the facts will undoubtedly come out. The object in shipping the bodies in iron caskets was to prevent exposure. It has been stated that after game gave out in February the members of the party lived principally on scalskins, lichins and shrimps. As a matter of fact, they were kept alive on human flesh. When the rescuing party discovered the half-starved survivors their first duty was to look to the two men who were insensible from cold and privation.

One of them shricked as the sailors took.

After a brief investigation, Schley felt that the man was speaking the truth, and that some of the men who perished had been stripped of their flesh to keep their comrades alive. Schley instructed two or three gentlemen, among them doctors and surgeons, to make a careful examination and put their conclusions in writing. This was done, the bodies were dug from the graves back of the permanent grape estab.

This portion of the report was referred to the sub-committee on the King street crossing, composed of Ald. Turner, Defoe, Carlyle, Verral and Crocker.

The engineer recommended sewers in the following streets on sanitary grounds: Wilton avenue, from Ontario to Seaton street; Sussex street, from St. George to Huron street; the lane west of Yonge atreet, from Grenville to the Yonge street avenue; the lane between Mutual and Jarvis streets, from Shuter to tue lane political, and perhaps the religious life of political, and perhaps the religious life of the entire people. Our system of educa-tion was secular, that was a necessity of this lane to Jarvis street; the lane between Jarvis and George streets, from Shuter and extending along this lane to Jarvis street.

Among other things the engineer also reported that all city work had been stopped except what was being done by the ward foremen. The amount on hand for all purposes was only $6000, and the engineer asked for $25,000 more to carry out much needed improvements. The sum of $37,370 was required as ad interim appropriations for sewers and block pavements. Report was adopted, and the committee arose.

Dear heart, do you remember, too,
This nook where we, together
Exchanged a sent mental view
That bound our hearts forever true—
In just such rainy weather? The dreary dips, the stars eclipse,
All these remind me of you;
And now and then in drowsy dips
My eyes are watching two red lips
That quaver back, "I love you."

W. F. MACLEAN.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, AUG. 13, 1884. High School Graduation.

We heartily endorse, in its essential features, the plan devised by Mr. McHenry, principal of the Cobourg collegiate institute, for securing a graduation test in the high school course. We have had an intermediate examination for years, but no one can say what it is intermediate between. There is the entrance examina- system and all that belongs to it, pensions tion below, but there is nothing fixed to well paid officials and the rest of it lower part of the course to have the intergood for pupils who have passed the inter- | de grace.

He would It was insufficient, difficult to man have, instead of a new examination under the anspices of the educational department, into the columns of the educational papers such an expansion of the system of unipurpose, throwing them open to both sexes, and having issued from the education depart. ment to the successful candidates diplomas of a suitable form. The local examinations of the provincial university are intended to cover three stages in the regular university course: matriculation, first year, and second year. They are made extremely feasible by means of a system of options which enables a candidate to take any one or more of several groups of subects. The papers set are identical with those set for the regular university examinations, and the answers are read by the same experts. On the results honor as Blaine, or Cleveland? It appears to be

There is no reason why the

About Keeping it Up.

To our contemporaries who try to make where else. their living by discussing imperial federation, democracy, and various possible and impossible changes of government for Canada, a question to give them pause might be proposed. How are you going to keep it up? A few months, perhaps, but do you really think you can keep it going for years? Henry George may help you for a while, but there is really nothing in him to last, with the Canadian public, nor will you better the case for Henry George by looking abroad. If you can get his land doctrine approved, and acted upon, the tenant farmers of Ireland, and by the press work, at regular job rates, we supfarmer freeholders of Ohio and Itlinois, then you may call Dandie Dinmont a Dutchman, and stick to it. What is the use of "argutying" about all sorts of improbabilities and impossibilities, which are miles upon miles away from practical poli-vics, in any civilized country? It may be said: the principles of the great French revolution were derided as unpractical, until all at once they asserted themselves in blood. Then they proved to be no dream, but a tremendous reality. the age of revolutions is past, by any probability that the land could be wrested from a thousand proprietors might be seri-thousand proprietors, and who is to undertake the job?

Well, really, nobody knows, but the Hamilton Times is believed to have the courage of its convictions; and it would probably push the thing through or perish in the attempt. Only, if in the heroic effort our contemporary were to fall a victim what would they do for a paper to fight the N. P. in Hamilton.

The term, he says, must be liberally construed, and a pauper does not free himself from by merely leaving the vessel. queioners have power to take him. the steamship company that brought him over must carry him back again. One of the vessels of the Anchor line was peremptorily refused her clearance until a certain nissing emigrant was found, and as a last resort the company had to give bonds that they would return him to Europe if found at any future time and proved a pauper. What we may expect next is clear lough. The parties, whoever they may be, who have the pauper emigration busiess in hand, when they find their game 'blocked" in the States, will of course turn their attention to Canada. Our own authorities should note the fact and take measures accordingly. TVA . BAY

"Oh, tell 'em they were taken from Linus and was placed in communication with the Pond." On his way home the squire called and had the largest one photographed. Underneath the picture he picture he wrote; "One of the fifteen picture he wrote; "One of the fifteen taken from Linus Pond, Jan. 8, 1884, by Timothy Borge, Hed." In two days he came back to the marketman, and said: "Lookee here, where is Linus Pond, any how? They saked me where it was, and I told them it was up in the north part of Hancock county. Then they got a map and wanted me to show it to them, and for the life of me I couldn't find 'it "Just of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil since its introduction to this place, and with much for the life of me I couldn't find it "Just' tell me where it is, and I'll go home and fix them. —A TRINITY OF EVILS.—Biliousness, costipation and dyspepsia usually exist together. By disciplining the liver and ton ing the stomach simultaniously, they can be eradicated. The promptitude and thoroughness with which Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and great blood purifier removes this trinity of physical cylls is a fact widely appreciated throughout Canada.

What She Was Sorry For. From the Freeman's Journal. It is related that a confessor once had nuch difficulty in getting an old Irishwoman, a regular penitent of his, to recolect any sin. She could not remember that she had done anything wrong at all. At last, after a severe examination, be asked her whether she could remember a sin of her past life. No. Anything she was sorry for? "Sure, father," she answered, "I'm sorry I ever came to this country!"

Crushed by His Wife. Jones bought a new hat; on the inside as the motto, "Moveo et Proficid," took some pains to find out the meaning of the words, and at an evening party introduced the subject, but when he attempted to translate it he couldn't remember it and appealed to his wife. "Maria," he said. appealed to his wife. "Maria," he said, "do you temember what was in my new hat when I brought it home on saturday." "Perfectly," said Mrs. Jones, with her usual composure, "And what was it?" he asked looking round on the company as much as to say; "New you will see what a scholar my wife is," "A brick," was the crushing answer.

Mr. Henry Marshall, reeve of Dunn, writes: "Some time ago I got a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery from Mr. Harrison, and I consider it the very best medicine extant for dyspepsia." This medicine is making marvellous cures in liver complaint, dyspepsia, etc., in puri-fying the blood and rectoring manhood to full vigor.

SIR ALGERNON'S INTENTIONS In Three Episodes.

· Sir · Algernon Tudor was eminently aristocratic and exceedingly good looking, but not altogether so wise as a baronet with a rent roll of £10,000 a year ought to love with Lady Dolly Castleton, who was, as everybody knew, the prettiest girl in all the country, and not a bad match even for Sir Algernon.

was very body knew, the prettiest girl in all the country, and not a bod math even for Sir Algerson.

Dolly, for her part, was quite aware of the tender feeling also had inspired, and was even prepared to reciprocate it as soon as the gentleman gave her a chance of doing so, without overstepping the bounds of maiden modesty and reserve, for Dolly was a very discreet young lady, and knew better than to make herself cheap by meeting advances too readily, or doing any of the love making herself. And poor Sir Algerson, who was any and, not very ready of speech, found this weed, nursy-ing friendliness very trying, for he was dreadfully in Pove, and anxious above all things to propose and get that difficult question of his mind, and yet he never seemed also to arrive at the desired Silvance and the second also to arrive at the desired Silvance and the most likely they would remain undisturbed all the morning.

Dolly, in the most charming of morning wrappers, looked more like an angel than a young lady, and the tender way in which that fasquasting main sang anythment. a young lady, and the tender way in which that fascinating pair sang sentimental duets was truly romantic, and deserved a more appreciative audience than that afforded by the giggling couple who were enjoying the music just outside the door.

Now, it must be explained that bolly Castleton had a very mischievous brother, who had reached the merciless age of 19. Of this fact Sir Algernon was aware, and always took care to do his love-making beyond the reach of that young man's sharp eyes. But he was not aware of the existence of an equally mischievous young siseyes. But he was not aware of the existence of an equally mischievous young sister, because she had only just appeared upon the scene, and very much astonished and disgusted was he when, just as he had summoned up his resolution and was about to pour into Dolly's ear the story of his hopes and fears the dear was thrown once.

"Sir Algernon, I must present you to my sister Freda (Freddie do send that horrid dog away). People think we are very much alike—sometimes we are mistaken for one another."

Dolly and Freda were alike in feature and in voice; but the likeness was not easy to detect, for Dolly's face was pensive and demure, and her voice low-toned and gentle; whereas Freda was always laughing and her mischievous, saucy looks and ways were singularly unlike her sister's.

"Alike!" ecnoed Sir Algernon, as he slowly advanced with his eye on the dog. "I cannot see the smallest resemblance. Why, nobody in his senses could mistake gently over the smooth floor, first in the slowly advanced with his eye on the dog.

"I cannot see the smallest resemblance. Why, nobody in his senses could mistake you for a moment—impossible! Still, I am delighted to make Lady Freda's acquaintance. I really did not 'now—"
"Did not know of my existence!" laughed Freda. "How odd! for I've heard oceans and oceans of stories about you. Indeed, I am quite tired—"
"Hosh Freda!" interposed Dolly's "My sweet love—my Dolly, no one can you ever hear such bosh?" Here followed some extracts, in which sentiment certainly preponderated over souse, and which produced such an outbreak of mirth from the irrepressible brother and sister that Dolly looked vexed and Sir Algernon disc mfited. Both made excuses to slip away from the room, though not together.

"Isn't he a muff?" laughed Charley.

"Well, rather; but I dare say he'd just suit Dolly. He isn't bad looking, and I will be one another."

"But Dolly, dar Dolly." gernon drew his offended partite and small room which opened from the one in small room which opened from the one in which they were dancing.

"My dearest—my own Dolly—you can not forget what took place between us in the bludoir to day. We were interrupted. I kndw, but not before you had said—"

"I said nothing which could warrant such language as you have just employed. I am much aurprised and displeased," said Dolly, in her haughtiest tone.

"But Dolly, dear Dolly."

well, rather; but I date say not a set as a substant Dolly. He isn't bad looking, an I I think they like one another."

"Oh! I don't want to hinder their lovemaking. I'd give anything to hear what he says to her when they're alone. Oh, Fred!' with a sudden gleam of inspiration, "you could make yourself just like Dolly if you chose. Couldn't you contrive to come across him in the dusk and give Dolly, please come in. I have so wished to speak to you—to see you alone again. Take this chair. Give me the chance to finish what I had only begin to say this morning."

The graceful, girlish figure in the ridinghabit advanced readily, and seated herself against the dim light. The veil tied tightly across the face could not conceal the well-known contour of the cheek and lip which had from the first to bewitched him.

"Lady Dolly—dear Dolly!" he exclaimed, rapturously, "you are the lovliest wonain in the world!"

Had he not been so preoccupied by his summoned up his teach the story of his hopes and fears, the door was thrown open and these two audacious individuals rushed madly in, followed by a mastiff dog of so fierce an aspect that Sir Algernon fled precipitately into a corner, and barricaded himself with a table and two chairs.

Dolly pouted and looked daggers at her brother and sister, but her voice was sweet and placid as ever.

"Sir Algernon was in a state of cestatic joy as he dressed himself for the dance that evening. He had proposed and had been accepted, and as Dolly's betrothed husband he felt himself as bold as a lion.

"Poor little love, how frightened she seemed—she who has also been so self-possessed and calm. Perhaps she was not as much prepared for it as I had thought. Well, I will finish all I had to say to night. Well, I will finish all I had to say to night. We will make up for that second interruption.

"Hush, Freda!" interposed Dolly's gentle yet commanding tones, and Charly stopped any further talk by bursting into a roar of laughter. He was standing by the piano looking at the music, which stood open.

"Just listen to the words, Freda: did you ever hear such bosh?" Here followed some extracts, in which sentiment cerebility of the words and which they were dancing.

Dolly if you chose. Couldn't you contrive to come across him in the dusk and give him a sell? It would just serve him right for saying you weren't alike."

Freda's face dimpled into laughter, and she looked at Charley reflectively, with her head on one side.

"We are going to ride this afternoon, Dolly and I, and I believe she'll come, because she does not care to seem to crave her Algernon's society too much. We do look almost exactly alike in our habits; and I can contrive that he shall not see me before we start. If you'll get him alone in this room at dusk, I'll give Dolly and the groom the slip and ga'lep home. The I can come in quite innocently and surprise him in the gloaming, and you can be listening outside; and then we shall never pine any more to know what he says and how he says it."

Please don't quarrel, because it was all my fault! I think that's all. Come Charley, we shall lose our waltz if we stay any longer."

The door burst open once again—intertuptions that day seemed in evitable. Freda and Charley appeared, flushed and laughing.

"Sir Algernon—Dolly," began the saucy girl, "don't quarrel and be angry with oue another. It's all my fault. I pretended to be Dolly this afternoon in the dusk, Sir Algernon, to pay you out for saying no one outle. It's all my fault and the proposed to me, Dolly, and I was so f

"First rate!" cried Charley, ecstatically. "Won't he be wild when he finds out! You're a brick, Fred, and we'll do it."

"If only she would come again! If only I could see her now!" quoth Sir Algernon, as he paced up and down the little boudoir at dusk. "If only I could see her again alone, I would not let the chance slip. I had got so near the point, if only that dreadful brother and sister had not come. Oh! if I could only get such another chance again!"

"Never y u fear," said Charley, reassur ingly; they'll make it up fast enough, now they're left alone together."

The irrepressible Freda enjoyed her dances very much after that.

"It's all right," said Charley, coming up and whispering to her some three quarters and whispering to her some three quarters.

Oh! if I could only get such another chance again!"

The door opened quietly and a dark figure stood in the doorway. A soft voice asked:

"Are you there, Freda?" and as the baronet sprang engerly forward the girlish figure started violently.

"Sir Algernoon! You here! Have you seen anything of Freda? We lost her out riding. She is so reckless I am afraid the standard of the sone sprange with the same!"
