To get down to business, if the President of the Privy Council were prepared to co-operate in bringing forward this change in the rules, as it should be brought forward, then perhaps members could define the rules under which the House would operate in relation to negative and affirmative resolutions. I do not have much confidence that the minister would be allowed by his officials or his colleagues in the cabinet to bring this bill back later. For that reason perhaps we could pass this amendment and postpone its implementation for four months. I am being very reasonable. In fact, I am amazed by my reasonableness. The minister should consider that proposition carefully. Perhaps the minister and his colleagues could get together right now and hold a miniature cabinet caucus so that we can pass this amendment. I have three more as well, but I might be persuaded to drop a couple of them if we can get this thing started.

Perhaps the President of the Privy Council, in the discharge of his duties and responsibilities, would undertake that this House will have a chance to consider and pass a code governing affirmative and negative resolutions. If that were the case, I would undertake on behalf of this party, and I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would undertake as well on behalf of his party, to provide a very limited debate on a reasonable code defining the rules in respect of affirmative and negative resolutions. As a result of the way this government has been operating during the course of this parliament I am sure we are going to have a great many of these debates.

I could take this amendment back and propose an exceedingly complicated, complex and lengthy amendment such as I put forward in connection with the Petroleum Administration Act. That was accepted by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and you must admit, Mr. Chairman, when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources accepts something, that is quite an undertaking. If he can do it, I am sure the Minister of Finance, who is much more flexible than the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, would accept it. But that would be a very complicated and complex process and I do not think the House should be compelled to do that. What we need is a simple code covering these kinds of amendments.

● (2010)

While the minister is considering that, I want to place a few more arguments before him. First, I want to dispose of the rather ridiculous statement he made that he does not like to leave a tax statute in the vague position in which this legislation would be if such an amendment as the one I proposed were accepted. How ridiculous is the minister's statement! Here he proposes, by an amendment which he has introduced, which allows the government to add to the classes of people who may be exempted from this tax or who may secure a rebate, a person of such other class of persons as the governor in council may by regulations prescribe. That leaves the whole world within the ambit of that description. Any class of people may be defined by an order in council as being liable for the exemption.

This bill is not as concise and precise as a tax bill should be and the minister, by his amendment, has made it plain that that is the case. He can provide any class or group in this country with an exemption.

I will not go back on what I said at the beginning of my remarks that I would much prefer that than the ridiculous aberration put forward in the form of section 149 of the Income Tax Act. But that is not all of it. Also in this clause we find the expression "commercial or business purposes shall have such meaning as the governor in council may determine by regulation". The words "commercial or business purposes" have a very clear and definite dictionary meaning, whether you refer to the Oxford or Webster dictionaries, or any other dictionary. We know what those words mean, and not only do we know because of the normal use of those expressions in business and social life but because of their judicial interpretation.

I think you can go to the law reports and probably find a number of judicial interpretations of what "commercial or business purposes" means. Yet the government has taken to itself the right to place upon these words such tortured or unusual interpretations as it sees fit. In other words, if it is placed in a position of having to make a decision, it can say it does not want to have to make this decision, and it can take the ordinary interpretation of the words "commercial or business purposes" and can change that definition to suit itself. How can the minister say he wants a tax bill with precision and exactitude when he has the right to make these changes, he or whoever may succeed him? I think this is ridiculous. There is no measure of precision about this bill at all. It is a bill which can be widened, so far as exemptions are concerned, or restricted as the governor in council may see fit to do.

The minister has said that there is the right of review of orders in council. I want to call to his attention that there is the right of review by the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments which has the right of scrutiny, but not the right of scrutiny which goes to the question of substance. This is one of the limitations. We are not able to go into questions of policy.

If the government sees fit for some reason or other to say it places such and such interpretation on the phrase "commercial or business purposes," or it is going to extend the benefit of the right to give a rebate to some other class, the scrutiny committee cannot pass judgment on the basis of the policy or the substance of that decision. If an unexpected or an unusual use is made of a power within the terms of reference, they have the right to comment upon it but not to challenge it in the sense that it can be reviewed and a recommendation made to the House of Commons that it be set aside. I think that is right.

I think that the purpose of the scrutiny committee is not to sit in appeal on the governor in council but to review the instruments, to see whether they conform to the legislation, to see whether they are retroactive in effect; and also they have one particular power, to see whether unexpected or unusual use is being made of the power given. We can only flag it as it goes past, whereas the right a negative resolution gives to the House of Commons, as it ought in matters of this kind, is the right to say that the basis upon which this decision was made was a wrong basis, that it was based on wrong facts, thinking, and assumptions, and that therefore the House, sitting in review by the process triggered off by the negative resolution, has the right to say it will set it aside.

As a matter of practical fact the minister knows, sitting as he does with the majority—I will be kind and not say anything about the quality of the majority—that this House will certainly not set aside the orders in council. But there would be the opportunity for a full, fair, and uninhibited debate so that we can bring to the attention of the country the basis upon which this is done.

I should like to go back to the issue which I raised at the beginning. We are living in a pluralistic society. There are many groups of people with vested interests, and there will be many classes of people in the days ahead who will have occasion to seek from the minister the right to have themselves established as a class suitable for rebate of this tax, and to make other applications. The minister may deal with them as he sees fit on the advice of his officials, and this will be a decision by a government representing 30 per cent of the people eligible to vote, as against the opposition representing almost 40 per cent of people eligible to vote.

While the rules of the game are what they are and the government is formed on the basis of those rules, and while it is true that with regard to legislation we have a chance to debate bills, and occasionally to have a debate that lasts a little longer than normal, such as this one, and we can bring to the attention of the public the defects in the legislation, when it comes to statutory instruments that right does not exist. Statutory instruments, as I indicated before, and statistically it can be established, are the legal documents which affect, more than any bill or any other form of law, the rights of the people in this country.

There is no certainty about the tax bill now; it is wide open to being altered in respect of rebates. I suggest that under those conditions the minister should have a conference with the President of the Privy Council and take advantage of the very generous offer I made to him to work out a settlement along the lines I outlined.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I admit that I had hoped, when I called it six o'clock at about five minutes to six, that the minister would take the two intervening hours to consider the matter and would come back prepared to agree to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. I regret that his statement tonight, although it was put forward rather timidly, did not seem to represent agreement.

The hon. member for Peace River has stated the case exceedingly well. There is no need for me to spin it out, but I would like to do my best to set aside the argument of the minister that this arrangement leaves the government in an uncertain position with respect to tax law. If the hon. member for Peace River were proposing that these orders in council had to be subject to an affirmative resolution, that of course would put the government in a position of not being able to put its orders into effect, but under the provisions of the negative resolution an order in council goes into effect immediately and is set aside only if a majority in parliament votes that it should be nullified.

As the hon. member for Peace River has pointed out, in this parliament the government has a majority which seems to sustain it every time. Even in other kinds of parliaments governments have to present their tax measures on the basis that they will be able to win support. I submit that the chances of our upsetting one of these orders in council by virtue of using the negative resolution process are slim, but the effect could be very salutary, and I suggest that is the whole purpose of the proposal of the hon. member for Peace River. If the minister knows that an order in council which he passes under this legislation is subject to a negative resolution, he will be that much more careful to draft the kind of order which the opposition will not even try to subject to a negative resolution, and one which would carry the government's way even if we did try it. So I submit that the minister's argument about the uncertainty in which this process would leave the government does not carry very much weight.

As I said earlier—and the hon. member for Peace River has underlined it—it is nice to have these provisions for affirmative and negative resolutions, but it is a bit disappointing that when we come to a practical case where it would be very useful, the minister gives an answer which is stated very nicely and very respectfully, but which adds up to one big no. I still think that further consideration should be given to this matter along the lines urged by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: Because of what I said before supper, I would like to point out for the record that I have examined the letter from the Privy Council office, and I was incorrect. This proposal is one which is subject to review by the committee and to scrutiny by the committee. I do not think it will do any harm to refer to this letter in the presence of the President of the Privy Council, who has some measure of authority there. I want to say that I have a letter in my hand from Mr. McIntosh, director of legal services to the Privy Council, who doubles in brass and who is also connected with the Minister of Justice. It is from his pen that I learned of this most extraordinary interpretation of a statutory instrument or an order in council which is subject to scrutiny and one which is not subject to scrutiny.

It is in this simple distinction that if this bill were to say that the government may exempt certain classes of people from payment of this tax, that is not a statutory instrument which is liable for scrutiny by the committee or which needs to be published, but if the bill says the governor in council may by order direct that certain classes of people are subject to being exempt from payment of this tax, it then becomes a statutory instrument which is liable to study.

In this bill alone there are two or three instances where a form is used which takes the proposal outside of the definition, and as such it is not liable to be published or liable to be scrutinized, and this is my anxiety. Where this House passes a statute, the Statutory Instruments Act, which from the course of the debate—and I was reviewing the debates the other day—made it abundantly plain that we wanted to have in our hands the right to review through a scrutiny committee, and the right to insist upon publication of orders in council and directives which deal with the lives or the property of persons, but now we find that by a simple interpretation taken unilaterally by the Privy Council officials on their own, they have in fact cut in half the cases which can be reviewed and taken to themselves the right to so word an order in council that it is removed entirely from the scope of study by this House, this is the sort of thing which is going to lead to difficulty. This is why I think that hopefully some time this fall the committee will bring in a recommendation so that we can debate it in the House. But it is because of these kinds of things, and because of the arbitrary right which government officials have seized, of saying what is and what is not a statutory instrument and so ordering by the form of construction of the words used as to leave it outside the ambit of consideration by this House, that I worry about tax measures.

I worry about measures which give the government the right on its own volition to exempt certain additional classes from the payment of these rebates, and the government will have its way if the minister is determined.

Ultimately the government will have its way on this and the other two or three amendments I will be moving, but I want to caution the government that the attitude it is taking is very serious. It is in defiance of the laws of propriety and of free government, and I do not think it is a very good thing for the democratic process in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Chairman, I take it that this marks the end of the discussion on the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River. I do not wish to speak on that amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: I remind the hon. member for Victoria that the amendment has not yet been disposed of by the committee. Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: The amendment is in the name of the hon. member for Peace River.

Some hon. Members: Out, get out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Chairman, has the question already been put?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Earlier in the sittings of the committee the Chair made it perfectly clear that Standing Order 12(2) makes it plain to all hon. members that when the question is being put, no member shall enter or walk out of the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2030)

Amendment (Mr. Baldwin) negatived: yeas, 29; nays, 46.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the motion negatived. Shall clause 5, as amended, carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of moving the amendment which I suggested when we were at an earlier stage. In fact, I almost reached the point of moving it as a subamendment to the minister's amendment to clause 5, but I was persuaded to wait until we had disposed of that and also until we had disposed of the amendment that has just now been defeated.

My proposed amendment relates to one of the most serious and most offensive features of this bill. I refer to the fact that although this bill, in providing for the ten cent tax on gasoline, does provide for some exemptions—

An hon. Member: You finally figured that out.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I was pointing out that this bill provides for certain persons to be exempt from paying the ten cent tax on gasoline provided in this legislation, but my amendment relates to people who do not get that exemption. I refer to workers who have to use their automobiles to get to and from their place of employment. The fact that this is perhaps the most offensive part of this bill has been demonstrated by the many speeches made on this aspect of the matter, both on second reading and during debate on clause 1 of the bill.

The minister admits that a very large number of persons will be exempted from paying the tax or will be given the privilege of applying for and receiving a rebate. He steadfastly refuses, however, to cover those workers on wages and salaries who have to use their cars to get to their place of employment. It is my contention, therefore, that we should now exercise our rights in committee to move for a reduction in the burden or the effect of a tax. I suspect that the Minister of Finance may hope—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Rodriguez: The Liberals will stay here another week.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I do not mind shouting over other voices but I am not making this speech just for the fun of it; I am making it because I think at this point we are dealing with one of the most serious aspects of this bill.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

I was about to point out that under the rules of the House when a tax measure is before us we have the right to make amendments that will reduce the tax or lessen the burden of that tax on certain groups of people. We do not have the right to increase the tax; neither do we have the right to transfer a tax from one group of persons to another. The right we do have has already been demonstrated by the amendment proposed the other day by the hon. member for Red Deer who sought to change the definition of gasoline so that gasoline which is coloured or dyed would not be subject to tax.

I now wish to move another amendment to clause 5 which will have the effect of increasing the number of persons to whom the ten cent tax will not apply. Since it is a reduction in a tax which the minister seeks to impose, I contend I am within my rights as a private member of this House to move:

That clause 5, as amended, be amended by adding to subclause (c) immediately after the word "purposes", the following words:

"or for the purpose of getting to and from his place of employment,"

Mr. Chairman, the subclause (c) to which I refer in my amendment is, of course, the subclause (c) in clause 5 as amended. If hon. members are looking at the reprinted bill the wording is, of course, the wording of subclause (b) and therefore the new subclause (c), if my amendment were added to it, would read as follows:

(c) a person for commercial or business purposes, or for the purpose of getting to and from his place of employment,

In other words, just as there would be an exemption provided by the minister for a person engaged in commercial or business operations, so there would be an exemption for a person who needed to use his car for the purpose of getting to or from his place of employment.

Mr. Chairman, if the minister says that definition is not as precise as he might like it to be, I remind him that his definition in what is now subclause (c) is not precise. It reads simply:

(c) a person for commercial or business purposes,

He has covered that by subclause (3) on page 3, however, which reads:

(3) For the purposes of subsection (1), the expression "commercial or business purposes" shall have such meaning as the Governor in Council may determine by regulation.

If my amendment to clause 5, as amended, is carried I would then move a consequential amendment when we get to the next page, that subclause (3) be altered to read:

(3) For the purposes of subsection (1), the expression "commercial or business purposes" and the expression "getting to and from his place of employment" shall have such meaning as the Governor in Council may determine, by regulation.

In other words, if there are questions as to what portion of the gasoline a worker uses is to be exempted, it should be dealt with in the same way the minister has decided to deal with doctors, lawyers and the rest. The government has made a provision whereby it is going to have the right to decide by order in council as to what is meant by "commercial or business purposes". Much as I do not like to give the governor in council the power to do so, I am prepared to let the governor in council do the same thing for workers and determine what it means to use a car to get to and from a place of employment.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I place this amendment before the committee. It deals, as I have already said, with the most offensive part of the bill. I strongly urge the minister to consider it favorably. He has already exempted a great many persons from paying the tax by making it possible for them to get rebates. In fairness and in justice, he should go this step further and make the exemption from this tax available to persons who have to use their cars for the purpose of getting to work. I am not asking for pleasure travel or for all the other uses ordinary people make of their cars to be exempted, but surely this is something that is fair and just and ought to appeal to the sense of fairness and justice that I trust the minister possesses.

I should like to anticipate another argument that might arise by suggesting that in procedural terms it is similar to the amendment moved the other day by the hon. member for Red Deer. It is a reduction of the tax. It is less than is asked for in the ways and means motion and, therefore, is in order. I trust that the committee, with a sense of fair play and a sense of regard for the rights of hundreds of thousands of workers in this country who have to use their cars to get to work, will accept this amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Deputy Chairman: Before putting the amendment, I would point out to the committee that from a point of procedural purity, it is somewhat irregular to reach back into an amended clause. However, the Chair has been advised that, prior to the time the minister moved his amendment, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indicated he would have a further amendment. That being done with the agreement of the committee, the Chair will rule that the amendment is in order.

Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope the minister will accept this amendment. It has been pointed out by a number of members in this debate that one of the unfortunate factors is that workers in many parts of Canada are not served by public transportation. They do not use their cars for luxury purposes, but in order to maintain employment.

If this amendment is not accepted, there will be an odd situation in my area. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a lot of people here who are not interested in the ordinary workers in Canada. If they are only here for the purpose of a vote, they should step behind the curtain for a few minutes because there are a few members interested in the working people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: My friend may not have workers in his constituency. They may all be very rich. Of course, he represents an area in Montreal where the federal government is assisting in public transportation to a great degree. However, I hope he will keep quiet while we make representations on behalf of other areas of Canada which do not fit into that category.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: I wish to give an example of what happens in my area. A contractor in New Liskeard who works in the Sherman mine in Timagami, 60 miles away, who uses his truck to transport his employees would be able to apply for a rebate for his transportation costs. Many other workers in the mine must drive their own vehicles because there is no public transportation. They would be penalized. A normal vehicle gets about 20 miles to the gallon. This means that for the 120 mile trip, the extra cost would be 60 cents.

The minister said he did not want the commercial entreprises attaching the increased cost to the price of the end product. I suggest that no matter how it is done, it will be attached to the price of the end product because the workers will demand a transportation grant from their employer. This is a hardship they had not anticipated and which their wages will not cover. I suggest the minister is much better protected in this clause than in any other.

A private businessman, company, farmer or fisherman will make the declaration without any supporting evidence. It would not be difficult for the Minister of National Revenue to ask a company employing such a person as I have mentioned submit additional evidence to support the application for rebate. This is not possible in any of the other categories. I hope the minister will give some consideration to giving these workers parity with contractors as they work in exactly the same place and travel the same distance. However, they are not self-employed in the sense of being contractors rather than employees.

For years I worked in the mining field. There were segments of the underground employment, particularly shaftmen and sometimes driftmen, who were in effect operating on a private contract. In my opinion, they were doing the same work as some of the employees of the mine. These men worked on a contract basis rather than being permanently employed. I suggest that the clause as presently worded is very unfair. Those who live in downtown Montreal or Toronto have an alternative mode of transportation. In fact, it would be to everyone's advantage if they did not drive their cars to work. They should all be using public transportation. If they did that, this would also reduce the cost of public transportation. I submit that increased public transport facilities will induce more people to use the service. We want to see increased service provided in northern Ontario, but we realize that it will not come about for many years.

Those who are employed in the remoter areas of Canada must often travel considerable distances to work. Perhaps the Minister of Finance knows that people no longer live on mining properties. Ontario passed a good law prohibiting the existence of townsites on mining properties. I think there are no more company towns on minesites, at least in Ontario. Services and facilities are now provided in areas some distance away from mines. I am thinking of the Kirkland Lake Community, and of other, similar communities. The people who work in the mines no longer live on the minesite.

The point is this. These people must be induced to work. Although they do not want to go on the unemployment insurance rolls, the minister will find that if these people must spend too much of their income to drive to and from work, it will not be worth their while working in the mines and they will seek alternative means of employment or assistance. You cannot expect a man to drive 60 or 70 miles a day to work, unless he is compensated for his expense.

I sincerely believe that the proposed amendment will make the supervision of this measure easier. It will also make it easier to police the exemptions to be granted under this legislation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, you have already ruled on the hon. member's amendment, although I wanted to reserve our right to challenge it procedurally. We will reserve our rights. I suggest that the amendment would tend to reduce the imposition of the tax, or the ambit of the tax and, conversely, decrease the effect of the ways and means motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have gone through that argument for about five years.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): May I deal with the matter on its merits. Many speeches have been made concerning the imposition of the excise tax, and its unfairness to those who do not have available other means of transportation. I am sure hon. members opposite are aware that the purpose of this special excise tax on gasoline is to cover the deficit on oil account.

An hon. Member: On the backs of the poor.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The purpose is to preserve a single, national price for oil in this country.

An hon. Member: At what cost?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Therefore, we wish somewhat to curtail personal consumption and are imposing a tax in order to preserve the price for oil used for homeheating, industry and by farmers and fishermen at two-thirds of the world price. That is the purpose of the tax.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): That's a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is also designed to discourage gasoline consumption when an automobile is used for personal rather than business use. Under the terms of the tax, personal use includes using an automobile to get to work. In this respect, the special excise tax parallels the provisions of the Income Tax Act which does not allow the deduction of expenses incurred to get from one's home to one's place of business.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): That is wrong, too.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not wrong, and it applies to anyone, whether he be a doctor, lawyer or clergyman.

An hon. Member: Then the law is an ass.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This rule of non-deductibility in the Income Tax Act has been a fundamental principle of that act for several decades. It must be recognized that every person who works must get from his place of residence to his place of business. We understand that. But, to give a deduction of the expense of getting to work would be to give a tax subsidy to those who choose to drive rather than take public transit—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —to those who choose to live far from their place of work, rather than close, and to those who choose to drive a large automobile rather than to those who drive a small one.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Nonsense.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Given that every worker has the expense of getting to work—

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): That, too, is nonsense.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I understand hon. members opposite were concerned about not being given a fair hearing. Perhaps we could have a reciprocal understanding, and perhaps hon. members will allow me to say what I must say.

Given that every worker has the expense of getting to work, it has always been recognized that the disallowance of these expenses is the most equitable way to deal with the considerable disparities in the amount of expenses incurred. This is undoubtedly more equitable than permitting a deduction which would vary appreciably as between taxpayers, and offsetting the substantial revenue loss by a general tax increase.

As I said earlier in this debate, because the energy shortage arose we were compelled to raise the price of oil and gas. We were compelled to finance the deficit in the oil account in order to preserve a single, national price for oil. This being so all Canadians, each one of us, must understand that, to a certain extent, we must change our lifestyles; to a certain extent we must curtail our use of transportation; to a certain extent we must use public transportation and, to a certain extent, resort more to using car pools and other ways of saving energy. If we do not do this the ten-cents tax will be minimal compared to what this country will have to do in order to become, self-sufficient in oil and gas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not deny for a minute that there will be cases of hardship. Unfortunately, there is no equitable way to cope with these situations which is administratively feasible. If the government were to allow a rebate of the special excise tax, it would be virtually impossible to ensure the extent to which individual claimants actually utilized their cars to get to work. Somebody, or more likely, a large group of people, would have to be employed doing nothing but determining whether public transportation is available from any particular residence to a particular place of work. To give a blanket exemption to anyone who makes the claim would be to defeat the whole energy conservation purpose of their particular bill. We should not be able to raise the necessary revenue for preserving a single national oil price and for preserving a lower price for home heating oil, and a lower price for oil used by farmers, fishermen and by industries and manufacturing businesses in this country.

Mr. Peters: Yes, and you are doing it on the backs of the workers.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is nothing within the ambit of this special excise tax on gasoline which has not been present for 25 years or more in provisions governing deductibility under the Income Tax Act.

An hon. Member. Those were 25 Liberal years.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am explaining the reasons for this tax. I know there will be cases of hardship, but if we did this another way, the administrative problems would well nigh be insoluble. That is why we have chosen the present course. Unless we pay these increases now, every Canadian will need to bear a far sharper burden in the years ahead.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Minister of Finance for taking the trouble to reply seriously to the proposal of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I give him credit for not ignoring serious arguments and for putting forward what he believes to be a serious recommendation. Having made that point, I do not agree in the slightest with what the minister said.

● (2100)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I appeal to all the yelping voices in the backbenches to consider the arguments one by one. The minister says he must raise revenue, that there is a shortage of money due to the gap between the export tax revenue and the price we pay for imported oil off the east coast. I am sure no member on either side of the House will deny that additional revenue has to be raised, so one can write off the first third of the minister's speech by saying that no one disagrees with that argument. But that is not the point, if I may say so. The point is, how do we raise the additional revenue? That is the crucial issue and I will come to it in a minute. I do not take his first point seriously because no one disputes that the revenue is needed.

The second point the minister made was that the present law allows no one, not even a doctor or a lawyer, to claim expenses when going to or coming from work. So there is no argument there. But what we on this side of the House, and I presume the members of the Conservative party, whom I trust will support the amendment, are saying is that the means of raising this revenue by this kind of tax, as opposed to collecting it out of income tax and corporation tax revenue, discriminates unfairly against people of average or low income who have to use their automobiles to go to work because no alternative is open to them. Our point is that if the revenue is collected from general revenue, these people will pay on a progressive basis. We are telling them that they will pay the same as a doctor or lawyer, whether their income be $5,000 of $50,000 a year, but it will be based on ability to pay, not on a flat rate of usage of gasoline. At present it is a regressive form of taxation.

From that we conclude that if it is possible administratively to exempt from the tax workers who have no choice but to use their automobiles to go to work, then all workers in that category should be exempted and the shortfall should be made up out of the general revenue.

The minister has said that this would be administratively difficult. Perhaps he went even further and said it would be administratively impossible. I agree with the first but not with the second. For example, a worker like a logger, or a skilled tradesman, might have to travel to many construction projects some distance away from his home. Therefore, arbitrarily you say that workers such as loggers, skilled tradesmen, longshoremen, people in mining communities and so on are exempt from the tax because they have to drive to and from their place of work each day.

On the other hand, if there is in existence an adequate public transportation system in a city in Canada to which substantial numbers of working people could turn as a realistic alternative, then these people would not be exempt from the tax. The minister talks about changing lifestyles, and I suggest it would be a considerable change indeed, because at the present time these people would have to walk to work. Someone living in Scarborough would have to walk to downtown Toronto because there is no public transportation facility in that area. The same holds true of every urban community across the country. So I say to the minister quite flatly that he is talking nonsense.

There just is no possibility of a change in lifestyle for 90 per cent of the Canadian people at least for the next decade, because public transportation facilities do not exist. I suggest that to speak of conservation by encouraging people to stop using their automobiles, when no realistic alternative is available to them, is either hypocrisy or intellectual nonsense.

Let me return to the practical problem here. The minister has a reasonably competent civil servant sitting in front of him at the moment. Why not let him draw up a set of regulations for certain categories of workers, 90 per cent of whom, because they are lawyers, skilled tradesmen, longshoremen or miners, have to go to work by automobile, and work out a reasonable average drive to and from work, and put a ceiling on the amount of exemption. If there is a city in Canada with a public transportation system that can accommodate workers so they can leave their automobiles at home, then those workers would receive no exemption at all. But I would love to hear the minister tell me which city in Canada meets that test.

I conclude by saying that I strongly support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre because it goes to the heart of what most of us have objected to in this bill, namely, that the bill puts an unfair burden in raising this revenue upon the average and low income workers who must use their automobiles to go to work. No glossy reasoning by the minister, or superficial pronouncements about changing lifestyles, can disguise that reality.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I should like to correct a mistake on the part of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby which was quite unintentional. He referred to loggers and their method of getting to work. Loggers use logging crummies to get to work in most instances.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, many things have been said about Bill C-66. I would like at this time to point out to the government that, under the pretext of conserving gasoline, it is attacking those who do not have the means to pay for the orchestra that the government wants to hire. I shall be happy to support this evening the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). However I deplore the fact that like the hon. member, I have many constituents who must drive to work. They do not have any choice. With public transport, the distance that they must cover does not allow them to use another means of transport to get to work.

This is why I would have liked the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to include in his sub-amendment the provision that a worker who must use his car should be authorized to deduct the 10 per cent tax that he must pay on gasoline. I had prepared a motion, and if I am allowed to do so, I shall read it:

That Clause 5 be amended by adding, after subclause (g), subclause (h) which would read as follows:

a worker who must travel a minimum of twenty-five (25) miles a week in his own car to reach his place of employment.

When we talk about public transportation, we are talking about a service which is also aimed at urban dwellers. It is more to the advantage of a man who simply has to travel three, four or five miles to use a public transport system instead of his car. On the other hand there are many areas where public transport is not provided for every one. This is why I believe it would be fairer and certainly more honest to allow every worker who must use his car to reach his place of employment to claim the same rebate as companies and other individuals for transportation costs.

Now, that is why I am happy to express agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in this regard. I congratulate him for having introduced a motion intended to help those who might find the "medicine" too hard to swallow. That is why I should like, if my motion cannot be accepted, a minimum distance to be incorporated into the motion of the hon. member to allow those who have three, four or five miles to drive every day, five days a week, in other words about 25 miles, to be covered by his motion.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair must advise the hon. member for Rimouski that there is already an amendment before the committee. Therefore the amendment he proposes will have to come at a later stage in the debate.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the hon. member for Rimouski that I sympathize very much with his attempt to move a sub-amendment. You have ruled that he would have to move it at a later stage. I assume he would have to move it if this amendment is adopted. Let me say that this is an honest and sincere attempt by the hon. member for Rimouski to add some credibility to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If it did nothing else, it would relieve the Minister of Finance of some of his ill-founded worries about such a motion being accepted.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has already pointed out that one of the main arguments we have about this legislation is that it requires the people who can least afford it to pay the overwhelming portion of this $350 million for part of 1975 and something over $500 million in 1976. It places the burden of raising most of that money upon the working people, the pensioners, the handicapped and the people who drive for pleasure.

The minister has said that he is attempting to get most of the money from those who consume gasoline for pleasure driving, when in fact a large portion of it will be received from the people who have no alternative but to use their cars to get to and from work. If the minister could sort out and identify every gallon of gasoline that is used for pleasure there would be some validity to his argument and to this kind of legislation. He cannot do that. As a consequence, he places the burden of raising most of this money on those who can least afford to carry the burden because they have no alternative means of transportation.

Workers are entitled automatically to deduct $150 from income tax as the cost of tools or other things required in their employment. That is a recent measure, adopted some four or five years ago. The effect of this legislation on the workers in the city of Regina, let alone those who work in remote areas, will be to take back more than any benefit they receive from the $150 deduction as expenses in respect of tools or other various things. This more than offsets whatever tax benefit they might get from that $150 deduction. If they were in the 25 per cent bracket they might benefit to the extent of $35 or $40. Through this bill the minister will more than take away that benefit because these workers will have to pay that 10-cent tax on the gasoline they use in driving to and from their work.

There are steelworkers in the city of Regina who work for the Interprovincial Steel Company and drive between 4,500 and 7,500 miles a year to and from work. I would ask my hon. friends to compute that at 10 cents a gallon, 16 miles per gallon. The minister will not only take back any tax benefit these people might gain from the $150 deduction to cover the cost of tools and so on, but he will also take back the entire $100 tax credit to which people have been entitled in the past year or so as a result of recent budgetary measures. The fact is that as a result of paying the additional 10 cents per gallon for the gas used to drive to and from work, these people will not only lose the meagre benefits they have received as a result of tax legislation in the last two or three years, they will be paying a large proportion of the revenue the Minister of Finance says he needs for equalization of oil prices.

When the hon. member for Timiskaming said it would be nice if the workers could use other modes of transportation, hon. members on the other side applauded by pounding their desks. I would ask those hon. members opposite what happened to the promises of a year ago July? What is more significant, if they agree that this tax should apply fairly and that the way this tax is applied most of it will be paid by those who can least afford to pay it, then where were they when they should have been persuading the Minister of Finance and other members of the cabinet that this was an unfair application of tax? If they had done their jobs, then this bloody kind of bill would never have been before us. If there had been any Liberal backbencher worth his salt this bill would not be before the House now, or such a member would vote against it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: They can sit there like sheep and bleat, but they had their chance when the government was drafting this legislation. They had their chance when it was discussed in their caucus. They had their chance to persuade their cabinet ministers. The minister says this legislation is designed to discourage the use of the automobile and the consumption of gasoline. It will not do that. The minister knows full well that this legislation is put forward for one reason only, that is, to raise revenue. The argument is that he is raising revenue off the backs of the working people.

An hon. Member: Humbug!

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member can holler humbug. I would like him to come out to the IPSCO plant some morning next week; I am sure the boys there would like to hear him talk humbug—

An hon. Member: Let us go now.

Mr. Benjamin: —especially the ones who travel 15 to 20 miles a day going to and from work. The minister made his point in his remarks that professionals may not get a rebate for driving to and from work, and in the next breath spoke about the administrative impossibility of accepting the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I should like to ask the minister about policing the Department of National Revenue with respect to the expense accounts claimed by professionals to see whether the expenses they claim from their income tax for the use of their private automobiles are deductible, whether it is for two-thirds or for their entire use. I should like to find out from the Minister of Finance whether the Department of National Revenue has decided how much is deductible for driving to and from work.

I doubt if I will get an argument from the Minister of National Revenue when I say that I have yet to find a professional whose deductions for income tax purposes for driving to and from work were not accepted by the Department of National Revenue. It never happens. I also suggest that whatever portion of those expenses they will be able to claim for purposes of a rebate they will get under this legislation. If the Minister of Finance thinks that his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, will have people running around checking on every doctor, lawyer, chartered accountant, or civil engineer to see how many miles they travel going to and from work, he is kidding himself.

The minister says that the bill is here because of the energy shortage. He says we will have to change our lifestyles, we will have to use car pools or use some other means of transportation. I would like to see the Minister of Finance and his colleagues change their lifestyle. How would it be if the 30 Cabinet ministers used only ten cars to transport them every morning to the hill? I wonder how many Cabinet ministers, parliamentary secretaries, or members of parliament are prepared to use a car pool every day. I would like to see a genuine effort by hon. members opposite to change their lifestyle.

If this legislation is fair and logical, when the minister says people will have to change their lifestyles to some extent, I presume he means everybody, not just wage and salary earners, and I presume that tomorrow morning the Minister of Finance will either walk, take a bicycle, or come in a car with two other ministers when he comes to the House of Commons.

He also says that to some extent we should use some other means of transportation. That point has been dealt with very effectively by a large number of members ever since the bill was introduced, including two or three members on the government side. I must say one thing for the minister, he has a lot of nerve. He rises and repeats the same argument about taking some other means, but in his budget he stated that one of the departments which will have cut backs in its funding will be the Ministry of Transport. If the minister expects us to swallow, whether we agree or not, and accept a piece of legislation like that with those kinds of arguments, then he is really expecting too much.

The minister says there is no way in which the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre could be equitably administered. What does he mean by that? In the first place, there is no equitable way in which this entire bill could be administered.

Mr. Symes: No honourable way.

Mr. Benjamin: So much is unfair and intrinsically unjust in the bill that the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, even if the minister were partly right, would at least bring more equity into its administration. Even if some workers were to receive rebates for a few miles which they did not drive to and from work, that would be a much lesser evil, it seems to me, than all the unfairness and inequity that is in the legislation in the first place.

The Minister of Finance has many other ways to raise $350 million in 1975 and the $500 million plus in 1976 which would have some relationship to the ability to pay which applies to the greatest part of the population. Instead, he chooses a regressive measure which places most of the burden on those who have the least ability to pay, and he provides an exemption so that the rebates or deductions for income tax purposes go to those who are best able to pay, that is, the highest income people, the professionals and the businessmen.

I talked to some farmers in Regina-Lake Centre over the weekend. They know they can deduct for income tax purposes expenditures on gasoline and farm fuels. If they had an automobile, after taking away depreciation on the car and the cost of gasoline for personal use, they could deduct the expense from their income tax. Farmers do not ask for more than other citizens get.

When the minister puts up the argument that if you apply a tax of ten cents a gallon across the board it would cause an increase in farm prices and therefore an increase in consumer costs, let me remind him of what I suggested to him this afternoon, namely, that it would be more equitable and fair if he applied a tax of three cents a gallon across the board to everyone, including farmers, and this would have less impact on the cost of living than the present legislation.

The farmer who had to pay an additional three cents would deduct the portion he is allowed as an expense from his income tax, the same as he has always been able to do. The same would be the case with the businessmen, the commercial traveller, and the professional. But applying it across the board would mean that those who are in the higher income bracket and who consume the most gasoline would pay the highest tax. Even when you apply this to the senior citizen, it may only amount to $1, $2 or $3 a month at the most in extra gasoline tax, but that wipes out the $2.30 cost of living escalator that will be in effect as of April 1 on the old age pension. It will wipe out the entire amount for many of them. Perhaps once a month they drive out to visit a son or daughter on the farm or in a neighbouring town. Whatever minimal amount they drive, the expense bears heavier on them than on the professional person, the wage earner, or the farmer who paid three or four cents per gallon right across the board.

Surely every reason put forward by the Minister of Finance falls flat on its face when it comes to the practical application and the administration of this bill, and when it comes to being fair. When it comes to the people who pay this money, they will be the least able to pay. Surely the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre lends a much greater measure of fairness and equity than the way the bill presently stands. Surely that is apparent and should not need to be argued.

I hope the minister will reconsider. He says we need the money, and he has been saying that since budget night, but why does he have to take most of it from workers and pensioners? What kind of philosophy or principle of so-called "Liberalism dictates that that method must be used? Many hon. members delight in saying that they have just as many workers in their constituency as I or anyone else, and that they will not take a back seat to us in sticking up for workers. I would like to know why they would not agree with an amendment which applies the same treatment for workers as it does for professionals, business people, and people in other occupations provided for in the legislation.

The legislation will exempt or provide some measure of relief for the well-to-do in addition to those who will be able to apply for a rebate. Those people are able to make deductions for some portion of their expenses for income tax purposes. Many of those professionals and businessmen will recover that gasoline tax twice, in two ways, first by the normal expense deductions for income tax purposes, and secondly, by whatever amount of rebate for which they are eligible.

However, the wage and salary earner driving to and from work is not only not eligible for a rebate, but what he will pay in additional gasoline tax will take away any tax benefit from the $150 credit, which many Liberals have bragged about since it was brought in a few years ago. He will also lose the $100 tax credit—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I will be up again.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Madam Chairman, I do not intend to take very long in supporting the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I simply want to say that if the government is serious about conservation and restraint, it may wish to set an example by using the tax system to give the ministers a car pool instead of a swimming pool.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The Minister of Finance has stood up to defend a tax system which means car pools for the people and swimming pools for the Prime Minister, and that is a most inequitable system. In the minister's prepared and programmed response to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre he put forward a strong case which deliberately ignored the fundamental inequity in the tax which he and his colleagues are proposing. It is an inequity which protects the privileged and works hardships on people who are of low income or who happen to live in some of the distant regions of the country. If the government rejects this attempt to make the bill fair, it will stand as a deliberate unfair act against a group of people who have no option in transport and no adequate income to pay the extra shot which is imposed upon them by the Minister of Finance.

In his statement the minister defended this inequity by saying that a similar inequity already exists in the tax system. There is a refusal to recognize the unfair burden which is imposed upon people, particularly in remote or rural areas, who are forced to travel to work and who cannot claim that expense under the tax system, and who cannot now receive the rebate which will be available to the privileged, to doctors, lawyers, cabinet ministers, and perhaps even members of parliament.

He defends this new inequity because it compounds an old inequity, and that might be logic which recommends itself to the Minister of Finance, but I doubt very much if it will recommend itself to the residents of Vars, Navan, Orleans, or of the other communities of his own constituency who will have to pay the shot themselves when they drive to work, and it is certainly not going to satisfy the people of my constituency, or of the constituencies of others on both sides of this House who represent remote areas and whose people are being forced to bear the burden of this unfair tax.

I see that the minister responsible for Parks Canada is in the House, and he knows that it is the deliberate policy of his department to force some of the people who live in my constituency, and who work in Banff or Jasper, to commute to work. They do not do so by choice. They do not have any other option. They are forced by government policy to commute, and they are forced to pay the extra ten cents tax in full unless they happen to be doctors, lawyers, or other members of some privileged group.

The point which the Minister of Finance seems determined to ignore is that this country extends beyond metropolitan centres where it might be possible to have some form of public transportation even though it is not there now. It is geographically not possible in the majority of the country. It is not possible in my constituency or the constituencies represented by many of the silent members on the government side where distances are great, where there are no alternative means, and therefore no option but to pay the ten cents Turner tax.

The last point I wish to make is that it is surely typical of the government in rejecting this amendment that it uses the argument that this amendment would make it complex for the government, when it knows its system would make things unfair for the citizen. In other words, the government is prepared to put up with unfairness for the citizen, but it is not prepared to put up with complexity for the government in its own administration. That indicates a government which has been too long preoccupied with its own internal problems and has ignored too long the problems which it creates and allows to persist for individual Canadians who happen to live outside whatever favoured circle happens to attract the attention of ministers.

It is an unfair and inequitable provision which is being put forward here. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proposes to make it less unfair, and I sincerely hope that if the minister has any belief in what used to be called Liberalism he will reconsider his opposition to this amendment and reconsider this most inequitable, unfair tax.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Chairman, the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is very wise indeed. It has been the thrust of the debate of this party consistently on this bill. It was rather interesting to hear the Minister of Finance claim that he is attempting to change the lifestyle of the Canadian people. Whose lifestyle will be changed? The wealthy? That ten cents per gallon tax will not stop the rich from driving their limousines for pleasure. It will change the lifestyles of the low income earners. What are they going to get—a 6½ cents reduction on a bottle of wine. That is some change in their lifestyle—they can all stay home and drink themselves sick.

When the government calls on people to tighten their belts then they want to know what the government is doing. No minister drives a car that is under eight cylinders. They are just gasoline guzzlers. A car pool has been suggested for ministers. They could use smaller vehicles that give better mileage and that would be an important example of changing lifestyle. An hon. member asks if the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion could get into a Volkswagen. That is a good question.

The minister has allowed certain groups such as farmers, fishermen and people in commercial operations to claim the rebate. They can claim it because otherwise they would have to pass it on to the consumer and so prices would be pushed up. When we asked for a rebate for the workers, the minister said they should negotiate an increase in wages which would take the tax into consideration. If they did that, then their employers would be forced to pass the cost along. International Nickel would increase the price of nickel and copper, and that would go through the economy. This is an inflationary measure and the minister knows that full well.

The Minister says he wants to get people away from using their cars often and, in many cases, uselessly. One would assume that the government philosophy is to move people on public transit systems. I checked with CNR and there is not one passenger car on order by that state owned railway. The cars in use are decrepit and there is a move to eliminate passenger service. The minister admits that.

A parking lot costing $100 million is to be built at Terminal Two of Toronto airport. If the idea is to get people away from cars, why invest millions of dollars in a parking lot? Surely people could be moved from the city of Toronto out to the airport very quickly by public transit. There will be no hardship to the jet setters; they will go on enjoying the benefits of those who work to produce.

It is rather interesting to watch the push to put people on airplanes. It has been established that air travel of under 500 miles is not an economical proposition.

We have the Turbo train which runs from Montreal to Ottawa in about an hour or an hour and a half. Millions of dollars have been spent on the STOL airport—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are exaggerating.

Mr. Rodriguez: There are many remarks from the other side of the House. They say we in the opposition are trying to spoil their holidays by keeping them here, but this is an important point that is being debated. All they are prepared to do is holler when we are trying to make points.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I must remind the hon. gentleman that Standing Order 55(2) states very clearly that speeches in committee of the whole must be strictly relevant to the matter under consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Madam Chairman, but unless you are prepared to keep order in this chamber I will divert to the other side of the chamber. I expect them to have order in the chamber and to listen to the points that are made. If they do not agree, they can speak against them.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): You sound like a fool.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Chairman, I was talking about conservation and the lack of continuity in the philosophy of the government. If the idea is to get people on to public transit systems then that technique must be developed throughout the departments of the government. The minister talks about changing the lifestyle of the Canadian people but does not provide them with the opportunity to change.

In my area many people drive 120 miles to work. It is fine to tell them to negotiate to cover the cost, but they had already signed a wages agreement prior to the budget. They are stuck for three years. These are not doctors who are self-employed and who can make changes to cover the increase in cost. There are women who work as waitresses for $2.50 an hour. They have to use the family car to go to work, and some have to pay a baby sitter. The employer refuses to pay more than the minimum wage, so they are locked in. Should we force them to go on the unemployment rolls, to face the bureaucratic giant of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and then call them lazy because they cannot afford to work for the minimum wage? Surely it is not beyond the ability of the government to use the tax system in such a way that it brings equity to working people. My hon. friend says it is beyond their ability.

I have always considered the Minister of Finance a very capable person. Surely he could offer a viable alternative. A year ago on the campaign trail it would have been interesting if someone had asked if an excise tax on gasoline would be imposed to make up the shortfall on consumption in the east. If that question had been asked, I wonder whether it would have been answered. I dare say it would have been answered in such a way as to indicate that no tax would be imposed that would fall heavily on any one segment of the Canadian public. What is said when we are seeking votes is very different from what we actually put into effect.

The government can sit back now, three years before an election, and say, "If we have to do something that is distasteful, let's do it now so that people will forget about it by the time of the next election." I am not a cynical person, but I think that there will be a budget before the next election that will remove the ten cents excise tax. They will say they are removing it because they realize how unfair it was.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Rodriguez: A Liberal says "right on". That is the height of cynicism. They are already preparing for the next election by thinking of removing this excise tax.

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is talking about past and future elections. They should talk about the bill before us!

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: I am glad to see the hon. member identify himself. Now we know who was saying "right on". He has singled himself out.

There is another question. What if the differential keeps increasing and the ten cents a gallon excise tax is not enough to cover it? Do we have another bill to raise the excise tax by an additional eight cents a gallon? Is that the way the minister is suggesting we handle that kind of problem? I do not think that is the right way.

I made a suggestion earlier that those who can afford it should pay their fair share of the tax. I suggest that we tack on three cents on every dollar bet at race tracks in Canada. After all, race tracks are in urban centres. People use public transportation which the rest of the taxpayers have paid for, and on which they travel at an attractive rate to get to the race track. The Ontario Jockey Club races 265 days a year. With three cents added on to every dollar bet, $9 million could be raised from that one operation.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member is again straying from the amendment. He should limit his remarks to the amendment.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member's point in moving this amendment is that the tax is inequitable for workers who must use their cars to travel to and from their work. They are not doctors who can write this off as a legitimate expense. They have been doing that anyway under the income tax system.

What about the worker in Nickel Belt or in any other rural riding? I have workers in my constituency who must use their cars. There is no other way for them to travel from Noelville to Copper Cliff, a distance of 120 miles. This will mean another $250 in their budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Members opposite can shout all they like. The minister can come into my constituency and deliver the set speech he delivered this afternoon.

The amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is very reasonable. It asks that the rebates be extended to those who must use their cars to travel to and from work. I do not refer to those who have a choice, but those who have no other way. If they do not use their car, they do not get to work.

Where is the public transit in northern Ontario? The people there have no choice. They cannot change their lifestyle. What lifestyle is there to change? They do not use their cars because they like driving 120 miles a day. That is no picnic. Now they will have this added burden. May I call it ten o'clock, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Sharp: Madam Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Before calling it ten o'clock I wonder if the members who I know are not carrying on a filibuster might just like to complete the Committee stage tonight. It would be a great convenience. It would enable the hon. members to express their point of view and would enable us to come to a decision on it more quickly than otherwise.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: This can only be done with unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

Mr. Rodriguez: I said no.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN ECONOMY—REASON FOR DELAY IN SETTING WAGE GUIDELINES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in the adjournment debate tonight I am referring to a question that was put by myself to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on April 8.

Before touching on the argument which I wish to raise tonight and which I hope will be responded to, I have to report on a question of privilege. A steering committee of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has been absolutely frustrated by the action of certain members from the government benches who are on the steering committee. In short, we have held two meetings. At those meetings the steering committee has been consistently frustrated by government members with the result that the instructions to this committee to investigate the Montreal Gazette articles concerning the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid)—

● (2200)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member was to raise a question on the Canadian economy.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a question of personal privilege which involves the Minister of Finance.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. There cannot be any points of order or questions of privilege at this time. The hon. member for York Simcoe is recognized for the purpose of discussing his question on the Canadian economy.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, may I serve notice of my intention to raise my question of privilege tomorrow.

On April 8 I directed two questions to the Minister of Finance, both dealing with unemployment and inflation in this country. I wanted to know what guidelines, if any, the minister proposed to introduce and wanted him to indicate to the country the degree of restraint which wage earners and other sectors of the economy ought to observe. Specifically, I asked the following question, as reported at page 4592 of Hansard:

> Further to my original question I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Finance. With time lost due to work stoppages in January up 64 per cent as compared with January of last year when Canada had one of the worst strike records in the industrialized world, would the minister tell us why it is only after May that he seriously intends to set guidelines for future wage settlements, bearing in mind that 1975 is a very heavy bargaining year during which just under three-quarters of all employees covered by major union contracts will be negotiating?

The minister replied: "I will deal with that statement at the appropriate time".

He has not dealt with that statement, even though the budget I referred it to in May was not introduced until June 23. The budget specifically avoided mentioning guidelines governing wages.

Second, I point out that for several months we heard vague suggestions about some type of consensus program which would apply to all sectors of the country, the government, the private sector, and labour unions. All sectors were to be asked to accept certain guidelines governing real growth in the economy and inflation. It is time this House knew exactly what the Minister of Finance intended to do on the matter of wage guidelines; what were his intentions with regard to the consensus program which, I suggest, has wrought damage in the nation. We have heard no concrete statements on these subjects. Only ten days ago, when I again questioned the minister on this subject, he again avoided giving a specific answer.

We do not know if he has relinquished his pursuit of consensus. Actually we are labouring under a disadvantage. The by-product of the so-called consensus program is probably greater inflation in this country. While all this has been happening, the Minister of Finance has consistently avoided his responsibilities, namely, of putting forward concrete proposals to the country on the subject of wage guidelines.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, one wonders how sincere is the hon. member. He used the late show to climb on his most recent and favourite hobby-horse. Although called to order three times, he persisted. One wonders how sincere he is. He is keeping the House sitting and the staff working while he climbs on this latest hobby-horse.

The minister had the opportunity at the conference of first ministers to discuss the problem of inflation and the search for a consensus on ways of dealing with it. He had put forward suggestions with regard to the basic principles which should guide the setting of wages, other incomes, and prices. The statement was tabled in the House. The hon. member now ought to be familiar with those proposals but he has ignored them, because they clearly spell out the minister's stance, the government's position, and the direction in which the minister was heading.

Since the beginning of the exercise on consensus, we believed that if we were able to develop an agreement setting the right balance to be struck, it would be in the common interest of us all. We entered into these discussions with an open mind receptive to new ideas. We refused to be stampeded into rash and ill-considered action, and did not want any hard and fast agreement but one that would be fair to all and which would bring inflation down to acceptable levels.

Once again I commend a very careful reading of the speech on budget night, and I am more and more convinced that either the hon. member has not read it or he chose to put upon it the interpretation that suited his own argument. If I can give the hon. member one suggestion tonight, it would be that he carefully re-read the budget speech.

ENERGY—OIL—BASIS FOR CALCULATING LENGTH OF DELAY BEFORE INCREASING PRICE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, on July 16 I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) two questions relating to the oil price increase in Canada. The first was how he proposed to monitor the oil price increase, and he explained that a federal agency would do so and that if any oil companies overcharged they would face a reduction in their oil compensation payment. By way of supplementary I asked how the federal government arrived at the delay of 45 days, until August 15, in the increase of the price, whereas the province of Ontario has calculated that the oil companies would not be justified in increasing the price of oil in that province until some time in early or mid-October. It is the latter question I should like to pursue.

The federal government has allowed the multinational oil companies in Canada, which control 90 per cent of our oil resources, to hit the consumers of this country with a further $1.50 increase in the price of a barrel of oil. But the federal government has said that because these oil companies have a certain amount of oil in storage, they would be required to delay increasing the price for some 45 days, or until August 15. The figure of 45 days is a national average of the amount of oil in stock across the country at the old price of $6.50 a barrel. Studies have shown that the amount of oil available varies from province to province. The province of Ontario has calculated that it has enough oil to last 90 days, not 45. That is 90 days' supply of oil at the old price of $6.50 a barrel, not $8 a barrel.

I draw to the attention of the House that the last oil price increase occurred in April, 1974, and there was a similar 45 day delay until the middle of May. We now know that in Ontario on April 1, 1974, there were 46.3 million barrels of oil on hand, or enough to last not 45 days but 95 days. But the federal government asked the oil companies to delay increasing the price for only 45 days. This brought about a windfall profit to the oil companies in Ontario in 1974 of some $61.8 million. This profit came to the oil companies because they did not have to extend the delay past 45 days. Ontario consumers, therefore, paid dearly for this miscalculation on the part of the federal government.

On July 1, 1975, we had a similar increase, to come into effect on August 15. The figures I have indicate that as of July 1 there were on hand in the province of Ontario some 49.8 million barrels of oil at the old price of $6.50 a barrel, or enough for some 90 days.

The federal and provincial governments let the oil companies get away with windfall profits in Ontario last year by insisting only upon a 45 day delay in the price increase. Circumstances have now changed. The Ontario Conservatives are facing a fall election, and because of pressure by the NDP in the provincial legislature and the exposure of these figures I have just related, the province of Ontario has extended the 45 day freeze to 90 days.

Now we read in the newspapers that Imperial Oil, the largest oil company, is saying that if the province does extend the freeze to 90 days it will then increase the price per gallon of gasoline not five cents a gallon, as will every other company, but some eight cents a gallon or higher, after the 90 days are up.

Where is federal government leadership on this issue of the freeze? Why does the federal government not do an inventory of individual oil companies in each province, and if there is more oil, say in Ontario than in Saskatchewan, it would seem logical that there be a longer delay in the province of Ontario than elsewhere? As it is now, the oil companies that got us into this crisis will be able to get away with the 45-day national average.

The minister said in reply to my first question on July 16 that if the oil companies do not conform to federal guidelines the federal government will penalize them by reducing oil compensation payments. Imperial Oil has thrown out a direct challenge to the federal government by stating it will increase the price of a gallon of gasoline by more than the federal guideline of five cents a gallon after the 90-day provincial freeze has expired. My question to the parliamentary secretary is: will the federal government allow Imperial Oil to raise prices higher than the federal guideline of five cents after the 90-day freeze in Ontario expires?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in reply to the question of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) concerning the delay in the implementation of the oil price increase to allow for oil inventory at the time of the increase, let me say that the government has again this year had to deal with the difficult question of inventory treatment in a situation of rising oil prices. There are significant variances in inventory levels regionally; by product and by company. Some companies have no inventories. Particularly in import-dependent areas it is in the national interest that the industry should hold large inventories from a security of supply point of view.

Generally speaking, the largest inventories are held by the major companies. As the hon. member has pointed out, many of the large companies with large inventories are located in Ontario, and thus the Ontario government was able to move to delay the date of the increase an extra 45 days. However, a number of minor companies, which represent an important competitive factor in the market, hold much less than average inventories. It would clearly be impossible to vary price increase dates by company or regionally. There is a need to find a common denominator.

In view of the foregoing, the government has decided that a compromise must again be struck on the basis of an assumed product working inventory of 45 days. This 45-day delay allows a reasonable degree of protection for consumers without unduly penalizing the sellers.

AGRICULTURE—INDUSTRIAL MILK—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF LEVY

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, daily for the last five days the matter of the 100 per cent increase in the levy on industrial milk producers for powdered milk has been raised in this House. During those five days the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) chose to answer the question on one occasion and either refused to answer on other occasions or was missing from the House. I should like to document very briefly those five occasions.

In the first instance my colleague, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle), asked the minister about this on July 22. The minister acknowledged he had received briefs from certain farm organizations and that they contained some suggestions worthy of consideration. On the following day my same colleague, the hon. member for Joliette, tried to move a motion under Standing Order 43 which would have required this House to debate the issue. This was turned down by government members.

On the following day, July 24, the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack), also a colleague of mine, raised the same question, and this time it was answered by the Acting Minister of Agriculture who said he would take it as notice.

On July 25, in private members' hour, a motion was brought forward by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) suggesting that there should be an investigation by the government of industrial milk producers. This motion was talked out by the government so that it could not come to a vote.

Finally, for the fifth day the question was again raised by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis), and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) chose not to answer it because he had answered it previously. On the second occasion I tried to ask a question, but Mr. Speaker turned me down because it had been asked previously.

I want to conclude by asking three questions which the parliamentary secretary can answer, I think, in his three minutes without difficulty. But before I do so I want to allude first of all to his rather extensive speech on the occasion of a private member's motion last Friday. It seemed to me that he began to speak in a confident manner. I should like to quote him from page 7959 of Hansard when he said the following:

I should like to clear up the situation with regard to the dairy policy.

This seemed to be a final statement once and for all. Then he went on to describe how the minister, in consultation with the Canadian Dairy Commission and the Canadian dairy farmers, had come up with a price adjustment formula which gave rise to the figure of $11.2 to underwrite the cost of industrial milk in Canada as of last April 1. Then he went on to discuss the export situation and how the price in Canada had been affected by the fact that subsidies by European governments had lowered the cost of powdered milk from abroad to a point where we in Canada were in difficulty in trying to make sales.

Once again the parliamentary secretary went on as follows, as recorded at page 7960 of Hansard:

You know our department is much interested in exportation. We always tried to find new markets for Canadian products.

Then the parliamentary secretary went on to discuss the problem of the decreasing number of producers of industrial milk. He described how the number of farmers producing industrial milk had gone down but said that this was compensated for by the fact that new farmers were coming in as well as farmers' sons who were taking on the job. He alluded to the fact that productivity and efficiency had gone up, and he illustrated this by saying that there was a 16 per cent increase since 1971-1972 in the amount of milk produced by industrial milk producers. He did not say that the reward these producers received for their increased efficiency and productivity was a cut back of between $1,500 and $2,500 on the basis of this new levy, or a 100 per cent increase on industrial milk.

Finally, the parliamentary secretary concluded his speech in a grandiose and incredible manner with the following sentences as recorded at page 7961 of Hansard, as follows:

The government has been committed for a long time in the development of a comprehensive and long-term dairy policy. We have fulfilled our task completely. It is now up to the industry to assume its responsibility and to contribute to the success of the dairy policy.

I would like to close by asking the following three questions: first, what specific attempts have been made by the government to expand exports of Canadian powdered milk? Second, acknowledging the financial bind in which young dairy farmers now find themselves, having committed themselves to bank loans based on the $11.2 price promised them in April and taken away on July 1, what help will the government give these farmers? Third, since the parliamentary secretary has said the Department of Agriculture has fulfilled its task completely, is it then refusing to accept the challenge of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to try to develop a policy of funding for export products that will provide stability to industrial milk producers?

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of Agriculture has had the opportunity to answer that very same question several times recently, but I am pleased to answer it once again tonight.

We have all agreed for a long time on the importance and the special character of the dairy sector of Canadian agriculture. As in many other countries, the Canadian dairy industry is subject to a price control system. The government therefore has resorted to various ways of regulating production. Our programs have had a deep impact on dairy production and on the decisions of producers.

Producers want to be satisfied that their output will remain stable so that they can make the investments required to keep a modern dairy business viable.

The government in fact acted to give them such an assurance. One of the dairy policy's objectives is precisely to ensure reasonable revenues to milk producers. Allow me to refer to some parts of the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture on April 18, 1975 before representatives of the dairy industry. At that time, Mr. Whelan announced a new readjustment formula for the price of milk, which provides for the readjustment of dairy producers' revenues. The formula accounts for both production costs and producer and family labour salary. It was developed after a number of studies and discussions with all parties concerned.

In April 1974, the Canadian Dairy Commission was empowered to meet producers' associations to develop a program ensuring better production cost—producer price relationship. Later on, the commission held a series of valuable talks with industry representatives, and their propositions were retained in the new policy. Producers undertook with Canada to pay export costs, under a supply management program. To that end, we received propositions from industrial milk producers. We would like to protect Canadian producers from the highs and lows of the international market, and we shall study in detail any propositions we may receive.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

DIVORCE ACT

PROPOSED PREPARATION AND STUDY BY COMMITTEE OF AMENDMENTS TO ACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43, the circumstances of which appear in the motion itself and are prompted by the disappointing response given to me yesterday by the Minister of Justice. I move that:

This House, aware of and alarmed by the glacial progress of reform in the field of domestic relations and divorce and the urgent need to rectify certain obvious and pressing problems, urges the government immediately to prepare and introduce for debate and discussion in an appropriate committee of parliament a green paper on divorce reform, including changes covering maintenance and support.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED PROGRAMS TO EXPEDITE CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of increasing evidence that Canadian amateur sport requires additional emphasis and encouragement in order that Canadian athletes can take part successfully in world level competition and more importantly to foster greater participation by Canadians in various forms of physical recreation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare initiate more specific programs for this purpose in conjunction with provinces to expedite the construction of additional sporting facilities, and that funds for this purpose be provided to communities which have demonstrated by their own initiative that they are willing to utilize and manage such projects.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—POSSIBILITY OF UNITED STATES RELEASING STUDY OF PIPELINE PROPOSAL

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development may I address my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government been in contact with United States government officials concerning the release by the U.S. department of the interior of its study of the Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Limited's Mackenzie valley pipeline proposal?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will either take that as notice, or I believe the Minister of Indian Affairs will be in the House shortly and perhaps it can be redirected to him when he arrives.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—SUGGESTED FOLLOW UP OF DEFECTS IN PROPOSAL ALLEGED BY UNITED STATES STUDY

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the U.S. study determines safety factors, leak detection, operating plans and seismic monitoring to be inadequate for the scope of the project as well as criticizes proposals by the consortium for seasonal maintenance and an unrealistic operating schedule, what was the degree of awareness on the part of the government of these concerns expressed by the U.S. department of the interior, and will the government be doing a follow up study on the particular items of contention expressed in the U.S. study to ensure correction of the inadequacies in the proposal as they apply to Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Perhaps I can deal with some of those points, Mr. Speaker, because they relate to the hearing which will be conducted before the National Energy Board. It is precisely for dealing with that kind of question that the law provides for a National Energy Board hearing. Indeed, the board would require the applicants to submit evidence in response to those kinds of criteria. I presume that my colleague will have drawn this to the attention of Mr. Justice Berger, if his Lordship has not already taken it into account. In addition, of course, these are precisely the questions upon which the applicants will have to satisfy the National Energy Board before the board would make any finding regarding the Mackenzie pipeline application, the hearing of which, as the hon. member knows, has not yet commenced.

Mr. Neil: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the pipeline people have submitted proposals to the United States and the U.S. department of the interior on its own has made a study. Does the government plan on doing a study of its own relating to this problem?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what the National Energy Board has been constituted to do.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

USE OF NORTHWEST PASSAGE BY UNITED STATES TANKERS—CONSULTATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I will direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the concern raised by the study, can the minister advise whether or not his department has yet had any kind of consultations with the U.S. state department regarding use of oil tankers in the Northwest Passage?

● (1410)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, consultations on that subject have been going on for quite sometime.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT PROMOTING POLAR PIPELINE ROUTE THROUGH MANITOBA

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Due to the difficulties being experienced with the Mackenzie Valley pipeline route, will the federal government now be concentrating more effort on promoting the polar gasline route through Manitoba, which the participants of Panarctic Oils Limited claim can be ready before the Mackenzie Valley route?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada does have an indirect interest in the polar gas route as a 45 per cent shareholder in Panarctic. I really cannot say at this point which of the two pipeline applications will first be completed. We will naturally continue to pursue with Panarctic, because of our interest in having a full assessment of the polar gas route, the possibility of having the study of the Polar gas route go ahead to completion. At this point the government has not taken a preference between one or other of the two possible pipeline routes.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO OBTAIN COPY OF UNITED STATES STUDY OF PROPOSAL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same minister. Given the probable consequences of the U.S. study on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, will the minister inform the House whether the government has already or plans to take steps to obtain from the United States the documentation and the final report of the study itself?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we provided the United States Department of the Interior with the Canadian documents which are in the public area regarding many of the questions dealt with in the report, so there already has been liaison between my department, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the United States concerning that study. Of course, we will be very interested in pursuing with the American authorities any elements which have not been covered by previous discussions. Regarding the energy part of the question, as I have said, there is a distinct responsibility under the National Energy Board Act to examine these very questions the Department of the Interior has been examining.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ENERGY BOARD STUDY WILL BE AS COMPREHENSIVE AS UNITED STATES STUDY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Given the comprehensiveness of the United States study, which is comprised of 17 volumes in its final form, will the minister assure the House that the Mackenzie study undertaken by the government through the National Energy Board will be at least as comprehensive as that done by the United States?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is the authority parliament has given the National Energy Board, and I think we can be confident that the board will examine all of these questions including gas availability, markets, safety and the environment, and that it will discharge its responsibilities in this regard.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—POSSIBILITY OF EXPERTS WHO PREPARED UNITED STATES STUDY APPEARING AS WITNESSES BEFORE BERGER COMMISSION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the United States has already completed its study in terms of this phase of the work—a very comprehensive study—I wonder whether the government would consider facilitating the attendance of a number of experts who prepared that report for the United States study as witnesses before the Berger Commission?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad, as I am sure my colleague would, to hear from Mr. Justice Berger in this regard whether this would be of assistance. I might add that there was, of course, nearly $50 million expended for studies prepared in relation to the Canadian route, and I think this is possibly one of the reasons it has been indicated that the Canadian route was better documented than the El Paso route.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO PROTESTS FROM P.L.O. ON POSTPONEMENT OF CRIME CONFERENCE IN TORONTO

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can the minister tell the House if there are any new developments with regard to the PLO, in view of their protests against the fact that the crime conference will not be held in Toronto, next September, as previously planned?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received any protest from the PLO.

INQUIRY AS TO UNITED NATIONS DECISION ON REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF CRIME CONFERENCE IN TORONTO

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is my understanding that the UN Committee on Conferences was meeting this morning to come to a conclusion regarding the Canadian request to postpone the conference in Toronto in September. I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to let the House and the public know what was the conclusion of that committee and what the attitude of the government now is in respect of that determination?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Conferences I believe met for the third time this morning, and will meet tomorrow afternoon. No final conclusions have been reached, although there has been a developing consensus in favour of not postponing the conference and holding it in another venue in September, but no final decision has been made as yet.

ALLEGATION ARGENTINA DIVERTED PLUTONIUM WASTE FROM NUCLEAR POWER STATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask him what action Canada has taken in light of the report by United States intelligence sources that Argentina has diverted some 50 kilograms of plutonium waste from its Atucha atomic power station, an amount sufficient to produce five atomic bombs. What attitude is the Government of Canada taking in respect of this?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our attitude with regard to the question of nuclear proliferation is conditioned by our effort to secure with Argentina the most rigid safeguards possible. As the hon. member knows we have not yet completed our bilateral discussion with Argentina. There are a number of outstanding items still to be determined which are in the process of negotiation.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary again for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am wondering whether the minister can tell us whether or not the Government of Canada has been in consultation with the Government of the United States and whether in fact it is true that Argentina has diverted this amount of plutonium from one of its stations so that it could in fact, build atomic bombs.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in general, of course, Canada and the United States as part of the exporter group have been consulting generally on these questions, but on this particular point I would have to check and will do so.

FUNDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRESS OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources further to questions I posed to him yesterday. I wonder whether he is in a position now to give me an up-to-date report on the activities of the Fundy Tidal Power Review Committee.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The report is not very precise, except to say that the federal-provincial study on the development of the Bay of Fundy tidal power is moving ahead under the supervision of the Bay of Fundy Tidal Power Review Board. Current activity is with regard to settlement of a specific investigation and study program, and it is expected that the new studies will be completed within the deadline envisaged in the September 1974 report summary on the question.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the minister will take some time during the recess—which will come later today—to visit Nova Scotia and derive some of the benefits that were available to his forefathers down there. I wonder whether, during that visit, he would take some time to come into Amherst and look at the maritime resources management services which are sponsored by the Council of Maritime Premiers and look at the facilities they have there as well as take a look at Springhill and what is available there in the way of coal for the development of new coal mines. I would be happy to make the arrangements for him if he would be willing to co-operate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am most obliged to the hon. gentleman. My plans include a rather broader perspective of the whole estuary rather than a visit to Amherst, but I will certainly consider whether it might be possible to arrange visits there as well as visits to be made to Cape Breton Island, Saint John and Eastport, and to include this matter as well in my studies.

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL COMMUNICATIONS—SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF POLICY ON BILINGUALISM—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. On May 28 I directed a question to the Minister of Transport concerning the BILCOM report on air traffic control communications which did not receive the support of the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association. The minister stated that when he had reviewed all the representations which are of any value he would see what kind of policy the government would design in that field. In view of the fact that almost two months have passed since this promise was made, and in the interest of safety, will the minister either place geographical restrictions on unilingual pilots or provide them with English language training so that they can communicate with ground stations in controlled air space?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the air division of my department met with the Pilots Association and discussed the whole matter. A ruling was made. Unfortunately, I do not have it with me here but I can let the hon. member know exactly what the understanding was.

● (1420)

Mr. Crouse: I have one brief supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the policy is announced by the minister, would he assure the House that this policy will be forwarded to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for further evaluation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): When I give the hon. member the answer I will tell him exactly what we are discussing.

UNITED STATES QUOTAS ON BEEF—GOVERNMENT POLICY FOLLOWING EXPIRY OF QUOTAS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, one that I know he will want to answer in view of the importance of the issue and the possibility, however remote, that the House may recess within the next few days.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: Can the minister confirm a press report indicating that Canadian and U.S. negotiators have reached agreement or near agreement on the issues affecting agricultural trade between the two countries, and can he inform the House now whether the Canadian quotas on cattle and beef and the U.S. quotas on cattle, beef, hogs and pork will expire on August 11?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday in the House and also previously, that we would be making an announcement before August 12 explaining the current position, and we will do so.

UNITED STATES QUOTAS ON BEEF—EFFECT OF CANADIAN QUOTA ON EGGS FROM UNITED STATES ON NEGOTIATIONS CONCERNING BEEF TRADE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): In view of the number of press reports indicating congressional demands for U.S. retaliation in response to the recently imposed quotas on U.S. eggs coming into Canada, can the minister inform the House whether the egg issue has seriously complicated negotiations on the meat trade, and to what extent the Canadian negotiators have been able to convince their U.S. counterparts that the egg quotas were both necessary and consistent with our obligations under GATT?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure the hon. member knows better than to pay attention to press reports—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Watch that!

Mr. Whelan: —because some of the press reports have been most inaccurate. I sometimes wonder if the public has been informed at all about the talks that have been going on in a very congenial manner with our trading counterparts and about the position concerning retaliation with regard to eggs, etc. They seem to think the main concern is that Canada still wants to export eggs over there. I can tell the hon. member that our exports of eggs over there are mainly necessary because of their eggs coming here. We are not desirous of exporting eggs to the United States. If they want to put an embargo on our eggs coming into their country, that is perfectly all right by us.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Can he advise the House if it is correct that the Prime Minister, after hearing the news from Nigeria, has asked that the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of National Health and Welfare be sent to join him in Helsinki?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the idea never crossed his mind. This is the most united and loyal government that ever stood behind the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR QUEBEC TO COMPLETE ROAD NETWORK IN GASPÉ AND ÎLES-DE-LA-MADELEINE

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

As the special federal-provincial agreement for the economic development of the Lower St. Lawrence, Gaspé Peninsula and Îles-de-la-Madeleine area will soon expire, and as the funds made available to Quebec by the federal government for the reconstruction of the road network in that area have long since been exhausted, can the minister tell the House and the people of the area concerned whether the Quebec government has asked for additional funds from the federal government to complete those highways that are essential to the economic development of that important area of the country?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely certain whether there are actual, formal negotiations underway with regard to the portion of the highway to which the hon. member referred. I can tell him that in conversations with representatives of the government of Quebec, the matter of assistance for highway construction in the Gaspé was discussed in general terms. I will undertake to inquire from our officials in the province of Quebec as to whether these matters have now proceeded to the point where actual negotiations are under way.

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE COMPENSATION FOR CATTLE LOSSES RESULTING FROM BRUCELLOSIS AND TUBERCULOSIS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, now that he has finished paging through his briefing notes. In respect of reports coming from the meeting of the minister with the various provincial agriculture ministers, it is reported that the minister indicated that legislation will be introduced shortly which would provide for better compensation for farmers who suffer cattle losses from brucellosis. I would like to ask the minister when that legislation will be introduced and whether it will also include cattle losses due to TB.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think I can say that that is another erroneous press report.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Another?

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member who is being vocal should know because he used to write more than anyone else I know.

An hon. Member: Super bull strikes again.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I was right more often than you are.

Mr. Whelan: Amendments were presented in the House last October to the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and I said at the meeting to which the hon. member referred that if the provincial ministers of agriculture could persuade the members of the opposition and their leaders and if we could get unanimous consent to bring in the bill, it would be passed in as short a time as possible, and we could pay more compensation to the farmers as well as do all these other things.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Regardless of the rhetoric the minister wants to use, the farmers in my riding want to have answers about what the minister will do with respect to the cattle losses they are now suffering as a result of TB, and I ask the minister when that will—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Is he still suffering from foot and mouth disease?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Joe, put a zipper on it, will you?

Mr. Epp: I wonder if the hon. member for St. Boniface is also suffering from foot and mouth disease and wants compensation.

I ask the minister when that legislation will be brought forward and whether it will be an update—because present compensation is simply not in keeping with replacement costs—and whether that legislation will also include losses incurred as a result of loss of herds.

Mr. Whelan: The legislation covers all diseases under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and it covers TB. I heard what the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton said, and I think that the hon. member who asked the question should probably report him and he should be kept in quarantine.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

USE OF NORTHWEST PASSAGE BY UNITED STATES TANKERS—POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE TO PIPELINE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and it follows on the series of questions which began the question period relating to the use of the Arctic by United States icebreaker cargo vessels. Since the minister has indicated that he has been kept fully informed of the use of these vessels in the Arctic, can he tell us whether the Americans are planning to use the eastern route following the Manhattan route or the western route, and whether the Americans are planning the tanker icebreaker device as a supplement to the pipeline or as an alternative to the pipeline?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, they have not had any discussions with us about any of the alternatives mentioned.

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSION WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING USE OF HEAD HARBOUR PASSAGE BY TANKERS EN ROUTE TO EASTPORT, MAINE OR ALTERNATIVES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In the general question of oil pipelines and the American need for oil, another part of Canada has been deeply affected, and I am wondering whether the minister could let us know whether there have been any contacts by his department with the Pittston Company to see whether it is planning to send, without Canadian government consent or approval, tankers through the Head Harbour Passage to Eastport, Maine. Has the Canadian government any plans to prevent them from doing this?

● (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have made it clear that any such movement would be quite unacceptable to Canada. The environmental board in Maine, as I recollect the situation, authorized the Pittston Company officials to proceed with the oil terminal on the condition that certain permissions would be secured from Canada for the movement through Head Harbour Passage. To my knowledge the United States government has not spoken to us about these requirements of Pittston. I might say that if they did, the answer would still be that any such movement would be quite unacceptable because of the environmental hazards involved.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A final supplementary. In his discussions with the United States officials has the minister made any alternative suggestions, such as offloading in Lennoxville or St. John's and a pipeline from St. John's to Eastport, Maine. The government might as well be at least constructive.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we have not made specific proposals along those lines, although I believe in general terms we expressed interest in exploring alternatives with them. In the light of proceedings under way, we have not made specific proposals.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF STAMP TO COMMEMORATE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Some months ago, knowing his respect for the heritage of our country, I asked the minister to consider issuing a special stamp in 1976 to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Canada's famous and distinguished Royal Military College at Kingston. Is the minister in a position to tell the House if the anniversary will be suitably recognized by his department?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is quite correct in stating we have exchanged much correspondence on the subject and there has been a great deal of representation from other members of the House as well as the general public. I am pleased to announce that we will issue a stamp to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the Royal Military College.

COMMUNICATIONS

EFFECT OF SYMPOSIUM ON VIOLENCE ON TELEVISION OF HOLDING OF PUBLIC HEARING ON SUBJECT BY CRTC

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications and I am sorry I did not have an opportunity to give him notice. May I ask him if the planned symposium on violence on television which is to take place in Kingston next month, and is sponsored by the CRTC, means that the CRTC will not be holding public hearings on this very disturbing problem across the country. There is a great deal of concern about the question, especially in the light of the alleged connection with the growth of crimes of violence.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that this symposium excludes the possibility of the CRTC holding hearings. But to be more precise in my reply, I would have to refer the question before hand to the chairman of the CRTC.

AGRICULTURE

LEVY CHARGED ON MANUFACTURING MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture a question? He has had notice of it since last Thursday through the Acting Minister of Agriculture when I suppose the minister was unavoidably absent. Does the government intend that dairy farmers should bear the cost of deficits created as a result of the government's inefficient marketing methods pertaining to powdered milk?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the preamble to the hon. member's question. We have the most efficient pricing system available to industrial milk producers anywhere in the world. The agreement we are abiding by is one to which the producers agreed. I have said before in this House that I think it is unfair that we ask nobody else in society to take lesser incomes because of world conditions. We are trying very hard to work out a solution for our dairy farmers. I said last week we are still working with them to try to solve their problem concerning the export of skim milk powder. They are competing with the producers and treasuries in the countries of the European Community.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary. I should like to ask the minister why he has permitted a 100 per cent penalty levy on powdered milk for Canadian dairy farmers during the past year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Central Nova.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON—POSITION OF MINISTER OF LABOUR ON REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour who stated on July 16 that he would comment later concerning the resolution of the city of Hamilton demanding a full and open inquiry into Hamilton Harbour affairs. Does the minister intend to make a statement or give an answer today? Has "later on" now arrived?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I indicated a few days ago in Hamilton that, as the member of parliament for Hamilton East, I would recommend to my colleagues that they seriously consider a judicial inquiry if anyone in Hamilton, including city council, came up with any specific allegations of wrongdoing not already dealt with in the trial. I believe the city council is considering that matter now. I am sure that the hon. member, who asked questions in the House while the preliminary hearing was going on, will join with me and members of the Liberal Party in expressing satisfaction that the two federal appointees on the harbour commission, Mr. Hickey and Mr. Lanza were thoroughly exonerated by the judge in charge of the trial of Mr. Kenneth Elliott.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question. I thank the minister for his answer and I should like to ask him what prerequisites does he, as a member of parliament from Hamilton think the city has to do in view of their long standing request. What does he want?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member is aware that by our procedures he is not entitled to address questions to the hon. member for Hamilton East.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR ADMITTANCE OF GENERAL QUANG IN VIEW OF ALLEGED KNOWLEDGE OF CONSUL GENERAL MORIN OF CRIMINAL ACTIVITIES DURING INTERVIEW

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the startling revelation today that consul general Albert Morin had been apprised of General Dang Van Quang's background, including criminal activities, a full ten days before Quang was interviewed by Morin at Port Chaffey and in view of the fact that Mr. Morin informed the press and officials in Canada that he was not aware of Quang's criminal background, would the minister investigate how Quang was able to slip through when his criminal record was known to the vice consul? In view of the fact that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has enough information to deport Quang, the same information that Mr. Morin had when he met Quang, can the minister say whether Morin told Ottawa or was told by anybody in Ottawa to let him in regardless of his criminal background?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that a detailed question like that is proper for the question period, but if the minister wants to answer he may.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice. I think the information is probably in the possession of my colleague.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ALLEGED DUMPING OF STEEL IN NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Some days ago I raised the question of the alleged dumping of steel in the province of Nova Scotia and the drastic effect this would have on the already ailing steel industry. I wonder if the hon. Minister has anything further to add to what he said on this subject the other day?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Not really, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated to the hon. member the other day, my officials have been in touch with the two companies that might be concerned by the alleged dumping of steel. They want to determine whether these companies wished to lay a complaint under the anti-dumping act. If they so choose to do, my deputy minister, under the anti-dumping act, is statutorilly charged with the function of primarily determining whether there is a case for dumping, on which he would make a ruling. The matter would then be referred to the anti-dumping tribunal. As I indicated to the hon. member, I asked my officials to treat this as a matter of importance and urgency.

LEVY ON INDUSTRIAL MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Given that the purported reason for the increased levy on industrial milk is to support the export of powdered skim milk, and given that 20 per cent of all exports go to the United States, and another 20 per cent go to Cuba, does the government think it fair that farmers of Canada should be forced to go broke to support Canadian consumers who can surely look after themselves, and Cuban consumers who are already supported quite heavily with aid from Canada.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on the export market we are competing against world prices. The producers agreed to do that, that being part of the agreement we worked out with them. They are meeting the export world price, and meeting competition mainly from the European community, which dropped the price of skim milk powder since the first of the year by $300 or $400 a ton.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CHURCHILL RIVER POWER PROJECT—SUGGESTED RESIGNATION OF OFFICIALS WHO ALLEGEDLY FAILED TO PROTECT INDIAN LANDS

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and has to do with the hydro development project which will bring adverse affects to Nelson House in my province. As relations between the two levels of government have deteriorated to threats of lawsuits and counter threats of lawsuits, will the minister indicate to the House if he has asked for the resignation of all his top officials who either knew of the project and failed to take action to uphold the trusteeship of the federal government over those Indian reserve lands, or who did not know about those developments in Manitoba and ought to have known about them.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in reply to a question yesterday concerning this project, I do not share the hon. member's pessimism over the current situation between the government of Manitoba and the Government of Canada.

Mr. Whiteway: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Whether or not the minister agrees with my pessimism, I point out that I asked him a question. Has he asked for the resignation of those departmental officials who failed to take action to protect the rights of native peoples.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is obviously repeating the question which the minister has just answered.

POST OFFICE

REASON FOR DELAYS IN DELIVERY OF MAIL

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General and arises from the frustration of advertisers and business people living 35 miles from each other who kept a record for 90 days of postal service. The fastest delivery took one day, and the longest took 13 days, the average being five days. My question is this: Is this an internal problem, or can the minister give some explanation, so that business people may have available a mail service upon which they can depend and so that the time span between postage and delivery may be a uniform one.

[Mr. Ellis.]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I could help the hon. member in his frustration if he would be prepared to explain whether he is talking about first class, second class, third class, fourth class or bulk mail. Until I know his statistics, and compare them with those of the post office, there is not much I can say at this moment.

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the particular advertiser about whom I am speaking is spending $11,000 per year on stamps and since much of the mail is first class, I wonder if the minister would advise those who wish to have first class mail delivered within one day to post their mail five days in advance or, alternatively, could he talk to all 35 Liberals of the province of Alberta and have each of them jog a mile to deliver such mail?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman was really concerned about the problem of the advertiser in his constituency he would, instead of taking political advantage of the situation, call the post office and we should be glad to send him a marketing representative who would sit down with the gentleman and find out what is the exact problem. That is the responsible way of settling problems on behalf of constituents.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LONG RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—DATE OF DECISION ON SELECTION AS BETWEEN BOEING AND LOCKHEED

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Minister of National Defence issued a press release dated July 25, 1975, stating that the long range patrol aircraft proposals had been narrowed to two, one each from Lockheed and Boeing. Given the fact that this is exactly the same news as released by the Minister of National Defence on December 4, 1973, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House if this means that the concept of a mix containing Lockheeds, Boeings, plus some de Havilland DASH 7's has now been discarded?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I really cannot give the answer at present. I will have to take the question as notice. We made some advance in narrowing the options, but whether this particular one is still open I am not quite certain.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. The option, according to the press release dated December, 1973, was narrowed to two aircraft a year and a half ago. Can the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that the government will come to a firm decision at some future date and can he let us know the firm date on which the government will finally decide as between the Boeing and the Lockheed?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister said yesterday, one of the reasons we were unable to reach a decision at our recent meeting was that on almost the day before we had our meeting we obtained fresh proposals from some of those who are interested in undertaking the work. In the circumstances we felt it desirable to give all of these proposals further study.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REQUEST FOR DATES OF COMMITTEE MEETINGS AND NAMES OF WITNESSES TO BE HEARD

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. In view of the uncertainty surrounding the holding of future meetings of the standing committee, can the chairman indicate on what dates the committee proposes to meet and what witnesses it proposes to hear?

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe knows, there is no uncertainty whatever about the dates on which the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections is to meet. The steering committee had made its recommendation, and I will, accordingly, call meetings for August 11, 12, 13 and 14. In order, the witnesses appearing will be the learned parliamentary counsel, the representatives of the Gazette, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and several witnesses whose names appeared in the Gazette articles. They will appear on the fourteenth, the Thursday of that week.

POSSIBILITY MINISTER OF FINANCE WILL APPEAR AS WITNESS—INQUIRY AS TO CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MINISTER AND MEMBER FOR KENORA-RAINY RIVER

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister be willing to appear before the committee. Second, has he ascertained whether there was any correspondence between himself and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River between the dates in May and November, that is, between the two budget dates. If so, will he table the correspondence in the House, as I requested him to do on July 25.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am at the disposal of any committee of the House of Commons, at their request—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are at their disposal, but not disposable.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the second part of the question is that we have searched our records and there is no correspondence between the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and myself between the dates of the May and the November budgets relating to the matter involved in this inquiry.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF BILL RELATING TO HONG KONG AND EUROPEAN PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Will the minister consider tabling, before the House rises for its recess, the government's bill implementing the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs with respect to Canadian prisoners of war, both Hong Kong and European?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel, judging by rumours on Parliament Hill, that I probably will not have time to do this. The presentation of the committee was made available to parliament a few weeks ago. There has not been enough time to work on it. It is being prepared for presentation to cabinet. If the House rises at the time predicted, I do not think I will have time to do what the hon. member asks.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If there is not time for the minister to present the bill before we recess, can he tell us today if the government has accepted the recommendations of the standing committee?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, the matter will go through the proper procedure, and when I have the information to that effect, I will be glad to let the House know.

INVITATION TO MINISTER TO VISIT MONCTON RIDING TO STUDY PROBLEMS OF THE AREA

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): In view of the fact that there are several matters concerning the hon. gentleman's department concerning which I am trying to get responsible action, would the Postmaster General undertake to come to the Moncton riding during the coming recess so that the communities concerned can meet with the Postmaster General to get his reaction to the situation.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Like all cabinet ministers I shall not be having a recess.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Mackasey: However, I would be awfully happy to go to Moncton at the earliest opportunity for a variety of reasons, not all of them connected with the Post Office.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MR. L'ALLIER THAT SUPREME COURT BIASED AGAINST QUEBEC—REQUEST MINISTER ANSWER ALLEGATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): In view of the fact there may be a recess some time this summer or this fall, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. It arises from comments at a Liberal pow-wow of the minister of communications in Quebec attributing bias to the Supreme Court of Canada, and since the minister of communications is a Liberal I wondered, since the Supreme Court of Canada cannot defend itself, whether the Minister of Justice has had a chance to look at the remarks of the hon. Mr. L'Allier and discuss this with the premier of Quebec so that something can be put on the record to clarify the situation, or will the minister use the opportunity of the Canadian Bar meetings to be held in Quebec City this fall to say something about this question?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I have not yet had a chance to see the remarks in question. Certainly, the press reports indicate that it would be worth emphasizing the value, quality and independence of the Supreme Court. But I do not think I would want to comment further without seeing the actual remarks.

Mr. Nowlan: I have not seen the program of the Canadian Bar which is meeting in Quebec City this fall, but ordinarily the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister is one of the main speakers at that convention. Does the minister think it is important enough, if there is not a forum in which to say something before then, for the hon. gentleman or the Prime Minister to make that one of his main points at the Canadian Bar meeting and if this is really a point in the minister's mind which is causing a problem between the ministers of communication of the country shouldn't this be clarified so that the stalemate might be resolved?

Mr. Lang: The hon. member is wrong in thinking that such a speech is ordinarily made at the Canadian Bar. That does happen from time to time, but I am sure the hon. member does not really mind very much in which forum such a statement will be made.

SUGGESTED SENDING TO MR. L'ALLIER OF COPIES OF SUPREME COURT DECISIONS UPHOLDING PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Would the minister of Justice consider sending to Mr. L'Allier copies of decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada over the years which have upheld provincial jurisdiction in all the provinces because this is an extremely important matter having regard to the position of the court in our constitutional system?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): If the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has a spare set of the Supreme Court reports that he would like to see shipped, and is willing to give them, I might be able to arrange the freight.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I will get them for you.

Mr. Nowlan: Where's your leadership?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REASON FOR SHORTAGE OF HOME CANNING SUPPLIES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to address my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, his presence having been promised us yesterday; I do not know whether the Postmaster General is still acting for him today. Can the minister provide some explanation of the acute shortage of home canning supplies, particularly wide mouth jar lids being experienced in South Central British Columbia and elsewhere and, if so, what steps are being taken to overcome the shortage?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was quite honest in my remarks yesterday in saying the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was unavoidably absent because of illness. He telephoned this morning to tell me that this illness makes it impossible for him to be here today. I know that this subject is one of continuing interest to the hon. member and that he first brought it to the attention of the minister many months ago. I imagine there has been an intensive study of the position, and I am sure my colleague will be glad to turn it over to the hon. member as soon as he returns.

AGRICULTURE

LEVY ON INDUSTRIAL MILK—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL PROGRAM TO DEAL WITH PROBLEM

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture; it is supplementary to others which have been asked in the House. In view of the continuing concern which has been expressed by members on this side of the House and by milk producers, industrial producers in particular, and having some appreciation of the problem the minister faces with reference to this situation, I ask the minister, if he does not intend to amend the present dairy policy, and I appreciate the difficulty in that regard, whether he will discuss the possibility of producing a special program to cope with this situation in co-operation with his cabinet colleagues—I have in mind the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): We have already had meetings with the dairy industry and with one of the provincial dairy organizations. We have discussed all the pros and cons of what can be done. I have never at any time said I thought that what they were being subjected to was fair. They realize the position they are in. They have made suggestions and we are considering those suggestions. We have made some ourselves for consideration, but as to what will come of this, we shall have to be a little patient and wait and see what is going to happen. It is a problem which is not easy to solve. It is a condition which did not exist last year but exists this year. I may say, in all honesty, that I do not think the condition which exists is going to be a long term condition.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRAFFIC COMMUNICATIONS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO UNILATERAL ACTION ON BILINGUALISM

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one which was put to the Minister of Transport by the hon. member for South Shore. In view of a statement made by the Canadian Airline Pilots Association on behalf of seven major Canadian aviation associations to the effect that the very concept of bilingual air traffic services should be rejected because of the inherent degradation of safety standards due to the possibility of misunderstanding, will the minister assure the House that the government will not take any unilateral action which would jeopardize complete and rapid comprehension of all communications by all pilots so as to ensure passenger safety?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. How did Canada vote at the International Women's Year Conference in Mexico City on a resolution condemning Zionism?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that technically the question is directed to the hon. parliamentary secretary through the Minister of Health.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Canadian delegation, in Committee I as well as in the plenary sessions, any time the word "Zionism" was put into a clause or an attempt was made to do so, voted with Israel against any inclusion of the word.

Mr. Paproski: Why did Canada abstain rather than vote "No"?

I am pleased to report that a further steering committee meeting was held at 12 noon today, at which time four standing committee meetings of the privileges and elections committee were arranged and witnesses proposed. I believe that my point of privilege which I intended to raise is no longer necessary, and I hope that in future we will not have the frustration that we went through last night with the chairman using a double vote.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BEATTY—LOGGING OF MEMBERS' LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CALLS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the rights and privileges of all members of parliament. On July 17 I wrote you expressing my concern over a newspaper report that the government had contracted with Bell Canada for a computerized device that will log the source, time, date, duration and, most important, the destination of long distance telephone calls made over the government's leased lines.

At the time I wrote you it was unclear whether these devices could be used to log calls made from the offices of members of parliament or from the press gallery. This morning my office was able to confirm with the government telecommunications agency that long distance telephone calls made by members of parliament over the direct inter-city lines may indeed be logged. It is for that reason that I rise now to raise this question of privilege at the earliest possible opportunity.

The facts of the case are as follows. This June the Department of Communications contracted with Bell Canada for traffic data service for the 35,000 line government telephone system in the national capital region at a cost of $1.5 million. The contract is for a duration of five years, beginning last month. What the equipment does is to log calls being placed on the inter-city lines in order to provide departments with information they can use to prevent improper use of the leased lines by government employees. As I indicated earlier, it will record the source, date, duration, time and destination of calls made over the leased lines. My understanding is that such a system is already in effect in Vancouver and Edmonton, and is also being considered for other centres.

I should stress that this system does not listen in on calls in any way; what it does is to record vital information about the nature of the calls, including the telephones from which calls are placed and those to which they are placed.

The implications of this new program for our ability to discharge our responsibilities as members of parliament are serious. One of the most basic principles in a representative democracy is that citizens should be able to talk freely with their representatives about confidential matters, and this new computerized equipment will give the government the ability to log calls made legally and properly between a member of parliament and a citizen of this country. The installation of this equipment thus represents a substantial new encroachment upon the rights and privileges of all members of parliament.

If your Honour finds that I have a prima facie case of privilege, then I would propose to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark):

That this House instructs the government to program its telephone logging equipment not to record the destination of calls made from the offices of members of parliament on the government's leased inter-city telephone lines.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) is anxious to make an intervention, but before he does so may I inform the House that upon receipt of the letter to which the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) referred in his remarks I asked that an investigation be commenced. My preliminary reports are reassuring in respect to the nature of this equipment that is involved; however, they are only in the nature of preliminary reports.

My proposal is to reserve on this question and hold it over for whatever recess does take place, and when the investigation for which I asked is completed the hon. member will see a copy of the report. Then other hon. members might have an opportunity to consider it at a later time. If any member of the House is not entirely satisfied with respect to the nature of the equipment and any dangers involved in it in regard to the protection of privacy, the matter can stand over until that time for further determination of whether or not it should be referred to one of the standing committees of the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to point out the existence—which I already knew—of the inquiry recommended by your Honour, and the fact that the hon. member has a rather dangerous way of using words. For instance, when he was speaking of that equipment as revealing the nature of a telephone call, I fail to understand what he means; he is using words in a very, very dangerous way. He spoke about the nature of the calls, insisting that the word nature did not mean contents. But what is the nature if not the contents? Then he went on to say that members of Parliament must be free to receive confidential calls. Confidentiality has nothing to do in the present circumstances. I wanted to suggest what you have just suggested yourself, your Honour, that the inquiry actually take place and that such abuse of vocabulary be avoided in the meantime, otherwise an overall commotion may occur throughout the country for nothing at all. This may happen now and again, but it should not be an every day occurrence.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I thank both hon. members for their intervention. I have indicated that I will take the matter under consideration and ask that a further report be given to me. When I receive it I will send both the minister and the hon. member a copy. The matter will be held over for further discussion at a later date.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a brief point of order relating to the way that the Minister of Labour answered my question. I feel that he has, inadvertently I am sure, brought in extraneous, non-collateral matters. Although he is extremely sensitive on this matter, I would point out to him and to Your Honour that the trial to which he referred at Hamilton concerned specific criminal charges against persons whose names are well known, not respecting the general administration but facilities involving the port. I say to the minister, with all respect, even keeping in mind his reluctance to call an inquiry into the SIU, which was later justified, that he should welcome a judicial inquiry, where people could have a little more assurance than his own self-serving protestations about how good things are in Hamilton.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is distinguishing himself in this House for his indecency in casting innuendoes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is not a reputation that I think, over the long haul, he is going to enjoy, among even the members of his own particular party. I made reference to the total exoneration of Mr. Hickey and Mr. Lanza because the hon. member himself, and others, I think improperly, at the time raised questions during the preliminary hearing, by implication, indicating some wrong doing on this side of the House. It was impossible to answer the hon. member at that time because I myself, or others who might have attempted to answer, might have been in contempt of court. To take the position that he did, knowing that the people against whom he was casting innuendoes could not properly answer or defend themselves, I believe was disgraceful conduct, and I still believe it. I believe that the hon. member who has just risen is guilty of that kind of conduct.

Mr. Baldwin: Make a charge.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Both hon. members have now contributed to a point which was raised as a point of order in the first place. In fact it is a complaint about, or disagreement with the answer the minister initially either gave or failed to give at the time the question was put. As such it is not a valid point of order in the first instance. This simply points out the continuing difficulty that arises when the Chair permits hon. members to carry on points of order or privilege which are not even valid or prima facie. They only evoke a response from the other side which frequently contributes to further disorder in the House, and which ought to stop before it goes too far.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, without wanting to protract my comments with respect to the problem I have just raised, the minister, for some reason, I think inadvertently, clouded the issue. I stress again that I did not in any way suggest that the government was listening in on telephone calls. What I said was that it recorded vital information respecting the nature of the calls, including the telephones from which the calls were made and the telephones to which they were made. That is very different from recording the contents. What it does is allow the government if it wants, to determine who we have been calling on government telephone lines.

● (1510)

An hon. Member: How do you find out the name if you don't know the content?

An hon. Member: You just don't understand the English language.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest respect to the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty), in view of what the minister was raising I think this does cause some confusion. In order to have this understood I think it ought to be perfectly clear that the hon. member at one point said, and this is certainly my understanding, that the equipment is not capable of recording anything or listening to the content of a call.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Speaker: The question which has been raised, and the hon. member repeated the words, and was good enough to give me a copy of his notes, is that what it does is record vital information about the nature of the call. I take it from that that the hon. member really means information such as the origin, destination, and duration, but not the content.

Mr. Beatty: That is correct.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take much time of the House, but I do want to say to you, Sir, that I challenge the Minister of Labour, who has just imputed several motives to me, suggesting that I was being disgraceful in my conduct in this House and so on, to check Hansard carefully and show me and the House any questions which I asked concerning the hon. member for Hamilton East, or involving him or anyone else in this House, which were not accurate and true but were malicious and misleading in any way. I would also ask him to point out any of those questions which I asked that were ruled out of order by the Chair.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 2,561, 2,573, 2,777, 2,780, 2,815, 2,855, 2,868, 2,881, 2,901 and 2,916.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Order Paper Questions

DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,561—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Department of the Environment for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. The total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates for the Department of the Environment for language training are nil. However $777,700 was provided from Treasury Board (Vote 15) for language training.

2. (a) Nil; (b) nil; (c) nil; (d) $777,700 for persons replacing employees on continuous language training.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,573—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Post Office Department for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): 1. $1,635,599.

2. (a) Salaries of personnel receiving instruction are not included in the above figure since they are covered in the budget relating to their own activity. (b) and (c) Salaries of instructional staff are covered in the provision of $500,000 within the foregoing figure for the purchase of instructional services from the Public Service Commission. (d) Other costs amount to $1,135,599, made up of $541,899 for salaries of those involved in the administration of the Official Languages Program, $420,000 for travel by personnel under instruction, $30,000 for administrative travel, $100,600 for training equipment and training aids and $43,100 for miscellaneous expenses.

REPAYMENT FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY FLOODING IN QUEBEC

Question No. 2,777—Mr. Lefebvre:

1. During the fiscal year 1974-75, what was the total amount claimed in repayment for damages caused by flooding in (a) the Province of Quebec (b) the Constituency of Pontiac (c) each municipality in the Constituency of Pontiac?

2. Of the total amount claimed in the Constituency of Pontiac, what was the amount of money and the number of claims accepted for reimbursement under the federal-provincial agreement for (a) individuals (b) provincial government (c) provincial government agencies (d) municipal governments (e) school boards (f) business and manufacturing establishments (g) any other group?

3. Of the total amount accepted for payment in the Province of Quebec under the federal-provincial agreement, what amount will be provided by the (a) government (b) provincial government?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. The federal government has offered to share the cost of assistance provided by the Province of Quebec to the victims of the 1974 flood. The offer of assistance was in accordance with the terms and conditions of the federal disaster assistance program, under which the federal government assumes a share of the actual costs incurred by the province. The Province of Quebec's claim for the federal share of cost covering the 1974 flood is now in the final stages of preparation, and we expect to receive this claim in the very near future.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK—OUTSTANDING LOANS MADE IN NORTHEASTERN ONTARIO

Question No. 2,855—Mr. Blais:

1. What is the total amount of outstanding loans made by the Industrial Development Bank in Northeastern Ontario in offices served by the Northern Ontario district office in Sault Ste-Marie?

2. What is the total amount of outstanding loans administered by the Sudbury office of the Industrial Development Bank and, how many were made in the judicial district of Nipissing?

3. What percentage of loans made by the Sudbury office during the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74, were advanced to borrowers carrying on business in the district of Nipissing?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. At March 31, 1975 IDB had $44,151,000 outstanding in loans, investments, and guarantees to 1,279 customers in the Northern Ontario District. In the six months ended Marc 31, 1975 IDB approved 222 loans for a total amount of $7,836,000 to borrowers in Northern Ontario District.

2. The IDB does not publish in its annual report or in periodic press releases information concerning its lending activities by branches or by judicial districts.

3. The IDB does not publish in its annual report or in periodic press releases information concerning its lending activities by branches or by judicial districts.

NATIONAL REVENUE—INVESTIGATION OF ORGANIZATION OF SCIENTOLOGY

Question No. 2,868—Mr. Brisco:

Was the organization of Scientology investigated by the Department of National Revenue and, if so, what were the findings?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Customs and Excise: On December 30, 1970, the Department's Customs Tariff Division ruled that the Church of Scientology was entitled to import goods free of duty under tariff item 69605-1. Tariff item 69605-1 provides for the importation of numerous products when for the use of any society or institution incorporated or established solely for religious, educational, scientific and certain other purposes. In 1974 the matter was reviewed and on December 19, 1974 a ruling was issued which withdrew the privileges of tariff item 69605-1 inasmuch as the Church of Scientology was not considered to be solely a religious institution. Taxation: Under the secrecy provision of the Income Tax Act, the Department is unable to provide the information requested.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP SAVINGS PLANS

Question No. 2,881—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. For the 1974 taxation year, how many individual tax filers claimed deductions from personal income tax for contributions to Registered Homeownership Savings Plans and what was the total amount claimed?

2. For Canada and for each province, how many individual tax filers claimed deductions and what was the total amount claimed by (a) income group (i) under $5,000 (ii) $5,000-$9,999 (iii) $10,000-$14,999 (iv) $15,000-$19,999 (v) $20,000-$24,999 (vi) $25,000-$49,999 (vii) over $50,000 (b) age group (i) under 20 (ii) 20-30 (iii) 31-40 (iv) 41-50 (v) 51-60 (vi) over 60?

3. How many individual tax filers claimed deductions and what was the total amount claimed, by type of financial institution dealt with (chartered banks, life insurance, trust or mortgage companies)?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): The information requested is not available at the present time as Registered Home Ownership Savings Plans are a new deduction for 1974. A detailed analysis of this item will not be made until all 1974 tax returns are processed.

AIRPORT SECURITY PROGRAMME

Question No. 2,901—Mr. Forrestall:

Will the $.5 million cutback in the Airport Security Programme affect the employment in Atlantic Canada of any members of the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires and, if so, in what locations?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): It is not anticipated that the $.5 million cutback in the Airport Security Programme will affect the employment of any members of the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires in Atlantic Canada.

INVESTIGATION OF BOOKS OF AIR CANADA AND CNR BY AUDITOR GENERAL

Question No. 2,916—Mr. Mazankowski:

Will the expansion of the Office of the Auditor General and the investigation by Judge Estey of the financial structure of Air Canada lead the Minister of Transport to consider amending the CNR Act to permit the Auditor General to investigate annually the books of Air Canada and CNR?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Until Mr. Estey's enquiry has been completed and his recommendations made and studied, we will not proceed with any specific action on matters within Mr. Estey's jurisdiction.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, on June 20 I placed on the order paper, a very simple but obviously embarrassing question to the government, question No. 2833 as follows:

1. How many consultants were hired by the Fisheries and Marine Service, Department of the Environment, in the past two years?

2. (a) What were their names and salaries (b) what was their length of employment?

3. Were public tenders called before they were hired?

Because over a month has passed since that very simple question was placed on the order paper, it seems to me that the government could provide an answer, and I wish it would do so soon as I should like to have that information.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I too rise on a similar question of privilege in that all the questions answered today were asked at a period of time after one I asked, the answer to which is certainly within the knowledge of the Prime Minister. It pertains to potential conflicts of interest on the part of members of his cabinet. For the life of me I cannot understand why the question has not been answered before now. If this is the last day of the session and that question is permitted to die on the order paper, I warn the hon. member right now that it will be asked again in many more ways than that single way.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I very rarely abuse the House with this kind of a question of privilege having to do with a question on the order paper. I have had one question on the order paper since January 22. The answers involved will be very relevant to the royal commission inquiry on railways in western Canada this fall. The parliamentary secretary would do all of western Canada a favour if he would ascertain what has happened to that question. Since it is the twelfth oldest question on the order paper and the only one standing in my name, I would appreciate if the hon. member would advise when it will be answered.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I too very seldom rise to ask when answers will be given to questions I have placed on the order paper. On November 25, 1974, I placed the following question on the order paper, to which I have not yet received an answer:

1. Does Power Corporation have any direct or indirect interest in exploration, importation, sale or transmission of any energy resource and, if so, what aspects and what resources?

2. Does the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have a direct or indirect interest by trust, family, or corporate device in Power Corporation or in any corporation providing capital of any kind in these areas and, if so, what is the nature of his holdings?

This question, which has been on the order paper since November and to which I have not yet received an answer, is extremely important to our conduct as opposition members in this House.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I just want to assure hon. members who have made representations that I will undertake to get a progress report on their questions. I am sure that all hon. members will be interested to know that a total of 83 per cent of the questions on the order paper have been answered to date.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, July 28, consideration in committee of Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Penner in the chair.

On Clause 5 as amended.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose last evening Clause 5 as amended was under consideration, with an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and the hon. member for Nickel Belt had the floor.

Excise Tax Act

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, to recap what we were doing last evening let me say that my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, had introduced an amendment.

An hon. Member: Oh, no; not again.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I realize that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was not in the House all day yesterday so I will have to repeat what I said.

Last evening the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre introduced an amendment to Clause 5 which asks that the rebate be extended to workers who must use their cars to go to and from work. In responding last evening the Minister of Finance pointed out in effect that it was essential to his program that no rebate be given to workers who must use their cars to go to and from work.

One of the interesting comments the minister made at that time was to the effect that one aim of Bill C-66 was to change the lifestyle of Canadians, dissuading them from using their cars for what he called luxurious travel. At the time I asked whose lifestyle would be changed by the bill. Certainly it would not force the rich to conserve energy because they can jolly well afford to continue to drive the largest cars possible, for any purpose whatsoever. Therefore no change will result in the lifestyle of the rich.

I also pointed out at the time that the government must maintain some credibility in the eyes of the electorate or the people the government governs. When the Canadian people see members of the cabinet sitting in the backs of great big limousines being driven from the Centre Block to the Confederation Building they lose confidence in respect of government credibility. This is not credibility in the eyes of the Canadian consumer.

The minister suggested last evening, in his reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that people should get involved in car pools. I do not see ministers getting involved in all kinds of car pools.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has now expired.

Mr. Rodriguez: Could I get an extension?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)) negatived: Yeas, 22; nays, 51.

● (1520)

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment negatived. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I rise to—

[The Deputy Chairman.]

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: No, Sir. I am rising to continue discussion on Clause 5 and to move an amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: I regret, but the hon. member for Victoria was to be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we are in committee of the whole; you recognized me and I have the floor. Are you taking it away from me?

The Deputy Chairman: I recognized the hon. member, having the impression he was rising on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, on a further point of order may I say I at no time said "point of order". I rose because you recognized me. I proceeded to speak. I was not rising on a point of order. You have no grounds to assume I was rising on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has no intention to enter into a debate with the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. The Chair rose to ask whether the hon. member was rising on a point of order. The hon. member for Victoria.

Mr. McKinnon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I can only say to my hon. friend from Regina-Lake Centre that if he had been recognized I probably would have risen on a point of order because I have been waiting for several days, through several New Democratic Party amendments, for an opportunity to move my amendment. I shall not take up a great deal of the time of the House. I should like first to state my amendment. I have copies of it. I have had some difficulty because, having had the amendment prepared, I was somewhat discomfited by the Minister of Finance producing an amendment which made some difference in the numbering of the paragraphs. I have had it redrafted, with the help of the finest legal advice I can obtain free of charge in this House. The amendment is as follows:

That Bill C-66, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act, be amended in Clause 5 by

(a) striking out 'or' at the end of line 31 and adding 'or' at the end of line 36 on page 2 thereof;

(b) adding immediately after line 36 on page 2 the following:

(f) a person for the purpose of commuting between his residence and place of employment, where such person is unable by reason of physical disability to commute conveniently by another means.

(c) striking out lines 9 and 10 on page 3 thereof and substituting the following therefor:

the expressions 'commercial or business purposes' and 'physical disability' shall have much meaning as the

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you will realize that as time went on it became more and more difficult to keep track of the amendments. I introduced into my consideration the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre which has just been dealt with, and the other amendment, and I now again have a newly revised version of my amendment. I therefore move:

That Bill C-66, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act, be amended in clause 5, as amended, by

(a) striking out 'or' at the end of line 31 and adding 'or' at the end of sub-para. (g) thereof;

(b) adding after sub-para. (g) on page 2 the following:

(h) a person for the purpose of commuting between his residence and place of employment, where such person is unable by reason of physical disability to commute conveniently by another means.

(c) striking out lines 9 and 10 on page 3 thereof and substituting the following therefor:

the expressions 'commercial or business purposes' and 'physical disability' shall have such meaning as the

That is the amendment I should like to see adopted. I spoke on this subject twice previously during this debate. The simple thrust of the amendment is that handicapped people would receive rebates in the same manner as some other people. I am aware that the minister in paragraph (g) of his amendment included the following:

a person of such other class of persons as the Governor in Council may by regulation prescribe,

This may or may not relate to handicapped people. I leave it to the discretion of the Chair and the House, but I ask for very careful consideration of this amendment. I do not see why handicapped people, at a very small cost to the government, could not be included in this. It is important to these people that they have the support of the community. I ask, and would be most grateful for, the support of the House in respect of this amendment.

● (1530)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have a good deal of sympathy with what the hon. member has said. He referred to the clause which was reinserted as a result of reconciling the bill with the ways and means motion in subparagraph (g) which he recited, in paragraph (a) of Clause 5. I can give the hon. member an undertaking that I will seek out ways of achieving what he wants to achieve. I prefer to do it by regulation because of the wide variety of circumstances involved, because of the necessity of establishing the availability of transportation, and because of the necessity of establishing how we determine who is and who is not handicapped, which is difficult to do when you have a bland statement, if I may say so, in a statute, and also because of the difficulty of defining, for instance, such words as "commute conveniently" and other such language in the proposed amendment. These are difficulties which are anticipated, and the matter can be dealt with more flexibly and more to the hon. gentleman's liking, and also meet his purpose better than if it were put in the statute.

Having given him this undertaking, I gather the hon. member has the choice of either pursuing his amendment or of relying on my determination to achieve what he wants to achieve by regulation under this clause.

Mr. McKinnon: I am very pleased with the words of the Minister of Finance. It was precisely to enable the governor in council to define the meaning of those words that I thought they should be part of an amendment which applied to page three of the bill, which gives the governor in council the right to define the phrases "commercial or business purposes" and "physical disability". The only reservation I have about taking the word of the Minister of Finance is, of course, the uncertainty of the cabinet positions. I accept his word on almost anything, but there are others on the other side in whom I would not place so much trust, unfortunately. However, I do thank the minister, and perhaps any speakers who care to follow me might care to express an opinion on this matter. At present I appear to be in a "no lose" situation. I can either lose the amendment or have the minister break his given word to me.

I certainly accept the word of the minister that handicapped people will be allowed to get rebates if it is on the clear understanding that people generally known as handicapped, who have special provisions made to get to work and back, may claim a rebate. If that is so, it will be quite acceptable to me.

The Deputy Chairman: May I inquire of the hon. member for Victoria whether he wishes to proceed with the debate on this amendment or seek leave of the committee to have the amendment withdrawn?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to make it perfectly clear that there are many variables in what the hon. member is trying to achieve. There is the definition of handicapped, there is the nature of the transportation which is eligible or not eligible for a rebate, there is the availability of substitute transportation, there is the purpose of transportation, and so on. I will attempt to incorporate all this into the regulations, if that could be achieved, to meet the requirements so far as possible, but the variety of situations is immense.

So far as possible I will try to meet the purpose of his amendment, but I think that no one can give him a guarantee. What I say as Minister of Finance binds the government, but no one can guarantee that the full blanket purpose he wants can be achieved because of the variety of situations which exists. However, I will do my best to try to reconcile the variables inherent in the situation.

Mr. McKinnon: In view of the promise which I believe I have from the Minister of Finance, I will accept the minister's undertaking and withdraw my amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member have leave of the committee to withdraw the amendment he proposed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. McKinnon) withdrawn.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I regret the fact that the hon. member has withdrawn his excellent amendment. The minister has said that there might be difficulty in defining the word "handicapped". Surely that is not an argument. The Minister of National Health and Welfare and all provincial ministers can tell the Minister of Finance what the definition of "handicapped" is, and so can the Welfare Council of Canada and the people who administer the Canada Pension Plan. This reminds me of the kind of advice President Nixon received regarding the disadvantaged and black people in the United States, that is, "let us treat them with benign neglect".

We should not have had to ask the government to include something in this legislation that should be obvious. The handicapped should automatically be entitled to a full rebate, whether they are driving for pleasure, driving to work, or driving for any other purpose. The government wants to chisel a few cents a gallon from paraplegics and people suffering from multiple sclerosis.

If the Liberals were true Liberals they would not need to be asked for such a provision. No member of the House should have had to move such an amendment. It should have been in the legislation. But oh, the cabinet, these benign fellows, these benevolent people, will do it by order in council and will define who is handicapped and who is not handicapped, whether they are driving a car or travelling by bus. The few tens of thousands of people in this country who are handicapped should be automatically precluded from paying the tax—they should be getting the full rebate.

I have a letter from a senior official in a branch of the government of Saskatchewan. He is a full time employee, a paraplegic who drives a specially equipped car. He is driving his car in contravention of this bill. He drives to work five days a week, twice a day. He is not entitled to a rebate. That would be in contravention of this legislation. The minister says he will give an undertaking to consider the situation. That is very nice and very big of him. Big deal! He gives an undertaking to consider this. I would think he should have moved his own amendment to the legislation. This shows the inadequacy of his dummy advisers on this legislation.

I am sorry the hon. member for Victoria has withdrawn his amendment. This is so obvious that it should be part and parcel of the law, not part and parcel of the benign neglect or benign consideration or benevolence of the cabinet. I will move an amendment, Mr. Chairman. I move:

That Clause 5, as amended, be amended by adding to subclause (c) immediately after the word "purposes", the words: "or a person who is handicapped,"

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Chairman, I certainly did not intend to take up more time of the House on this matter. In my opinion the House can only operate when both sides co-operate. If the Minister of Finance tells me that it would make it easier to leave it to his discretion to define exactly what a handicapped person is and what commute means, I am willing to accept his word as a gentleman and as minister of the Crown. For that reason I intend to vote against the amendment of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre because I have confidence that the Minister of Finance will bring this in.

● (1540)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a very brief comment on the amendment. I intended to do so on the amendment of my colleague, the hon. member for Victoria, and I would just like the minister to add to the very generous, real, and honest undertaking he has given, a provision to the effect that it will not just be persons who are handicapped using their vehicles to travel but also those who have to be taken in vehicles. I am thinking of some of the vehicles provided by service clubs which carry handicapped people to clinics where they receive treatment. The service clubs should also be included in the list of exemptions, and I really feel that this is what the minister has in mind, but I would not want the opportunity to go by without giving him the opportunity to confirm my understanding.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria, but it is not a question of accepting the minister's word. I accept the minister's word, and if he will examine my amendment again, he will find that it does not just deal with people driving to and from work. This would exclude the handicapped completely whether driving for work, pleasure, or anything else. Is this country so hard up that we have to chisel ten cents per gallon from people who are handicapped no matter how they move around? The purpose of my amendment is to prevent that. That is all we are asking, and in no way can the minister give his word or his undertaking to incorporate that in an order in council. I would not expect him to do that. He cannot give us that kind of commitment at this point in time. There is no way he can, and I would not be so bold as to ask him to do so. All I am suggesting is that this amendment covers all the handicapped. They are entitled to a full rebate no matter how they travel. That is the thrust and the purpose of my amendment.

I wish to read to the House from a letter I received as follows:

. . . I am writing to you to seek advice on a matter which is giving me cause for considerable concern. It relates to the recent tax increases on gasoline.

In my professional capacity . . . one of my senior staff members, our Chief Record Review Officer, is a paraplegic. His only means of transportation, other than his wheel chair, is his car.

While it is quite apparent that the rest of Canadian society has to put up with the current gasoline price increases, I am wondering whether the government in Ottawa might be approached to give some kind of consideration to providing some relief to handicapped persons who rely exclusively on their vehicles for the purposes of transportation.

I appreciate full well that structuring and programming a proposal of this kind would probably create difficulties. However, in view of the fact that so many handicapped people, after rehabilitation, are able to lead relatively normal lives, I think it is a proposal which might be worthy of consideration, especially in view of the fact that most handicapped people—particularly in the category to which I have made reference—would find it virtually impossible to use a smaller vehicle.

There should be no question about agreement on this matter, even if my amendment is not worded well enough or is improperly placed in clause 5 as amended in order to accomplish the total exclusion of the handicapped from the payment of this tax, whether it is for driving to and from work, for pleasure, or for the countless times every year they have to go to clinics for physical therapy, considering the money they must spend on specially equipped cars, despite the money which service clubs raise for that purpose. It should not have to go to a cabinet meeting.

Mr. Baldwin: They shouldn't even have to pay the tax.

Mr. Benjamin: They should not have to pay it in the first place, but they should at least be entitled to a rebate for every mile driven in a specially equipped car, and I will not accept this nonsense about the definition of handicapped. Someone who has to have a specially equipped car is obviously handicapped. There should be no question about it, and if some bureaucrat sitting up in that gallery like a crow on a fence wants to nit pick about something like that, I would fire him tomorrow. There should be no question about it. The whole damn legislation is nonsense in the first place, and then the minister says that he will give an undertaking to consider this matter. What is there to consider? There should be no question about it from any hon. member anywhere in this House or from any person in this country.

The fact that we would even countenance legislation which would require a handicapped person to pay one cent extra per gallon, for any gallon for any purpose whatsoever, does not speak very well for this government, for this parliament, or for the kind of society in which we live. I ask this committee to accept this amendment without any further discussion. If it is not prepared to do that, I am prepared to stay here until August or September.

Mrs. Holt: That is your intention.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I had earlier proposed to support the amendment of the hon. member for Victoria. It was worthy of him and the people he represents, as it is of all of us. I am sure that all hon. members in this House have received letters such as the one which I would like to place on the record. It reads as follows:

> We are having problems as my husband has emphysema and cannot get his breath; can't walk but a short distance: and is unable to get out to go to town or around anywhere. We are wanting to know if we can get in on the tax exemption of the ten cents a gallon on gas. My husband has to have oxygen in our home which can be taken along by car or truck. Please let us know as soon as possible on this matter . . .

I presume that the minister will agree to include this category of person among those exempted, and I hope my colleagues will go along with me and reserve judgment on this and see just exactly what the application will be as it applies to these people. Personally I do not propose to vote on this amendment at this time in reserving this judgment.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I was not going to speak on this amendment, but I was moved by the eloquence of my colleague, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Epp: We won't be moved by yours.

Mr. Rodriguez: I hope the hon. member and the hon. member for Victoria will be moved to agree to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Something else has occurred to me. The minister says that he will undertake to consider an order in council which would permit rebates to handicapped persons who must use specially designed vehicles or who must be transported to and from work. Surely one does not have to do too much checking to find out if a person is handicapped when he needs a car with special controls. Surely that would not happen if he were just pretending to be totally handicapped so that he could have the benefit of the rebate.

Surely it would not be difficult for the minister to accept an amendment which would permit those who are handicapped and who must use special vehicles, or be driven for pleasure or for work, to be excluded. They have to use those cars for their transportation. Surely it is not beyond this bureaucracy to devise that kind of system. In a country which designed the tallest freestanding building in the world are we saying that we are unable to deal with such a simple bureaucratic measure?

In a country which designs buildings in order to put on the magnificent exhibition of the Olympics in 1976, is its government incapable of designing a simple amendment which will permit handicapped people to be exempt from this iniquitous ten cents tax? We have accomplished the impossible. We have put up the highest stack and cleaned up air pollution.

An hon. Member: And sent it to Parry Sound.

Mr. Rodriguez: And we sent it to Parry Sound. That is Inco's way of solving that problem, but I am not asking the government to do anything as simple as that. I am asking it to do something even simpler. Very simply, we ought to design an amendment which will take care of that concern. Mr. Chairman, I have heard many assurances. I have heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare give assurances about the regulations governing certain types of disability under Canada Pension Plan disability provisions. We know what happens when regulations are implemented. The regulations determine if somebody qualifies. We have heard assurances given by cabinet ministers, and we have heard other ministers assure us that they will consider a matter. But, Mr. Chairman, the assurance to consider does not amount to a hill of beans.

Mr. Epp: Not to a hill of slag.

Mr. Rodriguez: As my hon. friend says, it does not amount to a hill of slag. The only assurance we will accept is the minister's assurance, in black and white, that he will accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. Alternatively, the minister can introduce his own amendment, which must be to similar effect. That is the only assurance the opposition will accept.

Sure, we know that the minister is an honourable man, but the bureaucrats determine how legislation shall be interpreted, and often they have the last word. I have seen their interpretation of Section 149(9) of the Unemployment Insurance Act concerning what constitutes an active job search. I have seen the decisions handed down with regard to disability covered by the Canadian Pension Plan. I have seen all this, and I am afraid it stinks. I cannot accept the minister's assurance, as the bureaucrats play a large role in determining the regulations.

I ask members of the Conservative opposition to my right to support the amendment. Surely the hon. member for Victoria will support us. Or, if the minister wishes to introduce his own amendment, perhaps he can consider the matter during the supper hour and then move it. Perhaps we could stand consideration of this part of the bill in order to allow the minister to bring in an amendment which will satisfy him.

I know hon. members are anxious to go on holiday, but the handicapped are equally anxious to hear the government's definitive answer. We are here to uphold their rights, and it is my responsibility, as a member of parliament, to do my best for the handicapped and to obtain a commitment from the government not just a promise to consider.

I urge hon. members to support my colleague's amendment. Let them consider it as an opposition amendment, as the hon. member for Victoria moved a similar amendment. We would have supported it if it had been allowed to stand. We urge hon. members to vote in support of the amendment as we think that is the kind of assurance the handicapped of this country deserve.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, when I was speaking about the intent of my amendment I meant to say that the handicapped should be totally exempt from the effects of the tax and that rebates ought to be paid if they drive to work, drive for pleasure, or drive for any purpose at all, which could include driving for medical treatment, for physical therapy or anything else. As I say, they ought to be totally exempt. The effect of paragraph C of the amendment will be that it would give all handicapped people entitlement to rebate. The amendment would cover all those driving especially equipped vehicles. Certainly, hardly any except the handicapped drive such vehicles.

On second thoughts, perhaps my own amendment is deficient. Perhaps I ought to have added another subparagraph widening the definition. Possibly there ought to be amendments to other clauses in the bill. In any event, I think all hon. members understand what I, the hon. member for Victoria, and others have been trying to do. I hope the hon. member for Victoria will support this amendment which, I submit, will be of benefit to the handicapped. They ought to be eligible for a rebate of the gasoline tax, no matter for what purpose they drive.

An hon. Member: Then why not do it properly?

Mr. Benjamin: Speak out, doc; I suspect this question is bothering you; if so, why not make a speech?

I should be willing to accept the minister's word, if he will give an undertaking and I do not mean an undertaking to consider, but an undertaking to act. If he will undertake that subsequent orders in council under subparagraph (g) will apply to the handicapped, no matter whether they drive their own car, whether their spouse drives, or whether any other person drives, I shall be satisfied. After all, the vehicle will be registered in the name of the handicapped person, and anybody else with a driver's licence can drive the vehicle.

If the minister will consider giving an undertaking to do this, instead of giving an undertaking to consider, I shall be happy to withdraw my amendment. But we must obtain that total undertaking from the minister, and if he gives it I will accept his word more quickly than anybody else in this committee. But I want him to give that total commitment, namely, that the order in council will provide that all handicapped shall be entitled to rebates of this tax, no matter for what purpose the vehicle is being driven and no matter who is driving the vehicle.

In Regina many of the handicapped who go to the special facilities in the Wascanna Hospital are driven there by their spouses. But anybody else can drive the car whether or not the handicapped person is in it; and, therefore I suppose the government could lose some small sums of money. That could well be, Mr. Chairman, but I would rather take the risk that someone may try to do this, and I suggest it will happen rarely, than refuse the handicapped the right to rebate. Why should the handicapped who drive three or four times a week to the Wascanna Hospital in Regina pay ten cents per gallon more?

Proof of handicap could be supplied by the medical officer in charge of the case, who could witness or attest any kind of form which the Minister of National Revenue may devise for the purpose. The forms could also be signed by people connected with social agencies, municipal, provincial or federal. Any person connected with the medical field could attest. If that is what the minister wants, I suggest the Minister of National Revenue and his officials can design the appropriate forms to be signed by the handicapped, their families, and by medical and social agency personnel.

Surely the government is not worried because a few people may gyp it out of a few hundred dollars of tax. If the government is so worried, it can ask people to attest on any form it wishes to design. The important thing is that gasoline used by or on behalf of the handicapped should be subject to tax rebate, and there is no reason why this cannot be done.

I am certain this matter could be thoroughly covered in the regulations. I am certain that people connected with social agencies will co-operate fully with the Minister of National Revenue. Surely it is the least we can do. We have not been able to convince the government not to impose a tax on working people. We have not succeeded in that regard. Professional people may obtain a rebate, but not working people. Surely we can succeed on behalf of the handicapped.

If the minister will give a straight undertaking, not an undertaking to consider, but an undertaking to do as I suggest, I should be happy to withdraw my amendment. Unless he is prepared to do so, I think the committee ought to vote on the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Question.

● (1600)

Amendment (Mr. Benjamin) negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 46.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I intend to move another amendment on the same lines as the one I moved yesterday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I believe the hon. member for Peace River indicated yesterday that he has an amendment to page three. The hon. member for Rimouski told us he has an amendment to page two. Perhaps the earlier one should be taken first.

Mr. Baldwin: I will postpone mine.

The Deputy Chairman: I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for pointing out that there is an earlier amendment. The hon. member for Rimouski did give the Chair notice of that amendment and we should hear him at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, indeed I said yesterday that I wanted to move a subamendment to clause 5. I want to do so to enable the worker who has to use his car to go to work to be also eligible for the refund of the 10 cents tax on a gallon of a gas as the persons referred to in that clause.

Indeed, why such discrimination against a group of Canadian people who are subjected to the same laws and the same duties as other Canadians. Moreover, that tax penalizes more especially the active class of our society. The government is penalizing the workers who through their labour enable the companies and certain classes of society to increase their profits.

This week's Financial Post, dated July 26, 1975, features a list of more than a hundred of the largest companies in Canada whose sales have increased by 23 per cent in 1973-74, thus rising from $52 billion to $64 billion. However, out of that amount, only about 3 per cent represent a real increase, the remainder being the result of inflation.

Mr. Chairman, our economic policy is meant to promote constantly the increase of capital at the expense of labour and the purchasing power of our fellow citizens. Anyhow, in this context, the rich gather billions in net profits thus reducing the purchasing power of our fellow citizens.

And those who suffer most from it are low income earners and the citizens who do not have a decent or appropriate purchasing power. The pretences advanced by the government are at best doubtful when they say that the tax is imposed to conserve gas and establish uniform prices throughout Canada. First, nothing proves there will be economy in that field. They also claim to establish a unique gas price by taxing one part of the population to the prejudice of the other part. In fact, this other part of our society is the poorer, the worse off. The government seems to be doing backward socialism. At least, they are doing so in the present case. They penalize the poor to give to the wealthy. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That clause 5 be amended by adding, after subclause (g) subclause (h) which would read as follows:

Paragraph (h) would read as follows:

a worker who must absolutely travel a minimum of twenty-five (25) miles a week in his own car to reach his place of employment.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: I rise to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rimouski. I presume it has been accepted as being in order.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair does have some reservations about the amendment inasmuch as it appears similar to that moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. However, the hon. member for Rimouski did point out that he was seeking to make a subamendment thereto, and for that reason the Chair will allow it to be debated and disposed of by the Committee.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate your ruling as, I am sure, do my hon. friends. I rise to support this amendment. While it is similar to the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre, it allows for an element of choice. A worker who had no suitable alternative transportation available to him would be eligible for the rebate in certain circumstances.

As all of us know, of course, there are hundreds of thousands of workers for whom no choice is possible. They are bound to use their cars to go to work until such time as society provides an alternative means of transportation. Administration is simplified by the provision that only those who must drive 25 miles a week to work will qualify. In other words, those who drive fewer than 25 miles a week can walk or, possibly, ride a bicycle.

The minister, in making regulations, can require the employer concerned to attest to the number of days a week, or months a year, in which the employee drove his vehicle to work. After all, the employer has a record of the number of days upon which the employee attended. The employer or his representative, say a foreman or an accountant, whether it be a big corporation or a company with only two or three employees, can append his signature and attest to the application for a rebate. There is no problem about that. I am sure that the advisers to the minister could find additional words to put in the regulations to provide that any employer who makes a fraudulent attestation will be in real trouble, along with the employee.

Workers from a rural area who have to drive ten or 15 miles to work and who have no alternative mode of transportation surely present no danger, and can hardly be said to be defrauding the Government of Canada of the ten cents a gallon tax. The amendment moved by my hon. friend providing a minimum of 25 miles per week is much easier for the Minister of Finance to accept than was the one moved by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. If I may be so bold, I say it is probably a wiser amendment in terms of administration and in terms of applying it to people all across the country—I say that while my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre is out of the chamber for a few moments.

While this amendment does not go as far as the previous one, I submit it is much easier to accept in the context of the philosophy of the minister regarding what he is trying to do in this bill, which is first to raise money, and secondly to exempt certain categories of workers. This amendment relates to a category of worker who may inadvertently have been overlooked but who nevertheless has no alternative but to drive at least 25 miles a week to work.

People in the city of Regina who live less than two and a half miles from their place of employment and make ten trips to and from work a week will not be eligible for a rebate under the terms of this amendment, which shows how reasonable it is. If a person living in Lakeview, the part of Regina where I live, is employed on Broad Street or Winnipeg Street in the eastern part of the city, he is only two to two and a quarter miles from his place of work, and if he goes to work five days a week and does not work overtime or extra days he will not be eligible for a rebate. On the other hand, a person who lives in Albert Park in Regina and is employed at the Interprovincial Steel plant or several other related industries a mile or more north of the city limits, will have to drive 14 to 20 miles a day to and from work. Such a person would be eligible for a rebate because he has no alternative mode of transportation.

In the case of a car pool, surely a person who is using his car and who is hauling three of four fellow employees to work should be entitled to a rebate. He is contributing to one of the objectives outlined in the bill by the minister, that of conserving energy and making people use an alternative mode of transportation. This amendment is so reasonable that if I were on the government side of the House I would have to vote for it, even though it was moved by a member on the opposition side. Half, or probably more than half of our working people who drive less than 25 miles a week to work are excluded from the provisions of the amendment.

I do not doubt for a moment that in most medium and small sized cities, towns, and villages across Canada the majority of workers would live less than two and half miles from their place of employment, and as such they would not qualify for a rebate. The minister could also provide in the regulations that in the case of a minimum rebate of $10 there would be a two or three month wait before application could be made for a rebate. If I recall the earlier debate on the bill, they could only apply twice a year in any event, so this would present no large additional amount of paper work on the part of the Department of National Revenue. It also occurs to me that this kind of application for a rebate, including applications from the handicapped, should require the applicant to make an attestation and to provide any evidence required for the purpose of obtaining a rebate. I ask the committee to accept what is a good amendment, one that would allow a limited opportunity to working people to apply for a rebate.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak to this amendment. May I first of all point out that I am not in favour of this ten cents gasoline tax.

In applying this amendment I find it difficult to see how any department or bureaucrat could interpret it, either strictly or benevolently. This reference to "a worker who is a worker" reminds me of the Biblical phrase "who is my neighbour?" It is difficult to define. Throughout the debate on this bill there has been an implied or inferential differentiation between a businessman, a professional, and a worker. I think it has already been said that businessmen and professionals are workers who sometimes put in longer hours than the so-called workers. I am concerned that even a professional man or a businessman, or whatever the case is, be entitled to a rebate only when the gas he uses is for commercial purposes. I suggest that whether it be a professional person, a businessman, or a worker going to and from his place of employment, the same situation applies. I wonder whether my interpretation under the Excise Tax Act is correct or not. Perhaps the Minister of Finance would respond before I proceed any further.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to support the amendment motion of my good friend, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard). First of all, 25 miles a week is not a high mileage, and second, if the government accepted this minimum of 25 miles a week, for all practical purposes the tax of 10 cents a gallon would no longer exist. The tax would no longer exist because I believe that if the government accepts this amendment, it will also avoid a lot of headaches for the Minister of Finance and the technocrats who have to collect these 10 cents a gallon.

Most of those who are owners or chairmen of companies are exempt from the tax and can claim the 10 cents a gallon rebate at the end of the year. These same owners often own a farm or have other employment apart from owning the companies. I would like the Minister of Finance to tell the House how the technocrat or the one who will have to decide what percentage of the yearly mileage will be eligible for the rebate will determine how many gallons will be subject to a reimbursement of the 10 cents a gallon tax at the end of the year, and it will have to be specified that the technocrat will determine what percentage of use of the vehicle was for company purposes and which percentage was for the worker or any owner of a company to get to work. There is nothing extraordinary about owning a company. It costs about $300. Any worker with a good job who makes $12,000 or $15,000 a year can own a company.

Several members of the House of Commons own companies. Several senators also own companies. These companies have vehicles registered in the name of the company. Are these vehicles used by the member? I would like to give an example to illustrate my point. If the company owns a 1975 Chevrolet registered in the name of the company, for instance, and the member of parliament owns a 1975 Oldsmobile to travel to Ottawa and takes the Chevrolet with the credit card of the company to travel to Ottawa, it means that this hon. member will not pay the 10 cents a gallon to drive to Ottawa, because he uses a company car. He leaves the Oldsmobile to the company for the week, or month. I say this amendment gives a chance to whoever must solve the problem, because I feel that act will be almost inapplicable, perhaps in fact but not legally.

I feel that from the legal point of view, there will be many pitfalls which will give many a headache to the Minister of Finance who is of good faith and who wants, precisely, through his bill, to save oil by forcing one class of society, that of the small worker, to use public transports. That may save money also for parking lots and other things over the long term. In a way, I agree with him. However, how is he going to apply the act? That is the problem. There is another bill which will be put through the mill again next year with several amendments. It would be better to amend it now to clarify the situation and pass the bill as soon as possible so we can then leave for holidays. That is why I feel the situation must be cleared up right away, so that we can leave for our holidays this evening or tomorrow. We must make it clear, Mr. Chairman, otherwise we shall never get through. In all modesty, I am the owner of two companies, one of them possesses a vehicle. Which vehicle shall I drive to go to Ottawa? The one which is registered in the company's name or my own? Which one?

And most senators are in the same situation. Several members have farms or companies in their names, even big oil companies, and have seven, eight or ten vehicles in their backyards. I recently visited one which owns six or seven vehicles. The company is very prosperous. The hon. member can choose between six or seven cars to drive to Ottawa. He will get back his 19 cents a mile, and the 10 cents as well, if he drives the car which is registered under the name of the company, and uses the company's credit cards. What are they going to do to collect all that? How will the Minister of Finance decide and how will be officials of his department decide? This is the problem and this is why I would like the amendment, which practically aims at cutting off the 10 cents tax a gallon for certain people, particularly working people, to be adopted.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, as you have pointed out, this amendment is similar to the one I moved last evening which was defeated a little while ago. However, there is a difference. My amendment sought to extend the right to rebates to workers generally who use their cars to get to and from their places of employment, whereas this amendment would make the rebates apply only in cases of workers who travel at least 25 miles a week. It seems to me that if members were not willing to accept the other one they might consider this one, which is a little less but at least a move in the right direction.

However, the main reason I rise for a minute or two is that since the defeat of my earlier amendment, we have had a discussion on the question of an exemption for handicapped persons. May I say that it was both welcome and interesting to note that the minister seemed to have relented a bit from the stern position he took earlier. He indicated that in that case he was prepared to consider doing something by order in council.

I wonder if this softening of his thinking has carried over into the case of the workers. Is he prepared to accept any kind of amendment or proposal that would give the exemption to workers in certain cases and, if so, is he prepared to do that by accepting some form of an amendment to the bill, or is he prepared to give the kind of undertaking he gave earlier to the hon. member for Victoria and others in the House, namely, that he will look at the whole question of this tax as it applies to workers?

The minister must realize that, apart from the fact that we are against the bill as a whole, this is the feature of it which has been most offensive, namely, the non-recognition of the money workers have to spend on getting to and from work. I put the question to the minister again: Has he softened his position at all, and is he prepared to look at this thing, perhaps not with the same kind of commitment I think he gave regarding the handicapped, but at least with some sympathy for the problem faced by those workers who have no choice but to use their automobiles to get to and from their places of employment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I stated our position fully last night.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Rimouski.

Some hon. Members: Out, out.

Amendment (Mr. Allard) negatived: Yeas, 17; nays, 49.

● (1630)

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Before recognizing the hon. member for Peace River I should point out that the Chair has been advised that the hon. member for Red Deer also wishes to introduce an amendment. We will proceed with that first.

Mr. Towers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I was the thirty-third speaker from our party to speak on this legislation on second reading, and hopefully our message has got through to the minister. The message we receive from the government is that gasoline is worth more than Canadians have been paying for it, and that wine will cost less because it has been too expensive. The government is telling the Canadian taxpayers that they should remain at home, use less gas and drink more wine. In other words, the Liberal message is: do not complain about paying the dime, you will get used to it over a period of time, and if you can't afford to drive your flivver stay at home and become a wine bibber.

I received a letter from a constituent which I should like to place on record. It states in part:

> But, now let me explain why I'm really writing this letter. When I heard that the tax on a bottle of wine went down six cents I nearly exploded from anger! To think a government is so ridiculous as to do such a stupid thing makes me rage . . . I plead with you to do all you can to stop this foolish business!

In the absence of the hon. member for Vegreville I wish to move an amendment on his behalf and say a few words in support of it. The hon. member for Vegreville merely wants to know whether or not the Minister of Finance will make a commitment in this House to alleviate some of the resultant problems of the tax which have been explained by hon. members.

Even though the minister states that the industrial construction industry uses gas eligible for refund he must by now have commenced to realize the importance of the point we have been trying to make in respect of the unnecessary additional cost of financing to bulk dealers, fishermen, farmers, large trucking operations and others. Housing contractors too will require extra funds, the carrying charges of which will be borne by the payee, the Canadian consumer, who ultimately will be the permanent loser. In many cases federal and provincial governments' revenue will be affected, particularly in the building of roads and highways. If this bill is not altered there will not only be high administrative costs but higher pay-outs to various road construction firms.

There is absolutely no way anyone could make a fair assessment of what the actual cash layout will be under this ludicrous and useless legislation. It is frustrating enough to have "no" automatically voiced by the government daily to every Standing Order 43 motion presented to this House, but now the same tune is being picked up by government members en masse when logical amendments, beneficial to Canada and Canadians, are proposed by members on this side of the House. Backbenchers should consider the effect such a measure will have on their constituents instead of blindly nodding their heads in silence, or speaking without any sound basis to support every bill the government presents to parliament. I would hope for once they would think about these things.

My colleagues who have opposed this tax measure are in favour of this amendment, which I do not believe the minister can refuse under the guise of discrimination which was given as the reason for not accepting an earlier amendment. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex:

That Bill C-66, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, be amended in clause 5 by striking out line 46 on page 2 thereof and substituting therefore the following:

'that tax, except that the minister may provide that the tax is not payable by a purchaser where it can be established without delay and beyond reasonable doubt at the place of sale that the purchaser belongs to a group of persons described in this subsection.'

On Friday the minister told the hon. member for Vegreville that he was optimistic about allowing exceptions for bulk commodity carriers for large urban industries. Can the minister confirm this statement in light of written representations by the Minister of National Revenue to certain industries that Bill C-66 will not apply, with regard to exemptions, regarding bulk commodity carriers.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, I not only have received representations from the hon. member for Red Deer and his colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville, on whose behalf he presents a motion, but also from my colleagues from Assiniboia and Battleford-Kindersley. Last week in the course of debate on this bill representations were received from these four members in particular, and other members, that the bill be amended to provide an exemption for bulk purchasers of gasoline and also for users of marked gasoline, which is what is referred to in the amendment.

At that time I pointed out that there were some fundamental problems in tying the federal taxing statute to provincial legislation since this could be tantamount to a delegation of the taxing authority of parliament to provincial legislatures. I was worried about having a lack of uniformity in the application of the general tax across the country. I did undertake, however, that I was prepared to look for ways to streamline the operation of the bill.

In this context the government is prepared to amend Bill C-66 in such a way as to provide legislative authority to exempt certain purchasers of gasoline where this is administratively feasible. I must emphasize, however, that it is not certain that it will, indeed, prove to be feasible to provide an exemption in all of those instances suggested by the hon. member. However, I would like to assure the House that the government will do everything in its power to simplify the administration of the gas tax rebate system. To this end, if the hon. gentleman would be willing to withdraw his amendment, I think I have an amendment which would do the trick. It would put me in a position to investigate the possibility of achieving the streamlining of the system in a way that he described, and which has been described by the other members.

If the hon. gentleman would be prepared to withdraw his amendment, I would be prepared to move the following amendment:

[Mr. Towers.]

That clause 5 of Bill C-66, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, be further amended by striking out lines 45 and 46 on page 2 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

'pay an amount equal to that tax,

(h) to the purchaser, or,

(i) in accordance with such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may by regulation prescribe, to the manufacturer, producer, wholesaler, jobber or other dealer, and any payment made to a person referred to in paragraph (i) shall, for purposes of subsection (2) and section 57, be deemed to have been made to the purchaser.'

I give the undertaking to the House that we will attempt to achieve by regulation what has been talked about here. The amendment I have read gives the Minister of National Revenue the authority to achieve this. I therefore move the amendment which I just read.

Mr. Towers: Madam Chairman, I am prepared to withdraw my amendment subject to a caveat being placed on the amendment proposed by the minister.

● (1640)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Red Deer to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Towers) withdrawn.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment moved by the Minister of Finance?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) agreed to.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, I should like to move an amendment on Clause 5. As far as we are concerned, hon. members to my left, who are prolific in ideas, may have other amendments to move. I simply want to say that I stated to the committee yesterday that I would be moving another amendment along the same lines as the one I moved yesterday to another part of the bill. I will not repeat the arguments I made then. They are obviously unattractive to the minister. But I think that the kind of discussion we had today in respect of the amendment offered by the hon. member for Victoria indicates the need to have some form of control by the House over regulations passed by the government.

The true purpose of taxation should be to take from each according to his ability to pay. If I added to that "give to each according to his need" it might be a motto well recognized by other sections of the committee. The hon. member for Nickel Belt, who is more familiar with the subject than I am, says I am correct. However, what the government is asking us to do is to give them a license to plunder. That is the kind of system under which taxation is imposed today. Accompanied with that license to plunder is the freedom to change, add to and subtract from the plundering without any opportunity for parliament to pass judgment on what is being done. Some day this parliament will be told by the people of Canada, who I think are getting fed up to the teeth with this sort of fiscal arrangement, that they will put a short rein, not only upon this government but upon any government, whether it is Conservative, Liberal or, what is even more unlikely but nevertheless more necessary in that case, a socialist government. My friend here says we have a Liberal and a socialist government, the front end is Liberal and the rear end is socialist.

What we have now is a situation in which the governor in council, at the instigation of the minister who has been prodded by his officials—it may not be this minister but some one else—may set an arbitrary, artificial, capricious,—and politically motivated frivolous—I have other adjectives but I stop there, the minister knows what I mean—order in council to establish the restrictions on or additions to the kind of people who will be eligible for rebates. For example, under this legislation, particularly Clause 5 which purports to amend section 47 of the Excise Tax Act, we find the phrase "a person for commercial or business purposes". In the name of heaven we all know what that means. The minister knows what it means, the officials should know what it means, and even my friends to the left should know what it means. These words have connotations and understandings which, over many years, have become fixed in our life, and for the government to say they want the right to put an artificially twisted and contorted interpretation on what "commercial or business purposes" means so they can make the rules as they see fit from time to time, is not attractive to me.

Under those circumstances, I have no alternative but to move the following amendment:

That Clause 5 of Bill C-66, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act be amended in Clause 5

(a) By striking out line 12 on page 3 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"Regulation subject to negative resolution of the House of Commons"

(b) By striking out line 21 on page 3 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"In Council may by regulation determine subject to negative resolution of the House of Commons"

If I had time, I might have added a third amendment which would have covered the amendment which the minister just brought in and which gives power to the governor in council to act by regulation, but I will not do that.

I will simply conclude with these words, that I do not think we should sit idly by and allow the government to do all these things, to make these changes, without some means of bringing back to the House an opportunity to pass judgment on what they have done. The dilemma of the hon. member for Victoria makes this quite plain. The hon. member says he takes the word of the minister, and this party agreed with him. We did not vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre. But that should not be required. There should be an understanding that any hon. member should not have to rely on an undertaking by the minister. There should be a proper procedure by which orders in council come back to the House, and an opportunity given to the House to pass judgment on them when the occasion arises. It is in that sense that I move the amendment.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, the hon. member for Peace River and I had a full dialogue on the same subject last night.

Mr. Baldwin: It sounded like a monologue to me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, not only do I wish to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River, I want to commend him for his persistence. I urge him to keep at it, even if it takes 20 or 25 years to win his point. I realize that there is a general desire to get out of here, but when an important issue like this is raised, I do not think it is good enough for the Minister of Finance simply to rise and say that we have had this dialogue before.

● (1650)

I think the point is well put. It is introduced in a different context than when we had it previously, and I suggest that the hon. member for Peace River is being quite reasonable in proposing that certain orders in council, as indicated on page 3 of the bill, be subject to a negative resolution of the House of Commons.

I will say again as I said yesterday—and like the Minister of Finance I am not unwilling to say it over again, but of course it is because I am saying what is right—that if the hon. member for Peace River were proposing an affirmative resolution, that could be a delaying process. It could make it pretty difficult for the government to govern. That is not what the hon. member for Peace River is asking. He is asking that when orders in council have been proclaimed for the purposes set out on page 3 of the bill, they be permitted to come into effect, but that it be possible for a member in the House of Commons, within the rules, to put down a motion calling for those orders to be nullified. Only if such a motion is carried are those orders nullified, and in the circumstances of this parliament in particular where there is an overwhelming majority, the chances of that happening are very slim.

I will make the point again which I made yesterday, that this sort of thing can have a salutary effect. I think that when a minister is getting an order in council, especially in the tax field, he should have to ask himself whether it is going to get by, or whether it will result in members of the House putting down negative resolutions. That sort of questioning which he should engage in would surely encourage a minister to bring in the kind of orders in council which would be accepted.

As I say, a few years ago this was a relatively new idea. The hon. member for Peace River made headway when he got the Minister of Finance in one of his previous incarnations to bring in a bill which provides for affirmative and negative resolutions, but now the problem is to get them to be used when an actual situation arises, and I think this is a good place to put the practice into effect. I support very strongly the proposal of the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, I rise on a very brief point of order. I will not intervene again, but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre talked about my being here for 20 or 25 years to see these dreams of mine come into effect. I only want to say that if I discovered the fountain of youth, I would probably find the government imposing an excise tax of $10 per cup.

Amendment (Mr. Baldwin) negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 50.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment negatived. Shall clause 5, as amended, carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 5 as amended agreed to.

On clause 6.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, will the minister tell us what clause 6 means?

An hon. Member: Just what it says.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): You must have a prepared speech on that one, John. Surely they have briefed you.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, this provides merely, as it says, for the recovery of amounts refunded where the person claiming refund does not maintain the necessary records to support his refund claim.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How is an individual to know whether he has kept records which are satisfactory to the government?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With just the same type of receipt which is now required.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wonder if the minister would give the same kind of elucidation to clause 7 which he gave to clause 6?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This clause requires people who make refund claims to keep books and records in support of such refund claims.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Chairman, I am rising to propose an amendment to Clause 8. We find it to be necessary following the determination of government members to beat back all reasonable amendments which have been proposed by the official opposition, by members of the New Democratic Party, and by members of the Social Credit Party. I am thinking in particular of the amendment supported by everyone on this side of the House which would have given a rebate to ordinary working Canadians driving to and from their places of work, which the Liberals saw in their infinite wisdom to be the kind of amendment they could not, of course, accept, and therefore defeated. I am also thinking of the amendments which were proposed here today by all three opposition parties with particular reference to the handicapped.

I therefore move:

That clause 8 be amended in line 1 on page 5 by deleting the words "ten cents" and by substituting therefor the words "one cent".

[Mr. Baldwin.]

The logic of this amendment should be inescapable, even to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who has frequent difficulty in following logic from point A to point B, let alone going from point A to point B. I am sure that even that hon. member can understand the logic of this amendment, and if she really concentrates with all her ability she could probably cope with it.

The point of my amendment is that by reducing the tax from ten cents to one cent we will simultaneously reduce the degree of injustice inflicted upon Canadians by some 90 per cent. If the amendment were passed, we acknowledge that the minister would have to raise the money to pay for the increase in the price of oil imported off the east coast by some other means. He could adopt any one of the suggestions made. He could levy a special income tax on upper income Canadians or a special tax on the petroleum industry. Probably the best way would be to take it out of general revenue. This would mean that the people who pay personal income tax on a progressive basis, as well as the corporations, would contribute the money to pay for these additional costs.

Any of these possibilities would be preferable to the government's decision to levy a flat ten cent per gallon excise tax on all Canadians who drive automobiles, 95 per cent of whom drive to and from work because there is no alternative. If the Minister of Finance had been prepared to include one of the election promises in the budget, and had proposed to do something about urban transit systems, we might have been more favourably disposed to his rhetoric about changing lifestyles. The only change possible will be that which comes from the increased financial burden on average and low income Canadians who have less disposable income to spend on the other aspects of life.

Even at this late stage, I urge that some modicum of sense impinge itself upon the consciousness of the Liberal Party. I have no hope for the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, but I have a little for some of the others. It might get through to them at this late stage in the debate that they have an obligation to do something on behalf of low income Canadians instead of doing something to them.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Chairman, here we are again. This party is trying to be very helpful by making proposals to the government. We have again put forward a constructive amendment which would eliminate much of the breaking up of society into little groups by the government and then taxing them. This amendment proposes to tax everyone one cent per gallon, and this of course would be applied universally. There would be none of this bureaucratic action in separating groups and making it possible for the minister by order in council to decide who is handicapped and who is not. It will not be left to the whim of bureaucrats to decide taxation, since they have not been elected by the people of Canada. It seems to me this is the most honest and equitable way for the government to go about raising the funds that they say are required.

I recall the minister saying last evening about one of our other constructive amendments that the idea was to get people to change their lifestyle. As I pointed out, with the ten cents per gallon excise tax the lifestyle of the poor would certainly change; they could sit home and drink wine. The lifestyle of the rich would not be changed by introducing this amendment to reduce the excise tax to one cent per gallon, but the effect of the tax would not fall so heavily on the workers.

We have pointed out time and again the impact of this ten cents per gallon tax. It places a very difficult burden on those people who live in Nickel Belt where everyone has to drive a considerable distance to work. The minister said last night:

> But, to give a deduction of the expense of getting to work would be to give a tax subsidy to those who choose to drive rather than take public transit—to those who choose to live far from their place of work, rather than close, and to those who choose to drive a large automobile rather than to those who drive a small one.

People do not choose to live far from their work. In my riding, people would rather live close to work but as a penalty for building a home where they can afford it this government places an extra burden on them. This tax will take a big chunk out of their budgets and will be an extra hardship on many with families to raise. We are faced with the juggernaut of power on the government benches. We have put up a fight against the ten cent tax and got nowhere. We have tried to talk reason and have proposed constructive amendments, but are obviously not getting anywhere so, since we abhor this kind of tax we propose an amendment to reduce it from ten cents per gallon to one cent per gallon. At least the wealthy would be able to pay that tax and it would not be such a burden on the poor.

Members tend to think of their own ridings and I think of mine. In the last election the Liberal candidate was promising to remove the railway tracks from Sudbury and the Liberal candidate in my riding was saying "I want the railway tracks in Nickel Belt". The public transit system we were promised would have alleviated the problem, but people in areas like mine do not have it. The ten cents tax would be a great burden, so our proposal to amend it to one cent is a reasonable way of raising the money the government says it needs. We have proposed alternate ways of getting the money and have suggested economies the cabinet might adopt by changing their driving habits. We have suggested they pool their limousines and drive smaller cars. We have suggested economies which could be implemented by the government as an example to the working people. It is only when the government shows that they are prepared to economize that they can say to the people "Don't do as we tell you, do as we do—look how we are running the country on your behalf".

The way we are squandering the resources of this country cries out to heaven for some recognition. When we look for leadership, we look to the people who were elected to govern and say "That is an example I can follow". I suggest the ministers pool their cars and possibly use Volkswagens. Surely an across the board tax of one cent a gallon will not affect the economy drastically. You see, we are caught in a terrible game. The workers of my area will pay ten cents a gallon more, and will ask their employers for more wages. They will say, "This tax is eating into the family's budget; you must compensate us for it." They will try to bargain, and a strike may or may not follow. If there is no strike, it means that the employer has "come across". But the employer will need to charge more for his wares and, to that extent, this tax is inflationary.

We propose an across the board tax of one cent per gallon. It ought to be paid by all, and would not impose a hardship, even on doctors who make emergency calls at night. I assure the minister that doctors are recompensed by OHIP in Ontario. When they receive a call in the middle of the night, they charge OHIP. They do not work for nothing.

It seems to me that the minister would collect just as much money if the tax were one cent a gallon across the board. The money could be raised by other means. Why not impose a tax on those who can afford to pay, on those who can afford to bet on the horses? All he need do is impose a tax on bets made at race tracks in this country, and he will raise a great deal of money. In the province of Ontario alone he could raise as much as $9 million a year from thoroughbred racing. If we extrapolate the figures to cover standard breeds and other forms of racing, I am sure the minister could raise $100 million by using this means. And by taxing people who could afford to play the horses, the minister would be acting fairly. He is not fair when he taxes those who must use their cars to go to work.

I submit that this tax will bear hardest on those workers who are not members of unions and who cannot afford to exert pressure on their employer to compensate them for the increase in cost of driving. Most workers are not represented by unions. Such workers are employed as waitresses, or in similar occupations; they are unorganized and, in most cases, do not earn very much. It may not be worth their while to go to work if they must pay this tax. As a result, they may give up their jobs. The unemployment insurance people will step in and the notation will appear on the appropriate documents "left for unjust cause." Tax those who can afford to go to the race track, not those who must drive to work.

An hon. Member: But you have a large race track in your riding.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, there is a race track in my riding. It seems to me that we should follow the precepts of our income tax system and charge those who can pay. The contribution of the taxpayer ought to reflect his ability to pay. I remind the hon. member for Peace River and others in his party of the slogan, "From each according to his ability to contribute." I put that in its proper capitalist context.

We therefore say, that the one cent per gallon tax across the board is more equitable, and is more in line with the provisions of our income tax system. The minister attempted to equate this regressive tax with our income tax structure. How can you equate this regressive tax with the income tax structure as, by and large, the income tax structure is more just and progressive? This particular excise tax is not a progressive tax. It is regressive, because it is to take from those who do not have and, invariably, will give to those who have.

I do not wish to delay hon. members as I know they are anxious to go on holiday; but so are the people in my riding anxious to go on holiday. They will find it more expensive to drive their car, tow their trailer, or drive to their cottage. That is their only enjoyment. They cannot fly from Mirabel to Florida or Europe. They depend on their cars to go to the cottage. That may be their only enjoyment. After many spent years working in the mines, now they look forward to being off work for three weeks and being on holiday in the summer. Our population is mobile, and the ten cents a gallon tax will limit their ability to enjoy their holidays. These people use their cars mostly to go to work, in any event.

I repeat that we are proposing a one cent a gallon tax applied universally, as that seems the fair way of going about it. I know there may be some inequity in my suggestion, as those who have much money will pay the same amount of tax per gallon as those who do not have much. At least our proposal will not bear so heavily on those who must work and are active in society.

The present government proposal lets those who have money off the hook. It will not touch them at all. It even provides that if some of them are called out in the middle of the night, they can claim a rebate. As I said, I do not wish to keep hon. members from their holidays. I know the minister has his station wagon packed. It is loaded and the kids are ready. His bags are packed, and they are all ready to go away on holiday in their car. He is lucky he can afford ten cents a gallon excise tax. Many of my constituents cannot. They will spend the summer at the cottage, drinking wine which is now six cents cheaper. That is the working man's enjoyment. I see the Postmaster General saying, "That is right, that is right." I'll bet he is not drinking Cawtaba these days. I know he does not drink Cawtaba.

An hon. Member: He used to, many years ago.

Mr. Rodriguez: I tell you this situation is so bad that it is driving people to drink.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I remind the hon. member that debate at this time in committee of the whole ought to be limited to the amendment before the committee. I ask the hon. member to limit his remarks to the amendment.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, Madam Chairman. The amendment we propose would impose a one cent tax per gallon across the board universally and without exception.

Mr. Darling: A good idea.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka says it is a good idea. It is an excellent idea. I urge members of the committee to accept it.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Chairman, members on the government side are shaking their heads and saying "no". It is very easy for members who make $22,500 per year plus travel expenses to impose an excise tax of ten cents per gallon which workers must pay. We can afford it. Every member of this House can afford the excise tax of ten cents per gallon. I submit that a tax of one cent per gallon would not be a heavy burden for those who make $22,500, plus travelling expenses. Hon. members should not complain. After all, they voted themselves a salary increase.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Come off it. You voted for the increase too and you, too, want to go on holiday.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Chairman, my father used to tell me if you see a pack of coyotes and throw a rock at them, you will always know when you hit one because of the yelping you will hear.

A tax of one cent a gallon would not weigh heavily on those who must work and produce the wealth of this country. Let me tell you, many people do not look on us as productive people. There are many who do not view us as productive.

● (1720)

An hon. Member: Bunch of fakers!

Mr. Rodriguez: These people work, and work hard. Perhaps the hon. lady from Vancouver-Kingsway ought to work in the Elliott Lake mines. Then, she would know what it is like to work. One cent a gallon, universally applied to all who drive, would certainly go a long way toward meeting the amount the minister says he needs to offset the shortfall in the fuel account.

Ten cents may not sound much to a person who earns $24,500 plus expenses, but it means a lot to workers at INCO who bring home $8,000 a year.

An hon. Member: Only $8,000 at INCO? Come on!

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, that's right. Gasoline in our area now costs 80 cents a gallon. I am talking about regular gas. We have to cover the extra cost of transportation from southern to northern Ontario. This ten cents tax makes the problem worse. The people I have in mind did not choose to live out in the boondocks. It is not their fault there is no serviced land nearer the centre of town at prices they can afford. There is no way in which they can pay the price presently being demanded for a small suburban lot in Sudbury. As living becomes increasingly expensive, they are forced to open negotiations with the company. Sometimes those negotiations are tough and the men find themselves on strike in support of their demands. It is easy to call for order in this House. What I am saying is that when people find themselves in a tight situation financially their choices are extremely limited. Last July, all these people heard were promises—promises of support from the government, promises of improved transportation systems and so on. Then, lo and behold, the Minister of Finance hits them where they least expected it by imposing a federal tax upon a commodity they have no choice but to use.

Yesterday, I mentioned Shebandowin. It is some 60 miles from Thunder Bay. The workers must drive there because the company does not provide housing at the site. They are now in the second year of a three-year contract. In effect, they are locked in. There is no COLA clause in their contract. Now, they are being told they must pay ten cents a gallon more for their gasoline.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, we find ourselves in the official opposition facing a difficult choice. On the one hand, we think the amendment is a little ridiculous. On the other hand, the tax itself is a malignant one. So the choice is not an easy one. After some consideration we have decided to back the ridiculous amendment.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Chairman, I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River. We know perfectly well that the amendment will be defeated. Nevertheless, the amendment has a purpose which appears to me to be perfectly legitimate—it is to get the message through to the government and its advisers that this legislation is ridiculous in the first place.

It seems to me that hon. gentlemen opposite had better take another look at just what a sales tax is. The only element of fairness it contains is that those who can afford to buy most of the products, and who choose to do so, bear the heaviest burden of the tax. Those on low incomes who obviously purchase less of the commodity as a general rule, lose less of their disposable income in the form of sales tax. If a government applies a sales tax, it applies it across the board, or, at least, it provides for very limited exceptions—the handicapped might be excepted, for example, or those who have no choice but to buy the commodity concerned.

If the case in question involved the imposition of a tax of one cent a gallon on gasoline, everybody would pay it with, possibly, limited exceptions of those I mentioned. Those who bought the most would pay the most. It is rather like the sales tax on automobiles. The man who can only afford to buy a $4,000 car pays $200. But the person who wants to spend $20,000 on a car pays $1,000 in tax. To that extent, the tax provides for an element of ability to pay. But when the minister imposes a sales tax of ten cents a gallon and makes it possible for a certain group of people to write off some of it as an expense for income tax purposes, and, moreover, allows those in the higher income tax categories to apply for rebates, then he has destroyed whatever element of fairness there is in a sales tax. That is why we on this side have put forward an amendment to reduce the tax from ten cents a gallon to one cent a gallon.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question!

Amendment (Mr. Broadbent) negatived: Yeas, 25; nays, 49.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Before recognizing the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack)—Agriculture—Levy Charged on Manufacturing Milk—Government position; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Energy—Natural Gas—Possibility of Government Promoting Polar Pipeline through Manitoba.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Madam Speaker, before moving a third reading amendment I should like to deal more or less precisely, depending on response from the other side, with the substance of this bill.

When the government announced that it was necessary to raise additional revenue in order to compensate for the loss of revenue from the export tax to meet the increasing cost of importing oil to the east coast, the members of our party hoped that this revenue would be raised in some equitable fashion. There is no argument at all that the government was in the position where it needed additional funds. The only issue was how it set about raising those funds. Of the options open to it, the government could not have chosen a more regressive means of raising the required money.

There are times when a user's tax is entirely appropriate and just. There are other times when a user's tax is just the opposite. In our view that is what we have at the present time. If it made any sense at all to argue that the vast majority of the people who drive automobiles have a genuine option in regard to driving them in terms of the necessity to get to and from work, then the argument put forward by the government might have made some sense. It would have made some sense to say that use of the automobile at this point in the twentieth century in Canada was a genuine option, and therefore if people chose to use that mode of transportation they should pay the additional tax that the government is imposing. However, just the opposite situation exists.

Most people in Canada go to and from work in an automobile because at this point in our history they have no alternative. Whether we are talking about tradesmen who have to go to construction sites many miles away from their place of work by an automobile because that is the only means, or whether we are talking about thousands of fishermen, longshoremen, loggers and miners who, by definition, have to travel to work by automobile, this whole range of workers are put in an unjust position by having to pay this tax.

I would also add to the list all people who live in suburban Halifax or suburban Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Calgary or Vancouver, people who are forced to live in the suburbs because housing prices in the centre of those cities are such that it is impossible for people of average or low income to maintain a residence there. The situation has been worsened by the lack of an urban policy, an urban transit policy which the government could have developed over the past two decades. This lack of policy has meant that people must travel by automobile. In order words, virtually every worker in Canada today is in the position of having to rely upon the automobile as the means of transportation for getting to and from work. Therefore we conclude, Madam Speaker, that this tax is a regressive form of raising revenue, one that places an unjust burden on people of average or low income, and we will have nothing to do with it.

As I said earlier this afternoon, the fair way, in fact the only way of raising the additional funds required is to impose a special income tax on Canadians of upper income, or to use money derived from general revenue which comes both from income tax sources, which are at least relatively progressive, and from taxes imposed upon the corporate sector. Either of these methods would have been just, compared with the method used by the government.

We in this party proposed a series of amendments at committee stage. They were amendments that would have provided exemptions for working Canadians who are required to go to and from work by automobile, as well as for handicapped Canadians, to name just two important categories. But the government has seen fit to reject both. Thus it is our intention at this stage to take the same course of action that we took at second reading stage, namely, to oppose the bill. If the government had shown some readiness to move at the committee stage and accept some plausible and equitable amendments, then our position at this stage might have been something other than what is is. But as is characteristic of the Liberal party of Canada whenever it governs with a clear majority, the government has seen fit to go the way it determined upon originally, which is instead of distributing the economic burden in Canada in favour of the average or low income earner, to persits in aggravating the maldistribution of that economic burden.

This bill is something with which we will have nothing whatsoever to do. I therefore move, seconded by the non. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That Bill C-66 be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence.

● (1740)

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I just want to say that we intend to support the amendment as my friends to my left supported us on the same amendment on second reading.

This bill has been some changes and some improvements. I must say that the improvements which I now see in the bill hardly justify the labour, energy, time and effort which have gone into this debate. Be that as it may, it is a little better bill than it was, but because it is not good enough we are going to vote for the proposed amendment.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, in speaking in support of the motion for six months' hoist I must agree with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that a great deal of effort has been made by members of the opposition in an attempt to improve this bill and to rectify some of its obvious faults, yet little has been accomplished, considering the amount of effort put forward.

This situation is one that develops when we have a majority government. This may be something hon. members in the opposition will have to live with, but it is something that involves a much more important consideration. The suggestions and requests for improvement have been put forward by members of the opposition not for themselves but on behalf of a large segment of the Canadian public.

No tax bill is ever welcomed by the opposition, and it is not likely that a tax bill is welcomed by members of the government. There is a necessity to raise revenue through taxation. I am sure most members will agree that the government has a number of choices as to how it will raise that revenue required for the operations of the country. The government must find that money somewhere, and the choice of where is up to the cabinet.

We have been spoiled during the last eight or ten years in having had a number of minority governments. In such a situation a government is willing on occasion to listen to and consider propositions by the opposition, knowing full well that if it does not there will be an election. The government in the past few years has considered such propositions and, on occasion, accepted changes.

As far as the opposition is concerned, and also I suspect most backbenchers on the Liberal side, the main objection to this measure is in respect of the way the minister has decided to raise $500 million in order to equalize prices in eastern and western Canada. He has chosen to do this through the imposition of a ten cents per gallon tax on gasoline. I think most members will agree with the principle enunciated by the minister.

I am always impressed by the minister's use of the English language and his facility for assuring us that he is concerned about the difficulties he faces in designing budgetary measures to solve the problems of inflation and unemployment. He has often said his primary concern is for the people of Canada, but that he has really not been able to do much about these problems of inflation and unemployment. I suggest the minister has been consistent in respect of Bill C-66. He has said that the measure is necessary to equalize the price of gasoline across Canada. By this bill I suggest he has not moved in any direction toward equalizing that price. I am sure that the price for grade two gasoline will be $1 a gallon in certain parts of Canada, and in the low 70-cents range in other parts. The minister has not in any way through this bill equalized the price.

What the minister is doing through this bill is raising money that will offset to some extent our loss in export revenues. He is accomplishing this not by a measure of equality but by the imposition of a ten cents tax which is unfair in that it will not apply to everyone.

A number of my colleagues have indicated several more equitable methods that could be used to distribute the burden of accomplishing what the minister wants to accomplish. One hon. member suggested a surcharge on income tax at the higher levels. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) was being unfair to the ponies in suggesting that perhaps the minister could collect the necessary revenue from betters at race tracks. A number of suggestions have been made, many of which are more equitable than the one proposed by the minister.

Because of its structure the income tax in this country is one of our most unfair taxes. Under this structure one never pays more than slightly less than 50 per cent. No matter how rich a person is, or how much money he receives per year, he only pays something less than 50 per cent under our income tax structure. This is unfair as well, because the level of income at which the tax reaches 46 per cent or 47 per cent is not very high. In many cases members of parliament with their salaries find themselves in that category. When you reach that relatively middle-class income you find the government has placed a limit on the amount it takes away, so our income tax structure is not fair.

To make the income tax system more equitable we should adopt a graduated scale which would continue beyond the present limit. It would then be possible in this country, as it is in others such as Sweden, to obtain our general revenues from corporate taxes, business taxes, and personal income taxes. Some countries have gone that far, adopting that honest and equitable type of tax, to look after almost all government expenditures, even those at the municipal level.

This country has not been that fair, and this minister certainly maintains the standard set by Liberal governments over the years in relation to our taxation structure. He has done so particularly in respect of this tax measure. The main part of the bill with which most of us are concerned is that portion relating to the ten cents per gallon tax on gasoline. The bill is not fair in respect of exemptions in that it is selective and applies only to certain individuals.

The minister should have given reasonable consideration to the suggestions put forward by the opposition, and I am sure he would have done so if we had a minority government.

An hon. Member: A minority government is not good for the country.

● (1750)

Mr. Peters: Madam Speaker, my colleague on the other side of the House just made the profound statement that a minority government is not good for the country. That is a typical Liberal remark. In other words, if it is not good for the Liberals it is not good for the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: I am happy to note that most Liberals agree. This means that if we had only one party in Canada and it were the Liberal party, then obviously we would have an ideal situation.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Peters: This reminds me of Franco and a number of other such people. I have always been of the opinion that even when there has been a democratic socialist government in Canada it was not always right. In fact I found that the longer it stayed in power the less likely it was to be right.

In my opinion it has always been a good idea to have a strong opposition which brings forward alternatives. It is also a good idea to have an occasional change of government so that another party, which may feel the same as some of the Liberals that their ideas are the only right ideas, would be given an opportunity to put their ideas into effect for at least a short period.

Liberals in this case say that because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is a Liberal he cannot be wrong. We have watched the telegraphing between the floor and the gallery, a new method of operating the Department of Finance by what is called beaming information. I have news for some of the backbench Liberals. The Minister of Finance did not draft these proposals. He has been busy doing many other things, including running world financial organizations and representing his constituents. When they give this vote of confidence to the Minister of Finance they really are giving it to—

Mr. Benjamin: The birds in the roost up there.

Mr. Peters: —the gallery, the mandarins who wondered how they would raise this $500 million. They probably decided it would be a good idea to do it in the form of a gasoline tax. They probably also decided they should not affect big business and that they should place it in context. It really does not matter to a businessman whether or not the tax is imposed, just as it does not matter to people who are engaged in the professions. These people in any event will write off the tax. The people who will not have an opportunity to write off this tax will be many members of parliament, the workers in this country, and the people in a few other categories, such as our senior citizens and others on fixed incomes.

A contractor, for instance, probably would include as a business expense not merely the ten cents but the total price of the gasoline.

An hon. Member: And of course the dredging companies.

Mr. Peters: Let us not get sidetracked into that field because I think the one in which we are involved is interesting enough. I do not consider that the backbenchers of the Liberal party are unresponsive to their constituents. I see many northern members here today whose people must drive considerable distances to their places of employment. I am sure they would like the workers in their constituencies to be able to apply for this rebate. It is possible for someone who operates a plumbing business, for example, to write off the expenses of his vehicles, his equipment, and gasoline, but it is not possible for a worker to write off his expenses, with the exception of the little deduction he was granted after 20 years of urging by this party. The amount of his deduction would not represent the price of a chain saw or many other pieces of equipment that are necessary. I do not imagine the amount involved would equip a miner to work underground.

It seems to me that we are not asking for very much. We are asking for equality, something which I believe the backbenchers of the Liberal party would support if they were not so concerned about believing that any decision made by the Minister of Finance is right.

May I call it six o'clock, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words on the amendment which was proposed by the leader of my party which in effect calls for a six months postponement of this iniquitous bill which, as we have said time and time again in the House, is discriminatory with regard to a large group of working class Canadians. We have asked for a postponement of this bill for six months. I see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) waving no. Well, he can wave no all he wants. I intend to take the full length of the time allotted to me on this amendment.

We have said in the debate that the bill which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has proposed is in large part a method of collecting revenues so that the shortfall in the petroleum account can be met. We have said that this measure is an iniquitous measure, that the method by which the government proposes to collect this $500 million is certainly not fair and not just to far too many Canadians. The exceptions which are made in the bill are such that it makes the bill inequitable. The exceptions do not change the lifestyle of the wealthy but they certainly place constrictions on the lifestyle of other Canadians.

It is all right for the Liberal members to mimick and to jeer, but in effect they must answer to their constituents as well. When they were parading before the Canadian public last July they were not so cocky about this whole matter of raising taxes. Now that they have a majority government they feel they can run roughshod over the opposition and over the Canadian people.

We have said that the bill is a piece of regressive legislation. For the Minister of Finance to rise in the House and put forward such a regressive bill and call it a progressive tax system is ludicrous. I find it difficult to understand how we can make such statements.

The Minister of Finance also said that he wants to change the lifestyle of Canadians and he wants people to conserve energy, he wants them to use less ostentatious cars and be more aware of the need to conserve energy. We have said, and I say it again, that if the government were to establish any credibility with the Canadian public it would have to conduct itself in such a manner that the Canadian public would say, "We will follow that example".

It was interesting to observe during the dinner recess tonight the great limousines lined up at the entrance to pick up the ministers—one minister sitting at the back of a big limousine to be driven to Confederation building, a distance of some 300 yards. If the government were itself aware of the need to conserve energy it would have the right to say to the Canadian people, "We will change your lifestyle". It is easy for them to say to the workers that they should organize car pools. I do not see the ministers organizing car pools. After all, it is not necessary to have 20 limousines to drive 20 ministers to the House every morning. Surely the minister could organize a car pool system. They all have telephones in their limousines.

Surely it is the responsibility of the government to practise what it preaches. It was interesting to hear the comments made by the Minister of Finance when he spoke yesterday evening in response to an amendment put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The minister said:

> But, to give a deduction of the expense of getting to work would be to give a tax subsidy to those who choose to drive rather than take public transport . . . to those who choose to live far from their place of work rather than close, and to those who choose to drive a large automobile rather than to those who drive a small one.

It is the height of hypocrisy and cynicism for any minister to say that people choose to live far from their place of work. In my constituency, as I have said many times in the House, people do not choose to live out in Alban, Noelville or Naughton. They live in those places because they can afford to buy a home there; they cannot buy a home in Sudbury where housing is too expensive.

A piece of land in Sudbury 55 feet wide and 125 feet deep costs $15,000. People cannot afford that kind of investment. They certainly do not choose to live in the places I have named. They live there because of the price of houses, because instead of sewers there is a septic tank system, and because the taxes are not as high as in Sudbury. So it is not a matter of choosing; they are forced to live in such places as Killarney, Markstay Alban, St. Charles, Warren, and all these places with exotic names in my riding. Now the minister comes along with the regressive tax system and says to them, "You will pay ten cents a gallon more and you will receive no rebates". He says that to people who must commute to their work, to people who have no public transit system.

It is not the same as in the city of Ottawa where you have a bus stop in front of your door and where you can go by bus around the capital region on three transfers. It is not that way in Nickel Belt, nor is it in other ridings like mine. This is what we are trying to hammer into the tough skulls of hon. members opposite. We have been trying to tell the government that it should listen to people from these areas who have a reason to be upset about this excise tax.

It is all right for the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) who represents a nice, cosy area of the country. He has no worries. The same cannot be said about the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo), who mentioned in her speech in the House the problems people have in her area with the differential in the price of gasoline between the northern and the southern parts of her riding. We have those problems also. I notice that Mr. Speaker himself wrote a letter to the editor of the Globe and Mail in which he pointed out the differential. On top of that is the differential we have to pay in northern Ontario amounting to almost five cents more on a gallon of gasoline as compared with southern Ontario. On top of that we have this excise tax.

We have said that this is an iniquitous bill because it falls very heavily on too many people in the country who must use their cars to go to work. Many workers in my riding have negotiated a contract over the last two years, and this tax comes right smack in the middle of the contract. They have no way of opening up the contract and renegotiating the added expense. It is certainly not fair. They do not have the same power as do members of parliament. We can increase our salaries by a vote in the House, as we did. As I say, it is all right for the hon. member for Welland to keep mimicking from across the way.

The hon. member does not have to worry about the 10 cent per gallon tax because he can afford it with the wages of a member of parliament. He is a doctor. He can write it off if he is called in the middle of the night. He has a sickly government on his hands, and he is likely to be called at any hour tonight. There are travelling expenses involved in being a member of parliament. He does not have to worry at all. The Minister of Finance took care of members of parliament, and just to ensure that the blow did not fall too heavily, he allowed them to buy wine six and a half cents cheaper per bottle.

Mr. MacKay: They need it.

Mr. Rodriguez: People in my riding do not drink imported wines. We have said that this is an iniquitous bill because the government has imposed a restriction on people who live in certain parts of the country where a car is not a luxury but a necessity. On the other hand, the government has not provided those people with a public transit system to use. There is no public transit system in Nickel Belt. There is a public transit system of sorts in the city of Sudbury, but it does not extend beyond the borders of the city, so the people who live in the areas I have mentioned in my riding must use the automobile. It certainly is not fair.

There are also a large number of people in my riding, and in the ridings of other members of this House who are not within a union. When the union members' contracts come up, they can always negotiate to make up for the ten cent excise tax. It will be a tough fight, but that is another question. But there are a large number of people, mostly women, who work in my riding as waitresses or they sweep up hotel rooms, and they work for the minimum wage. They live in the outlying areas, and therefore a car is a necessity for them to maintain that employment. If it becomes unfeasible for them to continue that employment, they leave it, and they are then ineligible for unemployment insurance because they had no good reason for quitting.

My party has indicated that it will fight this iniquitous bill down to the wire, and we have done that right through this debate. As a matter of fact, as part of our responsibility as members of parliament and as a party, we made proposals to the government. We have proposed alternatives. For example, we proposed that the rebates be applied to those who must use their cars to and from work. We have also suggested that the handicapped be eligible for the rebate when such disabled persons use cars or are driven to their place of employment, for enjoyment or whatever. We also proposed, since we lost those amendments, that the excise tax be reduced from ten cents to one cent per gallon and be applied universally. What does the minister say about allowing workers to claim the rebate, those workers who have to use their cars to go back and forth to work? The minister said, and I quote:

> I do not deny for a minute that there will be cases of hardship. Unfortunately, there is no equitable way to cope with these situations which is administratively feasible.

Are we to believe that this government, which has been in power for a long, long time, is incapable of devising a system whereby it can discriminate and select those of the taxpayers who are using their cars to go to and from work? Are we to say that this country, which was capable of building the tallest freestanding building in Toronto in the guise of the CN tower and which is planning some fantastic buildings for the Olympics in 1976 is incapable of coming up with a bureaucratic system which can separate those who use their cars to go to and from work from those who use their cars for enjoyment? Statistics show that the percentage of those who own cars which are used for frivolous reasons, for enjoyment or for holidays, is very small compared to those who use their cars to travel to work. In this society we have built our community around the automobile.

The minister talks about conservation. Just the other day I was watching television, and a commercial came on for, I think, Texaco. Texaco is encouraging consumers to purchase its gasoline, and if customers accumulate so many coupons from a particular dealer, they receive glassware, cutlery and tea sets. Does that fit in with some kind of conservation policy? I dare say that 99 per cent of the drivers in this country already have decided on a particular brand of gasoline, so it is not to attract those who use Gulf gasoline to start using Texaco gasoline. It is obviously geared to increasing the usage of that particular brand of gasoline. That is what the advertisements are directed toward. It seems to me that that kind of gimmickery is the gimmickery which ought to be taxed, and not consumers who must use fuel to get to work.

It seems to me that if the government has a conservation policy, it should be reflected in the total spectrum of what is going on in this country. How can we have oil companies pushing consumption and, on the other hand, the government talking about conservation of energy? The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand)—and this is another case of trying to change the lifestyle of the Canadian people—said that transportation is in a mess. He certainly was not kidding. What is the government trying to do? I have said before—and it seems to me that hon. members have not taken it seriously—that we do not have a nationally-owned railway company. The CN does not have one passenger car on order. Are we trying to develop interurban transportation? Are we trying to get people off airplaines and on to railway cars? Not on your life, Mr. Speaker. What does this government do? It is prepared to spend $100 million at Terminal 2, at Toronto airport, building more parking lots. How does one reconcile what the government says about conservation of energy and changing the lifestyle of the people? Are we trying to improve the railway service in this country? No, we are not.

The government built the STOL airport here for people flying from Ottawa to Montreal. People can be moved by rail just as economically or more so. The railway is a far more economical method of transporting people than flying. As a matter of fact, statistics show that moving people by airplane over a distance of 500 miles is not at all economical. Air Canada reported a loss of $19 million last year on the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal route, yet we see big ads by Air Canada today which is selling two seats out of three, leaving the one in the middle empty. How can the government talk about changing lifestyles, economy and conservation of energy when it turns around and does such stupid things? How can the government be credible to the Canadian people?

It has been said that television ought to be brought into the House of Commons. I look forward to the day when the Minister of Finance can make hypocritical statements as he did last night when he said that we could not have a bureaucratic structure which could separate those who are using cars to travel to and from work from those who do not. How does the minister propose to do this with regard to doctors who are called out in the middle of the night when he says he cannot do it for carpenters and plumbers because they are on contracts? So are doctors. They are on contract with OHIP. If they go out in the middle of the night, they can put in a bill to OHIP for their services. No one is quarrelling about that, but we want the same privilege to be extended to people in the working class.

We have proposed a reasonable amendment. Every member in this corner of the House agrees that it is. There is not one here who disagrees.

An hon. Member: I do.

Mr. Rodriguez: That hon. member is a Liberal transplanted to these benches.

We have suggested that this bill be hoisted for six months—and I think that is a wise suggestion—so that the government can rethink its position and reconsider the inequities in this particular tax bill. I recall that in the last election the Liberal candidate in Sudbury was promising "We want the railway tracks out of the city. We are going to push hard for it." The Liberal candidate in Nickel Belt was saying, "We want them in Nickel Belt." That says something about the transportation policy of the government. The government has shown how phony the arguments have been. We have made some excellent suggestions about how it could collect taxes. We suggested it would be more fair to take the money out of general revenues, and those who do not own cars could be compensated by an allowance on their income tax. It is supposed to be a great system. Those who have money should pay, and those with the least income should pay less. It seems to me that that kind of progressive income tax structure is better than this excise tax.

The minister has been given some other very good suggestions by this party. I have suggested that people who go to the race track should pay another three cents on every dollar they bet. At the moment the tax is 15 cents on the dollar. We could pull in another $9 million from the Ontario Jockey Club through the thoroughbred flat racing and I have not even included standard breds. There are many tracks in this country and on any given night the amount wagered is from $215,000 to $400,000.

We have suggested that corporations that have deferred their taxes to the tune of $7 billion should pay an interest rate of 10 per cent. That seems fair in view of the fact that they have enjoyed the benefits of deferring payment of their taxes. I cannot defer my tax nor can you, Mr. Speaker, so it seems fair that they should pay interest on that loan.

We have made constructive suggestions to the government but they have fallen on deaf ears. We have repeated them many times hoping to puncture the wax that has accumulated in those ears, but to no avail.

When we were campaigning last summer the Liberals promised an urban transit system. They were going to bring together all passenger services in one commission, develop inter-urban transportation, and move people on trains. The election is over; it was certainly a short day for them. They have forgotten it now that they have a majority. They have derailed the Canadian people and pushed them all on to airplanes. Not too many people in Nickel Belt can afford to fly; they are not on a travel expense account. They have not got government planes to fly them around, like the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has his helicopter. How much did the weekend jaunt to the barbecue in Brantford cost? How can the government say to the people, "You economize on fuel"? That is phony. They say, "Don't do as I do, do as I say."

This bill is an iniquitous bill. We have consistently tried to improve it with amendments. We are now getting down to the third reading stage and we have submitted a reasonable amendment suggesting a six months' hoist so that Liberal members can go on their holidays. They can enjoy driving around to see Canada, and they can afford to pay the excise tax on their big salaries of $22,500, plus $10.000 expenses. It would be great if the workers in Nickel Belt could vote themselves an increase, but unfortunately they cannot. I know hon. members are anxious to get away. Let it never be said that I kept them from going on their holidays.

Some hon. Members: Never!

Mr. Rodriguez: I know the Minister of Finance has a station wagon packed; the kids are scrubbed and ready; the camp has been cleaned out for three weeks. I know that is happening. I know there are members across the way who have their plans. One member bought a trailer, had Father Hogan bless it for him, and parked it outside for a week, hoping to get off on his holidays.

An hon. Member: Where is Father Hogan?

Mr. Rodriguez: I am not a vindictive person and I should like to see them get away on their holidays. My holidays are minuscule—

Mr. Anderson: Same as your brain.

Mr. Rodriguez: Many people in my riding cannot go on holidays because this ten cents excise tax places constrictions on them. It does not place constrictions on me or other members of the House; that is what is so iniquitous about it. Those who earn big wages can afford the ten cents excise tax. It does not change our lifestyle, but it constricts the lifestyle of too many small people in Canada. That is why I object so strongly, and if I have to speak three more times tonight I am going to, Mr. Speaker.

I know what I say falls on deaf ears but the least I, as an individual member, can do is make them postpone their holodays for another day. I can go back to my constituents and say that I have done my best on this issue.

Mrs. Holt: You have done nothing.

Mr. Rodriguez: You be quiet. Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting to note that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is vociferous when she does not have the floor. I wish that some Liberal members would get up and apologize for this bill. I know they are going to be very upset if they do not get the third reading vote tonight, but it will not upset me. They have all been anxious; their cars are filled up with gas; they have their cheques and are ready to go. As a matter of fact some of them said it was a good thing we were back here today so that they could pick up their cheques. There are many small people in this country—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is the first honest remark you have made tonight.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the barbs and gibes. I was not elected by anybody in this chamber but by the people of Nickel Belt. That is where my responsibility lies. I only wish a few more members in this House would remember where their responsibility lies.

Any government backbencher who votes for this iniquitous bill is hypocritical about this whole situation and has betrayed his constituents. They will have to go back and face their constituents and tell them why they did not vote against it. I hope they will tell them that the reason for paying the ten cents excise tax is in order to collect the money they need from those who have cars. The bill is not only unfair, it is iniquitous, inequitable, and disastrous.

On the east coast recently the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) called the leadership of one union irresponsible, deceptive, and dishonest. Those epithets can equally be applied to the government. With respect to this bill it is irresponsible, deceptive and, it seems to me, dishonest.

I am sure I have said it before, that last July during the election campaign the government must have known it was in a shortfall position with respect to the petroleum account. But would government supporters have told their constituents during the election campaign, "If you vote for us we shall put an excise tax on gasoline to make good the deficit in the oil account"? I am sure they would not. Not one of them would have said, "Yes, we are going to tax working class people, but we shall give better-off people a rebate". I doubt if any of them would have said that to their constituents. Yet here we were on June 23, less than one year after the election, and the minister introduced a budget which proposed this regressive excise tax. And I suggest that comparing this regressive excise tax with the progressive income tax is dishonest. The excise tax is regressive as it will bear most heavily on certain sections of the community which can least afford it.

I know other members of my party will have strong words to say in support of the amendment. I urge hon. members on all sides to support our amendment. If accepted, it would provide time for hon. members to cogitate and meditate on the effects of this bill. I think six months is long enough. I know Liberals think slowly; perhaps they need one year, but six months will have to do. In the next two months let them talk to their constituents; let them ask their opinions about the tax and see what they think. Perhaps when they come back they will think differently on this matter, but I doubt it. I know how hard headed and stubborn these Liberals are, and how difficult it is to get them to accept progressive ideas.

I urge hon. members to support our amendment, as it is a wise one presented by a wise leader. I submit that our amendment is worthy of support.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. First of all, I congratulate the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) for having introduced that amendment and specially for having spoken only five minutes. In spite of that, I am sure he said all he had to say. Tonight, I heard, for the sixth time, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I feel the House of Commons is being taken somewhat for a racing track. I believe the hon. member for Nickel Belt was not born in a democratic country. Today, he lives in a democratic land. He acts somewhat like a child who has been deprived of toys all his life. As soon as he gets some of his choice, he goes overboard. I am afraid that is what happened to him. But there is a limit. We are living in a democracy. That must be understood. The hon. member for Nickel Belt must understand that. He is not sitting with a socialist government, and if he were he would not speak the way he did tonight, I assure him, he would not then speak as he has done since the beginning of the sitting.

He must bear in mind that there are 264 other hon. members, and that he is taking up all the time of the House.

Mr. Speaker, we will go on endlessly discussing this bill. This evening, I heard the same speech repeated a sixth time. It is simply ridiculous! We must come to a decision. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) moved an amendment. We are going to vote on that. Democracy, our democratic system requires it. Even the hon. member for Nickel Belt would go on shouting against government members for three more hours. They will vote but they will not change their thinking in any way. They will come and vote. Let us wait for the vote. We will vote, after all. I wonder why we are maintaining this kind of filibuster to try and catch the people's attention. Let us rely on democracy, we are in a free country. Fortunately this is a free country, but let us not fall from freedom into anarchy. I for one favour the amendment moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt, because I feel the 10 cents per gallon tax is unfair, anti-social, the most anti-social in this session. It is unfair because it affects a group of workers that are the worst off economically, because those that are burdened have no alternative to get to and from work. They have no choice. The main argument submitted by the minister to impose this tax is conservation.

But with the proposed exemptions at both levels of government, there will be outmost extravagances and gasoline expenditures. And the minister says this legislation is to conserve energy or favour public transit! Of course it is known that our public transit systems are now inadequate. They are nonexistent in some areas. And while certain people are fighting for public transit, the government is fighting them.

I gave an example the other day. In my area of Roberval, we have been fighting for all we could for five or six years to keep our public transit system, but the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is trying every means to kill it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) comes along and says: This is an effort to encourage the working people to use public transportation. How can anyone be so ridiculous, Mr. Speaker?

With regard to saving on gas consumption, when one sees the CN entering into a contract with a trucking firm to deliver merchandise in our region, merchandise that was previously delivered by the CN without burning a single gallon of gas, which means using up thousands of gallons of gas, and then one hears the Minister of Finance stating that we must save on gas, something has to be wrong. Well, Mr. Speaker, the population is not as stupid as that.

What I fail to comprehend is the unanimous attitude of government members. Unanimity! Not one dares speak against the government. Or rather I can explain it by the party's dictature in caucus, a fact that I have always denounced in this House. Such are the results of a majority government. Today, the Liberal government is imposing this unpopular tax because it knows that the next elections are far away. And I am willing to bet that on the eve of the next elections, this same government will remove this tax to please the voters of this country. All Liberal partisans will forget the date of June 24, 1975, not because it is the French Canadians' day, but because it was the day a ten-cent tax on a gallon of gas was forced on those unable to pay it.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this marathon of debates will end and I urge all opposition parties to vote. That is the game of democracy and I hope that tonight we shall keep that democracy alive in giving members of Parliament this freedom. They are entitled to their way of thinking, but I believe that in the end the people will be the ones to judge their representatives.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the amendment on third reading to explain why we feel this bill should sit for another six months to give the government time to bring in another piece of legislation which would raise the amount of money we agree is required, and do so in a much better way.

I am not one of those who think the continuance of this debate is an exercise in game playing or anything else. If I did not feel strongly that this is the wrong way to raise the amount of money the government requires I would not be on my feet tonight. This would be the case whatever party happened to be in power.

An hon. Member: That is hard to believe.

Mr. Benjamin: Our first criticism of this legislation, and it always has been since the day it was introduced, is that it requires the collection of money from those who have the least ability to pay it, while leaving those who have most ability to pay free from contributing their share toward the amount required to equalize petroleum prices across Canada.

In the second place the legislation abounds with unjust provisions, provisions which taken together exclude any credibility which might otherwise attach to this proposal for imposing a sales tax on gasoline. There are those who say parliament is sitting for nothing, wasting time, and wasting the taxpayers' money. Some of them sit in this chamber. Some are in the press gallery. Others write ivory tower columns in newspapers. But there are many in this House who have criticized the legislation before us on the ground that the government has chosen the wrong way to raise the revenue required for a legitimate national purpose.

We have suggested ever since the bill came in that when a given amount of money is required to accomplish a national goal the government has a duty to put forward legislation which is fair to the greatest possible number of people from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We contend that the legislation before us not only fails to do this but actually moves in the opposite direction. I shall not go into all the details, no doubt to the relief of hon. members across the way. They know those arguments. I will simply ask them this: if they were sitting as members of a municipal council, or of a school board, or of a provincial legislature, would they countenance the imposition of a tax for a specific purpose which bore most heavily on those least able to pay it?

I listened with a good deal of incredulity this afternoon to the discussion on who might be excused from the payment of this ten cents per gallon tax. In itself, ten cents on a gallon of gasoline or on whatever amount of gas a person may use in a year is not an extraordinarily large sum. But in terms of the kind of parliament this parliament is likely to be, it is important. We have only been here one year and there are three more to go. So the issue is important in terms of whether or not parliament is in fact the body governing our country.

I am shocked to think that members of parliament sitting in this chamber would turn their backs on a proposal to relieve handicapped people from the obligation of paying this tax. It was bad enough that the Liberals should have stood up against that proposal. The worst tragedy was when the Official Opposition not only withdrew their amendment, which was a darned good one, but abstained from voting on a subsequent amendment to exempt handicapped people totally from paying tax on any gas they might use whether for pleasure, attending clinics, or going to and from work. These great friends of the workers and the common people in the Official Opposition failed to vote. I wish the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) had been here; I do not think he would have liked it.

There are errors of omission on the part of all members of opposition parties. There is only the odd occasion in the course of the life of a majority government when an issue arises on a matter of principle on which we can all fight to the line. I want to say there are even some people here in my own caucus who are not here and who should be here. While I admit to, and confess, the failings in my own ranks, I want to say to the members supporting the government who have this traditional Liberal state of mind and attitude, that they are the only ones selected to govern, they are the only ones who know, they are the only ones "who have all the answers"—if once in a while they sit in opposition it is only a temporary aberration and loss of sense on the part of the voters!

But in a traditional British parliamentary system I would expect that even members on the government side in the British House of Commons would have risen and voted against some of the measures in this bill. But not a sound out of one of them, unless they are nattering while signing letters or standing behind the curtains or sneaking in from behind the curtains like sheep to vote.

We have presented at least 12 other ways to raise $350 million in 1975 and to raise the $500 million to $525 million required in the 12 months of 1976. All of these ways would have ensured a great deal more equity, fairness and justice than the provisions of this bill. Some of them would have been proposed at Liberal party conventions or even by a minority Liberal government. But when in the majority, they know everything. There is not a thing they can do wrong. They are the only ones fit to govern. I hear the hon. lady across the way lightly pounding her desk. I am glad she only pounded her desk lightly; I know her heart was not in it. If she will pound it harder, I will have some other words to say.

To collect the $525 million for the oil consumption fund in a manner which would bring about a genuine equalized price from coast to coast, and to collect it in a way that would be fair and just, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) could have done any one of the following. I have not seen any editorials or news stories carrying these proposals, but personally I do not worry about that. That is a reflection on the members of the press gallery who are not much different from members of the House of Commons. They, too, are worried about getting off to the lake, or going fishing, or getting together with the wife and kids this summer. It would be very nice, however, if the media were not captives of the kind of system under which we operate. It would be very nice if on their own hook, without waiting for or relying upon members of parliament, they had suggested to the government in their editorials, columns or news stories more equitable and just ways in which this money could have been raised.

What I say does not apply just to this bill. Budget bills are nothing more than the result of a budget, and this budget was one with which the minister should not have bothered. Let me illustrate. We could raise the $525 million which is required in the calendar year 1976 and the $350 million that is required in part of 1975 in a manner that is just, one based on ability to pay, if we had said to individual taxpayers that each of them with a taxable income in excess of a certain amount would pay a 3 per cent higher rate of effective tax, or that the corporations would pay a 10 per cent higher effective tax rate. Or we could have had a combination of both and levied an additional 5 per cent corporate tax rate and a 1½ or 2 per cent higher individual tax rate. Then, the burden of raising this money would have been spread among those with the ability to pay.

Instead of that, the government chose to levy a ten cents a gallon excise tax. In levying this tax, the minister provides in the bill that if those in the higher income brackets are in business or in the professions, they must keep records as a basis for claiming this expenditure as an expense item to be deducted from their income tax. If they are in a 25 per cent or 30 per cent tax bracket, then they will have the benefit of paying less taxes as the result of having deducted their total purchases of gasoline or any other legitimate business expense.

In addition to that, a professional person engaged in commercial enterprise, as the legislation so describes, may apply for a rebate. The minister has told the House that a doctor, lawyer, architect, chartered accountant and so forth cannot apply for a rebate on gasoline used in driving to and from work. I submit they have already had a rebate given to them through their income tax returns. But added to that, they will still apply for a rebate of the gasoline tax, as the bill provides.

Let me deal now with those I referred to earlier, the people who can least afford to pay the tax. I realize that not very much money is involved during the course of a year—the sort of amount that one would spend, say, in the parliamentary restaurant or in some fancy restaurant in downtown Ottawa on a given evening. But it is the people on fixed incomes and the pensioners who, as usual under free enterprise government tax systems, will pay a disproportionate share of the tax burden. An old age pensioner who might use his car three times a week will contribute anywhere from $1 to $3 a month by way of excise tax. This will amount to as much as, or a little more than, the last cost of living escalation of the old age pension, which I think was $2.33 a month.

Every member of the House has in his constituency old age pensioners who drive automobile for what the Minister of Finance and hon. members opposite call pleasure. Let me examine this so-called pleasure. These old age pensioners make one trip a week to buy groceries. They have no other way of transporting themselves than by the automobile, but the Minister of Finance calls that pleasure. They make two or three trips a month to the doctor's office, and according to the Minister of Finance that, too, is pleasure driving. They make two or three trips a year to visit their children or grandchildren; again according to the Minister of Finance that is pleasure. There are no rebates for such expenditure. We pleaded with the government to exempt those people who are drawing old age pensions and the guaranteed income supplement. More particularly, we asked the government to exempt those who are drawing old age pensions and are liable for some income tax on income they receive over and above the old age pensions.

Can it be classed as driving for pleasure when these people drive their automobiles 8,000 or 10,000 miles a year to pick up their groceries, go to the doctor's office, or to visit their children and grandchildren? This does not involve a large amount of money in each of these individual cases and it is not a large amount in the total financial picture of this country. Surely this legislation is an indication that we are travelling down the same road we have been travelling all along.

There is another way the government could have raised this revenue. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) have mentioned this method. I will not refer again to the race tracks and horses, but will refer only to deferred taxes. There are deferred taxes lying on the books of this country amounting to $7 billion. Would it not be reasonable to charge a small interest rate on these deferred taxes, perhaps 7.5 per cent? This would be a much lower rate than the rest of us are paying on money that we owe. This would raise the $525 million the Minister of Finance must have next year.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

If we were to put out $7 billion in mortgages for people who want to buy homes there would be a cry of protest and outrage from the financial institutions, the realtors, and the developers. If we were to put out $7 billion in interest free loans for the construction of homes there would be a great cry of outrage, yet we carry on the books of this nation $7 billion in deferred taxes.

This party has moved that this bill not be read now a third time but that it be read six months hence for a very good reason, and we will move the same motion in respect of any other budget bills the government might want to bring in this fall. If hon. members are worrying now about a summer recess they should start worrying as well about a Christmas and New Year's recess.

This bill imposes a penalty on those people who earn wages and salaries whether or not they belong to unions. If they live five miles or more from their places of work and drive that distance, in the course of 12 months they will have paid back every dollar of tax credit they may have gained from the $150 allowed for the cost of tools and other expenses. If those people saved $30 in income tax, this measure will take more than that amount back.

In addition, this ten cents a gallon tax will take back from the working people who drive several miles to and from their places of employment all the benefit of the tax credit each taxpayer is receiving as a result of the first $50 credit, then the $100 credit, and then the $150 credit. Incidentally, this is now back to $100. This measure will take back from those workers every dollar gained from that tax credit.

One of my friends opposite sent me a chart which is being circulated among the Liberal caucus. The way it reads, if you drive 7,000 miles a year averaging 15 miles per gallon, this amounts to only 469 gallons which, at 10 cents a gallon, amounts to $46.90. This is the chart those Liberal members are passing around, I presume to salve their own consciences. This is a nice little chart and very convenient, but they have forgotten a few things in this chart they are passing around while patting each other on the back.

If you drive 7,000 miles a year to and from work, the ten cents a gallon tax on the gasoline amounts to $46.90. This proves one of the points I have just made. It takes away every nickel these people gain on their income tax as a result of the $150 deduction for expenses. In fact it takes away more than they gain.

The Liberal members have forgotten a couple of other things when circulating these cooked-up figures. They have forgotten also that on August 15, or very shortly thereafter, there will be another five cents a gallon increase in the cost of gasoline because of the increase in oil prices. Those members have also forgotten that when the companies pass on the ten cents and five cents increases, the distributors, bulk dealers, and retailers will all take their percentage of mark-up so that the total final increase in gasoline prices will be somewhere between 18 cents and 22 cents a gallon. This will mean in turn that people will lose everything they gained as a result of the $100 tax credit. It will have been taken away from them by this one silly and dumb bill.

The Minister of Finance could have raised this revenue, which we all agree the government must have in order to treat people relatively equal across the country, in a manner which would have been more equitable and just. The minister has failed to do so.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) paid a mild compliment to the government today for accepting a couple of minor changes to the bill. The government has failed to accept the suggestion that it withdraw the bill entirely. It has failed to agree to some of our suggestions on a better way to raise this required revenue. It was my hope that some of these suggestions would have come from the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo), the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni), or from Liberal members of parliament who represent ridings in highly industrialized areas with a large working force, which is that segment of the population that will pay the largest proportion of this tax. These suggestions did not come from those hon. members. In any event, the government refused to accept the proposed amendments.

Let me say to hon. members opposite that they are not always 100 per cent right. Their party is not the only party fit to govern, and those hon. members are not always infallible in the legislation they bring forward. The government weakens the democratic process of our parliamentary system when it flies in the face of the general public with something like this that is so obviously unfair and unjust.

I suggest the motion before us is one that warrants a vote. It puts forward what we have been trying to say about this particular bill, and what I suspect we will be saying about subsequent bills arising from the last budget in the months ahead. If this debate has done nothing else I hope it has taught hon. members opposite a lesson. I hope they will remember the lesson when they are in caucus and in committee, and when they are giggling together in the backbenches and behind the curtains. I hope they have learned something from this exercise. I hope this lesson will be reflected in the next piece of legislation that comes before this House arising from the latest budget. More important, I hope the minister has received the message.

The message we have tried to put forward is that you do not place the largest part of the tax burden on those who are least able to pay, while at the same time letting those who can pay off the hook. How any self-respecting member of parliament can hold still for that kind of nonsense is just beyond me.

This is a bad bill and this is the wrong way of raising this revenue. I only wish this bill had come before us some 18 months ago. We would then have gone through the usual process of having Liberals come over here behind the curtains clutching Conservatives, New Democrats, and Créditistes by the elbow and asking them what they would like to have in this bill or what it would take to get it through quickly. On such occasions butter would not melt in their mouths. Then they are the greatest democrats one could find.

Now the arrogance rises to the surface again. It would seem that they are the only ones fit to govern. The arrogance is apparent in their expressions, in their smiles, and in their jeers. They meet us in the elevator at the fifth floor by the cafeteria and ask us to shut off the debate because they have an engagement or want to go to the lake. Their arrogance shows up in the way they talk, smile, and jeer. They do not move amendments or speak the way they want to speak. They are the government. If they really want to do something about parliamentary practice, here is the opportunity. They might not have another opportunity for a year or two. This is an opportunity for ordinary members of parliament—they are all nice, bright fellows—to say that the method being followed through this bill is the wrong method. No one is perfect. That might be news to my hon. friends opposite.

Members opposite should say that this bill is wrong, and give it a six months' hoist. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the government House leader, and the Minister of Finance would hoist this bill and then come back in two or three weeks with a new piece of legislation to raise the revenue required in a fair and equitable manner, they would be surprised at how fast that legislation would go through. They would realize there is more involved in parliament than just having a majority. They should think more about the people who sent them here. They should think about the people who must drive to the hospitals and to physiotherapy treatment centres. These are the people who must drive cars and yet they are being excluded from the rebate. Do any of you have the courage to speak for the people who elected you? That applies to all of us in every part of this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that he should address the Chair rather than the members on the right hand side.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I was speaking of everyone in this House, and when I was asking the members of this House to speak up for those who sent them here, I was including you, Madam Speaker, in those remarks. I want to conclude by saying to my hon. friends—and I mean friends—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You should use another term.

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friends might feel I have overstated the case or have become carried away. If they do, I apologize, but I do not apologize for the sincerity of my argument. In fact I am proud of the fact that we are still sitting here tonight in a whatever one might call it—a futile or last ditch effort. I meant every single word I said. Hon. members on all sides of the House have an opportunity to ask the government to take back this bill and present another one designed to raise the same amount of money in a more equitable and just manner, and not to fly in the face of principles which I know my hon. friends across the way hold dear.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I wish to take only a few minutes of the House's time this evening to refer again to the amendment I presented this afternoon in an opportunity to obtain a rebate for the handicapped people. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) expressed puzzlement that we did not vote for his belated amendment. On behalf of my party I chose instead to trade off an amendment that the government could easily have defeated for a commitment from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to achieve the same aim by regulation. It would seem to me that this was much better than an effort to score debating points.

It seemed to me I should accept the firm commitment of one of the most honourable of the Queen's Privy Councillors, the Minister of Finance, to bring forth similar regulations. Our party could have won the debate, but the handicapped would not have been given the right to a rebate from this inequitable tax. An elderly constituent once told me that a member of parliament could accomplish a lot if he did not worry too much about who received the credit. I recommend my constituent's advice to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that Bill C-66 has been like a bingo game with the famous No. 66. There has been a great deal of discussion and debate in an attempt to have the government realize the wisdom of withdrawing the bill, to have the government approve amendments, or even to have the government itself bring in amendments. It is regretted that the government has adopted such an arbitrary and harsh method to extract funds from the people of our country.

I must agree with most of the remarks made by members of the opposition parties in the House. However, they have fallen on deaf ears. It would be appropriate now to direct pressure to another part of the anatomy. There are other alternative methods to raise revenue, but the Liberal government evidently is not prepared to show leadership in relieving the country of the burden caused by the crisis which faces us. The day Bill C-66 is proclaimed will be a sad day for this country and for many of its citizens. Nevertheless the bill and the amendments have been debated relentlessly.

The bill should never have been presented. It should have been withdrawn. It is imperfect. I am not too sure that it is not contrary to the provisions of Magna Carta in that it gives authority to the governor in council to tax without representation. That is what taxation by decree or order in council is. At this time, however, it appears to me that it is time to give everyone in the House an opportunity see where they stand on the amendment, on the bill and on the motions before the House. I have the impression that this session has lasted about ten months and most members of parliament in the House are on edge. Therefore, I propose the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the House sit beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment this evening for the following purpose: To complete the debate and to complete all action on amendments and all proceedings and stages of Bill C-66, and act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. At present we are debating the motion moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and it is not possible to accept the motion in the form introduced by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones).

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Jones: Madam Speaker, this motion is moved under Standing Order 6(5)(a). As I read the rule, such a motion can be moved any time and it is not subject to debate or amendment. I think it must be put to the House now.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, I merely wish to give a few particulars on—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. Does the hon. member wish to speak on the motion? The motion of the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) cannot be dealt with in its present form, because the House is discussing an amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). If the hon. member wishes to carry on the debate on the amendment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, he may do so.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, I merely wish to make a few comments on Bill C-66 as well as on the amendment under discussion.

I realize that all my colleagues are somewhat nervous. On one hand, we would like the House to proceed in a regular fashion to the passage of a legislation but on the other hand, we feel that all parliamentarians are somewhat tired. It is normal that after ten months of session, each of us would like to return in his constituency to spend a few days with the family, which is good for every Canadian. Parliamentarians are also Canadian citizens, and of course, they want to be able to live for a few days, a few weeks.

Madam Speaker, I hear members on the government side say that I am saying nice things. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is giving me the signal to cut it short. There is good sense in that. But the fact remains that we are not here to have fun. We are here to govern.

If we recognize that the Liberal party is responsible for introducing laws to Parliament, I recognize that Parliament is responsible for passing the bills that are put to it. We are not here to oppose the government systematically. Come on! We are here to represent part of the population, and it has been proved that the opposition represents 57 per cent of the population; that part of the population feels saturated with taxes; the time has come to find new formulas, and I believe hon. members, as a group, feel somewhat responsible for finding them.

I see the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) go through the same motion as our grandmothers when they unwinded a skein of wool. I do not understand what he means by that, but it does not matter: I am not here for that. Over the past few days, I have had the opportunity to meet and talk with my constituents, school boards and other organizations. I have conducted this study in a serious and responsible manner and I have come to the conclusion that most people are against Bill C-66, especially in connection with the famous 10-cent tax on gas.

I want to fulfil my duties as the elected representative of a group of people who are willing to assume their responsibilities, accept their tax burden for the administration of our country, but not blindfolded. They want explanations. Why does the government insist on imposing a 10-cent tax on every gallon of gas which will be used in Canada? They want to know from the government what regulations will be edicted following the adoption of this bill? They want to know whether it is the members of Parliament or bureaucrats and technocrats who are in charge of this country and who will later on edict regulations and determine what classes of people will be considered as businessmen, and if such and such person will be deemed to be in business.

And I think it is important for the population to know that the members of parliament, their representatives, knew what they were doing when they voted that bill, and that is why I insist again tonight, Madam Speaker that the procedure be modified, that we get out of that system whereby members of Parliament adopt a legislation and bureaucrats and technocrats decide to interpret members' will.

I am tired of that, I am disgusted of that, and I want to say it tonight, at the third reading stage of that important Bill C-66, so that it will be known once and for all. I must commend the President of the Privy Council (M. Sharp), whom I see at his seat tonight, despite the length of the session, for still being here tonight to listen to members' representations. Let's adopt once and for all in the committee on procedure and organization a different method so that regulations that will be voted be enacted after that bill has been adopted. Because the government has a majority, they are sure the bill will be adopted. Come on! But we will not be mistaken for a bunch of dummies. We know that government members are a majority. Maybe several of them will tell their constituents tomorrow: "We did not agree with the tax on gasoline, but as things stood, there was a case of absolute necessity and we had to say yes. We were asked to stick together". Well, we already know that this legislation will be passed by the government majority, but I strongly doubt that the people in my constituency will congratulate the Liberal party. I guess on the contrary they will ask the Liberals to help them, to give them directions as to how they can get a refund on the tax.

It is extraordinary to hear the remarks of ordinary people. They wonder: Will I manage to get a refund? If they accept to pay that tax, they keep hoping they will get a refund, but what about the small taxpayer, the factory worker, the one who drives from Berthier or Montmagny to the shipyard in Lauzon, who has to drive some 35 or 40 miles, what about the worker from Montmagny who goes to work on American sites, in the state of Maine, as a hewer of wood, who has to pay for the gasoline he needs to get there? Will he be glad that this legislation was passed, whereas in fact the government could find different means if they sincerely wanted to alleviate the burden of taxes on the shoulders of Canadians taxpayers? Let us concentrate on large corporations and let us investigate all their fraudulent schemes to cheat our income tax legislation. They just have to find all sorts of ways not to pay the taxes they owe the federal government.

Madam Speaker, I hear colleagues in this House who seem to disagree but who deep inside know that I am telling the truth. They know I have the courage to say in this House what is actually happening and there is an injustice done to individuals, small businesses, workers, all those who labour day after day to earn a living and serve the people. Madam Speaker, that has lasted long enough. We should demand from large corporations the same discipline, the same claims, the same procedures so they will file honest reports with the Department of Revenue and if they owe $1 million they will pay $1 million, if they owe $2 million they will pay $2 million, just like we demand of the taxpayer who owes $600 that he pay $600.

Well, Madam Speaker, I see my colleagues opposite find that funny. We are not here to administer like a gang of jokers, you know that. We are here to administer in a conscientious, objective, and honest way. Madam Speaker, we often suggested alternatives, means different from those used now. They were not to be accepted. I respect that will. I respect that decision. But at least, Madam Speaker, let the Minister of Finance and all his colleagues as well as all Liberal members of the Parliament of this country come up with other formulas. That is what the people want.

And if we do not introduce other formulas our economic system that we know, that we like, that we have always stood for, that I will continue to stand for as the member for Bellechasse, we will be making a mistake. Indeed, I feel strongly about private enterprise but I would like private enterprise to be able to survive, to give its full capacity, not to be crushed by burdens, taxes of all kinds, reports, bureaucracy and so on. I like private enterprises which represents a tremendous force in this country, and it was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) who said in this House about six months ago in an official statement, that private enterprise provides 60 per cent of jobs in the country. I hear, Madam Speaker, but I shall not get angry, I am a peaceful man—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member for Bellechasse has the floor. He might be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): That is parliamentary life at its best. I thank you, Madam Speaker, for your intervention because when all is said and done, it will appear to the Canadian people as a responsible intervention in a responsible Parliament. What does it matter, Madam Speaker, whether or not the majority likes what the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) says. This member is entitled to express his views and to defend his constituents' interests on any given legislation. I think that I have never abused the privileges of the House. I have always tried to use the time allocated to me in the most constructive way in order to express views, defend opinions I consider to be meaningful. Then, in such a serious situation, I believe that tonight we must think it over and consider the validity of the proposed amendment, so that we might postpone this legislation to a later date, in order to think it out, make a further search for the means to give the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) the required funds for him to assure every department of the amount required for good management. But I believe that the means proposed to us in Bill C-66 is not a very popular one, nor a fair way to individuals; that is why, between the recess and the next session, we should meet and examine together what opportunities we have to try and assure the Minister of Finance of the required funds he needs within fiscal year 1975-76, without resorting to such a drastic measure which deeply affects the income of individuals and, particularly, workers, the income which is necessary for them to meet the needs of their family.

Mr. Sharp: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I have consulted with the House leaders and I think there is a disposition on the part of all members to continue this evening until we dispose of Bill C-66. I know the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) made a motion earlier under Standing Order 6(5)(a) but I understand he is willing to withdraw that, if that is in order. In any event, I believe there is agreement in the House that we continue sitting until Bill C-66 is disposed of, but not the adjournment motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Speaker, this is quite acceptable to us under the circumstances. While I judge there are many empty vessels in this House right now, some of them might be persuaded to keep making sounds until third reading has been completed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, the statement by the government House Leader represents the agreement we have reached.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, I believe that we have come to an agreement and that we all are ready to dispose of this bill tonight, even if we are not fully satisfied with it.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on the amendment to the main motion. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Call in the members.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the amendment lost. The question is on the motion that Bill C-66 be now read a third time and do pass. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to speak at the third reading stage to express the opinion of my party as concerns this bill. I want to say that we are not more in favour of the bill at this time than we were at the second reading stage. In spite of the efforts made by the opposition to change the opinion of the government or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and in spite of some amendments, I wonder how this bill can be applied.

We can read the following on page 2 of the bill:

Where gasoline has been purchased by

(b) a person for commercial or business purposes,

Who will determine if the gasoline was purchased for commercial or business purposes?

Paragraph (c) says:

(c) a farmer for farming purposes,

Who will determine if the gasoline was purchased by a farmer or by someone who works in a city and farms part-time? Once again, as I said this afternoon, a public servant will determine what will happen. What will be the percentage of gasoline purchased by a farmer, by a labourer, by a manual worker or by another type of worker?

Paragraph (d) on the same page reads as follows:

(d) a fisherman, hunter or trapper for commercial fishing, hunting or trapping,

Once again, Madam Speaker, it is impossible to determine how much gasoline such a person will have purchased during a fiscal year in his capacity as fisherman, trapper and so on.

I would like to say that our party, the Social Credit Party of Canada, is still against this bill because it is the gift of the Liberal party to the poor workers who do not have one cent left to travel and to go to work. They do not have these 10 cents a gallon that they will have to pay on gasoline to travel every morning and every night. Therefore, the bill penalizes heavily the heads of families who cannot afford to pay for rent increases, increases of this and increases of that. Cost of living increases have emptied their pockets. They must leave home in the morning to go to work. The gift of the Liberal party to the Canadian voters is a great deception, Madam Speaker, and I believe that it is an indictment against the Liberal party.

Madam Speaker, in constituencies like mine, people earn their living underground, working in mines, breathing dust 24 hours a day and on any of the three 8-hour shifts, and they never go to bed at the same hour from one week to the next. It is thus appalling to see the government charging 10 cents a gallon of gasoline to miners who drive to work and who have the guts to work in these circumstances.

I think this is a nonsense, an impropriety, and I believe this legislation is not even workable from a legal standpoint or even from an honest standpoint, because it allows too much latitude to the official who has to determine how much gas goes for pleasure driving and how much for driving to work.

The foreman, for instance, who might be my boss tomorrow on the site where I would have to work since I might become a worker—and I speak for the workers in my constituency—will be entitled to a 10 cents a gallon tax rebate because he is a foreman and is thus driving for business purposes.

Me, the poor guy who earns $6,000, $7,000 a year, I shall pay, like him who makes around $25,000 or $30,000, 10 cents a gallon for gasoline. I think it is dishonest and unfair. This is all I wish to say. I do not wish to extend the debate, but I wish to say this: We do not agree anymore today than we did yesterday. What the minister did shyly under the pressure of the opposition does not satisfy us at all and I think that this bill on which we are going to vote on third reading is disastrous for the financial situation of the poor worker, the wallet of the small earner, of the head of a family, the man who does not have one more penny to spend to drive to work but who has the guts to do it.

The day will come, Madam Speaker, when those people who are too big-hearted will stop thinking as they do now and say: "Rather than working for nothing we are going to live on welfare". I hope that this day is still far away but the more bills of this kind we pass the sooner this day will come. Madam Speaker, in all fairness, I must say that this bill is impossible to apply and will be very unfair to some people. We shall have to establish the quantity of gas they bought to travel to work or for commercial purposes.

I said this afternoon that an hon. member or senator who is the owner or president of a business owning four vehicles or who bought one vehicle from his company with credit cards registered with that same vehicle will come to Ottawa and will buy gas with his company's credit cards and he will get 19 cents a mile to travel and this measure will give him a rebate on the 10 cents a gallon tax on gasoline. Who will establish what we should take off and what percentage of that gasoline he bought for his business or to travel to Parliament? It will not be easy! Can you imagine a senior civil servant having to decide what to do? I say that there is a very important thing.

In my opinion, a bill should at least be applicable. In all fairness, this bill cannot be applicable, because, as I said a moment ago, it gives too much latitude to the officials who will decide who is to pay the tax and who is not.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

Motion (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—LEVY CHARGED ON MANUFACTURING MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I rise again tonight in the adjournment debate to speak on behalf of the dairy farmers of Canada, some of whom are my constituents trying to earn a living in the dairy industry. I join a long line of colleagues in this House—the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis), and the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin)—in protest against the increasing levies being imposed on dairy farmers to pay for the inefficiency and uneconomic powdered milk export programs of the government.

Many of the statistics have been read into the record concerning this problem. I will not go into the statistics tonight because I wish to make my point regarding export markets, as I believe our efforts should be aimed in that direction if we are to avoid further cost to the Canadian consumer for dairy products.

Correspondence we have received from the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the dairy farmers of Canada and from all the county milk committees of Ontario has expressed great concern. Their sound arguments are generally that our dairy producers do not think it fair that they should be called upon to bear all the burden of the deficits on powdered milk exports. Of course this situation is caused by the fact that the milk producing member nations of the European Economic Community each subsidize their dairy farmers to a degree which protects them from all costs and deficits connected with the export sale of powdered milk, it being the least and last residue of the industry.

Then the EEC headquarters in turn, I believe, protects and reimburses the governments of each one of those nations. Unfortunately that is not the case here, and the Canadian dairy farmer now faces the full onslaught of the competition of the European Economic Community and is now actually subsidizing it to the tune of another 45 cents as of July 1, and I am informed that will amount to another $250 million per year when the 45 cents per hundred is applied to our total national production.

It was only last spring when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), amid much publicity, conferred with the members of the EEC and was reported to have made overtures for contractual agreements with the big nine, but he did not put one word in on behalf of the Canadian dairy farmer. No, we get the back of the hand of the EEC.

Continuing the point I wish to make, what about these loudly touted contractual agreements by the Prime Minister on his visit to the EEC? Was there any economic strategy whatsoever to the representations of the Prime Minister? Apparently not. Can the government not direct its marketing efforts on powdered milk to other markets in countries now receiving bounteous and almost free Canadian aid, for example, the $10 million soft loan to Cuba which I opposed in February and May when the government was giving Cuba $10 million cash at 3 per cent interest for 30 years, with no repayment for the first seven years? Why does the government not make that contribution in powdered milk instead of cash wrested from the taxpayers of this country, some of whom are the dairy farmers of Canada?

What is happening at the present time? I know there is a large surplus of powdered milk accumulating in the world. The European Common Market has 700,000 tons of it. Today's Montreal Star carries an article which demonstrates that the European Economic Community is in command of this situation and that the Trudeau government is not even trying to compete with it in getting rid of skim milk surpluses. The article is headlined "Market may sell Egypt $385 million food surplus", and I quote from it:

> Brussels—The Common Market commission is negotiating a controversial deal with Egypt involving the sale of about $385 million worth of EEC food surpluses.
> According to Abdel Rohman El Chazli, the Egyptian supply minister, the package would include 1 million tons of wheat, 75,000 tons of sugar and 23,000 tons of dairy products.
> In addition, 20,000 tons of the EEC's mountain of skimmed milk powder—now standing at 700,000 tons—will be given to Egypt as food aid.
> Egypt is desperately short of both food and cash and it is likely that the deal will be financed by credits recently granted to Cairo by Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. However, if it goes through, EEC farmers also will reap considerable benefits.

The EEC sees to it that its dairy farmers receive the benefits of its world trade strategy. Hon. members will note the article mentions EEC finances by credits extended to needy countries.

To finish making my point there is another item in today's Montreal Gazette headlined "Half million Angolans face starvation." Why could Angola not use some of our powdered milk to feed its half million refugees?

Let us survey the problems of CIDA. Wherever this agency extends large amounts of cash in aid to needy countries, wherever possible let skim milk powder be part of that cash. That would reduce the current load on the dairy farmer who now takes the penalty of 90 cents per hundred. In my county there are many producers who say that the latest 45 cent levy will cost them at least $5 per day. One industrial milk producer near Napanee told me it currently costs him $160 per month.

There is one more point to be made on behalf of the dairy producers. They abide by the first 45 cents levy, which went on the first of the year, but they strongly protest the application of the second 45 cents levy in the middle of the year. With dairy farms the calendar year is their fiscal year, generally speaking. They have commitments made on that basis that they must keep, commitments to many accounts, mainly financial, and to make another unexpected levy on them out of thin air the first of July in mid-year is very unfair to the industry. In many, many cases it is going to be a matter of the knife edge of profit or loss, but mostly loss on the year's operations.

I respectfully ask the minister to examine that 20 per cent portion of the formula laid down. As reported at page 7960 in Hansard of July 25, his parliamentary secretary said in reference to the 20 per cent margin:

> This is an advantage that allows us to consider a number of factors, for instance significant changes in domestic and international stocks, changes in the revenue of dairy producers in other countries or major changes in competitive costs inherent in processing.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister, to the government, and to the Minister of Agriculture, climb out of the swimming pool and into the think tank—withdraw the recent 45 cent levy—smarten up and look further into this problem. We can compete with Europe, but to do so we must improve our strategy as world traders. We can compete with them, and can do so without forcing the dairy farmers of Canada to foot the whole bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am forced to repeat almost the same thing I have been saying a number of times recently, because we are asked the same question all the time. Anyway, I might have an explanation for the hon. member. Producers already undertook with the Canadian government to pay export costs, under supply management programs.

One important matter remains to be clarified concerning exports. In order to do that, I will have to explain the current situation of world trade. Powdered skim milk stocks have been on the increase and prices are declining. At the beginning of 1975, skimmed milk powder was selling at 45 cents. In April, when the European Economic Community increased its exports subsidies, the price went down to 36 cents a pound. It has been declining ever since, and is now at 26 cents a pound. You must therefore understand how serious the problem is.

Faced with such a decline, Canada must choose one of two alternatives. Either we meet competition and sell at low prices, or we accumulate stocks. Clearly, the second alternative must be rejected because it would be much too costly. But we have to face the facts. If we sell at low prices, we must assume the loss because on each pound of skimmed milk powder originally priced at 64 cents, there is a loss of 37 cents. Assuming the total export volume is 200 million pounds, we get an astronomical figure of $74 million.

The government must act therefore. It must increase the export levy on industrial milk. The amount of the levy has been 90 cents a hundred weight since July 1. Although strongly criticized, such an increase is needed to maintain skimmed milk powder sales at current world prices. Let me explain. We were fully justified to announce a target price when world price was abnormal. In April, such a price still allowed to face competition, thanks to the level of levy we had then. Unfortunately, there has been since a radical change, and the Canadian government had no responsibility there. It is known that our department is strongly interested in exports. We have always tried to find new markets for Canadian products. The present situation leaves us with little alternative. We already examined the effects of government financing, but it would produce more problems than it would solve. Madam Speaker, I think it is relevant to say that the same question has been put to us several times. We are forced to give nearly always the same answer.

ENERGY—NATURAL GAS—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT PROMOTING POLAR PIPELINE THROUGH MANITOBA

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, the subject I wish to debate in this evening's adjournment debate is the critical situation facing Canada and the United States, the serious shortage of natural gas, and why the polar gas pipeline ought to be routed through Manitoba.

As you know, Madam Speaker, I and my colleagues raised this matter previously in this House. Two circumstances prompted me to raise the matter again on this occasion. The first of these is the government's inaction in attempting to find a solution to our country's impending shortage of natural gas, a shortage which will be made more serious by the expected shortages and higher prices of other forms of energy.

As an authority, may I quote the words of Mr. Bruce Wilson, former president of Union Gas of Chatham, Ontario. Speaking in Ottawa last May, Mr. Wilson said:

> Reserves of natural gas are declining in Canada. There has not been a major discovery in the southern half of the western Canada sedimentary basin in the last seven years. At the same time, production rates have increased.

He summed it up by saying, "My main point is that there is a tremendous supply problem facing Canada." I hope that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) realizes this. His actions to date do not support this hope to any great extent.

The obvious course of action for the government is clear. It should take definitive action to encourage the building of a natural gas pipeline from the Arctic islands, where the reserves of the future lie. Apparently, the government has been playing around with the decision on whether to support the plans to build the Mackenzie Valley pipeline or the plans of the polar gas consortium. I believe the right decision is obvious if benefit to Canada as a whole is the main criterion.

Let me read part of an article carried in today's Ottawa Journal. The caption over the headline reads "18 Design Faults Charged." The headline is, "Pipeline Inadequate", and the body of the article, which was written in Washington reads in part as follows:

> ... Design on the proposed Canada-U.S. arctic natural gas pipeline is inadequate, the U.S. interior's department stated Monday.
> The project which includes the Mackenzie Valley pipeline in Canada was analyzed in a 19 volume draft environment impact statement weighing 51-pounds and released by the U.S. government here.
> This study listed 18 faults in the pipeline design.
> [Mr. Corriveau.]
> ... the problems involve sections of the pipeline system which would be buried in the Arctic and sub-Arctic reaches of Alaska and northern Canada.

Let me point out that Manitoba faces a serious shortage of natural gas. New homes and businesses must find alternative fuels to supply heat and power.

Two alternative routes have been suggested for this pipeline. One route would put it through eastern Keewatin and Manitoba; the other, across Hudson Strait and down through northern Quebec. May I list my reasons for thinking the Manitoba route is the cheapest and most logical alternative. Consider the matter of construction. The Manitoba route would be an all-land route, while the Quebec route would involve the spanning of a large body of water, Hudson Strait. The building of pipelines on land involves, of course, a well understood and much practised technology; building under water does not involve any well understood technology. Surely problems would arise in connection with the under water route.

Let us also consider construction aids. In this regard the Manitoba route is far ahead of the Quebec route. The main aid to construction would be the Hudson Bay railway, which would run parallel to the pipeline from Churchill to The Pas for 510 miles. That route would provide the builders of the pipeline with cheap transportation help. The very presence of a railway and highway means that supplies could be transported quickly and cheaply to construction areas.

In the first phase of construction, materials would be taken to Churchill and loaded on supply boats, which would deliver materials to points along the Hudson Bay coast where construction would be taking place. In the later phases of construction, materials would simply be unloaded along the railway and highway, at the point where construction had proceeded. As a sideline, this would provide a much needed shot in the arm for the port of Churchill and the railway.

It must also be remembered that Quebec has no such rail or road system, and one would have to be built before construction could begin. This would greatly add to the cost of building the pipeline through Quebec.

A second construction aid available in Manitoba and not in Quebec is labour. In northern Manitoba skilled construction workers may be found along the route of the pipeline, with experience in building mines, smelters, hydro developments, forestry complexes, etc., while in Quebec no such labour supply exists, simply because of lack of population.

Thus, costs of transporting labour to the construction site would be cheaper in Manitoba than Quebec. Also it must be remembered that a pipeline through Manitoba would do much to alleviate chronic unemployment problems in the area, especially among the large native population. Again it must be emphasized that while Quebec may have the same problem, it is on a lesser scale because of the smaller total population in its northern areas.

As to the area served, here again Manitoba has the edge. A pipeline through Quebec would begin to serve its use when it reached an area only about 100 miles north of Montreal; before this it would travel through 1,000 miles of sparsely populated area.

In Manitoba its benefits would be felt, with the construction of several branch lines, as far north as Baker Lake, Chesterfield, Rankin Inlet and Whalecove, and thence to the great seaport of Churchill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, even though the hon. member did not finish his speech I believe I got the main drift of his remarks. He has suggested that the polar gas route is an immediate alternative means of supplying frontier gas. At the present time the supply from the Arctic Islands is insufficient to justify the construction of a polar route—only about 14 trillion cubic feet have been established, whereas the minimum threshold volume is estimated to be at least 20 trillion cubic feet before such a pipeline is feasible. Estimates of the volume needed could rise if unexpected costs arise in the course of pipeline construction or if there are physical obstructions discovered which would make the route more expensive than presently evisaged.

There is also a great deal of research development and planning work to be carried out before a polar gas pipeline can go ahead. The federal government is interested in seeing this research work carried out so that the pipeline may go forward. Possibly Petro-Can could be the vehicle for federal government participation since one of the objectives of the corporation is energy research and development.

As the minister said in the House, the government does have an interest in this pipeline because it is a 45 per cent shareholder in Panarctic. Thus, as reserves of gas are proven in the Arctic islands and the necessary technology is developed, it would become possible to go ahead with this route to deliver the gas from the Arctic regions to southern Canada.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 11.13 p.m.

PROPOSED TASK FORCE TO DETERMINE MEASURES TO AID SYDNEY STEEL OPERATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent, pressing and grave necessity.

In view of the extremely high level of unemployment in the Cape Breton area of Nova Scotia which has been aggravated by a series of layoffs at the Sysco steel operations at Sydney, amounting to over 800 employees, which will in all probability be followed by additional layoffs as a result of a massive breakdown in the rail mill, coupled with the fact that cheap foreign reinforcing steel is entering Nova Scotia while Sysco has a stockpile of such material, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates):

That the Department of Regional Economic Expansion combine with the Departments of Labour and Manpower and Immigration to form a task force of experts from these departments to immediately go to Sydney to determine what urgent actions can be initiated, both technically and financially, to overcome the terrible economic crisis that has beset the total community and the impending possible collapse of the present operation, with no concrete indication by the federal and provincial governments that Cape Breton Island will definitely be the site of the proposed and promised new steel complex.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should point out that as the indicated order of business for today, which is in fact a motion that the House do now adjourn for a period of time, is such that its subject matter would permit a very wide range of subjects to be discussed, including ones of the nature raised by the hon. member, it is difficult to see how it is possible to ask that this subject matter be set aside in order to debate something else when in fact under the umbrella of that subject matter it is possible to debate almost anything. However, in the moments remaining I will simply put the motion to hon. members, having expressed that reservation.

The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO INCREASE OLD AGE AND VETERANS PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion dealing with a matter of urgency to which I hope the government will give attention during the recess. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urges the government, in its preparations for the portion of the present session that is to be resumed in October, to give serious and earnest consideration to the introduction of legislation to provide for a substantial increase in the amount of the basic pension under the Old Age Security Act and to provide for corresponding increases in veterans' pensions and allowances and in all social benefits.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With a second reservation as to whether this is a matter of urgency, and in celebration of the occasion by not differing with hon. members, I will simply bring to the attention of members that the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It could have been passed without debate.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED MAINTENANCE OF DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME TO CONSERVE ENERGY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an extremely urgent issue. In view of the fact that our national economy is eroded by an ever growing inflation, that we are trying by every possible means to fight that evil and that the government has levied a 10 per cent tax on gas, to improve economic conditions in the country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House take the necessary steps to pass a bill to keep daylight saving time and thus really help the consumer to save energy without having to spend a cent.

Mr. Speaker: Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, the motion therefore cannot be put.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED TRANSFERENCE OF FUNDS FROM UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE TO LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that $4 billion will be paid out during 1975-76 in unemployment insurance benefits, that this money will serve to support people doing nothing, while a mere $150 million will be used to create jobs under the LIP program, taking into account the great advertising campaign on the radio to invite people to submit projects, and the fact that a great many projects may be turned down for lack of funds, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne):

That the House recommend to the Treasury Board to transfer part of the $4 billion of credits to be spent by the Unemployment Insurance Commission to the Department of Manpower, so that the minister may accept a larger number of LIP projects and thus create more jobs, which would certainly give greater satisfaction to the serious-minded people of our country.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED UNITED NATIONS SUGGESTION CANADA PAY COST OF SWITCHING SITE OF CRIME CONFERENCE FROM TORONTO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Arising out of the knuckle-rapping delivered to the government by the UN Committee on Conferences yesterday, I wonder whether the minister would tell the House what instructions have been given to our representatives in New York with regard to the reported plan of the Committee on Conferences to ask Canada to pay the cost of switching the site of the crime conference from Toronto to either Vienna or Geneva.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand one of the delegates made that comment in passing yesterday. It has not been transmitted to us nor have we considered such a possibility.

REPRESENTATIONS ON EFFECT OF POSTPONEMENT OF UNITED NATIONS CRIME CONFERENCE IN TORONTO—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government has received representations from the Metro Toronto Hotel Association, among others, stating that cancellation of the crime conference will cost these hotels $1.9 million and will result in the laying off of some 500 hotel employees as well as other groups including student groups and asking government assistance to meet this serious situation. Have such representations been received and what is the government's position in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I can confirm that such representations have been received. They have not been given any consideration as yet. There has been no opportunity to do so, but I do not want to encourage anyone to think we would accept them.

HUMAN SETTLEMENTS CONFERENCE IN VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Friday last, in answer to a question concerning the Human Settlements Conference in Vancouver, the minister assured the House that it would be going ahead as planned. In view of developments over the past few days, particularly the information given by my colleague the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, I should like to ask the minister this week whether his government has made any alternative plans in view of the information which has been coming to the government.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. The statement which I made I believe last Friday in respect of this question still stands. Canada proposes to continue its plans and has the clear intention of hosting this conference next June.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO PROCEEDING WITH PROJECT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Following his and other cabinet ministers' meeting yesterday with their counterparts in the government of Ontario on the question of the Pickering airport, is he now in a position to inform the House in a clear, precise and unequivocal way what are the government's plans for the Pickering airport now?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I read a report in the Globe and Mail this morning about the meeting I had yesterday with the Ontario ministers and I think it contains only one inaccuracy. The cabinet asked me to report on the meeting, and that is all, but if I read the Globe and Mail article correctly, it states that a new decision is supposed to be made about Pickering airport. This is not what the cabinet asked me to do. I was just asked by the cabinet to make a report.

Mr. Broadbent: But I am asking the minister.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member will have to wait until the cabinet has met.

PICKERING—GOVERNMENT PLANS BEYOND 1977

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): It is even worse than I had expected.

An hon. Member: That is impossible.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the uncertainty, not only for the people in Ontario as a whole, but in particular for the people who live in the municipalities directly affected by the Pickering airport decision in terms of the zoning plans for the years ahead, can the minister tell us now what the government's intention is because of the new uncertainty that had arisen about building up until 1977, and then what precisely does he plan to do beyond 1977? Does he have a full scale airport in mind beyond 1977?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): If the hon. gentleman read the whole article he would have seen that I will recommend to cabinet that we stick to our decision and that nothing be changed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Of course, cabinet has the authority to change the whole thing. This is the Government of Canada and they can say no. But this will not be my recommendation. My recommendation is to the effect that we should stick to the decision we made to construct first a mini-airport to be completed by 1977, and only then will we decide whether we want to go all the way.

Mr. Broadbent: We will not be entirely surprised if the cabinet does change its mind. But if the minister is saying to the House that in 1977 the government will make another decision on what will happen beyond 1977, I would like to ask him what he meant in his letter to Premier Davis dated June 12 and tabled in the Ontario legislature on July 11, when he said that federal plans were proceeding for a "subsequent phase of development for Pickering for implementation by 1981". The implication is that the plans are already made for beyond 1977. Elsewhere in the letter the clear indication is of a full scale airport. If so, can the minister tell the House now whether that is the federal government's intention now?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): What I have said to the House and in public still holds true. This means that we will build a mini-airport with one runway and a terminal, of course, and in 1977, if new facts come up, we will reassess the situation because technology in that field can bring something new and perhaps Canadians might feel that the time has come for the situation to be reassessed. So, we will keep the liberty to decide then. However, our decision is to build a completely new airport in Pickering with the proviso that in 1977 there will be a reassessment in case new facts are brought to light.

PICKERING—SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON CONSTRUCTION UNTIL COST-SHARING WITH ONTARIO SETTLED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, following on the questions asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Because of the fact that Dorval airport has not as yet reached full saturation, and it is expected that Mirabel will operate at less than its capacity well into the 1980's indicating a levelling off in the prediction of air travel, will the minister in this day of economic restraint and in accordance with the wishes of the majority of Toronto's population, including the city council, place a moratorium on the construction of Pickering airport with a view to resolving first the cost-sharing situation between Ottawa and the Ontario government, which is now estimated at a minimum of $516 million?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. Any government which has the responsibility for building airports or this kind of facility provides not only for the needs which are established or foreseen, but also for a certain expansion. Airports are not built for needs defined at this very moment, and this is what is happening in Dorval. We have known that for a long time. We knew, at the beginning that it would take time before the transfer of companies from Dorval to Mirabel, and that it would take a certain time before there is a full use of Mirabel. It will be the same thing in Pickering.

Mr. Jelinek: In his earlier reply the minister mentioned new technology. Could he explain, therefore, the discrepancy existing between his statement that an airport is needed at Pickering to offset the noise pollution at Malton airport and the statement in a Ministry of Transport pamphlet noting that a major breakthrough in new technology has in fact made airplane engines quieter which makes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Abitibi.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—FEDERAL DELEGATES TO PETROLEUM SEMINAR IN QUEBEC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The second international seminar on petroleum economy will be held at the beginning of October next in Quebec City. Would the minister be in a position to tell the House whether he and the officials of his department have been invited to attend or to participate in this important international seminar on petroleum economy or whether persons who are not necessarily working in his department but are involved in energy will also attend?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I shall not attend personally the seminar referred to by the hon. member. However, I shall make inquiries among the officials of my department to find out if any of them will attend.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFERENCE TO ALLEGATIONS BY MEMBER FOR BERTHIER-MASKINONGÉ CONCERNING ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES OF SOME MEMBERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Has the Acting Prime Minister taken note of press statements attributed to the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé to the effect that several other members of the House have engaged in activities similar to those of which he has been accused, and has the Acting Prime Minister taken any action to identify those members and the activities to which the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé was referring?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen these comments, and I am sure the hon. member will agree that the hon. member to whom he referred has not been found guilty of the offence with which he has been charged.

CHARGES AGAINST MEMBER FOR BERTHIER-MASKINONGÉ—POSSIBILITY OF ACTION UNDER SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): I do not ask these questions with any gladness in my heart.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: You would be cutting us up in pieces if it were one of ours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKinnon: I believe the institution we all serve demands that these things be clarified if possible. My supplementary question is to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister examined the evidence put forth in regard to the charges laid against the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé to see whether this evidence warrants any action under the Senate and House of Commons Act? If so, what conclusion has the minister and his officials reached in this regard.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not examined the question in quite that context. The matter is one that is properly in the hands of the provincial attorneys general.

[Mr. Laprise.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister tell the House whether he has had any reports from the Canadian observer at the OAS meetings, in San José, Costa Rica and in particular if the Canadian government was given any reason in these reports to press for closer ties with that organization—such as full membership?

Mr. Prud'homme: No way!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not been pressed at this point, nor has the government of Canada, to undertake full membership at OAS or within the organization. I welcome, however, the decisions which have been taken at this meeting, particularly the support of the United States government, for such a decision. This does pave the way for a resolution of the difficulties we have been experiencing in our trade with Cuba.

TRADE

EFFECT OF DECISION OF ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES TO LOWER TRADE BARRIERS WITH CUBA—POSSIBILITY OF SUGAR AGREEMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his reply and for his very convenient lead into my second question which is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Could the minister tell us whether the decisions taken in Costa Rica this week to lower the trade barriers with Cuba have prompted the minister to bring out any contingency plan he may have to enter into conversations with Cuba and other Caribbean countries with a view to concluding long term sugar agreements?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the information I have received indicates that the Organization of American States has decided to conclude, to finish, to turn off the embargo of Cuba. That is, from our point of view a very welcome development. The other part of the hon. member's question about sugar was not part of any report I have seen emanating from San José.

AGRICULTURE

LEVY ON INDUSTRIAL MILK—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN POLICY

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As the minister is no doubt aware, the producers of manufacturing milk are highly concerned about the recent increase in the levy that they are required to pay to offset losses on exports of skimmed milk powder through the Canadian Dairy Commission. This levy was raised from 15 cents per hundredweight in March to 90 cents per hundredweight of milk at the beginning of this month. Does the government have any plans to iron out the fluctuations in the size of this levy through the establishment of some sort of fund, that would serve to iron out the ups and downs of producers' contributions and allow them to plan their operations on a long term basis?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This sounds to my unpractised ear to be very similar to a question put to the minister yesterday but perhaps he may still care to reply.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion has been made to us by the dairy producers and we are considering it.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED PUBLICIZING OF EXTENDED AUTOMOBILE WARRANTIES—POSSIBLE CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and I am glad to see him back in the House today. In view of the minister's evasions with respect to questions I have asked in this House regarding the existence of extended warranties placed on certain models of automobiles by automobile companies and his obstinate refusal to make consumers aware of their rights, I wish to ask if the minister is now prepared to publicize, through Box 99, all extended warranties which have existed, now exist and may be found to exist in the future?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure everyone that the information made public by the Automobile Protection Association will be distributed on request by the officials of my department, but obviously that information is the exclusive responsibility of the association concerned and not that of my department.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. In view of the fact that this matter cuts across federal and provincial responsibilities legislatively, will the minister advise the House if he is prepared to meet with provincial ministers of consumer affairs in order to devise legislation which would provide consumers with all information regarding warranties, regular or extended? Since he has until October before Bill C-2 comes back to the House, would he reconsider his previous position and bring in an amendment which would provide for class actions as this is clearly what is needed in cases like these? Would he also inform the House how he intends to proceed to ensure that all consumers who have been ripped off as a result of not having the knowledge of the extended warranties, and so paid for repairs unnecessarily out of their own pockets, are compensated?

● (1430)

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the hon. member seems to take it for granted that there were irregularities committed by some companies. I beg to disagree. Secondly, what matters most to me is to guarantee the consumer maximum protection and not to make irrational and foolish statements such as the hon. member has just done. I am willing to consider and discuss possible legislation with my provincial counterparts, if such discussions are deemed important and likely to afford greater advantages to car users.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGATION CIA IS ATTEMPTING TO UNDERMINE AUTHORITY OF GOVERNMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Prime Minister or the Solicitor General, whichever is competent.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): It arises from reports broadcast in Vancouver this morning that a senior minister of the British Columbia government, the Hon. Bob Williams, stated yesterday that the government of British Columbia has sent to the government of Canada documented evidence that the CIA is working in British Columbia to undermine the authority of the government of that province. Can we be advised whether the government of Canada has received such information and, if so, what action has been taken or is contemplated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I, too, heard this report, Mr. Speaker. I made inquiries but as far as I have been able to learn no such evidence has been provided. I understand the Solicitor General also had his office searched and that he has not been able to find any such evidence.

POSSIBLE DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN OFFICIALS AND CIA CONCERNING ACTIVITIES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): My supplementary is directed to whichever minister is responsible for security matters. I should like to know whether there has been any discussion between the CIA and Canadian security officials relative to activities of the CIA in British Columbia which might lead to the events reportedly complained of by a minister of the B.C. government.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker. Nobody has ever complained to us about any such activities in British Columbia, and I have been in touch recently on several occasions with ministers in British Columbia. We heard about this report late yesterday or early today. We are investigating. There is no correspondence in the Prime Minister's office to substantiate this allegation but we would be willing to discuss the matter if any were brought forward.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): My supplementary sought to ascertain whether there had been any discussions, any advice given by the CIA to security counterparts in Canada, which would indicate that there might be the kind of activity going on in British Columbia about which a Minister of the Crown in that province has apparently complained. Has there been any consultation of this kind between the CIA and Canadian security officials?

Mr. Allmand: Before the question period we checked with certain security officials in our department and they told us that this matter had never been raised either from British Columbia or from Washington.

Mr. Baldwin: Why don't you monitor their phones?

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR RETURN TO THIS JURISDICTION OF A PARENT WHO KIDNAPS CHILD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. Children are citizens and should receive all the rights and protection of a person, a citizen, within the law. However, throughout Canada children are being kidnapped by a parent in defiance of court orders on custody. One appalling case is the kidnap more than a year ago of five children of tender age—13 months to six years—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mrs. Holt: —of Mildred Watson of Mission, B.C., by Eduardo Antonio Gomez. The children were taken to the Philippines.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mrs. Holt: In view of the fact that when a criminal flees to another province or country, that criminal is pursued and returned, will the Minister of Justice consider bringing in amendments to the Criminal Code to ensure that parent-kidnappers will be pursued, arrested and returned to the jurisdiction in the same way as any other dangerous criminal?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. lady for drawing this problem to our attention. I will certainly look at the social and legal implications of the change suggested and comment further in due course.

DISASTERS

DAMAGE TO ST. BONAVENTURE BY TORNADO—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. It arises from my belief that, primarily, Canadians should help Canadians in times of need. Will the government be giving appropriate assistance to the stricken village of St. Bonaventure following the damage caused there recently by a tornado, the extent of the disaster being now estimated at $3 million?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): As the Prime Minister said when he was asked a similar question, the government of Canada does stand ready to assist the provinces on application in cases of disaster. We have a formula which applies generally and which does not discriminate on the basis of particular cases—only on the basis of whether a province itself shares part of the cost. If the Province of Quebec makes an application, it will be considered on its merits.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CHURCHILL RIVER POWER PROJECT—REASON FOR FUNDING INDEPENDENT GROUP—RIGHT OF GROUP TO LAY CHARGES AGAINST PROVINCE OF MANITOBA

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I would direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. Bearing in mind the fact that the minister and his department are trustees of land reserved for the Indian people, how is it that the minister funds an independent group of citizens to the tune of $800,000? Does this group have the right to lay charges against a provincial government—I have in mind the case of Nelson House and the Manitoba hydro development? Or does the minister retain the right to do so, in which case what was his purpose in financing an independent private group to the extent I have mentioned?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The minister has indicated that legal action in Manitoba is only one of the options to be considered. I think the hon. member has overstated his case somewhat. However, I will bring his question to the attention of the minister and I am sure he will reply.

Mr. Whiteway: Perhaps the parliamentary secretary misunderstood my question. I did not ask whether or not the minister intended to take legal action. I asked whether he had given the authority to take legal action to an independent committee. If so, has he forfeited his rights and duties as minister to be trustee over this land; alternatively, if he has not given the right to this committee, why has he funded it to such a large extent?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not forfeited his right as minister. I shall be happy to bring this matter to his attention for further discussion.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF SEPARATION OF BRANCHES OF ARMED FORCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Does the government have under consideration the total reorganization of Canada's armed forces in such a way as to bring about a distinctive separation between the Army, the Navy and the Air Force, in view of the fact that the attempt to convince others that unification of the forces has merit and value has been a miserable failure? Is it the government's intention to re-establish our forces on the same basis as those of our NATO partners and other forces with which we come into contact in the course of our international functions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I know of no such plan. I am surprised that the hon. member should repudiate the views of a former member of his caucus.

Mr. Coates: When this measure came before us I voted against it as did all the members of my party at that time. Regardless of what might have happened subsequently, I should like to suggest to the Acting Prime Minister that with a view to re-establishing a degree of morale in our armed forces and ensuring the best use of the limited number of personnel we appear to be able to afford at this time, the government accept the fact that unification has been a miserable failure?

Mr. Sharp: I thank the hon. member for reiterating his well-known views on this subject, but the government has no intention of changing its policy.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLEGED CHALLENGE TO MEMBER'S NOMINATIONS TO LOCAL ADVISORY GROUP

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration or, in his absence, to the Acting Prime Minister or to the parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that a member of parliament knows more about his constituency than does a special assistant to a minister of the Crown, may I ask what right a special assistant to a minister has to question, on an alleged language basis, the adequacy of the nominations made by a member of parliament in all sincerity under the Local Initiatives Program?

● (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making an inquiry in a specific case which I am sure ought to be done in another way and, alternatively, asks for the rendering of an opinion as to the capacity of a person to check something in a member's office. The question fails on both grounds.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO INTERFERENCE WITH INSTALLATION OF INFRASTRUCTURE TO SERVICE DEVELOPMENT IN SOUTHWEST PART OF CITY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the chronic shortage of housing in the Ottawa area and in view of the statement, and indeed the financial commitment, of the Ontario government with regard to the commencement of construction in the southwest quadrant of the Ottawa area which is in accordance with local municipal, regional and provincial planning principles, can the minister assure the House that neither he, his representatives nor the government will permit any interference with municipal or regional officials with regard to the installation of the infrastructure on federal lands to service development in that part of the national capital area?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not get the last part of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): My basic question is this: in view of the position taken by the Ontario government, the regional government and local municipal governments in the Ottawa-Carleton area with regard to development in the southwest quadrant of the national capital area, will the minister assure the House that neither he, anyone under his jurisdiction nor the government will refuse access across federal lands for the infrastructure to service development there, particularly in view of the fact that that land is available now, long in advance of any other area for development in the national capital area on the Ontario side?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member and I are quite in agreement about what land is available for immediate development. It is not our intention to frustrate local plans. Indeed, we are trying to work out an amicable arrangement. There is a legitimate difference of opinion at this time. My meeting yesterday with the provincial and municipal officials was helpful. I hope we can resolve this. I can assure the hon. member we certainly will not be obstructive in any draconian sense.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF DEPARTMENT TO GRANT DEDUCTIONS FOR POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue.

During the last session of the 29th Parliament, a law was passed which aimed at enabling Canadians to contribute to the funds of any political party they wish, and which provided for part of those contributions to be claimed as income tax rebates when returns are filed. Can the minister inform the House of the guidelines pursuant to which officials of his department can afford to ignore the receipts enclosed with the returns of a taxpayer who has contributed to the funds of a political party, without due regard for the receipt which was issued under the law?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, under the authority of provisions in the Income Tax Act and also with regard to the specific cases to which the hon. member has referred, which have been the subject of questions in this House, and as a result of discussions with financial representatives of his party, certain tax returns will be processed without the tax credit for political contributions until that matter is settled.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister.

Since the Department of National Revenue is very cautious, I wish to ask the minister whether or not this same caution is applied to officials who travel across Canada and produce receipts for expenses authorized under the law? Do those receipts receive the same scrutiny, as far as checking is concerned, as the receipts from taxpayers who have contributed to political parties?

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, they are all processed in the same way. That process is that assessments and audits are applied to them.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBLE REFUSAL OF LONGSHOREMEN TO LOAD GRAIN FOR RUSSIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that representatives of Canadian longshoremen have voted to refuse to load grain for the Soviet Union, what action will be taken against the longshoremen if they go on strike? Also, what plans does the minister have to ensure that our grain commitment to the Soviet Union is met?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the government, like many trade union leaders over the past few days, does not approve of American interference in Canadian trade union affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It should be noted that some outstanding leaders in the longshoremen unions in various bigger ports have stated they have no intention of obeying this type of order from the United States.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

ENERGY

URANIUM—POSSIBILITY OF INVOLVING PROVINCES IN DEVELOPMENT OF EXPORT POLICY

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does the minister have any plans to involve or has he been involving the provinces in order to get some input with regard to the development of a federal export uranium review policy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I responded to questions in this vein in recent weeks. I pointed out that the guidelines which have now been set down for uranium export were extensively discussed, both with users such as Ontario Hydro and the Ontario officials, as well as with producers in Ontario and the province of Saskatchewan. The standards we have now set for uranium export were indeed the subject of discussion before their implementation and since, with both the producing and consuming sides of the industry.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, my question is more directly whether the provincial governments per se are going to be asked to have some input into this policy.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): They already have, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING COUNCIL

COMPLAINT OF CONSUMER REPRESENTATIVE AS TO PROCEDURE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister check into the very serious allegations made by the appointed consumer representative of the National Farm Products Marketing Council, namely that decisions are made on a majority vote and the consumer representative is of a minority and information is not given in time to provide for an informed decision? I might say these are the same allegations the representative made when she was the volunteer member of the board during the hearing of the special committee on egg marketing.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, knowing the capabilities of the person the hon. member speaks about, I am sure it will take some time for her to adjust to board procedures. I am sure the hon. member is not suggesting that a minority should rule the board.

SUGGESTED ACTION BY MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS TO PROTECT CONSUMER INTERESTS IN COUNCIL

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the responsibility which is his to protect the consumer interests and in view of the serious nature of this allegation, will the minister check into these charges with a view to recommending to his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, what action can be taken to resolve the problem from the consumer point of view and to ensure that consumer interests are protected in the National Farm Products Marketing Council?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF REPORT OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL TO STANDING COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. While recognizing the difficulty that a genuine believer in free trade has in the House regard to making progress, is the minister going to cavalierly dismiss the report of the Economic Council of Canada or will he consider referring it to a committee of this House, even if only for the purpose of education?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Council will be given every consideration by my department in its regular review of trade policy matters. As to the question of referring the particular report of the Economic Council of Canada to a standing committee, I would of course be very pleased to comply with any wishes of the standing committee.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION ON WATER QUALITY—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CITE FIRMS MENTIONED AS CAUSE OF POLLUTION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment, I will direct my question to her parliamentary secretary. What is the policy of the department as regards the specific citing of an industry as a major contributor to water pollution in a given area? Would the minister or his parliamentary secretary make firm representations to those industries cited in the report of the International Joint Commission's water quality board?

● (1450)

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to take this question as notice. There is a lot involved in the question. The Ministry of the Environment is always very concerned about the location of various industries, especially if that involves places which would be detrimental to wildlife or to anything else under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REFUSAL OF EMPLOYEES OF CN-CP TELECOMMUNICATIONS TO BE FINGERPRINTED—SOURCE OF REQUEST FOR SECURITY CHECK

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General arising out of the case of the employees of CN Telecommunications and CP Telecommunications who have been dismissed because they refused to be fingerprinted, despite the fact that one of them at least has 23 years' service and all of them have passed previous security provisions. May I ask the minister whether or not these companies are carrying out this particular program on the instruction of the RCMP or of the Solicitor General of Canada.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such instruction. Maybe the hon. member could get a more complete answer from the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Supply and Services. I can say that in certain cases where telecommunications employees with the railways are dealing with sensitive material they are subject to security checks, and the security check is made by the RCMP at the request of the other department. But the decision with respect to security clearance is left with them after we give a report. As I say, perhaps more details can be had from the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Supply and Services.

CN-CP TELECOMMUNICATIONS

DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES FOR REFUSAL TO BE FINGERPRINTED—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I may pump another dry well for a moment, may I ask the Minister of Transport, who I know is very interested in the rights of employees, if he has not already done so, whether he will look into the case of the three employees who have been dismissed by CN Telecommunications and the one employee dismissed by CP Telecommunications because they refused to be fingerprinted? The Solicitor General is not clear whether the RCMP insisted on this or whether the company insisted, without warning. As I understand it, they were called to the office and told they must be fingerprinted or else be dismissed. Is the minister familiar with the case and has he taken any action; if not, will he look into the matter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I said to the House a few days ago, these matters were raised as grievances by the union. They are presently proceeding, I do not know whether it is before an arbitrator or a conciliator of some kind, according to the agreement which they signed with CN and CP. I will wait and see what the result is of the proceeding before I make any recommendation to the Solicitor General, or to the cabinet if necessary.

Oral Questions

FISHERIES

REASON FOR EXPLORATORY FISHING FOR SWORDFISH—POSSIBLE LIFTING OF IMPORT BAN ON SWORDFISH BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, on July 18 I addressed the following question to the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Fisheries, as reported at page 7704 of Hansard:

In view of the tender call for the charter of two vessels by the federal fisheries and marine service for exploratory fishing for swordfish during the months of July and August, could the minister indicate the reason for this exploratory work and inform the House if the United States food and drug directorate has lifted the import ban on swordfish as imposed some four years ago?

She promised to take that question up with the Minister of State (Fisheries), and since he is in the House today could he provide me with an answer, for many fishermen in Nova Scotia are eagerly awaiting the minister's report.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, as indicated, the program involving these two ships is very much intended to be experimental. One is to check again the mercury content and certain age levels of swordfish and also, although we are not very hopeful, we are trying to explore the possibility of removing mercury from the flesh. There is really nothing much more than that; it is strictly experimental.

Mr. Crouse: A brief supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that there are ships at the present time from other countries fishing for swordfish off the coast of Nova Scotia, would the minister indicate where these ships are finding a market for swordfish?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, some nations do not seem to mind the mercury content of swordfish at the moment and do use it. We have no prohibition against selling fish if anyone wants to buy it. The problem is to find a market. Some states of the United States—this is a state matter—do allow consumption and selling within the state of swordfish products. We have a prohibition against it here in Canada, because of mercury levels, and there is no way we can export swordfish through the normal avenues if the U.S. government has banned imports.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REASON FOR SHORTAGE OF HOME CANNING MATERIALS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs; I think he is eager to answer. Would the minister give the House an explanation of the extremely short supply of home canning materials, a shortage that has now extended to the province of Ontario and I expect will be given greater urgency than it has been up to now. What steps are being taken to improve the situation?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the problem exists not only in Canada but also in the United States. Several months ago, we took steps to help the Canadian companies. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce made sure that the two Canadian companies would have enough tin plate to meet the demand. Officials of my department visited those companies to encourage them to produce more of it, to double and even triple their production, which they did. Unfortunately, there was a shortage of the product in some sectors, but I can assure the hon. member that as far as the Canadian companies are concerned, they are producing at full capacity. We can do no more. Attempts will therefore have to be made to import some to make up the shortage. This is becoming increasingly difficult, as a similar shortage exists in the United States. Canadian consumers will therefore be asked to buy only what they need, and refrain from hoarding it for fear the shortage might become even more acute.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY BODY ON NUTRITION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of the latest report by the Food Prices Review Board indicating that the average cost of a nutritious diet for a family of four is rising month by month, will the minister accept the recommendation made by the Food Prices Review Board in February, 1975 in their release "What Price Nutrition?" to the effect that the government establish an advisory body, with input from provincial governments and other interested organizations, to make recommendations pertaining to nutrition and health?

OLYMPIC GAMES

STATUE "OLYMPIC"—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE STATUE WILL NOT BE DESTROYED

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I will direct to the Postmaster General. I should like some guarantee, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the statue "Olympic" will not be destroyed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the Postmaster General of Canada so that the people of Canada will be able to view the $50,000 masterpiece when we get back here in the fall?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, instructions have been given to put the statue on the grounds of the main post office building and we all hope it will be another Henry Moore.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from a statement made in the House this afternoon by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in reply to a question of mine, in which he said that I had made unfounded statements with respect to impropriety on the part of automobile manufacturers in keeping their extended warranties secret.

The minister full well knows, or ought to know, that his department's regional offices have been advised to proceed cautiously in handling consumer complaints and inquiries about the auto makers' secret programs so that "good company-customer relations" will not be upset. Furthermore, the statement by spokesmen for GM, Ford and Chrysler was widely reported on Monday, July 21—

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the hon. member, I suggest he has a very clear point of disagreement with the minister, or the contents of the minister's remarks, which is a matter for debate. Quite clearly, in view of Citation 113 of Beauchesne's, it is a subject which falls outside the narrow confines of a point or question of privilege.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I was unable to give notice as I just received this communication dated today, July 30, 1975, from Germain Laporte, Special Assistant in the office of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I think I must lay out the background of this in order to indicate to you quite clearly what happened.

I submitted my list of nominees for the constituency advisory group under the Local Initiatives Program on July 9. Today I received this letter and I should like to read it so it will be on the record. It is addressed to myself, and states:

> I wish to thank you for your list of nominees for the Constituency Advisory Group under the 1975-76 Local Initiatives Program.
> Unfortunately this list does not appear to adequately represent the Francophone sector of your constituency.
> Would it be possible for you to forward at your earliest convenience further nominees, representative of this particular group?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You had no Liberals on it.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege, I submit, arises from the fact this is an outright interference by a special assistant, who is not an elected representative or a minister of the Crown, with my privileges and rights as a member of parliament, and my proper function as a member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jones: There were Francophones in this group.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the greatest respect for the rights of the hon. member who has just raised this question, as well as of other hon. members, to function freely without interference. The letter the hon. member has put forward, on the face of it at least, seems to me to be no more than correspondence with the hon. member containing an invitation or a suggestion. It may go further, but if the hon. member has any disagreement in that regard he may want to take this up as a matter of discussion with the minister or other officials of his department, other ministers, or the Prime Minister.

However, in order to fall within the category of a question of privilege there would have to be some indication of a step taken which in fact constituted a direct interference with the right of the hon. member to function as a member of parliament. In fact what this seems to be is correspondence about a suggestion of the member, indicating it ought to be discussed further.

The hon. member's right to speak in this House, to function as a member, and to make suggestions has certainly not been restrained or interfered with, but what reception is given might be a matter of disagreement by the hon. member, as it has been by several other members. With all due respect to the hon. member, I do not think this is the right forum or the right guise, under the title of a question of privilege, to get into a debate as to whether the list contained proper and adequate representation of his own constituency or the texture of it at this time. Unless the member is able to show there has been in fact a restriction or hindrance of his right to function as a member, to make suggestions, and to have a part in the decision-making process, I would have to indicate that there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to continue. This did not begin just this month. Last fall when I submitted a similar list I got the same response, only it was verbal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jones: Not only did it come from the minister's office, the Moncton Liberal Association laid a complaint in the local newspaper, unfounded. I am concerned that there is political patronage here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Now he will be called to order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if, in the absence of the minister and his acting minister, I might just simply say for the record that this particular kind of committee is an organization which the minister, in his discretion, thought would be useful and thought could be created across the country. Of course the minister still retains a certain amount of responsibility for seeing that these committees are in fact useful in the way in which they are formed.

An hon. Member: Tell the executive assistants.

Mr. Lang: I am sure the minister would have no difficulty in taking the responsibility for drawing to the attention of the hon. member for Moncton that the committee will only be useful if it is in fact properly constituted.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order in response to—

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on the same question of privilege, and the minister is rising on a point of order, and a point of order has never proceeded or taken precedence over a question of privilege in all the 18 years I have been here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry, but I was unable to hear the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I was rising on a matter associated with the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Moncton and the comments by the Minister of Justice. I rose on the same question of privilege when the Minister of Agriculture stood up on a point of order. In the 18 years I have been in this Chamber a point of order has never preceded or interfered with a question of privilege which was in the process of being discussed in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North will have sensed that I had initially rejected the representations of the hon. member for Moncton as a question of privilege, unless there was some clear and distinct interference with his rights. The minister made a comment on this and I did not think it needed a further decision on my part to indicate that, in the final analysis, the hon. member for Moncton was not putting a motion in respect of the proposed question of privilege.

Furthermore, I had some difficulty in that the minister was on his feet prior to that point, and I went back to him by way of recognition. If the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North wants to contribute before I do finalize the question put by the hon. member for Moncton, I would be glad to see him now.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, probably I would not have intervened in this debate except for the fact that, after you had ruled, the Minister of Justice got up and put in his two cents, which is just exactly what his comments are worth, as far as I am concerned.

There is no question but that the rights of a member of parliament in this House are being interfered with when the Minister of Manpower and Immigration writes a letter requesting that a member place before him a list containing certain people within the constituency he has been elected to represent by the majority of the people. Whether the people in government authority do or do not like the way he was elected, the member is still here because he represents his constituency, having been elected by a majority of the people.

In this case the minister has written the hon. member requesting the member to provide a list of nominees in his constituency he feels would assist the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the people involved with the Local Initiatives Program to produce recommendations, which are not final in any way, in order that the minister and these people in the Local Initiatives Program can make a decision on which projects should be undertaken in that constituency. Following that, in this case some executive assistant, special assistant or somebody else in that department, had the unmitigated gall to write the hon. member saying in effect that he did not like the way the member had made up the list of people, which in the first place he was asked to provide. I think this is getting to be a bit too much. I think it is a rank interference with the rights and privileges of a member of parliament, and I think that you, Sir, should provide some protection.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If there are no other hon. members who wish to speak to the matter, let me make the situation perfectly clear. The hon. member for Moncton has raised a grievance about the administration of a program, and about whether a decision of that sort ought to be handled by the minister or through representations by any hon. member of the House. That may in fact be a legitimate criticism or grievance on the part of the hon. member.

What I am concerned with here is not whether there is a disagreement about the administration of a program of this nature, the texture of the program, or the manner in which the minister deals with members in receiving representations. What I am concerned with here is whether this in fact constitutes a question of privilege within the very narrow confines of the rules of this House, which have recognized in the past, and I think quite rightly so, that only specialized classes of problems come within the confines of a question of privilege. I find that this matter does not. In any case, no motion has been put forward suggesting action by the Chair. Again I say that what may be a very legitimate grievance can be taken up in a number of ways.

● (1510)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because of the question of the hon. member for St. John's East. I do not want to leave the impression with the House—and I hope he was not suggesting either—that the Farm Products Marketing Council was acting beyond the jurisdiction vested in it by the legislation. The person on the board he mentioned says she is optimistic about the new job she is taking on and that there will be public hearings, and so on. She is not as pessimistic as the hon. member tries to make out she is.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up much time of the House with my question of privilege of which I have given you notice. It arose out of the question yesterday which I submitted was perfectly proper in the light of what happened in the city of Hamilton. I think it was very pertinent.

My question of privilege relates to an exchange in the House yesterday, as Your Honour is well aware, between myself and the Minister of Labour, as recorded in Hansard at pages 8021 and 8026. During that exchange the minister made some rather serious accusations about myself which I feel I cannot let go unanswered, and which I believe constitute a legitimate question of privilege. Specifically, Mr. Speaker, as recorded at page 8026 of Hansard, the minister accused me of "indecency in casting innuendoes" and of what he terms "disgraceful conduct". Those are serious charges and ones for which I am entitled, I submit, to receive rather more specific allegations or a retraction from the minister.

The minister made these imputations against me in specific reference to questions which were raised during this session by myself and others in respect of the status of two federal appointees to the Hamilton Harbour Commission—Messrs. Lanza and Hickey. I have reviewed the issues of Hansard on this matter and I have no hesitation, Mr. Speaker, in challenging the Minister of Labour as I did yesterday to produce one reference to back up the kind of McCarthy-like charges he made against me yesterday.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Minister of Labour, and I feel compelled to do this, that if he feels aggrieved in this matter over statements made against Messrs. Lanza and Hickey, he might direct his action against the Minister of Transport, for the most serious or damning statements about these gentlemen came not from this side of the House but from the Minister of Transport. I would refer the Minister of Labour in particular to page 3622 of Hansard for February 27, 1975, and this statement by his colleague, the Minister of Transport:

> At that time—

The minister was referring to the time at which he declined to reappoint Messrs. Lanza and Hickey to the Commission.

> —no trial had taken place—there had been no inquiry but there was suspicion and, since those jobs are given at the discretion of cabinet, nothing binds us to nominating someone who might be suspected of not, say, meeting some ethical standards . . .

Those references to suspicions about ethical standards are not mine; they are those of the Minister of Transport.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is in order for me to raise as a matter of privilege the completely unfounded charges which the Minister of Labour made yesterday against my personal conduct as a member of this House. That was untrue, unkind, and uncalled for, and I believe it might even have been rude. I demand that the minister either make a specific charge against me or withdraw his own version of McCarthyism from the record.

Upon his failure to do so—and I hope the hon. gentleman will do this—I would move that the remarks of the hon. member contained at page 8026 of Hansard for July 29, 1975, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration and report back to the House in due course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of withdrawing my remarks. In the first place I do not feel you will find too many citations in Beauchesne which would indicate that remarks of that nature require withdrawal. It was an opinion of mine expressed in this House about the conduct of the member, which I think is fully fortified and justified if one looks at Hansard.

The fact of the matter is that while a trial was in process the hon. member endeavoured, in a McCarthy-like fashion, to raise matters which were going on while the trial was in process. It does not take many learned or fair people in this House, or among the general public, to indicate just how unfair that is.

Of course the reason that no serious objection was taken at the time the hon. member did what I consider to be a deplorable act was that, knowing the manner and the conduct the hon. member resorted to in this particular instance, he probably would have gone right outside to the television cameras and called "cover-up". So I resisted raising that particular area. If the hon. member was serious in raising questions yesterday about the harbour matter and was not interested really in a partisan attack, raising all sorts of innuendoes, he might be prepared to justify to this House why he raised extraneous matters such as the SIU and allegations about reticence to hold inquiries. I think that extraneous matter certainly belies the good intent of the hon. member as expressed today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The exchange yesterday between the hon. member for Central Nova and the Minister of Labour, both in the question period and in what I indicated yesterday was a non-point of order and simply an expansion of their disagreement during the question period, has today expanded into a proposed question of privilege. I think hon. members will agree that it simply is a further development of the basic disagreement between them.

The only question which remains is that raised by the hon. member for Central Nova concerning the language used yesterday by the Minister of Labour, indicating that what I understood to be remarks made by the hon. member, always in the House and always recorded in Hansard, were indecent in their innuendo and disgraceful in the conduct of the hon. member. That is an opinion that has been expressed in this House openly by the minister. The hon. member for Central Nova has taken offence at this. This is the chamber for disagreements. That is a classic case of one of them. It would have to be otherwise, in my opinion, in order to found a prima facie case of privilege, namely, that the language of the Minister of Labour was unparliamentary.

In examining the precedents I am unable to find that the expressions he has used in the way he has used them are in any way unparliamentary. They simply contain and inflame the disagreement between the two hon. members. If we are to adjourn for a prolonged period later this day, or some day soon, perhaps it will be a pity, because the disagreement is becoming quite entertaining. Nevertheless it is still a disagreement and not a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is a motion on the order paper standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council. There is of course provision on today's order paper for both questions and notices of motions for the production of papers. May I take it as agreed that the motion which stands in the name of the President of the Privy Council will be transferred to the subject matter of orders of the day, which would permit taking all questions on the order paper and notices of motion, and then the commencement of the debate? Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 2,209, 2,553, 2,594, 2,676, 2,721 and 2,893.

Mr. Speaker, if question No. 1,204 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

WEST COAST SHIP TIE-UP

Question No. 2,209—Mr. Korchinski:

1. With reference to the recent West Coast tie-up, what was the maximum number of ships waiting to be loaded?

2. What was the aggregate number of idle days accumulated by all ships?

3. How many of these ships were destined to load grain?

4. What was the total amount of demurrage charges levied?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the National Harbours Board and the Canadian Wheat Board as follows: 1. 100.

2. 1,975.

3. 52.

4. The Canadian Wheat Board only pays demurrage on the receipt of a demurrage claim and where it feels it has a legal liability. Demurrage claims are frequently not received by the Board nor is settlement reached on claims for many months after demurrage was incurred by delays in the loading of vessels. Accordingly it is not possible at this time to determine what the total amount of demurrage claims will be as a result of the recent West Coast tie-up.

[Mr. Speaker.]

DAMAGE TO DOCK AT STEPHENVILLE

Question No. 2,553—Mr. Marshall:

1. Does the Minister of Transport expect to hear from the Department of Public Works on the extent of damage to the dock in Stephenville and, if so (a) on what date (b) on what date will repairs be carried out?

2. Are there any funds included in the estimates for the 500 foot dock extension in Stephenville and, if not, would the Minister consider including such funds in the next Supplementary Estimates?

3. Is the Canadian Hydrographic Service in the process of publishing charts of the channel and turning basin in the Port of Stephenville and (a) if so, on what date will they be ready (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Transport and the Environment as follows: 1. The Ministry has received a report from the Department of Public Works. Public Works has called tenders, for the repairs, which will close June 25, 1975.

2. No. The inclusion of funds in the next Supplementary Estimates is being considered.

3. Yes. (a) April 30, 1976. (b) Not applicable.

CBC—PURCHASES OF AMERICAN, CANADIAN AND FOREIGN FILMS

Question No. 2,594—Mr. Reynolds:

For each year 1971 to 1974, how much money was spent by CBC in the purchase of (a) American films (b) Canadian films (c) foreign films for showing on Canadian television?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: CBC keeps an accurate inventory control of film purchased from all sources, but records have not been kept in such a way as to make it possible to extract readily and without an inordinate amount of work, time and cost the information called for in the manner requested. When rights are purchased by CBC for film from any source, payment for these rights may be made in a variety of ways: by equal monthly instalments, by payment immediately after broadcast, by payment of a percentage of the total price on first telecast, second telecast and third telecast, etc. Since the payments for the purchase of a quantity of feature films, for example, might be spread over a period of years, with a decreasing value in terms of programming and consequently a decreasing percentage in payments, the total value of the purchase agreement would not be correctly reported if its total value were deducted in one fiscal or calendar year. In addition, many packages of film contain films of foreign origin. Given the variety of methods of payment it is a very long and costly process to extract exact figures which distinguish which monies were spent on American as distinguished from other foreign film. Since 1974, however, in the case of Canadian film, a reporting system has been set up within CBC to provide information to its management on expenditures by CBC in the private sector of the Canadian film industry. The first statement to come from this system indicates that during the period January to December 1974 CBC spent in excess of $17.5 million in the private Canadian program production industry. Of this total amount about $9.75 million was spent in acquiring the right to broadcast films produced in Canada. Over $7.5 million was spent with private industry to pay for productions, co-productions, and production services such as processing and printing, directors and producers, film editors, technicians and sound services.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN

Question No. 2,676—Mr. Robinson:

Are banks and insurance companies considered by the government to be the worst offenders when it comes to equal opportunity for women and, if so, what criteria was used to determine this?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The government has never stated that the banks and insurance companies were considered the worst offenders when it comes to equal opportunity for women.

NUCLEAR INFORMATION AND EXCHANGE—ARGENTINA/INDIA

Question No. 2,721—Mr. Francis:

Does the government have any knowledge of an agreement between Argentina, a country to whom Canada proposes to sell a CANDU reactor, and India on the exchange of nuclear information and technology?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The government is aware of agreements between India and Argentina on nuclear cooperation, but inasmuch as we have suspended our nuclear aid to India, and that any nuclear supplies to Argentina will be subject to the strictest of safeguards, the government does not anticipate that independent third party transfer of Canadian supplied nuclear material could take place between Argentina and India.

MEDIUM SECURITY PENAL INSTITUTION IN STONY MOUNTAIN, MANITOBA

Question No. 2,893—Mr. Masniuk:

Does the government intend to build a new medium security penal institution in Stony Mountain, Manitoba, as was announced in the Fall of 1974 and, if so (a) on what date is it expected that construction will commence (b) on what date is it estimated that the new institution will be ready for occupancy?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): The government has deferred its plan to proceed with a medium security institution in Stony Mountain, Manitoba, because of a reduced rate of population growth in that locality.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

MINISTERS' STAFFS

Question No. 1,204—Mr. Korchinski:

1. In the past three years, how many employees did each Minister have on staff?

2. What are the total salaries of each Minister's staff?

Return tabled.

Summer Recess

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion for the production of papers No. 44?

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO ESTABLISHMENT OF MICROSYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL LTD.

Motion No. 44—Mr. Symes:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence, minutes of meetings and terms of agreement between the government and Northern Electric concerning the establishment of Microsystems Internationl Limited.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the government could accept to produce the three agreements between the Crown and Microsystems. However, the correspondence and the minutes of meetings include confidential documents asked by non government agencies, as well as internal memoranda of the department. Consequently, I ask the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) to withdraw his motion. The government could then table the three agreements as soon as they are translated.

Mr. Symes: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That, when the House adjourns this day, it shall stand adjourned until a time to be fixed by Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, when the House may meet for the purpose of dealing with any subsequent proceeding on or the giving of Royal Assent to any bill or bills that, at the time of adjournment this day, have been given third reading in this House but have not yet been given Royal Assent;

That, after giving of Royal Assent to the said bill or bills, or in the event the House does not meet for that purpose, the House shall be adjourned or shall stand adjourned, as the case may be, until October 14, 1975, provided that at any time prior to that date if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act, owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): You will note, Mr. Speaker, that I rose slowly to my feet and looked over to my left on the assumption that this motion could be passed without debate, but now I have every reason to believe that that is not likely, and under those conditions I feel I should make some contribution.

I will start by saying that I suppose ordinary people outside the House will pause and wonder what it is that has driven a group of normally intelligent people back to the House today to seek their own permission to adjourn for two and a half months after the government has indicated that we have completed the tasks which in its opinion should be disposed of prior to that time. A simplistic answer might be that there are two or three members in the House who have been suffering from an unquenchable ambition not to leave here without an unuttered thought, an ambition which some of them were almost successful in achieving yesterday even though, in order to make sure that this was done, they had to repeat some of their thoughts several times to make certain none were forgotten.

Mr. Broadbent: Leave the Social Credit Party out of this, Jed.

Mr. Baldwin: I am sure that by this afternoon the pitcher of Baucis and Philemon will be refilled and some more thoughts will come. We are waiting for those, Madam Speaker. But that is too simplistic an answer. We may have some cause for unhappiness about being here today and some measure of resentment at the circumstances which brought it about, but it is simply not good enough to attribute the cause to what I have hinted at rather generally so far.

Let us not forget that we will be back here in precisely the same position at the end of November and in December of 1975. Let us take a look at the Order Paper. We see there Bill C-2, the so called competition bill, which has been allotted two days. Then we see the citizenship bill, no doubt a bill which will evoke some considerable debate, possibly heated debate in the House.

Then there is the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, Bill C-21, and the stabilization bill, C-41. There is no doubt that hon. members who are on the committee which travelled west will know that that bill is sure to take a substantial amount of time and that it will be debated in a substantial way. There are a number of issues which will be raised in the debate, and I think the minister who is responsible for the bill has recognized that fact by indicating publicly that having heard some of the views presented he is prepared to see some amendments made.

Then there is Bill C-52 dealing with changes in pensions and superannuation in a number of cases, there is the bankruptcy act, Bill C-60, and the Canada Shipping Act, almost a completely new code. With all the responsibilities which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has taken on himself for the next few months, I wonder how he will be able to prepare himself for that.

We see on the Order Paper two income tax bills. There are changes proposed with regard to medical care and, no matter on which side of that thorny issue one may stand, one cannot evade the acceptance of the fact that it will be a very difficult and controversial debate. Then there is Bill C-69, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, two omnibus Criminal Code amendments, and Bill C-72, the Human Rights Commission bill.

Hanging over all this like a spectre is the very strong possibility that the House may be debating the very serious, controversial, and difficult problem of capital punishment, all of this in a period of time when there are six opposition days and two holidays, plus such other emergencies as may arise and need to be disposed of within that period. One does not need to be a prophet to say that under those conditions we will be approaching the possibility of a Christmas recess in exactly the same spot as the one in which we find ourselves now, and in which we have been for the last few weeks.

Under those conditions I do not think it would do any harm for the House to take a brief look at what we can do. Can we avoid this? Is this inevitable? Is this the best and only way in which the House can operate to discharge its responsibilities with respect to the individual members in their own constituencies as well as their duty to the country.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) may well say, and I think with some justice, that the House has eaten its way through a very large number of bills, a fair amount of legislation, and some government motions. True enough, and I do not deny the minister's right to take some pride in that. But I point out through you, Madam Speaker, that these are substantially all matters of a pedestrian and housekeeping nature. The real problems, the serious, hard, difficult and deep rooted problems which this country faces, have not been dealt with to date. Although they have been the subject of discussion in the general debates such as the Speech from the Throne debate and the budget debate, they have not been the subject of any meaningful attack by the government or, to some extent, by members of the House.

There is the question of energy—people are forgetting about it now, but nobody can deny the necessity of taking steps which have to be taken to prepare for the situation which will develop in 8, 10, 12 years, or even sooner. This is our problem. We wait until the difficulty has come upon us and until we are overwhelmed by facts, and then we act too little and too late. Nothing has been done to deal with the problem with regard to energy, the replacement of sources of energy, pricing, and so on. The minister has taken some powers under a statute, but those powers do not contain the answer.

There is the very serious question of the rule of law and order and the extent to which people in this country have become fearful of an inability to walk the streets in safety. There are several facets of this problem, but one cannot deny that it is very serious, and many people outside this House are deeply concerned.

There is a continuing problem of unemployment and inflation, and with regard to external affairs there has not been a meaningful debate this session. This party has tried to have such debate through the use of methods such as opposition days, but I think it is shameful that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should go to Helsinki to participate in that glittering galaxy—to be there to make proposals, which he appears to be making today; he appears to be speaking on behalf of Canada without a prior discussion here or—that there can be a situation develop here such as was the case with the PLO without there being an opportunity for this House to have a debate though even only a debate of three or four hours, completed or concluded by a decision of the House, with the question being put. Yet there has been no meaningful debate and no decision along these lines or our foreign relations.

There is the question of the rules under which we operate in this House. Perhaps the answer to the question I first posed is that there should be changes made there. I will certainly not invite an all out debate at this time on the rules and the changes which should be made. There will be an opportunity for that this fall, but I suggest to the members of this House that we cannot go on living in this fool's paradise in this House and attempt to deal meaningfully with these problems the way we have in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is bound to be disagreement as to the method.

Mr. Baldwin: As my hon. friend says, it is quite probable that there will be disagreement as to the method. It depends where one sits. Speaking for myself, over the course of some years I have never hesitated to say that government should be far more free and flexible in using the weapon of closure when in its opinion as a matter of political necessity it takes the hard decision that the debate has gone on long enough.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: That places upon the opposition parties the equal responsibility of deciding to settle down and to fight strenuously and at length legislation which we think is bad or which the people of Canada, when they know about it, will object to, or when we think the people of Canada want us as their representatives to fight, resist, and try to improve legislation. That is a political decision which the opposition has to take, and having taken that decision—and it is a decision which should not be taken lightly but should be taken in the light of all the facts and circumstances of the issues involved and in light of the time—then the opposition digs its heels in and resists to the last moment, and the onus then falls upon the government. Personally speaking, I would have no hesitation in seeing the rules of closure overhauled, sharpened, made more applicable, and used. Closure should not be a dirty word, but when the government uses it, it has to be right. It has to be certain that it is on the right issue, and then ultimately the people will decide.

Having said that, I would not agree to that unless as a corollary there is the opportunity for members of this House to have restored to them many of the rights which have been pilfered and stolen by the government over the course of the last few years.

We are all private members here, except those who are in the cabinet. The members on the government side have the same responsibility as we do for ensuring that the issues of the day are debated, discussed, and brought to a vote, and I think the reason for the way we have been operating in the past—and this is one of the reasons for the frustration and the anxiety which compelled and drove members of the opposition parties to debate Bill C-66 at length as they did—was the fact that we have had no other remedy. That is the only weapon which is left to hon. members sitting in opposition to the government, and even to hon. members on the government side. In this regard I would like to see them recognized with regard to changes which will permit, encourage, and in fact even demand that members on the government side have an opportunity to bring up issues, compel the government to debate those issues, and compel the House to decide and take a vote on them.

Government members say, and this is the standard rhetoric, that they make their influence felt in caucus and the government listens to them. I have been on both sides of the House, and I know how much garbage that kind of statement is. It is a claim to which a minimum amount of credence can be attached.

Mr. Sharp: Our caucus is different.

Mr. Hopkins: You are in the wrong caucus.

Mr. Baldwin: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) says his caucus is different. I know it is disciplined and can be brought to heel much more readily, and that the whip is used more frequently.

The case of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) is before the committee, and I cannot comment. I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I would like to venture a considerable amount that the committtee will decide, among other things, that the parliamentary secretary had great presence and great perceptiveness; that his crystal ball was beautifully polished; that he could examine that crystal ball; listen to the debate and with marvellous anticipation come up with the legislation, and the budget bill were going to be; and that the amendments to the Income Tax Act, and the budget bill were going to be; and that he operated on that basis and not only discharged his duty but is entitled to be decorated for what he did.

Mr. Sharp: Just like one of your members.

Mr. Baldwin: That is the kind of decision which will come out of that committee, and so I reject all suggestions that members on the government side have any more influence in decision making than we do. In fact I sometimes wonder how much influence the government itself has. To a very great extent the members of the cabinet are only the surrogates of the senior civil servants who, speaking figuratively, allow them to come in here and announce decisions which the civil service has brought into effect.

There are a great many people who at one time graced the civil service who know this to be a fact. I am looking at one right now, and I know that he would like to agree with me, although he may not say so.

What we must have here for all parties on all sides of the House is the right at certain times to bring up for discussion, debate, and decision, issues which are current, controversial, and which need to be aired.

This country gives place of residence to many people, and a great many pluralistic groups live here. Their views should be reflected by an opportunity to have votes. I hope my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), will have something to say later on about fishermen. I encourage him to make a speech with regard to their problems, but that is the kind of issue where there should be an opportunity for a two or three hour debate with a certainty that there will be a vote. That is a matter of working things out between the House leaders of all parties so that this may be done.

By the facts of life enough time must be allowed for the government to pursue its own policies, but if what I propose is done then the people of the country will know that vicariously through their representatives in this House their points of view are in fact being put forward, being considered, and even though they may not be accepted, at least they are getting their day in court. If that is not done, I do not really give this parliament too much hope of continuing in a meaningful way. Although I am not one of those who says parliament will vanish, its effectiveness, its usefulness, its capacity to do things for the people of this country, which is now greatly impaired, will suffer to such an extent that the present indifference of people to parliament and its institutions will be heightened. People will dismiss us as being of no use.

I suggest to members of the government that as they exist now—in between elections with a majority—they can become fat, sluggish, and complacent. They know they are going to get their money under the appropriations bill, that the estimates are bound to be deemed to be passed as of a certain date, that they can bring in controversial bills at the tag end of the session and, by a process of exhaustion, as with Bill C-66, the legislation will be passed.

I am looking at the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) who, I am sure, agrees with me. He has been an effective debater both in opposition and in government. He knows the necessity of restoring to this House the cut and thrust of debate on current and controversial issues which need to be ventilated to show the people that we are a force to be reckoned with.

In the limited time available to us this fall there will not be too much opportunity to make changes in the rules of the House. I suggest through you, Madam Speaker, through the government, and through all members, that we must bring ourselves to some form of agreement to have these sorts of debates, coupled with an opportunity to allow the government to use closure from time to time to speed up the process.

I do not suggest agreement in advance as to allocation of time. I would resist strenuously any suggestion that if the government says it wants 60 bills passed we should agree to devote three hours to one or three hours to another. Not until a bill has been debated on second reading and/or in committee should there by any discussion as to the length of time fixed for debate. I think we are reasonable enough people, however, that if there is opportunity for the kind of debate we ought to have, enough people would agree to a reasonable limit.

Private members have a duty to perform. They represent the people of Canada with all their warts, virtues, and defects. Only by the process of meaningful reasonable debate in this House can we achieve the objective we were sent here to attain.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Madam Speaker, the motion we are debating today is a motion to adjourn the longest continuous sitting of this House in 11 years. I wish that those of us who are going to take part in the debate could conclude that it has been a productive session that brought about real benefits for the people of Canada; unfortunately the opposite conclusion would have to be reached by anyone looking at the record.

In virtually every crucial area of public concern the government has shown its lack of direction. It has either had no policy or, where policy has been indicated in a general way, it has totally lacked detailed implementation. It has failed in the most fundamental way to live up to the mandate it was given in the election of 1974.

In that victory the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for the first time gained the support of a substantial number of average and low income Canadians on the basis of a specific program. In 1968 he went to the country as a smiling Mackenzie King who liked to dance. At that time in Canadian history he had a personality appeal. We were over the puritan stage and Canadians thought it was appropriate then for a politician to show that he enjoyed life. With this revelation the Prime Minister managed to get a lot of people to support him on the rather unsubstantial basis that a man who enjoyed life could not be all wrong. It turned out between 1968 and 1972 that he was almost all wrong.

He went into the election in 1972 not as a swinging and smiling Mackenzie King but as a retired philosopher from some university department. Yes, as an hon. member suggests, a good third year student assessing his philosophical debates with Canadians in 1972 would have concluded that they were even rubbishy as philosophy. He did not go to the people of Canada on such practical matters which he regarded as mundane, as housing, the cost of living, unemployment, and regional disparity. He used the slogan "The land is strong"; he wanted to have a dialogue with the people in 1972. The people showed him what they thought of his performance from 1968 to 1972, and what they thought of the kind of campaign that he conducted in 1972. The Liberals almost got booted out of office; they hung on only by the skin of their teeth.

In 1974, and I say this in all seriousness, the Prime Minister looked on the average person's concern for the first time in a campaign. We were on his side when he rejected the wage and price freeze policy of the Conservative Party. But I am not going to debate the merits of that now. The point is that the Prime Minister took an unequivocal position on that and told fishermen on the east coast, workers in the industrial cities, and farmers on the prairies, "We reject that policy because we want to do something for the average Canadian". He did not bother with them in 1968 or 1972, but he did in 1974.

Before the election in 1974 he said in Vancouver, "Housing is in a state of crisis" for the average and low income Canadian, and promised that the Liberals would do something about it. He also said the Liberals would do something about Canadian ownership of natural resources, and promised that at last 50 per cent of new investment in the resource sector would be Canadian.

He then got into transportation policy and said that in terms of interurban transportation Canadian cities were in a mess—after about 20 years of Liberal government. He talked about transportation needs as a continental problem, and of redressing the legitimate grievances of the Atlantic provinces and the prairies in regard to the freight rate system. He spoke directly to the ordinary people of Canada and said, "If you elect the Liberal Party we will do something about the transportation system".

Just name the issue, Madam Speaker, and we can document from the Prime Minister's campaign speeches in 1974 the specific commitments he made. I have listed some of the major ones—housing, transportation, foreign ownership and, related to that, job creation and so on, in a Canadian owned economy. Then, preeminently came the question of inflation and unemployment. He said that the Liberals would really do something for ordinary Canadians. It is a record that we now have to assess. He made no such promise in 1968; he just went on the superficial image that he and his party had professionally packaged. In 1972 he attempted to philosophize. In 1974 he came on as addressing himself to the concerns of ordinary people. It is to his record in this field we have to address ourselves, and it is with this in mind we must assess the work of the present session.

What has it done, that marvelous party which promised to improved conditions for the average Canadian? I will tell you, Madam Speaker. This has probably been the most reactionary government we have seen since the Second World War. Indeed, it is probably the most reactionary government of any country in the western world.

I invite the smirking and smiling Liberal backbenchers across the way to assess with some degree of dispassionate honesty the record of the government which was elected to meet the needs of ordinary Canadians. Who has profited from its incomes policy? Has there been a redistribution of income in favour of the poor, in favour of those with average incomes? Who has benefitted from the economic independence program? Has any move been made in this field? Who has benefitted from the housing program? These questions are the real test.

What has the government done in the broad constitutional sphere of federal-provincial relations? Under the Prime Minister we have seen the introduction of the worst set of policies since the Second World War. Unilateral and arbitrary measures have been imposed infringing upon provincial areas of responsibility and undermining the relationship between the federal government and the provinces to an extent not previously known, at least in the past decade. I hear an hon. member asking me to be specific. I will oblige him. I refer, first of all, to what appeared in last year's budget—the resource policy of the federal government which was opposed by every province in Canada.

Mr. Breau: Not true. It was not opposed in every province.

Mr. Broadbent: Then there was the budget of most recent date which undermined the national standard of medicare and hospitalization which had been established in recent decades. Again the government took on virtually every province in the country, except the wealthiest—they are interested, perhaps, in taking over the financing of health and medicare programs provided, of course, that the federal government agrees to transfer some taxation points. As I say, only the wealthiest provinces are interested because they stand to gain. But every poor province in Canada—and that means many poor Canadians—will suffer because of the position the federal government has taken.

Mr. Breau: Not true.

Mr. Broadbent: There is the disruption of medicare, unilaterally imposed, that disruption of national standards by the government opposite—

Mr. Breau: There are poor Canadians in Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. member says I live in Oshawa. Of course I live in Oshawa, and Oshawa happens to be in Ontario which is a wealthy province. But I, as a member of a socialist party, am concerned about the province from which the hon. member who interrupted me comes, a province which is a lot less wealthy.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member did not understand my interjection. I said he should not make the mistaken relationship of calling people in poor provinces poor people. I just don't like that.

Mr. Broadbent: I did not realize the hon. member was so sensitive. I do not believe it does a service to a poor Canadian to say he is not a poor Canadian. The party of which I am a member is interested in dealing with that problem and changing the situation, whereas the government which the hon. member supports is a government which will increase poverty in the province from which he comes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): If hon. members on the government side of the House wish to participate in the debate they will be given an opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to move on now from the marvelous job the government has done in terms of federal-provincial relationships and consider what this means in terms of increasing regional disparities within the country as opposed to decreasing them. In particular I should like to deal with the economic policies emanating from the government since we were called into session last fall.

Two budgets have been produced, one last fall and one just a month ago. What did these two budgets accomplish? Did they have the effect of reducing inequalities? No. The reverse was the case. In the budget of last fall further tax concessions were made for the benefit of the corporate sector. This amounted to a redistribution of income, taking income from the ordinary Canadian and adding it to the corporate sector. Further, special tax concessions were allowed to upper income Canadians who wished to invest in the apartment construction business. This was all very well for people with disposable income for investment. They would gain advantage both ways; they would own the building later on and, in the meantime, they could collect rent, and the money they invested was taken right off the top of their taxable income.

As I say, the budget of last fall did nothing to reduce inequalities in Canada. On the contrary, it increased them. The budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) brought down over a month ago, did exactly the same. I have already mentioned the regressive step taken in the field of medicare and hospitalization. As hon. members are aware, the excise tax was discussed at some length in the debate which has quite properly occupied us for some weeks. This, as many of us have pointed out, is another regressive measure. But I would draw attention now to yet another regressive measure having to do with the funding of the unemployment insurance fund.

Instead of maintaining the principle that the people of Canada, through general revenue, should be responsible for the unemployment insurance fund since it is the government which is ultimately responsible for unemployment, where the level exceeds 3 per cent or 4 per cent, the government having, ultimately, control over monetary and fiscal policy, we find that a new floor level has now been introduced—the level at which the taxpayer will begin to make contributions. Coincidentally, of course, this means no call will be made on general revenue until unemployment reaches certain levels. This year it would have been 5.3 per cent; next year it will be in the region of 6 per cent, and the year after that it may be in the region of 7 per cent.

This means that the average man or woman working in Canada faces a substantial increase in premiums to finance the unemployment insurance scheme. Instead of funds coming out of general revenue which is based on income tax, a relatively progressive tax, and corporation taxes, workers will be called upon to finance their own provision for unemployment although the government, and therefore the community as a whole, should be held generally responsible.

In the resource field the Prime Minister promised that the government would do something about increasing Canadian ownership. In one of his election speeches he declared that 50 per cent Canadian ownership would be mandatory for all new investment in the resource sector. That is great talk at election time. A lot of us, though, were cynical about the depth of the Liberal commitment to following it up, and as soon as we say the implementation of phase II of the Foreign Investment Review Act we found that the greatest justification for our skepticism. It became abundantly clear when phase II was revealed that the government not only was not concerned about dealing with the existing problem of foreign ownership in Canada, but was also unconcerned about controlling new foreign investment in this country.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) in one of his more candid admissions before the television cameras acknowledged that he did not expect any real decline in foreign investment in the economy. What an admission from a cabinet minister in a party that just a year ago made a commitment to the people of Canada that it would do something serious about the problems of foreign ownership!

What about housing? A crisis was described by the Prime Minister three or four days before the election last year. The crisis has gotten worse since that time, not better. If you look at the housing starts in January, February, March and April of this year, you see that every month there was a substantial decline compared to the year before. With the election of the Liberals last July, the party that said they would do something about housing, rather than the crisis being mitigated, it has been exacerbated. The housing problem has gotten worse, not better.

Mr. Béchard: Not because of the Liberals.

Mr. Broadbent: Who else is governing? Is it the Conservative Party that is governing?

Mr. Béchard: Look at the record.

Mr. Broadbent: It is the Liberal Party that is governing, but they are not responsible?

Mr. Béchard: That is not what I said.

Mr. Broadbent: All that we have had with regard to housing is a repetition of the policies that failed before the 1974 election. Before that election we had a bald headed minister responsible for housing. The Prime Minister changed that. Now we have a minister with some hair. Maybe the Prime Minister was acting on the assumption that a little hair means a little brains and that that would result in a change in policy. However, we did not get that. We got a minister from Toronto who is duplicating every error made by the previous minister from Vancouver. Instead of improving, the housing situation has become worse.

We then come to transportation. That is a real gem. In one of those rare moments of candour and insight shown by a cabinet minister, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said that transportation policy is in a mess. That is what he said prior to the 1974 election campaign. It is now over a year later, and transportation policy is still in a mess.

When members of the Conservative, NDP, and Social Credit parties asked the minister what he was going to do about freight rates, the failure in providing boxcars, and the needs of the people in our cities in terms of an urban transit system, the minister kept saying that the policy was in a mess. We had to agree. He repeatedly asked us to have a little patience as the government would be presenting a grand policy. We waited and waited. Finally we got a general statement of policy. The guidelines that were in the policy we waited for were absurd and contradictory. I will not go into great detail. We got another statement which was equivalent to the election platitudes that we got prior to the election of last July. Not one bill of substance with regard to a transportation policy has been brought before this House since the election.

I have referred to the problems with regard to housing, foreign ownership, and transportation. I do not intend to be too much longer. I am sure the Liberals will not be disappointed to hear that. Before saying something about the general economic policy, however, I cannot ignore two other issues which have been of concern to Canadians and this parliament, and which the government has not dealt with in an adequate way.

The first is the use to be made of the Canadian development of nuclear technology. I refer to the CANDU project. If there has been a solid and persistent bungling of an issue, it has been the government's policy with regard to CANDU. The government is still committed to selling nuclear reactors to Argentina and South Korea, two of the most unstable and reactionary governments in the world.

I could elaborate with respect to members of the Conservative Party who followed that issue—and I give them credit—with immense care, as well as certain of my colleagues, notably the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I could document in two hours of speeches the bungling and contradictory nature of the government's CANDU policy which will result in our providing the capacity to develop nuclear weapons to the governments of Argentina and South Korea. Surely that is an act of self-condemnation about which it is hard to say anything more.

There is another issue which is of concern to fishermen on the east coast, those from Newfoundland in particular, as well as those on the west coast. I refer to the jurisdictional authority that we are prepared to assume over our coastal waters. We believe in negotiation, but this has been going on for so many years that it is well beyond the time for talk. Our party has argued that the government should unilaterally assert jurisdictional authority over our coastal waters up to 200 miles, or to the continental shelf, whichever is farther. Unless the government begins quickly to move in that direction, and it may be too late already, we are going to lose the invaluable fishing stock off our two coasts, particularly the east coast. Again the government vacillates, does not act, and promises further conferences.

Whether we are talking about housing, transportation policies, Canadian ownership of our resources, fishermen on our east or west coasts or, sensible world-wide use of technology developed in Canada in a nuclear age, the government has been a colossal failure in its first year in office.

I want to conclude my remarks by saying something about the very serious state of the Canadian economy and the equally serious failure of the government to deal with the situation. In July of last year the government was given a mandate on the economic issue above all others, if we are to single out one matter. It took the position that it, and it alone, could deal with the twin problems of inflation and unemployment. If a survey were taken of Canadians from coast to coast asking on what issue they voted in the government, my guess is that it would be that twin issue they cited most often.

Let us consider this policy matter and test the government to see whether it has lived up to its mandate, namely, general economic policy. How well has it done in the year since it was elected? In June, 1974, there was 4.9 per cent of the labour force unemployed. One year later, after the leadership and the dynamic policy innovations of the Liberal government, did unemployment drop below the 4.9 level of 1974? No, Mr. Speaker; it rose to 7.2 per cent. Unemployment went up after the election of this majority government, not down.

In actual numbers, which are more meaningful in terms of real life experience, unemployment moved from 465,000 in June, 1974, to 725,000. This number comprises men and women, young and old, in every part of the country. In other words, after one year of this government there was an increase of some 260,000 Canadians on the unemployment rolls.

If we look at the inflation picture the situation is just as dismal and the failure of the government just as great. In June, 1974, the consumer price index stood at 166.7. By June of this year it was 184. As a percentage this works out to 10.4 per cent higher than it was a year ago.

So much for the Liberal's success in coping with inflation. The figures I have just given do not, of course, include the ten cents a gallon excise tax. Nor do they include the effects of the $1.50 a barrel increase in the price of crude oil which the government introduced in the last budget, or the increase in the price of natural gas. All of these added together—and I say this with care—it has been calculated by some responsible experts in and out of political parties, will probably add another 2 per cent or 3 per cent to the cost of living figures in the coming months. In other words, the government has been a failure in dealing with the major issue on which it was elected in the 1974 campaign, namely, the twin problems of inflation and unemployment.

What about the future general economic picture, Mr. Speaker? Unfortunately, the record of increasing unemployment and inflation since June of 1974 is not going to level out and remain constant; it is going to increase in both dimensions. Let me refer my Liberal colleagues opposite to the results of a recent study put out by Wood Gundy, hardly a noted socialist company. I ask the members of the government to consider their forecast. They say that for this year inflation and unemployment will both get worse. They forecast a rate of some 8 per cent unemployment for the end of this year. That, I suggest, is a conservative estimate; certainly it is from a conservative source. So the trend is an unhealthy one, one that is not good for Canadians.

Rather than introducing programs to reduce unemployment, the most recent budget, for reasons that I indicated at the time and which I will not repeat now, and which other commentators advanced, will increase unemployment. The forecast of Wood Gundy regarding inflation is just as negative. In June the consumer price index stood, as I said, at 184. They forecast that by the end of this year it will go up about another five points, surely an undesirable situation.

I will conclude on that pessimistic note. We have ended the longest continuous part of a session since 1964. I think all members on both sides of the House have worked hard in terms of their individual contributions. But let me repeat what I said at the outset. In view of the commitment of the Prime Minister and his government in July of 1974 to the average and working people of Canada, one he did not make in 1972 or 1968, in terms of our legislative output here, this last year must be considered to be a very substantial failure, one that affects in a negative way the real life experience of average and low income Canadians from coast to coast. It is this kind of experience that I hope the government will reflect upon, so that when we come back in the fall we can begin to do something of substance, not of rhetoric, in terms of meeting the housing needs, the transportation needs, and the economic independence needs of the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to make a few points concerning the adjournment motion and take this opportunity to say how ridiculous is the situation on this 30th of July as I rise to speak. This is to remind hon. members of the House that for years we have been urging Parliament and the government to alter the regulations in this connection, in order to have a more serious framework than at the present time. When fully conscious adults who represent the élite of the country are having a good time engaged in a war of attrition to pass a legislation, Mr. Speaker, I think it lacks seriousness.

Who is to blame? The opposition? The government? Of course the government members say: "Well, it is your fault, you should end the debate." And we say: "Well it is your fault, you should withdraw that bill." And so we manage to sit till July 30. I was first elected in 1968, that is seven years ago. I think this is the third time we have been sitting so late in the summer.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, this problem could be solved quite easily. Why not simply set opening and closing dates? It would be so simple to say that the session will open on the second Monday of September and close on the Friday preceeding June 24. Then, it would be possible to plan and co-ordinate our parliamentary work. This, of course, would make it mandatory for the government to arrange its legislative program in a better fashion. And within the set dates we would really accomplish the work the government has deemed should be completed during the year, or session.

The government could then easily solve all kinds of small problems by advising us in advance of its intentions. For instance, we could obtain during the intersession a copy of the proposed bills; the order in which they would be debated could also be given. Consequently, we would have more time for ourselves as representatives to consider these bills, do our research and therefore, introduce in this House more concrete, more specific suggestions.

I think that could be done easily, and we would then be looked upon as people who are a little more serious and know what they have to do and do their job in a very conscientious way. I shall not linger over all the inconveniences of being in the dark about the opening and closing dates of a session but may I be permitted nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, to say that impossibility to know when we are going to start and when we are going to finish disturbs the family life of everyone of us, prevents us from planning our work during the intersession and consequently results in inconveniences that could be avoided pretty easily. That is why I take the opportunity of this debate on the motion to adjourn to advise the government to come up with a change of rules in that respect.

I would also like to echo the two hon. members who spoke before me and make a few remarks about the business that was submitted to us for consideration during this session. Of course, I will be told that it is easy for a member of the opposition to criticize, that is his role, he must do it and consequently we are talking for nothing. Mr. Speaker, I say that is wrong. I think we are trying to really reflect public opinion and when we opposed even fiercely the last bill which was passed yesterday it was because we knew quite well that people did not want that unwarranted increase in the price of gas with that excise tax.

We saw since the beginning of this session how different it was. We saw once again the tremendous difference there was between a majority government and a minority government. It is all nice to say that a majority government brings with it instability and everything else but a minority government showed, for example, that it was for the people. If Bill C-66 had been introduced in 1972 or 1973, we know quite well that it would not have been passed. That was the advantage of having a minority government which had better chances of being on the taxpayer's side. We saw during this session that the government, under the present Prime Minister, had returned to its attitude of complacency, not to say of arrogance, to simply impose things that nobody wants and forget others that should not be forgotten.

For example, the legislation that we were eager to have before us was the old age security legislation, since during the last electoral campaign, politicians were travelling around, and especially in Quebec, voicing the slogan "Old age pension at 60". We were thus expecting, after all the representations and the efforts which had been made, particularly by the members of the party I represent, that they would bring in a piece of legislation on old age security which would be truly adequate and would meet the needs of the population.

What was introduced, Mr. Speaker? One must admit there is a small improvement, but it is so slight that one can barely speak of an improvement since our suggestions were not even included in the bill. First of all, pensionable age should have been lowered to 60: that would have solved the problem. Secondly, it was to be granted merely to the spouses of those aged 65 who needed it. We agree with that, but then we noticed, which we pointed out to the House, that the case had been overlooked where the person dies. That is normal, natural: it happens. Whoever suddenly becomes a widower or a widow, no matter, will lose the pension. That seems obvious.

Let us take the case of a lady of 62 whose husband is 70; she would be entitled to the pension and the income supplement, because they have no other income. Consequently, they would get some $400 a month but because her husband is going to die and the wife will be only 62, she will lose what she was entitled to. It is nonsense. I think that, when something as simple, as obvious as that is underlined, the Minister of National Health and Welfare should understand it and amend the act accordingly. We are going to run into huge difficulties. As my hon. colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) said, what is going to happen? That 62 year old widow will still have to rely on the welfare benefits to eke out a living, whereas everything could be solved easily. But maybe she will solve her case in a way that is almost suggested in that bill by simply shacking up, as they say. Then she will be entitled to her pension.

It would be so easy to correct all that. Of course, they will always say that inflation should be avoided these days, and therefore, expenses have to be cut down, not increased. Mr. Speaker, we have never accepted that argument and we shall never accept it, for if the slightest attention were paid to the solutions we are suggesting on the economic and financial points of view, we are sure that we would really be fighting inflation. But as long as we have no true solutions, no basic solutions, we shall be plagued with the cancer of inflation, we shall be left with a government that will indulge in stop-gap, temporary solutions, whereas the basic problem is a crucial one.

But the government will simply answer us that if unemployemnt keeps rising, if inflation goes on spiralling, if prices keep soaring, there is nothing they can do because it is a world-wide phenomenon. We have heard that for months, especially during the electoral campaign last year, and we still hear it.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, I shall never believe that we in Canada are not able to produce everything we need. And if it were only a matter of money, let us release the funds we need to assist production and meet the needs of all Canadian citizens. It is a basic principle, which should not be questioned. And no one could seriously answer: "Well, it is not our fault, the fault lies with the United States and Europe".

We are now faced with surpluses of powdered milk. Milk producers are being told that they will have to pay 45 per cent more a hundred weight because we have to keep up prices on account of the European Common Market. There again, Mr. Speaker, I say that it is a question of bad reasoning and bad judgment, because absolutely nothing should prevent Canadian dairy farmers from producing milk at a cost that would actually result in reasonable profits and that would at the same time be favourable to all consumers. And if we tried to arrive at a certain equation or balance between consumption and production, such problems would be nonexistent.

But when our government still keeps our doors wide open to commodities we can readily produce ourselves in surplus quantities, I say that if the government pursues such a course of action, nothing will be resolved. Millions of pounds of cheese are entering Canada, whereas are own cheese producers are penalized because they overproduce. It's absolutely illogical. Why continue to hang on to such policies when everyone knows they are bad?

That being so, Mr. Speaker, I say we must stop producing and start importing every commodity that costs less than what we produce here. That being so, we will sit down, relax and wait for others to come and feed, dress and house us. That is bad reasoning. The only solution is that if we have the potential and the capacity to produce here what we need, we just have to make it financially possible. Is it as simple as that. And never will I be led to believe anything else.

But it is not so. Policies should be geared to that. The problem will never be solved by waiting for the good "contribution" of the United States, by waiting for milk and butter from New Zealand and Australia and for textile from Japan and Korea. We will never solve our real economic problems by relying on foreign countries. We must not interfere in their internal affairs, and consequently we do not even know whether the competition they offer with their products is real. Whether it is true that they produce cheaper, we do not know. We do not control those countries.

Therefore the government measures should aim at promoting domestic production, which would have the happy effect, Mr. Speaker, of solving our unemployment problem.

What are we doing about manufactures or textiles plants closing down in Quebec when we see ships full of textiles from other countries unloading here? Then we put $4 billion in the unemployment insurance fund to pay those who do not work because government policies prevent them from doing so. If we do not produce everything we need, of course we will have unemployment; it is simple, Mr. Speaker, and I do not understand why we fail to see that.

Of course, this is why we are forced to do negatively the work of the government during this session, since nothing has been proposed to solve the very serious problem we are facing, inflation. Absolutely nothing.

To conclude, there is another point I would like to make. This government does not really try to reach a practical understanding with the provinces. There is now a constitutional problem in Canada. Closing our eyes to the problem will not solve it. The problem is there. There is a current example in the field of communications, with contradictory positions taken by Quebec and the Canadian government.

What does the government do about it? It plays the strong man. It digs in and says: "We are right, that is the end of it, go back to your places." That, Mr. Speaker, is an excellent way of inviting trouble. Instead, the government should ask itself what do Quebecers want. If Quebecers answer they want control over communications, let them have it. That is true democracy. We have no authority to judge. As I indicated to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself, there are times when we must go above the constitution and say: That is that. Mr. Speaker, it is only by chance that the federal government entered the communications field. It is only because the provinces did not move in in the first place. It is simply because an act of the Quebec Legislative Assembly, now the National Assembly, was never implemented that control over radio, television and communications in general is now in federal hands. If the provinces had wanted to take it, they would have done so. It is not because an error was committed there at other times that the views of provinces should still be denied.

For that reason, I believe the federal government's attitude in this area would have serious if not disastrous consequences. I must once more blame the government for its attitude in this area. If we are going to have a truly united Canada, it is essential that the provinces be given a fair hearing. It is also essential that we get truly interested in Canada's various regions and their needs. That is important, that is essential. We must not try and solve problems simply by stating they do not exist. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will make only one wish, namely that the next session give us the opportunity to debate bills which are really concrete and aim at helping the Canadian people. I shall then be pleased to give credit to the government for it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-66, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, without any amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Government House,
Ottawa, July 30, 1975

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wilfred Judson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 30th day of July, at 4.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
R. de C. Nantel

Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

[Mr. Matte.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp:

That, when the House adjourns this day, it shall stand adjourned until a time to be fixed by Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, when the House may meet for the purpose of dealing with any subsequent proceeding on or the giving of Royal Assent to any bill or bills that, at the time of adjournment this day, have been given third reading in this House but have not yet been given Royal Assent;

That, after the giving of Royal Assent to the said bill or bills, or in the event the House does not meet for that purpose, the House shall be adjourned or shall stand adjourned, as the case may be, until October 14, 1975, provided that at any time prior to that date if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act, owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, it is not a point of order, but I would like to take part in the debate. I do not intend to speak at length because I do not want to prolong the debate. What I want to do, Mr. Speaker, is to draw the attention of hon. members and, particularly, of the government on the tragic disaster which happened in the Îles-de-la-Madeleine, in my riding, when Hurricane Blanche swept through the area the day before yesterday, July 28.

Even if the damages are not as heavy as at Saint-Bonaventure, the losses suffered by the islanders represent a great trial and will deprive most of them of their means of living for a long time. Hurricane Blanche tore off and blew over the roofs of motels and houses, lit fires which destroyed herring smoke houses in Cap-aux-Meules and many houses, sank many fishing boats and other boats, damaged many others, caused untold damages at the harbour of Millerand, which is being upgraded. One person, Miss Jocelyne LeBlanc, died in a fire during that tragedy. The current assessment of damages which have been reported to me this morning lies between $3.5 million to $4 million. I take this opportunity to extend my condolences to Mr. and Mrs. Fortuné LeBlanc, the parents of Jocelyne and to all the members of their family, following the death of their daughter in the fire which also destroyed their home.

I also wish to express my sincere condolences to the people of Îles-de-la-Madeleine tried by this tragic disaster and I want to assure them of my entire cooperation in this sad event. I urge the Canadian government to bring all the help they can give in the circumstances to these people, so that they might recover as soon as possible from this sudden disaster, without unduly mortgaging their future.

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to involve myself in this debate for just a few moments, and I would like to associate myself with the remarks which were just made by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard), as well as with the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) with regard to the tragic circumstances in recent days in the Drummond constituency where, at St. Bonaventure, a tornado struck, taking the lives and injuring a number of people there, and couple that with the tragic circumstances associated with the town of Springhill in my constituency, which fortunately did not involve the loss of any lives, as was the case in the two previous disasters, but did destroy the whole business section of the town of Springhill and, as a result, added a tragedy on top of a number of recent tragedies that have occurred over the last two decades in that community, as many Canadians are aware.

Some members of the House might not be aware of what has happened in Springhill. In 1956 we had a coal mine disaster that took the lives of 39 miners. In 1957 we had a very severe fire that destroyed a good part of the business district of the town, and which was later rebuilt. In 1958 we had another coal mine disaster which took the lives of 79 miners, eliminated the only real industry left in that community and the coal mining operations that were there.

Because of subsequent government actions, both federal and provincial, we were able to rebuild the town of Springhill and give it a new economic base. One of the major contributions towards that was the establishment of two penitentiaries in that community, which gave economic viability and confidence to the business community, allowing them to reinvest in the town and rebuild.

In recent days we have had three very serious and tragic disasters that struck Springhill and two different communities in Quebec. I must say that while this is usually the time to criticize the government and to point out what it has not done, I want to say first of all that I personally appreciated the attitude of all members of the House with regard to the problems that are associated with the Springhill tragedy, and I want to say as well that I have been impressed by the hon. member for Drummond who immediately rose in the House and brought to the attention of the government and the House the tragic event that took place in St. Bonaventure, just as the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine did this afternoon with regard to his constituency.

I was pleased as well to see that the hon. member for Saint Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) also rose in the House and indicated the support of all members in our party in connection with the tragic circumstances associated with the tragedy in Drummond. Today the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) indicated some concern over the fact that maybe sufficient attention was not being given to the circumstances surrounding the tragedy at Drummond, and indicated his hope that the governments, both federal and provincial, will do anything they can to assist those people and help them to rebuild the town and the homes that were destroyed by the tornado.

There are times when the public or members, regardless of party, find fault with the government. But in so far as the tragedy at Springhill is concerned, I must say that the government and the ministers who are particularly involved deserve a good deal of credit for the way in which they banded together to try to find what they could do at the federal level to assist in rebuilding the community there.

I think that special credit should be given to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), who acted as liaison between the various cabinet ministers in trying to assist by putting together a group of proposals from the federal government without its having had any specific request from the province of Nova Scotia, trying to use federal programs to restore confidence in the people of Springhill by showing that there are others in this country who are concerned and aware of their problems. This will assist them in setting the town back on the road to recovery, and in giving it an economic base which will make it a viable community once more.

● (1650)

I mentioned the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and I certainly must also mention the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), with whom I often cannot agree. Nor can I always support the policies he purports to stand for in association with his department, but certainly in so far as he was concerned about Springhill and the possibility of locating another penal institution there, his reaction was immediate, and the activities of his department are obvious to the people in that community today.

There is work being done to ascertain whether a new, smaller institution could be established there which would provide additional employment, and additional confidence in the minds of the business community, which would be of material assistance in giving an economic base to those people who must be having difficulty deciding whether to rebuild or to put the insurance cheques in their pockets.

I must also say that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) reacted in a very commendable way by saying that because of the problems that community faces, and because of the very great havoc which has been created by the fire, he is willing to eliminate the possibility of delay in starting new LIP projects, allowing them to move forward quicker so that the town can be cleaned up and look presentable, so that when people come there they may give favourable consideration to undertaking whatever they intend to undertake.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I certainly do not want to restrict the hon. member, or any other hon. members. I do not know if the House is anywhere close too being ready for the question or whether it would prefer, upon returning from the other place where Royal Assent will be given, to resume the debate. Is it preferable to resume the debate?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I prefer to resume the debate after we go to the other place.

An hon. Member: Take your few minutes now.

Mr. Coates: If I happen to be the only other person who wants to be involved in this debate, I would be quite happy to finish in two or three minutes, and we could go to the other place, if that is agreeable to hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be a consensus that the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) be allowed to bring his remarks to a conclusion and thereafter the House would be ready for the question. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: If there is another speaker after the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North, I think that necessitates our returning after Royal Assent.

Before leaving for the other place I would just like to mention to hon. members that, as has been indicated, the debate on the adjournment motion is drawing near a conclusion, and if in fact it turns out to be the case that the debate does come to a point of resolution, it would be my distinct pleasure to receive hon. members in room 16 at the conclusion of the debate and after the point of decision.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp:

That, when the House adjourns this day, it shall stand adjourned until a time to be fixed by Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the Government, when the House may meet for the purpose of dealing with any subsequent proceeding on or the giving of Royal Assent to any bill or bills that, at the time of adjournment this day, have been given third reading in this House but have not yet been given Royal Assent;

That, after the giving of Royal Assent to the said bill or bills, or in the event the House does not meet for that purpose, the House shall be adjourned or shall stand adjourned, as the case may be, until October 14, 1975, provided that at any time prior to that date if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act, owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will not hold proceedings up very much longer at this point. I did want to point out, however, ways and means by which the federal government can participate and be of assistance in a constituency struck by disaster, without the provincial government having to make application under the disaster relief formula. This formula makes it very difficult for a provincial government to seek support at the federal level because of the heavy involvement that might be useful when a disaster is province-wide and involves expenditure of millions of dollars. In specific areas the formula does not work. The federal and provincial governments have to work together to try to overcome the disabilities faced by the stricken communities.

Some people may be concerned about the constituency of Drummond and the fact that the government of Quebec does not wish to apply to the federal government for disaster relief under the federal-provincial formula. At the same time there are ways in which the federal and provincial governments can work together. I believe they are doing so very effectively in Nova Scotia now to overcome the disabilities which face the community of Springhill.

I have mentioned a number of programs, but to be fair to the other ministers involved I think I should mention them also. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) is looking into the possibility of setting up a textile industry in the community. He has expressed his willingness, too, to involve himself in efforts by the provincial government to establish an industrial park in that area to help attract the new industries which are needed. Moreover, he has indicated to me that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) is undertaking certain plans in cooperation with the government of Nova Scotia to provide housing for people who have lost their homes as a result of the fire.

These programs, which are in addition to those I mentioned earlier, will go a long way toward restoring confidence among the inhabitants and giving an incentive to the people in the Springhill area to take this tragedy in their stride and build a new town.

Another idea has been mentioned to me—in fact, it came from Senator Graham from Nova Scotia. So complete was the destruction caused by the fire that an opportunity presents itself to build a completely new downtown district, an endeavour in which the federal government might be able to involve itself through various programs already under way. Ideas of this sort emanate not only from all quarters of this House but, as I have mentioned, from members of the other place, even though the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) believes that very little emanates from there that is of any value to anyone.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well said.

Mr. Coates: To the other two hon. members who have experienced the same kind of tragic situation associated with disasters, I would say there are many ways in which they could work with the federal government and provincial governments to see that their communities are brought back to viable economic life.

The other point I wish to bring up concerns a responsibility of the CRTC. It relates to television coverage in my constituency. My constituency happens to border on New Brunswick, and everything we get on television comes from either New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island. There is nothing from Nova Scotia. We are almost led to believe we are in a different province when we turn on our television sets because nothing associated with Nova Scotia ever gets to us.

I have brought up this subject previously. I have appeared before the CRTC and I have made representations concerning it, but I have never been able to get any satisfaction. Along with this, we have a cablevision operator in the town of Truro who operates a cablevision service for both Truro and Bible Hill. He insists on giving the people of that area nothing that they ought not to be able to get without cablevision. In other words, they can only get two television stations which they should, in any case, be able to get without cablevision. However, because of "holes" in reception, the only way people can get a good picture is by purchasing cable. The cablevision operator will not provide any of the inducements offered by other cablevision operators in Nova Scotia. Incidentally, I notice that the CRTC recently allowed him to increase his rates.

I have had the CRTC carry out a special investigation into this matter. They gave me a report which, as far as I am concerned, was just a whitewash. Something should be done to see that this cablevision operator either produces an inducement for people to pay special rates at least equivalent to those provided, for example, by the cablevision operation in Amherst—the channels in the area plus two American channels—or that somebody else takes over the operation in the Truro-Bible Hill area.

I wish to thank hon. members for their patience in listening to these remarks, and to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to wish you a very enjoyable recess.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should apologise to hon. members for detaining them at this late hour close to the adjournment of the session. However, I regret I cannot extend such an apology because the matter I have to raise is one of such serious consequence that I would not be doing my duty if I did not bring it before the chamber this afternoon.

Earlier today, under Standing Order 43, I sought leave to move a motion with reference to the serious situation at the Sydney steel plant where 500 workers have been laid off since March. Apparently in the last few days difficulties have arisen in connection with the rail bill and it would appear that we will now see a few hundred more laid off.

The federal government has involved itself with the affairs of the steel plant on several occasions, providing assistance for which we are very grateful, and which was forthcoming despite the fact that this was a Crown corporation operated by the province.

My purpose in seeking to move a motion under Standing Order 43 was that I felt that this was a situation which should be looked into by the federal government. The motion was that, in view of the problem, the government should check with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department of Labour, and the Department of Manpower and Immigration to get from those departments a team of experts who would go to Sydney immediately in order to determine what assistance could be rendered, either technical or financial.

I had hoped to ask a question, but the question period today was quite busy. This is the reason why I bring it to the attention of the House at this time. I feel the team of experts could do something to assist that operation. All parties in the House agreed to the motion, with the exception of a Liberal member. That was very unfortunate because this is a very serious situation, coming on top of an announcement a few weeks ago that we are going to lose the Toyota assembly plant of Canadian Motor Industries. We will suddenly lose jobs there.

Not too many months ago we lost the General Instruments Corporation plant which assembled electronic devices, automobile turners, and so on. This resulted in 1,000 people losing their jobs. I raised this with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), but nothing was done. Those people are still out of work.

We also have the coal mine in Cape Breton which, at the moment, is in danger of being sealed off because of a mine gas explosion. Several hundred employees are not working there, with the exception of the draggermen and what we call the bareface miners. They are risking their lives to put this mine back into condition so that work can again commerce. I must commend the Cape Breton Development Corporation and its president, Mr. Tom Kent, for the extreme effort being made to rehabilitate that mine. I also commend the workers, who on occasion worked around the clock with heavy equipment and gas masks and, of course, the bareface miners who are risking their lives.

I want to bring this problem to the attention of the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp), who should take it upon himself, if for no other reason than out of the goodness of his heart, to bring the problem to the attention of the cabinet and have it put high on the priority list.

I am happy that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is here. He is a former labour leader who knows the problems of the workers involved in steel and many other industries. I hope that both ministers will use their good offices to bring this to the attention of the cabinet. It is funny that no matter how loud I raise my voice, both cabinet ministers do not seem to be listening. They are conversing, I hope about the problem we are confronted with on Cape Breton Island.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Muir: If the hon. member who made the interjection would like to identify himself, I will take him to Sydney to explain why he opposed my motion this afternoon which probably would have helped the industry. I will be pleased to escort him to the city of Sydney where he can talk to the steel workers, the businessmen, and others involved in the industry.

Mr. MacFarlane: I did not make the interjection, but I would love to visit there.

Mr. Muir: Coming from a steel city, the hon. member knows the problems we face. In any event, I will not detain the House any longer. I know it is unfair to the members who are here. They have received an invitation from Mr. Speaker to attend a reception which they justly deserve.

I implore the Acting Prime Minister to ascertain what can be done with the expertise that is available in the three departments I mentioned, and to assure us that in conjunction with other cabinet ministers he will do his utmost to have every possible assistance rendered to the premier of Nova Scotia, who is on the board. This is a Crown corporation operated by the provincial government.

At the same time I ask him to bring to the attention of the cabinet the new steel complex that was promised for Cape Breton Island prior to July 8, 1974, something over a year ago. I ask him to ascertain whether that is still in the mill, and I do not mean the steel mill, as to future projections. I want him to assure us that when that complex comes about, it will not be built in some other part of the country. The Liberal candidate in my area assured my people that the steel complex proposed as a result of a study by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would definitely be in the Cape Breton area.

We now hear the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) issuing other sounds. I hope and pray that the day does not come when such a complex comes about that it will be located anywhere other than Cape Breton Island where we have expertise and the work force. God knows we have enough unemployment, ranging between 15 per cent and 20 per cent.

In conclusion, we have heard the slogans of the government during campaigns. "The land is strong". "We have the answers" and a great many others. Unfortunately in our area the land is not strong, and we have found that the government does not have the answers.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like some others I had a speech I could make at this time, but I have filed it. Rather, as one of the oldtimers around here, I want to start the process of the appropriate greetings for the occasion. On behalf on my party, and we are unanimous, I extend greetings for a very useful and happy break to all members of the House, to the staff, to those at the table, to Your Honour and all those who occupy the chair.

While I am on my feet may I express the hope that when we come back in the fall the government will present to us the kind of legislation that will enable us to do a better job for the rest of the session. But my main purpose in rising now is to extend greetings to one and all.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, following the example of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I shall not make a speech. I wanted, for once, a member on this side to have the last say over our good friend, so I simply echo all his good wishes.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Pursuant to order made earlier this day, the House stands adjourned until Tuesday, October 14, 1975, at two o'clock p.m.

At 5.33 p.m. the House adjourned until 2 p.m. October 14, 1975, pursuant to special order made this day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RESIGNATION OF MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is evident that a number of announcements are required to be made at the resumption of this session. Some special proceedings have been discussed and possibly will be agreed to; all of which will take some time. We should address our attention, I think, after the expiry of these rather special announcements to the preservation of an appropriate question period which, pursuant to the special order under which we continue to operate, would expire at three o'clock. Obviously, that would deprive members of their right to ask questions, particularly on this of all days. Therefore, I suggest that we take at a proper pace the rather special proceedings that may intervene between now and the commencement of the question period, and seek at that time a consensus whether we should safeguard 40 or 45 minutes for questions at that time.

May I begin by calling to the attention of the House two resignations which I have received in due form from former hon. members. The first is from the Hon. Gérard Pelletier, the former member for the electoral district of Hochelaga. The second is from Mr. Walter Carter, the former hon. member for St. John's West. Both resignations have been received in due form and are in order.

RESIGNATION OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES

Mr. Speaker: I have also received a resignation from the Deputy Chairman of Committees, the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner). I might say at this time that in his first year in this office it was an honour for all of us associated with the Chair and the Clerks at the table to have the assistance and able counsel of Mr. Penner in that role. We regret to see him go.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1410)

Mr. Speaker: I want to wish him well in his new career. We have some information as to the nominee for his replacement which will evidently take place later in the day. We anticipate with the same warm feeling and joy the replacement by that hon. member, who I suppose I should refrain from mentioning until it becomes an official fact.

RETIREMENT OF CLERK ASSISTANT

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will notice, for the first time, probably, in the experience if not of all hon. members of the House, then of one or two, the absence from the table of Mr. Gordon Dubroy. Mr. Dubroy has been Clerk Assistant to this House and has served in other capacities with a quality that is so extraordinary as to escape adequate description by me. The fact that he is not here is the result of his retirement last spring. When I was first elected to this position he was ready then to retire, but I begged him to stay on because I valued his counsel and advice. Experience has taught me that persuading him to stay was one of the most important and salutary moves I ever could have made.

Mr. Dubroy finally prevailed upon us, in the summer, to accept his resignation and it was time for his retirement to begin. I wish all hon. members to know that I invited Mr. Dubroy to be here today at the table in order to hear not only my tribute but, I am sure, the tributes that will be expressed to him by representatives of all parties in the House. His absence from the House is certainly not due to his unwillingness to accept my invitation but, unfortunately, because he is at present in hospital in Ottawa, where this morning he underwent rather serious surgery. We are awaiting reports from the hospital but, regretfully, I cannot be optimistic at this time. When further news is available, I will certainly pass it along to hon. members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: We find ourselves blessed with the replacement for Mr. Dubroy in the person of Mr. Charles Beverley Koester, the former Clerk of the legislature of Saskatchewan. The Privy Council has blessed us with a man of experience and skill.

I would not want to undertake to describe the qualifications that would be required to fill the post that has been left vacant by Mr. Dubroy, but certainly it is our early indication that Mr. Koester possesses all of those qualifications. I know all hon. members would want to wish him well in that distinguished position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR OF LEGISLATIVE SERVICES

Mr. Speaker: I have one final piece of information to transmit to hon. members, that is, the appointment of Mr. R. E. Thomas as Director of Legislative Services, a service upon which all hon. members depend so heavily. Mr. Thomas has served in various capacities leading to his appointment. He has been a faithful servant of the House of Commons and we are confident that his appointment as Director of Legislative Services is a wise one. I am sure all

hon. members would want to congratulate him upon that appointment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE TO DEAL WITH ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

Mr. Speaker: I understand that in respect of the announcement by the Prime Minister last evening there have been discussions about the subject matter for debate this day and that the President of the Privy Council may have some remarks to make in that respect.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in order to provide for a special debate on the government's anti-inflation program today, I suggest the House might like to make an order to permit the Minister of Finance to table now the white paper entitled "Attack on Inflation".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: How about "wrestling with inflation"?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that members of the House are very anxious to have such a debate today. My suggestion is that the Minister of Finance should be given the authority to table his white paper now, so that we would have an opportunity of discussing it some time this afternoon. In order to provide for that debate, I also suggest that an order be made in the following terms:

That when the orders of the day are reached this day, a minister of the Crown shall move the adjournment of the House in order to debate the white paper entitled "Attack on Inflation" tabled this day, and that the said motion shall be deemed to have been adopted at 10 p.m.

Mr. Nowlan: What is the name of the minister—Rip van Winkle?

Mr. Speaker: The first matter is that the Minister of Finance shall have leave to table the white paper, and the second is the order proposed by the President of the Privy Council. Is this agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TABLING OF WHITE PAPER, "ATTACK ON INFLATION"

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I hope the same unanimity continues throughout my term of office.

An hon. Member: Don't count on it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would like to lay on the table of the House, in both official languages, the white paper on the subject of inflation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES ON FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION OF MR. T. C. DOUGLAS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, and before we begin to discuss matters which might reveal some slight differences of opinion among hon. members, I want to draw attention to a remarkable anniversary of a remarkable man, a man whose character and achievements elicit unanimous respect and universal admiration. It was on October 14, 1935—40 years ago today—that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was first elected to this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It is astonishing to realize that a man so young in spirit and a man whose ideas and priorities are so relevant to today and tomorrow took his seat in this House before any of the rest of us were here and before many of the rest of us were born.

An hon. Member: Not you.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: It is even more astonishing to realize that a man of such phenomenal energy will have 71 candles on the cake when he celebrates his birthday next Monday.

[Translation]

The respect which the hon. member enjoys in the House is not only ascribable to his vitality, his age, but is especially due to his distinguished contribution to federal politics and to the valuable services which he has rendered and which he continues to render to his country.

Throughout his long career as churchman, Member of Parliament, premier of Saskatchewan during 17 years and leader of the New Democratic Party, he has worked with untiring eagerness to see Canada achieve the objectives which he had set for himself on reaching adulthood, namely independence and national unity, civil liberties and equality of opportunities and above all social justice.

[English]

● (1420)

Over the years he has known moments of triumph, but never of despair; he has heard criticisms of his policies, but never of his integrity. His experience of the hunger, poverty and unemployment of the depression years on the prairies has left a permanent mark on his soul and has made him a lifelong man of the people. He has pleaded the cause of the common man from one end of Canada to the other, and left behind in each community he has visited a lasting impression of warmth, compassion, wit and tireless energy. All of us in this House know him as a skilful and formidable speaker, a man who always keeps his word, a man who is willing to forget sharp words spoken in the heat of debate even though he seems incapable of forgetting any fact he ever learned.

In the name of everyone on this side of the House, I want to salute a man whose presence here continues to earn for parliament the respect of Canadians everywhere.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—at least for this occasion today—on behalf of myself and my party in paying tribute to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

I think the first thing that should be noticed about the hon. gentleman and his life is that he was an immigrant. I do not know just what effect this is going to have upon the attitudes of various people in Canada toward future immigration policy. The second thing is that I understand he was an amateur boxing champion, which no doubt explains why he is so familiar with Murphy's law. I understand that an antagonistic voter once tried to ridicule the hon. gentleman by saying that Mr. Douglas was so small he could eat him, and the hon. gentleman replied, "If you ate me, you would have more brains in your stomach than in your head."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: As the Prime Minister has outlined, his public career has been very long, very honourable and very distinguished. I have known him for quite a long time. I knew him first when he was premier of the province of Saskatchewan and I was premier of an even greater province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The hon. gentleman and I have not always agreed, but I want to say that he exemplifies an extraordinarily rare combination of generosity, of spirit, of good humour, of tenacity and courage, not to mention eloquence. He has given a great deal to this parliament, to the legislature of Saskatchewan and to our country. I respect him; I like him. I congratulate him for his record of years of public service. Personally, and on behalf of my party colleagues, I wish him many years of health, happiness and continued controversy.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I wish to join the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in extending our wishes to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). The hon. member was for many years the premier of Saskatchewan. Indeed, he led the CCF party to power in that province, thus forming the first CCF government in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister referred to October 1935. That year, William Aberhart was elected under the banner of Social Credit. A few months later, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was a federal candidate in Saskatchewan. The member was then well known in the west. He was therefore elected in 1935. I was told that he used to drive a 1933 or 1934 car on which could be read on one side: Vote CCF and on the other: Vote Social Credit. He was therefore the real representative of two political parties when he was elected for the first time in 1935. And at that time he so attracted the attention of the people—it is to be noted—that he even attracted not only the sympathy and friendship, but also the conviction of the present Prime Minister. At that time, the Prime Minister was strongly in favour of the CCF party. Therefore, this means that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has commanded the respect of a number of people who shared his convictions.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to include the hon. member among my good friends. He is devoted and he has earned the sympathy not only of the members of his own political party, but also the sympathy of others who appreciate him as a man. For instance, in Ponteix, Saskatchewan, where all my relations on my maternal side have been living since 1909—all were authentic Liberals—when Tommy Douglas canvassed in an election in Saskatchewan, and became minister, we heard them say: We are not CCFers but we cannot vote against Tommy. That is how people voted for Tommy and that is how he attracted the sympathy and friendship of the whole population of his province and of Canada.

Therefore, I join with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition to wish him a happy anniversary next Monday. He is seventy-one and yet he does not look a day older than fifty. This means he is in perfect physical form. Once again, I wish him many more years during which he can continue to devote himself to the whole population. Obviously, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is an asset for the House of Commons. He is a man who sets a good example and those who follow him in the field of work and courage are not going wrong. In the name of my colleagues and in my own name, I extend every good wish to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. May he continue to devote his time and energy for the good of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, as I belong to the same political family as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), it would be inappropriate for me now to devote a number of words praising the hon. member that would otherwise, in different circumstances, be appropriate. I say this especially when the hon. member's integrity, his commitment to principle, his debating skill, and above all, perhaps, his sense of humour have been so well alluded to by the leaders of the other political parties in this House. However, as I am the only one of those who have spoken so far who was not born when the hon. member was first elected 40 years ago—

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —I wish to say, in all seriousness, that the specific detail for which people of my generation will most remember the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, both in terms of his contribution to this House and as premier of the province of Saskatchewan, is that more than any other Canadian of his generation he fought the very difficult, very trying battle of achieving for Canadians universal medical and hospital care throughout the land.

Mr. T. C. Douglas

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Not only Canadians of my generation who were watching him then, often as young boys or girls, or certainly as young men and women, but future historians who write the full biography of Tommy Douglas will single that out as his most notable and worth-while contribution to the people of our country wherever they live.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I through you express my sincere thanks to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the leader of the Social Credit party, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), and my own leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), for the very nice things they have said and for their felicitations to me on this, the fortieth anniversary of my having been elected to the House of Commons. I must confess that I have been trying to suppress the fact that I came to this House five years before the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and seven years before the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) because I did not want to destroy the common concept that these two distinguished members were here when the place started.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I must confess that I am overwhelmed by the fulsome praise that has been lavished upon me by the leaders of the various political parties, and I want to say that I have had some difficulty in recognizing myself: I know many people across Canada will have even greater difficulty recognizing these descriptions of me. As a matter of fact, I have often thought that my whole political life—my whole life, as a matter of fact—could be summed up in the words "printer, preacher, politician, premier, or the descent of man."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On October 14, 1935, I was elected to this chamber as a private member. Forty years later, I am still a private member. My only consolation is that I am holding my own.

When I entered public life, I tried to fix one principle in mind; that is, that I would never allow my political differences to interfere with my personal friendships. I can honestly say this afternoon that I have had friends, and some of them close personal friends, in all the political parties and that I have friends in all parts of this chamber. Therefore, I feel something like the old man who, when he was asked how it was that he did not have an enemy in the world, said, "It is very simple; I outlived the bastards."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It is always the tendency for men and women, as they grow older, to glorify the past and to belittle the present. However, I can say with complete sincerity that while the House of Commons in the second half of the 1930s had in it some political giants, I think the House of Commons today is more dynamic, more lively. We have a better committees' system. We have a better rapport with the constituencies, thanks to the constituency offices and sending out of household mail. I think there is now a better understanding between the people and the elected members than probably at any other time in my political experience.

I look back on four decades of public life, some 22 years in this House and almost 18 years in the legislature of Saskatchewan, and I am convinced more than ever in the effectiveness of parliamentary government. We may not always move as quickly as we should. We do not always advance as rapidly as I would like to see it done. I have never believed in the old cliché that government is the art of the possible. That is often the excuse for caution and timidity. I believe that government is the art of the impossible.

In 40 years I have seen new programs introduced; I have seen new government agencies set up; I have seen social and economic changes which 40 years ago would have been considered sheer madness.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I will not make any comments on the contemporary scene.

I would like to thank those who have spoken, and hon. members in all parts of the House, for their good wishes as I begin my second 40 years of public endeavour on behalf of the political principles to which I adhere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: It being almost 2:45 p.m., I have yet to call proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 43. Perhaps hon. members would agree that we might turn to that item, now, and then proceed directly to question period which would expire at 3:30. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BILINGUALISM

SUGGESTED DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF PHASE TWO OF PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that all public service staff associations have protested in the strongest terms the government's plan to implement phase two of the bilingual program dealing with units working in French and have called for a halt in implementation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That the implementation of phase two be halted forthwith, and that the government's program of implementation be submitted to a parliamentary committee to ascertain whether it is in keeping with the spirit and intent of the House resolution of 1973.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43 the question cannot be put in the absence of unanimous consent by the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DEFICIT IN CONNECTION WITH CONSTRUCTION OF SWIMMING POOL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43—

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Cossitt: —to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the following motion:

That the Prime Minister make a full statement to the House in regard to the sizeable deficit existing in the fund for construction of the swimming pool at his official residence, 24 Sussex Drive, and the House requests this statement include specifically details of the recent unsuccessful attempt by Senator Keith Davey to collect sufficient funds to cover such deficit from prominent Liberals, the amount of the deficit, whether the Prime Minister and Mr. William Teron, President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are presently considering assuming the cost themselves and an assurance that they will not use public funds to bail themselves out.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATE BY BANK OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, as my motion concerns more precisely the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), I should like to congratulate him for his appointment and wish him well for the welfare of Canada.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a very important and urgent matter.

In view of the ever increasing interest rates being the main cause of inflation that affects mostly low wage earners and Parliament being the assembly of the people's delegates, who is the supreme authority in Canada, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) I move:

That the House recommend to the government and the Minister of Finance to order the Bank of Canada to announce immediately a reduction of interest rates in order to check the voraciousness of credit controllers in the country and at the same time really control inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion cannot be put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED TRIBUTE TO LEADER OF OPPOSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency.

Whereas the nation has witnessed over the last month and year the greatest dishonesty, treachery, indecisive leadership and lack of integrity, all in the name of political expediency—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Dick: —culminating in the speech delivered to the nation last evening in violation of Canada's election laws, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House, indeed, this nation, show its gratitude to the one political leader who has shown honesty, courage, integrity and a willingness to put his country before himself or his own party's electoral chances, by giving the ovation deserved to one Robert Lorne Stanfield.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TERMINATION DATE OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBLE PROVISION FOR REVIEW BY PARLIAMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): May I direct a question or two to the Prime Minister concerning the program about which he spoke last evening—a program contained in the white paper tabled by the Minister of Finance today?

Last evening, the Prime Minister said, and I quote him, "The program of restraint I am announcing tonight will be in effect for a considerable length of time." Can the right hon. gentleman tell the House, at least in a preliminary way, how long the program will be in effect?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The legislation itself will provide for its normal termination. The period will be slightly longer than three years—to December, 1978.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the legislation to be introduced to establish this program of restraint, and the powers associated with it, make any provision for a parliamentary review before the expiration of the life of the program as now envisaged? Will there be provision for a parliamentary review, say, at the end of 18 months or two years?

Mr. Trudeau: No, that is not our intention, but I realize the hon. gentleman might wish to make some argument on that basis and we shall listen to it as the debate develops.

EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION GUIDELINES ON SALARIES OF MEMBERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A further supplementary on another question or problem arising in connection with the program. The Prime Minister will recall the conversation we had last evening in the presence of the other party leaders on the matter of the effect of the new guidelines upon my salary, his salary, the salaries of ministers, on the salaries of certain members of the New Democratic Party. Is the Prime Minister now in a position to tell the House that it is the intention of the government that his salary, my salary, the emoluments of the New Democratic Party leader and of ministers will be restricted to a maximum increase of $2,400, despite any statutory authorization of a larger amount?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the hon. gentleman recalls the conversation we had last night, I did indicate that the government had given consideration to that aspect. It was not quite clear in the guidelines—not in our intent, but in the guidelines—as to whether contracts and agreements signed before would also cover statutes—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I indicated to the hon. gentleman last night that we were prepared to deal with this. I repeat, it is not clear in the guidelines whether—

An hon. Member: Come on!

[Mr. Dick.]

Mr. Trudeau: But I want to assure the House that the legislation on the guidelines will clear this matter up, and it will be quite certain that all office holders under the Crown will be subject to the guidelines.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBLE CEILING ON GROWTH OF MONEY SUPPLY AND NEW BUDGET

● (1450)

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance, and would also like to congratulate him on his new portfolio.

In view of the Prime Minister's statement on restraint last night followed, unfortunately, by vague references to monetary policy in today's white paper, has the minister contacted the Governor of the Bank of Canada in regard to appropriate monetary policy for the nation to fit within the so-called national action program of the government and, if so, will he indicate what ceiling has been placed on the growth of our money supply, bearing in mind that it has grown 111 per cent in the past 7½ years and by 15 per cent in the past 12 months alone?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government is developing these guidelines after discussions with officials, including those of the Bank of Canada. The policy to be followed is essentially that set out by my predecessor at the time of the June 23 budget, in that there would be a moderate increase in the money supply to meet the requirements of an expanding economy and some part of inflation. There would, in other words, be slower growth in the money supply than has been the case in previous fiscal periods.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again in light of the Prime Minister's announcement, is the Minister of Finance reviewing the current fiscal stance of the government and can we expect an early announcement on the changes in this fiscal area, perhaps in the form of a new budget?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Not an early one, Sir.

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF REAL GROWTH

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, as there are no targets or estimates for real growth in our economy set out in the government's anti-inflation program, and as the former Minister of Finance made several estimates in respect of the real growth in our economy for this year, ranging from a high of something over 4 per cent to zero or negative growth, would the Minister of Finance give the House his estimate of the real growth in Canada for 1975?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Not at this time, Mr. Speaker.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAMS—PRICE CONTROL MECHANISM—PROVISION FOR CONSUMER COMPLAINTS TO BOARD

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, and I should like on behalf of my party to extend congratulations to him on his new office. I hope he will do well, and I am sure he will understand if I add, and somewhat better than his predecessor.

My question arises out of the Prime Minister's address last night in which he made reference to the introduction of controls on prices and profits. Can he explain whether the government intends to introduce a price control mechanism distinct from the profit guidelines, or are prices to be controlled only by means of such guidelines which would only operate after the event, so to speak, and only if the board should decide to look into the books of a particular company?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby for his kind remarks. As the hon. member might note from the white paper, the circumstances will very much depend on whether the cost increase in respect of a particular product can be clearly allocated to it, or whether the cost is so intermingled with others that one would have to follow another system. In the case of one in respect of which the cost can be allocated, then the only price increase that will be permissible will be one on which actual cost increase has been proven. With regard to unallocable costs, in some industries and, of course, with regard to the distribution sector, the question of profit margin would then be the basis for determination and application of the guidelines.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, could the minister explain whether in conjunction with the so-called price controls there will be a procedure whereby a consumer faced with a sudden or dramatic price increase in respect of a product would have some opportunity to bring that increase directly to the attention of the anti-inflation board, and whether an investigation of that price increase or of that company's profit position would automatically result from this process?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would agree that any such complaint should be directed to the board, and I would invite either members of the House or members of the public to do so whenever the occasion arises. As to the manner in which the board dispatches its business, of course it will have to take the internal decisions, but this kind of flow of information will obviously be central to its effective operation.

Mr. Broadbent: Having regard to that last point, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would indicate to the House at least approximately how much time would follow between the consumer laying a complaint about an alleged inappropriate price increase with the board and when he or she might expect an answer?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, this would directly relate to the degree of compliance we are fortunate enough to obtain from the business community or other sectors of the economy. I would only say that every effort will be made to keep the board's business current, recognizing, of course, that there will or could indeed be a volume that would be difficult to handle in a short period of time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF ADMINISTRATIVE ERROR IN PAROLING OF MR. MARTEL AND MR. CLERMONT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General of Canada.

On a number of occasions I asked the Solicitor General whether the government would enforce the capital punishment legislation. He has always replied that he had other means to protect society. In the case of Mr. Martel who committed suicide the other day and killed a 6 year old child, the minister claimed that it had been through an administrative error that he had been out on seven or eight occasions. Recently, we had the case of a Mr. Clermont who was sentenced to hang some twenty years ago and who was out on five or six occasions. Could the minister tell us whether this was also due to an administrative error?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check on the second case. In the first case of Martel, there was an unfortunate incident in that the warrant of arrest for Martel was delivered by court officials to the wrong prison, to Parthenais rather than the federal penitentiary. Mr. Martel was not, as some newspapers say, out of parole. As a matter of fact he was refused by the parole board both times he applied, but he was released at the end of sentence on mandatory supervision. He would have been kept in if the new warrant of arrest had been delivered to the right place. This is the administrative error to which reference was made. Since that time we have had a meeting in Montreal with the court officials, with the police, with the parole board and so on, and we are taking steps to make sure this sort of thing does not happen again. This is not all within my jurisdiction; some is municipal and some is provincial.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON RETENTION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the representations made to the minister by various police forces, prison guards and other associations which are asking for the enforcement of the current federal legislation and not the reestablishment of the previous one, has the minister given way to these representations and can he advise the House of the means at his disposal to protect society against notorious criminals?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the government intends to take every measure possible to protect the public against violent crime, and the Minister of Justice and myself, with the government, are now preparing a package of measures directed toward that goal. I must say in answer to the hon. member that when we do commute a death sentence we do not do so in violation of the law but in accordance with the law, as there are provisions within the Criminal Code which provide for that. I also want to point out to the hon. member that since 1967 when the present law was put in force there have only been five commutations under that law, and in three of those there were unanimous recommendations for clemency.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—CONSENT OF PREMIERS TO DECLARATION OF EMERGENCY AS BASIS FOR LEGISLATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and has to do with the meeting with the provincial premiers in connection with this problem of inflation. In view of the fact that many of the means whereby inflation can be controlled are within provincial jurisdiction, as he has said on more than one occasion, and in view of the fact that before the federal parliament can enact legislation which would be effective it would be necessary to have in the preamble of the statute or in a section set apart for the purpose a declaration that there was in effect a serious state of emergency, did the Prime Minister obtain the consent of all the premiers in respect of the insertion of such a term in the act so as to ensure that it will not be subject to successful attack in the Supreme Court of Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can say the matter was discussed by the premiers. I did not ask them for, and did not obtain from them, any statement to the effect they would react immediately in a final way, and therefore I would not want to speak for their various positions which I hope will be made known as soon as possible; but the matter was discussed. The federal government is aware of the motion put forward by the right hon. gentleman. I would just add that I agree in part with the right hon. gentleman, but there are other headings under which the federal government does claim jurisdiction other than the peace, order and good government section alone. There is the commercial power and there is the banking power as well as many other powers exercised in the course of this legislation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All of that is correct in theory, but not in fact. The Supreme Court of Canada has made perfectly clear in a number of judgments that for the federal parliament to intrude in those areas within the jurisdiction of the provinces it would be necessary to have a declaration on the part of parliament that an emergency in fact existed. I suggest to him, and await his reply, that without such a term whatever legislation is introduced would be like conducting a war against inflation with pillows and platitudes.

[Mr. Allmand.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I might be able to reassure the right hon. gentleman by telling him at this stage I have no cause to believe the preamble, as it appears in the legislation, will be challenged as to its constitutionality by the premiers; but as the right hon. gentleman knows it is open to any Canadian to challenge the constitutionality of an act. We will have to see if the federal act is constitutional or not. We are convinced it is. I am just indicating to the right hon. gentleman that we are not invoking merely the grounds that he has suggested but are reserving the right to plead before the Supreme Court that many other aspects of federal jurisdiction are involved.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBLE CONTINGENCY PLAN IN EVENT OF SUCCESSFUL CHALLENGE IN COURTS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary. Because so many of these subject matters referred to in the Prime Minister's address last night, and in the white paper today, really fall exclusively within provincial jurisdiction, such as rents, professional fees and such matters, in the event of a constitutional challenge as the right hon. gentleman just indicated, I wonder whether there is any further alternative or contingency plan, especially in the field of taxation, that the Prime Minister may have in respect of the provinces.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be that the hon. gentleman is anticipating a bit the legislation itself which shortly will be before the House, but I would indicate to him that within the scheme of the legislation there are various agreements which are provided for and which can be entered into in areas in which the provinces wish to exercise their own jurisdiction. He will see the details of that. At this stage, at any rate we have no intention of forcing upon the provinces any action with which they do not concur. We hope the position that the provinces themselves expressed at the St. John's conference of first provincial ministers a month and a half ago, to the effect that the federal government should take the leadership in fighting inflation, is the position they will sustain and the one which will bring them to co-operate with us in the application of these guidelines and their enforcement.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is simply this: because so many of these subjects will require, as I read it, specific regulations and specific ancillary legislation by the provinces in respect of professional fees, marketing boards and the price of land for housing, which will require some very positive action on the part of the provinces, has the right hon. gentleman received any specific assurance from any province that they will go along with it?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat as I answered the previous question that I am not empowered to speak for the provinces. I can say I was very encouraged by the attitude of the premiers yesterday and the general indication that they would want to co-operate with us in the fight against inflation in which they have been urging us to take leadership as recently as a month and a half ago. There is a general disposition to support our leadership. As to the specific way in which we exercise it and the specific way in which the legislation will be applied and enforced, they have reserved their judgment and properly so. They want to discuss this matter with their cabinets and they will make their views known later on.

EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON MONTREAL TRANSPORT FARES AND TAX SHARING WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

What measures does the minister propose to take within the framework of his anti-inflation program, and this in consultation with his Quebec counterparts, so that the TCMUC in Montreal will agree to review the increase in its public transport rates, which took effect yesterday and seriously affects all workers, or to give up this increase?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as we have indicated in the white paper, we are not taking action relating to contracts settled before today. I think the increase the hon. member is referring to is included in that later group. Of course, if there is a possibility, with the consent and the participation of the Quebec or some other province government, to set up a program which would monitor the costs, prices and salaries of governments, we would rely on cooperation in such a context.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Will this outburst of determination on the part of the government in the face of inflation result in putting off indefinitely any study of new federal-provincial sharing of costs to assist the municipalities which, as we know, are no longer capable of assuming their responsibilities, more specifically in the fields of leisure, housing renovation and public transport?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the matter of federal-provincial agreements in many fields of common interest is now under study; we can look into those changes as well as many others. I must point out that with our austerity program, we cannot guarantee higher payments to individuals or provinces for new programs. As my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated, there are programs to which we look for possibilities of decreasing present expenditures.

HEALTH

POSSIBLE REVISION OF MAXIMUM LEVELS FOR MERCURY CHLORIDE AND PCB

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether any revised maximum permissible levels for mercury chloride and PCB have been decided upon. If not, how soon can we expect any change in view of their present levels being considered by some experts as harmful to health.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the present time there is a maximum permissible level of 0.5 parts per million for mercury. This level is strictly enforced. In the immediate future it is not anticipated that there will be a further reduction in respect of that level. So far as PCB is concerned, the results of recent studies in the United States are causing serious concern and my department is examining the advisability of introducing standards which may be even more strict than the United States standards in this regard, for certain fish species in designated geographic areas.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—EFFECT ON BRITISH COLUMBIA WORKERS LEGISLATED BACK TO WORK

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that in the province of British Columbia some 60,000 workers have now returned to their employment in the public interest following government legislation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Leggatt: —and in view of the fact that this proposed legislation and the white paper would appear to exclude those workers who will not come under the exemptions provided to the 10 per cent, would the minister advise if he would not reconsider these guidelines so that those workers who have returned to work in the public interest following this legislation will not be limited in terms of the contracts they are about to negotiate or sign.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would say that a settlement of the dimensions of the one now being discussed in British Columbia obviously has to be of pretty fundamental interest, and the government of course will be seeking the guidance of the anti-inflation board with regard to any settlements of that kind. I think that the more sensible way to look at it is that we have created the anti-inflation board and will ask them to scrutinize the application of these guidelines to particular situations and to take action, either by reference back to government or to the administrator, as might seem desirable.

Mr. Leggatt: My supplementary question is this, Mr. Speaker: in view of the fact that the IWA, the largest trade union in British Columbia, is voting this week in terms of the Hutcheon conciliation report, and in view of the fact that that contract will clearly not be concluded prior to October 14 but subsequent to it, can the minister give those workers who are presently working on that contract any assurance that the vote they are now taking will not be invalid?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As minister, I do not propose to give assurances either on that or on any individual contract. I think the sensible thing is to refer these matters to the anti-inflation board, to rely on their efforts in this area, and to rely on the judgment they exercise in these matters.

Mr. Leggatt: Would the minister recommend to the union that its members now negotiate with the board rather than with their employers?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It seems to me that the union will, of course, want to continue to negotiate under the collective bargaining arrangements that exist. We hope that together with all other Canadians they will take account of the possible impact of a very high settlement upon the interests of Canadians generally.

HOUSING

POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF SUBSIDIES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

As, in coming months, we will have to strengthen our economy through every possible means, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to extend beyond October 31 next the federal subsidies program of $500 to home buyers, to help the housing construction sector?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to speak at this time on any specific subsidy. I would refer to the whole range of programs on which we hope to continue the progress we are making at an encouraging rate this year—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: —so that we make certain that we achieve even higher targets next year.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Does the minister mean by his answer that he will cancel the $500 grant to the owner of a new house?

[English]

Mr. Danson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that at this time. I am reviewing this very carefully. We must make certain, particularly in these times of considerable restraint, that every dollar we spend produces results. I have not made a firm decision but I will make it shortly.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCTION IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to my clansman, the new Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the measures proposed by the Prime Minister last evening indicate no action to deal with certain inequities in our economy, such as inordinately high mortgage rates, and that these inequities will tend to be perpetuated unless dealt with specifically, can the minister say what measures, if any, are proposed to alleviate the high cost of mortgages for prospective home owners whose income increases may be limited to $600 a year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps before replying in substance I could, as another member of that able and very good looking clan, the Clan Donald, express my very best wishes to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands in the enterprise in which she recently launched herself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With respect to the substance of the question I would say that my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, will be bringing forward, as is indicated in the white paper, some proposals with regard to the housing area. In the longer run, of course, the most effective way to bring down the cost of borrowing in Canada is to bring down the rate of inflation.

HOUSING

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF NEW PROPOSALS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Can he give us some indication as to when these new proposals will be brought forward?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): As soon as they possibly can be, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member and as all hon. members know, we are constantly on our toes in the housing field.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Give us an honest answer.

Mr. Danson: Our plans are ready. But in view of the existing circumstances we want to review all the programs we have now to make certain again that in the current situation they will have the maximum impact. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands will be impressed and, I am sure, gratified by the housing starts in this past month amounting to 234,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: This is up 37 per cent over the same month last year.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—ESTABLISHMENT OF REVIEW BOARD

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the subject we were discussing originally and ask the Prime Minister, if the government intends to appoint the anti-inflation board under the Inquiries Act before the legislation he has dealt with is passed whether he has established the names of suitable hardy Canadians who will be likely to be appointed, and will Mrs. Plumptre be one of the members of that board?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As usual, the hon. gentleman has a great deal of foresight. He is reading the government's mind.

An hon. Member: What mind?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: That is a terrible thing to say.

Mr. Trudeau: Are hon. members opposite indicating that the solution we chose is the one they would propose themselves? This morning, by order in council under the Inquiries Act, we have appointed the chairman and vice chairman of the anti-inflation review board. The legislation itself, of course, will provide for other bases for their existence, but we wanted this board to start its existence as of today.

Mr. Baldwin: Who are they?

Mr. Trudeau: There is some curiosity opposite. The name of the chairman is the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The vice chairman is a person who has equally the respect of the House. I thank them both for having answered the call of duty to their country in undertaking this very difficult task. The name of the vice chairman is Mrs. Beryl Plumptre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Have their salaries been established and will the salary payable to Mrs. Plumptre be established according to the guidelines which the government is proposing?

POST OFFICE

DISPUTE WITH CANADIAN UNION OF POSTAL WORKERS—POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE OF CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Could the minister inform the House as to the current status of negotiations with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and, particularly, whether the government remains prepared to accept the recommendations of the conciliation board notwithstanding the guidelines announced last evening?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, at the present moment no negotiations are going on. The union is preoccupied with the problem of obtaining a mandate in order to call a strike, if in the opinion of the executive such a move is necessary. The government is prepared to negotiate with the union on the Moisan report, the conciliation board report, particularly in the light of the fact that the guidelines provide certain exceptions, a very significant one being that "there may also be other grounds for exceptions, such as increases necessary to maintain long-established historical relationships between wages in closely related groups and other special cases of equity". The long established historical relationship would be between the wages of the letter carriers and the inside postal workers.

Mr. Dinsdale: From the remarks of the Postmaster General I would conclude that the conciliation board agreement stands, but in view of the fact that the national leadership of the postal union in canvassing its membership has failed to provide an opportunity to express an opinion on the conciliation report, and furthermore appears anxious to lead the membership down the strike route, will the Postmaster General in the public interest now issue an unequivocal statement offering to reopen negotiations on the basis of the Moisan report?

Mr. Mackasey: The postal workers understand that I am prepared to negotiate on this basis. If the national executive continues adamantly to suggest that negotiations take place on a report which advocates 71 per cent over one year, they will be on strike for a long, long time.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF EXEMPTING CONTRACTS UNDER NEGOTIATION FROM WAGE GUIDELINES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether wage negotiations which have gone to arbitration or conciliation will be exempt from or covered by the wage guidelines announced in the white paper which we received today.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the guidelines with respect to compensation provide that agreements concluded as of the moment of the cut-off point would not be interfered with by the guidelines process. Those which are not concluded would obviously be affected by it, and it would then be a matter for the anti-inflation board to determine in any particular circumstance what the impact would be, in particular what the impact would be of the level of compensation to be awarded.

Oral Questions

APPLICATION OF WAGE GUIDELINES TO SALARIES OF MEMBERS

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the government ensure that its legislation relating to wage guidelines will also apply to salaries of members of parliament, parliamentary secretaries, senators and ministers in the same way as it will to many other sectors of the economy?

REPORT OF ADVISORY GROUP ON EXECUTIVE COMPENSATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ACCEPTANCE—EFFECT OF WAGE GUIDELINES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also with regard to salaries, and it is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether the recommendations of the fourth report of the advisory group on executive compensation in the public service, tabled in April, has been accepted by the government. That reports recommends salary increases of up to $6,500 for deputy ministers. Has that report been accepted?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the government agreed to this report in July.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board, then, whether the recommendations in that report are already in effect, and was the timing of that report coincidental to the announcement of the Prime Minister last night? Does the statement made in the House affect those recommendations in any way?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the report of the Lambert Commission was submitted to the government last July and the Prime Minister announced in July that the government agreed to this report. Thus, this report is not covered by the policies which were spelled out last evening and tabled in the House today.

FISHERIES

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON EXTENSION OF CONTROL OVER RESOURCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). Tomorrow Iceland becomes the first nation in the North Atlantic to extend its fishing limits to 200 miles, and Norway is expected to follow suit. Other nations will be allowed to fish in Iceland's waters under a controlled licencing progam upon payment of a fee for fishing on a smaller scale, and I understand Mexico is considering similar action. I light of the continuing decline in Canadian fishing resources, is the present government giving consideration to the early extension of Canadian control over the fishing rsources on our continental shelf?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, the countries listed by the hon. member have indicated their desire to extend, and this would be followed by negotiations. We have already started the process of bilateral discussion and bilateral negotiations with at least five of the nations which fish off our coast. I believe the success of the ICNAF conference a couple of weeks ago is a recognition of the priority of the coastal state, and I believe Canada's desire to extend its jurisdiction is still very visible to all concerned.

POSSIBLE DISCUSSION OF EXTENSION OF CONTROL OVER RESOURCES WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same minister in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Secretary of State from the United States is now visiting Ottawa, and in view of the fact that that country is also moving toward a 200 mile fisheries economic zone, I wonder if the minister would indicate if the relationship between Canada and the United States with regard to the 200-mile limit will be discussed during that visit. Will the minister be taking part, and will he report back to the House on the results of that discussion?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, we have been keeping in close touch with the United States on these matters. This question will come up in the discussions on the law of the sea and its implications, and I will leave to my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the responsibility of reporting back to the House.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CONTINGENCY PLAN TO COMBAT INFLATION—ROLE OF FORMER FINANCE MINISTER IN DRAFTING ANTI-INFLATION PROPOSALS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Now that the government has tabled the white paper on inflation, could the Prime Minister table the long rumoured contingency plan on inflation so that we can see what changes, if any, there are in the two approaches and thus help us understand why the government took so long to take action on this issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate that the Prime Minister may not want to answer the first question, but perhaps he might be able to answer the second question, which is not as provocative and much more constructive. When the former minister of finance was minister, did he play any role in the preparation of the current anti-inflation proposals?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have asked two questions in this House after a two month holiday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order or on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley has one minute to wait for his question of privilege.

TRANSPORT

CRASH OF PANARCTIC AIRCRAFT—DATE OF REPORT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. While he is new in his job perhaps he could disinter a long standing problem from his predecessor and tell us when there will be a report issued on the crash of the Panarctic plane in the Arctic, because there is grave prejudice to next of kin and beneficiaries of those persons unfortunately deceased in that crash.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope we will be able to issue that report in about a week.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED REDUCTION OF STAFF—EFFECT ON IMPLEMENTATION OF BILINGUALISM PROGRAM

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. As part of the white paper in terms of the public service there has been an indication of reduction in man-years. Is the minister in a position to tell us generally the extent of that reduction of man-years across the board, and does the fact that only staff increases will be allowed in certain areas set out in the white paper indicate that it is the intention of the government not to proceed with the implementation of phase two of the bilingualism program in so far as it may amount to the necessity for an increase in staff?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the policy proposed by the government indicates in fact that some departments will experience a reduction and some others an increase in their personnel as described in the white paper tabled today.

Of course, this will not prevent the continuation of the bilingualism policy voted by the House of Commons in 1973 and which the hon. member supported.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, on a very short question of privilege, I tried to ask two very sensible and logical questions during the question period. I did allude to the fact that basically the Prime Minister has been on holiday for about two months and this House has been adjourned for a little more than two months. Regardless of what has happened this weekend, and any comments about intellectual dishonesty, I think we are entitled to an answer as to whether there ever was a contingency plan with regard to inflation so that we could see what in heaven's name took the government so long to get off its butt.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE HOUSE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp):

That Charles Turner, Esquire, member for the electoral district of London East, be appointed Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COSSITT—ALLEGED TAPPING OF MEMBERS' TELEPHONES

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning a matter which I believe will be of grave concern to members on all sides of the House. I refer to information which has come to me that indicates clearly and beyond a doubt that telephone calls being made by members of parliament and possibly, also, by public servants from various places in Canada to their offices here in Ottawa or to other government offices in Ottawa are being periodically listened to in a manner which I will now describe.

The calls to which I refer are those which are made over what are commonly referred to as incoming watts lines which are available for use by public servants and members of parliament to make calls to government offices in Ottawa including members' own offices. Since this system was installed I have made use of it, as I am sure other members have also done, and it first came to my attention on a number of occasions that at intervals of approximately 30 to 45 seconds I was hearing clicking noises—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You hear that even when you are not on the phone.

Mr. Cossitt: —that sounded as if someone was coming on the line at such points. I therefore made immediate inquiries with several operators involved on these occasions, and was advised by the operators that they had instructions to check at certain intervals for the purpose, so they said, of seeing if a line was still in use, by listening for conversation. I then asked to speak to the senior supervisor on duty, and would like to cite as an example the conversation that I had with Mrs. Breton who was the supervisor on duty when such an incident occurred on October 1.

Mrs. Breton confirmed information given to me by another supervisor on a previous date that operators were under instructions to check the lines at approximately 45-second intervals to determine if conversation was in progress. She further stated that the reason a check was being made for conversation was that Bell Telephone equipment was such that when both parties hung up, the operator did not receive a disconnection and therefore there was no way of knowing whether the call was completed, without making such frequent checks. Any excuse that the checking is done mechanically without actual listening on the line could scarcely be accurate since on at least four occasions I was able to speak directly to and question the operator who was, in effect, listening in.

I find it difficult to accept the fact that Bell Canada's equipment is such that they do not know when a call is completed, and indeed I have since checked this point with persons in Bell Canada who tell me that they have no knowledge of equipment of this inadequate nature. I also asked who, specifically, had issued the instructions that telephone calls were to be monitored in this fashion and I was advised that any such instructions were never issued by Bell Canada and could presumably only have come from the Department of Communications of the Government of Canada, and presumably specifically from or through the office of the man who I gather is in charge of government telecommunications, namely, Mr. M. E. Baigrie. It was explained to me by Bell Canada that although the operators involved in this incident are employees of Bell Canada, they are entirely subject to taking orders and instructions from the Government of Canada.

This brings me, Mr. Speaker, directly to my point of privilege, and that is that we have a case proven beyond a doubt that the Government of Canada, through the Department of Communications, is requiring operators to listen to telephone calls being made by members of this House. It does not seem to me to make any difference how it is explained away, checking for conversation, checking to see if a line is still in use, checking to see if conversation is going on: all of these things boil down to one simple, straightforward fact, and that is that people, under instructions of this government, are listening periodically to private telephone calls of members of parliament.

This I contend, Mr. Speaker, is a breach of the law of this country; it is an affront to parliament; it is directly interfering with the privileges of members of parliament, regardless of political affiliation, when they talk to constituents and other persons over the lines of Bell Canada with complete confidentiality expected.

I realize that generally operators of Bell Canada are honest people who are not concerned with reporting what opposition members of parliament are talking about in regard to government policies or other important matters, but the essential thing is that the very fact this listening is going on does not in any way preclude the obvious possibility that there could be those who would, under direct instruction of the government, make notes and report on calls to those in government to whom such calls might be of interest, and this I think is intolerable and quite beyond the democratic process.

A situation which can even permit an opening for any government to spy on the conversations of members of parliament is not one that should be treated lightly. It may be debatable, Mr. Speaker, if this is a definite case of privilege, but I do not believe it is in any way debatable that if it is a matter that is not strictly a case of privilege, it comes very close to it, and I therefore request the Chair's consideration of this matter.

In conclusion, I would also ask the privilege of reserving the right to move a subsequent motion on this subject should such seem to be advisable, since in a democracy anything that smacks remotely of dictatorial wire-tapping, eavesdropping or spying, or which creates a situation where such things could happen, must be stopped and stopped forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, of course, raises a very serious point. There have been allusions by two other hon. members of the House on previous days, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty), to difficulties not precisely of the same sort but similar difficulties with the technical equipment. After an assurance to the hon. member for Yukon just before the recess, I had a preliminary technical report—prepared, and I think perhaps the most advisable course might be to share that technical information, which is of a very preliminary nature, with the three hon. members involved, to elicit their views on it and to see whether or not anything needs to be done, in consultation with the various parties of the House. There might be some consensus to carry that kind of technical investigation further, or perhaps to have the matter looked at by one of the standing committees of the House, depending on the contents of the preliminary report. If that is agreeable, perhaps the matter can be handled in that way.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) seeks the consent of the House to revert to the tabling of documents. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[English]

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, some 400 questions are being answered today; therefore, I thought the House would not wish any parliamentary secretary or minister to take the time of the House in listing the numbers. I would therefore ask leave of the House, in lieu of reading the list, to table it. I understand members of the opposition may want to raise later about about this list. The government will not object to that procedure, if it can take place the following day.

● (1540)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, it has been arranged for the whole bag, as it were, to be tabled today and if any hon. member wishes to raise an issue on a matter of privilege, he should do so tomorrow. We consent to this proceeding, but I cannot forbear pointing out that in Finland, a country with a freedom of information law, the total number of questions answered every year, both written and oral, is only 300 or 400. I point this out to my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House leader of the official opposition for agreeing to this procedure, which I assure him will not be repeated frequently.

OCEAN MINING

Question No. 1,331—Mr. Forrestall:

What progress has been made by Canada in the area of extracting metals from the oceans, pursuant to the stimuli enunciated for same by the Minister of State for Science and Technology in the "New Oceans Policy" statement of July 12, 1973?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Two of the largest Canadian companies, Noranda Mines and International Nickel Company, are already participating in international consortia with long term research programs related to nodule mining. The Canadian government is also assisting Canadian manufacturers and service companies to develop technology for exploration and production of metals from the oceans. It is estimated that cumulative government support to the end of this fiscal year will be just over $300,000.

ADVERTISING COST—DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE AND METRIC COMMISSION

Question No. 1,339—Mr. Huntington:

1. What was the total cost of advertising in (a) the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce (b) the Metric Commission for the years 1972-73 and 1973-74?

5. Were any extras awarded and, if so, who authorized these extras and what was the purpose of these extras?

6. Which members from CIDA and/or the Department of External Affairs visited the job site and were their trips charged to the project?

7. How many Canadians were employed on the project?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See answer to question No. 1,480 tabled this day.

CONTRACT—REFUGEE HOUSING PROJECT IN VIETNAM

Question No. 1,662—Mr. Paproski:

1. What criteria were used to award the Refugee Housing project in Vietnam on July 11, 1968 and August 15, 1969?

2. (a) Who was asked to submit a bid (b) who was the low bidder (c) who was the high bidder?

3. Was the low bidder awarded the contract on the job and, if not, for what reason?

4. What was the net bid?

5. Were any extras awarded and, if so, who authorized these extras and what was the purpose of these extras?

6. Which members from CIDA and/or the Department of External Affairs visited the job site and were their trips charged to the project?

7. How many Canadians were employed on the project?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See answer to question No. 1,480 tabled this day.

REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON SECURITY

Question No. 1,894—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. With respect to paragraph 301 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Security (abridged), dated June 1969 (a) what Minister, agency or level of government determines what organizations are "subversive organizations" (b) what organizations are currently designated as subversive organizations?

2. As of March 1973, was the League for Socialist Action designated as a subversive organization?

3. Has paragraph 301 of the Report been adopted as government policy in the case of citizenship applications where it is felt there are considerations of security involved and, if not (a) has the recommendation been explicitly rejected or shelved (b) what is the current government policy on the question?

4. What were the criteria used to determine what constitutes the special "certain cases" that make the exception to the recommended policy of the recommendation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of the Solicitor General, the Prime Minister and Privy Council offices and the Department of the Secretary of State as follows: 1. (a) With respect to paragraph 301 of the report of the Royal Commission on Security (abridged), dated June 1969, no minister, agency, or level of government declares organizations subversive. (b) See reply to part 1(a).

2. See reply to part 1(a).

3. Yes, with the exception of access to a Security Review Board. This aspect of the recommendation is under study.

4. Actual illegalities or criminal acts where proven in court. Particularly significant security reasons, e.g. intelligence operations-activities directed towards or involvement in disorder and violence.

R. G. ELLIOT

Question No. 1,916—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many persons from Chile who did not possess sufficient points to be ordinarily admitted to Canada as landed immigrants have been advised or will be advised that they will be admitted with regulations waived since the date the present government of Chile took office?

2. Has the government turned down the application of Mr. R. G. Elliot of Worcester Park, Surrey, England for landed immigrant status for himself and family and, if so (a) is the government aware that this man was guaranteed employment in Calgary, Alberta and would not be a charge on the taxpayer (b) for what reason was he refused, regardless of points, when Chileans are being admitted freely?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. As of August 31, 1975, 2,096 persons were landed in Canada as a result of the special movement from Chile and 1,067 persons who have been issued immigrant visas have not yet arrived. An additional 227 persons have entered Canada as a result of events in Chile and are in the process of being landed. Of the 2,096 persons landed in Canada, slightly more than 300 were admitted through the use of discretion. In other words, these 300 persons were issued visas under the provision of subsection 4(a) of Section 32 of the Immigration Regulations. This subsection allows for the exercise of discretion by an immigration or visa officer by allowing such officer to approve the admission of an independent applicant who does not meet the selection norms if in his opinion there are good reasons why those norms do not reflect the particular applicants chances of establishing himself successfully in Canada and those reasons have been submitted in writing to, and approved by, an officer of the Department of Manpower and Immigration designated by the Minister of that Department. Particulars of those persons who have received visas but have not yet arrived and those persons in the process of being landed have not yet been tabulated.

2. Yes (a) The Department of Manpower and Immigration is aware that Mr. Elliot was offered employment in Calgary, Alberta. (b) Mr. Elliot failed to achieve the required units of assessment required by Section 32 and Schedule A of the Immigration Regulations and despite the offer of employment the immigration or visa officer found no reason for believing that the selection norms did not properly reflect Mr. Elliot's chances of establishing himself in Canada. On the other hand, in those 300 cases mentioned in part 1 of this Question where discretion was used, there were reasons to believe that because of assistance available from private agencies as well as through the use of special Government funds, the people from Chile would become successfully established in Canada.

MAN-DAYS OF WORK LOST AS A RESULT OF LAYOFFS

Question No. 2,033—Mr. Rodriguez:

By province, how many man-days of work were lost as a result of layoffs in (a) 1972 (b) 1973 (c) 1974 (d) January, 1975 (e) February, 1975?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): This department has no information regarding lay-offs.

CBC—RADIO LISTENING TIME

Question No. 2,229—Mr. Herbert:

Of the total radio listening time of all persons in Canada, what percentage is estimated as listening to (a) CBC radio outlets or programmes originating with CBC (b) independent radio outlets or programmes originating with these stations (c) foreign radio broadcasting?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The following figures named from the Bureau of Broadcast Measurement from the most recent survey indicate the percentage of total hours weekly tuning to all English and French CBC owned and operated radio stations, on the one hand, and all foreign radio stations on the other. The results are as follows:

	Hours Tuned Weekly	Per cent of Total Weekly Tuning
CBC (English and French) owned and operated stations	20,368,700	7.1
CBC Affilicated Radio Stations' Estimated Reach of CBC	5,020,950	1.8
		8.9
Affiliated Stations' Non-CBC Programming Estimate	28,452,050	9.9
Independent Canadian Stations	224,173,100	78.3
Foreign Stations	8,212,200	2.9
Total Radio Tuning	286,227,000	100.0

Since there is a great variation in the placement of CBC network programming on affiliated independent stations, it would take considerable expenditures in order to determine the exact amount of radio listening to CBC network programming via private stations. An extrapolated guesstimate of the reach of CBC programming on affiliated stations is about 1.8 per cent so that the total listening to CBC programming is 8.9 per cent. The term "listening" in the question is not defined. Very often people use the words "total hours tuned" and "total listening" as equivalent. BBM really measures only whether a radio set is on, not whether the listener is really listening, nor to what degree he is engaged in the message being communicated. Many background music stations have high ratings, but whether anyone is really listening is a different question. The CBC on the other hand sends to present programming which by its very nature demands attention. The statistics for the CBC may therefore be deceiving: they indicate 8.9 per cent of tuning, but the CBC may well account for a much higher percentage of all engaged radio listening. There are no statistical measurements of attentive versus non-attentive listening.

POST OFFICE—AREA DISTRIBUTION CENTRE, AURORA, ONTARIO

Question No. 2,264—Mr. Stevens:

1. Has the government any plan to establish in Aurora an area post office distribution centre and, if so, will the new facility be operated out of the existing post office building or is it planned to construct a new building?

2. If a new building is contemplated (a) where will it be located (b) on what date will it be constructed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Yes. A new building is proposed for the area.

2. (a) and (b) Not yet determined.

POST OFFICE—NEW OFFICE IN NEWMARKET, ONTARIO

Question No. 2,266—Mr. Stevens.

Has the government any immediate plans to build or rent a new post office in Newmarket, Ontario and (a) if so (i) on what date will tenders be called for the construction of the new building or for rental proposals (ii) what is planned for the present post office facility if it is no longer required for post office purposes (b) if not (i) will the present facility be renovated (ii) on what date is it anticipated that renovation will begin?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Canada Post Office have requested Public Works to provide a postal processing plant in Newmarket, Ontario with a tentative occupancy date of August 1978. (a) (i) Planning for this plant is in the very early stages of development. Various alternatives will be studied to determine how this facility is to be provided and we are not in a position to establish a definite tender call date for either Crown construction or rental proposals at such an early stage of project development. (ii) The present post office facility will be retained for continued use by the Post Office and other federal government departments. (b) (i) Not applicable. (b) (ii) Not applicable.

[Mr. Sharp.]

PAYMENT OF CURRENT TAXES ON PENSION PAYMENTS

Question No. 2,300—Mr. Herbert:

Will consideration be given to allowing an individual to pay current taxes on payments made to compulsory pension plans, thus making the proceeds of the plan non-taxable to the individual that has pre-selected this procedure?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): This proposal is not under consideration since, for almost every taxpayer, it is more advantageous to obtain a deduction during the course of working life when the individual's marginal tax rate is higher, than to pay tax on income after retirement when the marginal tax rate is lower. This advantage has been considerably enchanced by the passage of $1,000 pension exemption. Under the alternative proposed, a taxpayer who utilized such a scheme would get no deduction when his personal income was higher, and would lose the benefit of the $1,000 pension deduction. He would also have lost the income earned on the deferred taxes. It should be noted that such a plan would be very difficult to administer, not only for Revenue Canada, but also for the employers and trustees of such plans, who would have to keep track of the various options made available to their employees.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT POSTERS

Question No. 2,325—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the cost to the taxpayer of the "Make a Suggestion" series of posters used by the Post Office Department?

2. What other departments also use the posters and at what cost?

3. (a) How does the government reconcile the purchase of the posters which are printed in the US with repeated statements about the need for a large percentage of Canadian content in government purchases (b) did the government attempt unsuccessfully to get a Canadian printer to prepare similar materials before buying foreign posters?

4. Has anyone been prompted by the posters that the Post Office Department follow a "buy Canadian" policy in future?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. 300 "Make a Suggestion" posters were purchased at 10 cents each for a total cost of $30.

2. None.

3. (a) and (b) This small purchase was not considered to be in conflict with government policy. The posters were offered through the National Association of Suggestion Systems and any reproduction of them by a Canadian printer may have been regarded as a violation of copyright.

4. The Post Office practices a "Buy Canadian" policy where practicable.

LIBERAL PARTY USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 2,333—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister travel from Ottawa to Toronto and return in a government-owned aircraft on Friday, April 18, 1975 for purposes of addressing a Liberal Party fund raising dinner and, if so (a) what is the full description of such aircraft (b) what is the cost per hour of keeping such an aircraft in the air (c) what are the names and addresses of all persons on board the aircraft at any time during the trip?

2. Will the government bill the Liberal Party of Canada for the entire cost of the trip and (a) if so, what will be the amount of the bill (b) if not, for what reason?

Cabinet Ministers and members of their families, to political gatherings sponsored by the Liberal Party (b) will this policy continue in the future and (i) if so, what are all justifications for such expenditure of taxpayers' money for political purposes (ii) if not, will this practice cease immediately?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Transport and the Prime Minister's and Privy Council offices as follows: 1 An MOT aircraft was used to transport the Prime Minister and his party to Toronto and return. (a) Vickers Viscount—CF-GXK (b) $500 per hour (c) See following list

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Question No. 2,410—Mr. Orlikow:

1. In each of the past five years (a) what was the total number of violations under section 9(1) of the Food and Drug Act in respect to advertising of prescription drugs (b) which companies and drug products were involved?

2. What was the dollar value at the retail level of prescription drugs in Canada in each of the past five years?

3. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare copies of any letters sent by Upjohn Company to doctors regarding the dangers of the drug clindamycin?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) None. In those cases where a complaint arose, discussions were immediately held with the company concerned and action to correct the advertisement was taken. In no instance was it necessary to go beyond this step to initiate legal proceedings. (b) Not applicable.

2. The health protection branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare does have accurate data, for the years subsequent to 1968, but such data has been obtained through a contract with a private survey firm, whose policy, as stated in the contract, prevents disclosure of this information to the public at large.

3. Yes. The Department of National Health and Welfare has copies of two letters sent by the Upjohn Company to Canadian physicians.

SPEECHES OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Question No. 2,416—Mr. Cossitt:

Since becoming Minister of National Health and Welfare, how many of his speeches has the present Minister had printed at public expense and distributed to various persons (a) to how many persons was each distributed (b) what was the approximate cost of each distribution (c) what is the total estimated cost to date of all distributions that have taken place?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Since appointment, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has delivered 67 speeches in accordance with the right of the public to be informed of government policy, and arising from the role of government to sensitize the public to particular concerns (e.g., the need for healthier lifestyles, the changing perception of women in Canadian society, etc.). The speeches were made on various occasions such as national and international conferences, and federal-provincial conferences, and in response to numerous requests from associations, voluntary organizations, community groups, etc. in the health and welfare field. (a) 4,223 (including members of parliament, senators, provincial governments, various associations and organizations, news media, the general public upon request, etc.), (b) $1,638 (including printing and distribution costs), (c) $109,746 (including printing and distribution costs).

MILK

Question No. 2,461—Mr. Mitges:

Have charges been laid against producers who prematurely shipped milk or livestock for human consumption before the time allotted for antibiotics to pass through the animals and, if so, in how many cases, for each year 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): No. In addition to the responsibilities of the health protection branch, most provinces have an active inspection program in which each milk producer has his product tested, on a regular basis, for the presence of antibiotics. Violators are subject to disciplinary action under such programs.

EXPENDITURES OF NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

Question No. 2,475—Mr. Forrestall:

These projects have been financed by loans from the government of Canada or by utilizing the NHB's own funds. (ii) Nil. (iii) $1,079,582. (e) (i) Nil. (ii) Nil. (iii) Nil.

2. (a and b) (i) Nil. (ii) Nil. (iii) Nil. (c) (i) $136,000; (ii) $12,000; (iii) Nil. (d) (i) The National Harbours Board has incurred capital expenditures in harbour development and port facilities in the port of Halifax-Dartmouth since April 1, 1965 of $23,771,891. These projects have been financed by loans from the government of Canada or by utilizing the NHB's own funds. (ii) Nil. (iii) Nil. (e) (i) Nil; (ii) Nil; (iii) Nil.

HERBERT BRUNE CONSTRUCTION LTD.

Question No. 2,524—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,685 which among other things listed four contracts awarded Herbert Brune Construction Ltd. following invited tenders by the Department of Public Works (a) what is the identity of all those involved in compiling the list of those invited to tender (b) were any names of those invited to tender recommended or furnished by, or requested from Liberal Members of Parliament or by any Liberal Party executives (c) do the names of those invited to tender constitute a political patronage list?

2. Is Herbert Brune Construction Ltd. the same company presently engaged in construction of a swimming pool at the Prime Minister's official residence, 24 Sussex Drive?

Hon C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1 (a) No one individual is involved in compiling the list of contractors invited to tender on specific works. A selection is made from an index of competent contractors for every job. All contractors have the opportunity of being included on the index by signifying their interest to the department. The index is used for works valued up to $5,000. Above this amount, works are publicly tendered. For every job, five contractors' names are selected. These five contractors' names will not be selected again until all other competent firms on the index have had the opportunity to tender. (b) No. (c) No.

2. Yes.

HERBERT BRUNE CONSTRUCTION LTD.

Question No. 2,525—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,685 which among other things listed thirty-five contracts awarded, without tender calls, by work order issued directly by the Department of Public Works to Herbert Brune Construction Ltd. (a) what are the names of all those in any way recommending use of this construction company to the government for such work (b) does the Department of Public Works maintain a political patronage list for contracts of this kind?

2. Did the Department of Public Works recommend Herbert Brune Construction Ltd. to be used to construct the swimming pool at the Prime Minister's official residence, 24 Sussex Drive and, if so (a) to whom and on what date did it make such a recommendation (b) what are the names and job designations of all persons making such a recommendation?

Hon C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1 (a) No one individual is involved in recommending the use of contractors for minor works. A selection is made from an index of competent contractors for every individual job. All contractors have the opportunity of being included on the index by signifying their interest to the department. The index is used for works valued up to $5,000. Above this amount, works are publicly tendered. For every job, five contractors' names are selected. These five contractors' names will not be selected again until all other competent firms on the list have had the opportunity to tender. (b) No.

2. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable.

UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON HUMAN SETTLEMENT

Question No. 2,534—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What groups (a) in Canada (b) outside Canada have received invitations from the government to submit proposals for demonstration projects for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlement?

2. (a) Who was responsible for issuing such invitations on behalf of the government (b) what criteria were followed in choosing the groups to whom invitations were issued?

3. By province (a) how many groups were invited to submit proposals (b) how many groups had submitted proposals as of May 20, 1975 (c) how many and which proposals were accepted by May 20, 1975 (d) what is the purpose of each proposal and, in each case, what amount of financial support was promised?

4. What is the total amount of money the government intends to spend for (a) encouragement or support of demonstration projects (i) in Canada (ii) outside Canada (b) administration of the encouragement and selection of demonstration projects (c) administration of Canadian participation in the United Nations Conference on Human Settlement (d) hosting the United Nations Conference on Human Settlement (e) other specific costs in connection with the Conference?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs and the Department of External Affairs as follows: 1 (a) Province of Manitoba, province of Ontario and the greater Vancouver regional district. (b) None

2. (a) The Canadian Participation Secretariat. (b) It is the intention of the Canadian Participation Secretariat to present four films at Habitat. It was felt the province of Manitoba's "Leaf Rapids" and "The Stay Option" projects, the province of Ontario's "Management of Growth in the Toronto Urban Region" project and the greater Vancouver regional district's "Livable Region Program" might be particularly relevant to the production of these films. These groups were therefore invited to submit proposals.

3. (a) Newfoundland 0; Nova Scotia 0; New Brunswick 0; Prince Edward Island 0; Quebec 0; Ontario 1; Manitoba 2; Saskatchewan 0; Alberta 0; British Columbia 1. (b) On July 3, the date of the suspension of the program, the number of proposals from each province was as follows: Newfoundland, 3; Nova Scotia, 4; New Brunswick, 4; Prince Edward Island, 2; Quebec, 26; Ontario, 51; Manitoba, 10; Saskatchewan, 6; Alberta, 10; British Columbia, 61; Northwest Territories, 0; Federal Government, 10. (c) On May 20, 1975, fourteen proposals had been designated by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs as urban demonstration projects. (d) An Ark for P.E.I., $354,000; Land Registration and Information Service, $100,000; Mirabel Area Planning, $48,000; Appropriate Energy and Building Systems for Housing Quebec Indians, $120,000; Provident House, $90,000; Solar House, $61,000; A Solar Heating System for the Present, $11,000: Leaf Rapids, $34,000; The Stay Option, $38,000; Constant Module, $73,000; The Blood Tribe 1964-1974, $45,000; Package Reservoir, $70,000; Livable Region Program, $33,000; Turn Down Traffic Volume, $500,000.

4. (a) (i) $1,827,000. (ii) Nil (b) Administration of CUDP was not funded as a separate item in the MSUA estimates. However, costs directly attributable to administration of the program between March 1974 and May 1975 total approximately $60,000. (c) Approved estimates for the Canadian Participation Secretariat total $3.8 million. (d) $5,100,000. (e) Treasury Board has not approved money specifically for conference preparations other than the amounts noted above.

NOTE: Habitat Preparations and the Canadian Urban Demonstration Program are separate activities in both concept and budget. Canada is preparing four audio-visual presentations for HABITAT and will include in them, where appropriate, material that derives from certain CUDP projects. Selection of projects for the CUDP was independent of the selection of material for the Habitat films. The budget for the films is administered by the Canadian Participation Secretariat while funding for urban demonstration projects was a cross-government activity.

LIMITATION OF ADVERTISING IN CANADA

Question No. 2544—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

As of May 20, 1975, was any group of federal officials meeting regularly with provincial officials to discuss any form of limitation of (a) magazine (b) newspaper (c) radio (d) television advertising in Canada, or by media entering Canada and, if so (i) what departments or agencies were involved (ii) what provinces were involved (iii) what was the purpose of the discussions (iv) on what date did the discussions begin (v) on what date is it anticipated the discussions will conclude (vi) to what federal agency or Minister will the group make recommendations (vii) will any such recommendations be made public immediately (viii) what is the extent of consultation with representatives of the media (ix) what are the terms of reference of any such discussion?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of Privy Council): (a) No; (b) No; (c) and (d) Since June 12, 1974 The Canadian Radio-Television Commission has been holding meetings with various federal and provincial officials to consider the question of beer, wine and cider radio and television advertising. (i) The CRTC has been in contact with the Canadian Association of Provincial Liquor Commissioners, the federal Department of Health and Welfare, the Chairmen or Presidents of Liquor Control Boards or Corporations and Provincial Ministers responsible for the Liquor Control Boards. (ii) Representatives from all the provinces were involved. (iii) The purpose of the discussion was to develop uniform standards for beer, wine and cider broadcast advertising. (iv) Discussions began on June 12, 1974. (v) Discussions are expected to conclude in autumn, 1975. (vi) The results of the consultation will be made known to the federal Department of Health and Welfare and the CRTC. (vii) Recommendations will be made public as soon as there is agreement among the provincial and federal authorities concerned. (viii) After consulting with the above-mentioned governmental representatives, further discussion will take place with broadcasters and the industry. (ix) The terms of reference for such discussion are:

1. Section 16. (1) (b) (ii) of the broadcasting Act: "16. (1) In furtherance of its objects, the Commission, on the recommendation of the Executive Committee, may (b) make regulations applicable to all persons holding broadcasting licences, or to all persons holding broadcasting licences of one or more classes. (ii) respecting the character of advertising and the amount of time that may be devoted to advertising."

2. Section 10 of the Television Broadcasting Regulations, of the Radio (AM) and (FM) Broadcasting Regulations: "Spirituous Liquors, Beer, Wine and Cider 10. (1) Subject to subsection (2), no station or network operator shall broadcast any commercial message (a) advertising, directly or indirectly, any spirituous liquor or any beer, wine or cider; or (b) sponsored by or on behalf of any person whose principal business is the manufacture or sale of spirituous liquor, beer, wine or cider. (2) Where in any province the advertising of beer, wine or cider is permitted, a commercial message sponsored by a brewery, winery or cider-house may be broadcast in that province subject to the following conditions: (a) the advertising shall not be designed to promote the general use of beer, wine or cider, but this prohibition shall not be construed so as to prevent industry, institutional, public service or brand preference advertising; (b) no commercial message shall exceed sixty seconds in duration: (c) no device and no commercial message, other than a commercial message allowed under this subsection, shall be used to advertise, directly or indirectly, the sponsor or his product; and (d) no commercial message shall be broadcast unless it is approved by a representative of the Commission prior to broadcast. (3) For the purpose of determining whether a commercial message may be broadcast in a province pursuant to subsection (2), "cider" means cider that is considered to be an alcoholic beverage by the law of the province relating to the advertising of cider."

3. Relevant regulations promulgated under provisions of provincial liquor Control Acts. Nil returns have been submitted by several concerned departments.

Question No. 2,558—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Department of Communications for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council):
1. $363,000.

2. (a) Not applicable; (b) $290,000; (c) $60,000; (d) $13,000.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,566—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Department of Justice for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council):
1. $1,158,000 (estimated costs, including estimated salaries of personnel receiving instruction).

2. (a) $453,000. (b) and (c) $651,000, which covers meals and lodging, classrooms, instructors' salaries and transportation, course materials and socio-cultural events. No cost breakdown was included in the contract with the Public Service Commission for these areas. (d) $54,000 (travel).

Order Paper Questions

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,579—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

3. Are such costs recorded separately for members of the RCMP?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council):
1. $433,052.

AIR CANADA—SUBSIDIZATION

Question No. 2,593—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Since 1965, what was Air Canada's profit or loss on (a) the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal routes (b) the Prairie routes with links to Toronto and Vancouver (c) the Maritime routes?

2. Did CTC hearings show last year that the Prairie routes subsidized the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal routes and, if so, what is Air Canada's rationale for allowing this to happen?

3. Does Air Canada plan to continue such subsidization in the future?

4. In order to eliminate such subsidization, does Air Canada plan (a) to raise the air fares on its Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal routes (b) to reduce the number of short-haul flights?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council):
The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1.(a), (b), (c) This information is considered to be proprietary. To release this kind of information while other airlines are not required to do so would jeopardize Air Canada's competitive position both on existing or potential operations.

2. No.

3. Not applicable.

4. (a), (b) Not applicable.

DISCONTINUANCE OF NATIONAL FILM BOARD PROGRAMME "CHALLENGE FOR CHANGE"

Question No. 2,608—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Is it the intention of the government to (a) discontinue the National Film Board Programme Challenge for Change and, if so (i) on what date (ii) for what reason (b) significantly change the Programme and, if so (i) in what way (ii) on what date (iii) for what reason?

2. Was a report prepared recently, by or on behalf of the government, respecting the future of the Programme and, if so (a) by whom (b) for what reason (c) to whom was it submitted (d) was the Privy Council Office involved and, if so, in what specific way and for what reason?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. (a) No. Following a successful initial five year phase, the government has approved the Challenge for Change program for an additional three year. (i) Not applicable. (ii) Not applicable. (b). No. (i) Not applicable. (ii) Not applicable. (iii) Not applicable.

2. (a), (b), (c) and (d). In the light of the expiration of the mandate of the program, and after consultation with the member departments of the Challenge for Change Interdepartmental Committee, the Secretary of State prepared a report and submitted it to cabinet. As a member of the Interdepartmental Committee, the Privy Council office participated in these consultations, and with the agreement of the other departmental members and the National Film Board, an official of the Privy Council office serves as chairman of the Challenge for Change Interdepartmental Committee, as has been the case since the beginning of the program.

CONTRAVENTION OF CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Question No. 2,618—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Did the Chief of Operations, Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, in the District Port of Vancouver in an affidavit on June 21, 1973, relating to an action in the Supreme Court of British Columbia state, that according to section 663(2) of the Canada Shipping Act a foreign ship (non-Canadian and non-British registry) which loads passengers at one Canadian port and proceeds by way of another Canadian port to a foreign port does not contravene the Act and, if so (a) does this represent government policy (b) is it applicable to all ports in Canada, and, if not, on what date was it altered, mitigated or rescinded (c) does the Minister of Transport concur in the statement?

2. Will the Minister review the statement and, if not, for what reason?

3. In what way does the Minister view the manning of foreign ships loading passengers at one Canadian port and proceeding by way of another Canadian port to a foreign port with Indonesian and other non-Canadian nationality crews?

4. Does the Minister have any estimate or approximation of the number of Canadian seamen who have been deprived of employment by the practice outlined in the affidavit and (a) if so, what is the estimate or approximation (b) if not, for what reason?

5. What steps is the Minister and the government contemplating to rectify the situation whereby Canadian seamen are being displaced by foreign crews in cases such as outlined in Parts (1) and (3)?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Revenue and Transport as follows: 1. Yes. (a) Yes. (b) Yes. (c) As the affidavit involved only a statement of the statutory provisions affecting the situation, ministerial concurrence was not required.

2. The affidavit was filed in the Supreme Court of British Columbia by the owners of the vessel and, as the department does not have a copy, it has not been reviewed by the Minister of National Revenue.

3. The manning of foreign ships engaged in international voyages is subject to the law of the flag state.

NOTE: While the Canada Shipping Act comes under the purview of the Minister of Transport, the provisions of Part XV are administered by the Department of National Revenue (Customs and Excise).

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

4. No. Canadian seamen have the opportunity of employment but their employment on international voyages is not mandatory for the reason given in 3 above. The Ministry of Transport does not keep records showing the nationality of seamen in vessels of foreign registry.

5. See answers 3 and 4.

COST OF STRIKE AT CHARLES DE GAULLE AIRPORT, PARIS, TO AIR CANADA

Question No. 2,622—Mr. MacKay:

Will the Minister of Transport provide the figures of the cost of the strike at Charles de Gaulle International Airport in Paris, France, by Air Canada employees with regard to loss of revenues and extra expenses incurred by the airline in other arrangements being made for passengers?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: The immediate cost of the strike is estimated to be approximately $350,000.

DREE—RAPP LUMBER PRODUCTS

Question No. 2,625—Mr. Beatty:

1. With respect to the incentive offer of $172,050 made in August 1972 by DREE to Rapp Lumber Products in Pembroke, Ontario, what was the reason for the grant when the market for its produce was already being adequately served by other firms in Ontario?

2. Does the government intend to recover the money given to Rapp Lumber Products as the Company had indicated to the government that its entire output would be destined for export markets?

3. Does the government intend to compensate other manufacturers in Ontario for the damage done to their domestic sales by the oversaturation of the market resulting from the opening of the new facility?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. The incentive offered to Rapp Package (Canada) Inc. was designed to create new employment in the Pembroke area, which had been designated for special action by DREE to stimulate economic development. The department's evaluation of the project indicated that it would not create serious problems for existing Canadian companies manufacturing similar products because its output was destined for U.S. markets. The company's production was, in fact, initially exported to the U.S. until changes in economic and other circumstances required it to enter the Canadian market. It is understood that the company is actively investigating ways to regain its position in the U.S. market.

2. It was not a condition of the department's offer that the company had to export all of its production to the U.S. Consequently, the department is not aware of any grounds on which it could seek recovery of the incentive.

3. There is no legislative basis on which the department could provide such compensation.

AIR CANADA—AVERAGE STAGE LENGTH OF ROUTE STRUCTURE

Question No. 2,631—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What is the average stage length in miles of Air Canada's route structure?

2. What are the comparative figures for (a) CP Air (b) Delta Airlines (c) Northwest Airlines (d) Braniff Airlines (e) Pan American Airlines (f) Western Airlines (g) Eastern Airlines (h) American Airlines?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Average stage length scheduled flights total systems. Airline, Air Canada; miles, 563.

2. Average stage length scheduled flights total systems.

	Airline	Miles
*(a)	Canadian Pacific	933
(b)	Delta	425.8
(c)	North West	631.7
(e)	Pan American	1347.2
(f)	Western	595.4
(g)	Eastern	511.1
(h)	American	775.8

*Period given for Canadian airlines is the calendar year 1974.
Period given for U.S.A. airlines is the 12 month period ending 30 September 1974.

FEDERAL PETROLEUM PRODUCT ALLOCATION

Question No. 2,635—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Has the draft federal petroleum product allocation plan been approved by Cabinet?

2. What criteria were used in determining who was placed in the "critical", "essential" and "non-essential" categories?

3. Were farmers and the food processing industry placed in the "critical" category and trucking placed in the "essential" category and, if so, for what reasons?

4. Does the government plan to upgrade trucking into the "critical" category since the industry transports much of the farmers' products to the food processing industries and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Energy Supplies Allocation reports as follows: 1. The draft petroleum products allocation plan has not been specifically approved by the cabinet, nor is there any requirement that it be so approved. However, the plan was discussed with all interested departments and agencies of government and received the approval of their officials.

2. To determine the wholesale customers belonging to the critical category the following criteria were used: the maintenance of health and basic essentials to life; and the protection of individuals and their property. The following criterion was used to determine those wholesale customers who belong in the essential category: the maintenance of the viability of the Canadian economy. The following criterion was used to determine those wholesale customers belonging to the non-essential category: the maintenance of the standard of living enjoyed in Canada.

3. With respect to propulsion products, i.e. motor gasoline and diesel fuel, farmers were placed in the critical category. The food processing industry was placed in the critical category with respect to heating oils required to process food. The trucking industry was placed in the essential category with respect to propulsion products. The critical need for propulsion for farmers in sowing and harvesting crops is obvious. The same can be said for the need for heat for food processing, a need which must be met promptly and continuously if food is to be available to Canada's population. The same cannot be said for the trucking industry as a whole. It is recognized that trucks carry products of a critical nature, but they also carry products considered non-essential, such as toys, furniture, automobile parts, etc.

4. The government does not intend to upgrade the trucking industry to the critical category. Provisions are made in the program for the petroleum industry to supply additional products to those customers in the essential category on an emergency basis. All such deliveries are subject to post facto audits to determine if the wholesale customer in fact needed the additional product. Obviously trucking firms that deal solely with products of the critical category will be similarly treated in terms of fuel supply but it cannot be assumed that since some products they carry are critical, all truckers should be considered critical.

BUDGET FOR 1975-76 OF THE FEDERAL EDUCATION TECHNOLOGY PROGRAMME

Question No. 2,645—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. What is the budget for the fiscal year 1975-76 of the Federal Educational Technology Programme of the Department of Communications?

2. How many public servants work in connection with the Programme?

3. Which provinces have signed agreements in connection with the Programme and, in each case, what are the provisions of such agreements?

4. What are the names and locations of institutions which have received funding under the Programme and, in each case, what was the amount?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. $330,000 (April 1, 1975 to September 30, 1975)

2. Fifteen full time public servants.

3. The Provinces of Nova Scotia, Alberta, Newfoundland and the Maritime Provinces jointly, have signed agreements in connection with the Program. Brief summaries of these are given below. Alberta: On March 18, 1974 an agreement was concluded for a joint program activity to evaluate a range of audio-visual equipment both in the laboratory of the National Film Board and in the schools of the province. This activity tested some 12 new types of audio-visual equipment including video tape recorders and film strip players, and has led to the production under a single cover, of a report which correlates the technological evaluations of these equipment with their educational use. The activities now have been concluded. Nova Scotia: Nova Scotia on March 6, 1974 concluded an agreement with the Federal Government for a joint program that would contribute to the formulation of a comprehensive educational technology plan for Nova Scotia. This agreement was for a multi-phased series of studies with a commitment to undertake only the first phase. The first phase was completed in March, 1975. Newfoundland: Newfoundland and Labrador concluded an agreement on October 3, 1975 for a joint program of studies with the Federal Government to study educational computing in the province. This study, which has now been completed, has provided a detailed cost and technical evaluation for various systems that could satisfy the educational computing needs of provincial high schools. These results have been incorporated into the Newfoundland Task Force study on future computer usage in the Province. Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Labrador: since the 22 of July 1974 have been participating along with the Maritime Provinces Higher Education Commission, the Association of Atlantic Universities and Federal Government in a multiphased joint program of studies to develop a plan that will permit the sharing of Atlantic Universities computing resources. The first phase of the program will be completed by September, 1975.

4. None.

GRANTS TO PARTIES IN CUBA FOR CONSTRUCTION OF FISHING PROCESSING PLANT

Question No. 2,650—Mr. Herbert:

1. What monies and under what terms has any grant been either committed or paid to parties in Cuba for the construction of a fish processing plant?

2. Have representations been received from the Canadian fishing industry concerning such a grant and does the government foresee any affect on the Canadian fishing industry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Export Development Corporation is concerned: 1. It has not committed or paid a grant to parties in Cuba for the construction of a fish processing plant.

2. No.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS—RENTAL OF OFFICE SPACE IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Question No. 2,671—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. In which buildings within the National Capital Region does the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs presently rent office space on either a short term or long term lease basis?

2. What is the monthly rent paid for the leasing of office space in each case?

3. What is the length of time of each such lease?

4. What are the signing and starting dates of each such lease?

5. On what date was there physical occupation of each of the premises by the branch for which the office space was secured?

NATIONAL DEFENCE—AIRCRAFT SUPPORT TO OTHER DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 2,686—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is it the policy of the government to require the Department of National Defence to meet the requirements for aircraft support of other departments?

2. For the fiscal year 1975-76, what departments have requested aircraft support from the Department of National Defence and, in each case (a) how many hours and/or days of actual flying time were requested (b) what type of aircraft was sought (c) for what purpose (d) what has been the approved level of support agreed upon by DND if different from the requested amount?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Government policy is to provide Canadian Forces aircraft support to other government departments concerned with Canadian Sovereignty and security as set out in the White Paper, Defence in the 70's. However, such support assistance is contingent on DND being able to fulfill its primary defence roles.

2. (a), (b), (c), (d). For fiscal year 1975/76 the Department of Environment has requested DND for assistance in support of its surveillance and control operations which includes various forms of environmental services and fisheries and marine services. DND plans to cooperate to the fullest extent on the understanding that many of DOE's requirements may have to be ancillary to DND primary defence roles. A total of 915 flying hours (Tracker and Argus Aircraft) are dedicated to DOE programs. For the remainder of DOE's requests it is planned to make arrangements, if possible, to fulfill the requirements with other DND multi-tasked missions. In addition DND provides short notice airlift support to all other departments, resources permitting. However, the cost for this support is in the majority of cases recoverable from the departments concerned.

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

SWIMMING POOL AT PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

Question No. 2,692—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is a full and detailed description of any involvement whatsoever with the swimming pool at the Prime Minister's residence, 24 Sussex Drive, by the National Capital Commission?

2. What are all connections, if any, directly or indirectly that Mr. Ed Gallant, Chairman of the National Capital Commission has had with this matter, including dates, persons dealt with, etc.?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the National Capital Commission is concerned: 1. See reply to Question No. 2691, paragraph 2(b). The pool's design was approved by the Commission's Advisory Committee on Design on November 28, 1974.

2. See reply to Question No. 2691, paragraph 2 (a) and (b).

ESCAPE OF PRISONERS FROM WILLIAM HEAD MAXIMUM SECURITY PRISON

Question No. 2,694—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Did three prisoners escape from William Head Maximum Security Prison at William Head on Vancouver Island in late April or early May, 1975?

2. Was a security fence recently installed at a cost of $100,000 which was intended to upgrade the outer perimeter protective features of the prison from medium to maximum security standards and, if so, did two of the prisoners escape by walking around the end of the fence?

3. Is the Prison exposed on the waterside by some 3 1/2 miles of unfenced and otherwise insecure waterfront?

4. Is any thought being given to relocating the Institution instead of spending some $5,000,000 to "upgrade" the site to afford the law abiding public of the use of some of the finest parkland in the area?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): It should be noted that William Head Institution is not a maximum security institution; it was upgraded from minimum security to medium security on September 1, 1974. 1. Three inmates walked away, during the month of March 1975, from William Head Institution.

2. A security fence was installed as one item of various works planned to change the institutional operations from minimum security (unrestricted movement) to medium security with some restriction of movement. In all cases the admimistrative inquiries were unable to ascertain the exact escape route taken by these inmates.

3. The waterfront of the peninsula on which this institution is located is not fenced. The rough exposed shoreline and the elaborate internal patrol road system are considered an effective deterrent to escape for the inmate transferred to that institution. However, the Canadian Penitentiary Service is planning to form guard-dog foot patrol teams within the perimeter to reinforce the institutional preventive security controls.

4. There are no plans to relocate the institution as to do so would be much more costly. Upgrading consists of replacing existing buildings and bringing services such as water and sewage treatment up to a standard required by environmental authorities.

PERCENTAGE OF FINANCIAL ASSETS OF INDIVIDUALS HELD IN RESERVES

Questions No. 2,701—Mr. Herbert:

Are any statistics available or have any estimates been compiled to indicate what percentage of financial assets of individuals are held in various reserves and has there been any indication of an appreciable shift in such holdings in the past ten years?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): It is not understood what the term "reserves" refers to in the context of this question. The most recent data on financial assets holdings by individuals is contained in the Statistics Canada publication entitled "Incomes, Assets and Indebtedness of Families in Canada", catalogue No. 13-547. This information was compiled from a survey conducted in the spring of 1970. It is not possible to determine the precise shift in the composition of holdings of financial assets of individuals over the past ten years due to the infrequency of the Statistics Canada surveys. The survey preceding the 1970 survey which can be referred to for comparison purposes is entitled "Incomes, Assets and Indebtedness of Non-Farm Families in Canada." The catalogue number for this survey, which was conducted in 1964, is 13-525.

RADIOACTIVE WASTES

Question No. 2,709—Mr. Francis:

1. What is the nature and extent of the pick-up service provided by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for radioactive wastes which require special waste management?

2. Has such service been cancelled for hospitals?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited does not provide a regular pick-up service for radioactive wastes which require special waste management. Responsibility for the transportation of radioactive wastes rests with the producer of such wastes. AECL may provide such transportation through arrangement with the producer.

2. Since AECL Does not provide a pick-up service, cancellation of such service is not possible.

CIVIC HOSPITAL OTTAWA—RADIOACTIVITY

Question No. 2,710—Mr. Francis:

1. Has an investigation been carried out on the incident at the Civic Hospital in Ottawa in March of this year when a person broke into the hospital's storage place for radioactive materials and is reported to have caused damage by spilling radioactive materials?

2. What was the result of such investigation?

3. What precautions have been recommended to the Civic Hospital to make sure this does not happen again?

4. What precautions, if any, are other hospitals in Canada taking to prevent a similar incident?

5. Was anyone injured or contaminated by radioactive materials as a result of the incident and, if so, what are the details?

6. How was the area of the Civic Hospital made safe again from radioactive contamination?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. Yes.

2. The investigation showed that the lock on the radioisotope laboratory door was defective, that the contamination was isolated to one area of one wing of the hospital, that all radioactive material removed from the laboratory was accounted for, and that nobody was exposed to any significant hazard as a result of the incident.

3. Recommendations were made to the Civic Hospital concerning improvement of the physical security of the radioisotope laboratory.

4. As a condition of their licences, hospitals are required to keep radioisotope laboratories locked at all times when not being used. However, as a result of the Civic Hospital incident, the Atomic Energy Control Board is currently reviewing its guidelines on physical security which will be communicated to hospitals and other institutions using radioactive material.

5. The only person contaminated by radioactive material as a result of the incident was the person who removed the material from the laboratory. He apparently became contaminated when he broke open one of the glass vials which he had removed. He was thoroughly showered and washed within hours with the consequent removal of the contamination. No injuries resulted.

6. The affected area of the Civic Hospital was thoroughly washed to remove the radioactive contamination. A few items, which were difficult to wash such as a chair and a telephone, were stored until the radioactivity decayed to acceptable levels.

MONITORING OF HOSPITAL RADIOACTIVE WASTES

Question No. 2,711—Mr. Francis:

With respect to the answer to Question No. 1,720 which stated that "radioactive wastes which are permitted to be poured down the sinks of hospitals generally have short radioactive half-lives", and that "they rapidly decay before they can accumulate to detectable levels in the water supply and the life cycle of humans" (a) what are such wastes that are disposed of in this way (b) what are the half-lives of such wastes (c) what, if any, are the substances disposed of in this way that are not "general" (d) what are the "detectable levels" referred to by the Atomic Energy Control Board (e) how are these levels monitored near hospitals to make sure that they are below "detectable levels" (f) how are these levels monitored to make sure that they do not get into the life cycle of human beings?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: (a) Examples of the wastes referred to in this question are solutions of iodine, technetium or gold. (b) Iodine 131 has a half-life of eight days; technetium 99m has a half-life of 6 hours; and gold 198 has a half-life of 65 hours. (c) Some materials are used less frequently than the above isotopes because of recent changes in clinical needs. Some radioisotopes included in this category would be iron 59 (half-life 45 days; cobalt 57 (half-life 270 days); chromium 51 (half-life 28 days); carbon 14 (half-life 5,730 years) and tritium (half-life 12 years). (d) The detectable levels referred to are the extremely dilute concentrations which are just measurable with available instrumentation. These concentrations are roughly those at which radioactive materials appear in nature. (e) and (f) Occasional spot samples have been taken near the effluents of some hospitals from time to time to check that the hospitals are in compliance with the disposal conditions specified on their radioisotope licence. Usually this is not necessary, however, since the volume of water being discharged by most hospitals is so immense that sufficient dilution is achieved. Moreover, the total quantity of radioactive materials is so small and the half-life of most commonly used radioisotopes is so short that there will be no significant build-up in the environment.

DISPOSAL OF RADIOACTIVE MATERIALS

Question No. 2,712—Mr. Francis:

1. How do scientists at the University of British Columbia dispose of radioactive (a) liquids (b) solids (c) gases (d) biological wastes?

2. How are such radioactive wastes (a) moved (b) stored?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. (a) Liquid radioactive wastes at the University of British Columbia are disposed of by dilution and discharge to the sewage system. (b) Solid radioactive wastes at the University of British Columbia are disposed of by being shipped to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Chalk River, Ontario. Low level wastes containing only trace quantities of radioactive material are incinerated on campus, depending on the type of waste. (c) Gaseous radioactive wastes at the University of British Columbia are discharged to the atomosphere (in such a manner that permissible concentrations in air breathed by personnel are not exceeded). (d) Biological radioactive wastes at the University of British Columbia are incinerated.

2. (a) Wastes are transported on campus in a University of British Columbia truck used specifically for the carriage of "dangerous" materials. All such wastes are double bagged in polyethylene, checked for contamination and radiation levels, and suitably labelled. (b) Solid wastes are stored, pending shipment to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, in a special concrete central waste storage facility.

POINT LEPREAU NUCLEAR GENERATING STATION, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 2,713—Mr. Francis:

With respect to the recommendations of the recent Environmental Assessment Panel issued by the Minister of the Environment regarding the Point Lepreau Nuclear Generating Station in New Brunswick (a) will the government be developing a national policy as soon as possible with regard to long term storage and ultimate disposal of highly radioactive wastes (b) will the recommendations of the Assessment Panel with regard to monitoring and controlling the adverse environmental effects on the Point Lepreau region be followed by the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: (a) Yes. (b) Yes.

NUCLEAR CONTAMINATION

Question No. 2,719—Mr. Francis:

What is the government's estimate of the extent of nuclear contamination in the surrounding environment and the effects on public health and safety should a fully fueled CANDU reactor be destroyed by sabotage, explosion or earthquake?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: Nuclear power plants are designed to withstand any credible earthquake or explosion that could occur at the site. These and other measures aimed at safety and security make a nuclear power plant intrinsically highly resistant to attempts of sabotage. Therefore, the risk to the public from such events is acceptably low.

CANDU REACTOR ENERGY WASTE

Question No. 2,720—Mr. Francis:

Is 70 per cent of the energy produced by a CANDU reactor lost in waste by means of thermal pollution into the nearby environment and, if not, what is the percentage of energy waste?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: Yes.

CANDU REACTOR WASTES—STORAGE SYSTEMS

Question No. 2,722—Mr. Francis:

Do some radioactive wastes from CANDU reactors have a half-life of up to 25,000 years and do the currently designed storage vessels have an estimated life of 100 years and, if so, does the government feel confident that a longer term storage system will soon be devised for these dangerous wastes?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: Some of the radioactive materials contained in the spent fuel discharged from CANDU reactors are very long-lived. For example, plutonium-239 requires about 250,000 years (i.e. ten half-lives) to decay to a negligible level. At present, the spent fuel is stored retrievably in interim surface storage facilities pending decisions on re-use and ultimate storage or disposal. Several possibilities for ultimate storage or disposal of radioactive wastes are currently under investigation in Canada, including burial in geologic formations.

NUCLEAR REACTORS AND HEAVY WATER PLANTS

Question No. 2,723—Mr. Francis:

1. How many nuclear reactors and heavy water plants are projected for Canada up to the year 2000 and (a) where will each be located (b) what is the estimated amount of radioactive wastes that will have accumulated by that time?

2. What training programmes are being devised to acquire personnel to staff such operations?

3. (a) Are trained personnel available locally to the plants (b) will talent have to be imported and, if so, from where?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited estimates that about 115 nuclear reactors will be located in Canada up to the year 2000. Because the vast majority of these will be owned and operated by provincial utilities, the actual number will be determined more by the provincial governments than by the federal government. AECL estimates that eight to 12 heavy water plants, each capable of producing about 800 tons of heavy water annually, will be required in Canada by the year 2000. The actual number installed will be determined partly by experience gained through operation of current plants and partly by the rate of installation of nuclear reactors. (a) The location of each of these nuclear reactors and heavy water plants will be determined by the utility or private company that owns the plant, subject to the approval of appropriate federal or provincial boards or departments. (b) It is estimated that about 125,000 megagrams of radioactive waste in the form of spent fuel will have been accumulated by the year 2000.

2. To date, personnel to staff such operations have been trained either in facilities owned and operated by the plant owners or in the facilities of other utilities such as Ontario Hydro or Hydro Quebec.

3. (a) Experience to date indicates that personnel capable of being trained to operate such plants can be found within the province in which the plant is located. (b) The possibility of having to import talent into Canada to operate such plants seems very remote.

USE OF PLUTONIUM

Question No. 2,724—Mr. Francis:

1. Is the government working on the development of a second generation of reactor that can use the plutonium by-product of CANDU reactors as fuel?

2. Has an analysis been made to determine the costs involved in re-using plutonium as reactor fuel in Canada?

3. Are the environmental public health and safety risks greater when plutonium is re-used as a fuel in a reactor?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Yes. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has just begun a long-term development program to determine answers to the many technological, economic and social questions that might arise should a future shortage or uranium indicate the desirability of installing reactors that use plutonium in the fuel cycle.

2. An analysis of the costs involved in reusing plutonium as reactor fuel is one of the objectives of the development program.

3. The environmental, public health and safety risks associated with the reuse of plutonium as fuel in a reactor are among the major questions to be answered by the development program.

PRODUCTION OF HEAVY WATER FOR CANDU REACTORS

Question No. 2,725—Mr. Francis:

Do CANDU reactors use large quantities of heavy water and, if so, is the government convinced that enough heavy water will be produced to provide for the present and planned reactors in Canada in addition to supplying heavy water for export by the year (a) 1980 (b) 2000?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: Yes. Large quantities of heavy water are needed for the initial filling of a CANDU reactor. AECL has advised that enough heavy water will be produced to provide for the present and planned reactors in Canada in addition to supplying heavy water for export by the year (a) 1980 (b) 2000.

Order Paper Questions

DECOMMISSIONING OF REACTOR SITES

Question No. 2,726—Mr. Francis:

From the time of coming on stream, until a nuclear reactor must be decommissioned (a) what disposal is planned for parts which must be replaced prior to decommissioning of the entire reactor (b) in the case that the "preferred choice" for disposal of decommissioned reactors is to encase the reactor in concrete, what is the projected decomposition rate of such concrete (c) what are the projected costs of safeguarding and monitoring the decommissioned reactor sites?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: (a) Those parts which must be replaced prior to decommissioning of the entire reactor and are not radioactive are disposed of in the normal industrial manner. Those parts which are radioactive are sent to a waste management site for retrievable storage in a concrete vault. (b) In the case that the "preferred choice" for disposal of decommissioned reactors is to encase the reactor in concrete, the expected life of the concrete structure would exceed the time required for the radioactivity in the decommissioned reactor to decay to a safe level. (c) The projected costs of safeguarding and monitoring decommissioned reactor sites are not likely to add more than a few per cent to the cost of electricity.

CANDU—HUMAN ERROR

Question No. 2,727—Mr. Francis:

What are the guarantees that CANDU nuclear generating systems will not be subject to human error?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The safety philosophy for CANDU nuclear power plants is based on "defence-in-depth"; that is, the public would be protected even if several human errors and/or equipment failures were to occur. Just as important, however, is the fact that CANDU nuclear power plants are designed and constructed to high standards and the operators are trained to high standards to minimize the probability of serious human errors and equipment failures.

THORIUM FUEL

Question No. 2,728—Mr. Francis:

1. What progress has been made to date on the use of thorium which is more abundant than uranium to fuel nuclear reactors in Canada?

2. Can a standard CANDU reactor be modified to use thorium?

3. What are the environmental and social risks involved in using thorium?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: 1. Fundamental measurements relevant to the use of thorium in CANDU reactors have been carried out in parallel with uranium studies since Atomic Energy of Canada Limited was first set up, though in much less detail. Over the past two years an extensive and detailed survey has been done to determine the potential value of thorium in CANDU reactors. This shows that thorium will probably be an economic and desirable fuel component before the end of the century. Planning is now under way to carry out the necessary research and development program on a time scale to meet this demand.

2. Yes, thorium could be used in a standard CANDU reactor with fairly minor modifications that could be retrofitted to the reactor. Likewise, only minor modifications to the standard CANDU design would be needed to optimize the design to utilize thorium. However, major fuel development and fuel reprocessing programs will be needed.

3. The social and environmental risks involved in using thorium economically in a reactor are similar in nature to those in using recycled plutonium as fuel. Information on these risks will be gained during the research and development program already mentioned.

PICKERING LICENCE LIMIT

Question No. 2,729—Mr. Francis:

Has the operating licence limit for radioactive noble gases been exceeded at the Pickering nuclear facility and, if so, on what dates?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board as follows: The operating licence limit for radioactive noble gases has not been exceeded at the Pickering Generating Station. The annual releases of all radionuclides—the annual period being the important averaging period—has never exceeded a few per cent of the permissible release. For control purposes, the operating licence specifies limits on the quantity of radioactive materials released to the atmosphere in any seven day period.

ACCIDENTS AT PICKERING NUCLEAR FACILITY

Question No. 2,730—Mr. Francis:

1. How many accidents or events described as "significant events", which had a significant influence on reactor, personnel or public safety from a radiation point of view have occurred at the Pickering nuclear facility?

2. How many such events have been termed "unsafe"?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. Non. "Significant event" is a term used by Ontario Hydro and others for any event which, in their view, did have or could have had a significant effect on the economic and reliable production of electricity or on the safe operation of the station.

2. No "significant event" has occurred at the Pickering Generating Station which led to the release of radioactive materials in excess of a few per cent of the licenced limits and, therefore, such events are not considered to have had a significant influence on reactor personnel or public safety from a radiation point of view.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

Question No. 2,731—Mr. Francis:

1. In what way have Atomic Energy of Canada Limited facilities been involved in solving the "leaks" problems at Pickering?

2. What has been the cost to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited?

3. Who paid the bill?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has co-operated fully with Ontario Hydro in solving the pressure tube leak problem at Pickering. This co-operation has taken two forms: (i) AECL has provided design services and equipment development services for locating the leaking pressure tubes, for removing these from the reactor and for replacing them with new pressure tubes. Most of this work was done at AECL's Power Projects site in Toronto; (ii) AECL has undertaken to discover the reasons why the leaks developed in the pressure tube and to determine how to avoid the problem on future reactions. Most of this work is being done at AECL's research centres at Chalk River and Whiteshell.

2. By agreement with Ontario Hydro, all work undertaken by AECL for the rehabilitation of the Pickering reactors is paid for by Ontario Hydro. The cost of all work undertaken to discover the causes of the problem and the solutions to it is shared equally between AECL and Ontario Hydro. The cost of this latter work is taken from AECL's annual operating budget.

3. See answer to part 2 above.

INCIDENT INVOLVING NUCLEAR TECHNOLOGY

Question No. 2,732—Mr. Francis:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,724, which stated the Department of Energy Mines and Resources has "no definite knowledge" of a statement widely reported in the media that an official of Ontario Hydro said in a press conference about the Pickering radioactive leaks that many worse things have happened, does the government or any agency of the government have any knowledge of any incident involving nuclear technology in Canada that was worse than the Pickering leaks?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: We cannot speculate as to what the unnamed Ontario Hydro official meant by "worse things have happened". We know of difficulties that occurred at the Douglas Point Generating Station which were reported widely at the time and which caused long outages of that station during its first few years of operation. The Douglas Point Generating Station was the first commercial scale CANDU nuclear-electric station and is considered a prototype. Some difficulties were expected even though great effort was made to avoid them. The success of the Pickering Generating Station is largely due to the lessons learned at the Douglas Point Generating Station and the earlier, small scale, Nuclear Power Demonstration Generating Station.

ENLARGEMENT OF PICKERING NUCLEAR FACILITY

Question No. 2,733—Mr. Francis:

Does the AECL annual report of 1973-74 indicate that "in 1973 (Pickering) produced more electricity than any other nuclear plant in the world" and, if so, has any environmental assessment been ordered before doubling the size of Pickering to which Ontario Hydro has committed itself?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Atomic Energy of Canada Limited Annual Report for 1973-74 states on page 7 that "Pickering produced more electricity in 1973 than any other nuclear power station in the world". In April 1974, Ontario Hydro submitted a document entitled "Proposed Generating Station B at Pickering" to the Ontario Ministry of Energy. Included in this document was an environmental assessment for the proposed addition to Pickering.

PACKAGING OF COBALT 60

Question No. 2,734—Mr. Francis:

Is any environment risk involved in the packaging of cobalt 60 which is done at the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited location on the outskirts of Ottawa?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: Because of the precautions taken during all phases of the cobalt-60 operation at the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited location of the outskirts of Ottawa, the environmental risk involved is extremely small under normal conditions and the chance of any release of radioactivity under accident conditions is very low. In fact, during the approximately 20 year period in which the cobalt-60 process has been in production, there have been no releases of cobalt-60 to the environment at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

CHALK RIVER NUCLEAR FACILITY

Question No. 2,735—Mr. Francis:

Was the nuclear facility at Chalk River closed at any time for repairs and, if so (a) on what dates (b) for how long (c) what was the nature and extent of the repairs (d) what amounts of money were spent on the repairs (e) was any leakage of nuclear contaminants involved (f) was any danger to public health or safety involved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: The question can only be answered in general terms as there are a number of nuclear facilities at Chalk River. (a), (b) & (c) All are shut down periodically for repair and maintenance. Since 1974 there have been three major shutdowns of the two large test reactors involving replacement and upgrading of reactor vessels. (d) Repairs are a normal expense included in AECL's annual operating budget and their cost is not segregated from other like expenses. (e) Some minor leakage of nuclear contaminants within a reactor system is normally involved during installation, maintenance or repair operations around a high power test reactor. (f) Not from any operations with any of the six nuclear facilities at Chalk River.

CHALK RIVER WASTE DISPOSAL

Question No. 2,736—Mr. Francis:

1. What studies have been done on the Ottawa River to investigate levels of radioactivity from the Chalk River waste disposal unit?

2. What were the results of such studies and are they a matter of public record?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. There is continuous surveillance of the Ottawa River by the Department of National Health & Welfare in collaboration with the Ontario Department of Health and the Ontario Ministry of the Environment. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited also carries out its own environmental monitoring program on the river. The Department of National Health & Welfare program analyses drinking water at five locations along the river, both upstream and downstream from the Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories. In addition, fish are collected both upstream and downstream and analysed. Wildlife samples are also taken periodically. The AECL program monitors soil, water, air and vegetation in the vicinity of the waste management areas and all effluents. In addition, it operates a completely independent drinking water monitoring program at Rolphton, Deep River and Pembroke. Other special studies are carried out from time to time on bottom sediments, fish and aquatic plants (water weeds).

2. Generally speaking, results of studies show that the Chalk River Laboratories contribute minor amounts of radionuclides to the Ottawa River relative to the natural and bomb fallout radionuclides already present. Levels of radioactivity in the drinking water at Pembroke are indistinguishable from background levels. AECL results show that the average concentration of radioactivity in any of the effluents from the laboratory—before reaching the river—is less than 1 per cent of the occupational limit for drinking water. The data are published quarterly in detail in the open scientific literature.

LEAKAGE OF RADIOACTIVE WASTE NEAR COLUMBIA RIVER IN USA

Question No. 2,737—Mr. Francis:

To the knowledge of the government, have over 400,000 gallons of radioactive waste been leaked from storage tanks in the State of Washington in the United States near the Columbia River since 1958 and, if so (a) has the government undertaken any studies to see if any of this material was flowing north into British Columbia (b) what was the result of such studies?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: (a) Large quantities of radioactive liquid wastes have, on occasion, leaked from storage tanks at the Hanford site. These incidents have been reported in the press and in technical publications. (b) The Hanford site is in an arid, desert-like area of Washington State. We understand from the literature that all of the radioactivity has been trapped in the soil adjacent to the storage tanks and none of the radioactivity has penetrated down to the water table which, at Hanford, is over a hundred feet below the maximum depth of penetration of the radioactive materials. The nearest significant body of water is the Columbia River which is 8 miles away from the tanks. The Columbia River does not flow back into Canada but flows to the Pacific Ocean at a point over one hundred miles from the Canadian border (measured along the shoreline to the Strait of Juan de Fuca). The ocean currents in the area flow from north to south. A number of communities including Portland, Oregon, are located on the Columbia River downstream of the Hanford site. To the best of our knowledge, U.S. officials have no fear that the leaks at Hanford represent any threat to those communities because none of the radioactive materials have reached the river and none are likely to reach it in the future. Based on all the above factors, it is evident that no useful purpose would be served by any studies to see if any of the radioactive material is flowing north into British Columbia.

Order Paper Questions

SALES OF PLUTONIUM TO FRANCE

Question No. 2,738—Mr. Francis:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,713 (a) how much plutonium has Canada sold to France (b) on what dates?

2. How was the plutonium transported (a) across Canada and (b) to France and, what safeguards, if any, were taken to make sure the shipments were not vandalized, sabotaged or stolen?

3. What safeguards are taken to protect public health and safety from any and all mishaps while plutonium is in transit?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. Irradiated fuel bundles from the Nuclear Power Demonstration and Douglas Point Generating Stations have been sold to France. These fuel bundles which contained approximately 120 kilograms of plutonium were shipped from Canada between August 1969 and May 1972.

2. The irradiated fuel bundles were removed from the storage ponds at the Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories and Douglas Point and loaded into approved shipping containers. These containers travelled by specially arranged and approved road transport to Toronto and Montreal where they were loaded aboard a ship and transported to Belgium where the reprocessing plant chosen by the French Government is located.

3. All shipments of irradiated fuel are made under regulations issued by the Atomic Energy Control Board. In the case of this shipment, the details of the proposed shipping arrangements including design and construction of the flask, proposed routing, loading, cleaning and monitoring procedures, were all submitted to the Atomic Energy Control Board for approval. Permission for the transfer was only issued after a thorough review indicated that the risk to public health and safety was acceptable in conformance with prevailing international standards.

MISSING URANIUM OR PLUTONIUM

Question No. 2,739—Mr. Francis:

Has any uranium or plutonium been missing or unaccounted for (a) in transit from Canada (b) produced by Canadian-built reactors in other countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): (a) The Atomic Energy Control Board is aware of no incident where uranium or plutonium has been missing or unaccounted for in transit from Canada. (b) The Atomic Energy Control Board is aware of no situation where uranium or plutonium used or produced in Canadian-built reactors which are under bilateral or international safeguards in other countries has been missing or unaccounted for.

SAFEGUARDS FOR NUCLEAR MATERIALS IN TRANSIT

Question No. 2,741—Mr. Francis:

What safeguards does the government provide to ensure that radioactive materials in transit will not be hijacked (a) within Canada (b) during export from Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The security arrangements provided by the federal government to ensure that radioactive materials in transit will not be hijacked within Canada or during export from Canada are specially arranged for each shipment and tailored to reflect the quantity and form of the material being shipped. The detailed arrangements applied to securable quantities of materials which might be attractive to a potential hijacker are confidential.

[Mr. Sharp.]

SAFEGUARDS FOR PLUTONIUM

Question No. 2,742—Mr. Francis:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,731 which stated that 2,204.6 pounds of plutonium are produced each year at the Pickering CANDU reactor, what assurances can the government provide that this material will not be stolen and used for criminal activities in (a) Canada (b) countries that are purchasing CANDU reactors?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: (a) The plutonium produced in the Pickering reactors is at present contained in irradiated fuel bundles stored in the spent fuel storage pond at the Pickering Reactor Generating Station. These bundles, which are highly radioactive, are stored under approximately 20 feet of water and cannot be removed from this storage pond without a skilled team of technicians and operators and specially built equipment including special transportation containers which weigh from 25 to 50 tons. The physical characteristics of the fuel bundles and existing security precautions are deemed to provide adequate protection. (b) The precise physical security precautions applied to CANDU reactors abroad by foreign nations are chosen by the nation in question. Canada has assisted the International Atomic Energy Agency in the preparation of international guides to physical security standards as part of its general effort to ensure that adequate physical protection measures are in place in all nuclear facilities around the world not only in CANDU reactors.

PRODUCTION OF ATOMIC BOMB

Question No. 2,743—Mr. Francis:

Are twenty-two pounds of plutonium enough to produce an atomic bomb and, if not, how many pounds are required?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The exact quantity of plutonium required to produce a nuclear bomb or explosive is dependent on the isotopic content, the purity, density and other physical characteristics of the plutonium but most important on the design and fabrication of the nuclear weapon concerned. The effect of each of the potential variables and the minimum quantity required to produce a nuclear bomb are carefully guarded military secrets which are not known in Canada. In order to establish levels of security precautions, the Atomic Energy Control Board has assumed that a nuclear explosive device could be assembled from 15 pounds of plutonium.

EFFECTS OF RADIOACTIVE EXPOSURE

Question No. 2,744—Mr. Francis:

Are high doses of radioactive exposure known to cause death or cancer and, if so, is there any information on the long-term effects of low-level radioactive exposure?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Yes. High doses of radiation can cause cancer and they can cause death as well. Cancers have been observed following doses in the order of 100 rems or more received either in a short period or spread over a long period. The cancer does not appear immediately but after a latent period of several months to many years after the exposure. Deaths due to non-cancerous injuries may result from doses of 200 to 700 rems received in a short period. Exposures of such magnitude may result in death within a few weeks of the exposure, whereas more rapid deaths (within hours) require thousands of rems received in a short period. Taking "low level exposure" to means exposures received within the legal dose limits (5 rems per year to the whole body, for example), there have been no observable effects. It is assumed, for regulatory purposes, that effects are proportional to dose (even at low doses and low doe rates) but this remains an assumption, for no effects have been observed.

LEVELS OF RADIOACTIVE EXPOSURE

Question No. 2,745—Mr. Francis:

What is the acceptable level of radioactive exposure (a) for a person's lifetime (b) for a year (c) in one exposure?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): (a)—(c) The levels of radiation exposure to the whole body permitted by the Atomic Energy Control Regulations are (in addition to natural background radiation and radiation from medical exposures): for atomic radiation workers—up to 3 rems in a single exposure but no more than 3 rems per quarter of a year and no more than 5 rems for a year; in a working lifetime, say 50 years, the accumulated dose could be 250 rems. For members of the public—the level permitted by the Atomic Energy Control Regulations is no more than .05 rem/year to the whole body. In principle, this could be received in a single exposure, but in practice, any dose received by members of the public is likely to be spread out more or less uniformally during th year. In a lifetime (say 70 years), the accumulated dose could be as high as 35 rems. In practice, it is assured, through the licencing actions of the Atomic Energy Control Board, that the highest exposed members of the public generally receive no more than about 1 per cent of the doses permitted by the Atomic Energy Control Regulations.

LEVELS OF RADIOACTIVE EXPOSURE

Question No. 2,746—Mr. Francis:

1. What is the acceptable rate of radioactive exposure for a person working in a nuclear facility?

2. How many people working in nuclear facilities in Canada have as a result of radioactive exposure (a) died (b) become disabled (c) taken sick leave (d) been transferred to another job?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. See answer to question No. 2,745.

2. No one working at Canadian nuclear reactors is known to have died, become disabled, taken sick leave or been permanently transferred to another job as a result of radiation exposure.

Order Paper Questions

PROTECTION OF WORKERS AT NUCLEAR FACILITIES

Question No. 2,747—Mr. Francis:

1. (a) How many workers at nuclear facilities in Canada are exposed to radioactive materials (b) what is the extent of their exposure?

2. What safeguards exist to protect the health of workers?

3. Are workers in nuclear facilities given regular medical check-ups or other tests to ascertain the degree of their exposure?

4. Are workers protected under an insurance plan against exposure to radioactive materials?

5. Can a worker in a nuclear facility who is contaminated by radioactive wastes seek damages from his employer?

6. Has any member of a family of a worker at a nuclear facility in Canada become contaminated with radioactive material as a result of the worker becoming contaminated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. Approximately 2,500 workers may be regularly exposed to ionizing radiation at nuclear facilities in Canada. Most of these workers receive a radiation dose of less than half the statutory limits.

2. Measures to protect the radiological health of atomic radiation workers are stipulated in the Atomic Energy Control Regulations. Where necessary, these measures are further specified in the licences issued by the Atomic Energy Control Board. These measures include requirements for minimizing, measuring and recording the exposure of such workers to ionizing radiation.

3. Yes. Atomic radiation workers are given medical tests of a type and frequency prescribed by medical advisers to the Atomic Energy Control Board. The degree of their radiation exposure, that is, radiation dose, is measured primarily by personal radiation dosimeters and by analysis of urine samples. The amount of radiation dose permitted at nuclear facilities is so low that medical effects are not a useful guide to radiation dose. Indeed, the regulatory limits have been chosen so as to prevent medical effects from occurring.

4. Yes. Workers are covered by Workmens' Compensation.

5. Traditionally, workers who are convered by Workmens' Compensation cannot sue their employer; however, when the Nuclear Liability Act is proclaimed, workers who suffer personal injury as a result of radiation exposure can sue the operator (as defined by the act) for damages; and the operator is absolutely liable for any breach of his duty under the act.

6. There have been cases in the past of workers at nuclear facilities in Canada who have worn contaminated clothing to their home. In such cases, there were no detectable medical consequences to the worker or to members of his family.

AMERICAN GUIDELINES ON RADIATION

Question No. 2,749—Mr. Francis:

To the knowledge of the government, has the United States approved guidelines that will expose the public in that country to 100 times less radiation than is the acceptable limit from reactors in Canada and, if so, is Canada considering similar measures?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: Both the United States and the Canadian regulations defining permissible limits of radiation exposure to occupationally-exposed workers and to members of the general public are based on the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection. The statutory limits in Canada and the U.S.A. are the same. In addition to recommending numerical limits, the International Commission on Radiological Protection cautions that exposures should be kept "as low as is readily achievable, economic and social considerations being taken into account". The United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission has issued guidelines governing the release of radioactive effluents from light-water-cooled nuclear power reactors. The effect of these guidelines is that the resultant radiation dose to members of the public should not exceed about 1% of the statutory dose limits. In advance of the United States action, the Canadian regulatory agency, the Atomic Energy Control Board, established design and operating targets such that the radiation dose to members of the public resulting from radioactive effluents from nuclear power stations and other nuclear facilities and devices should not exceed 1% of the statutory dose limits specified in the Atomic Energy Control Regulations. The operating experience at the Pickering Generating Station indicates that these targets are being achieved.

EMPLOYEES AT PICKERING NUCLEAR FACILITY

Question No. 2,750—Mr. Francis:

Did employees at the Pickering nuclear facility receive radioactive exposure in excess of 5 Rems and, if so, how many were involved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: Very few people, perhaps three or four per year, receive more than 5 rem/year and the doses received by these people have been all less than 10 rem/year. It should be noted that up to 10 rems per year can be permitted by the Atomic Energy Control Board under the Atomic Energy Control Regulations since a dose of 10 rems is not considered to be excessive as long as the dose averaged from age 18 up to the current exposure period does not exceed 5 rems per year.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON RADIOLOGICAL PROTECTION

Question No. 2,751—Mr. Francis:

Has the International Commission on Radiological Protection set an arbitrary figure of about 5 Rems as the maximum acceptable radioactive exposure to a human being over 30 years, and has the United States recently reduced this acceptability figure by a factor of 100 per cent and, if so, is the government reviewing the acceptable radiation exposure figure in Canada to come into line with the United States figure?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The International Commission on Radiological Protection has set a tentative limit of 5 rems per generation on the genetically significant dose to a population, assuming that a generation is of 30 years duration. This limit is included in the Canadian Atomic Energy Control Regulations. Neither has the U.S. established a limit based on genetically significant dose; however, the U.S has used a number which is numerically equivalent to 5 rems per 30 years, but this numer (0.17 rem/year) is based on somatic rather than genetic effects. As stated in the answer to question No. 2,749, the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission recently established numerical guidelines for design objectives governing the release of radioactive effluents from light-water-cooled nuclear reactors. These guidelines are quite separate and distinct from the 5 rem per generation figure referred to above and apply to the statutory dose limits specified by the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission. As also stated in the answer to question No. 2,749, the action taken by the United States is essentially the same as that taken by the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada in 1974. Accordingly, it is incorrect to suggest that the acceptable dose limits in the U.S. are lower by a factor of 100 than the applicable Canadian limits.

BIOLOGICAL STUDIES ON RADIATION

Question No. 2,752—Mr. Francis:

1. Were recent biological studies made by AECL showing that low-levels of radiation alter substantially the estimates of the genetic risks to human populations from exposure to ionizing radiation and, if so, does the government feel that acceptable levels of low-level radiation exposure should be altered?

2. Have findings of AECL been collaborated by any other outside research source?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. The most recent Atomic Energy of Canada Limited studies concerning the relationship between genetic risks and exposure to ionizing radiation suggest that less of the genetic disease in human populations is of a kind that increases with radiation than was formerly believed to be the case. Notwithstanding these encouraging findings, we agree with the overall consensus of authoritative world opinion that the existing maximum permissible radiation exposure limits for man, as recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection, are adequately conservative and should be retained.

2. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited's findings concerning the relationship between genetic disease and radiation dose have not yet been confirmed elsewhere but are under discussion in Canada and abroad.

HEAVY WATER

Question No. 2,753—Mr. Francis:

1. Is hydrogen sulphide used in making heavy water for CANDU nuclear generating stations?

2. Is hydrogen sulphide lethal or otherwise dangerous to public health?

3. What amounts of hydrogen sulphide are released into the environment near a CANDU reactor?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Hydrogen sulphide is used in the Girdler Sulphide (GS) process used in Canada for making heavy water.

2. Hydrogen sulphide is a substance comparable in its toxic properties to hydrogen cyanide and sulphur dioxide. Depending on the exposure time, hydrogen sulphide can be lethal to humans if the concentration breathed exceeds about 500 parts per million (ppm) of air.

3. Hydrogen sulphide is used in the process of making heavy water for CANDU reactors but the product, heavy water, contains no hydrogen sulphide; hence no hydrogen sulphide is released from CANDU reactors. For economic reasons, plants that produce heavy water are sometimes located at CANDU nuclear power plant sites and are supplied with process steam from the CANDU plants. In any case, the amount of hydrogen sulphide released to the environment from heavy water production plants is strictly controlled to prevent damage to the environmental considerations in determining the licenced limits for releases arising from normal operation of heavy water production plants using the Girdler Sulphide process.

COST OF ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 2,755—Mr. Francis:

1. How much money per family in Canada is it estimated will be spent on energy development over the next 20 years?

2. How much money will be allocated to the top ten energy sources and what total amounts are involved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1. Attached Table 1 shows capital expenditures per family on energy from 1975-1990. Figures for 1991-1995 are at present unavailable. Expenditures per family should not be equated with expenditures by families since some of the investment will come from foreign sources.

2. It would be difficult to specify the top ten energy sources. Nuclear, thermal and hydroelectricity; oil and natural gas; and coal will be the only major sources of energy over the period covered. Geothermal, solar or tidal energy will not be significant sources in this century. Also pipelines are not themselves directly energy sources but are a vital component of energy expenditures.

Attached Table 2 shows a breakdown of energy expenditures over the 1975-1990 period for the major categories listed above.

Table 1

Capital Expenditures on Energy Per Family
Canada 1975-1990

RADIOACTIVE WASTE—PUBLIC INFORMATION

Question No. 2,756—Mr. Francis:

With reference to the annual report of the AECL which states "waste management is an important part of the nuclear program" and a "significant effort" will be made to make sure that "ultimate solutions are optimum in terms of public acceptance", will the government be starting a programme of public information to set before the people the alternatives so that public acceptance will reflect informed public opinion?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The development of a radioactive waste management program is more than a technical matter. The management process includes matters of regulatory policy and responsibility at various levels of government and also the broader consideration of the responsibilities which present generations can be allowed to bequeath to future generations. These larger considerations are matters of public concern. As a consequence, the techniques for storage of radioactive waste and the intent of responsible agencies must be properly explained in public forums. A program of public information has been initiated by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited consisting of talks to public groups and articles in scientific journals and is expected to be enlarged as details of the management program are developed.

JAMES BAY PROJECT

Question No. 2,757—Mr. Francis:

Is the government or the Government of Quebec planning to enrich uranium using electricity from the James Bay Project and, if so (a) will they use U-235 or plutonium (b) where will the fuel come from?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: Neither the federal nor Quebec governments are planning to enrich uranium using electricity from the James Bay Project. A group called CANADIF, of which the James Bay Development Corporation is a member, has conducted a preliminary study of the possibility of constructing a uranium enrichment plant in Quebec. CANADIF recently announced that it was deferring for six months a decision whether or not to proceed with more detailed studies.

REPROCESSING OF SPENT FUEL

Question No. 2,758—Mr. Francis:

Is Atomic Energy of Canada Limited planning to reprocess spent fuel from CANDU reactors and, if so, in what way?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: A main responsibility of AECL is to develop advanced reactors and related systems to enable the country to make best use of domestic resources in this field under the circumstances that may obtain in twenty years or so. These circumstances may include a tight uranium supply; in which case it will be advantageous to have available more efficient fuel cycles than the present one. Such fuel cycles may require plutonium recovered from the spent fuel from CANDU reactors. Fuel cycles involving plutonium recycle will halve the requirement for fresh uranium. AECL will therefore engage in the development of fuel reprocessing as a necessary step to the development of advanced reactors.

LICENCES FOR NUCLEAR REACTORS

Question No. 2,759—Mr. Francis:

Is the Atomic Energy Control Board considering holding public hearings on licences for nuclear reactors as is the practice in the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: The board is not empowered under the Atomic Energy Control Act to hold formal public hearings as is the practice in the United States. This matter is under the continuing consideration of the board.

FILM "THIS NUCLEAR AGE"

Question No. 2,760—Mr. Francis

1. (a) What was the purpose of the film "This Nuclear Age" and a second film about the Douglas Point Generating Station (b) how much did each cost?

2. Are the films contrary to government policy of energy conservation and, if so, are there plans to withdraw them?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: 1. (a) The film "This Nuclear Age" was produced to inform Canadians about the uses being made in Canada of nuclear energy—for the production of electricity, in the diagnosis and treatment of disease and in industrial processes; about research and development work in nuclear laboratories, and about the roles played in the nuclear program by governments, utilities, private companies and universities. The film "Douglas Point Nuclear Power Station" was produced for the purpose of informing Canadians about nuclear fission, the system developed in Canada for the employment of fission for the generation of electricity and the installation and operation of the system in Canada's first full-scale nuclear power station. (b) "This Nuclear Age" and the French-language version, "En Cet Age Nucleaire", cost $89,760. "Douglas Point Power Station" and the French-language version, "La Centrale Nucleaire Douglas Point", cost $62,065.

2. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited does not consider the films to be contrary to government policy of energy conservation.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD LICENCES

Question No. 2,762—Mr. Francis:

Prior to June 4, 1974, was any licence issued by the Atomic Energy Control Board revoked, suspended or amended and, if so, what were the circumstances that led to such a decision?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: Yes. Twenty-eight licences were revoked or suspended because of violations of the Atomic Energy Control Regulations or non-compliance with the terms and conditions of Atomic Energy Control Board licences. A few examples of violations or non-compliance are:—failure to wear monitoring films; failure to use monitoring equipment; failure to report incidents; operating without properly qualified personnel. Licences are often amended at the request of licensees as the scope and extent of their operations change. The amendment of a licence implies no failure to meet required standards.

DEVELOPMENT OF NUCLEAR ENERGY

Question No. 2,763—Mr. Francis:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,715 stating that the government is committed to the development of nuclear energy in Canada (a) what discussions, if any, did the government undertake with environmentalist or other groups before taking such decision (b) were the people of Canada, in the opinion of the government fully informed of the risks involved in the development of nuclear energy and of the alternative future sources of energy before the decision was taken?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: (a) The Canadian government's support for the development of nuclear energy in Canada extends back in time for three decades. As early as 1945 commitments were made to convert the war-time legacy of nuclear energy to peaceful purposes. The major reasons were to provide access to the enormous store of energy in Canadian uranium and to enable Canada to compete in an increasingly technological world. In 1946, the government of the day, aware of the possible risks inherent in nuclear technology, promulgated the Atomic Energy Control Act and formed the Atomic Energy Control Board to regulate the industry in terms of public health and reactor safety. At that time no environmental protection organizations were taking any interest in this area. Nonetheless, government and industry were making every effort to carefully protect the environment and to keep the public fully informed. Continuous programs of public education on nuclear power have been carried out, for example, by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Ontario Hydro since the start-up of the Nuclear Power Demonstration reactor at Rolphton in 1962. Since the recent development of organized public interest in this field and the formation of new groups, however, many discussions both public and private have taken place, and many questions asked by such groups have been answered to their apparent satisfaction by the Atomic Energy Control Board, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick electric utilities. (b) In view of the foregoing, it is clear that consultation with the people of Canada has been taking place on a continuous basis since the start of this development. Recently, for example, an environmental assessment was completed of the proposed New Brunswick Point Lepreau Nuclear Station by a panel of experts led by the Department of the Environment. A public meeting was held to review the report and many public briefs were presented. Conditional environmental approval for the reactor was given by the Department of the Environment on the basis of all this information. Had Canada not gone ahead as she did, U.S. light water reactors would now be the major alternative source of energy. An industry employing tens of thousands would not exist, Canada would not have the very successful Pickering Generating Station and would not be in the forefront of technological development in this field.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

Question No. 2,773—Mr. Cossitt:

Was there any damage of any kind to the premises at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive as a result of blasting operations in connection with the construction of a swimming pool and, if so (a) what is a full description of such damage (b) what is an estimate of the amount of such damage and the cost that would be involved in repairs (c) on what specific dates was blasting carried out and by whom?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): No. (a) n/a; (b) n/a; (c) n/a.

CAFETERIAS IN GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 2,776—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. With respect to the cafeterias of the (a) Lester B. Pearson Building (Department of External Affairs) (b) Place de Ville-Tower "A" (Public Service Commission) (c) R. H. Coats Building (Tunney's Pasture) who are the concessionnaires and how were the concessions awarded in each case?

2. Were grants made to any of the concessionnaires and, if so (a) how were they determined (b) what was the amount of the grant?

3. Can an employee of one department or agency eat in any of the other cafeterias?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) Lester B. Pearson Building (Department of External Affairs): The concessionnaires Crawley and McCracken Company Limited who was selected by public tender. (b) Place de Ville Tower "A" (Public Service Commission): The federal government is not responsible for any of the commercial eating facilities in Place de Ville Tower "A". (c) R. H. Coats Building (Tunney's Pasture): There is no cafeteria located in this building. The occupants of the building use the cafeteria located in the adjoining Statistics Canada Building. The concessionnaire is Lorne Murphy Foods Limited who was selected by public tender.

2. No grants were made to the concessionnaire operating in the Lester B. Pearson Building and the R.H. Coats Building.

3. Yes.

DON JOY

Question No. 2,779—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. On what date was Mr. Don Joy appointed as "exempted staff" attached to one or other of the Ministers of government?

2. To what Minister is he attached?

3. What are his duties?

4. How many other "exempted staff" are on that Minister's staff?

5. In what salary ranges do the salaries of these appointees fall?

6. For what duration is the appointment of Mr. Joy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. October 15, 1974.

2. The Leader of the Government in the Senate.

3. Special Assistant—duties as assigned by the Minister.

4. Eight.

5. 1—up to $25,000; 3—up to $21,000; 2—$11,871 to $12,992; 1—$11,340 to $12,409; 1—$9,239 to $10,102.

6. Indeterminate.

SOLAR GRAIN DRYING INSTALLATIONS

Question No. 2,785—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

To the knowledge of the government were more than 40 solar grain drying installations operated in midwestern states of the United States in the fall of 1974 and were thousands of bushels of grain dried using solar energy under experimental conditions and, if so, is the government having experimental work of that nature done in Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Officials of the Department are aware that solar drying of grain has been done in the United States, but cannot confirm the number of installations and the quantity of grain dried. The Department is not currently conducting experimental work on solar drying of grain.

COST OF "INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE ANNUAL REVIEW, 1973/74"

Question No. 2,796—Mr. Huntington:

What was the total cost to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to compose and publish the Industry, Trade and Commerce Annual Review 1973/74?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The total cost of the Industry, Trade and Commerce Annual Review 1973/74 is $32,289.

Order Paper Questions

CONTRACT FOR CARPET AT MONTREAL MIRABEL AIRPORT

Question No. 2,797—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Has the contract for carpet for the Montreal Mirabel Airport been let and, if so (a) to whom (b) what manufacturer is producing it?

2. (a) How many square yards are involved (b) what is the estimated cost per square yard (c) what type of carpet has been specified (nylon, wool, acrylic, etc.) (d) what performance guarantee has been given?

3. Was a wool carpet specified at an installed price approximately three times higher than nylon carpet and, if so (a) for what reason (b) how many Canadian carpet manufacturers were excluded by such choice?

4. How many different manufacturers were represented in bids against the tender for carpet specified by the government?

5. Was this contract specified as giving any preference whatsoever to Quebec made products although it is a federal project and, if so, what are the details?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Two contracts for carpet for the New Montreal International Airport in Mirabel have been awarded. (a) The contract for pure virgin wool yarn with polypropylene chain carpet backing has been awarded to T. Eaton Co. The contract for pure virgin acrylic on polypropylene primary backing and density foam secondary backing carpet has been awarded to Lavoie & Sauvé Inc. (b) The pure virgin wool carpet is manufactured by Blackwood Morton Kilmarlock Co. (B.M.K.) of St. Therese de Blainville, Quebec. The pure virgin acrylic carpet is manufactured by St. George International of Ville St-Georges de Beauce, Quebec.

2. (a) Involved are 14, 245 square yards of pure virgin wool carpet and 2,803 square yards of pure virgin acrylic carpet. (b) Installed and including underlay, the cost per square yard is $30.66 for the pure virgin wool carpet and $7.73 for the pure virgin acrylic carpet. (c) Pure virgin wool yarn with polypropylene chain carpet and pure virgin acrylic on polypropylene primary backing and density foam secondary backing carpet had been specified. (d) The performance guarantee is the following: 12 month guaranty as per General Conditions of Canadian Government Contracts. This guaranty period will start at the date of final acceptance of work and it is signed by the manufacturers, the sub-contractors and the contractors; All repairs or replacements, as well as any damage to other trade's work caused by a defect of the work of this section during the said guarantee period, shall be entirely at the expense of the signatories; The guarantee shall be handed to the Engineer before final acceptance of work. The day the final certificate of completion is issued shall be the day the Engineer, the Consultant and the Construction Manager issue the said Final Certificate of completion and this guarantee will take effect the same day; Furthermore, the Contractor shall compensate the Engineer for all damages resulting from defective work within the scope of this guarantee; Neither field inspection, nor approval of sample materials or part of work, nor final acceptance of work or payment of work by the Engineer shall free the Contractor from responsibility concerning defective workmanship or materials; The guarantee called for in this section shall not alter civil liability as established by articles No. 1688 and No. 2259 of the Province of Quebec Civil Code, and shall in no way restrict guarantees exceeding the one normally furnished by some manufacturers.

[Mr. Sharp.]

3. The pure virgin wool carpet was neither specified nor tendered at an installed price of approximately three times higher than nylon carpet. (a) A pure virgin wool carpet was specified in the highly travelled areas by the public for reasons of durability. Pure virgin acrylic carpet was specified in areas where carpet would usually be needed for aesthetical as well as acoustical reasons and where the public would not walk. (b) It is not possible to estimate how many Canadian carpet manufacturers were excluded.

4. Since bidders were not requested to provide the name of the manufacturers in their tender documents, it was impossible to know the name of the supplier of the unsuccessful bidders.

5. No.

VOTES RECORDED BY UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Question No. 2,799—Mr. Kaplan:

1. How many votes were recorded by the UN General Assembly in each of its plenary and six committee sessions in the years 1972, 1973 and 1974?

2. In how many and what percentage of votes in each session did Canada (a) vote yes (b) vote no (c) abstain (i) with explanation (ii) without explanation (d) refrain?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. and 2. (a), (b) and (c): Records of votes in United Nations Committees are not readily available. The record for the General Assembly is set out below: (i) The U.N. General Assembly considered and adopted 170 resolutions and sub-resolutions in its 27th Session in 1972; 168 resolutions and sub-resoluitons in its 28th Session in 1973; 3 resolutions at the Sixth Special Session of UNGA in 1974; and 179 resolutions and sub-resolutions in its 29th Session in 1974. (ii) At the 27th Session of UNGA in 1972, 50 (29.4 per cent) resolutions were adopted unanimously, without opposition or without a vote; Canada specifically voted in the affirmative on 83 (48.8 per cent) resolutions; Canada voted in the negative on 5 (2.9 per cent) resolutions; Canada abstained on 32 (18.8 per cent) resolutions; and Canada did not refrain from voting on any resolutions. (iii) At the 28th Session of UNGA in 1973, 66 (39.3 per cent) resolutions were adopted unanimously, without opposition or without a vote; Canada specifically voted in the affirmative on 70 (41.7 per cent) resolutions; Canada voted in the negative on no (0 per cent) resolutions; Canada abstained on 32 (19.0 per cent) resolutions; and Canada did not refrain from voting on any resolutions. (iv) At the Sixth Special Session of UNGA held in May of 1974, three resolutions were adopted by consensus. (V) At the 29th Session of UNGA in 1974, 90 (50.3 per cent) resolutions were adopted unanimously, without opposition or without a vote; Canada specifically voted in the affirmative on 62 (34.6 per cent) resolutions; Canada voted in the negative on 4 (2.2 per cent) resolutions; Canada abstained on 23 (12.8 per cent) resolutions; and Canada did not refrain from voting on any resolutions.

2. (c) i) and ii): A precise response cannot be provided to the question regarding the occasions Canada explained an abstention and those when Canada abstained without explanation. No detailed records are kept in this regard and only a portion of the explanations of vote are published in U.N. documents and in Canadian delegation reports. Furthermore, on some occasions time and U.N. procedures do not provide the opportunity to explain a vote; on other occasions, Canada's vote in abstention is recorded in what is generally considered the good company of other states and on those occasions an explanation by each Member State taking that position would be needlessly time-consuming and repetitive; finally, Canada explains its vote with sufficient frequency whether it be positive, negative, or an abstention, to ensure that when it does not, the reason for our position is usually obvious and self-explanatory.

NUMBER OF PERSONS PERMITTED TO AWAIT TRIAL ON BAIL ON CHARGES

Questions No. 2,802—Mr. Beatty:

1. For each year since 1970 and by province or territory, how many persons were permitted to await trial on bail on charges of (a) murder (b) rape?

2. How many such persons (a) were ultimately convicted of the crime with which they had been charged (b) are currently awaiting trial?

3. How many such persons were charged with committing a second offence while on bail and of these, how many (a) were subsequently convicted of the second offence (b) are still awaiting trial for the second offence?

4. How many persons charged with (a) murder (b) rape are currently out on bail awaiting trial and what is the distribution by province or territory?

5. By year and province or territory, how many persons described in Part 1 (a) did not subsequently report for trial at the appointed time and place and what was the offence with which they were charged (b) are currently still at large?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. No such statistics are available. The possibility of obtaining such statistics on a routine basis is being explored, but it appears that the cost would be considerable. For offences such as murder or rape it is possible that some information could be supplied for individual provinces by their Attorneys General.

2. To 5. Not applicable.

COST OF REORGANIZATIONAL STUDY OF AIR CANADA

Question No. 2,804—Mr. Huntington:

1. What was the original cost quoted by McKinsey and Company Inc., a management consultant firm from Manhatten, New York, to carry out its 1970 reorganizational study of Air Canada?

2. What was the final cost to Air Canada on completion of the study?

3. What recommendations were made by the consultants to Air Canada?

4. Were the recommendations implemented by Air Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1, 2, 3, 4. The information requested is considered privileged and is not made public on the grounds that it relates to the internal operation of the airline.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT HOUSEHOLDER DIRECTORIES

Question No. 2,805—Mr. Herbert:

1. What use is made by the Post Office Department of the householder directories which it compiles and publishes?

2. (a) How many are published (b) at what cost?

3. How many have been sold in a one year period?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): 1. The Canada Post Office uses householder directories: (a) To provide directory service for mail that is undeliverable due to incomplete, incorrect or illegible addressing. (b) To provide (free of charge) senators and members of parliament with an up-to-date list of constituents in federal ridings. (c) To provide (free of charge) charitable organizations, government departments and the National Library, etc. with an up-to-date list of householders for all areas not covered by commercial directories to assist them in research and in addressing of their mail. (d) To sell to customers and thereby assist in correct addressing of mail, enabling the Post Office to provide faster and more efficient service. In the case of large volume mailers, the availability of these lists generates third class mailings which are an additional source of revenue for the department.

2. (a) The Post Office publishes 145 different householder directories. These cover a total of 198 federal electoral districts (the balance of the electoral districts are covered by private directories). The total number of copies published is 8,884. (b) The printing cost for the fiscal year 1974-75 is $34,963.76.

3. The number sold in the fiscal year 1974-75 is 2,292.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—EXPENDITURES SINCE 1945

Question No. 2,809—Mr. Roberts:

1. For each year since 1945, what was the total net expenditure for National Defence?

2. What percentage do the figures represent of the total budgetary expenditure?

3. For the same years, what was the total expenditure on capital goods?

4. What is the total manpower of the Armed Forces since 1945?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1, 2, 3 and 4. The data requested is all contained in the following:

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE
EXPENDITURE/MANPOWER DATA
1946-47 TO 1973-74

	DND Net Expenditure ($000,000)	DND Expenditure as a percentage of Federal Expenditure	DND Capital Expenditure ($000,000)	Armed Forces Manpower (Note 2)

1974-75	2,508	–	268	78,984

NOTE 1: Public Accounts and other budget presentations during the period 1945-50 which are now available for analysis do not identify capital expenditure in sufficient detail to provide data comparable to that displayed from 1950-51 onward.

NOTE 2: The figures in this column do not include Reserve Forces.

NOTE 3: DND net expenditures and capital expenditures for 1974/75 are unaudited figures. Total federal expenditures are not yet available, hence the percentage could not be calculated.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE—PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,810—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. In order to supplement or to replace the general translation services provided by the Department of the Secretary of State, which departments or ministries have organized or are contemplating organizing translation sections within their own establishment?

2. Are the personnel on loan from the Secretary of State or are they taken on strength by such department or ministry?

3. By department or ministry, what is the respective number of persons or number of man-years involved?

4. What is the public service classification and salary range of all persons heading up any such section or group?

5. What is the estimated cost of operating such a section or group for each department?

6. As the result of any such steps or if any others are in contemplation what will be the change in numbers of the translation service of the Department of the Secretary of State?

7. What are the reasons advanced for the change in organization and function as described above?

8. What is the estimated cost of the separate and additional sets of manuals, dictionaries, etc., and office equipment for such sections or groups?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by several departments as follows: 1. None. The Translation Bureau has a clear mandate in this area, established by the Translation Bureau Act (Section 3(1)). However, approximately 600 of the Bureau's translators are physically located in various departments.

2. to 8. Not applicable.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Order Paper Questions

AIR CANADA—TRANSFER OF PAINTING TO MR. YVES MÉNARD

Question No. 2,817—Mr. MacKay:

1. Was ownership of a painting formerly owned by Air Canada transferred to Mr. Yves Ménard, former Vice-President of Marketing for Air Canada, to mark the occasion of his departure from the company and, if so, on what date did this occur and what were the circumstances?

2. What was the value of the painting?

3. Was the painting ever officially valued by a qualified appraiser of art work?

4. What was the original cost to Air Canada of the painting?

5. What was the total value of art work and paintings purchased by Air Canada for the private enjoyment or decoration of offices of its executives since 1968?

6. Under whose guidance and direction are objets d'art acquired for Air Canada and for what stated purpose is this justified as company policy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. On the occasion of his departure from Air Canada, a group of friends and business associates held a reception for Mr. Yves Ménard on April 14, 1975. At that reception, Mr. Ménard was presented with a painting which had hung in his office and which had become a favorite of his. This painting had been purchased from Air Canada with funds donated by the group of friends. The full purchase price was paid, with no discount or subsidy.

2. $1,000.

3. No.

4. $1,000.

5. Approximately $56,000.

6. Over the past several years, Air Canada has occasionally purchased paintings for use as decoration in Maple Leaf Lounges, in other public areas and in the offices of senior management. This is considered to be in line with similar practices in private industry.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT NO. SS08-KF832-4-2187

Question No. 2,818—Mr. Beatty:

1. With respect to contract number SS08 KF832-4-2187 (0SS5-2002) announced in the June 1975 edition of the Research and Development Bulletin issued by the Department of Supply and Services, what is a full description of the nature of the work to be done?

2. On what date is the final work to be submitted and how many man-hours are expected to be required in its preparation?

3. What are the component parts of the cost figure of $40,700?

4. On what date and how was the project advertised?

5. Who were the other persons or organizations bidding on the contract and what were their bids?

6. Who was the official in the Department of the Environment responsible for assessing the bids for the contract and what was his title?

7. Who is the official in the Department of the Environment to whom Mr. Childerhose's final work will be submitted and what is his job title?

8. (a) During what periods has Mr. Childerhose been an employee of the government (b) what was his title (c) what were his responsibilities?

9. (a) What other work has Mr. Childerhose done for the government (b) for whom was it done (c) what was its cost?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. NUMBER OF PERSONNEL HIRED BY PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION TO IMPLEMENT BILL C-7, C-57 AND C-58

Question No. 2,821—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. As of May 15, 1975, how many persons have been hired (a) by the Public Service Commission (b) under contract by the Department of Finance for duties relating primarily to the implementation and administration of (i) Bill C-7, An Act to enable Banks to be incorporated by letters patent and to enable capital stock of banks to be held and voted by provincial governments (ii) Bill C-57, An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1972 (iii) Bill C-58, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act?

2. In each case, what was the date of the original employment or commencement of contract?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) and (b) (i) Nil. (ii) Nil. (iii) Nil.

2. Not applicable.

NUMBER OF PERSONNEL HIRED BY PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION TO IMPLEMENT BILL C-16

Question No. 2,826—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. As of May 15, 1975, how many persons have been hired (a) by the Public Service Commission (b) under contract by the Department of National Health and Welfare for duties relating primarily to the implementation and administration of Bill C-16, An Act to amend certain statutes to provide equality of status thereunder for male and female persons?

2. In each case, what was the date of the original employment or commencement of contract?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) This department has not hired anyone through the Public Service Commission for duties relating to the implementation and administration of Bill C-16 (b) None. Bill C-16 has no bearing on the department's legislation and/or programs.

2. Not applicable.

NUMBER OF PERSONNEL HIRED BY PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION TO IMPLEMENT BILLS C-23 AND C-52

Question No. 2,828—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. As of May 15, 1975, how many persons have been hired (a) by the Public Service Commission (b) under contract by the Treasury Board for duties relating primarily to the implementation and administration of (i) Bill C-23, An Act to provide for the payment of superannuation benefits to Lieutenant Governors (ii) Bill C-52, An Act to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act, the Diplomatic Service (Special) Superannuation Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Judges Act, the Tax Review Board Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act?

2. In each case, what was the date of the original employment or commencement of contract?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned, no persons had been hired by the Public Service Commission or under contract as of May 15, 1975, for duties relating primarily to the implementation and administration of Bill C-35, an act to amend the Statistics Act.

2. Not applicable.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR NATIONAL WILDLIFE AREAS

Question No. 2,834—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. With what provinces is the government negotiating regarding the acquisition of lands for national wildlife areas and, in each case, what lands are under discussion?

2. By province and territory, what is the (a) total amount of acreage now dedicated to national wildlife areas (b) name of each such area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Although the department has met with the provincial wildlife departments and has discussed where national wildlife areas could be established, the department is not presently negotiating for any specific area. When ready to acquire a specific area, provincial concurrence would be obtained before commencing negotiations. An agreement was signed with the province of Saskatchewan covering the Last Mountain Lake Wildlife Management Area providing for the conservation, management and development of wildlife resources, the area is comprised of approximately 15,000 acres of federal Crown lands and 8,000 acres of provincial Crown lands. There also exists an agreement with the province of Manitoba to undertake joint programs to rehabilitate, develop, and manage the Delta Marsh.

BANNING OF AEROSOL CANS

Question No. 2,838—Mr. Schellenberger:

In regard to the current controversy surrounding the potentially dangerous effect of fluorocarbons on the earth's ozone layer, is the Minister considering banning the use of aerosol cans?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Aerosol cans as well as other uses of fluorocarbons have been under review for some time. The assessment of Canadian scientists, based on a theoretical model, is that the fluorocarbons may pose a threat to the ozone layer. However, precise measurements of key chemical constituents in the stratosphere and other research are required in order to draw firm conclusions regarding the nature and seriousness of the threat. A decision on whether to restrict use of fluorocarbons in aerosol cans should be possible in one to two years depending on progress in making the necessary scientific measurements.

REMOVAL OF WASTEPAPER FROM PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 2,839—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. How many tons of paper waste are removed each year from Parliament Hill?

2. Who hauls away such waste?

3. What is the cost of removal?

4. Is such waste (a) recycled (b) incinerated (c) used as land fill?

5. In the case of Part 4 (b) and (c), would the Minister consider having it recycled as a demonstration of confidence in the long-term prospects of waste paper recovery and to provide an incentive to the recycling industry which would encourage others to become actively involved in the recycling process?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. Based on household units the estimated yearly weight in tons is: (1) East Block, 80.18 tons; (2) Centre Block, 1,018.52 tons; (3) West Block, 393.12 tons; Total 1,491.82 tons.

2. Tri-Cil Waste Management Limited.

3. The cost of removal of waste paper for Parliament Hill was seven thousand forty-eight dollars ($7,048.00).

4. (c) Used as land fill.

5. A study was carried out jointly in late 1972 by Environment Canada, CADC and DPW to try and find a satisfactory solution to the problem of paper disposal from government buildings in the Ottawa-Hull area. This study revealed that the cost of separating and collection of office waste far exceeded any potential revenue. It was therefore agreed that, as an interim measure pending further study by Environment Canada, disposal of office waste paper from Parliament Hill would be included in the garbage contract.

[Mr. Sharp.]

CRITERIA USED TO DETERMINE BUILDING OF FEDERAL BUILDINGS

Question No. 2,840—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. What criteria are used to determine whether a federal building will be constructed in a town or city?

2. Has consideration been given to the construction of a federal building in Spruce Grove or Leduc, Alberta?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. In general, the following criteria are used to determine whether a government of Canada building will be constructed in a town or city; (i) There must be a specific request by one or more federal departments or agencies for space in a particular locality or an economic advantage may have been identified in the regrouping of federal departments and agencies from existing accommodation, either Crown-owned or leased. Given a long-term growth projection for a community the eventual construction of Crown-owned facilities would generally be the optimum solution, although rented accommodation is often used in response to requirements for immediate additional accommodation. (ii) Within the context of economic viability a choice is made among various alternative solutions not restricted soley to Crown construction such as leasing, lease-purchase and build-to-lease. However, the economic factor is not necessarily the ultimate criteria as consideration must also be given to other objectives within the context of broader social, environmental, and other considerations.

2. The Department of Public Works has entered into a five-year lease, commencing November 1, 1974, for approximately 4,472 square feet of post office accommodation in Spruce Grove, Alberta. The department recognizes the rapid population growth in the area and a decision will be made well before 1979 on the alternative solutions available to satisfy the requirements of various federal government departments and agencies in Spruce Grove. A government of Canada building already exists in Leduc, Alberta, which is adequate in so far as current and projected federal accommodation requirements are concerned. At the present time the Department of Public Works is renovating the ground floor to meet post office requirements.

PRISON SECURITY

Question No. 2,843—Mr. Beatty:

Since the attempted prison breakout in British Columbia, has the government drawn up plans it intends to implement in the near future to increase security at all federal prison facilities in order to give some measure of protection to persons living near the prisons and, if so, what are such plans and on what date will they be implemented?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): The Canadian Penitentiary Service has, in 1974, undertaken the organization of a security branch and the review of its operational and preventive security procedures. Perimeter and internal physical security facilities were increased in all major institutions across Canada and these were provided with new weapons and electronic equipment to prevent escapes and serious incidents. Emergency plans were prepared in all these institutions in conjunction with the Department of National Defence and the police forces, and dynamic security training programs were initiated. The Canadian Penitentiary Service security programs are under constant review by the preventive security division so as to provide a maximum of security not only for the personnel of the institutions but also for the public in general. The report of the Farris commission of inquiry has now been received by the commissioner of penitentiaries and is under review. All recommendations will be considered carefully and appropriate action taken.

GRANTING OF BAIL

Question No. 2,844—Mr. Beatty:

1. For each year since 1970, what percentage of persons charged with offences for which bail could be granted (a) were granted bail (b) were granted bail but violated the terms of their bail?

2. How many persons granted bail received it after (a) being convicted of a previous criminal offense (b) five or more previous convictions?

3. What percentage of the total number of persons granted bail are represented by those described in Part 2?

4. Since the proclamation of the Bail Reform Act, has the government conducted or commissioned any studies of the functioning of the Act and, if so (a) on what dates were such studies conducted (b) by whom (c) what were their conclusions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. No such statistics are available. See answer to Question No. 2,802.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

4. Yes. (a), (b) and (c)—After the passing of the Bail Reform Act a survey was conducted by Statistics Canada covering a sample of 12,698 persons charged with federal offences during the period January 1 to August 31, 1973. The results were turned over to the Justice Department on July 31, 1974 and were then analysed by an independent agency which reported to the department in late November. They were then sent to the provincial authorities for comment. The sample showed that about 91 per cent of persons included in the sample were released either by the police or by a justice or judge at some point before the final disposition of the case. Of these, about 6 per cent were known to have failed to appear in court at some time. The findings showed considerable variations in the operation of the act in the different regions. A summary of the results of the survey is contained in Mr. Lang's press release of February 10, 1975. In addition, a small piece of research on the working of the Bail Reform Act in the Ottawa region is being carried out by Ottawa University. Results so far indicate that there are considerable variations from one district to another. The study is expected to be completed before the end of the year and will eventually be published.

WAGE POLICIES

Question No. 2,846—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Did the Honourable Daniel J. MacDonald, the Honourable Donald Jamieson and the Honourable Allan MacEachen endorse publicly a full review of existing wage policies applied to public servants in Atlantic Canada, particularly with respect to the issue of national wage parity in Halifax June 16, 1974?

2. What is the government's best estimate of the number of public servants paid regional rates in the Atlantic Provinces at the present time, and what was the figure on or about June 16, 1974?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Please refer to answer given to Question No. 1255. 2. The number of public servants paid regional rates in the Atlantic Provinces was 10,858 as at June 1974 and 11,766 as at June 1975.

FOOTNOTES: (1) The source information does not identify specifically those people being paid regional rates. These figures were arrived at by identifying only the groups and subgroups in which regional rates are being paid.

SOURCE: Master Output Support File, Personnel Applications Centre, Department of Supply and Services.

CHILD CARE EXPENSES

Question No. 2,852—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the government aware of the annual cost for child day care paid by residents of the Halifax-Dartmouth metropolitan area and, if so, what is it?

2. What is the level of tax deductibility for such expense?

3. Is the government considering changing such level and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare, National Revenue and Finance as follows: 1. The maximum cost to residents of the Halifax-Dartmouth metropolitan area for child day care in centres approved by the province for provincial subsidies is $1,725 annually per child. Actual charges, however, are determined by means of a sliding fee scale based on family income and family size with federal-provincial subsidies to cover the deficit between such charges and the above maximum costs.

2. This information is contained in the Tax Information Pamphlet "Child Care Expenses" which is available in all the District Taxation Offices and Information Canada.

3. This deduction from income for income tax purposes was introduced to allow for expenses incurred by working parents. Any changes made in the level of the deduction would have to be considered in the context of budgetary policy.

TRANSPORT—EXPENDITURES ON NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION CONTRACTS

Question No. 2,854—Mr. Elzinga:

1. By province or territory, how much money did the Department of Transport spend in contract amounts with the National Capital Region singled out in (a) 1968 (b) 1969 (c) 1970 (d) 1971 (e) 1972 (f) 1973 (g) 1974?

2. (a) What was the budget in contract amounts (b) what percentage of the budget was spent in each province or territory with the National Capital Region singled out in (i) 1968 (ii) 1969 (iii) 1970 (iv) 1971 (v) 1972 (vi) 1973 (vii) 1974?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council):

EXPORTS OF CANADIAN GOODS

Question No. 2,856—Mr. Forrestall:

Does CIDA have any estimate of the dollar-value of any and all charges paid directly or with CIDA originating funds to port authorities, stevedoring agencies, handlers, etc. in the US since 1972 and (a) if so, what is it (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) No. (b) Part of the answer to this question is similar to the reply provided to part 7 of Mr. Forrestall's question no. 1596 which reads as follows: "The information is not available". Thus in further response to this question the information is not available since it cannot be readily broken down into the components requested as previously indicated in the reply to part 5 of Mr. Forrestall's question no. 2,182.

EXPORTS OF CANADIAN GOODS

Question No. 2,857—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Did the Minister of External Affairs order CIDA to undertake studies to determine what percentage of its aid shipments are using US ports and to determine what dollar value of CIDA funds are being funneled into US port authorities, stevedoring companies, handlers, etc. and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

2. Is the Minister aware of any shipments by CIDA aid through US ports in the past three years which could have with equal ease and convenience been handled by a Canadian port such as Halifax-Dartmouth?

3. Would the Minister be prepared to cause an investigation to be made to determine if cases such as outlined in Part 2 have existed and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) No. (b) Such occurrences are exceptional.

2. No.

3. Not applicable.

[Mr. Sharp.]

EXPORTS OF CANADIAN GOODS

Question No. 2,858—Mr. Forrestall:

Does CIDA have any estimate of the percentage of its aid shipments which are moved through US ports and (a) if so, for the past two years what was it (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) The percentage estimated for the past two years is less than 1 per cent. (b) not applicable.

CIDA EXPORTS

Question No. 2,859—Mr. Forrestall:

Are statistics maintained on the value of Canadian goods and products exported by CIDA and (a) if so, for each year since its inception what were such values (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This question is the same as part 1 of Mr. Forrestall's question no. 1,596 and the answer as then is: Statistics on the value of Canadian goods and products exported by CIDA are not maintained and the analysis to obtain this information would be prohibitive in time, manpower and financial resources.

CIDA SHIPMENTS

Question No. 2,860—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With reference to the answer to Part 4 (a) of Question No. 1,596 under what specific circumstances does CIDA or their agents permit deviations from the policy as stated in the answer that "all shipments shall normally be made from Canadian Ports"?

2. Who is authorized to make such exceptions?

3. Under what statutory authority are such exceptions made?

4. How many such exceptions have been made in the past two years?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (1) The specific circumstances under which deviations have been permitted from the policy as stated are as follows: (a) In 1974, 15,000 metric tons of relief food aid was shipped under CIDA's bilateral grant aid authority to alleviate a sorghum shortage. By arranging the shipment from Houston, Northern Sales (1963) Limited, Winnipeg, saved CIDA the cost of railway transport which would otherwise have been charged for shipment from the U.S. to a Canadian port. (b) In 1975, two swathers urgently required for the harvest were shipped to Peru under CIDA's bilateral grant aid authority. Panelpina World Transport Limited, Montreal, arranged the land transportation to catch the shipment out of Long Beach for delivery by February. (c) In 1973, 56 metric tons of milk powder was produced for the World Food Program under CIDA's multilateral grant aid authority. The shipment was arranged in response to the Food and Agricultural Organization's priorities and as no vessels were available at that time in Canadian ports it was shipped out of Tampa. (d) Also under special circumstances specific components and items ordered by developing countries or their designate agents from Canadian suppliers under CIDA's loan and line of credit purchase authority have been shipped from U.S. ports to facilitate direct procurement.

(2) Program managers.

(3) Government contract regulations.

(4) Those indicated in part 1.

CIDA SHIPMENTS

Question No. 2,861—Mr. Forrestall:

Do CIDA and/or its agents have any procedures which permit them to monitor the policy enunciated in the answer to Part 4 (a) of Question No. 1,596 that "all shipments shall normally be made from Canadian ports" and (a) if so, what are such procedures (b) if not, with what degree of certainty can such a policy be enunciated?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) Yes, CCC standard procurement procedures call for tenders quoting delivery to a Canadian port and all tenders are reviewed by CIDA. (b) not applicable.

CIDA SHIPMENTS

Question No. 2,862—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Did CIDA request the Department of Supply and Services and/or the Canadian Commercial Corporation to give consideration to making further use of Canadian ports in exporting CIDA aid shipments and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

2. Has the Minister of External Affairs reviewed this situation and, if so, does he agree and accept it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (1) No, since the guidelines for arranging shipments in pursuance of the policy quoted in part in response to part 4 of Mr. Forrestall's question No. 2183 dated March 26, 1975 were developed jointly by CIDA and CCC in consultation with other government departments and the Canadian Export Association.

(2) The minister has reviewed this situation and accepts that it is consistent with the government policy referred to and quoted in part in response to part 5 of Mr. Forrestall's question No. 2183 dated March 26, 1975.

DEPUTY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Question No. 2,875—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

What is the total number and name of each agency, office or individual with any responsibility for security or intelligence matters which reports to Mr. Roger Tassé (a) in his capacity as Deputy Solicitor General (b) in any other capacity?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Canadian Penitentiary Service, National Parole Board and Service, Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Ministry Secretariat: Two, Mr. Robin P. Bourne. Nil. Assistant Deputy Minister, Police and Security; Mr. Walter Uhryniw, Security Officer. (a) Both report to Mr. Roger Tassé in his capacity as Deputy Solicitor General. (b) Not applicable.

FEDERAL REGULATORY AGENCIES

Question No. 2,876—Mr. Beatty:

What are the names of all federal regulatory agencies and, in each case (a) what is its present budget (b) what is its staff complement (c) for what statute(s) does it draw its authority (d) what are its functions (e) on what date was it first established (f) how has its staff complement and budget changed since its creation?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): The information requested on federal regulatory agencies is as follows: 1. Canadian Radio-Television Commission (a) $9,746,000. (b) 446 man-years. (c) Part II of the Broadcasting Act. (d) To regulate and supervise all aspects of the Canadian broadcasting system. (e) April 1, 1968. (f) First full year of operations appeared in the 1968-69 Main Estimates with a budget of $1,714,000 and 164 man-years, which is an increase of $8,032,000 and 282 man-years in seven years.

2. Atomic Energy Control Board (a) $11,167,000 ($2,112,000 operating, $9,055,000 grants). (b) 83 man-years. (c) Atomic Energy Control Act. (d) The control and supervision of the development, application and use of atomic energy. (e) Incorporated February 1952 under the Companies Act. (f) First full year of operation appeared in the 1953-54 Main Estimates with a budget of $359,240 ($59,240 operating, $300,000 grants) and 10 man-years which is an increase of $10,807,760 ($2,052,760 operating, $8,755,000 grants) and 73 man-years in 22 years.

3. National Energy Board. (a) $7,292,000. (b) 324 man-years. (c) National Energy Board Act. (d) To enquire into, hear and determine any matter concerning the producing, selling, buying, transmitting, exporting, importing or otherwise of hydrocarbons or power (e) November 1, 1959. (f) First full year of operation appeared in the 1960-61 Main Estimates with a budget of $496,260 and 57 man-years which is an increase of $6,795,740 and 267 man-years in 15 years.

4. Foreign Investment Review Agency, (a) $3,512,500. (b) 159 man-years. (c) Foreign Investment Review Act. (d) To review and assess the acquisition of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new business in Canada by certain persons. (e) Partially proclaimed April 9, 1974; fully proclaimed July 17, 1975 (f) First full year of operation appeared in the 1975-76 Main Estimates with budget shown in (a) and (b) above; therefore there has been no change.

5. Canada Labour Relations Board, (a) $2,371,000. (b) 99 man-years. (c) Part V of the Canada Labour Code Act. (d) The exercise of regulatory powers relating to bargaining rights; declaration of single employer and a single bargaining agent; the investigation, conciliation and disposal of complaints relating to unfair labour practices; the disposal of complaints relating to technological changes affecting a number of employees; and, the declaration of unlawful strikes or lockouts (e) Proclaimed March 1, 1973. (f) First full year of operation appeared in the 1974-75 Main Estimates with a budget of $1,671,000 and 95 man-years which is an increase of $700,000 and 4 man-years in one year.

6. Public Service Staff Relations Board (a) $3,547,000. (b) 141 man-years. (c) Part I of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. (d) To administer the Act and in particular the employer- employee relations in the Public Service of Canada. (e) March 13, 1967. (f) First full year of operation appeared in the 1967-68 Main Estimates with a budget of $998,000 and 75 man-years, which is an increase of $2,549,000 and 66 man-years in eight years.

7. Canadian Transport Commission (a) $292,040,000 ($20,124,000 operating, $271,916,000 payments). (b) 901 man-years. (c) Part I of the National Transportation Act. (d) To promote the co-ordination and harmonization of the operations of all carriers engaged in transport by railways, water, aircraft, extra-provincial motor vehicle transport and commodity pipelines through effective economic regulations (e) September 19, 1967. (f) First full year of operation appeared in the 1968-69 Main Estimates with a budget of $129,634,200 ($4,600,900 operating, $125,033,300 payments) and 384 man-years which is an increase of $162,405,800 ($15,523,100 operating, $146,882,700 payments) in seven years.

LAND ASSEMBLY UNDER NHA, 1960-75

Question No. 2,880—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many acres of land have been assembled with funds granted or lent under the provisions of the National Housing Act in each of the years 1960 to 1974 and in 1975 to date?

2. Of these, how many acres were used for (a) public housing (b) co-operative or non-profit housing (c) rental housing (d) privately owned housing?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. See Table 1 attached.

2. Data on the disposition of land, in terms of its end use, assembled and serviced under the NHA, are not available.

USE OF EXPRESSION "FÊTE DU CANADA"

Question No. 2,883—Mr. Herbert:

Does the use of the expression Fête du Canada in the magazine Canada 1975 published by Statistics Canada indicate government approval of the phrase to designate the Canadian holiday celebrated on July 1?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Statistics Canada reports that the designation "Fête du Canada" does not appear as such in "Canada 1975". The caption containing the phrase (using a lower case "f") applied to a celebration in honour of Canada's birthday on July 1st. The English version of the caption employed the phrase "celebrating July 1, Dominion Day".

AGRICULTURAL SERVICES CENTRES AGREEMENT

Question No. 2,886—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

What has been the cost to date of the Agricultural Services Centres Agreement with Saskatchewan and for what projects?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: The cost to the federal government of the Agricultural Services Centres Program for Saskatchewan, including loans, from its inception to June 30, 1975, is $4,457,031.36. The program provides for improvement of water supply and waste disposal facilities, with these projects being undertaken at the centres listed below. Assiniboia, $21,532.85; Biggar, $74,111.45; Canora, $57,890.77; Esterhazy, $655,723.28; Estevan, $123,278.95; Hudson Bay, $308,882.05; Humbolt, $50,615.11; Kamsack, $5,725.80; Kindersley, $10,899.22; Lloydminster, $529,165.90; Maple Creek, $211,271.01; Melfort, $10,000.00; Melville, $11,307.28; Moose Jaw, $644,188.88; Moosomin, $18,446.92; Nipawin, $19,187.26; North Battleford, $175,428.59; Prince Albert, $20,021.38; Rosetown, $109,882.48; Shaunavon, $75,794.23; Swift Current, $508,871.78; Tisdale, $10,000.00; Unity, $6,352.39, Weyburn, $697,615.49; Wynyard, $93,838.29; Yorkton, $8,000.00; Saskatchewan Summary, $4,457,031.36.

CANADA DAY

Question No. 2,887—Mr. Herbert:

Does the use made by CBC of the title "Canada Day" in its programming on July 1 indicate general public acceptance of this terminology and has the government noted this indication of national approval?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that "Canada Day" was not used by the CBC as a description of the public holiday itself but as a program title for a particular production celebrating the anniversary of Confederation. On the French network of the CBC, the same program was titled "Fête du Canada". The CBC is not aware of any significant public reaction to the program title in English. The government feels that the majority of Canadians accept the terminology Canada Day/Fête du Canada.

DREE ADVERTISING

Question No. 2,888—Mr. Brisco:

Does DREE advertise in trade journals and magazines with reference to efforts to attract business and industry to areas receiving support under the DREE programme and, if so, where do responses go that are received from such ads?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: No such advertising was carried out in 1974-75, nor to date in 1975-76.

TRAIL POST OFFICE

Question No. 2,890—Mr. Brisco:

1. On what date was the unloading ramp for the Post Office in Trail installed?

2. How much was the cost of the (a) installation (b) loading and unloading ramp?

3. How often is the facility used by the Trail Post Office?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Post Office as follows: 1. December 6, 1974.

2. (a) $4,158.00. (b) Improvements to the loading and unloading ramp in the form of a scissors lift: $6,442.00.

3. The facility is not used at present, however it has been installed in readiness for handling inter-city containers.

STUDIES ON SUBJECT OF SUBLIMINAL ADVERTISING

Question No. 2,894—Mr. Beatty:

Did the government conduct or finance any studies on the subject of subliminal advertising in either the electronic or print media and, if so (a) by whom were they conducted (b) what were their conclusions (c) what was the nature of the work done (d) on what date were they completed (e) what was their cost (f) what action has resulted from their recommendations (g) from whom can copies be obtained?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned: no. In so far as the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is concerned: The Canadian Radio-Television Commission did not commission studies on subliminal advertising. However, in preparation for a public hearing on the subject, held on March 11th, 1975, an independent legal opinion and study of the status of subliminal advertising in other countries was obtained. The Research Branch of the Commission conducted a review of all existing studies on subliminal advertising. Both these documents were considered, in addition to the briefs submitted prior to the public hearing. These latter public representations are available from the Public Hearing Section of the CRTC Licensing Branch. As a result of the public hearing, the commission announced the following amendments to the Television Broadcasting Regulations on June 27, 1975: 1. The Television Broadcasting Regulations are amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 9 thereof, the following section: "9.1 (1) No station or network operator shall knowingly broadcast any advertising material that makes use of any subliminal device. (2) In subsection (1), "subliminal device" means a technical device that is used to convey or attempt to convey a message to a person by means of images or sounds of very brief duration or by any other means without that person being aware that such a device is being used or being aware of the substance of the message being conveyed or attempted to be conveyed."

Order Paper Questions

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 2,896—Mr. Herbert:

1. Is the primary distribution of all publications the responsibility of the author department?

2. Is there any centralized control of such activity?

3. Does Information Canada only list publications that have been received from the author departments?

4. If a publication has not been previously forwarded to Information Canada by the author department by what means can a Member of Parliament become aware of its existence before it is out of date?

5. Do all government publications bear an issue date?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): In so far as Information Canada is concerned, the answers are as follows: 1. Yes, except for distribution to full-depository and selective-depository libraries, as described in article 67 of the Policy and Guide on Canadian Government Publications, which is the duty of Information Canada. Information Canada has the responsibility of being the main source for the distribution of priced publications.

2. No.

3. All priced publications appear in the Daily Checklist, as do publications received from the author departments.

4. Not applicable.

5. Yes.

GASOLINE AND DIESEL FUEL

Question No. 2,897—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is 29 percent of the gasoline and 40.6 percent of the diesel fuel sold each year in the Province of Saskatchewan used by farmers in the production of food and, if so, what efforts are being made by the government to develop alternatives to petroleum fuels for other prime movers (tractors) which can operate on other energy sources?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: About 29 percent of the gasoline and 40 percent of the diesel fuel sold each year in Saskatchewan are used by farmers. It is highly probable that gasoline and diesel oil will be the principal fuels for prime movers for a number of years into the future. While the use of alternative sources of energy for motor vehicles is not expected for many years, government research is directed to the most efficient application of energy in all of its uses and to conserving petroleum for its most important applications, including transportation.

REGIONAL EMPLOYMENT EFFECTS OF JUNE 1975 BUDGET

Question No. 2,898—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Does the government have any estimate of the number of persons presently employed in Atlantic Canada who will lose their jobs as a result of the measures contained in the budget of June 23, 1975 and, if so, what is the figure for (a) Atlantic Canada (b) Nova Scotia?

2. Does the government have any estimate of the number of jobs which otherwise would have been created but which will be foregone in Atlantic Canada as a result of the budget of June 23, 1975 and, if so, what is the estimate for (a) Atlantic Canada (b) Nova Scotia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. and 2. It is estimated that, at the national level, the net impact of the budgetary measures will be a small increase in employment; the strong employment effects of the direct employment programs are a key factor in this result. While no detailed estimates have been made of the net impact on employment by region or province, it would be reasonable to expect the net increase in employment to be relatively larger is areas, such as Nova Scotia and the Atlantic provinces in general, which benefit particularly from the direct employment program. The overall fiscal stance resulting from the June budget remains stimulative, i.e. the shift to stimulus introduced by the November 1974 budget is maintained. Thus employment in all regions of the country is being sustained by the overall fiscal stance; further support to levels of employment and real income in Canada east of the Ottawa valley is provided by the continued significant subsidy on imported petroleum.

EFFECT OF $3.4 MILLION CUTBACK IN EXPENDITURES ON BEDFORD INSTITUTE OF OCEANOGRAPHY

Question No. 2,899—Mr. Forrestall:

What effect, if any, will the $3.4 million cutback in expenditures on additional resources for fleet operations by the Department of the Environment have on the Bedford Institute of Oceanography?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Curtailment of the department's fleet operations and the programs they support.

EFFECT ON SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS IN NOVA SCOTIA BY $10 MILLION CUTBACK

Question No. 2,900—Mr. Forrestall:

What projected small craft harbours in Nova Scotia will be affected by the $10 million cutback in government expenditures?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Canso, Cape St. Mary's, Chester Basin, Chester Ironbound, Cheticamp Point, Dingwall, Gnaff Beach, Hampton, Meat Cove, Meteghan, New Haven, Pinkneg's Point, Point Aconi, Smelt Brook, Vogler's Cover, West Head.

NOVA SCOTIAN PROJECTS AFFECTED BY $10 MILLION CUTBACK BY DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Question No. 2,903—Mr. Forrestall:

What projected Nova Scotian projects will be affected by the $10 million cutback in funding of capital expenditures by the Department of Public Works?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): At the present time we do not anticipate that any projected Nova Scotian projects will be affected by the $10 million cutback in funding of capital expenditures by the Department of Public Works.

NOVA SCOTIAN INTERESTS AFFECTED BY $135 MILLION CUTBACK IN FUNDING FOR FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

Question No. 2,904—Mr. Forrestall:

What projected funding for Nova Scotian interests will be affected by the $135 million cutback in funding for the Federal Business Development Bank?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): None. As a result of the deferral of the commencement of operations of the Federal Business Development Bank, and until it does commence operations, the Industrial Development Bank will continue to operate under its act of incorporation, meeting its requirements for funding from loan repayments, the sale of debentures to the Bank of Canada and the issue of share capital which under the Industrial Development Bank Act is subscribed by the Bank of Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENSE—EFFECTS OF CUTBACK IN CAPITAL EXPENDITURES ON MARITIME COMMAND

Question No. 2,905—Mr. Forrestall:

In what way will Maritime Command be affected by the $10 million cutback in capital expenditures by the Department of National Defence?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No capital expenditure projects have been cancelled in Maritime Command. However, some current savings in capital expenditure have been achieved by deferring two projects on the East Coast and one project on the West Coast. These are: (a) the consolidation of heavy electrical repair facilities of the ship repair unit at Halifax into one building; (b) the improvement of the Sonar capability of the East Coast destroyers; and (c) the modification of the bridge on each of the Patrol Frigates on the West Coast.

NEWFOUNDLAND—REGISTRATIONS AT MANPOWER CENTRES

Question No. 2,912—Mr. Marshall:

1. How many clients were registered at the Canada Manpower Centres in (a) Corner Brook (b) Gander (c) St. John's (d) Stephenville (e) Labrador (f) Grand Falls (g) Happy Valley during the first quarter of 1975?

2. Of the clients registered in Corner Brook, Stephenville and St. Anthony during the first quarter of 1975, how many were between 14 and 25 years of age?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The following are the numbers of clients registered as being without employment at month end for each month of the first quarter 1975.

	January	February	March
(a) Corner Brook	8,074	8,252	8,325
(b) Gander	3,251	2,905	4,475
(c) St. John's	24,006	24,879	25,803
(d) Stephenville	3,872	4,172	4,679
(e) Labrador City	420	554	508
(f) Grand Falls	5,640	5,762	4,298
(g) Happy Valley	351	487	762

2. During March, of the 8,325 clients registered in Corner Brook (includes St. Anthony) 3,263 were under 25 years of age and of the 4,679 registered in Stephenville 2,259 were below the age of 25.

PUBLIC WORKS—PURCHASE OF FINE ARTS

Question No. 2,913—Mr. Ellis:

Since September 1972, what art has the Fine Arts Programme of the Department of Public Works commissioned, awarded or bought for all government buildings across Canada?

EXPORT OF CANADIAN GOODS

Question No. 2,914—Mr. Forrestall:

1. On what date did the government bring to the attention of CIDA officials Question No. 1,596 and on what date did CIDA provide a reply?

2. What is the time period foreseen in the reply to Part 1 of Question No. 1,596 to complete the study referred to in the answer?

3. Is the Minister of External Affairs satisfied with this decision and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (1) On February 14, 1975 and June 20, 1975.

(2) No time period can be foreseen. Comparative statistics of Canadian Official Development Assistance and other official flows have been maintained by agreement with the Development Assistance Committee of the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development, and are reported in the Annual Aid Review. Also, financial records as required for the management control of Canada's development assistance program, and by other control agencies, are maintained in accordance with the Financial Administration Act. Thus, goods and products exported under this program are not quantified statistically since there is an infinite number of things that can be classified in this manner and which can be selected according to the socio-economic basis of inquiry.

(3) Yes, as explained in part 2 of this answer.

PUBLIC WORKS—ERECTION OF BUILDING IN WATER STREET AREA, SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Question No. 2,915—Mr. Landers:

In regard to the new Public Works building planned for the Water Street area of Saint John, New Brunswick (a) what is the present status of the project (b) where does it stand on the priority list in relation to other Public Works buildings in the Maritime Provinces?

[Mr. Drury.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. The proposed new Government of Canada Building planned for Saint John, New Brunswick is at this time in the planning stage with completion not expected before 1980. The Department of Public Works is examining at this time the possible re-use, re-development or disposal of the existing Post Office building on Prince William Street. This building will be vacated by Canada Post Office in December, 1975 following completion of the new Post Office terminal building on Rothesay Avenue. Because of the tentative schedule for the new Government of Canada Building we expect to lease space from the private sector to meet government department client requirements for the next five years.

2. While the proposed new building does not have a priority rating at this time in relation to other planned Government of Canada Buildings in the Maritime provinces, it is planned to continue with the necessary studies for a completion date by 1980.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT "AN INTERIM REPORT ON FREIGHT TRANSPORTATION IN CANADA"

Question No. 2,918—Mr. Forrestall:

With reference to each port listed in exhibit 24 in the Department of Transport paper "An Interim Report on Freight Transportation in Canada" (a) what specific select commodities were used to obtain the 1974 volume handled figures (b) what was the source for each such figure?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): (a) The specific select commodity groups included were iron ore, coal, grain, general cargo (including containers) and forest products. (b) The first column of Exhibit 24 would more properly be headed "Estimated Volume Loaded 1971". The sources for the grain, iron ore, coal, forest products and general cargo commodity groups were Appendices B-1, B-2, B-3, B-5 and B-9 respectively of the January 22nd, 1975 draft Forecast Transportation Flows and Capacity Requirements 1990 prepared by the Transportation Development Agency. The original sources for the commodity data are the Shipping Report Part IV, 1971, Statistics Canada Catalogue No. 54-206 and the Shipping Report Part V, 1971, Statistics Canada Catalogue No. 54-207. However, a number of aggregations and estimates were made using these figures. These qualifications are listed on the following page: Appendix B-1—All Grains: All data are from Statistics Canada 54-207 but flows to Canadian ports are aggregated with the nearest large port so that, for example, Thunder Bay-Toronto flows include flows to Kingston, Collingwood, etc. Appendix B-2—Iron Ore: Vancouver and certain Sept Iles iron ore data were provided by the Canadian Transport Commission Systems Analysis branch. Vancouver includes Tasu (British Columbia) etc. Toronto designates the port of Picton and Sudbury designates Depot Harbour and Little Current. All data except Vancouver and Sept Iles originate from Statistics Canada 54-207. Appendix B-3—Coal: All data are from SC 54-207. Aggregation again is used with, for example, Toronto being used as a designation for the Southeastern Ontario ports, including most importantly Port Credit. Appendix B-5—Forest Products: Cargo loaded figures were estimated by adding the newsprint and pulpwood figures given in Statistics Canada 54-207 and multiplying by 10/7. Cargo imported figures came from direct aggregation of forest products in Statistics Canada 54-206. Appendix B-9—All Other Commodities: Data are obtained by subtracting figures in B-1 through B-8 from Statistics Canada 54-206 numbers for the major ports. Clearly this is a rough estimate since the tables B-1 to B-8 have ports representing large areas, but 54-206 does not. In compiling the first column of Exhibit 24 the figures in table B-9, All Other Commodities, were used as a proxy for general cargo. In fact, the general cargo figures that were included, by mistake inconsistently included cargo loaded, and cargo unloaded from certain origins. In addition, Exhibit 24 does not include revisions and corrections made in the final version of the TDA report, Forecast Freight Transportation Flows and Capacity Deficiencies 1990, dated April 1975. Finally, some small differences remain between the TDA Appendix B and the Shipping Report which are a result of approximations or minor inaccuracies.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—COST OF FACILITIES MENTIONED IN PAPER

Question No. 2,919—Mr. Forrestall:

With reference to exhibit 24 in the Department of Transport paper "An Interim Report on Freight Transportation in Canada" and the figures mentioned therein for approximate investment required to achieve 1390 capacity (a) what specific port facilities were contemplated (b) what is the cost for each such facility for the ports of (i) Toronto (ii) Montreal (iii) Quebec City (iv) Saint John (v) Halifax?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): (a) No specific port facilities were contemplated. (b) Approximate investments required to provide 1,990 capacity at Toronto, Montreal, Quebec City, Saint John and Halifax are broken down into requirements for different commodity groups in the following way:

Port	Iron Ore	Coal	Grain	General Cargo*	Forest Products	Total
			($ Million)
Toronto	3.0	25.0	–	0.5	–	28.5
Montreal	–	–	5.0	(21.0)		26.0

NITROGEN FERTILIZER

Question No. 2,922—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Has it been estimated that by 1980 there will be a demand for 2,257,000 tons of nitrogen fertilizer for the production of food in Canada requiring 103.8 billion cubic feet of natural gas and, if so, what steps is the government taking to ensure that farmers have an adequate supply at prices which will enable them to operate?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. A number of estimates have been made and the results vary depending on the assumptions used. Agriculture Canada estimates that Canadian farm use of nitrogen for fertilizer in 1980 will be in the range of 750,000 to 900,000 short tons. In terms of product as used by farmers the tonnage equivalent would be in the range of 1,875,000 to 2,225,000 tons. The natural gas required to produce the above amounts of nitrogen would be in the range of 30 to 36 billion cubic feet. The present and planned nitrogen and fertilizer production capacity in Canada is more than adequate to meet the expected demand in 1980 and the years following.

CTS—AIR TRAVEL ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 2,923—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,697 concerning the rules governing entitlement through the Canadian Government Central Travel Service of public servants to first class air travel accommodation within or without Canada, for each year 1973, 1974 and to July 1, 1975 what are the statistics respecting (a) the total number of air flights taken (b) the number of flights taken on first class accommodation (c) the total dollar value of all such flights (d) the total dollar value of first class accommodation taken?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services):

	1973	1974	1975 to end June
(a) total number of air flights taken	104,100	153,795	94,146
(b) total number of flights taken on first class accommodation	see note below
(c) total dollar value of all flights	$16,099,290	$24,847,415	$16,037,950
(d) total dollar value of first class flight accommodation taken	see note below

Order Paper Questions

NOTE: Individual departments have the responsibility for approving travel at a higher standard of accommodation in accordance with the reasons outlined in reply to question 2,697, Hansard, July 8, 1975, page 7352. Statistical records of individual cases generally are not maintained. The Central Travel Service does not maintain distinctive records of first class flights taken.

ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES FOR PROPOSED RAILWAY RIGHT BETWEEN PRINCE RUPERT AND GROUNDHOG, B.C.

Question No. 2,924—Mr. Brisco:

Were any environmental studies conducted by the government or with its assistance for the proposed railway right of way between Prince Rupert and Groundhog, British Columbia and, if so, where can a report of such studies be obtained?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Ministry of Transport for Canada and the Ministry of Lands, Forests and Water Resources for the Province of British Columbia requested Canadian National to have environmental studies made in the territory of the proposed Meziadin Branch Line. A report of those studies will be submitted later this year.

PERMISSION TO IMMIGRANTS TO IMPORT HAND GUNS

Question No. 2,925—Mr. Brisco:

Are immigrants permitted to import hand guns as part of their personal possessions and, if so, what controls are employed by Customs and/or RCMP?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned: Immigrants may import hand guns as part of their personal effects but such guns are released to the importer only upon production to Customs of Criminal Code Permit C-301. It is the responsibility of the importer to make applications for this permit to the local police authorities where he intends to reside. This permit is merely an authority to transport a hand gun from the Customs clearing point to the police station where the registrar of firearms registers it and issues another appropriate Criminal Code Permit.

CANADIAN POLICE INFORMATION CENTRE COMPUTER

Question No. 2,926—Mr. Beatty:

1. With respect to the Canadian Police Information Centre computer (a) on what date were criminal record synopses first put on line to all terminals (b) how many synopses are currently available (c) how many are expected to be added each month (d) what sort of information about an individual is kept in his synopses?

2. Are individuals whose records are placed in CPIC's data bank notified of such action and, if so, what procedures are available to them to challenge the validity of their synopses?

[Mr. Goyer.]

3. Does the government intend to place vehicle registrations in CPIC's data bank?

4. Does CPIC have any plans to further expand the categories of data in its data bank and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): By the Ministry of the Solicitor General: (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) 1. (a) July 2, 1975 (b) 1,027,718 (c) 3,500 (d) Individual's name, physical description, current status (free, on parole, incarcerated), date of first and last convictions, types of offence convictions, Fingerprint Section Number and classification.

2. No.

3. Matter presently being studied.

4. No.

CROSS-LANDING OF GRAIN

Question No. 2,927—Mr. Huntington:

1. For each of the past two crop years what was the tonnage and cost effect of cross-hauling grain to meet grain order requirements from (a) Alberta to Thunder Bay (b) Manitoba and Eastern Saskatchewan to Vancouver and Prince Rupert?

2. What were the ton-miles involved?

3. What was the cost of such cross-haul to the (a) farmer (b) railroads (c) government by reason of subsidy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) Additional rail freight paid on grain shipped by the Canadian Wheat Board to Thunder Bay from country points in the Vancouver shipping region

	1972-73 Pool Account	1973-74 Pool Account
Wheat	$ 584,556	$ 10,979
Oats	102,759	133,605
Barley	183,382	306,468
Total	$ 870,697	$ 451,052

(b) Additional rail freight paid on grain shipped by the Canadian Wheat Board to Pacific Coast ports from country points in the Thunder Bay shipping region

	1972-73 Pool Account	1973-74 Pool Account
Wheat	$1,912,434	$1,674,042
Oats	—	—
Barley	5,159	42,241
Total	$1,917,593	$1,716,283

2. The cost in terms of manpower and time to provide an answer to this part of the question is prohibitive. It would be necessary for the Canadian Wheat Board to analyze shipping documents pertaining to more than 600,000 car shipments. It is estimated by the Board that in excess of 5,000 man-hours would be required to complete this analysis.

3. (a) The additional rail freight costs paid by the Canadian Wheat Board, as outlined in part 1 (a) and (b) of this reply, are charges to the pool accounts and accordingly are borne by the grain producer. (b) and (c) Not known by the Canadian Wheat Board.

CHARTERS BY CANADIAN NATIONAL FOR GULF SERVICE, SOUTH COAST SERVICE AND LABRADOR SERVICE

Question No. 2,929—Mr. McGrath:

1. What are the names of all charters by Canadian National for the (a) Gulf service (Cabot Strait) (b) South Coast service (c) Labrador service?

2. Were tenders called for each charter?

3. Was the contract, in each case, awarded to the lowest bidder?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. The following vessels are on charter by Canadian National Railways for service in East Coast Marine and Ferry Services. (a) Gulf: M.V. Marine Atlantica M.V. Marine Nautica M.V. Marine Cruiser M.V. Marine Seatrader. (b) Coastal: South Coast: M.V. Sarah; M.V. Clyde: M.V. Dunure; M.V. Marine Trader; *M.V. Marine Sprinter *M.V. Marine Runner M.V. Percy M. Crosbie. North Coast: M.V. Kloster; M.V. Topsail Star; M.V. Marine Voyager; M.V. Mount Blair; M.V. Sandy Point; M.V. Stephenville; M.V. Newfoundland Coast; M.V. Marine Packer.

*Passenger Vessels

2. The gulf vessels were obtained on the world market through ship's brokers. Offers were requested and the charters resulted from negotiations on the offers received. Canadian National Railways advise that coastal vessels are obtained through tender calls.

3. Lowest offers are accepted subject to vessels meeting operational requirements of the service. A rating scale is developed for each vessel based on their various capabilities and past performance. The vessels are then selected on their achievement on the scale. This method of chartering for coastal vessels was approved by the Newfoundland Vessel Owners' Association.

INTERCEPTION OF MAIL BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Question No. 2,930—Mr. Beatty:

1. By year, since 1968, how many requests have been made by American authorities for the interception of mail coming from or going to the United States?

2. In each case (a) by whom was the request made (b) what was the response of the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. The Post Office Department has not received any such requests.

2. (a) Not applicable (b) Not applicable.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER IMMIGRATION ACT, 1967-74

Question No. 2,931—Mr. Friesen:

1. How many travel agencies in (a) Vancouver (b) Toronto have been prosecuted for aiding and abetting persons to enter Canada with false documentation under the Immigration Act for each year 1967 to 1974?

2. In each case (a) how many convictions were obtained (b) what penalties were assessed?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1 and 2. To provide an accurate response to this question would require a manual examination of departmental records and additional staff to do it. Immigration officials however, cannot recollect any travel agencies in Vancouver or Toronto that have been prosecuted for the reasons stated in the question between 1967 and 1974.

REPAIRS TO FISHING PORT FACILITIES AT GRAHAM'S POND, P.E.I.

Question No. 2,932—Mr. MacLean:

Has the Department of Public Works made repairs to the damage caused by the storm of September 20, 1974, to the fishing port facilities at Graham's Pond, PEI and, if so (a) what was the cost involved (b) what was the nature and extent of the repairs and were they completed before the opening of the lobster fishing season of 1975 (c) who were the contractors or individuals employed and how much was paid to each?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): The department was not aware of damage caused by any storm of September 20, 1974 at Graham's Pond. The Department has made partial repairs to the damage caused by the storm of October 20, 1974. (a) Cost involved to date—$13,229.65. (b) and (c) Cleanup of debris from landings—performed by Andrew Mackenzie—Cost $990.00. Deck repairs to south breakwater—performed by William MacEwen—Cost $3,302.20. Crane dredging to remove debris and sand from inner run—performed by Joseph Chaisson—Cost $4,773.45. The above work was completed last fall. Further crane dredging to remove debris and sand from outer run performed prior to lobster season this spring by Joseph Chaisson—Cost $4,164.00. Tenders closed on July 23, 1975 for repairs to outer breakwaters and shore protection. This will complete the repairs.

MATSQUI INSTITUTION

Question No. 2,933—Mr. Patterson:

1. How many day passes were issued to inmates of Matsqui Institution from January 1 to June 30, 1975?

2. How many different individuals were recipients of day passes during the same period?

3. How many violations of such passes were registered during the same period?

4. How many different individuals were involved in such violations?

5. Were any day passes issued to inmates of the Matsqui Medical Centre in the same period and, if so, how many?

6. How many offenders incarcerated in Matsqui Institution since January 1974 are illegally at large?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General):

Canadian Penitentiary Service	National Parole Board and Service
"day passes" means permits covering temporary leave of absence	"day passes" means certificates of day parole
1. 652	1. 84
2. 312	2. 82

Order Paper Questions

POST OFFICE—WHITE ROCK, B.C.

Question No. 2,934—Mr. Friesen:

1. Has the government any immediate plans to build a post office in White Rock, British Columbia and, if so, on what date will tenders be called?

2. If a building is to be rented (a) what date has the government given to the landlord for possession (b) what is the negotiated lease price?

3. Where will the post office be located?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned: 1. The government has no immediate plans to erect a new Post Office building in White Rock, British Columbia.

2. It is intended to satisfy the Post Office requirement on a rental basis, however no suitable facility has yet been identifid and therefore no possession date determined or lease price negotiated.

3. The Post Office will be located in White Rock, British Columbia, at a location which is acceptable to Canada Post Office.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES CONTRACT NO. 11ST T8200-4-4523 (OST5-0002)

Question No. 2,936—Mr. Beatty:

With reference to Supply and Services contract No. 11ST T8200-4-4523 (OST5-0002) described as "theoretical and experimental development programme in connection with the dynamic interaction between a railway train and its track" which will cost the taxpayers $421,000 (a) what is the purpose of the project (b) were tenders called and, if so (i) who were the other bidders (ii) what were their bids (c) on what date is the project scheduled to be completed?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) Purpose of the project is to obtain a better understanding of the interaction between a moving train and its stationary track with the objective of improving operations and the safety of users. (b) Tenders were not called because the requirement is a continuation of a Ministry of Transport—Canadian National Railways shared cost research programme. (c) The work under the present contract is scheduled to be completed by March 31, 1976.

NOTE: The contract file number for the work described in the question is 14ST-T8200-4-4514 rather than the number quoted in the question.

INTERCEPTION OF MAIL IN THE UNITED STATES

Question No. 2,937—Mr. Beatty:

1. By year since 1968, how many requests have been made to American authorities by the government for the interception of mail in the United States?

2. In each case (a) what was the reason for the request (b) by whom was it made (c) what was the American response?

[Mr. Allmand.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. The Post Office Department has not made any such requests.

2. (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable.

TAX CREDIT FOR REFINERS OF USED CRANKCASE AND INDUSTRIAL OIL

Question No. 2,938—Mr. Schellenberger:

Has the government considered introducing a tax credit for re-refiners of used crankcase and industrial oil as an incentive in order that millions of gallons of such oil may not be lost?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The government has not considered a special tax credit for refiners of used crankcase and industrial oil. However, machinery and equipment used to process such oil is eligible for the two-year fast write-off as well as the 5 per cent investment tax credit thereby providing incentive to stimulate investment in such activities. It is felt that further tax incentives to encourage the recycling of such products would have a negligible effect on additional investment.

AIR CANADA—WESTERN CANADA FLIGHTS TO ENGLAND

Question No. 2,944—Mr. Huntington:

1. Does Air Canada service Western Canada with flights direct to England and, if not, for what reason?

2. Does Air Canada have charter flights out of Western Canada to Hawaii, Mexico or the Caribbean and, if not, for what reason?

3. Is an Air Canada pilot living in Vancouver paid $17,000 per annum less than a pilot with the same seniority and qualifications living in Montreal and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Yes, with flights from Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary and Winnipeg.

2. The availability of Air Canada aircraft for charter purposes has been rather limited and as a result, the airline's priority has been to serve its own online route sectors first. The airline does not operate scheduled, direct services from western Canada to Hawaii, Mexico and the Caribbean and these areas are considered off line points. Nevertheless, a charter operation from western Canada to Hawaii is being conducted beginning this year and there are provisional plans to include other areas beginning next year.

3. Air Canada pilots are paid according to a formula based on their status as Captain, First Officer or Second Officer. Assuming they are flying the same type of aircraft, pilots with the same seniority, status and qualifications are paid the same in Montreal and Vancouver.

EGG PRICES

Question No. 2,947—Mr. Gray:

Are prices to be paid for eggs in Canada following the imposition of controls on imports of eggs from the United States and the recent amendments to the federal-provincial agreement on egg marketing now to be based on a cost of production formula and, if so (a) what is the formula (b) how was such a formula derived?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The amendments to the federal-provincial agreement call for a reasonable return over time to producers and in order to achieve this objective CEMA has adopted a cost of production approach. (A) See Sessional Paper No. 301-4/73. (B) The formula was prepared by P.S. Ross & Partners, a firm of consultants who did an exhaustive study over a period of many months.

EGGS—PRODUCTION LEVELS

Question No. 2,948—Mr. Gray:

What steps have been taken to ensure that production levels set by the Farm Products Marketing Council and/or the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency pursuant to the federal-provincial agreement on egg marketing, as recently amended, accurately reflect domestic demand?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): CEMA, in consultation with the Farm Products Marketing Council, are continually monitoring production; inventories and disappearance. The quotas have been reduced by 10 per cent in all provinces with more than 2 per cent of the national quota.

EGGS—PRODUCTION LEVELS

Question No. 2,949—Mr. Gray

Do the production levels set by the Farm Products Marketing Council and/or the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency pursuant to the federal-provincial agreement on egg marketing, as recently amended, reflect demand and, if so, what controls have been instituted to ensure that production will not exceed these levels?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): See answer to Question 2,948. Heavy penalties have been set under the recent amendment to the federal-provincial agreement and each provincial board has provided a bond to CEMA to ensure payment of any necessary penalties.

EGGS—INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE

Question No. 2,950—Mr. Gray:

What steps have been taken to ensure that no barriers to interprovincial trade will occur under the new programme arising out of the federal-provincial agreement on egg marketing, as recently amended?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Free movement of eggs interprovincially is a requirement of the Federal-Provincial Agreement.

EGG PRICES AND SURPLUS REMOVAL

Question No. 2,951—Mr. Gray:

Has CEMA been instructed to account publicly for all its decisions affecting egg prices and surplus removal and, if so, how will this be done?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): CEMA functions within the framework of a Federal-Provincial agreement supervised by the Farm Products Marketing Council. The Council will issue regular reports regarding the activities of all agrencies as provided in the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

Order Paper Questions

EGG PRICES

Question No. 2,952—Mr. Gray:

When US egg prices rise, what assurance does the Canadian consumer have that domestic egg prices will not also rise?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Should U.S. egg prices rise to provide an incentive for increased exports of eggs from Canada to the U.S.A., the Export and Import Permits Act would be used to protect supply and maintain reasonable prices in Canada.

EGG PRICES

Question No. 2,953—Mr. Gray:

According to CEMA projections, what will be the new egg prices in each province once the new egg marketing programme arising out of the federal-provincial agreement on egg marketing, as recently amended, is fully operational?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): See answer to question number 2947. The producer prices are being published weekly by Agriculture Canada and are available to the public.

SURPLUS EGGS

Question No. 2,954—Mr. Gray:

How many eggs have been removed as surplus from the Canadian market by (a) CEMA (b) provincial egg marketing agencies on behalf of CEMA during each week from and after April 1, 1974 to date?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): CEMA provided the following information. The figures below sets out the volume of eggs bought from egg grading stations in each week since April 1, 1974. These are not necessarily surplus to the Canadian market but surplus to the local market of that particular grading station at that point in time. The volume of eggs set out below was sold by CEMA (A) to the processing trade for manufacturing into products utilized by the bakery industry; (B) offshore for table use, and (C) into the USA for direct processing or for processing on a custom basis at time when Canadian processors were unable to process the volume on offer. Within the period CEMA has been financially responsible for all removals.

IMPORTED EGGS

Question No. 2,955—Mr. Gray:

How many eggs have been imported into Canada during each week from and after April 1, 1974 to date?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The information is available from Statistics Canada publication—Trade of Canada Imports by Commodities Catalogue 65-007, Class 53-19.

EGGS IN STORAGE

Question No. 2,958—Mr. Gray:

For each province, what were (a) the maximum (b) the minimum lengths of time that eggs that were in storage under the jurisdiction of (i) CEMA (ii) provincial egg marketing boards in each week since April 1, 1974 had been in storage during each such week?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): See answers to questions 2,956 and 2,957.

WASTAGE OF EGGS

Question No. 2,959—Mr. Gray:

What steps have been taken to ensure that the wastage of eggs which occurred in 1974 will not be repeated?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): See answer to Question 2948. Also CEMA now require that all surplus to table egg requirements owned by CEMA be sold for processing within 7 days.

[Mr. Whelan.]

DEGRADE CANADIAN SURPLUS EGGS

Question No. 2,960—Mr. Gray:

Is it the intention of the government, while restricting imports of table eggs, to degrade Canadian surplus eggs and sell them in export markets for processing rather than make them available to lower income Canadians through special programmes or otherwise?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The matter of egg marketing is the responsibility of CEMA under the terms of the legislation approved by Parliament and through an agreement approved by ten provincial governments and the federal government. The matter of import controls to protect supply management was authorized by Parliament under the Export and Import Permits Act and the volume of imports allowed under that Act relate to the volume imported in the base period 1969 to 1973. Respecting disposal of eggs see answer to question 2959.

CEMA—EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Question No. 2,961—Mr. Gray:

Will the Executive Committee to be appointed to direct CEMA include representatives of non-producers as recommended by the Food Prices Review Board in its second egg report and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. The Committee of three, which has been appointed, includes one person who is a non-producer, one person whose main business is poultry and the Vice-Chairman of CEMA.

VITAMIN E CONTENT IN WHEAT AND WHITE FLOUR

Question No. 2,963—Mr. Reid:

1. What is the naturally occurring Vitamin E content of (a) No. 1 northern wheat (b) one loaf of bread made with (i) refined white flour (ii) whole wheat flour?

2. Does the government approve the adding of synthetic or natural Vitamin E to refined white flour products and, if so, is this actually the case in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) Although data relating to No. 1 northern wheat are not available, values for wheat range between 5 and 18 μg/g, with an average of 12 μg/g. (b) (i) Bread (refined white flour) 174 μg/loaf; (ii) Bread (whole wheat) 700 μg/loaf.

2. The department endorses the general principle that nutrients lost during the processing of foods should be restored but there are technical difficulties to the addition of vitamin E to flour which have not yet been overcome. Vitamin E is not added to refined white flour products in Canada.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—POSITION OF MR. HENRY POPP

Question No. 2,966—Mr. Dick:

1. What is the position of Mr. Henry Popp in the Department of the Solicitor General?

2. Was Mr. Pop a member of a board on the enquiries on the (a) Millhaven prisoner escape (b) Kingston Penitentiary riot (c) Vancouver hostage situation or on any other investigations or enquiries?

3. Did Mr. Popp serve on these enquiries in any other capacity and, if so, what were they?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. Director, Operational Security, Security Branch, Canadian Penitentiary Service.

2. (a) No. (b) Yes. (c) Yes. Mr. Popp served also as Commissioner of Inquiry into the enquiry on the escape of eleven inmates from Saskatchewan Penitentiary on November 25, 1970.

3. In connection with the Kingston Penitentiary riot, Mr. Popp served as a member of the Commission of inquiry under Mr. J. W. Swackhammer, Q.C. In relation to the British Columbia hostage-taking incident, he is a member of the Commission of Inquiry under the chairmanship of Chief Justice John Farris.

STUDIES BY NRC INVOLVING THE OBSERVATION AND TIMING OF PEOPLE'S USE OF WASHROOMS

Question No. 2,968—Mr. Beatty:

1. Has the National Research Council conducted studies involving the observation and timing of people's use of washroom facilities and, if so (a) what has been the cost to date (b) what is the total projected cost (c) what are the component costs?

2. Besides the washrooms of the National Arts Centre (a) in what washroom have NRC's researchers been stationed (b) in what other washrooms are they going to be stationed?

3. For what reason does the government believe timing the use of washroom fixtures is necessary for the advancement of science?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council of Canada is concerned, the answer is as follows: 1. Yes (a) and (c) $79,000 comprised of Labour $35,000; Computer time $2,500; Travel $1,500; Equipment $500. Overhead $39,500; Total $79,000. (b) Total projected cost will depend on results of the current work. The study is probably around 40 per cent completed.

2. (a) Studies have also been conducted in a shopping plaza and three grandstands. (b) It is intended to extend this work to include offices, industrial plants, schools, movie theatres and restaurants.

3. Basic information on washroom use is needed to develop satisfactory building standards. Local standards differ in their requirements by factors up to 22, i.e. one authority requires 1 fixture, where another authority requires 22. At an average cost approaching $2,000 per fixture (including auxiliary plumbing and space requirements), it is clear that a great deal of money is being wasted under some code requirements, whereas in other situations insufficient facilities are provided. Initial studies indicate that shopping plazas are being required to provide twice as many washroom facilities as necessary. It is estimated that more than $1 million a year could be saved in plazas alone by improving building standards.

ELECTRICAL ROAD VEHICLES

Question No. 2,973—Mr. Robinson:

Are any provincial agencies or private business concerns testing electrical road vehicles and, if so (a) what kinds of vehicles are being tested (b) where are they manufactured (c) what do they cost?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): British Columbia Hydro is testing a delivery van manufactured by Battronic in Boyertown, Pennsylvania at a basic price of approximately $10,000 before duty and taxes. They are also going to test five Japanese Subaru delivery vans converted by a U.S. firm at a cost of approximately $5,000. They also plan to test the British Enfield car when available. The Manitoba government plans to test delivery vans made in the U.S. by OTIS and Battronic. The cost of these vehicles is approximately $8,000 and $10,000 respectively before duty and taxes. Quebec Hydro is also testing both the OTIS and Battronic delivery vans. One private business concern has imported two Sebring Vanguard Citi-Cars, two Italian Elcars, Electromotion Islander (recreational vehicle) and a delivery van from the U.S., to evaluate for the Canadian market. The CitiCar sells in the U.S. for just under $3,000 and the Elcar suggested U.S. price for model 1000 is $2,995 while the model 2000 is $3,395.

STUDIES AND DEVELOPMENT OF ELECTRICAL ROAD VEHICLES

Question No. 2,974—Mr. Robinson:

Is the government under the Energy Conservation or Energy Management Programme allotting any funds toward studies and development of electrical road vehicles?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: No funds are being allotted.

GOVERNMENT TESTING OF ELECTRICAL ROAD VEHICLES

Question No. 2,975—Mr. Robinson:

Is the government testing any electrical road vehicles at the present time and, if not, on what date will tests be conducted?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Canadian Post Office has tested an OTIS delivery vehicle in Toronto and will test five American Motor's electrical jeeps in five locations across Canada this fall. One vehicle based on a golf car chassis is being used by the Department of Communications, Research Centre at Shirley's Bay outside of Ottawa.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING PSYCHOLOGICAL TESTING OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES AND POTENTIAL EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,976—Mr. Beatty:

1. On behalf of what (a) departments (b) agencies (c) boards (d) commissions (e) Crown corporations does the Department of National Health and Welfare undertake psychological testing of employees or potential employees?

2. In each case (a) what is the purpose of such tests (b) what categories of employees or potential employees would be subject to such tests (c) who is responsible for administering the tests (d) who is responsible for interpreting their results (e) what are their qualifications?

3. In each case (a) would refusal to participate in the tests in any way jeopardize the career of an employee or a potential employee and, if so, in what way (b) is the individual involved given full access to the results of the test and, if not, for what reason (c) what procedure is followed for the systematic purging of files on individuals involved when information gained is no longer directly relevant (d) what is the number of files currently maintained on individuals?

4. For what reason did the Department of National Health and Welfare not reply to Question No. 2,402 as anticipated in Part 2(c) of the reply by the National Harbours Board?

5. What are the Public Service Commission and Treasury Board regulations respecting psychological testing of government employees and potential employees?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and Treasury Board Secretariat as follows: 1. Psychological testing is a part of the Public Service Health program that is available to all departments and agencies that fall under the Financial Administration Act. It is also available to Crown corporations who request services from National Health and Welfare.

2. (a) The purpose of testing is to aid in establishing a health profile or diagnosis in the assessment of an employee's health status as it relates to the safe, healthy, and effective performance of his duties. (It is important to emphasize the difference between psychological testing, and psychological assessment. Psychological testing is done by utilizing a whole battery of tests and aims at something in particular, such as behaviorial pattern. Psychological assessment may be a part of any comprehensive medical examination). (b) There is no routine psychological testing done on categories of employees. In any assessment of the health of some groups of employees, however, particular attention is directed to a psychological assessment because of the nature of the work. These groups are: 1. Personnel posted to isolated posts. 2. Lightkeepers, including dependents resident at remote locations. 3. Personnel serving abroad (including dependents). (c) Tests are administered by a psychiatrist or psychologist. (d) Interpretation is by the health professional who administers the tests. (e) Specialty qualifications as established by the governing body of the profession.

3. (a) Refusal would result in the Department of National Health and Welfare reporting to a department that an accurate or complete assessment of the employee's health status is impossible to make due to incomplete data. The effect of incomplete health profiles on the employability of an individual is impossible to assess since National Health and Welfare exercises no control over staffing authorities in the manner of employment or promotions. (b) The individual has a right to know the results of any examination by the Department of National Health and Welfare either through direct discussion with the Health and Welfare professional, or where it is deemed in his best interest, through a full disclosure to a physician of the employee's choice. (c) No separate psychological test files are maintained on individuals. However, the results of an individual's psychological test are maintained as part of his/her medical files. Medical files are kept in strict confidentiality by the Medical Services Branch. They are kept active for two years, then dormant for three. After this five year period, they are destroyed. (d) In Medical Services, nine regions are in possession of files of this nature and the number can reach in the tens of thousands; to give an accurate figure would require intensive time and manpower and would be a serious cost to this branch.

4. Question No. 2,402 part 2(c) was not replied to by the Department of National Health and Welfare since the question was interpreted as applying to the Department itself and to no other area of the government.

5. Treasury Board regulations and requirements respecting health evaluations, including psychological assessments where applicable, of employees of departments or other portions of the Public Service of Canada listed in Part 1 of Schedule A to the Public Service Staff Regulations Act, are provided for in the Foreign Service Directives, the Isolated Posts Regulations and in the Public Service Periodic Health Evaluation Standard.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,987—Mr. Reid:

1. Do employees of the Department of the Environment, working in Hull, pay into the Quebec Pension Plan and do they pay Quebec income tax and, if so, are there any employees who do not pay into the Quebec Pension Plan or who do not pay Quebec income tax?

2. Are all employees of the Department of the Environment in the Ottawa-Hull area headquartered in Hull and, if not (a) what groups are headquartered elsewhere in the National Capital area (b) for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. Yes. The department is unaware of any exceptions.

2. No. (a) There are a number of departmental offices, laboratories and warehouses located outside of Hull but in the national capital area. The principal groups are the Fisheries and Marine Service and the Eastern Forest Products Laboratory, both of which are located in Ottawa. (b) The majority of facilities occupied by the Department of Environment in Ottawa were units of other departments prior to the formation of DOE and had been held by those units for some time. The two main office buildings occupied by the department in Hull do not have sufficient floor space to accommodate all departmental staff in the national capital area.

LOCKS AT STE-ANNE-DE-BELLEVUE, QUEBEC

Question No. 2,988—Mr. Herbert:

What is the record to date of the (a) number of boats (b) amount of toll charges collected (c) additional collection costs at the locks at Ste-Anne-de-Bellevue, Quebec?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) Number of vessels locked—1818. Number of lock operations—1220. (b) Revenue from toll charges to July 17, 1975—$9,767. (c) Collection costs to July 17, 1975—$3,715.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—FORMATION OF OIL EXPLORATION COMPANY

Question No. 2,989—Mr. Herbert:

Did the President of the Canadian Development Corporation, Mr. H. A. Hampson, give prior indication to the government of the intention to (a) acquire or form a Canadian oil exploration company (b) form an oil exploration company and, if so, what means will be used to prevent duplication of effort by this autonomous corporation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The government, through its representation on the board of directors and executive committee of the Canada Development Corporation, is kept informed of the CDC's investment intentions, including its present interest in investing in the oil industry. The CDC and the government have agreed to consult and cooperate in such oil related undertakings so as to avoid any undesirable duplication or conflict.

IMMIGRATION OF CARIBBEANS TO CANADA

Question No. 2,991—Mr. Robinson:

How many Caribbeans have emigrated to Canada in each of the years 1945 to 1975 inclusive?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The information requested is contained in Immigration statistical publications. These are published annually and are available from Information Canada or the Department of Manpower and Immigration. (See—Rules and Forms of the House of Commons of Canada, Beauchesne (1958) section 171(ff)).

IMMIGRATION OF INDIANS TO CANADA

NUMBER OF RASTAFARIANS IN CANADA ILLEGALLY

Question No. 2,999—Mr. Robinson:

How many Rastafarians in Canada are here illegally (a) will they be deported and, if so, on what date (b) where are they located in Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Since persons in the country illegally would not normally make their presence known to government sources, there is no way to estimate their numbers, nor where they are located, in Canada. When such persons come to our attention appropriate enforcement action is taken.

NUMBER OF RASTAFARIAN BRETHREN IN CANADA

Question No. 3,000—Mr. Robinson:

RATE OF COST INCREASE IN AUTO INSURANCE, 1960-75

Question No. 3,003—Mr. Robinson:

What is the average rate of cost increase in auto insurance to each province and territory in each year 1960 to 1975 inclusive?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Statistics Canada does not collect data on the average rate of cost increase in auto insurance. However, the attached table shows the year-to-year percentage changes in the automobile insurance component of the consumer price index by regional city from 1962 to 1974. The last column of the table gives the movement over the latest available 12 month period, i.e. June 1974 to June 1975. Consumer price indexes are not compiled at a provincial or territorial level nor are data available for the year 1960.

CMHC FELLOWSHIP PROGRAMME

Question No. 3,008—Mr. Marshall:

1. Of the 331 applications for CMHC fellowships for study in urban affairs, how many were received from each province?

2. When was the Fellowship Programme announced and through what means was it advertised?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. The distribution by province of applications received for CMHC Fellowships for study in urban affairs is shown in the table below.

Province	Number
Newfoundland	1
Prince Edward Island	–
Nova Scotia	5
New Brunswick	–
Québec	87
Ontario	157
Manitoba	13
Saskatchewan	4
Alberta	11
British Columbia	52
N.W.T.	1

2. Approval of the Fellowship Programme was announced by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs on January 14, 1975, through a news release. The fellowship brochure for 1975/76 was distributed by CMHC in December 1974, to a mailing list of over 1200, which covers all Universities and their affiliated colleges in Canada; federal and provincial government departments; private industry such as architectural and engineering firms and associations; and newspaper and magazine outlets. The program is listed in almost all University calendars, and the Annual Register of Grant Support and the Universities and Colleges of Canada report.

5. The profit for fiscal year 1973-74 was $102,000 and for 1974-75 $94,000. Prior to the commencement of revenue dependency in 1973-74, this service was provided without charge to Government departments and operating costs were charged to a vote appropriation. Profit or loss details for the years preceding 1973-74 are not available.

MR. WILLIAM TERON, PRESIDENT OF CMHC

Question No. 3,046—Mr. Huntington:

1. Was Mr. William Teron, President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (a) a director, chairman, officer or in any way connected with St. Maurice Capital Corporation Ltd., now operating under the style of Commerce Capital Corporation Ltd. (b) a director, chairman, officer or in any way connected with Farmers and Merchants Trust Co. Ltd. (c) a director, chairman, officer or in any way connected with Campeau Corporation?

2. Did Mr. Teron ever own equity, legal or beneficial shares in Power Corporation of Canada Ltd.?

3. Has Mr. Teron held any other similar positions in private or public companies or corporations in the past and, if so, on what date did he divest himself of each particular position?

4. Has Mr. Teron transferred his substantial real estate holdings to any member of his family and, if so, is he in any way acting in an advisory capacity in the management of their properties and holdings?

5. Are Mr. Teron's extensive real estate holdings held in a blind trust and, if so, do any members of his family or any former business associates act as a trustee or in any way manage the blind trust?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. (a) and (b) Mr. Teron was chairman of the Board of St. Maurice Capital Corporation Ltd. (now Commerce Capital Corporation Ltd.), and was a Director of Farmers and Merchants Trust Co. Ltd., but on June 30, 1973, prior to his appointment as President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, he resigned from every office and directorship in those as well as from all other corporations with which he had any connection (save for Pearson College of the Pacific). (c) Mr. Teron was never a Director or Officer of Campeau Corporation nor in any way connected with it, except that his company's land development at Kanata, Ontario, was sold in 1967 to Canadian Interurban Properties Limited, a controlled subsidiary of Power Corporation with whom Campeau Corporation became subsequently connected.

2. Mr. Teron held common shares in Power Corporation for a 6-month period only in the year 1970, but never at any other time owned any equity, legal or beneficial, in that company. He owned a controlling interest in Canadian Interurban Properties Limited, but this interest was sold out in December, 1969.

3. Mr. Teron held offices in Teron Construction Co. Limited, Etron Limited, Marina City Kingston Limited, Murney Development Limited, William Teron Limited and Carleton Towers Hotels Limited, all private companies, but resigned therefrom on June 30, 1973.

4. Mr. Teron, in 1962, transferred certain shares in his company, Etron Limited, to Trustees acting on behalf of his children, which stock the Trustees continue to hold but, apart from that, never transferred any assets to his wife or children.

5. Mr. Teron ha no direct real estate holdings (save for his personal residence, a chalet lot, and a one-half interest in a 7-acre parcel of land in March Township, in the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton), but has shares in a corporation, Urbanetics Ltd. (formerly Etron Limited) which has real estate assets. These shares were transferred to Trustees under a blind trust agreement (a true copy of which is filed with the Privy Council Secretariat). These Trustees are in no manner related to Mr. Teron or to any member of his family, and they are not and never have been his business associates.

[Mr. Huntington.]

HUMAN RIGHTS—LEGISLATION

Question No. 3,047—Mr. Herbert:

Did the government give recognition to the provincial responsibilities when it excluded in its proposed human rights legislation any reference to discrimination concerning health standards and/or physical deformities which would not be a relevant consideration for employment?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): It is desired that the proposed Commission at the outset mainly confine its work to grounds of discrimination in relation to which other commissions have acquired experience. Only one province, Nova Scotia, has by a recent amendment to its Human Rights Act provided for the ground of physical handicap.

BANKRUPTCY CLAIMS

Question No. 3,048—Mr. Herbert:

Has there been any appreciable change in the percentage of bankruptcy claims between (a) secured and unsecured creditors (b) amounts claimed by banks, financial institutions other than chartered banks, and other creditors?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. (a) Liabilities declared by debtors for the calendar years 1972 and 1973 (as examples) are as follows: 1972, Secured $74,378,000; Unsecured $225,903,000. 1973, Secured 76,451,000; Unsecured 228,365,000. (b) Not applicable—Statistics are not kept on individual creditors.

FEES PAID TO TRUSTEES IN BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 3,049—Mr. Herbert:

For each of the past five years, what is the total of fees that have been paid to trustees in bankruptcies in each province or by whatever regional division that records are maintained?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Answer follows.

NOTE: In the case of an ordinary administration trustee fees are based on section 21(1) and (2) of the Bankruptcy Act. In the case of a summary administration trustee fees are based on section 110, 111 and 112 of the Bankruptcy Rules.

BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 3,050—Mr. Herbert:

Does the department responsible for the supervision of bankruptcies record as a percentage of monies claimed the dividends paid to chartered bank creditors whether they are secured or unsecured?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does not keep statistics on individual or specific types of creditors in bankruptcies.

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 3,054—Mr. Brisco:

1. How many charitable organizations are presently registered with the Department of National Revenue?

2. What criteria are used in granting registration?

3. How many organizations registered as charitable organizations, have subsequently had their certificate withdrawn by the Department of National Revenue in 1973, 1974 and 1975 to date and what were their names?

4. What form of investigation is conducted by the Department prior to awarding certification to an organization as a charitable organization?

Hon. J. C. Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): 1. 36,098.

2. An organization must demonstrate by documentation and other information that it is constituted and operating exclusively in a charitable manner. The Income Tax Act does not contain a definition of the word "charity" or "charitable purposes" and the Department must therefore be guided by the principles of common law dealing with charity and in particular the English Pemsel case wherein the purposes which the law considers to be charitable were grouped under the following four general headings: (1) Relief of Poverty, (2) Advancement of Education, (3) Advancement of Religion, (4) Other purposes of a charitable nature, beneficial to the community, not falling under any of the preceding headings. Legal jurisprudence is used extensively where doubt is encountered.

3. The names of the charitable organizations which had their registration revoked were published, as required by law, in the Canada Gazette. The following is the publication date and the number revoked: 1973: 31/03/73, 39; 2/06/73, 54; 18/08/73, 58; 24/11/73, 358; 15/12/73, 90; 29/12/73, 272; total for 1973 871. 1974: 26/01/74, 1; 18/05/74, 86; 10/08/74, 1; 17/08/74, 129; 30/11/74, 372; 24/12/74, 135; 28/12/74, 206; total for 1974 930. 1975: 22/03/75, 81; 3/05/75, 2; 10/05/75, 98; total for 1975, 181. Overall total 1,982.

4. Organizations are required to file with the Department a certified copy of their governing documents, a copy of the previous years financial statements, if such exist, and a detailed explanation of the activities to be carried on by the organization within the meaning of the stated objects. This documentation and information is reviewed and analyzed and if it is found that the organization meets all of the requirements it is registered as a charitable organization for income tax purposes. Submissions are presently being sought from interested Canadians by a Charities Study Group established by the Minister of Finance in his recent budget speech. At that time a Green Paper on the subject was published. As a result, legislation may be presented which would establish additional requirements for registration, vary existing requirements for registration or impose new administrative policies.

SOCIETY FOR THE STUDY OF THE HERITAGE OF CANADA

Question No. 3,055—Mr. Brisco:

1. Was a certificate issued to the Society for the Study of the Heritage of Canada by the Department of National Revenue—Taxation as a Canadian charitable organization and, if so, for what reason?

2. What was the (a) effective date (b) certificate number?

3. How many tax free dollars were received in the form of donations by the Society in (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975?

4. How many Canadians donated to the Society in (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975?

5. Has the Department of National Revenue ever investigated the Society and (a) if so (i) for what reason (ii) what were the findings of the investigation (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. The Society for the Study of the Heritage of Canada was registered as a Canadian charitable organization under the Income Tax Act, having demonstrated to the satisfaction of the responsible officials that it met all of the prerequisites to registration.

2. (a) July 1, 1973, (b) 0417774-21-13

3. An answer to this question cannot be provided due to the secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act.

4. This information is not available.

5. See answer to Part 3.

EMIGRATION FROM CANADA STATISTICS

Question No. 3,057—Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands):

1. Does the government collect information on emigration from Canada?

2. What factors (age, sex, nationality, occupation, etc.) are collected in emigration statistics?

3. Are such data collected by cooperation with the countries of destination and, if not, how are they collected?

4. Where are these emigration statistics published?

5. Does the government intend to increase the collection of emigration data and, if so, in what areas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Statistics Canada reports the following: 1. Like most countries in the world, Canada does not collect data on the number of persons emigrating from the country, because Canadian residents are not compelled to notify provincial or national officials of their departure. However, Statistics Canada produces estimates of the number of persons who emigrate from Canada each year.

2. The annual estimates of emigration are produced by age group, sex, and province or territory of origin.

3. The emigration estimates are obtained by adding: (a) actual data from the United States Department of Justice on the number of persons immigrating to the United States whose last country of residence was Canada: (b) actual data from the United Kingdom Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on the number of persons migrating to the United Kingdom whose last country of residence was Canada; and (c) an assumed volume of 20,000 persons who are believed to emigrate to all other countries from Canada each year. The figure 20,000, is based on data in the United Nations Demographic Year Book and differences between the number of post-war immigrants recorded in the 1961 Census and the total post-war immigration figures reported by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

4. These emigration estimates are compiled for purposes of producing the official post-censal national and provincial population estimates. Although the emigration estimates have not been published, they are made available to individuals who request them.

5. For the past two years, Canada has been cooperating with the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe in a pilot project the aim of which is to generate current, reliable data on the number of persons migrating between the 32 member countries of the Economic Commission for Europe. Although the results from this pilot project have been encouraging the Economic Commission for Europe is continuing its developmental work on this project before setting up a system for the regular exchange of these data among the member countries. Once this programme becomes fully operational, the data on immigration to these countries from Canada will enable Statistics Canada to generate increasingly accurate and more detailed current emigration estimates.

ENERGY ANALYSES

Question No. 3,058—Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands):

1. Has the government conducted any energy analyses or obtained energy analyses done by others comparing energy invested with energy produced for (a) the Syncrude plant (b) the CANDU reactor systems for Bruce, Point Lepreau and Pickering (c) any of the major international competitors of the CANDU system and, if so, where are they published?

2. Has the government conducted or received any studies comparing the energy invested including both construction and operation with the energy delivered for (a) an oil pipeline versus a railroad (b) a gas pipeline versus a railroad in the MacKenzie Valley?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1. These studies are underway.

2. These studies are underway.

UNION REPRESENTATION

Question No. 3,064—Mr. Jelinek:

1. How many various unions are represented within (a) post office (b) air transportation (c) grain handlers (d) ports (e) meat inspectors (f) rail service?

2. How many of the unions in Part 1 have taken part in a walkout or strike during (a) the last fiscal year (b) the past two fiscal years?

3. How many man-days have been lost as a result of strikes and walkouts by the unions in Part 1 during (a) the last fiscal year (b) the past two fiscal years?

4. How many man-days have been lost as a result of strikes and walkouts by employees under the jurisdiction of the government during (a) the last fiscal year (b) the past two fiscal years?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): 1. (a) Post Office—5, (b) air transport—15, (c) grain handlers—16, (d) ports—35*, (e) meat inspectors—1, (f) rail service—21.

* This number includes unions in "marine transportation" as well as "ports."

Question No. 3,065—Mr. Roberts:

1. How many public servants are currently employed by the Foreign Claims Commission?

2. What is their average length of service with the Commission?

3. What are the names of any members of the Commission while serving with the Commission visited (a) Bulgaria (b) Hungary (c) Romania (d) Poland (e) Czechoslovakia and on what dates?

4. Which of the visits were partially or wholly other than on government business?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The commission comprises three members appointed by the Governor-in-Council under the Inquiries Act. The commissioners have authority to employ necessary staff at rates of remuneration approved by Treasury Board. The persons presently so employed are one lawyer, one person with legal training, and two secretaries. In addition, one lawyer has been seconded to the commission by the Department of Justice.

2. Two members of the commission were appointed on December 8, 1970 and the third was appointed on January 30, 1975. Tue secretaries were engaged on February 1, 1971 and September 1, 1973, respectively. The lawyer was engaged on September 1, 1973. The person with legal training was engaged on June 1, 1975. The lawer seconded from the Department of Justice has been with the commission since October, 1974.

3. No member or employee of the commission while serving with the commission has visited Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania, Poland or Czechoslovakia.

4. (actually 4) Not applicable.

"SWEET MOVIE" FILM

Question No. 3,067—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,786 on the subject of the film "Sweet Movie" which stated in part that this film "contains some such scenes" of vomiting, urination and defecation (a) in how many scenes did each appear (b) who set down the policy and on what date that the amount of public money invested in individual films of this kind by the Canadian Film Development Corporation is never disclosed and what reasons justify denying such information to Parliament?

2. With further reference to the answer which stated in part that CFDC invested in this film because of "Canadian content", "reputation of the director" and "script" (a) what are all these things in detail (b) did the film portray one fat man wiping defecations on another fat man and, if so, has this anything to do with Canadian content or the reputation of the director?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: 1. (a) Vomiting, 2 scenes; Urination, 4 scenes; Defecation, 1 scene. (b) At their meetings of October 31, 1968 and January 28, 1969, the members of the Canadian Film Development Corporation decided not to reveal the amounts of their investments in individual feature films in order to protect the financial position of the producer in his negotiations with possible purchasers of the completed films.

2. (a) Canadian Content: Carole Laure, a French-Canadian actress had a feature role, Martin Malina, a Montreal critic collaborated on the scenario and there were several other Canadian performers and technicians during the week of shooting in Canada. Reputation of the Director: Dusan Makavejev, the director, has an international reputation. His films include "WR: Mysteries of the Organism", "Man is Not a Bird", "Loves of the Switchboard Operator" and "Sweet Movie". In 1973 he was chosen one of the five Directors of the Year, the others being Ingmar Bergman, Robert Bresson, Alain Resnais and John Schlesinger. In the International Film Guide, he was rated as one of the three new major directors to come from Eastern Europe in the past ten years. He was also highly praised by James Roy Macbean in The Film Quarterly. Robin Wood in Second Wind, said that Makavejev is one of the most remarkable artists to have emerged from the post-Godard generation. The Script: The corporation's assessment and that of its readers were generally satisfactory. (b) All the scenes referred to in 1 (a) above were added and photographed in Holland. They have nothing to do with Canadian content. The director made the decision to include them in the film.

ABORTIONS

Question No. 3,075—Mr. Robinson:

How many legal abortions have been performed in Canada at the expense of the taxpayer in each year 1968 to 1975 inclusive?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Statistics Canada reports that the number of therapeutic abortion operations performed in Canada on residents of Canada and reported to Statistics Canada is as follows: August 26 to December 31, 1969, 538; January 1 to December 31, 1970, 11,152; January 1 to December 31, 1971, 30,923; January 1 to December 31, 1972, 38,853; January 1 to December 31, 1973, 43,201. From the time at which a province declared a therapeutic abortion operation to be a required medical service, and abortion operations became an item of shared medical services under the combined Federal and Provincial Hospital Insurance and Medical Care Act, a covered resident of the province making a claim for payment of services provided in connection with a therapeutic abortion operation would have all or most of the services provided without charge.

ILLEGAL ABORTIONS

Question No. 3,076—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many doctors have been charged and/or convicted of performing illegal abortions in each year 1968 to 1975 inclusive?

2. What are their names and what was the sentence they received?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Statistics Canada does have information on the number of persons charged and convicted of performing illegal abortions. However, no data are collected on the occupation of the person charged. 1. and 2(b). The table below gives the number of persons charged, persons convicted and sentences of convicted persons. The figures refer to the year 1968—1972 for the offence grouping, "abortion and attempt" which includes Criminal Code sections 237, 237(1) 237(2), 238 for the years 1968-1970 inclusive and sections 251, 251(1), 251(2), 252 for the years 1971 and 1972. (The different Criminal Code sections result from the renumbering of the code in 1970).

2(a). The release by Statistics Canada of the names of persons charged or convicted is prohibited by Section 16 of the Statistics Act.

Offence–Abortion and Attempt (1968-1972)

VACCINE TO PREVENT TOOTH DECAY IN MONKEYS

Question No. 3,078—Mr. Robinson:

1. To the knowledge of the government, have British scientists developed a vaccine to prevent tooth decay in monkeys and believe it is only a matter of time before humans will be effectively inoculated and, if so, is the government looking into this research in the interest of Canadians?

2. Is there any similar experimentation being carried on in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. A report by British scientists in the July 15, 1975, issue of the "British Dental Journal", describes experiments with vaccines to prevent tooth decay in monkeys. The government is aware of the results of this research and will be kept abreast of the additional animal experiments now in progress.

2. No.

DISTRIBUTION OF BOOKLET "HULL 1800-1975"

Question No. 3,080—Mr. Halliday:

1. What was the total financial contribution of the National Capital Commission and/or the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs towards the (a) development (b) printing (c) distribution of the booklet Hull 1800-1975?

2. Is it the policy of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to provide funds to similarly commemorate centennial years or other commemorative occasions of municipalities and, if not, for what reason were these public funds provided on behalf of Hull?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the National Capital Commission and the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs as follows: 1. (a) nil. (b) nil. (c) nil.

2. In the case of the 175th anniversary of foundation and centennial of incorporation of Hull, the National Capital Commission contribution of $5,000 for the Illustrated History was (i) to purchase 1,000 copies for NCC. use (ii) to assist with translation costs. The contribution assured bilingual production of the book which was seen as a valuable addition to the history of the National Capital Region and of interest to both residents and visitors.

AIR CANADA'S FUEL SUPPLIERS

Question No. 3,083—Mr. MacKay:

1. Which oil companies supply Air Canada's fuel and other petroleum requirements in each province?

2. Are such contracts the subject of competitive bidding?

3. Does any supplier have the exclusive right or franchise to supply Air Canada's requirements in any particular area of the country and, if so, what (a) is the name of the supplier (b) area or areas are involved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. British Columbia: -Shell Canada Limited; Imperial Oil Limited; Alberta: Gulf Oil Canada Limited; Saskatchewan: Imperial Oil Limited; Manitoba: Imperial Oil Limited; Ontario: Shell Canada Limited; Imperial Oil Limited; Gulf Oil Canada Limited; Texaco Canada Limited; Quebec: Shell Canada Limited; Gulf Oil Canada Limited; Petrofina Canada Limited. In addition, Air Canada has numerous local contracts for the supply of motor gasoline and heating oil. This involves several other major as well as smaller regional suppliers such as Murphy Oil Quebec Limited and Canadian Import-Weaver Fuels. Air Canada also purchases other petroleum—derived products from petro-chemical firms such as Union Carbide Canada Limited and Dow Chemicals of Canada Limited and lubricant specialists such as Burmah-Castrol Canada Limited.

2. Yes.

3. In certain provinces of Canada, individual suppliers have been granted a contractual right to supply Air Canada's requirements for a limited period of time, following a request for tenders and the submission of bids. (A and B) See Above.

MESSRS. HORNER AND DORE

Question No. 3,086—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,365 which stated in part that the Prime Minister was accompanied on his Caribbean trip and to the Commonwealth Conference in Jamaica by security guards W. Horner and P. Dore in addition to two RCMP inspectors, are Messrs. Horner and Dore government employees, and (a) if so, with what department are they employed and what is their annual salary (b) if not, what is the name and address of the security service for which they work (i) what is the nature and detail of the contract it has with the government (ii) what is a description of all services that it provides to the government (iii) what is the annual cost to the government for services rendered by this security service?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes. (a) Messrs. W. Horner and P. Dore are security guards employed by the Department of External Affairs. They are paid at a basic hourly rate of $4.87 and $4.53 respectively. These two security guards accompanied the delegation to provide protection for classified papers. (b) Not applicable.

EXPANSION OF ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 3,087—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the announcement made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in an address to the annual meeting of the National and Provincial Parks Association of Canada on May 24, 1975 that Parks Canada would spend $30,000,000 on expansion of the St. Lawrence Islands National Park (a) what are the detailed improvements and expansion planned for the mainland section at Mallorytown Landing and on what date will they begin (b) approximately how many additional islands does the government plan to acquire (c) what islands presently owned by the government will undergo improvement and, in each case, what will be the improvements?

2. Is the government aware of the fact that only a very general announcement has been made on these matters forcing the asking price of properties in the Thousand Islands area to extremely high levels and, if so, will the government clarify its plans quickly so that property values will settle to a more realistic level?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. a) Detailed expansion plans have not been developed for the Mainland section at Mallorytown Landing. Any improvements will be indicated in a preliminary master plan for the total park area. The preliminary plan will be presented to the public for their views and recommendations after which time the formal master plan will be developed. b) The precise number of islands to be acquired will be identified after further studies by Parks Canada, discussions with the Province and public consultation. c) The nineteen named islands in St. Lawrence Islands National Park vary in character and the capability to respond to recreational demands placed upon them. Studies of these capabilities are being undertaken and will be used as a guide in public discussions on the preliminary master plan.

2. An extensive public information programme will be undertaken to acquaint the public with the proposal for the expansion following Treasury Board approval and discussions with the province. We have no evidence that the general comments have had any effect on the asking price of the properties in the Thousand Islands area.

CENTRALIZING DATA BANKS

Question No. 3,089—Mr. Beatty:

Is the government considering any plans that would in any way centralize data banks now under the control of more than one department or agency and, if so, what are they?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): As reported in the reply to question 2,641, the Treasury Board secretariat is presently developing a centralized personnel management information data bank of employee data that will provide information to central agencies and departments as is necessary to support personnel administration in the Public Service in the areas of collective bargaining, compensation aspects, manpower planning and analysis, pensions, insurance and official languages. Treasury Board secretariat is also preparing a master plan for statistical activities that could eventually affect, in conjunction with recently proposed privacy legislation, the identification or creation of banks of data for inter-departmental use. The Public Service will review its plans for centralized data banks as well as the supporting policies and guidelines to ensure that Part V of Bill C-72 introduced into the House on July 21, 75 will be respected.

CANADIAN POLICE INFORMATION CENTRE

Question No. 3,090—Mr. Beatty:

In regard to the Canadian Police Information Centre, what regulations or agreements exist with respect to the (a) protection of an individual's privacy (b) type of information that may be entered into CPIC's data bank (c) categories of individuals and organizations to whom information contained in CPIC's data bank may be given?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): (a) Personnel authorized to operate CPIC terminal devices must have a security clearance equivalent to the Federal Government "SECRET" level. Terminal operation is restricted to authorized personnel. The audit team, in addition to auditing validation of records, examine personnel and site security to ensure that minimum standards are being maintained. Computer interfaces with CPIC will be restricted to systems approved by the CPIC Advisory Committee. (b) Vehicle File, Persons File, Property File, Criminal Records Synopsis. (c) RCMP, Provincial Police, City Police, Municipal Forces approved by the CPIC Advisory Committtee. The need for further dissemination is at the discretion of the Solicitor General of Canada, or the Minister of Justice, Attorney General or Solicitor General of the province or territory concerned.

STUDY OF LOBBYING

Question No. 3,095—Mr. Beatty:

1. With respect to the answer to Question No. 2,967 in which the government stated that it has not considered the registration of lobbyists and that no studies of the subject have been done, what is the study of lobbying by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that was referred to on page 25 of the July 1969, issue of Canadian Business?

2. Has the government introduced any laws or regulations to govern the relationship between lobbyists and government officials as reported in Part 2 of the answer to Question No. 2,967 and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. This was a preliminary study carried out by an outside consultant, which did not lead to more extensive examination of this matter by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

2. The government has not introduced laws or regulations to govern the relationship between lobbyists and government officials because the need for such control measures has not been determined.

[Mr. Beatty.]

LAWYERS AND LAW FIRMS IN CONSTITUENCY OF VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 3,096—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What were the names and addresses of all lawyers and law firms in the Constituency of Victoria, British Columbia who performed services for the government during 1973 and 1974?

2. By year, what was the total amount of money paid to each?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: See list below.

HIGH RISK NUTRITIONAL DEFICIENCIES

Question No. 3,097—Mr. Marshall:

1. What action has the government taken with regard to persons involved in the Nutrition Canada study who were discovered to have high risk nutritional deficiencies?

2. Have any contacts been made with the particular person?

3. Have any contacts been made with the provincial departments of health to discuss corrective measures as to the provincial departments of welfare services?

4. Is it the intention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to request additional funding in order to initiate corrective programmes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. In response to the findings of the Nutrition Canada Survey, the government has proposed extensive food enrichment programs to maintain and improve the nutritional quality of the Canadian food supply. These include: (a) proposed amendments to the Food and Drug Regulations to make mandatory the addition of Vitamin D to all forms of milk, vitamin A to skim and partially skimmed milks and margarine, vitamin C to evaporated milks, fruit drinks and non-citrus fruit juices, and three B-vitamins and iron to flour. (b) proposals to require that the iron used to enrich flour and other foods be in a form which can be readily assimilated by the body. In addition, discussions are underway with the food industry to extend flour enrichment to include other nutrients lost in processing, including folic acid, and to make mandatory the addition of calcium to all flour sold in Canada. The impact of these proposed measures should be a substantial improvement in the health of Canadians with respect to the nutrient deficiencies identified by the Nutrition Canada Survey.

2. Yes. The participant and his or her family doctor were advised by letter whenever the biochemical tests indicated a need for further medical investigation. When people with medical problems were encountered during the clinical examination in the survey, they were referred to their local public health unit for treatment.

3. A Federal-Provincial Nutrition Committee composed of representatives of the Department of National Health and Welfare and of the governments of the 10 provinces has been formed. This committee has discussed the results of the Nutrition Canada Survey and has made recommendations to the Conference of Deputy Ministers of Health concerning the need for remedial programs in nutrition.

4. A decision on whether additional funding will be required for corrective programs has not yet been made.

GOVERNORS GENERAL ARMIGEROUS

Question No. 3,098—Mr. Kaplan:

Are any descendants of former Governors General armigerous as a result of service in such office?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See Beauchesne's Citation 171 (dd).

REPORT ON BILINGUAL DISTRICTS

Question No. 3,099—Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier):

With reference to the question relating to the report of the advisory committee on bilingual districts at page 5508 of Hansard for May 6, 1975, will the government confirm that the French and English versions of the report were sent to the printer in June and, if so, on what date will the report be published?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes. It is anticipated that the report of the Bilingual Districts Advisory Board will be tabled around the end of October.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions No. 710, 1,215, 1,455, 1,562, 1,742, 1,878, 2,207, 2,240, 2,289, 2,293, 2,401, 2,438, 2,496, 2,536, 2,634, 2,664, 2,670, 2,696, 2,761, 2,845, 2,882, 2,917, 2,928, 2,945, 2,970, 2,971, 3,006, 3,007, 3,045, 3,060, 3,062 and 3,082 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately. I have a box in front of me containing these orders for returns which will be taken to the table forthwith.

Mr. Baldwin: But will those questions be printed in Hansard?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on a point or order, I hope the House will be assured that all these 400-odd questions will be printed in Hansard in the usual course today, and not merely tabled. Second, I ask there to be justification given for the extraordinary number of questions the government seeks to introduce as orders for returns. Frankly, when a question is made an order for return it is almost tantamount to burying it. I think this practice should be deprecated and indulged in only in exceptional circumstances, when the reasons for it are given.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that greater appreciation might be shown for the government's diligence during the three-month holiday, to which the hon. member earlier referred, in the answering of these questions. I assure the hon. gentleman that the answers to the list of questions I tabled will appear in Hansard as usual. Only the orders for returns will be treated in the way he suggested. I also assure him that they are only being made orders for return because of their bulk, which the hon. member can see from the box of material which was tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I think I should have raised a question of privilege. Perhaps I would then have been heard earlier. In any event, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to waste the time of the House, but the interpreter on the French side, who is responsible for translating in French the remarks of the English-speaking members in this House, including those of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), was complaining about not being able to interpret him because the member was speaking too fast.

As we are much interested in understanding what the President of the Privy Council says, I think we are justified in asking that he read a little more slowly, although we will have the opportunity to read Hansard tomorrow.

If we could hear them today, we would save time. We would not be obliged to read his statement tomorrow for we would take advantage of the opportunity to hear it in a more comprehensible way. That is why I rise on a point of order. I ask that we go a little more slowly to allow the interpreter to transmit the message and to make the interpretation in a more comprehensible manner.

Mr. Speaker: Here is the list. May we give it to the hon. member right away?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I ask to questions No. 2,358, 2,473, 2,641, 2,687, 2,811 and 2,969 be made orders for returns. I also ask the consent of the House to table immediately the information which has already been submitted. The balance of the information will follow as soon as it is submitted to me.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree? Shall the questions enumerated by the President of the Privy Council be made orders for returns under these conditions? Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred questions No. 2,246, 2,640, 2,940, 3,051 and 3,084?

[Mr. Huntington.]

*NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

Question No. 2,246—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In what areas of day-to-day operations has authority been delegated from the National Harbours Board at the Port of Montreal to an Executive Committee?

2. Is it the policy of the government to keep secret the minutes of the Board?

3. Are any portions of the minutes made public and, if so, under what specific circumstances?

4. What are the guidelines used by the Board to determine whether or not policy matters are made public or are withheld from public examination?

5. On what date were they adopted and what is the wording in the legislation that supports this policy?

6. How far does the withholding of policy decisions from the public advance the image or credibility of the Board in the view of the government?

7. Is the government prepared to review this matter of alleged secrecy in the adoption of the new port policy?

8. Do the regulations of the Board conform in every respect to the guidelines for the release of government documents to the public as Tabled in the House on December 14, 1974?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the answer to starred question No. 2,246 is lengthy, I ask the House to consent to the answer being printed in Hansard as if read.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: Answer above referred to reads as follows.]

1. The National Harbours Board has delegated some authority to an Executive Committee of the Montreal Port Authority with respect to the day-to-day operations at the Port of Montreal in the area of personnel, leases, work contracts, service contracts, purchases, rental of equipment, budgets, marketing, public relations, travel and claims.

2. The Minutes of the National Harbours Board reflect the decisions of the Chairman and Members who are responsible for the administrative management and control of the property under the Board's jurisdiction. The National Harbours Board ports are in competition with other ports both within Canada and in the United States. It is therefore not considered to be in the best interest of either the National Harbours Board or Canada to make such decisions a matter of public information, since many are related to on-going and sometimes confidential business arrangements.

3. Extracts of Minutes of meetings of the Board are made available to the Courts for such action as the swearing in or dismissal of police constables or for the transfer of property but are not made public by way of any further distribution. All Minutes of the meetings are available to the Minister of Transport when required.

4. The National Harbours Board is responsible to Parliament through the Minister of Transport. The Board advises the Minister on all policy matters which are felt to be in the public interest in fulfilment of its responsibility to Parliament and the people of Canada, recognizing its role as a Crown Corporation in competition for business with comparable organizations both within and outside Canada. The Minister of Transport determines the extent to which such policy matters should be made public and at what time in their development.

5. The adoption of a specific policy is not required, since the matters coming to the attention of the Minister of Transport related to disclosure may vary and are subject to the Minister's determination.

8. Yes.

Insofar as the Ministry of Transport is concerned:

6. The Minister of Transport, who has responsibility for the National Harbours Board, determines which policy decisions should be made public. He also decides where public participation and feed back will be helpful in policy formulation or changes. Implicit in these decisions is the desire to advance the public image of the Government as well as the Board.

7. There is no secrecy in the execution of the present port policies or in consideration of a new ports policy, although some matters have to be confidential during developmental stages.

*CONSUMER HELP OFFICE, BRANDON, MANITOBA

Question No. 2,640—Mr. Dinsdale:

On what date and in what location will the Consumer Help Office be opening in Brandon, Manitoba?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to starred question No. 2,640 is as follows: At this time there are no plans to establish a consumer help in Brandon, Manitoba.

*CREATION OF CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY

Question No. 2,940—Mr. McGrath:

1. Was the government aware of and did it concur in the suggestions of the Minister of Agriculture that the Provinces of Alberta and New Brunswick should sign the CEMA agreement in order to (a) avoid the control of the movement of eggs from these two Provinces into the other eight (b) prevent the possible flooding of Alberta and New Brunswick markets with eggs from the other provinces (c) preclude the necessity of controlling the movement of foreign eggs into the two Provinces (d) avoid the removal of federal authority for indirect taxation by the two provincial marketing boards?

2. (a) On what basis are egg prices to be determined (b) if prices are based on a cost of production formula, how was such formula derived?

3. What steps have been taken to ensure that production levels set by CEMA accurately reflect domestic demands?

4. If the production levels do, in fact, realistically reflect demand, what controls have been instituted to ensure that production will not exceed the levels set by CEMA?

5. What steps have been taken to ensure that no barriers to interprovincial trade will occur under the new programme?

6. Has CEMA been instructed to account publicly for all its decisions affecting egg prices and surplus removal?

7. When US prices rise, can the government give Canadian consumers assurance to provide justification for supply management and price stability that Canadian eggs will not be exported to the US in response to such a rise, thereby increasing domestic prices?

8. According to CEMA projections, what will be the new egg prices in each province once the programme is fully operational?

9. What is the dimension of the current egg surplus?

10. What steps have been taken to ensure that the wastage of eggs which occurred in 1974 will not be repeated?

11. Is it the intention of the government, while restricting imports of table eggs, to degrade Canadian surplus eggs and sell them in export markets for processing?

12. Will the Executive Committee to be appointed to direct CEMA include representatives of non-producers as recommended by the Board in its second egg report?

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): The answer to starred question No. 2,940 is three pages long and I would like the unanimous consent of the House to have it printed as read?

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: Answer referred to above reads as follows.]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer is: 1. No such suggestion was made.

2. The amendments to the Federal-Provincial agreement call for a reasonable return over time to producers and in order to achieve this objective CEMA has adopted a cost of production approach. (A) See Sessional Paper No. 301-4/73. (B) The formula was prepared by P.S. Ross & Partner, a firm of consultants who did an exhaustive study over a period of many months.

3. CEMA, in consultation with the Farm Products Marketing Council are continually monitoring production; inventories and disapearance. The quotas have been reduced by 10% in all provinces with more than 2% of the national quota.

4. See answer to Part 3. Heavy penalties have been set under the recent amendment to the Federal-Provincial agreement and each provincial board has provided a bond to CEMA to ensure payment of any necessary penalties.

5. Free movement of eggs interprovincially is a requirement of the Federal-Provincial Agreement.

6. CEMA functions within the framework of a Federal-Provincial agreement supervised by the Farm Products Marketing Council. The Council will issue regular reports regarding the activities of all agencies as provided in the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

7. Should U.S. egg prices rise to provide an incentive for increased exports of eggs from Canada to the U.S.A., the Export and Import Permits Act would be used to protect supply and maintain reasonable prices in Canada.

8. The producer prices are being published weekly by Agriculture Canada and are available to the public. See answer to Part 2.

9. Current egg production is keeping up with table egg and processing demand. No unmanageable surpluses are reported at this date. Exact amounts vary from week to week.

10. See answer to Part 3. Also CEMA now require that all surplus to table egg requirements owned by CEMA be sold for processing within 7 days.

11. The matter of egg marketing is the responsibility of CEMA under the terms of the legislation approved by Parliament and through an agreement approved by ten provincial governments and the federal government. The matter of import controls to protect supply management was authorized by Parliament under the Export and Import Permits Act and the volume of imports allowed under that Act relate to the volume imported in the base period 1969 to 1973.

Respecting disposal of eggs see answer to Part 10.

12. Yes. the Committee of three, which has been appointed, includes one person who is a non-producer, one person whose main business is poultry and the Vice-Chairman of CEMA.

*PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE—GRAND PIANO

Question No. 3,051—Mr. Coates:

1. Has there recently been a purchase, at public expense, of a grand piano for the part-time summer residence of the Prime Minister at Harrington Lake and, if so, what was the exact purchase price?

2. Were public tenders called and (a) if so, how and on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

3. Will the piano be played exclusively by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer to starred question No. 3,051 is as follows: 1. The Department of Public Works has no records of a grand piano having been purchased at public expense for the Prime Minister's summer residence at Harrington Lake.

2. No public tenders were called by the Department of Public Works.

3. Not applicable.

*CANADIAN ARMY—RECRUITMENT AND TRAINING OF NURSES

Question No. 3,084—Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

1. Has the Canadian Armed Forces increased its recruitment and training of nurses?

2. How many military nurses are graduating in 1975 as opposed to (a) 1974 (b) 1973?

3. Are there vacant positions for nurses at military establishments other than NDMC?

4. What is the process of selection which determines what positions will be filled by graduating military nurses (a) generally (b) specifically with respect to NDMC?

5. Has the Canadian Armed Forces changed its policy on the rotation of military nurses abroad?

6. What number of military nurses will be required to serve outside of Canada in 1975 as opposed to (a) 1974 (b) 1973?

7. What priority will be given to the reinstatement and/or re-employment of any or all of the fourteen nurses either within DND or other departments and agencies of the Public Service (a) in the National Capital Region (b) elsewhere?

8. Will civilian nurses subject to lay-off be considered for vacant positions at other military establishments immediately or as they fall vacant?

9. Does the Department propose to lay off all civilian nurses at NDMC and, if so, in what time frame?

10. How much does it cost to keep one military nurse at the rank of (a) Lieutenant (b) Captain (c) Major for one year, inclusive of salary, fringe benefits, uniforms, accommodation and other benefits?

Hon. James A. Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the answer to starred question No. 3,084 is long, I ask the House if it can be printed in Hansard as if read.

[Mr. Whelan.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: Answer above referred to reads as follows:]

Mr. Richardson: 1. The Canadian Armed Forces do not recruit and train nurses. Only graduate registered nurses who have a minimum of two years post graduate nursing experience are enrolled in the Armed Forces.

2. As indicated in answer number one there are no military nurses graduating in Canada, however, enrollment of registered nurses in the Armed Forces up to the present in 1975/76 was 35, in 1974/75 enrollment was 97, and in 1973/74 enrollment was 47.

3. Yes, on a temporary basis.

4. (a) and (b). The prerequisites for selection of nurses for the Forces are: must be a graduate nurse; have a minimum of two years post graduate nursing experience; and be currently registered in a provincial nurses association. On enrollment nurses are placed in vacant positions at Canadian Forces hospitals and clinics wherever they exist. There is no special selection process for NDMC.

5. No.

6. 22. (a) 21; (b) 21.

7. (a) and (b). The fourteen nurses referred to who were previously employed at NDMC were all term employees and there is no priority by statute, for re-appointment in accordance with the Public Service Employment Act. However, it is the practice within DND to re-appoint nurses in order of seniority for NDMC in the National Capital Region or to military establishments elsewhere provided they are available for service at the new location, and belong to the Registered Nurses Association in the province of employment

8. Yes, as positions become vacant.

9. No.

10. Average salary and uniform allowances amount to: (a) $11,358 per annum. (b) $16,800 per annum. (c) $20,436 per annum. Medical and dental care and other fringe benefits cannot be accurately estimated on an individual basis.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I ought to forewarn hon. members that there has been some technical difficulty with the computer equipment in the government printing bureau which will put the printing of Hansard behind schedule. I suggest that the burden which has been placed on those facilities in the last few minutes will make the situation critical. We can do little more than keep our fingers crossed: there may be some delay in the delivery of Hansard tomorrow.

Orders of the day.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to special order made earlier this day, Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), seconded by Mr. Sharp, moves:

That this House do now adjourn.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as my first words, in light of some of the comments I made to my hon. friends immediately before the adjournment of this House last July, let me acknowledge that a funny thing happened to me in the course of my retirement from public life and I find myself, through a process which I cannot easily explain, diverted to the responsibilities of minister of finance. In taking over what I recognize is a heavy responsibility from my very able predecessor, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner)—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —who faced with distinction a series of severe challenges in economic decision-making both at home and abroad, I have been bolstered by the expression of good wishes that I have received from all sides of this House and from across the country. I must confess that I would like to have had a little more time in which to learn the ropes. As it is, I have been undergoing an accelerated course of on-the-job training over the past several days during which other members of government and I have been considering, on an urgent basis, how best to deal with the developing economic problems confronting our country.

As underlined by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in speaking to the nation on television last night, and by the white paper which I have tabled in the House on behalf of the government, the powerful and deeply entrenched inflationary forces racking our economy now imperil our prospects for the future. We have reached the point where there is a very real danger that if inflation is not halted and reversed, it will grow to ever larger proportions, sapping our economic strength and undermining our prospects for resurgent growth of output, employment and the real income of Canadians.

In the government's judgment, there is now a critical need for the establishment of a concerted program of national action involving all governments and all Canadians to break the vicious spiral of cost and prices that endangers the stability of our economy and, indeed, of our whole society. What is equally important is that the strong public support so crucial to the success of such a national program also now exists for the first time in Canada.

Before outlining the broad approach being developed by the government for dealing immediately and over the longer term with the problems confronting us, I would like to try to put the origin and nature of these problems in some perspective. Over the course of the past three years, Canada, as a major trading nation and a major participant in international capital markets, has been heavily exposed to the enormous shocks that have reverberated throughout the world. We were buffeted first by immense inflationary pressures generated by soaring international prices for food, oil and industrial raw materials. As the world moved from runaway boom to the deepest and most prolonged recession of the post-war period, demand for many of our major exports plummeted, output was sharply cut back and unemployment sharply increased.

There is, of course, no possible way in which an economy such as ours could avoid being seriously affected by these adverse developments abroad. Throughout this period, however, government policy has had the consistent aim of doing everything that was practically possible to cushion the Canadian economy from the worst effects of these global shock waves. We formulated a number of measures aimed at doing what we could in Canada to get at the root of inflationary problems by increasing supply and by encouraging expansion of our productive capacity. At the same time, we brought forward a wide range of policies aimed at moderating the impact of inflation on the Canadian people through such means as substantial personal and commodity tax reductions, indexation of the personal income tax system and of family allowances, old age pensions and the Canada Pension Plan, and a wide range of subsidies to hold down the prices of certain basic foodstuffs and of petroleum. These measures served both to ease the burden of inflation on Canadians individually and to sustain the economy as a whole by preventing any serious erosion of real consumer income and expenditures.

We were among the first to take stimulative fiscal action to counter the adverse impact on our domestic economy of the impending recession that we foresaw developing abroad, although we in common with others underestimated the length and depth of that recession. Nevertheless, the expansionary fiscal policies introduced by the government, together with major programs that automatically come into effect to help stabilize the economy, such as the greatly expanded unemployment insurance system put in place a few years ago, have also played an important part in shielding Canadians from the worst effects of lagging growth and in sustaining the economy in the face of severe recession abroad.

All of these federal programs to cushion the impact of both inflation and recession, many of which have been complemented and reinforced by the provinces, have inevitably put heavy financial strains on both federal and provincial treasuries. But it has been the judgment of government generally that these measures were essential in both human and economic terms. They were essential to moderate the burden of sharply increasing prices and lack of jobs on individual Canadians, and essential to sustain the economy in order to prevent the build-up of massive unemployment because of the rapid growth of our labour force.

On the surface, our current economic position might appear to some Canadians as being reasonably favourable.

Our economy has suffered a far less prolonged and severe recession than many other major industrial nations. Judged by such measures as the consumer price index or the price indexes of the goods we export and import, our rate of inflation would not appear to be out of line with the average for the industrial countries. The very large increase that has taken place in our current account deficit with other nations over the past several months can also be attributed in large measure to the fact that our economy has remained relatively strong, with the result that the pace of imports has considerably outstripped that of our exports.

Such considerations may be comforting, but they mask the reality of our situation. The hard fact is that the Canadian economy today is being subjected to underlying, domestically-generated inflationary forces that are far more severe than those being experienced by most of our major trading partners.

In no small measure, the deep-seated problem now plaguing us is a product of our very success in maintaining economic activity at a considerably higher level than that in most other industrial nations. Had we suffered as severe and prolonged an economic contraction as countries such as the United States, Germany and Japan, it is virtually certain that we would also have experienced substantially less build-up of cost pressures. But because we as a nation escaped the constraints forcefully imposed on other countries by severe recession and were not prepared to join together in exercising some agreed measure of self-restraint, our underlying production costs have increased much more rapidly than those in countries such as the United States and Germany and still show no sign of decelerating significantly, as they do in Japan.

The real danger to our economy lies ahead. As countries like the United States, Germany and Japan pull out of their present deep recession, they can expect to enjoy very much higher productivity gains than Canada. The effect would be to widen substantially the differential between our unit costs and those of our major competitors.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is sometimes stressed that the threat to the competitive position of Canadian goods on domestic and foreign markets embodied in such measures can be offset by the depreciation of the Canadian dollar. Such a course brings but temporary relief. Dollar depreciation would simply increase the cost of imported goods and services, therefore intensifying inflationary pressures.

Dollar depreciation would bring but very limited and temporary relief to the more vulnerable areas of the Canadian economy, including our manufacturing industry whose competitive position may be more seriously affected by the so-called cost-push. But the basic reason is that continuous cost and price increases, coupled with constant erosion of our currency, offer no practical basis for a healthy and dynamic future economy. Such a course would intensify savings erosion, engulf money markets and hinder both the yield on new corporate investments and housing starts. These are the prime factors pointing to the necessity of controlling inflation in Canada.

[English]

During these past years of economic upheaval, much time and effort has been fruitlessly spent in an effort to point the finger at one group or another as the prime source of all our troubles, with business, labour and governments all being singled out, at one time or another, as leading candidates for the villain's role. I think it would be truer to say that all of us have been caught up by the turbulent new forces which have gripped our economy, adjusting and responding as best we knew how to meet our respective needs and responsibilities. In the process, however, we have collectively tried to take out of the economy more than it has provided. In doing so we have created serious problems for the future. Notwithstanding some of the rhetoric, I think the vast majority of Canadians are convinced that the time has come when we must all pull back.

As the white paper makes clear, Mr. Speaker, the program formulated by the government for attacking the major problems facing the economy encompasses four different elements. These involve the maintenance of a balance of fiscal and monetary policies that will encourage economic recovery and at the same time provide for gradual moderation of inflation; limitations on the growth of government expenditures and the size of the public service; structural policies aimed at ensuring the necessary supplies of energy, food and housing, increasing the efficiency and competitiveness of the economy and bringing about an improvement in labour-management relations; and, finally, adoption of a prices and incomes policy.

Let me deal first with the latter program. I will have an opportunity, when implementing legislation is introduced for debate on second reading, to go more thoroughly into the details, so today I will confine myself to a brief outline. In the white paper, the government has proposed an initial set of broad guidelines to provide a measure of what it considers to be reasonable and responsible behaviour in the determination of prices, profits, rents, wages, salaries, dividends, fees, commissions and similar types of income. The government strongly urges that all Canadians adhere to the guidelines, which become effective today, both in the national interest and ultimately in their own interest.

Unless we can work together with a firm sense of national purpose, we shall all be the worse off. The success of this policy—or of any other form of incomes policy—depends vitally on the readiness of the great majority of the people to comply with it voluntarily. To ensure that the public interest prevails, however, the program will be reinforced by federal administrative machinery established to monitor price and income developments throughout the economy. This proposed new administrative arm, backed as an ultimate resort by the firm sanctions of the law, will, in particular, oversee compliance with the guidelines by the larger economic interests which play such a dominant role in the establishment of cost-price patterns across Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, provincial governments whose contribution will be essential to the success of the program are requested to cooperate with the federal government by following the guidelines and ensuring that they are complied with by various provincial firms, organizations and communities. Besides doing everything they can to foster widespread support for that initiative among the general public, provinces are specifically requested to have rent increases and professional fees comply with those guidelines.

As I mentioned earlier, the legislation implementing the program as proposed by the government will provide the means of forcing top economic groups of Canada to comply with the guidelines. It will relate to firms or groups of related firms with over 500 employees and all construction companies with more than 20 employees as well as all those employed by those companies. Employees of groups of firms who will jointly negotiate agreements on an industrial scale will come within the provisions of that legislation as well as the firms which employ them. Professional individuals or firms will come under the provisions of the legislation. So will the federal government and every Crown corporation or other organization as well as their employees. Provincial governments, if they are willing to abide by those guidelines and have their organizations and municipalities comply with them will be free to do so or set up their own procedures. The legislation might also be applied to groups of seemingly vital importance for Canada through orders in council.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the statutory provision will apply to somewhat more than 1,500 firms, roughly 5 per cent of the total number of firms in Canada. Approximately 2,300,000 employees of private sector firms will be covered, around two-thirds of the total number of employed persons in the private industrial sector of the economy. Approximately another 2,000,000 employees of all federal, provincial and municipal governments and agencies, hospitals and schools will also be covered if all public bodies in the provinces also participate, which would bring the total number of employees subject to the statutory guidelines to 4,300,000.

The agency primarily responsible for supervising the guidelines program will be the anti-inflation board, which will be appointed initially by order-in-council under the Inquiries Act prior to its establishment under the authority of the legislation. It will be responsible for providing such clarification of the guidelines as may be necessary, monitoring their observance and pinpointing actual or proposed increases in prices or incomes which appear to exceed those guidelines.

It is also being proposed to the provinces that a special public sector panel be established under the anti-inflation board to consider questions relating to prices and incomes involving governments and their agencies. We are suggesting that some members of this panel be nominated by provincial governments. One of the functions of the board will be to carry out discussions with all parties involved in an effort to bring about compliance with the guidelines. If the issue cannot be resolved satisfactorily, the board may refer it to the enforcement authority designated as the administrator and appointed by order-in-council, who may take appropriate action under the law to bring about compliance. Decisions of the administrator may be appealed within 60 days to the anti-inflation appeal tribunal which will also be established under the legislation. Decisions of the administrator may also be changed by direction of the governor in council. Decisions of the tribunal may, in turn, be appealed to the Federal Court of Appeal.

As a general principle, the guidelines provide that increases in prices undertaken by companies should be no more than the net increase in their costs. The way in which this principle applies, however, will depend on the nature and size of the enterprise and the kind of business in which it is engaged. Firms which are able to allocate costs to individual products are expected to increase their prices by no more than the actual increase in their costs for such products and to decrease prices if their costs are reduced. Firms which are unable to allocate costs to individual products are asked to establish price levels which would yield a pre-tax profit margin no higher than 95 per cent of its average profit margin over the last five fiscal years.

Different guidelines will apply to the distribution sector, which follows different pricing practices. As a general rule, retail and wholesale firms are expected not to increase customary mark-ups on various kinds of merchandise.

Banks and other financial institutions will be expected to follow the general rule, increasing service charges or interest rates only sufficiently to cover increases in their operating costs and other expenses, or increases in the interest rates which they pay for funds on deposit or borrowed.

As the House will appreciate, a difficult problem arises in the case of companies which sell a significant proportion of their output in the export market. As a general rule, such companies will be expected to sell abroad at the prevailing international market price, to sell in the domestic market at a price that is consistent with the guidelines, and to ensure that the Canadian market is fully supplied at that domestic price. Following discussions with those concerned, the government plans to impose a special levy in cases where the over-all profit margins of such companies exceed guideline limits. Prices received by farmers and fishermen on their products will be exempt from the guidelines. But we will be holding discussions with the provincial governments about the operations of agricultural marketing boards to ensure that their operations are consistent with the guidelines.

• (1610)

Turning to the question of incomes, the guidelines proposed will be governed by four main elements. The first is a basic protection factor which initially provides for income increases of 8 per cent in the first year of new contracts, 6 per cent in the second and 4 per cent in the third. The second factor provides for a further increase of 2 percentage points to take account of the long-term growth of productivity. For the average worker, therefore, the guidelines provide an increase in remuneration of 10 per cent. For employees who have fallen behind the increase in consumer prices over the past two or three years, the guidelines make provision for a catch-up increase of up to 2 per cent per year, bringing the maximum permissible increase to 12 per cent in the first year.

In the case of employees whose income over the past few years has risen by more than consumer prices, the permissible increase this year would be reduced by up to 2 percentage points, with the result that the maximum permissible gain would be no more than 8 per cent in the first year. In the event the actual increase in consumer prices exceeds the basic protection factor in one period, the permissible increases in a succeeding period would be raised so as to make it possible for the income of employees to keep pace with the rise in the cost of living.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, increases already granted are not affected by these guidelines. Also excluded will be agreements executed before the start of 1974 that have expired and are now being renegotiated.

The fourth point in the guidelines is the provision about minimum and maximum increases. At the lower end of the income ladder workers may get income increases up to $600 irrespective of the general guidelines. As to the upper income groups the ceiling for the average maximum increase is set at $2,400.

As I said earlier those guidelines would apply to those providing specialized services, and provincial governments are urged to use all their power to ensure the observation of those guidelines.

In that program the government intends to undertake intensive talks with the provinces as well as business, labour and other sectors. The guidelines set out in that policy statement were intended as "first" steps; we wanted thus to show that we are prepared to change certain things either following questions raised in Parliament or during the talks we are planning to have with all those concerned. We are entering a brand new area with which none of us are familiar; there will surely be difficulties and thorny issues. So it is important to maintain consultation and coordinate our efforts to solve the problems and difficulties that will come up.

[English]

The details involving the guidelines will be spelled out in regulations to be drawn up under the implementing legislation being submitted to parliament. In general terms, the guidelines are effective as of today, but the government recognizes that some uncertainty is bound to arise about their applications in a host of special circumstances. We will try to provide the necessary clarification as soon as possible. In the interval, particular care should be taken, especially by those subject to enforcement provisions, to ensure that any increases in prices or incomes are clearly within the intent of the guidelines. In this connection, I am hereby giving formal notice of intent that the guidelines to be established by regulation under the anti-inflation act, when adopted by parliament, are applicable as of today.

No one should be under any illusion, Mr. Speaker, that the prices and incomes policy we have proposed will bring about any substantial reduction quickly in the inflation that is so deeply embedded in our system. We have every reason to hope, however, that barring any new shocks from abroad it will serve to halt and gradually reverse the present spiral of costs and prices.

I should now like to deal with some of the broader questions that undoubtedly will be raised in connection with the prices and incomes program for which we are asking support from both parliament and the nation. It has been contended in some quarters, both inside and outside the House, that the government should have taken action long before now to establish some form of prices and incomes policy. There were others, of course, who argued equally as strongly against such a course, some of whom still continue to do so. In our view, the proposal for imposition of comprehensive, mandatory price and income controls that some urged on us 2½ years ago was very much the wrong policy at the wrong time. Such controls could not possibly have been effective in holding back the tidal wave of inflation sweeping over this country from abroad.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not ask hon. members to believe me, but I am sure they will listen to the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) in that particular regard.

An hon. Member: How about John Turner?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Such controls would also have been ineffective because in our judgment the strong public support essential to their success did not at that time exist. Indeed, the experience a few years ago in the United Kingdom, when determined opposition to controls brought the British economy to its knees, harshly demonstrated that controls can work very much against the interests of the economy if they are not firmly backed by the great majority of the people.

About a year ago it became apparent that the nature of the inflationary problem had begun to change, with the strongest inflationary pressures increasingly being generated at home rather than from abroad. The changing nature of the problem called for a changed response. Members will recall that the government devoted a great deal of time and effort over a period of several months in trying to reach agreement among various groups in our economy on a fair and equitable means of restraining increases in prices and incomes.

All groups recognized the severity of the problem posed by inflation, and we made considerable progress in developing a generally acceptable set of guidelines. Indeed, hon. members will recognize in the guidelines in the white paper the documents tabled by my predecessor in this House on May 8. In the end, however, we were unable to reach an understanding because of persistent doubt about whether the guidelines, if adopted, would in fact be observed.

Following the conclusion of our earlier efforts to secure an understanding on prices and incomes restraint, we were reluctant to contemplate some form of direct intervention by the government because there still remained some reason to hope that the spiral of costs and prices would begin to abate, and because of our judgment that the necessary public support for such intervention did not exist. With each passing month it has become increasingly apparent that inflationary pressures have been intensifying rather than receding. It has become clear beyond any reasonable doubt, both to the government and to the great majority of Canadians, that it has now become absolutely essential to take decisive action to bring inflation under control.

The second major question that is bound to be debated is our intention of confining enforcement of the guidelines to the large economic groups within the economy, rather than establishing a comprehensive mandatory control system. We chose to follow this course because we wished to intervene as little as possible in the operations of the economy and in the lives of Canadians. We have sought to frame a selective system subject to enforcement that is flexible and reasonably manageable, one that will have the least adverse effect possible in distorting and disrupting the regular workings of our economy.

At the same time, we believe that the system we have proposed will be effective in achieving its purpose by ensuring the exercise of restraint by those groups which possess exceptional power to impose excessive price and income increases on other groups in the economy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to touch briefly on the other elements that form part of the framework of policy required to strengthen the foundation of our economy. It is, of course, of critical importance that our fiscal and monetary policies be properly geared to maintain the economy on an even keel. In our judgment, the set of fiscal policies established in the June budget and the prevailing stance of monetary policy provide a reasonable balance in current economic circumstances. As we have learned from recent experience, however, economic circumstances can change swiftly and drastically. We are, therefore, very conscious of the need to stand ready to make changes in fiscal and monetary policies as they are required to respond to changing conditions.

During the past few years there has been a substantial increase in government expenditures, particularly at the federal level. As I suggested earlier, a very large part of this increase has been the consequence of measures adopted by governments to cushion the impact of both the sharply increased cost of living and of higher unemployment on Canadians, particularly those most adversely affected, and to offset the adverse effect on the economy as a whole of inflation and recession.

If we are to bring the underlying problem of inflation under control, however, it is now essential to do everything reasonably possible to restrain the further growth of government spending. In the budget last June, the government outlined substantial reductions that were being made in controllable expenditures in the current fiscal year to provide an offset for increases in outlays that could not be avoided either because of contractual or moral commitments or to meet requirements essential to the well-being of the economy and of the Canadian people.

The substantial increase in government expenditures in recent years has unavoidably been accompanied by a substantial increase in the size of the public service. The June budget cut the projected growth for the current fiscal year from 4.1 per cent to 3.1 per cent. In the next fiscal year the increase in the federal public service will be restricted to 1.5 per cent. Essential increases in some areas will be largely offset by reductions in others, with the result that the majority of government departments will be permitted fewer man-years in 1976-77 than was the case in 1974-75. We believe that it should be the objective of all governments to limit the growth of public spending to the growth of gross national production. That will be our basic aim in the preparation of spending plans for the next fiscal year and the years beyond that.

The final element of the program relates to structural adjustments that need to be made in the economy to improve its capacity to provide certain essential supplies that we will require in future and to make our economic system more innovative, dynamic and efficient by reducing existing rigidities and intensifying competition.

The need to bring about a substantial reduction in the overall rate of inflation is made all the more pressing by the fact that certain relative price increases are unavoidable over time, increases that we can absorb without undue hardship if we can restore strong real growth of our national wealth. Phased increases in the price of energy, for example, are essential to meet the soaring cost of finding, developing and marketing the new energy sources that will be required in future to meet our needs for heat, light and power. Such increases are equally essential over time to promote more efficient use of our energy resources. In prevailing circumstances of much lower petroleum prices in Canada than abroad, it becomes all the more important to intensify other efforts to conserve energy consumption.

The substantially increased cost of housing must also be met if construction of the new residential units required for our growing population is to be undertaken. As the white paper stated, the federal government will shortly announce proposals for the provision of special new incentives to encourage increased housing construction. We will also be discussing with the provinces means of increasing the supply of serviced land for housing in order to put a damper on soaring land costs.

Higher prices for certain foods may also be unavoidable if farmers are to receive a return that is sufficient to cover their sharply rising costs and yield a fair and reasonable income to compensate for all their labours and investment. At the same time, however, we must also ensure that our price and marketing system are not structured to maintain inefficient agricultural production and distribution.

The government plans to bring forward at an early date the second phase of its policy to strengthen competitiveness of our economy, which is the surest guarantee of its efficient and effective operation. Together with provincial governments and other interested parties, we propose to scrutinize a wide variety of government policies and programs in an effort to find ways of reducing rigidities and costs that they may impose unnecessarily on various sectors of the economy. The recently established tripartite

Canada Labour Relations Council hopefully can make an important contribution to the improvement of industrial relations in this country, which is also required to bolster the effectiveness and efficiency of our economic system.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to underline one fundamental point, a point that is also emphasized in the white paper. Whatever differences of interest may exist between the various sectors that make up our economy are far outweighed by the common interest we all share in seeing that strong and stable growth of output, employment and the standard of living of Canadians is restored. It is, therefore, very much in the interest of every group to work together to achieve these national objectives.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): First, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to direct my comments to the new Minister of State (Mr. Marchand), previously Minister of Transport. I am sorry that he is not here today. Ten years ago, he decided to make the move to federal politics to reinforce national unity within confederation. With all his strength, he vigorously denounced separatism in Quebec. He also worked at making the two founding peoples of this country equal partners who now share fully in our national life. He accepted his heavy responsibilities with conviction, determination and courage. This man can be proud of his task and his work which was often thankless. The preoccupations and responsibilities of political life throughout the years have marked him and have affected his health. This led him to accept to play a less prominent role in the future. I had occasion to criticize the legislation that he defended and I have often doubted his administrative capacities.

Today, I wish to pay him a particular and personnal homage and to tell him that I respect him very profoundly and that I admire him sincerely. His fights throughout the years to defend certain fundamental principles put him in a very special class. I would like him to know that I have always shared the profound aspirations which have guided his political action. I hope that he will long stay with us and I wish him a very speedy recovery.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, our new Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has made quite a spectacular entrance into this job. I congratulate him on this appointment and I congratulate the new ministers, the switched ministers, the new parliamentary secretaries and the quiet-spoken new whip on the other side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I sincerely wish the new Minister of Finance well. I know he will appreciate that the doubts and concerns that I express today are something more than partisan in intent. I must say about him that he seems to be a quick learner. He has learned quickly from his predecessor, who has shown on more than one occasion that there are things worth lifting from time to time from this side of the House.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I will miss some of the stellar performances of the former minister of finance. As he is probably aware, I have been inviting him to schedule a further performance at the earliest opportunity. I do not know whether we are going to hear from him in the course of the day, but I understand there are already some who thought that perhaps the minister had resigned because he felt the government was not tough enough and who have, since last evening, begun to wonder whether the former minister of finance resigned because he thought the government has gone too far and is too tough, particularly in view of some of the scathing things which the former minister of finance said from time to time about compulsory price and wage controls. I look to the minister to clarify his position at the very earliest opportunity.

Mr. Broadbent: You can wait.

Mr. Stanfield: There are some unpleasant things which have to be said today about the record of this government and the process by which it has come to the point of presenting this white paper today. I want to assure the House and the people in Canada that today and in the days ahead as this new program unfolds, my observations and criticisms are, and will be, directed toward making the government work to help make our society work. Some might think that this is an occasion of pretty substantial vindication of my party and myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Personally, I do not take very much pleasure in that. I have been vindicated so many times before that I do not take much pleasure from it now, not because I do not enjoy being vindicated, not because I dislike it, but because I believe that the reluctant and belated confirmation of a diagnosis does not necessarily ensure that the real cure is on the way. I would feel very much better if the medical staff on the case had a far better record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I am relieved by the fact that the government is finally doing something, but I remain concerned that it has taken so long to take any kind of action, and I am, quite frankly, very dubious about the government's fundamental sincerity. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on television and here in the House, has done very little so far to purge me of my doubts. I say very bluntly to you, sir—and I have to say this—that I believe very little of what this government says.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I say that this government's biggest challenge in getting any program off the ground is to get Canadians to believe what it says. If the government is going into this endeavour under the impression that its credibility is high, and that by and large things will sort of come together, if it shows us the kind of cavalier behaviour which it has adopted so many times in the past, this country will be headed for literally terrible consequences, because the official opposition in this House has no monopoly on doubt and suspicion with regard to this government or with regard to this government's program. Those who have been suffering the most will question why the government has waited until those who are best able to look after themselves have done so by and large. Those who have lost ground, particularly those who have lost jobs, will wonder how far off renewed opportunities are for them, and whether catching up will ever be a realistic prospect for them.

Trust and confidence have been injured in our society. There are difficult times ahead for our economy. They will not be quickly or easily healed. They will not be healed at all if the government appears to be less than frank or less than fair-minded as it proceeds with this endeavour. No amount of bureaucracy and no exercise of power will be any substitute for frankness, openness and exemplary conduct on the part of this government. If that is not forthcoming, then the whole exercise will do nothing more than compound the injury that has already been done—and that would indeed be tragic.

The government comes to the House today and seeks support for its general outline of this program. There is no vote involved, just the assessment and comments which will be put forward in the course of today's debate. So far as the white paper is concerned, it is a pretty superficial treatment of what is a very complex matter. But I will not be critical about that today; I simply say that the white paper obviously raises far more questions than it answers—and you can be sure that I am familiar with the questions involved because I have probably been asked more questions on this than anybody else in the country: I am perhaps still the ranking expert in terms of questions about this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There is legislation to come in the next days and weeks. This House will be dealing in greater detail with the substance of this program, perhaps piece by piece or perhaps all together: we do not know today. Today I will not attempt to go into detail. Rather, I want briefly to deal with the recent history in the present context of this move by the government. Earlier I said that I could believe very little of what this government says, and that, sir, is just another example of my gift for understatement.

I am prepared to concede that the government may not face quite the degree of difficulty in getting some of what it says believed in the country at large as it will have in getting me to believe it, because the country at large has not sat here in the House in my seat for eight years watching "Cynicism Incorporated." The country at large was not here following the 1972 election when the former minister of finance surfaced after an election, implementing measures which he had said during the campaign would bankrupt the country. There was a modest increase in old age pensions, some needed tax cuts and, of course, tax indexing. It was quite a turn-around show following the election of 1972. It was quite a show indeed, if one likes that sort of thing. It was slick, smooth and totally devoid of principle.

• (1640)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In some judgments, that sort of thing is nothing more than clever politics. In my book, judgments of that nature are just as shallow as the acts themselves. I do not want to make myself out to be qualified to moralize, but I do believe that a great part of the problem of distrust which runs through our society today has been created by overdoses of that kind of politics and those kinds of judgments.

When we get right down to it, we are really dealing with a moral issue in what is before us. I am sure the Prime Minister realizes this, but I am not sure that he and his government recognize that they have to come to grips with it in their own behaviour. I know that the economic and social objectives will not be met unless there is some confidence abroad that the Prime Minister and the government are coming to grips with this issue and the fact that they are not an exception to the moral principles with which we are dealing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This is an unspoken component of leadership which will have a great bearing on the success or failure of the government's initiative of intervention which is outlined in this white paper, and it cannot be a "sometime" thing, if there is to be any change of bringing this country together in a shared, sincere attempt to improve conditions in our society.

Here, again, I say that this government in its recent record does not inspire my confidence. The way the announcement of this program was handled was disturbingly reminiscent to me of the kind of thing we saw when the crunch was on in the petroleum crisis. When that finally hit home to the Prime Minister and his colleagues, despite years of forewarning, they put on a great act at having been taken by surprise. Then there was a flurry of activity and exhortations and the Prime Minister went on television and solemnly said a few things. It was a very impressive drama.

Today, we are evidently right back where we started, again living in a fool's paradise as far as energy policy and practices are concerned. The minister touched on energy policy this afternoon. Where is the vaunted conservation program which was to emerge from that crisis? Where are the benefit-sharing arrangements with the Atlantic provinces and Quebec? Where is the adequate research program on alternate sources of energy? Today, those Canadians who can afford to are wasting just as much energy as ever. The government has not followed through on its own initiative and what was alleged to be leadership at that time.

After his television appearance on that occasion, the Prime Minister virtually dropped from public view. Are we going to see the same thing happen this time? The then minister of energy, mines and resources—who is on the hot seat again today—was front and centre on television, promoting the distribution of a booklet which did not even exist at that time, a booklet supposedly being produced by a conservation office which took ages to staff.

Rising prices have constituted the only actual incentive to energy conservation we have seen in this country. Conservation is being practised by those who cannot afford not to practise it. The white paper essentially acknowledges that. This is certainly not providing leadership by example. On the contrary, as far as this government is concerned, if one wants to see an example of perverse construction for the Canadian climate one does not have to look any farther than two blocks west, at the new Bank of Canada building.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The limousines roll on; ministerial car pools have faded away like mentions of the just society. Conservation is demonstrably an endangered species within the confines of the operations of this government. Wasteful trappings for show have been the rule rather than the exception. If the Prime Minister and his colleagues hope to have any real chance of being taken seriously this time around with this general restraint program, they had better quickly show Canadians that they can mend their own ways as far as energy policy is concerned.

I say to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Finance, "Don't try to snow us. Show us."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I understand that the Prime Minister will be speaking in this debate. I do not know whether I will hear him or not, because I made a commitment to accept a dinner engagement with Dr. Kissinger—another great man—but I will read what the Prime Minister has to say if I should, regretfully, miss hearing him in this debate. I hope he will take the opportunity to deal with some of the fears, doubts and suspicions which his record, more than anything else, has raised.

The energy area is not the only recent example of the Prime Minister's starting something off with a good deal of flair, and then appearing to have tired of it and abandoning the whole thing. This was true, for example, in the consensus exercise to which the Minister of Finance referred today. Early in that game the Prime Minister gave assurances to the House that he accepted the top level responsibility for that program. He certainly did nothing to alter the widespread presumptions that he would remain very personally involved in it, using the weight of his office and the strength of his talents to bring it all off.

Whether this was what the Prime Minister intended the perception to be, this is in fact what the perception was and the Prime Minister must surely have been aware of that. It subsequently appeared that he withdrew from participation in that program. This was when I began to be convinced that the whole consensus operation was a sham. The Prime Minister may recall that my colleagues and I started out prepared to support that effort as we understood it in its broad terms. In that case we never got beyond broad terms, and the Prime Minister never appeared to go beyond the very short term as far as involvement was concerned, so we ended up with nothing that deserved support. As it turned out, we were not alone in that view when the last act hit the stage.

Now we are looking at a program which involves much bigger stakes and the same kind of presumptions have already been made about the involvement of the Prime Minister as were made when the so-called consensus exercise began. If those presumptions are in error, the Prime Minister might as well tell us so today. If the presumptions are well founded, he should let us know as much as he can about the planned extent of his own involvement in this general restraint program in the coming months. Let there be no nonsense or kidding ourselves with regard to this matter. The Prime Minister has conditioned the country to a personal style of administration. I mean no slight to the Minister of Finance or any other minister in the government when I say that there is no question about who runs the government: it is the Prime Minister. The kind of effort which he put into the 1974 election campaign is the kind of effort he will have to make not only to launch this general restraints program but to sustain it, fortify it and reinforce it in the months ahead. That is absolutely essential. It is, also, absolutely essential that the Prime Minister should quickly get over any indigestion he may suffer in having swallowed himself in the course of announcing this program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There is really no room in this exercise for integrated rationalization, revisions of history, stretches of imagination or preoccupation with trying to grasp straws in self-justification. We heard the new Minister of Finance go through this whole thing again here this afternoon. This is a program of general, large-scale mandatory price and income controls and it is going to be tough enough to live with knowing what it is, without the Prime Minister contorting himself to say that it is not what it is.

Let me say this. We have said for some time that an anti-inflationary program must be comprehensive, that a program of controls, short-term controls, has a certain role to play, but they have to be reinforced with other measures which include appropriate fiscal and monetary policy. The Minister of Finance touched on this briefly today.

I read a sentence in the white paper which I wish I had had more time, in the course of a busy day, to try to figure out. Perhaps if I read it here, the Prime Minister can explain later exactly what it means. The passage says that the federal government shares the view that the trend of total spending by all governments in Canada should not rise more quickly than the trend of the gross national product. What does that mean, Mr. Speaker?

An hon. Member: It is trendy.

Mr. Stanfield: It may be trendy; but if I ever read a weasel sentence, that is it. I think it must have been written by the Department of Justice.

Furthermore, we have insisted that any such program must be equitable and it must be seen to be equitable. That is why I am pleased that the Prime Minister gave the assurance that ministers of the Crown and all the rest of us in this House would be kept within the general guidelines even though technically, because of some statutory arrangement, we might have been able to avoid the guidelines. This is very important.

The only other specific aspect of the program that I wish to refer to today is the duration, because in the course of considering the bill we will be looking at the equity of the various proposals, some of which are concerning the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and others of which are concerning some of my colleagues. We will have an opportunity, when the bill is before the House, to consider these specifics in detail.

I want to speak briefly today about the duration of the program, because member after member on the other side of the House, and minister after minister—including the Prime Minister—have kept on saying that even if mandatory price and income controls are accepted by the public, they will not get at the root cause of inflation; any benefit that they might achieve is of short-term duration. They have said this so often that they must say it in their sleep. I, personally, advocated short-term controls during 1973 and 1974, particularly during the election campaign, because I believed, in the circumstances which existed, that short-term, general controls on prices and incomes for a period of roughly 18 to 24 months could break the inflationary expectations that existed and could provide a framework which would enable us to fight inflation on a long-term basis, and a framework, also, within which we could continue to expand our economy and fight regional disparities.

I put it forward on this short-term basis. I emphasized at that time, as I have throughout most of my adult life, that I am opposed to long-term, comprehensive controls on prices and incomes because it is very clear this would lead to a different kind of economy than we have; that long-term controls would lead to a high degree of centralization of power and control in the hands of a few officials in Ottawa. That is not the kind of Canada I want to see, and I do not think it is the kind most Canadians want to see. I do not want to be a party to bringing it about. Yet the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and all the others who not only a year ago, but since then, ridiculed short-term controls and ridiculed this whole procedure as having, at best, very short-term benefits, are not putting before the House a program that goes beyond short-term controls. One would have to say these are controls of medium term, in terms of durability. It is nonsense for anybody to suggest these are different because they are voluntary. They are not voluntary; they are compulsory.

I hope that if the Prime Minister and the government persist in this "long-term" kind of talk, persist in seeking authority for these long-term controls of at least twice the duration of the sort of thing my party had in mind, they will at least be prepared to make provision for a parliamentary review of the controls and how they are working, providing an opportunity of parliamentary recall, say at the end of 18 months or two years. I just cannot understand how a Prime Minister and ministers who ridiculed the possible benefits of short-term controls, and exaggerated the dangers of those short-term controls, can now come before this House and, to use a very common and perhaps vulgar expression, have the gall to ask this parliament to delegate to a board and the governor in council these extensive powers lasting over a very substantial period of time.

These are not voluntary controls. What is to be gained by the Prime Minister going on television and trying to have this thing both ways; trying to say, "We are acting. We are doing things firmly and, after all, it is only voluntary and we are only interfering with a few people"? That is an insult to the intelligence of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is a bad start. This is essentially, in principle and in practice, the kind of program that the government said a year ago, and has been saying many times since then, would not work. The government said that kind of program would not work and had not worked anywhere; that it had been tried elsewhere but would not be accepted by Canadians. Let there be no doubt about it; this is exactly the kind of program the government said would never work anywhere and would not be accepted by Canadians.

• (1700)

Mr. Wagner: That's Liberal morality.

Mr. Stanfield: Anyone who says this is a different kind of program should look at the questions and answers contained in the transcripts of 20 or 30 of my 1974 election news conferences.

I say to the government, do not persist in these silly games. Semantics designed to fit the square peg of infallibility into the round hole of reality will not get anyone anywhere. I say to the government, do not waste everybody's time and do not further try everybody's patience. The government won the election with means they must live with, but they will not win the present battle against Canada's tremendous economic problems with anything less than honesty with the Canadian people.

I will not be around here much longer in my present capacity to rub the government's nose in it, so why not play it straight and give this program a better chance of success than the government has given it by indulging in all this pretence? The government is under the duty to play it straight for a change. Just look at how the government allowed things to drift in the last 15 months since the election while it tried to stall off the inevitable, or at least buy time for a decent interval before swallowing itself. That precious time was unconscionably wasted and cannot be recovered.

Over the course of that time, things got more and more out of hand. A week before the resignation of the former minister of finance, the Bank of Canada announced a substantial increase, from 8.25 per cent to 9 per cent, in the bank rate. The Bank of Canada's actions are, of course, determined in the context of the general economic policies of this country's government. The Bank of Canada does not operate as a thing unto itself. I was dismayed by its action, particularly as a maritimer.

Speaking in the absence of any explanation by anyone in the cabinet, the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey, later addressed the annual meeting of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. What he said boiled down to three things: first, deepening inflation in Canada is a very critical problem and it is not being taken seriously enough; second, the Bank of Canada's duty is to safeguard the integrity of the Canadian dollar in a psychological climate where the value and stability of money itself is not trusted; third, the continuing drift must be halted and reversed at virtually any cost in terms of unemployment and hardship. He said we cannot have any realistic hope of achieving sustained economic growth in the long run unless we bring inflation under control. The governor's words and the Bank of Canada's actions constitute a clear condemnation of the inaction of the government for more than one year following the attainment of its mandate for leadership in the 1974 election; and it is not as if no one had warned the government that it had better take humane and sensible action much earlier.

Throughout 1973 and up to and through the 1974 election campaign, we stressed that a priority objective of the program we were proposing was the encouragement of growth and the improvement of employment prospects in the country. As I said earlier in the context of suggesting a program to fight inflation, that could have been accomplished if the government had had the guts and heart to seize its responsibilities in 1974. We said that productivity and jobs could be pursued in a climate of stability if quick and comprehensive action was taken. We said that with conditions as they were, a move to achieve stability and maintain orderly growth was worth the price of a temporary intervention program. But now, Madam Speaker, in the autumn of 1975, we face the worst of both worlds—widespread and prolonged intervention and another massive economic slowdown.

It is said that justice delayed is justice denied. The acceptance of responsibility too long delayed has led to irresponsibility through default. The government diddled and dawdled along and let things get so far out of hand that we are mired where we are today. The Minister of Finance need not try to persuade me that this country's economic conditions require action by this government. I do not know who he thinks he is talking about when he speaks of people who think conditions in this country look pretty good. He must be far up some ivory tower. The less prosperous parts of our country are in for another pounding. Small business will again be hit most severely. The new Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) knows that as well as I do. He knows, as I do, the disastrous effects of harsh monetary policy on his part of the country and mine. The Atlantic provinces have been through all this before, as have other areas of slow growth of this country. They are the first to feel the effects and the last to recover from the damage, damage which offsets federal help through DREE assistance.

If the government wants co-operation in its effort, let it deal frankly and with some humility with this aspect of its economic policy. The word "voluntary" is meaningless in this context. What is voluntary about a small businessman's reaction to sky-high interest rates? He either pays them and stays afloat a little longer, or he does not pay them and goes under right away. Let us not have any more weasel-words from the other side of the House. Let us have a frank admission from the Prime Minister about the government's contribution to our problems. Since 1968, his government has been a major force in both eroding the value of the Canadian dollar and raising the cost of borrowing. The Prime Minister talks about people demanding too much from the economy. Let him take a good look at what his government has demanded from our economy, and let him tell the House why he chose to make campaign promises last year worth between $3 billion and $4 billion. What does he think about that now?

The government's approach to restraint in its June budget was another outright sham—transparently so. Not many were prepared to take it as a serious demonstration of leadership by example. That is the record to date. That is the pattern which the government has shown the country, with the Prime Minister occasionally popping up on television at some dramatic moment. This is the record and this is the pattern. This is what the Prime Minister and his government have to overcome if they are to have any chance at all of making a go of what they have announced.

• (1710)

My party is in the position, today, of extending support to the general intentions of this program as expressed in the white paper before us. Quite simply, common sense and the welfare of the country demand that we do. We do not at this time go beyond that. Any support for the actions of the government in the days ahead will have to be earned, and judgments on that score will be governed by the factors I have outlined.

I am pleased to be able to say, without immodesty, Madam Speaker, that my party has honestly tried to fulfil its own obligation to Canadians. We have dealt frankly and openly with the country and we will continue to do so. Whatever this may have cost us politically would not begin to measure up to the cost to our country if, from this point forward, the government fails to do so.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Housing—Possibility of extending rehabilitation program and increasing funds available; the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche)—Transport—Urban transportation assistance program—Definition of words "commuter system".

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Madam Speaker, before I deal directly with the subject matter for debate this afternoon, I wish to join the colleagues of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in expressing my personal admiration for the very exceptional job the leader of the Conservative party did for his party on the question of intellectual, moral and political integrity in the 1974 election campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I am sincere when I say that there are times in politics when losers contribute much more to the image of a politician than do winners.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Although we had very serious disagreements with the policy of wage and price controls that were argued for at the time of the 1974 election campaign by the leader of the Conservative party, as indeed did many of his supporters, I have been told on good authority—perhaps this is not known—that during the early stages of that campaign some Conservative members had done a survey and found out that the issue was not popular. There was real concern that perhaps they should shift ground and abandon the policy in mid-campaign. Certain political parties in this country, and certain political leaders, would not be above doing precisely that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I am told that the immediate, serious and sober response to that suggestion by the Conservative party's leader was that he would have none of it; that he was committed to the program, he believed in it and would stick with it. That kind of political leadership is something that democratic societies frequently lack. It is something to which his colleagues were paying tribute today, and I join them in that tribute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Turning more directly to the subject at hand, the opposite kind of attitude has been conveyed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In 1974, the Prime Minister went to the people of Canada with a whole series of promises. He did not do that in 1968. At that time he had a sort of playboy image, the politician who liked to smile and dance. That was such a bizarre experience for Canadians that they voted for him in very substantial numbers. In 1972, he campaigned as a philosopher king. He did not want to talk about such mundane matters as housing, the cost of living and unemployment. He was almost defeated. Perhaps he and his government should have been defeated in 1972.

• (1720)

Mr. Trudeau: Why did you support us for a year and a half, then?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, that is what we did, and it was a good thing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: In 1974, he went to the country with a good program, a program which very many people took seriously; the people seriously believed in it. He made categorical promises for the first time. He said we could expect a new urban policy involving financial assistance of various kinds, including funds for rapid transit development. He promised a new transportation policy which would redress the legitimate grievances of western Canadians with regard to freight rates. He undertook to deal with the freight rate structure and give Canada an over-all transportation policy. Nothing whatever has been done about that, either.

Then, again, just before the election he admitted in Vancouver that there was a housing crisis—those were his words—and led us to believe that something would be done about it. But nothing has been done. He told us during the 1974 campaign that he was concerned about the degree of foreign ownership and he made a commitment that 50 per cent of investment in the resource sector from that time on would be Canadian. As we saw when we got part II of the foreign investment review legislation at the end of the summer, that idea also went out of the window. Virtually every policy he had been talking about—urban policy, transportation, housing, foreign ownership—all the great promises of the 1974 campaign have been cynically dismissed.

The Liberals, above all, claim they can give the country economic leadership. This was the basis upon which they challenged the Conservative party. They were critical of the proposal of prices and incomes control put forward by the Leader of the Opposition. It is true that we shared in that criticism. But the main contention of the Prime Minister and his colleagues was that they alone could really manage the Canadian economy. However, what has happened in terms of economic leadership generally?

Bear in mind that we in Canada enjoy many advantages which are not common to all industrial countries. We have important natural resources at our disposal, unlike a number of western industrialized countries. We possess sufficient sources of energy to supply our industrial machine. We are able to call upon a well educated and well trained labour force. In short, we enjoy advantages which would have enabled us to make a real impact in terms of economic recovery in the last year and a half if only we had had a government willing to show economic leadership. But we have not had such a government. In the 18 months since the election, unemployment has risen; it has not gone down. The cost of living has gone up, not down as the Prime Minister promised; it has been increasing at the rate of 11 per cent. Housing starts have consistently declined. Mortgage interest rates have consistently gone up, not down as they should.

In terms of economic growth, the last six quarters in the period since the election have shown negative results, stagnation in every quarter of the six except one, and in that quarter I believe the growth rate was one-quarter of one per cent. That is the measure of economic leadership which members opposite have provided. That is what the management team on the other side—that gifted group, as they like to think of themselves as being—managed to do with the best trained labour force and the best situation when it comes to natural resources that one could imagine.

As to the speech which the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) read a short while ago, it might just as easily have been read by his successor. I do not blame the hon. gentleman directly; his speechwriters prepared the text. The point is that when it speaks of the government's economic performance, it still does so in self-congratulatory terms. Instead of coming here and saying, "We have made serious mistakes; various things have gone wrong; certain policies did not turn out to be the right ones, and we therefore intend to change things," the Liberals never admit they do anything wrong. They say, "We are still doing better than anybody else, but for some peculiar reason, despite how well we have done, we are now going to turn through 180 degrees."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Turning to the program which has been put forward today, I intend to deal with it in terms of five specific criticisms. I wish to make it clear, though, that our party does not accept the view that the most acute economic problem we have to deal with now is inflation. We agree that inflation is a matter of very serious concern and that it has to be dealt with, but we are very disturbed to see a white paper presented to us today which has been described as merely an attack on inflation rather than as a package intended to deal with both inflation and unemployment.

After all, this is a country with one of the highest levels of persistent unemployment in the industrialized world—over 700,000 of our people are currently out of work—and it should surely be the concern of the government to deal with unemployment as well as inflation. So, while I intend to concentrate my criticism on the anti-inflation program, let me say that we in our party do not in any way agree with the government that the overwhelming attention it is directing to the issue of inflation is the proper position to have taken.

First, I want to deal with the proposal for price control which the government has introduced. There is a claim that the procedure to be followed will, in itself, be sufficient for full control over prices to be realized. In the view of our party, this is simply not the case. I intend to outline the way in which the government proposes to operate, if I understand its intentions correctly, and then go on to suggest reasons why we do not feel its proposals will work.

We are told that firms able to allocate costs to individual products will, in principle, be required to maintain a constant per unit profit level in dollar terms. Firms which are unable to allocate costs to individual products will be assessed on a total profit basis; they will, in principle, be required to hold down their percentage pre-tax net profit margin to a level no greater than 95 per cent of the last five-year average.

For firms engaged in distribution at the retail and wholesale levels, the profit guideline is based on gross profit margins—profit as a percentage of sales. Let us not be misled by the rather technical language which is being used here. In our view, this is not enforceable as a price control mechanism, whatever side benefits it might have. First of all, if these guidelines are to be enforced in any effective way, an army of bureaucrats will be required far in excess of the resources which the government is apparently willing to commit to this exercise. We are not in favour of hiring a lot of bureaucrats, but we say that if you are going to enforce this kind of proposal you must hire many more people than the 500 which is the figure I have heard used in respect of the number the government plans to hire, or otherwise you will not have the people to do the checking.

• (1730)

Secondly, in our view the companies concerned will have virtually unlimited opportunities to use their high-priced accountants and clever corporation lawyers to manipulate their books and pad their costs in ways which will allow them to circumvent the intent of the guidelines. This is a crucial point. In this sense I do not question the honesty of the corporations. I am saying that if you have a law which depends for its enforcement on the determination of certain profit levels and it is to the advantage of a corporation to see profit levels in a different way, you can be sure it will look for every conceivable and legal way of getting around these guidelines by redefining its profits.

We in this party are convinced that the experience of other countries would indicate that not only have corporations been able to get around such mechanisms, there, but we can fully expect them to do so here.

Thirdly, the government makes it clear that retailers and wholesalers will be permitted to raise prices of individual products without hinderances, subject only to the condition that should the board decide some day to make an inquiry into their operations, the particular retailer or wholesaler involved would only have to demonstrate that its total profits were within the guidelines.

Firms are expected to refrain from increasing the price of a product more frequently than once every three months, except where this would impose a hardship on the firm, in addition to which, and I quote from page 17 of the white paper, "Retailers and wholesalers will be exempt from this requirement". They are not going to be required to abide by the general rule, which is a crucial one, in terms of enforcement of price control mechanisms of this kind.

Fourthly, the white paper says that firms will be allowed to exceed the profit guidelines if the excess profit results from "unusual productivity gains resulting from the efforts of the firm, or of favourable cost developments". That is found on page 19 of the white paper.

What does that mean? That refers to any kind of innovative technique for increasing profit-making capacity which, during the productive stage of an activity, will enable the firm to get whatever profits it can, or attain whatever level of profit the market will bear. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) thinks I am wrong in that statement I would like him to correct me. That certainly is my interpretation of it. As long as this condition is met the profits of a company are unlimited, and if profits are unlimited then we do not have effective price controls through a profit control mechanism because profit control goes right out the window.

For those four reasons, briefly stated, and I am not going to labour them for rhetorical or for any other purposes, we hope the Minister of Finance during the question period, or another minister when making a speech during the debate, will deal with them. We simply believe that the guidelines will be totally ineffective whatever the government's good intentions might be. I am prepared to admit that we must take the legislation at its face value and assume the government is serious about it. Whatever the government's intention, there is not going to be effective price control through the profit control mechanism.

I want to deal with the efficacy of the board set up to enforce the provisions, particularly in view of the announcement today that the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin and Beryl Plumptre have been appointed to key positions.

Let me say at the outset that Jean-Luc Pepin, when he was a member of this House, was a man who in personal terms I enjoyed and admired greatly. I want to add immediately that in terms of his own policy and political orientation he is precisely the kind of man who should not be given the job he has been handed. What has he done since he left the government? He is now a senior officer in the Power Corporation. He has been very much involved in developing a trading business for Canada. This is laudable, and I am not questioning his business objective or his intention there. There is nothing wrong with that if that is the kind of goal you want to pursue. What is wrong is to put him in charge of this kind of an agency which is intended to protect the consumer, because he is a man whose whole orientation has been on the other side of the ledger. This is analagous, no more and no less, to putting—

Mr. Trudeau: A fox with—

Mr. Broadbent: I was going to use a different analogy, but the Prime Minister has given an entirely appropriate one. It is analogous to putting a fox in with the chickens. Perhaps now that he recognizes that point he will reconsider this appointment.

As for Beryl Plumptre—well, dear old Beryl, ever since she has headed the Prices Review Board, has been struggling vigorously and consistently with infinite determination to find a case of excess profits. For some strange reason she has never succeeded. With all the investigations she has conducted on behalf of the Food Prices Review Board she has never found one case of excess profits. So Canadians can really rest assured knowing that Jean-Luc Pepin and Beryl Plumptre are in charge! They can go to sleep at night with total confidence that when they get up in the morning prices will be just and corporations will be sitting back taking lower profits, and the ship of state is in good hands. Well, I do not think so, Madam Speaker. I do not think the appointments were appropriate. I think they are such that they will encourage Canadians to view with little optimism the efficacy of a board being set up to administer and apply regulations which, as I have already said, on their own are shaky indeed.

Therefore I conclude on behalf of my party that the prices control mechanism in this set of proposals is a sham or a hoax, and whatever its purpose or its intent the result will not be price control.

The one element of the package we do think will be effective is the salary and wage control proposal. It may not surprise some people that this accounts for the fact that every businessman I saw interviewed about the proposals seemed to think they were good. This might have something to do with the fact that they now know their employees' wages will be effectively controlled. These controls will affect the hourly-rated employee and the person on a weekly salary basis who has none of the special opportunities of other people, and I will come to this in a moment, to get around the controls. They will have their wages restricted. There is no question but that on the one hand the prices control mechanism will be ineffective and on the other hand the wage and salary control mechanism will be totally effective.

I suspect this is what the Minister of Finance had in mind when he said in a loose moment to members of the press that when he saw the proposals he found them frightening. I assume he was speaking on behalf of the average worker in Canada at that time. These proposals will not be frightening, and I say this quite seriously, to most professional people.

Whatever the government tries to do in terms of law, and I am sure it will try to plug the loopholes, it has set the guidelines to apply to the fees of the professional people and not to their incomes, and this is on the theory that it does not want to discourage the initiative to work. So, if one worked longer hours one would receive more pay. I agree with that. It should apply to the fees and not to the income.

• (1740)

The point I want to make is that no matter how you come down with emphasis, it will not be operational for the upper income professional people because they can get around it. This would involve most lawyers. There are a few honest lawyers in this country. My colleague wants me to name them. I shall not do that. As we know, most lawyers work on sort of a percentage basis for business clients. They vary their fee according to the particular amount of money involved in a project. How will the incomes of those lawyers be controlled? They will not be in the same position as the auto worker, the bus driver, or the secretary. The lawyer will get around it. If an architect should have a particularly complex project then he makes a judgment. Without questioning his honesty I suggest he says it is more complex than another project, and up goes his fee. That will not be challenged.

Virtually all professionals working in the private sector will be able to get around these controls. This means that unfairness is built right into this program at the outset.

Apart from that type of unfairness we have the figures selected by the minister of $600 and $2,400. Already I have had calls from people who expect to receive the $600 and who believe it somehow is guaranteed. Of course that is not the case. A misunderstanding exists in that regard. This is a maximum figure in respect of those on low incomes. The most one may receive if he should be on the minimum wage scale would be an increase of $600 under the guidelines.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Broadbent: If I have misinterpreted this then I hope the error will be pointed out, now or later. However, as I understand it, the 10 per cent means that if one's income is $6,000 the most such a person could receive would be 10 per cent of that, which is $600. I do not know where the error is. The Prime Minister was shaking his head. I will look to him to correct this later.

Because most low-income people are not in trade unions and do not have a strong bargaining agency not only are they unlikely to get the $600 but, on the contrary, virtually 90 per cent of them will not come near it because there is no mechanism to ensure that they will receive that money. Did the government at least bring in a minimum program for these people to make sure they receive this? No. Did it change its federal minimum income wage law upwards somewhat so that these people would receive it? No. It said to the poor people of Canada who are at the bottom end of the scale in terms of income and who do not have a trade union, "too bad". That is what will happen in their case. They will not get the $600. The point we make on that issue is that it should have been made very clear to Canadians that they will not receive this as a right, and that most likely those down at that end of the scale will not receive it at all.

The second point we make in that connection is that the $600 level should be raised. Surely the $600 figure is too low. It is at the bottom end of the scale. How high it should be raised is a question on which I do not presume to give a definitive answer, but it must be substantially above that $600 level. The range is too great in terms of the $600 and the $2,400. The bottom amount simply is too low for people in Canada already living at the poverty level where they will remain in the years ahead.

The third point I make is that pensioners in Canada are not getting anything. One would have thought that a program dealing with inflation would deal with that category of people who are out of the labour market, who are not able to cope and who are dependent now, as has been mentioned, on an indexed pension. That is the situation for most pensioners in Canada unless they live in a province such as British Columbia or a couple of others, not necessarily provinces with NDP governments, which have taken additional steps to bring their incomes up above the poverty level. The point is that even with the indexed pension the level is still too low.

If the government wanted to deal with one category of person requiring some additional outlay of capital now, surely it should have been the pensioner, but there is nothing at all in this program for pensioners.

Then there is the matter of housing. If one thinks of the inflation which has been troubling Canadians in a serious way in the last couple of years, housing is one of the main issues. Surely the government should have done something on the supply side in a very significant proportion, to deal with the housing situation. It brought forward the idea at the federal level of rent control, which we have argued for and which we support in that part of the program. However, I say that unless the rent control program is complemented in the most serious way by a program to increase the supply of housing very significantly in the next year or two, it in itself would simply lead to horrendous headaches in a short period of time. You cannot have one without the other. If you have rent control, you must also have an imaginative and expansionary program to increase the supply of housing. There is nothing in the white paper to indicate this.

There is in the white paper a reference to some changes in the housing legislation but I suggest, given the record of this government which has not been reticent about patting itself on the back in the past inappropriately, that if we are to see a significant departure in respect of the housing program we would have seen those words in the white paper. One would have seen that there is to be a new major housing thrust or significant development, but that is not there. All that is indicated is that there will be some modification in the housing legislation. That, for our party, will not do. In our view there must be on the part of the federal government a major commitment to move in the housing sector with significant sums of money to increase supply so that the cost of housing can be brought down.

Those are the principal reasons why our party opposes this specific set of proposals. Some of my colleagues will be giving additional points. I have tried to indicate the principal ones. To sum up, in our judgment there is unfairness on the one hand and there is unworkability on the other hand. We say that the package which has been brought in to deal with inflation is deficient in terms both of what it prescribes and what it lacks, particularly in relation to housing, pensioners, and low income Canadians.

I wish to turn now to the reasons why the government feels it must bring this kind of program before the people of Canada at this time. The white paper, the former Minister of Finance, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson), and the Prime Minister himself have referred to two issues. One is the wage-push factor in inflation and the other is the problem as they perceive it of our pricing ourselves out of competitive markets. The New Democratic Party takes both these points seriously. If they could be demonstrated, then the government's intention to base remedies on these particular ills would be entirely appropriate. What I want to argue is that in fact they do not have the foundation that the government claims they have, that we do not have inflation in Canada which is due to high wage demands, and that we do not have in Canada a serious threat to our competitive position in terms of world trade because of such wage demands and wage increases.

• (1750)

In my view there is no economist, respectable or otherwise, in Canada who has demonstrated a cause and effect relationship between our wages and our inflation. Many workers in Canada, trapped by two and three year contracts, have been merely attempting to make up the ground they lost due to past inflation. In the last three years, from mid June 1972 to mid June 1975, the consumer price index rose by 33 per cent. During the same period of time wages rose by 36 per cent, or only 1 per cent more a year. Given increases in Canadian labour productivity I would argue that the Canadian worker has in fact got less than he deserves, not more. Certainly I would argue that he has not caused the inflation that was going on in the Canadian economy; he was responding to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I am pleased to add to my support a person whom I and the socialist party would not normally be citing, that is, Gerald Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada, who made a speech about a week ago in Saskatoon in which he made essentially the same point. I think it is very important to get through to the people in our country who now are beginning to see ordinary working Canadians as being the principal cause of our economic problems that that is not the case. The Governor of the Bank of Canada himself said that wage demands in recent years have followed price increases, that workers have not been causing the increases, that they have been responding to them; in short, they have been responding to the mismanagement of the Canadian economy.

What about the trade situation? Again we have heard a number of politicians, editorial writers and businessmen complain about Canadian wage settlements. What are the facts? First of all, a recent study by Nathan Bossen of the Montreal brokerage firm of Brault, Guy, O'Brien, Inc.—not a well known socialist establishment—using figures from the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, concluded that Canadian unit labour costs from 1970 to the beginning of 1975 have escalated at a lower rate than those of any of our major trading partners with the exception of the United States. In Bossen's view:

> Canadian unit costs have not risen at such a rate as to cause concern for our competitive position.

In any event, relative labour cost increases seem to have little bearing on trade performance; real demand for a country's export products is more important. This is particularly true when the principal exports are raw materials, as is the case with Canada. It does not matter in any significant degree what the labour costs are in terms of our major exports. But I repeat the point: even if, as is the case in certain sectors, labour costs are a concern, our competitive situation has been improving, not getting worse, and I will provide some more information on that.

The 7 per cent decline in exports over the past year is due to an international recession and not to the loss of our ability to compete. The United States is our largest customer, and when the United States is suffering a recession Canadian exports will also decline because demand in the United States has dropped. Furthermore, recent import-export statistics refute those who have been saying that high wage settlements in Canada are pricing our exports out of other markets than the United States. Exports of Canadian finished products with a relatively high labour component have increased in value by 8 per cent in the first six months of this year; all exports, including raw materials, rose only 5 per cent. So the increase in our exports has been going up higher in those sectors than in all exports as a whole.

If trade in automotive goods to the United States is excluded from the figures, the performance of the manufactured goods sector looks even better, with exports up during this period by some 13 per cent. Trade indices also show that between January, 1974, and the end of March, 1975, prices of Canadian exports rose by an average of 27 per cent while import prices increased by 42 per cent. This means that our relative competitive position in terms of prices in world trade has improved, not worsened.

I defy the new Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, when he contributes to this debate, as I hope he will, to present some supporting evidence for the case that his predecessor has made, namely, that we are pricing ourselves out of world markets.

I notice, Madam Speaker, that you are rising to your feet, so perhaps I will call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Before adjourning for dinner I would like to advise the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) that his time has now expired.

It being six o'clock I do leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, if this were the day before Christmas we would say: In the silence of the night, let us all reflect on the future of our country. But since this is October 14, 1975, let us all reflect on the economy of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to use seriously the few minutes allotted to me to express the views and the wishes of the voters of the constituency of Bellechasse that I proudly represent, and also to express the thought of, I believe, all Canadians who are concerned about the future of Canada so that the economy of our country may serve all Canadian citizens and that we may serve our country as Canadians.

• (2010)

When, a few years ago, President Kennedy fell under the bullets of an assassin, these words of his were recalled on several occasions: We must not ask what this country can do for us, Americans, but rather what we, as American citizens, can do for our country. Mr. Speaker, these words should apply in 1975. We should ask ourselves very seriously: What have we done for our country? What has Canada done for each one of us? What does the future hold for us as a nation? What does Canada hold for each one of us in the future? What must each one of us do to ensure the future, the greatness and the development of our country? October 14, 1975 is a memorable day in the history of our country.

We can have fun and amuse ourselves, go to the movies or to the theatre, we can act irresponsibly if we wish, but it still remains, Mr. Speaker, that a serious decision must be made in our country on this day, October 14. We must make this decision together, you, Mr. Speaker, each one of my colleagues of the House of Commons, and this parliament, we must seriously ask ourselves what the population is thinking tonight at 8:10 about the Canadian parliament, and it is wondering how we shall determine the future of every Canadian and of our economy.

Mr. Speaker, as I keep constantly in touch with my constituents, my fellow countrymen, I can tell you that these people are now worried. The fathers, mothers and heads of families are concerned about the future of their children. They are wondering what is in store for tomorrow.

What do the children we have brought into the world, we have raised and given the best training we could, the best education possible at every level, think of us today and what will happen to them tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker, some authorities are also wondering, the municipal authorities which are closer to the people, which assume the greatest responsibilities towards the individuals and families are now wondering how they will manage to provide the services to which the families and the individuals are entitled.

Recently a convention of the Canadian Federation of Municipalities was held. Through its most authoritative spokesmen, its president and its executive secretary in turn expressed their concern to the people, the federal and provincial authorities, having to meet their obligations and provide essential services to the people.

Recently, we have also witnessed a congress of mayors of municipalities. I feel quite at ease in speaking of municipal affairs because I have been directly involved in them for over 30 years. I think I know pretty well the thinking of mayors, secretary-treasurers, aldermen of cities and towns, and rural municipality counsellors. I believe I can feel the pulse of the situation.

All these people during these congresses, and in particular, the congress of mayors and municipalities, were concerned by a terrible situation.

People across the country are asking municipal authorities essential services, such as sewers, aqueducts, housing, but such services at prices and conditions they can afford.

About a week ago, I saw the mayor of the city of Quebec say to the people on television that if the provinces cannot adequately meet the requirements and demands of municipalities the latter would have to turn to Ottawa, and Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, it is you, Ottawa, it is all the members of Parliament, it is the right hon. Prime Minister, all the ministers of the various Canadian government departments.

While we have heard many times during the last 20 years that the autonomy of municipalities is something sacred like that of provinces, since the provincial governments are unable to meet their financial requirements adequately, the municipalities are now pondering their problems. I take to witness the mayor of Quebec City who a week ago stated: If the provinces are unable to help us, we shall have to turn to Ottawa. Ottawa, it is you Mr. Speaker and all of us now in session to examine very seriously the problems facing us.

The municipal government is the one that is closest to the people, that can best understand the needs of individuals and families and normally it should be in a position to answer adequately the legitimate requirements of individuals and families. But we know that municipalities are now in a desperate financial situation. Reading the newspapers is enough to convince us that those situations are desperate in Canada. If we take a look at the United States, we realize that New York City, Boston and other big American cities are at the brink of bankruptcy. What does it mean, Mr. Speaker, to be on the verge of bankruptcy? It is to have expenses in excess of the potential income a given community would need to meet its normal financial obligations. In the meantime, we as Canadians, as Quebecers, as the Quebec government, we crawl in front of New York financiers begging for help. When they are not even able to meet their obligations, we ask them to lend us money to survive at home, to survive as a province, to survive as a country, to survive as municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, this clearly demonstrates that the problem we confront today as Canadian parliamentarians boils down to two things: inflation and unemployment, which are both financial problems. These days a lot is being said about inflation. But great care is taken not to define inflation. Reporters, newspapers, television and radio do not co-operate very much with you, Mr. Speaker, and with hon. members to enlighten the Canadian public as to what inflation really is. As for me I am not smart but I know that I am not smart. There is something which is great, it is to be aware of it. And I can always go to the people who are more learned than I am. Larousse is a dictionary which defines all the words in the French language and which tells you what each and every one of them means. That is why, not being smart tonight I opened my Larousse dictionary. And I have tried to find out what inflation means. So here is what one can read in the Larousse dictionary, on page 543. Let us listen well, Mr. Speaker. I may not be very bright but surely Larousse knows what it is all about. I quote:

• (2020)

Inflation: Déséquilibre économique caractérisé par une hausse générale des prix, et qui provient de l'excès de pouvoir d'achat de la masse des consommateurs (particuliers, entreprises . . .) . . . et des services mis à leur disposition.

So, this means that there is an increase, an excess of purchasing power in relation to services offered to people and goods available to them. That is what inflation means.

As members of Parliaments, we have to ask ourselves very seriously, not facetiously, but as responsible people, if there is really inflation in Canada. Is there an excess of services offered to people, is there an excess of potatoes, tomatoes, pork, milk, butter, cheese?

If I had the time to do so, Mr. Speaker, I would pick out of our own Hansard answers which prove that in the last few months we did import cheese from New Zealand, Australia, the United States, Holland and Belgium, and that we also imported beef from those various countries. Therefore, was there really a surplus of those farm produce, considering the demands of the consumer, the needs of the Canadian consumers? That is what the Larousse dictionary says: excessive purchasing power, too much money to buy the goods that are lacking.

And at the same time, Mr. Speaker, the producers of Canadian cheese and butter are told: Reduce your production; quotas will be imposed upon you; you will be forced to produce according to a specific quota system, to avoid surplus production exceeding the purchasing power of Canadians.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what is happening at the same time? While poultry producers are told to reduce their production, are asked to accept quotas, the same organizations tell the Americans to come and sell in Quebec, in Canada, their surplus poultry, their surplus eggs, that we will accept them here; that is what causes the imbalance, that is what explains the fact that our producers of beef, pork, poultry and eggs, do not know where they stand, and which way to go; their situation is hopeless; they can no longer get for their work, their production, the income needed to live decently. This is happening in Canada, before the eyes of all parliamentarians, myself included, and we look on passively. Then the Prime Minister, on the eve of two by-elections, appears on television, as the leader of the Canadian government and of a political party called the Liberal party, and sets forth to the Canadian people solutions to our problems of inflation and unemployment. He tells them: Boys, there is only one answer, tighten your belts. I have a belt too and if I tighten it, I will choke eventually. Now, tighten your belts.

What does he mean by tightening our belts? It is to go without the things one needs to meet one's personal needs. That is to tighten one's belt. Is the solution proposed in the white paper a good solution? The Canadian Parliament must decide on this this week. Is it really the answer to the economic problems, to the problems of inflation and unemployment in our country? Is it the answer? What is unemployment? Since I am not smart, I consult those who are more learned. What does unemployment mean? On page 206, Larousse says: Period of inactivity for a worker, for an industry. We knew that also. To be unemployed means being out of work, that is what we must remember, Mr. Speaker. To be unemployed means being out of work. I would like to look fully into that question. I heard last night on television the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say to the Canadian people that our gross national product must increase if we are to deal with the problems of inflation and unemployment. I may not be very knowledgeable about those things, but I am at my wits' end to understand what he meant by that.

Mr. Speaker, quite seriously, I will speak about the budget of the former Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), which was brought down on June 23, 1975. I was sitting in my place, he was in his, and the others were in theirs. We were waiting, holding our breath, for the solutions to our economic problems. Nobody, Mr. Speaker, is happy with adverse conditions in Canada, nobody is happy about that, regardless of one's party. We want Canada to have a really prosperous economy which would enable fathers, mothers, boys and girls who have been educated at the cost of hundreds of dollars—I know it from experience—after obtaining their diploma and acquiring experience in their chosen field to serve the Canadian community and the country, thanks to that diploma and that profession which make them efficient producers of either services or goods in a given line.

I think it is only good common sense that leads us to expect from our children, from the coming generation to produce things to meet the needs of the population as a whole. We know what is going on, Mr. Speaker. We have now more than 600,000 qualified people, graduates who hold diplomas or trade certificates and could be productive, but they are unfortunately out of work. It was said earlier what unemployment is. It is to be unproductive. People are prevented from using their talents to produce something in order to meet their needs or those of the community.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in the budget of 1975-76, I think some thought should be given to that. I apologize for speaking up but I am shocked, you understand, Mr. Speaker, I am shocked to see that we are going to spend—responsible people like the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and all cabinet members, responsible people—that we are to spend in 1975-76 nearly $4 billion to support unproductive people, to pay benefits to people who willy-nilly are unemployed, idle. Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, they try to make the public believe the unemployment problem can be solved, that jobs can be created and that the $150 million earmarked for local initiative programs will generate employment throughout Canada.

A sixth grade school boy, Mr. Speaker, can do better than spending $150 million to motivate people to work, to do something to increase the gross national product in this country, to meet our obligations, to curb the curse of inflation so as to provide Canadians with an ever increasing number of goods and services and lick this serious problem of inflation.

Mr. Speaker, I have read very carefully, and when I say very carefully I mean very earnestly because at my age one is not interested in jesting any more. When one has family commitments such as I have at present, such as I have had in the past, a lot of things become less important if considered intrinsically. They belong to the past. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe we should very seriously consider the solutions which are proposed in the white paper. "White paper" is a beautiful expression. What is white is supposed to be pure, but in the final analysis, as once said the former President of France, the late General de Gaulle whose name I proudly utter, regardless of the mistakes he may have made—at least words I did not mean should not be put in my mouth—at least he gave mankind the very profound thought that one should always get to the bottom of things. Whatever the matter, Mr. Speaker, our responsibility is to get to the root of it to find out about the formula that is proposed to us, the valid solution to our problems. Is the white paper presented to us today the right formula to solve inflation and unemployment? I ask the question, dear fellow members of Parliament. Let us try to think about it seriously. I know that as a member of a small political party, opponents take pleasure in telling us we are a small political party. Mr. Speaker, in a family of any size, when the little one tells the authorities: It is raining this morning, even if the authorities say that the sun is shining, if it is really raining, the little one is right. That is the way it is in Parliament.

In Parliament, Mr. Speaker, we sincerely declare that the formulas proposed by the economists until now are not valid. The right hon. Prime Minister of my country that I respect whole heartedly has been misinformed by the economists. The Cabinet of my country whatever the colour of the governing party has been misinformed by the economists of our country: they say first one thing and then another. Some say: Let us try this formula and if it does not work, we shall try another one. In the meantime, Canadians are the ones who pay.

Mr. Speaker, we are in a really desperate economic situation. Canada has got into debt and I bring your attention to this: From 1867 to 1967, our debt has gradually reached $30 billion. It has taken a hundred years to accumulate a debt of $30 billion. You can check, Mr. Speaker. It was the official answer of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) as reported in Hansard this year. The debt of our country that amounted to $30 billion as of July 1, 1967 has reached $58 billion as of July 1, 1974. By now I would not be surprised if our national debt has reached $60 billion.

Mr. Speaker, this is the essence of my remarks for tonight. I took a roundabout way to demonstrate to my colleagues that the main cause of inflation is the financial system in which we live, that no longer meets our needs in 1975 and contributes to raise the cost of living because of interest rates which go up every month.

• (2040)

Mr. Speaker, as I speak to you and every morning the sun rises Canadians in this country must make sacrifices, pay $10 million in interests on the national debt, and I challenge any member in this House to prove otherwise because those are official figures released by Statistics Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the way things are going, we are moving toward an even more catastrophic situation. So what does a small party like the Social Credit Party of Canada suggest? Mr. Speaker, you seem to say, just a few members. I can tell you that in this little party we are serious, we love our country as much as any other member of this House. We want our country to be prosperous and we also want every member of this country, whatever the wealth of the family to which they belong, we want every Canadian to be able to share the benefits of the sacrifices and efforts of past generations. We are disgusted, Mr. Speaker, when we see that this parliament, this government, has helped bring about such a disastrous situation.

Mr. Speaker, a week ago the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) ask the people of Canada, to tighten their belt, to be reasonable in your claims. I fully agree with him but he forgot, for example, that the day before, Canadian bankers enjoyed an increase of 1 per cent in the interest rate. Did you think of what that represents for the whole of Canada, an increase of 1 per cent on all loans made not only in the public sector but also the private sector?

Mr. Speaker, in the present situation in which we live the federal and provincial governments are private industry's main competitors. My dear friends, it is an excellent formula which enables a country to develop, because private enterprise allows the individual and the enterprise to give the best of themselves, to use their abilities and their resources to the fullest and thus not only the individual, but his family as well as his community may derive some benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite sincere when I say that we have a golden opportunity to change our economic system.

Our Prime Minister, whom I respect and to whom I listened on television last night, did not give us any magic formula, but he called upon the goodwill of the individuals as I do tonight to use another formula. The Prime Minister did not suggest any new approach. What is preventing us from trying something new since we are at our lowest ebb and quite unable up to now to try such an experiment. What is that new experiment? It consists in the use by the Canadian government, backed by Parliament which is the supreme authority in our country, in the use, as I said, of the Bank of Canada. Some people think it is funny. You see those green Liberal members making faces and becoming exhilarated whenever Social Credit members suggest a better way of making use of that bank which belongs to the Canadian people as a means of creating credit, as a means of turning the dedication of each and everyone of us into money, as a means of having that dedication turned out into dollars and benefit Canadian citizens as a whole. We therefore introduced an amendment to the Bank of Canada Act so that this Bank which was created by Liberals—Why not at least try to trust your own party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The time allowed the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) has expired. However, he seems about to conclude within a few seconds. Does the House agree to allow him a minute or two to complete his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): My God, how pleased I am, Mr. Speaker, to hear the Chair ask my colleagues in the House to let the member for Bellechasse complete his speech. I will not abuse this privilege, believe me! My feelings are well known. It is therefore common experience that during the eight or ten years I have sat as a member of this House, I have never attempted to abuse the privileges of the House. Mr. Speaker, I thank you and I thank my colleagues for letting me complete my remarks.

I was just saying that the Government should be allowed for once to use the Bank of Canada as a means of managing the credit of our nation, of providing new credit, of paying the discount that we suggest as a solution to our present economic problems. A compensated discount is the opposite of a tax. A 10 per cent tax has the effect of increasing prices by 10 per cent, whereas a compensated discount cuts down prices by 10 per cent. The 10 per cent discount benefits all those who use those products. But who is going to pay for that discount? The whole of the Canadian people through the Bank of Canada, the national credit board, will determine that Canadians have worked more, that the country's output has increased. In 1974 our gross national product amounted to $139 billion. But if in 1975 our national product is $140 billion, the increase should benefit all Canadians. And in order that every Canadian may benefit, it should be distributed as dividends, as guaranteed annual income or as another form of revenue.

This, Mr. Speaker, may seem funny to you, but we sincerely believe in such a measure. We are convinced such a formula would be no worse than all the damn formulas tried to date, and which have led to the present failure. Let us have the courage to try something new. We cannot do any worse than what we have known until now.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke to the nation yesterday evening on television, he asked Canadians to act in a responsible and collective way to deal with the serious economic problems now facing Canada.

The white paper tabled today proposes a series of strong and courageous measures to stop inflation. It is clear that our economy is now besieged by too much inflation. But it is just as clear that there is too much unemployment, and that we should have continued growth while maintaining a social reform program. I say without any hesitation that the government needed a great deal of courage to resist the pressures by those who would have wanted us to use a big stick against inflation, by imposing a freeze on price and wages, whatever the cost to the growth and welfare of our economy, and by making such drastic cuts in government expenditures that the most basic social and economic policies would have suffered.

Instead, the government has opted for a four point program: first, the fiscal and monetary policy will be administered so as to increase global demand and production at a rate consistent with that of an increasingly regressing inflation and there is absolutely no question of using unemployment as an antidote to inflationary forces.

Second, the growth of federal government expenses will be restricted to what we believe the economy of the country can support. It is obvious that the manpower of the public service will not be able to increase substantially and will therefore increase little, but it is also obvious that the government will maintain essential services and allowances, particularly for those who need them most.

Third, the government recognizes that the present inflationary forces are profoundly entrenched in the structure of the goods and services and labour markets, as well as in the attitudes and the expectations of the population. Our labour and goods and services markets are not as effective as they should be. We must therefore make our economy more dynamic and more effective by reducing the present rigidity and intensifying competition in Canada.

These are important concerns which enormously affect my department. If we want to eradicate in the long run the latent danger of inflation, we shall have to develop a whole series of special measures in the areas of food, energy, and housing which will affect the very structures of these areas.

Fourth, the program of the government aims at taking decisive action to overcome the present inflationary psychology by following for the first time since the Second World War a clear and precise policy concerning prices and incomes in Canada.

This policy was used as a guideline to restrict the margins of profits, prices, dividends and salaries in Canada. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that we recognize the inconsistency of the present inflation rate with the public interest as well as the seriousness of the national problem involved in its control and reversal.

That is why the Prime Minister asked the provincial premiers for their support and urged all Canadians to stand by those guidelines. That is why the Prime Minister also indicated that he hopes that those who hold the economic power in our society will respect those guidelines. That those who hold the economic power, that is his government, the governments of all provinces, the business and labour sectors will strictly comply with that guideline. That is why an anti-inflation board has been set up. It will have to see that this policy is respected. And finally, that is why later this week my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) will introduce legislation to establish the mechanism and provide the necessary powers to force some groups in our society to abide by the guideline, if they do not move volontarily.

Mr. Speaker, I think that in proposing those new economic measures, the government has adopted a responsible and firm position which will allow the Canadian people to go through, without too much trouble, that transitional period and, let us admit it, that period of economic difficulties. It aims at changing the inflation trends without throwing the economy into serious recession. It calls for some restraint from those who seek higher prices and incomes, particularly the big companies, the labour and public sectors, instead of using coercion and a large bureaucracy to reach those objectives. We believe indeed that Canadians would like to shoulder their own responsibility in cooperating with us instead of letting the government get unduly involved in individual and corporate affairs.

I listened very carefully this afternoon to the remarks of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who said that controls had to be comprehensive. For many minutes during his speech he tried to tell us that this is exactly what we now have, and he tried to tell us that what he proposed to the Canadian people sometime ago is what the government has now offered the Canadian public.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is a variation.

Mr. Ouellet: I think there was an awful lot of wishful thinking on his part when he was speaking.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Go and ask the man in the street.

Mr. Ouellet: With all due respect to the hon. Leader of the Opposition I should say that I understand he has reason to be away from the House tonight attending a dinner with Mr. Kissinger, and I appreciate why he is not here. At any rate, the things I want to say have to be said here. He used his privilege to speak in this House today in trying to second guess the government, telling us what we are doing, while in fact this is not what he wanted done or what he proposed to the Canadian public some time ago.

We are not today proposing comprehensive controls to the Canadian public. It is quite clear we are not doing this. The Leader of the Opposition at one time went on to say he is opposed to long-term comprehensive controls. He said he prefers short-term controls. Whether they are long or short-term, it is quite clear we are not talking about the same things. He was talking about comprehensive controls, but what we want to do, and what we want the Canadian public to do, is to follow voluntary guidelines for all Canadian people. There is a very substantial difference.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is not what the Canadian public is saying.

An hon. Member: You better read the white paper again.

Mr. Ouellet: We want to impose selective controls for an adequate period of time. If the Leader of the Opposition thinks three years is too long, he should remember that three years can be very quick passing. He knows very well that during his career as Leader of the Opposition the time has been flying for him. There is no doubt that he did not understand at all what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said last night to the public of Canada. What the Prime Minister said was important was to try to change the psychology of the people.

An hon. Member: He never said that.

Mr. Ouellet: He said it was important to change the thinking of Canadians who feel that in order to get their piece of cake they must protect themselves against inflation by asking for more. Therefore, when we issue these guidelines we issue them on a voluntary basis applicable to everyone, but we say that the big ones, those who have a significant effect on the economy, must obey a certain set of selective rules, and if they do not there is legislation to be used to put things in order.

I was completely surprised and shocked by the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition when he said the Prime Minister should not try to teach us but should show us. He went on moralizing and so on, and attempted to imply that we are not giving leadership.

• (2100)

I want to place on record first that the Prime Minister and the other ministers will obey the guidelines. This is clear. I do not appreciate what was said last night on the national network that there will be two sets of guidelines, one for the Canadian people and another for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and the ministers will obey the guidelines.

Second, I believe it is important not only to talk but to show leadership. The Prime Minister said that these guidelines will apply to federal public servants, a clear-cut indication that he hopes the provincial governments will have the courage to do the same.

Third, the growth of the public service will be limited. This has been said, and it is important that this be done.

Fourth, the total spending by the Canadian government will not rise out of proportion to the trend in respect of the gross national product. The Leader of the Official Opposition this afternoon read from page 8 of the document "Attack on inflation". This quotation is as follows:

> The federal government shares the view that the trend of total spending by all governments in Canada should not rise more quickly than the trend of the gross national product.

He said he does not understand what that means. Surely he should have read the two previous pages and looked particularly at the government's expenditures as a percentage of the gross national product. In fact he should have realized that the total expenditures of all governments in Canada as a percentage of the gross national product have increased to a great degree throughout the years 1965 to 1974. This is the sort of trend about which many people in the business community in Canada have complained. Many people and many members of the opposition have complained about the fact that the federal government and other governments are spending too much. This is the sort of thing with which we are trying to cope.

Surely, however, when we talk of our spending and the sort of things we could do to reduce our spending, the Leader of the Opposition is not suggesting that we should completely phase out some of our commitments that are of a statutory nature. I want to remind hon. members in this House that in fact some 56 per cent of the budgetary expenditures approved for the start of the fiscal year 1975-76 are for statutory programs. Another 9 per cent is accounted for by such essential support programs as consumer subsidies on petroleum products, programs relating to Indians and Eskimos, grants for regional economic expansion, incentives to increase manufacturing, and subsidies to farmers.

There is no doubt that the government will do its utmost to limit expenditures, but not at the expense of the poor people of Canada, those living in remote areas of Canada, and those who are in the greatest need in this society.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to greet you as you are taking up your duties for the first time. I am sure that on behalf of all the members, I may extend to you our best wishes in the performance of your new duties.

Mr. Speaker, I am rising this evening mainly to state to the House the crucial role that the Anti-Inflation Board will have to play to create a climate of restraint and moderation and to ensure that those who will readily restrain their price and income increases are not victimized because some powerful sectors of our economy will choose to ignore the rule of the game. I think that it is quite proper to put this Board under the responsibility of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, because under its terms of reference, it must protect the competitive power of the economy while ensuring its efficiency and see to it that the profits derived from production are fairly distributed among the producer, distributor and consumer.

Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference and duties of the Board will be as follows:

First, to monitor movements in prices, profits, compensation and dividends. It will be responsible for examining them in the light of the policy set forth by the government. It will report to the government on the efficiency and the workability of this policy, and make such recommendations for its modification that it deems necessary.

Second, to identify actual or proposed movements in prices, profits, compensation and dividends which it feels violate the policy proposed by the government.

It will determine to what extent such movements can have a significant impact on the economy and if so, it will bring together the parties involved and endeavour through negotiations and consultations to bring them within the limits and the spirit of the government policy.

Thirdly, should the parties involved refuse to comply voluntarily with the government policy requirements and if they are liable to the legal restraints provided under this policy, the matter will be referred to the administrator of the anti-inflation act. The latter will investigate the matter and if he finds that the government policy was contravened without good reason, he will order a rollback to the initial price and the refund of all amounts paid beyond the limits set under the said policy.

Fourthly and lastly, the Anti-Inflation Board will feel duty bound to promote greater understanding of the inflationary process by arranging public hearings and meetings, by publishing reports, and by other means that it considers helpful. All such reports will be tabled in the House of Commons and made available to the public.

According to its terms of reference, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the government is not trying to use this Board as an instrument of dictatorship in the economic area. Its main purpose is more like that of a watchdog or a peacemaker. The voluntary acceptance of the government policy will be emphasized, so that the need for a more specific legislation and a closer monitoring will not be felt. We shall give those the Board will deem necessary to investigate every opportunity to justify their behaviour and to mend their ways according to the limits of the government policy.

One of the main duties of the Board will be to define and interpret the government policy in order to apply it to every individual case. It will interpret and define the public interest under such circumstances, whether it be a major increase in prices or salaries during collective bargaining. It will monitor the actions of those who regulate the pace of our economy, big business and collective bargaining both in the public and the private sectors. It will make every effort to bring those who are about to disregard the government policy to adhere to the standard guidelines. However, should persuasion fail and if the parties involved refuse to comply with the policy set forth by the government, the Board will have the necessary authority to recommend the enforcement of the law.

[English]

I would like at this point to reply to some remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) when he said that so far as he is concerned the price control methods that have been outlined by the government are no good and will not operate. He expressed great doubt and great skepticism about what we have put in place. I want to tell him that I have more faith in the plan. I believe that the price controls will be effective, and I want to tell him, as well as other hon. members in the House, that before passing such quaint judgment on the scheme they should at least wait until they see the legislation and then the regulations. I think that then they would be in a better position to pass judgment and condemn or praise the plan.

I have more faith than the hon. member in the anti-inflation review board, and I have much greater faith than he expressed this afternoon in the members of that board. I also have more faith in the person named to be the administrator of the scheme, the official who will have the authority to act and who will have all the tools necessary to ensure that the price control mechanisms which we might want to use if necessary can be used effectively.

[Translation]

My colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has already stated that later this week he would bring forward a legislation which would give to the governor general in council the power to formulate a policy relating to restrictions with respect to higher profit margins, dividends and salaries, to set up an anti-inflation board, as I have already indicated, and to give to its president the powers which will allow him to apply the government's policy to specific groups.

Moreover, it has been decided that the setting up of this board should not be delayed. So, an order in council has been passed this very morning which established on a temporary basis the composition of the anti-inflation board. This temporary board will be maintained until a permanent anti-inflation board is established, that is until the legislation is passed by Parliament. This interim Board will then become the Anti-Inflation Board.

I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to confirm that two well-known and highly respectable and respected Canadian citizens have accepted, at the invitation of the Prime Minister, to sit on that Board. The chairman of the Board the hon. Jean-Luc Pepin is not a stranger to the House. Mr.

Pepin will bring to the Board an invaluable knowledge of the machinery of government and business management, as well as a good dose of patience and a lot of good humour. The vice-chairman will be the present chairman of the Food Prices Review Board, Mrs. Beryl Plumptre. She has accepted to serve for an interim period long enough to terminate on the one hand the unfinished reports of the Food Prices Review Board and on the other hand to help set up and give a solid start to the new Board. Thanks to her exceptional leadership qualities the Food Prices Review Board has largely contributed I think to educate the people making them aware of the causes of inflation in the food area. I am convinced that she will keep on speaking her mind frankly, quality that personally I greatly appreciate. Furthermore, we have already started to recruit a competent staff in order to allow the Board to immediately get to work. In addition, the government intends to enlarge the membership of the Board so as to include representatives of various regions. This de-centralization will ease the task of the Board which will be able, because of the personal experience of its members, to take into account in its proceedings, situations prevailing in various areas of the country.

Hon. members have probably noticed, while looking at the White Paper, that the federal government has already started to comply with its own recommendations as far as the Crown corporations and federal agencies are concerned. The Prime Minister asked the provincial governments to take this action. The Anti-inflation board will be responsible for imposing the same requirements upon the public sector as upon the private sector.

To this end, the board will create for the public sector a distinct office that will handle price and wage matters. The provinces have been invited to appoint members to that office. The order in council creating the temporary anti-inflation board put an end to the work of the Food Prices Review Board. In just over two years, this agency has published more than 40 reports and it will be possible to publish the reports that have reached the final writing, translation or even the printing stage. I wish to say tonight that this agency, through its participation in the public debate on the food prices policy, has given the population a better understanding of such a difficult problem. I wish to thank publicly the members of that board for their excellent work. The experience of the Plumptre Board will not be lost as a good part of its staff will be integrated into the new anti-inflation board.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude my speech, I wish to recall that the measures we are taking today are those of a government determined to act in a constructive way to improve the economic situation. However, I would be remiss if in my capacity as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I did not draw the attention of this House on two legislative steps undertaken by my department and which will have a long term impact as far as curbing inflation is concerned. I refer first to the reform of the competition policy in Canada and second, to consumer credit.

I think the reform of the Combines Investigation Act was the most important element of the steps taken by this government to conform with the structure of the economy, particularly when one knows that the contrary itself is responsible for a good part for the inflation we have.

The white paper also emphasizes the fact that this country needs greater market competition. The current legislation is outmoded and several of its provisions are no longer in line with the current modern world. I am happy to know that under an agreement with opposition members we can look forward to the rapid passage of Bill C-2 this week in the House of Commons, and I hope members of the other House will understand that it is important to approve this bill quickly and will cooperate with the government in that respect. Preparation of Phase II of the competition policy is practically completed, and we are getting ready to publish it later on this year. The proposals will reflect the judgment of the most enlightened Canadians on competition, and should clarify the question. After a reasonable period of discussion and debate, it is my intention to table a bill during the next session.

I also believe another major piece of legislation could help Canadians face the price increases. I am referring to the precise evaluation of their credit needs. Too often, unfortunately, consumers do not know the real cost of credit and tend to underestimate its impact on the family budget. It is so easy to use a credit card and forget that there are less costly ways of financing one's purchases. In my belief, it is the government's duty to ensure there is adequate disclosure of credit costs, such disclosure as not to require the use of a computer to compare various financing means.

The consumers must be informed of the best method available to them to lower their credit costs. Therefore, I intend to propose to the House a legislation concerning the protection of borrowers. That new legislation will provide for adequate protection for small borrowers. Also, my department is setting up programs aimed at helping consumers, particularly those who have low incomes, in order that they use credit in a more appropriate way. The legislation will also offer better protection for those who are involved with usurious moneylenders. I am convinced that careful and sensible use of credit will help many Canadians come through this difficult period.

Mr. Speaker, the new economic measures taken by the government are based on the belief that Canadians will give a constructive answer to the invitation of the Prime Minister and that they will accept to get together to slow down the price and income increases and also the excessive pressures which have jeopardized the economy. As I said, the anti-inflation board will play an important part in that government price and income policy.

This will not bring about undue government interference in the economy.

Those who accept voluntarily to submit to government policy will be assured that they will not become the victims of unscrupulous manipulators.

Finally, this will provide sufficient flexibility to adjust to economic fluctuations while our economy is on the uprise.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this anti-inflation policy to be a wise policy which meets the present needs of the Canadian economy and provides what a great majority of Canadians wished for from the central government, and I am convinced that despite the disfigurement by the opposition of this general program, of this government attack program on inflation, despite the very understandable disfigurement by the Progressive Conservative Party, which would like people to believe that we are imposing a comprehensive and complete control on prices and incomes, the great majority of Canadians will understand that these are selective measures, but also guidelines, which must apply voluntarily in Canada and which, I am sure, will be followed by the great majority of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member speaks, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I listened with great interest to the statement of the minister that the Government intended to practise restraint and moderation. Could the minister tell us whether the increase in the number of parliamentary secretaries from 20 to 27 is an example of the kind of restraint the government intends to practise in terms of this program?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I think it is clear that, in difficult times, the government must resort to all available means to govern the country to and explain to the people which government measures are good for the country. And if the government can benefit from the competence and knowledge of some hon. members on this side of the House, in a higher capacity than that of ordinary members of parliament, then I have the feeling that all Canadians will approve the Prime Minister's decision.

[English]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on rising to join in this debate this evening I would first comment that perhaps the voters of Hochelaga have recorded the most accurate verdict with respect to this government in the preliminary results which have now come in from that constituency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: If the presentation of this program was at least partly a gimmick to influence the voters of Hochelaga, those voters were not fooled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: As I listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last night on television, I wanted to believe what he was saying. I earnestly hoped that the government was on the verge of launching an anti-inflationary program in this nation. But having read the remarks of the Prime Minister, the highlights of the anti-inflation program of the government, and the anti-inflation program itself, I find it difficult to match the words of the government with its previous actions. We have heard this rhetoric before. We have heard the Prime Minister lamenting that somehow it is others in the private sector who are causing the problem, but not the government.

• (2130)

For example, on November 2, 1969—that is a long time ago—the Prime Minister went on the television program "The Nation's Business" and stated:

> . . . the situation is an inflationary one. And that is why such a large thrust of all the government's policies is concerned with breaking the back of inflation. We as a government have taken various steps, balancing our budget—even having a surplus.

I wonder how he accounts for the $5 billion deficit this year alone when he talks about surpluses? Most interesting of all, on November 2, 1969, he went on to state:

> We have had a monetary policy, a fiscal policy, which shows that we are doing our part.

He pointed his finger at various sectors of the economy and stated that it is the duty of the government to talk for all these little people . . . It is the business of the government to speak for them. "We are doing it by telling big companies and big unions if they do not follow the government's example—and its voluntary restraint—we will take some action."

He went on to say:

> We can spend more money. But we want to have our operations responsible. We don't want to increase taxes, therefore we don't want to have a deficit.

Finally he stated:

> It is private enterprise, it is the private sector of the economy and in this I include the big unions, who are not doing their share.

How similar that is to the words of last night. He went on to state:

> Because they have strong bargaining power they're trying to get a big slice of the cake and pass on the results of their greed to the little people. What we're saying now is that if they don't take their responsibilities, the government will take its.

Before we go further in this debate let us recall what has been the record of the government with respect to the items referred to in this speech by the Prime Minister. He refers to deficits, government spending, fiscal policy, and monetary policy. Here is the record.

Since the Prime Minister took power in April, 1968, the money supply in this country has risen by an astounding 111 per cent, a 15 per cent increase in the last 12 months alone. In the same period we find that inflation has gone up 58 per cent. This is the inflation that the Prime Minister spoke of breaking back in 1969.

Perhaps most significantly during this period, the government's own spending has jumped by 192 per cent, it has almost doubled, yet in 1969 we had a prime minister who had the nerve to suggest that his government in future years was going to be a government of restraint with respect to monetary growth and government spending. That is why, although I would earnestly hope that the government would accept its responsibility and tackle inflation in this country in an effective way, I believe we have grounds for doubt that its members are serious in their present stance with respect to inflation.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, there are several parts to a proper, comprehensive anti-inflationary program. The monetary stance of the government is one thing, its fiscal stance on government spending is a second. The trade policy of the government has got to change—that too is part of a proper inflation policy. There is no industrial strategy in this country, yet last night we heard no suggestion that the new Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) was going to come up with any new direction for our industry.

In this debate, especially when the bill is before us, I think we should press the government to explain more fully to what extent it is going to cut out some of the government regulations that frustrate business in this country at the present time.

I believe some consideration should also be given to, and action taken on, where we can relieve some of the overlapping jurisdictional problems that exist in the country at the federal, provincial and municipal levels. This is one of the bottlenecks and we are not being told in detail of any government plans to relieve this problem.

Finally, I would suggest that in any anti-inflationary program the government should be willing to outline the position it intends to take in international circles among the large industrial nations to ensure that there is a concerted effort among those nations to counter inflation in the western world.

I should like to go back to those eight points in due course, but before we consider the program that was outlined last night and more fully described in the white paper today, we should check once again the wording of the budget speech delivered by the former minister of finance on June 23 this year. As we know, throughout the presentation today and yesterday the government made frequent references to this June 23 budget, and you will recall that in making their presentation both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) quoted quite extensively from that speech. What they did not say was that the then minister of finance dealt with the concept of controls on June 23. Here is what the then minister of finance said:

> We gave careful consideration to the imposition of statutory controls over prices and incomes.

He went on to explain that he felt that there was some possibility that those controls would, in principle, be acceptable at that time. He continued:

> But there would have been—and are—immense difficulties and disadvantages in such a course of action.

That is referring specifically to the type of control we now have before us. The minister of finance of that date stated:

> Government would have to interfere in every type of business decision and wage settlement. To a far greater extent than in a voluntary program, a new bureaucratic apparatus would have to be set up. New types of inequity would be created. The flexibility of the market economy in directing resources where they are most needed would be impaired. Dislocations would occur.

The minister went on to state:

> These costs would be worth paying if direct controls could be successfully imposed. If this were the case, we might well achieve lower price and cost increases without higher unemployment. But the success of such a program would depend crucially on widespread public support. As I have said before, I believe that we can resort to direct controls only when there is a public conviction of the need for such action. That point has not been reached.

That was the government's view on June 23. What has changed? What has changed now other than the minister of finance? Is there this public support that the former minister of finance felt that they needed before bringing in the controls that we now have? Judging from the comments of labour leaders last night, it would appear not. I simply state that we seem to have a very inconsistent pattern in the government's policy concerning the program that it is now asking us to accept.

• (2140)

I understand that the powers to be are to be given discretion, as an integral part of the anti-inflation program, to tax away all income increases in excess of specified amounts. The former minister of finance spoke about this concept too. He said that he had examined the possibility of taxing away all income increases which exceed certain specified amounts. We concluded, he said, that this would result in administrative nightmares, create massive inequities but not ensure that the inflation of costs and prices would be effectively brought under control.

Why has the government changed its position? Are the provisions the Minister of Finance now refers to any different in their effect from the provisions referred to by the former minister? At that time they were called a nightmare. Is this what the present minister meant when he said that the program to be unveiled by the Prime Minister is frightening? That is the background we ought to consider as we debate the contemplated provisions of this program.

Let me be specific and talk about money. Dealing with monetary and fiscal policy the government, in its pamphlet "Attack on Inflation", says on page 4:

> The fiscal stance set in the June 23, 1975 budget, together with the announced intention of the Bank of Canada to allow the money supply to expand at a rate consistent with moderate real growth and a decline in the rate of inflation, constitutes an over-all demand management policy consistent with these objectives.

In other words, the suggestion is that these actions are consistent with a responsible fiscal and monetary policy. What utter balderdash! I defy any member of the House to read that statement and tell us what it means.

We have the government's record to guide us. We know what the government's monetary stance has been. Its stance has been among the most expansive in the world. If the Prime Minister wants to go on television to tell the Canadian people the facts, he should also spell out what the government has done to the country's money system. Let him tell the people what it has done to make the printing presses spew out more and more money in this nation. Do not take my word for it, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce deals with this question in its current Commercial Letter entitled "Inflation"—in bright red letters. There is a table in the letter showing how the money supply of the major industrial countries has grown. You know, this country is not the leader in the world in many areas, but we are No. 1 now for growth of money supply in 1974.

The table shows that the Canadian money supply grew by 18.9 per cent in 1974, a higher rate of growth than that shown by any nation on the list, including the United States, Austria, Belgium, France, West Germany, Italy, The Netherlands, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and Japan.

Can we take the government seriously when it says that it has launched an anti-inflation program? Can we take it seriously when we bear in mind that our money supply increased by 18.9 per cent in 1974, and that in the twelve months ending in September there was a further increase of 15 per cent? Mr. Arthur F. Burns, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board of the United States, has said that that country would restrict its monetary growth to between 5 per cent and 7.5 per cent. On July 29, 1975, Mr. Burns appeared before the joint economic committee of Congress and said candidly that any growth in the money supply exceeding the figures just referred to would result in further inflation in his country. The United States authorities are willing to say they want to limit monetary growth to between 5 per cent and 7.5 per cent, but our government has not had the courage to tell the Canadian public its target for money growth in this country.

Despite the words spewed out about monetary restraint we know, according to the last available figures, that our money supply recently increased by $604 million. So much for limiting monetary growth. I said that that is one of the underlying pressures causing inflation in this country, and if the government were candid it would admit it.

The second underlying pressure is government spending. Here let me refer to its own figures. On page 5 of "Attack on Inflation" there is a table which shows that the federal government took 13.8 per cent of the gross national product in 1970, its take having risen from 12.9 per cent in 1965. The last figure is for 1974, which shows that the federal government took 16.1 per cent of the gross national product in that year. Governments took over 39 per cent of our gross national product in 1974, and will possibly take 40 per cent in the current year. This process has been one of the factors contributing to inflation. The Prime Minister ought to be honest with the Canadian public. This government's mismanagement has been causing inflation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: The Prime Minister has juggled cabinet positions, as well he ought to have. Consider, for example, what has happened in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can you imagine any minister heading that department tolerating a trading deficit of $5 billion? I sincerely hope that the newly appointed Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) will, salesman that he is, introduce more imaginative programs and ensure that we sell more of our goods on world markets than is presently the case.

I have already referred to the country's lack of industrial strategy. I have touched on government regulations and their impact on business. I suggest that we, as members of parliament, must be alert in the months and years ahead, to see whether the government takes steps to reduce the bureaucracy and lessen the red tape with which business must live at present. The federal government has been quick to regulate business still further, but has rarely cut out useless regulations. Such regulations and restrictions add to the cost of our goods and lessen industry's freedom to produce. In a free society industry's chronic problem has always been over-production, not underproducting. Recently, owing in many instances to government intervention, this had changed. Governments sanction cartels in business which, in turn, permit businesses to restrict their production and increase prices without being subject to the pressures of a free market.

The government has paid lip service in its anti-inflation program to the idea of at least reviewing such government regulations. It states that it intends to assess more carefully the cost to the private sector of many government rules and regulations in the context of their benefits to society at large. That is a welcome intention. Certainly I, for one, will watch the results of this assessment. To date, however—and I stress this—governments have continued to introduce legislation which places further controls on people and creates a greater bureaucracy to control the controls. The controls may be noble in intent, but in my opinion a lot deal with trivia, a lot are confusing, and a lot are impossible. The waste of time and energy is enormous.

• (2150)

I thought it interesting that the government should choose the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to be its second spokesman on this important subject of inflation. There we have it, the king of the bureaucracy telling us how they are going to handle an anti-inflationary program. I suggest that if you add up the costs of the effects of the government's regulations in all industries and in all levels of commerce, it will prove to be a major factor in higher prices today. In fairness the government does touch on this problem in its white paper and I earnestly press the government to take action in these areas as they are spelled out in this program. The effect of such regulations is a cost that the producer or businessman cannot absorb in its entirety, so the consumer is paying for it as he has to pay taxes to keep the bureaucracy itself alive.

Touching more specifically on the program as laid down, I would point out several odd features in it. Under the definition of the cost on page 17 of the program, it deals with various ways that business can add up costs and then have a price increase, if necessary.

How is the government going to handle, for example, wholly foreign owned multi-national corporations when it deals with this question of cost? How effectively is it going to keep track of the cost of articles that may be imported from the parent company for further manufacture in Canada, and then sold? To what extent can the government guarantee to the members of this House that those articles will not be marked up in price, the cost then passed on in the form of a price increase, the net effect being the siphoning off of income to the foreign parent? It may be that that provision in the program as it is administered will end up looking like a veritable sieve.

I also note that there are many exemptions with respect to the settlements. For example, if an employer can demonstrate that he cannot attract or hold workers at existing wages and that an increase above the guidelines is necessary, the employer will not be regarded as having breached the guidelines.

I point out these references because I think the members of this House must examine the program very carefully to ensure that there will not be inequities, that those who have a wage increase that is justifiable are not denied their increase, but on the other hand those who do not have a justifiable wage increase should be denied that wage increase. There must not only be equity, but there must be the appearance of equity in the handling of the program that we now have before us. That is why I press the government to be more specific, to give us more knowledge as to what it intends and, hopefully, leave less discretion to this anti-inflationary board when it is set up.

As my leader stated earlier, we can go along with the spirit of this anti-inflationary program. However, we emphasize that there must be much more clarification of the program than we have had to date. We are disturbed by the rather indefinite period of the program. Three years is a long time. Certainly any control program that we in this party ever contemplated would not run for that long a duration.

I know that others wish to join in this debate. I will conclude by stating that we have before us perhaps the most momentous program and the most serious deliberation that we are going to have before us in this parliament. I urge every member to take a deep interest in the program and to ensure that inequities will not occur in its administration. Second, and this I stress most strongly, let us as members of parliament keep pressing the government not only to give us rhetoric, but to back up that rhetoric with actions that will end or at least lessen inflation in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I see that I have approximately one minute to add some of my gems to what has been dispersed throughout the House today.

Hon. members might appreciate knowing that I met with Mr. Morris of the CLC. I have gone over their statement. I indicated to him and to them that there has been an honest endeavour, on the part of the government through this program, to meet labour's nine points. The degree of success that I had may be revealed by the position taken by the CLC during the course of this week.

I think they are satisfied, at least to some extent, that we control many items indicated in their nine points. They mention professional fees, rents—and we look to the provinces there—and land speculation. As we go down the list there is housing and what we intend to do there, rents, land speculation, and co-operation of the provinces. About the only areas not directly affected by this program in their nine points is redistribution of income. That happens to be the total rationale for this program so that we can afford to take care of people in the lower income group. I cannot think of any sounder reason for the endorsation of this policy announced today in the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask if there is anyone on the other side with authority who can tell me if it is still the intention of the government to go ahead with Bill C-2 tomorrow and the next day?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is correct, Mr. Speaker. It will be Bill C-2.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock and the second motion having been made to adjourn at this time, therefore the question is that this House do now adjourn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—POSSIBILITY OF EXTENDING REHABILITATION PROGRAM AND INCREASING FUNDS AVAILABLE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I do not see the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) in the chamber and I am not aware of the appointment of his new parliamentary secretary.

I am pleased to have the opportunity again to bring to the attention of the House the situation arising from the government's housing program which, as the result of the controls that will hopefully be implemented, is vital and timely. I hope the parliamentary secretary can convince the minister, as I have tried to do on several occasions, to increase immediately the funding under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. This is what I indicated to the minister in my question of July 21 last.

I repeat once again that the RRAP program is excellent. It could meet the needs of many thousands of Canadians. It could also relieve the pressure on those low and no income Canadians who own their own homes but cannot afford to maintain them. As a result their homes will continue to deteriorate and those citizens will have to join the ever-increasing numbers of those who require low rental or subsidized homes, and which the government cannot provide in the numbers needed at the present moment.

• (2200)

Let me give you an example, Mr. Speaker, of the tremendous value of this program to the Province of Newfoundland, a situation that is most familiar to me. The majority of Newfoundlanders in small rural communities own their own homes. Many of these were built without compliance to any standards simply because no standards had been established at the time. Hundreds of them are close to 50 years old and were therefore built without many of the facilities which are taken for granted today. For example, a high percentage of them are without water pipes, inside toilets, central heating and—most important—are without insulation.

This matter of insulation is one I wish to refer to the minister; it involves an issue which the minister and his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) do not seem to want to comprehend. For some reason or other they do not want to acknowledge the waste which exists as a result of the fact that many thousands of homes, not only in Newfoundland but in every province of Canada, are improperly insulated, with the result that the cost of heating is doubled or even trebled to those occupying these sub-standard homes, particularly in the winter months.

Consider, too, Mr. Speaker, that many of the citizens occupying these homes are on welfare and that it is incumbent upon many provincial social services departments to increase the amount of assistance granted so as to cope with the added cost of home heating. It must be obvious to the minister that if more funds were made available to provinces under the RRAP program to allow for the provision of suitable electrical facilities and heating systems, and to reduce the risk run by those who live in sub-standard homes, millions of dollars and millions of gallons of heating oil would be saved, thus reducing costs which are tending, surely, to fuel the fires of inflation and increase the effect of inflation upon those who can least afford to cope with it—the poor of our country.

Apart from a statement that his department was directing attention to the matter, the only answer I received from the minister in reply to my question of July 21 was that the minister of finance of that day had eliminated the sales tax on insulation materials. I cannot accept this answer. Surely the minister knows that those to whom I refer, those who need help the most, cannot afford even to take advantage of the elimination of the sales tax by purchasing insulation materials.

The other grievance I wish to direct to the minister is that the allocation of funding for my province has been the insignificant amount of $600,000, which at best would provide relief or advantage only to some 300 homes and which would only relieve the pressures on less than 10 per cent of Newfoundland's needs.

I am sure the minister is cognizant of the needs of Canadians with regard to housing and I can only appeal to him to reassess this situation in the spirit of my presentation, to recognize realistically the facts as they exist, and to accept my suggestions which I put forward in a spirit of co-operation. I trust he will treat this as a matter of high priority, and adopt a commonsense approach when it comes to supporting a rehabilitation program and providing the funding necessary both to relieve the pressures on low income Canadians and to allow the government to cope with present housing needs, particularly since the government is now taking steps to control the inflationary disease which so harshly affects those citizens who need the cure the most.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for giving me the first opportunity to speak in my role tonight as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I am sure the minister appreciates the deep concern the hon. member has shown for this problem, and his remarks tonight will certainly carry the usual weight and will be studied carefully.

I should first of all refer back to the statement made on July 21, and to correct a misapprehension which is evident from the hon. member's question asked at that time. He suggested that only $7 million had been allocated for residential rehabilitation throughout Canada and that Newfoundland's share was only $600,000. These figures are correct for residential rehabilitation in rural areas, but an allocation of $39,300,000 has been made for residential rehabilitation in centres of over 2,500 people, and Newfoundland's share of that allocation is $1,300,000.

Furthermore, I am very pleased to be able to report to the House some significant progress in the area with which the hon. member is most concerned. As at September 30 of this year, in Newfoundland rehabilitation assistance applications approved and in the process of approval totalled approximately $1 million. This represents a take-up in the first nine months of this year of close to 75 per cent of the annual budget, suggesting that the program is right on target. It was the wish of the province of Newfoundland to allocate all rural rehabilitation funds to the Trout River area. Other rehabilitation loans and grants are limited to the two neighbourhood improvement areas in St. John's.

Elsewhere in Canada applications are being received at an increasing rate as other provinces proceed with the designation of municipalities and neighbourhood improvement areas. As a personal comment I would like to note that in my riding of Ottawa-Vanier I have two neighbourhood improvement areas and I am very satisfied with the way they are operating. One has been in existence for the last year, and another is just starting in Vanier.

The program is picking up steam and, as the very necessary consultations and agreements are accomplished and signed, there are indications that NIP and RRAP may enjoy a measure of success comparable to our extremely popular AHOP. It is now apparent they are meeting the need that prompted their introduction and that we can look forward to steadily increasing activity as the delivery systems are developed.

In the next few months as we give attention to the budget allocations for 1976 we will be watching closely the take-up capabilities of provinces under these two programs. Within the overall constraints we will ensure that funds are channeled from areas where they are not immediately required into those places where they can be put to the greatest use.

Adjournment Debate

TRANSPORT—URBAN TRANSPORTATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—DEFINITION OF WORDS "COMMUTER SYSTEM"

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, last March I asked the former Minister of Transport what progress was being made on the government's announced urban transportation assistance program, and I specifically asked the minister to ensure that the words "commuter system" would be defined to include municipal transit systems, in which case the Edmonton Northeast Rapid Transit line would qualify for assistance.

I asked that question because during the 1974 election campaign the government announced that a substantial program was forthcoming to assist urban transportation. As a matter of fact there were two or three policies enunciated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during that compaign which drew applause throughout the country, as the people were led to believe the government was finally going to act in helping to improve urban transportation.

At that time Edmonton was beginning the construction of the Northeast Rapid Transit line, and as the third city in Canada to have a subway Edmonton was trying to find out whether it could qualify under the terms of the policy. Several months went by, and it would take far more than the time allotted here tonight to go over all the correspondence back and forth between Ottawa and Edmonton, without any definitive answer being given because the policy had not yet been so formulated that it could be put into specific terms.

Nonetheless, Edmonton having committed itself to a rapid transit system went ahead and ordered rolling stock on the ground that it was important to keep construction on schedule for the subway so that it would be in place for the Commonwealth Games of 1978.

Finally on July 30 this year the government announced some details in respect of an urban transportation assistance policy. It announced a program of $100 million to be spent over a period of five years. But what did we find when we got to the detail but the very thing I and the administration of Edmonton had feared would indeed happen, namely, that there would be excluded from the policy municipal urban transport systems? That is to say, this policy would be in force only for systems between cities, and not for systems within a city. That seemed to me to cut the heart out of the urban transportation policy that we had been lead to believe the government was interested in bringing before the country.

The policy as enunciated on July 30 said that any vehicles which had previously been ordered would be excluded from federal assistance. Edmonton of course had gone ahead and ordered its vehicles in order to keep construction on time. I suggest that the implementation of the policy announced on July 30 was discrimination against the city of Edmonton, and indeed against all of Alberta since there is no system in Alberta that will qualify for the policy as enunciated and explained on July 30.

I say to the parliamentary secretary, speaking through him to the new minister, that if the new minister wants to show signs that he is sincere in his determination to represent western Canada in the government and the needs of the west, he should take a very hard look at this policy which is discriminating against Edmonton and change it so that Edmonton would qualify for $12.1 million worth of federal assistance if the rapid transit line of the city of Edmonton could be included in the policy. Edmonton has the support of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities in its endeavour to receive its just appropriation.

If the government's policy of restraint which we have been hearing a lot about in the past 24 hours is to mean anything then there must be an element of fairness in how government money is spent. I suggest that since the policy of funding would take place between 1977 and 1982, a period of five years, this would fit into any policy of restraint on government expenditures, especially if we consider the over-all effect of what public transportation does in this country in cutting down automobile costs in heavily urbanized centres.

Indeed we know that for every $1 spent on cars in urban centres less than five cents is spent on public transportation. That is a shame in a society which is now beginning to pride itself on energy conservation, and indeed at a time when the government is spending enormous sums of money on advertising programs to convince Canadians that we must save energy in respect of heating and mobile costs. Therefore I suggest that at the tri-level meetings which are continuing in this country, with governments trying to get together, and in which I myself participated on September 29 in Edmonton, if there is to be a spirit of trust and mutual confidence then we must expect that the government will be honest with the people of Alberta and say that when it announced the policy in an election campaign it intended to deliver on it over a period in harmony with a policy of restraint and of energy conservation. The government should be honest with the people and not exclude us. So, for energy saving and a proper energy policy for the west, and indeed for the credibility of the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), to whom I wish success, I say it is absolutely imperative that he re-assess that policy.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the beginning that I am very pleased at this first opportunity which I have to participate in the debate in the House as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, and I am glad to do so in response to the remarks of a fellow westerner. I took very careful note of the hon. member's comments with respect to what he perceives quite rightly to be the deep concern of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) for the position of western Canada in Confederation and his aspirations in that regard. I can assure the hon. member that those aspirations are shared by many of us in all parts of the House.

As the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) is undoubtedly aware, and indeed as he has just pointed out quite correctly, the problem of traffic congestion and its related evils such as automobile accidents, pollution, and urban sprawl, have become prevalent within our urban areas. A promising way to alleviate these problems is to increase the use of urban commuter and transit services in order to reduce the number of cars on the road.

Canadian municipalities have improved public transportation services in recent years with financial aid from provincial governments; the announcement of the federal intention last year to provide further capital assistance for urban transportation was warmly received by provincial and municipal spokesmen, and the media.

The former minister of transport, and the present Minister responsible for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) announced on July 30, 1975, a federal government capital assistance program for urban transportation. This program deals specifically with assistance for urban commuter services and provides for up to 75 per cent of the cost of new vehicles for such services in the form of grants, and a further 25 per cent in loans. This program will provide technical and planning assistance to municipalities, but particularly to those smaller ones which may have a need. As the Minister of State for Urban Affairs stated earlier, there has never been conflict between officials of the Ministry of Transport and those of the Department of State for Urban Affairs, and the announced program is the result of close collaboration between officials of the two Ministries. Furthermore, these two ministries are working very closely together in an examination of further initiatives that the federal government might take in the future in the area of urban transportation.

As the hon. member may know, the present Minister of Transport after assuming the transport portfolio did have occasion to meet briefly in Ottawa recently with His Worship Mayor Horawlec of Edmonton, and he indicated to the mayor at that time that he would re-examine the question of federal government support for the Edmonton rapid transit system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The two motions to adjourn the House being now deemed to have been adopted, accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

SUGGESTED EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY TO PRIME MINISTER ON CONSERVATIVE VICTORY IN HOCHELAGA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion arising from the fact that there are now and then times when members on all sides of the House should join together in expressing deepest sympathy to a member of the House who has suffered a great and tragic personal loss. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this House express its very deepest and sincere sympathy to the Prime Minister, to members of the cabinet and to all members of the Liberal family on the momentous occasion of the Progressive Conservative victory in Hochelaga.

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF MERCURY POISONING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of extreme urgency which requires immediate attention.

Since Dr. André Barbeau, member of the study group responsible for controlling mercury poisoning hazards, has stated that "all the people from northwest Quebec have a very high rate of mercury in their system" and since it is urgent and necessary to take steps to cure the mercury poisoning victims and prevent in the future any poisoning hazard, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs immediately undertake a thorough inquiry on mercury poisoning—especially in northwest Quebec—and report to the House on the steps to be taken to solve that problem endangering the health of the people.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I hope nothing unfortunate has happened to the Prime Minister. Perhaps I might direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the results of the Hochelaga by-election, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House what the government has in mind regarding the Minister of Communications.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under these circumstances I find it rather difficult to envisage the opposition looking so blue today.

In answer to the Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister is attending some meetings with Dr. Kissinger. He will be in a little later. In the meantime I can say that there has not yet been a decision made as to the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Nowlan: We want Simma.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Acting Prime Minister inform the House as to when we can expect an announcement on this matter and when we can expect the government to announce its second choice?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In the meantime could the Acting Prime Minister inform the House who is the Acting Minister of Communications?

Mr. Sharp: The question of whether there will be a replacement for the present Minister of Communications is a matter which has not yet been decided. The Leader of the Opposition, having been a prime minister, will understand that there is a procedure for dealing with these matters. There will be an announcement in due course. I understand that the Acting Minister of Communications is the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Stanfield: The country seems to be staggering from disaster to disaster.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Could the Acting Prime Minister tell the House if and when the government intends to appoint as chairman of the CRTC the vice-chairman, and to appoint a new vice-chairman?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The question of the replacement of the chairman is under consideration. A decision has not yet been made.

I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition would think that as far as he is concerned the results were a disaster.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT TARGETS FOR REDUCTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It arises out of the white paper published yesterday and the unemployment figures which also were revealed yesterday. Page 2 of the white paper makes reference to the fact that unemployment will rise in the months and years ahead if no decisive action is taken. Since that is the only reference in the whole of the white paper to unemployment, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance, if, in addition to the goal the government has set with a view to reducing the rate of inflation over the next three years, he could inform the House whether some targets have been set by the government to reduce the levels of unemployment and if so, what those targets are?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have set no targets as such on the question of unemployment. I, of course, dealt with that subject in my speech yesterday.

POSSIBILITY OF PROPOSALS TO INCREASE HOUSING STARTS AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question with regard to the same issue and related to the question of housing and the shortage of housing. As the minister knows the expected starts, the goals, set by the government this year are not going to be achieved. I should like to ask the minister if he intends to bring to the House proposals that will lead to a major increase in housing starts in the months ahead and so fill that need as well as the employment need?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as indicated in the white paper and as announced in the House yesterday, my colleague the Minister of State for Urban Affairs will be bringing forward some proposals with regard to housing.

Mr. Broadbent: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister could tell the House when we could expect those proposals? Does the government plan to take any action with regard to mortgage rates and, specifically, does it intend to bring down mortgage rates?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. gentleman, and as was indicated yesterday, we will be coming forward with some proposals with regard to housing and my colleague might like to specify in what time-frame—but it would certainly be important to do this as soon as we can.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECT OF WAGE GUIDELINES ON POSTAL WORKERS AND OTHERS NEGOTIATING CONTRACTS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that in his statement on prices and incomes control the Prime Minister said that the new regulations would become effective on the 14th at midnight; that the Minister of Finance repeated it yesterday and that in this morning's paper we read that the Postmaster General declared a postal strike could take place involving wage increases of the order of 71 per cent and that such a demand did not have anything to do with the new law; can the minister tell this House whether postal employees will be subject to the same restraints as others, and that from October 14, 1975, or whether they will be subject to it later on?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I draw to the hon. member's attention the paragraph on page 20 of the white paper which says that the Anti-Inflation Board will give special consideration to those cases where contracts have expired and negotiations are underway, where the expired contract was signed prior to the beginning of 1974. Therefore, the postal workers' contract is one of those that will be considered by the Board.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

In the definite case of Bell Canada in northwestern Quebec whose employees have been on strike for the past three, four or five months; in the case of the pulp and paper industry where people are also on strike; in the case of the British Columbia forest workers, will the same regulations apply under these circumstances, and will the striking Bell Canada employees in northwestern Quebec be compelled to drop their demands and accept what the government suggests, namely 8 or 10 per cent, or will their demands be cancelled ipso facto?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the government and the mailmen or Bell Canada must first examine a proposition submitted by these workers. Then, this proposition must be submitted to the Anti-Inflation Board for approval and further suggestion. I cannot say for any of these contracts whether they will be approved or cancelled; it will be up to the board to decide.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a final supplementary question.

Does that mean, for example, in the case where the employer offers a 25 or 26 per cent increase to his employees whereas they are asking for 30 per cent, that both parties will have to get together and negotiate again to fit into the context of the new regulation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as a general principle, they will have to conform to the program's guidelines, which, however, recognize the justice of the situation whether there was a settled contract or new contracts with other employees. They will be entitled to a just settlement. It will be the board's responsibility to determine in each case what is right.

[English]

ALLEGED INEQUITIES RESULTING FROM WAGE GUIDELINES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Since unions which closed negotiations and obtained contracts before the control program was announced will have a clear advantage for the next two years over other unions which did not complete new contracts, and over unorganized labour, what steps does the government intend to take to try to correct this inequity, or is it the intention of the government to leave this problem entirely to the Anti-Inflation Board?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the guidelines are clear in this regard. It is not proposed to re-open contracts already concluded and in force. The proposal, and this is the point I was making to the hon. member for Témiscamingue, is that the Anti-Inflation Board will have to consider transitional situations in which, as indicated on page 20 of the guidelines, contracts entered into before 1974 have terminated in the past year and in which there have been negotiations. The government proposes that these situations should be referred to the Anti-Inflation Board, for determination in each case as to what would be the justice of the settlement.

WAGE GUIDELINES—ROLE OF CANADA LABOUR RELATIONS COUNCIL

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the obviously inequitable situation developing with respect to labour and wages, can the minister advise the House if the Canada Labour Relations Council will have any role to play in obtaining the co-operation of both labour and management for this control program? I ask this keeping in mind that Mr. Morris, head of the CLC, said he opposes the control program.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Labour Relations Council I think would be a useful vehicle for achieving a better relationship between all factors in society in connection with the difficult question of collective bargaining in Canada. Touching on initial union reaction, I think it is important from the government's standpoint to have closer consultation not only with the leadership in Ottawa, but with leaders of unions across the country, with locals and with the membership, to make certain that they understand that in the long run their objective, of assisting those at the lowest end of the income scale, is also the objective of this government and is best achieved through this kind of program.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question? In view of the minister's remarks, can he advise if the government intends to consult with the Canada Labour Relations Council and try to obtain the help of that council, bearing in mind that my party supported the formation of that council and that its duties connected with the control program should be clearly defined now?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I must say, in relation to the program, that the Minister of Labour and I met with the council last week, with the government's proposals very much in mind as we discussed outstanding issues. I agree with the hon. gentleman; the Canada Labour Relations Council is an excellent forum in which to try to arrive at a better appreciation of and consensus for this particular proposal as well as other problems on the labour relations scene.

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF MEMBER AS MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Oral Questions

HEALTH

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO BILL C-68

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the government House leader. In view of the proposals for controls announced by the Prime Minister the day before yesterday, and in view of the intent of Bill C-68, which is to place limitations on expenditures as far as medicare is concerned, will the House leader clarify whether this bill will now be withdrawn in view of the fact it appears to be somewhat obsolete or does the government tend to proceed with it as previously planned?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have had this matter under discussion. Certainly it is the intention of the government to proceed in principle, but I cannot say whether it will make some amendments in light of the restraints with which we hope the provinces will agree. If we do decide that those changes have to be made, we than have the choice of amending the bill or introducing a new one. I can assure the hon. member that we intend to apply restraint in this area as well.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—SUGGESTED LIMITATION OF INCREASE IN CLASS RATES IN VIEW OF RESTRAINT GUIDELINES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It relates to the announcement that Canadian National Railways will increase its class rates on October 21 by 20 per cent, which will be the third increase this year, amounting to a cumulative total increase of something like 87 per cent in its class rates. In light of that increase and others related to it, has the minister yet discussed this with the Canadian Transport Commission so that it can enforce its authority and limit these increases to one that are acceptable within the broad range of guidelines, both for government agencies and the public?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not discussed the matter with the Canadian Transport Commission. Indeed, I do not think the guidelines will have any effect on the power of the CTC in this area. However, the guidelines may themselves have some bearing upon the situation but this, of course, is a legal interpretation of the act with which we will deal and pass. That will become more apparent tomorrow with the bill before us. Thereafter, hon. members can make appropriate comments and see what the power of the administrator will be in that context.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised that the minister has not studied the document his own government brought forward. It indicates very clearly that the prices and quality of service must conform with the new program that is administered under the regulatory authority. Will he take steps to ensure that these rates which will come into effect and have a very discriminatory effect, particularly against shippers in regionally disadvantaged areas of the country, will be rolled back or at least frozen at their present level?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I thought it would be clear that my view is that guidelines can indeed apply notwithstanding what other legal situation exists. However, that obviously is a legal opinion. I am somewhat diffident about giving a legal opinion to the hon. member. I will, in due course, be glad to discuss it further with him. The point is very important. The guidelines, the statute and the power contained in that statute, is very pervasive and can have an effect in areas where otherwise the law does not allow for control of such things as rates on freight.

DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATION THAT COMMISSION PORTS GIVE GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport and the Acting Minister of Communications. The previous Minister of Transport frequently assured the House that the Scott report dealing with the reorganization of port authorities would include a recommendation to the effect that the commission ports would give grants in lieu of taxes. Will the minister assure the House that these grants will begin in the fiscal year 1976?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot at this point determine the exact timing of the changes which will be made. It obviously depends in part upon implementation of changes in the policy and in changes in law. I can say, however, that the policy of my predecessor is in the process of being implemented in this area.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY CANADA WILL ATTEND EUROPEAN CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR DEBATE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that the preparatory meeting in Paris of the officials of the European community, Japan, the United States and the other nations has been completed, and there is to be a ministerial conference in a few weeks, will Canada be included amongst those invited to participate in that conference?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We think we will be on that list.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister smiles as though he got that information just recently.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1430)

Mr. Baldwin: In the light of the important nature of this meeting, is the minister prepared some time prior to the meeting to discuss with the House the government's attitude and, if necessary, make arrangements for a debate so that those taking part in the meeting will carry to it some indication of the views of this House?

Mr. MacEachen: I think it would be a good idea to discuss this subject in the House of Commons some time before the meeting takes place, and I will consult with the House leader with a view to determining whether an opportunity is likely to come forward or whether we shall have to arrange one.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF STATE DR. HENRY KISSINGER

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure hon. members would wish me to take advantage of this most appropriate moment to call attention to the presence in our gallery of a most distinguished visitor. I refer, of course, to the Secretary of State of the United States of America, Dr. Henry Kissinger.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Not only because Dr. Kissinger represents our most cherished friend and neighbour, the United States of America, but also because his work throughout the world has been such a driving force for world peace, all of us, I am sure, wish him well in every endeavour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF PRICE INCREASES BY SUPERMARKETS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of reports that in the past several days supermarkets in British Columbia have raised prices of items on the shelf in anticipation of cost increases—I refer, of course, to anticipated wage increases which are now unlikely to materialize because of the government's wage control program—will the government instruct the Anti-Inflation Board to investigate the situation immediately to ensure that prices in those supermarkets do not now exceed permissible levels?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I am obliged to the hon. member for bringing this matter to my attention. I, in turn, will bring it to the attention of the Anti-Inflation Board.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO MERCURY CONTENT OF ABITIBI FISH—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of the Environment.

Can she tell the House whether her department has undertaken thorough and serious inquiry with a view to determining the rate of mercury contained in the fish caught in northern Abitibi? Can she also tell us what steps have been taken with the native population of that area to prevent the occurrence of another Minamata in our area?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are currently conducting inquiries into the level of mercury in our rivers. Recently, because of the problems pointed out in northern Ontario and northern Quebec, we set up a task force which reexamined the situation and tried to establish how best mercury could be measured in our rivers and how the companies using mercury in their industrial processes stock those substances which can be toxic. In order to acquaint people with the situation, we have met the Indians; we have explained the problem to them and we gave them all the information that can be of use to them so that they can convey it to other Indians.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary. Could the minister tell us whether investigations have been made to trace back the eight tons of mercury which disappeared mysteriously from the Domtar warehouses in Lebel-sur-Quévillon?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, this was found out because the department asked the companies concerned to give us reports on the quantities of mercury they bought. Thanks to these inquiries, we have been able to discover that this extremely volatile metal had disappeared. We do not know yet how. It is thought it must have evaporated, that drops of mercury might have been absorbed in the soil. In any case, it is a question of tremendous importance that I will be able to examine better once I have the contaminant act passed. This act gives me the right to obtain all relevant information to examine this matter more in depth.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON SECTORS OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture if I may. Could he inform the House what effects the so-called program of restraint the government announced in the first part of the week will have on agriculture especially in the area of marketing boards, the processing industry, the machinery industry, the fertilizer industry and also the feed manufacturing industry? Would he be prepared to outline briefly the likely effects of the program on these various sectors of agriculture?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Even if the minister were to attempt to answer that kind of question, I do not think the question period would be the time for him to go into such detail.

Oral Questions

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECT OF EXEMPTION OF POSTAL WORKERS FROM WAGE GUIDELINES ON ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Was the Postmaster General expressing government policy when he stated that postal workers are not subject to the 10 per cent guideline limitation? If this is the case, does it not seriously jeopardize the possibility of any co-operation such as the government is seeking in this restraint program?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I listened with great care to what the Postmaster General did say. He did not say what the hon. member has attributed to him. He indicated that the postal workers would be subject to the guidelines as others would be, but he also indicated that the exception noted and referred to previously in the question period with respect to transitional contracts and the historical relationship between bargaining units would be of relevance and that this matter, once a contract is achieved, would be referred to the Anti-Inflation Board for judgment having regard to those criteria.

Mr. Epp: In the light of that answer I should like to ask the minister whether a further statement by the Postmaster General to the effect that he personally would make representations to the Anti-Inflation Board to get a higher percentage than 10 per cent does not seriously jeopardize the government's unanimity on the 10 per cent guideline?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As the House well knows, the Postmaster General is a great advocate of justice in all quarters and I would expect nothing less from him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC WORKS

SUGGESTION DEPARTMENT ENTER INTO CONTRACT FOR WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. It is further to the controversial contract recently awarded for garbage collection by the City of Ottawa, one which calls for the successful tender to pick-up Government of Canada waste in the city—a very large job.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: Can the minister advise us whether his department will spend an additional $400,000 over a six-year period in order to have government waste picked up by Provincial Sanitation Services Limited, the successful tenderer, or whether he will consider entering into a separate contract between the Department of Public Works and one of the low bidders which would mean a saving of nearly half a million dollars over the next six years, a worthwhile and prudent undertaking, I submit, at this time?

[Mr. Speaker.]

● (1440)

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a definitive answer to that now but I am grateful for the interesting suggestion.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSIDERATION OF BILL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration relating to unemployment insurance. In light of the fact that the pay out for the month of July this year is something like 60 per cent higher than at the same period last year, would the minister advise whether the amendments that he has brought before the House are satisfactory in terms of removing the disincentives which apparently the members of his cabinet believe exist; and in particular, is the minister seriously considering relating the time for collection of benefits to the time that a person is employed in the work force?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there is a bill before the House and we intend to proceed with its consideration by parliament very shortly as the session resumes. With regard to any further amendments, I would remind the hon. member, as I have said before, that we consider it a most significant program, both in terms of its social and economic implications and in terms of cost. There is an ongoing, comprehensive review taking place which may bring forth other suggestions, and when a decision is made I will place the information before the hon. member.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding all that verbiage the minister failed to answer the question. I should like to ask the government House leader whether, in light of the fact that the cost of unemployment insurance is nearing the $4 billion mark—something that we should question—the government House leader can indicate to us if there is any priority being given to this bill in order that we can delve into the whole matter and put the truth before the Canada people? Is there any priority here?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is a very high priority. I hope to have the opportunity of talking to my hon. friends the House leaders of the other parties about an allocation of time to enable us to deal with the bill which will be before us tomorrow regarding the economic measures and to combine them with the unemployment insurance and other bills that are part of the same general approach to restraint. I hope I can do this with the co-operation of all hon. members.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN REQUIRING VISITORS TO HAVE VISAS PENDING CONSIDERATION BY PARLIAMENT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration which is based on a speech he made recently. Can the minister assure us that no decision will be made about requiring visitors to Canada to have visas until parliament has had an opportunity to express itself on what many of us feel would be a very restrictive policy?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this question because it is important to clarify any erroneous impressions. The suggestion concerning visas is an option that has been talked about in public and before the committee. I have looked at the suggestion but no decision will be made about such major issues of policy until after the parliamentary committee reports, which I anticipate will be very shortly, in fact toward the end of this month.

BROADCASTING

REASON FOR EARLY START ON FRENCH LANGUAGE TELEVISION STATION FOR VANCOUVER

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Communications. In view of the fact that the CRTC hearings will not be held in Vancouver until approximately February 3 regarding whether that city needs a French language television station, can the minister advise the House why the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has already started to instal its transmitter for channel 26 on Mount Seymour?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to look into this question and give the hon. member a report.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PRICE INCREASES BY SUPERMARKETS—MECHANISM FOR REFUNDS TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is somewhat supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Nickel Belt, and is directed to the Minister of Finance. It arises from the change in prices in supermarkets both in British Columbia and Ontario which apparently are anticipating wage increases that will not materialize as a result of the wage freeze. Provision is made in the white paper for refunds to purchasers who have been gouged. Can the minister advise the House whether we will see some mechanism for identifying those purchasers who have purchased goods which have been artificially inflated so that they can get a refund? In other words, how do you refund the price of a can of beans to people who have been gouged?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member identifies what will be a very considerable problem in that there are a great many articles of small value exchanging hands over a period of time. It may be very difficult, following a subsequent order by the administrator, to identify a particular person who is entitled to a refund, but certainly every effort will be made to do that. In that kind of situation, where the purchaser cannot be identified, the amount of over-charging will then be forfeited to the crown.

SUGGESTED REPORTING PROVISION TO ENABLE REVIEW OF PRICE INCREASES BEFORE IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the white paper contains no proposals for telegraphing price increases—in other words, there is no provision that I can find for mandatory reporting or a review process of price increases—the situation that now exists in supermarkets will presumably continue to prevail after the legislation is passed. Is the minister now giving consideration to a mandatory reporting provision for all price increases so that the review mechanism can work prior to the increase occurring?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would invite the hon. member to examine the bill after it is given first reading. I would be glad to talk to him further about the procedures after he has had a chance of exploring the matter.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—ALLEGATION FAILURE TO CONSTRUCT WOULD FORCE PASSENGERS FLYING TORONTO TO VANCOUVER TO USE MIRABEL

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport. Perhaps I should start by offering my congratulations to him on his new portfolio. Was the minister correctly quoted in the press as saying that unless Pickering airport were built, Vancouver bound passengers out of Toronto would be forced to travel from Mirabel? Was the minister correctly reported as threatening that?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is even a correct version of what the press said I said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: I did indicate in an interview on this very important question that there was a serious dilemma as to how to handle Toronto area passengers on long distance flights in a very few years time because of overloading of Malton's capacity, and that as a result there was no easy way of dealing with long haul traffic. I was specifically pointing out that short range facilities, such as the new STOL or train or bus, were really only adequate for the 18 per cent of the traffic that travels a relatively short distance, a two hour place journey, and not for the long haul. That led to the possibility that I thought that Toronto and the province of Ontario ought to know how they intend Torontonians to be handled in terms of travel in two or three years' time, or take responsibility for the inconvenience that would be imposed upon them.

Mr. Beatty: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that the quotation of the Prime Minister at Mirabel to the effect that Mirabel airport would have Torontonians on their knees and the statements or threats made by the Minister of Transport against the people of southern Ontario have severely damaged relations between the government of Ontario and the government of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Beatty: —does the Minister of Transport intend to reopen negotiations with the government of Ontario at the earliest opportunity to try to get some sort of working relationship with that government to ensure that passengers from southern Ontario get fair and adequate treatment and are not subject to threats and blackmail from Ottawa?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member read an article that quoted certain statements, he will know, and I will repeat for him now, that I said that I did not think the Prime Minister said those words. But the message in terms of the problem for the people of the Toronto area is very clear on the facts. The same article indicated that I would also be very happy indeed at an early date to meet with the new Minister of Transport for the province of Ontario so that he could show me what plans to solve this problem they have in mind, since they changed from what had been their previous position, namely that a second airport in this area was indeed needed.

PETRO-CANADA

LOCATION OF HEADQUARTERS—EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON DEVELOPMENT OF COMPANY

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government advised Maurice Strong, the newly appointed head of Petro-Canada, that the headquarters of Petro-Can should be in Edmonton, which is a strategic location because it is both a government and an oil centre; and secondly, will the government's new restraint program have any further effect on the development of Petro-Can, the budget of which was cut last June?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the location of Petro-Canada, certain discussions have taken place between Mr. Strong, the minister for energy and myself. We will be interested in hearing if this is a representation by the opposition or just one by the hon. member to go to Edmonton, say, rather than to Calgary or some other city.

● (1450)

POSSIBILITY OF MR. STRONG MAKING REPRESENTATIONS TO OPEC COUNTRIES ON OIL PRICES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will receive representations in due course on that subject, but I want to ask him now, will the terms of reference for Mr. Strong's new job provide him with the authority to make representations to the OPEC leadership to keep oil prices from further escalations which will bring even more disorder into the world economy and also worsen Canada's balance of payments on oil, which will become critical by the end of this decade?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would refer to the debate in the House when the legislation was passed, he will see it is not in the nature of the legislation to have the president of Petro-Can make essentially political recommendations. The government and its ministers are particularly able to do that themselves.

HOUSING

INVALIDITY OF NOVA SCOTIA HOME PURCHASERS TO GET $500 SUBSIDY BECAUSE OF STRIKE OF POWER CORPORATION EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister in charge of housing and is related to a question posed yesterday regarding the possible extension of the $500 federal subsidy, the announcement of which I hope the minister will be making very shortly. In light of the fact that the Nova Scotia Power Corporation employees have been on strike for some time, as a result of which very few homeowners have been able to get service connections, and in view of the fact that all the other regulations probably will be eliminated from the $500 subsidy, can the minister give consideration to this very unique problem?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I am giving consideration to that unique and rather unfortunate problem which exists in many areas across the country but as I said yesterday, I am concerned that the limited funds which are available are used to their maximum advantage. I am looking at such cases and I have to make up my mind very quickly on this. I will be making a statement shortly.

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT APPEAL BOARD IN CONNECTION WITH IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the light of the apprehension across the country regarding the implementation of the second step of the bilingualism program within the civil service and within Crown agencies, would he consider setting up an appeal tribunal so that civil servants seeking promotion or jobs within the civil service would have an independent board to which they could appeal from treatment by the present public service commission or the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the procedure set up under the law for the public service commission and the public servants themselves is one which we feel is adequate and fair. I do not know if the hon. member has cause to believe that the commission would act unfairly in any of these cases which have been provided for by the law. That is not our own opinion.

Mr. Horner: Believing in the truism that justice must always appear to be done and must always appear to be just, the public service commission hires and places civil servants within the civil service but the resolution that this House passed in 1973 was not incorporated in the law, and those same civil servants have no appeal to any independant body which could assert a complete decision as to whether or not their application was considered fairly. What I am asking is that the Prime Minister, who at one time taught law, relatively quickly recognize the point that there should appear to be fair treatment to all civil servants. Whether or not there is, they should have that right to appeal.

Mr. Trudeau: But, Mr. Speaker, the public service commission was set up by this parliament in order that it would be an independent body, independent of politics.

Mr. Horner: It is not now considered.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member says that it is not now considered. If he feels that the commission is breaking the law or if he feels that the commission is not independent, then he could make some proposals for amendment, but I do not think that every case of some dissatisfaction by a civil servant should be a cause to withdraw the independence or confidence from this commission or to set up a tribunal to judge its actions.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Horner: Just one quick—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRISONERS OF WAR—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. On July 29, the minister indicated that the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs regarding Canadians who were prisoners of war both in Hong Kong and in Northwestern Europe were being given active consideration. Can he say whether a bill implementing these recommendations will be introduced shortly?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the report referred to by the hon. member is presently under consideration by the government.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is a fear across the country that in view of the restraint program such a proposal by the committee or legislation covering prisoners of war might be delayed, can the minister assure the House that he has had consultation on this with the cabinet and that in due course we will see legislation to cover this very important subject.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, the way the question is phrased it could be answered in many ways. I see the day when we will have legislation.

An hon. Member: Go ahead. Just answer.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Do you want to answer the question or will I answer it.

An hon. Member: What about the by-election?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I am not scared of a by-election. Mr. Speaker, to answer the question of the last hon. member, I would say that when this goes through the proper process, which is the case at the moment, and the legislation is recommended, prepared and before the House, you will all know in due course.

AIR TRANSPORT

BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL COMMUNICATIONS—FAILURE OF COMMITTEE TO PRODUCE REPORT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The former Minister of Transport on September 10 established a committee to recommend a realistic policy regarding air-to-ground communications in one language. The Canadian Airline Pilots Association is a member of that committee and the pilots are going on strike on Saturday. Does this mean that the committee has failed to produce a unanimous report, and what steps does the minister intend to take to overcome this?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the committee did in the end decide that it could no longer make progress with the work it was doing and has therefore discontinued its operation. It had reached some form of agreement about certain procedures which would be acceptable but ended with quite different points of view about certain major issues. I have met separately with the pilots association and have assured them of our careful examination of the safety question involving the use of the French language in the five airports in the province of Quebec. I have assured them also that the question of safety is the foremost one in considering this question.

With that understanding I regret therefore that they are going ahead with the strike just simply as a symbol of their concern about safety. I can assure all hon. members that we are all concerned about safety and that that is the foremost requirement.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I wish to lay upon the table of the House a document, in both official languages, containing the terms of reference and the membership of the Committee on the Operation of the Abortion Law which was appointed on September 26, 1975.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. J.J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 2,532, 2,956, 2,957, 3,011, 3,030 and 3,071.

INMATES IN PENAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 2,532—Mr. Whiteway:

1. For the year 1974, how much did one prisoner cost the government?

2. How many prisoners were in our penal institutions?

3. How many prisoners were (a) first (b) second (c) third (d) fourth offenders?

4. What was the average term for (a) first (b) second (c) third (d) fourth offenders?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. $10,492—This figure is based on the average inmate population throughout the year and on the actual expenditures of the Canadian Penitentiary Service for the fiscal year 1973/74 increased by a depreciation of 2 per cent on buildings and 10 per cent on equipment.

2. Nine thousand one hundred thirty-two as of January 1, 1974.

3. (a) 6,284; (b) 2,287; (c) 499; (d) 62. These figures represent the number of terms an inmate was incarcerated within federal institutions since 1970 only (the date when the Inmate Statistical Information Section of the Canadian Penitentiary Service started collecting data on inmates). Statistics on commitments prior to 1970 are not available except for cases of parole violators admitted that year (1970) which were captured as second offenders (term). Therefore a first offender may not reflect the first time ever in a federal institution but the first time within a period of approximately four years. This also applies to second, third and fourth offenders.

4. (a) 2,041 days; (b) 1,939 days; (c) 1,695 days; (d) 1,307 days. In determining the average terms for the four categories above, it was necessary to exclude the number of inmates serving life sentences since the term of servitude is an unknown factor.

SURPLUS EGGS

Question No. 2,956—Mr. Gray:

How many surplus eggs of a quality originally adequate for table use have been sold by (a) CEMA (b) provincial egg marketing agencies at CEMA's request to Canadian breakers in each week from and after April 1, 1974 to date?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): CEMA advises that all eggs removed by it since April 1, 1974 were of a quality adequate for table use. All eggs removed in the period were disposed of as set out in answer to question 2,954. The volume sold to Canadian breakers between April 1, 1974 and July 15, 1975 inclusive would be the total removed in that period less the 1,023,730 boxes exported. CEMA policy requires it to promptly sell eggs removed. CEMA advises that currently removals in one province are from time to time moved to other provinces to meet demands of the table egg market. This usually occurs where eggs of a particular size are in active demand and in short supply in that province.

EGGS IN STORAGE

Question No. 2,957—Mr. Gray:

What were the number of eggs in storage in each province under the jurisdiction of (a) provincial egg marketing boards (b) CEMA during each week from and including April 1, 1974 to date?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): CEMA advises that the policy requires the selling of all eggs at time of purchase and any eggs in storage are held privately or to account of provincial board prior to arrangement with CEMA. CEMA does not have statistics on such storage programs but in terms of provincial boards removals are declared weekly as indicated in answer to question No. 2,954.

PERSONS ASSOCIATED WITH CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 3,011—Mr. Huntington:

Since 1968, has Mr. Peter D. Curry, President of Power Corporation of Canada Ltd. been or is he a member, officer, director or in any way whatsoever associated with (a) a Crown corporation (b) the government (c) a department, agency, advisory board, council or committee and, if so (i) what position did he or does he hold (ii) with what corporation, department, agency, advisory board, council or committee (iii) between what dates (iv) was the position attained by appointment, contest, promotion or through a personnel agency (v) if by appointment, by whom or by what authority was he appointed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): No.

MR. JOHN HENDERSON MOORE

Question No. 3,030—Mr. Huntington:

Since 1968, has Mr. John Henderson Moore, Director of Bell Canada been or is he a member, officer, director or in any way whatsoever associated with (a) a Crown corporation (b) the government (c) a department, agency, advisory board, council or committee and, if so (i) what position did he or does he hold (ii) with what corporation, department, agency, advisory board, council or committee (iii) between what dates (iv) was the position attained by appointment, contest, promotion or through a personnel agency (v) if by appointment, by whom or by what authority was he appointed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Director, Canada Development Corporation Appointment by Governor in Council (see sections 4 and 5, CDC Act).

CANADIAN COAL TECHNOLOGY MISSION TO SOUTH AFRICA

Question No. 3,071—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. Was a recent visit made to South Africa by a coal technology mission in which members of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources participated and, if so (a) what was the purpose of the visit (b) how many persons made the trip (c) what are their names and what positions do they hold in or outside the Department?

2. Did any private firms participate in the mission and, if so, what are their names?

3. (a) How much did the visit cost (b) who paid the cost of the mission?

4. How long was the mission in South Africa?

5. Is there to be a reciprocal visit to Canada by a South African coal technology mission?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Yes. (a) To observe commercial scale conversion of coal to gaseous and liquid hydrocarbon products and, in particular, to learn details of South Africa's extended operational experience in manufacture of gasoline from coal. (b) Sixteen. (c) E. D. Jamieson, Senior Adviser—Coal, E. M. & R.; E. W. Humphrys, Senior Adviser—Electrical Energy, E. M. & R.; P. J. Read, Chief, Transportation and Marketing, Coal, E. M. & R. The remaining delegates represented provincial governments and private companies.

2. Yes. British Columbia Hydro-Electric Corporation, British Columbia Research, Calgary Power Company, Fluor Canada, Monmax H & G Services, Montreal Engineering, Shawinigan Engineering, Surveyer, Nenniger and Chenevert, TransCanada PipeLines. QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. J. J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 3059 and 3061 could be passed as orders for returns, these papers would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

NAMES OF LAWYERS IN ONTARIO RETAINED BY FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Question No. 3,059—Mr. Beatty:

1. What were the names and addresses of lawyers in Ontario given work by the Farm Credit Corporation in the fiscal year (a) 1973-74 (b) 1974-75?

2. For each lawyer, how many cases were handled?

3. In each case, what was the total amount of money paid to each individual in each fiscal year?

Return tabled.

NAMES OF SECURITY DIRECTORS OF FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 3,061—Mr. Reynolds:

1. (a) What are the names of all security directors of federal penitentiaries (b) what year did they begin working (c) what was their previous experience in fields of security?

2. (a) How many persons under the Commissioner are responsible for security operations (b) what are their names and titles (c) when did they begin to work in the penitentiary system (d) what was their previous experience in penitentiary security?

3. (a) What are the names of all directors in penitentiaries (b) what year did they begin to work for the penitentiary system (c) what were their previous assignments?

Return tabled.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What is the purpose?

Mr. Blais: The purpose is that the two questions, namely, questions Nos. 3059 and 3061, are very long and reading them would take an inordinate amount of the time of this House.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, on June 20 I placed a very simple question on the order paper, No. 2833, which deals with the number of consultants who have been hired by the Department of Environment and the Department of Fisheries. To date that question has not been answered. I wonder how long it takes this government to answer a simple question of that nature.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REVENUE DATA PERTAINING TO MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Motion No. 48—Mr. Mazankowski:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all requests made by provincial governments and producers' groups in connection with PC 1975-873 to establish an inquiry for the purpose of obtaining reliable cost and revenue data pertaining to the movement of grain.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 48 is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL HEALTH AND WELFARE MINISTERS CONFERENCE

Motion No. 50—Mr. Alexander:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all documents, minutes and proceedings of meetings and terms of agreement between the federal and provincial governments attending the Federal-Provincial Health and Welfare Ministers Conference on April 30 and May 1, 1975.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, motion for the production of papers No. 50 is acceptable to the government only in so far as the documents which the Department of National Health and Welfare made public at the federal-provincial welfare ministers' conference on April 30 and May 1, 1975. Documents, the release of which might be detrimental to the future conduct of federal-provincial relations or the relations of provinces inter se, will not be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to those reservations or conditions, is it the pleasure of the House that motion No. 50 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blais: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, POWERS OF INVESTIGATORS, OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, July 15, consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: On the last day on which this bill was under consideration the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) had the floor. There have been some preliminary discussions and arrangements about the scheduling of voting on these motions. A vote on motion No. 5 has already been deferred. The Chair has already indicated some misgivings about the procedural regularity of motions Nos. 6 and 24, and it was agreed that those two motions should be deferred until after all other motions have been debated.

This afternoon, in any event, the Chair has some misgivings about the building up of too many deferred votes. However, at this point perhaps the easiest procedure would be simply to return to the point where the hon. member for Edmonton West was addressing the House on motion No. 8. At the end of today's proceedings we might be able better to assess whether or not we are getting into a dangerous situation so far as the deferral of votes is concerned and whether this measure can come under the time allocation order when all questions must be put aside until tomorrow night.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, at the time of the adjournment of this debate it was indicated that there would be some discussions with the minister. I might say that these discussions have taken place and have been fruitful. The minister, I and my colleagues are satisfied with regard to the subamendment. In case Your Honour is particularly concerned about this, let me say that there are nine such subamendments on which consensus has been reached and on which there is agreement. The minister has some amendments and I am amending his amendments, therefore mine are subamendments.

In motion No. 8 the minister put in the words: "and is liable on conviction to imprisonment for five years". I propose to strike out those words and insert: "and is liable on conviction to a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both". Let me be very clear. I see that the minister has not removed the words "indictable offence". It is the effect of the word "indictable" that I question. Whether it is indictment or summary conviction, this is a decision that shall be taken by a public servant, a member of the Department of Justice or a member of the Department of the Attorney General as the case may be.

What I want to do is introduce discretion at the court level. As the minister indicated in his amendment, it was to be an indictable offence. That is fine; but the minister's amendment provided for a mandatory jail sentence. The indictable offence and the mandatory jail sentence are matters strictly for the consideration of an official: I object strenuously to this. It is my view that it is the court which must decide on the nature of the penalty. My subamendment to the minister's amendment, which he is prepared to accept, provides for a jail sentence as provided in his amendment, or provides for a fine, or provides for both a jail sentence and a fine. To that extent it is actually a flexible expansion of the penalty. I am glad that the minister approves this subamendment, and I move:

That motion No. 8 be amended by striking out all the words following the word "following" and by substituting therefor the following: "liable on conviction to a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both".

[Translation]

I am very sorry, but I have no French copy. It is unforgivable, but under the circumstances I have not had time to get one.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

An hon. Member: Explain.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I heard an hon. member say "Explain". I would say to the hon. member that the purpose of this amendment is to make clear in the legislation that when sentencing, the court has the discretion to impose a fine in lieu of or in addition to a jail sentence. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has pointed out, quite rightly, in the debate on this motion that the criminal court has the discretion, under the Criminal Code, to impose a fine in lieu of imposing a jail sentence. For the benefit of the House I will read section 646(1) of the Criminal Code as follows:

[Translation]

646. (1) An accused who is convicted of an indictable offence punishable with imprisonment for five years or less may be fined in addition to or in lieu of any other punishment that is authorized, but an accused shall not be fined in lieu of imprisonment where the offence of which he is convicted is punishable by a minimum term of imprisonment.

[English]

However, I agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West that for greater certainty and to ensure that the court has guidance as to the intention of parliament, the bill should specify that a fine in an amount to be at the discretion of the court may be imposed in addition to or instead of a jail sentence. Therefore, I am prepared to accept such a motion and support it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I recall that when the committee which dealt with this bill considered the clause dealing with punishment, there seemed to be general agreement that we wanted to stiffen the punishment upon conviction under the various clauses of the bill. One of the things we noted when we considered the precedent of fines or punishment upon conviction was that the courts have been extremely lenient in the past with corporate individuals who have broken the law.

In committee, the minister admitted that we wanted to give the courts an indication that the intention of parliament is that the courts take a sterner line with corporations or corporate individuals who break the law. The minister has introduced amendments, which are listed in the order paper, wherein he clearly indicates "liable upon conviction to imprisonment for five years." What is happening now, in the amendments which the minister had placed on our desks today, is that he is giving the courts the discretion, on conviction, to impose a fine or imprisonment for five years, or both. In effect, we are back to the same old ball game: we have not indicated to the courts that we want them to take a very stern line with those who do things against the interests of consumers and in violation of the combines legislation passed by this House. I find that this is a watering-down process and it seems we are back where we were, with no changes.

I indicate at this time that I cannot support the amendment being proposed by the minister because I feel that it does nothing to indicate that parliament wants the courts to take a firm stand on these matters when passing sentence.

Mr. Speaker: In the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment to motion No. 8 moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? Will all those in favour please say yea?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Will all those opposed please say nay?

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75, division on this question is deferred. Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 75, division on motion No. 8 also stands deferred.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

Motion No. 9.

That Bill C-2, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and the repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in clause 15 by striking out lines 20 to 22 inclusive on page 28 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"liable on conviction to imprisonment for five years."

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those situations where I think even the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) will find this is a rather ridiculous proposition. This provision deals with a conspiracy relating to professional and amateur sport. The offences here are technical, and frankly are of very little import, yet the penalty which is being prescribed on conviction of an indictable offence is "liable on conviction to imprisonment for five years." I think this clause goes from the sublime to the ridiculous. On one hand, the hon. member for Nickel Belt and his associates are in the van of those people crying out about conditions in the prisons and the unnecessary sending of people to prison, yet in his argument a moment ago, where a corporate entity is being sentenced to jail, according to his reasoning this is possible.

If we look at any use of, for example, a C-form with regard to amateur sport—and that is a very arguable point—there are more people who will argue in favour of the rules and regulations concerning professional and amateur sport, yet we are being asked to determine that this is an indictable offence and that the penalty shall be imprisonment for up to five years. Then everybody has to go to jail.

Mr. Rodriguez: You put the blue collar workers in jail.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I see; it depends upon whether one has a white collar or a blue collar. I find extraordinary the preoccupation, the fixation and the phobia which the hon. member has for this so-called class distinction. He is the one who raises it. He is the one who persists in it. Other people are prepared to forget about it and bury it. It is only in that type of mentality that it exists.

I am much more interested in making it patently clear that the court, on conviction, shall have the option of fining the individual concerned or, if it is so flagrant that it merits it, imprisoning for up to five years, though I can conceive of practically no crime of that nature which would merit being sent to jail or being both sent to jail and fined.

● (1520)

The minister and others who are reasonable about these amendments have agreed that the combination of the amendment and the subamendment provides a clear indication to the court, within the terms of this act, what the penalties are, and so one does not have to go to an obscure section of the Criminal Code to find that the court would have power, in certain circumstances, to substitute a fine. I just wish to make the law that much simpler for everyone to understand so that we can have a little more certainty and clarification in it. I therefore move:

That motion No. 9 be amended by striking out all the words following the word "following" and by substituting therefor the following:

"liable on conviction to a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both."

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, having followed this bill through the whole process I am amazed that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has taken so long to bring it before parliament, considering all the expertise it had on hand to prepare the bill. We had the bill in committee; it was amended there and came to the floor of the House, and we have had amendments here. Here is one example. Now we are getting amendments handed to us which are making a mockery of a bill which, according to the minister, is supposed to be so important for the consumers of Canada. One would think all the studies and proper research would have been done by now, but at this stage of the game we find we are getting amendments to amendments to amendments. There is no way that I can accept this amendment. It is just a watering-down. I prefer motion No. 9 which is on the order paper in the minister's name.

We in this party do not want to fill the jails, but of course we must have punishment which is proper and commensurate with the crime committed. In this whole area of consumer protection and what they call competition policy, if one looks at the record one is struck with the leniency and mercy which overflows the hearts of the justices who pass sentence on those found guilty in the corporate sector. When we are dealing with the little woman who rips off the welfare department for $65 a week and may have obtained $700, we send her to jail. When a person rips off a few hundred dollars we put them in jail, but when we get the corporate sector limiting freedom of action and offering their services to the highest bidder, we find the Tories—and a perfect example is the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert)—running to their defence.

We do not have to look very far in the history of anti-combines legislation in this parliament to see who has put up the biggest lobby against any kind of legislation that would cut down the power of the corporations, the monopolies, those who would destroy what both old-line parties in this House hold up as free enterprise, as the capitalist system. Who is it who always wanted to monopolize and destroy that freedom? It is those who want to become more powerful, the large conglomerates, the large monopolies. Who has been their biggest ally? Those in the other place. This bill originated in the Senate and it has gone through the other place which is filled with the corporate directors of this country. The boardrooms of the nation are amply represented in the other place. Their mouthpieces stand in this House saying we should have this clause when we are dealing with a certain class of people.

We in this party want the law to be just, to apply equally to the rich and the poor. If we can send a woman on welfare to jail, surely when this corporate elite commits infractions against the system that they hold so dear, the free enterprise system, they ought to be sent to jail directly. I said before that we should look at the kind of punishment we are meting out. In committee the minister said that we have to telegraph to the courts that we are serious about this legislation, obviously leaving it wide open to the discretion of the courts, knowing that is the condition under which the courts levy punishment now.

This government has just brought down wage controls and they are telling the people there will be price controls. If they mean what they say in the white paper tabled yesterday and the bill that is to come on Friday, that the small consumer will have some protection, we cannot leave it to the discretion of the courts: we have to give specific guidance that we, the parliamentarians of this country, are serious about the direction in which we want to move against those who infringe upon the rights of Canadians. I urge my colleagues in the House to defeat this amendment and to support the minister's original amendment, motion No. 9.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the rhetoric of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and I want to remind him that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) does not change anything at all in the legislation. It is a mere clarification. In other words, all he said applied under the previous amendment and still applies under this amendment. I did read earlier from the Criminal Code in relation to motion No. 8. Perhaps it might be useful to read it again because it is exactly the same thing as for motion

No. 9. Section 646.(1) of the Criminal Code states the following:

An accused who is convicted of an indictable offence punishable with imprisonment for five years or less may be fined in addition to or in lieu of any other punishment that is authorized—

So it is already quite clear in the legislation as introduced. The judge may either sentence the accused to a fine, or sentence him to jail, or sentence him to both. What the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West does is clarify the section in the Combines Investigation Act by specifying in a clear and explicit way what the Criminal Code says already. So I may listen to the words of the hon. member for Nickel Belt, he may shout even louder and debate that matter but it does not change anything in the substance as such, and I hope as he does that judges will understand that in the case of offences under the Combines Investigation Act parliament wants the courts to be harder. And already we have in that legislation enough indications to show that we are increasing the number of sentences and penalties and we want to indicate to the courts our hope that they will be harder. But it is merely a matter of wording, and that is why I have no objection to accepting the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

● (1530)

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The minister suggested it changes nothing. I suggest that it defines the legislation more clearly and will lead to greater understanding. In communities like mine, businessmen and others involve themselves in amateur sports and with junior hockey clubs which at times may play in national leagues. They would be most perturbed to discover they are breaking the law, because that is what they could do if the bill were not amended.

Without the amendment they could find themselves in court and facing imprisonment for up to five years if found guilty of breaking the law. The penalties they would face for involving themselves in useful community activities would be severe indeed. Surely the five-year sentence should be reserved for the most flagrant breaches of the law. They might occur in connection with professional hockey, although I believe boxing is the sport to which these provisions might be most applicable. For these reasons I support the hon. member's amendment, as it is reasonable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) to motion No. 9. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the amendment to motion No. 9 stands deferred.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, if the House is agreeable to it, could we dispose of this series of motions dealing exclusively with penalties, since it is obvious, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), that motions 8, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 22 and 25 are all about the same thing, namely including the distinction whether it should be a fine or imprisonment.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is not a question of contents but only of word change.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wish to point out to the minister that when the debate started the Chair had already indicated it intended to group motions to which he has just referred into one comprehensive or continuous debate. I intended to proceed immediately to calling motion 12, and then motions: 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 22, 25. If the minister agrees, we shall avail ourselves of the consent already granted by the House and go back to motion 12, from which we shall proceed as rapidly as possible.

[English]

Is that agreed?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, that is fine.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 12 appearing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 22 to 27 inclusive on page 32 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"imprisonment for five years; or

(b) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move an amendment to motion No. 12. The purpose of the amendment is precisely the same as that of the previous amendment. I need not repeat the arguments with regard to the purpose but would simply move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), that all the words in the minister's motion following the word "following" be struck out and that there be substituted the following:

a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both; or

(b) on summary conviction, to a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both.

I do not think that requires further clarification.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on this amendment stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to consideration of motion No. 13 appearing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

Motion No. 13.

That Bill C-2, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in clause 18 by striking out lines 21 to 26 inclusive on page 33 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"imprisonment for five years; or

(b) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, what we hear this afternoon is reminiscent of certain scenes of "A Tale of Two Cities". In many chapters there is a description of the revolutionary scaffold in Paris, with Madame Defarge and her cronies alongside. The attitude of some hon. members to important clarifications of this bill strikes me as that of Madame Defarge, who sat there knitting and saying, "Off with their heads." That was the type of rough justice she felt should be dispensed to all and sundry.

● (1540)

This is, again, a straight clarification in the same terms as motions Nos. 11 and 12—a substitute for the minister's wording. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean):

That motion No. 13 be amended by striking out all the words following the word "following" and by substituting therefor the following:

"a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both; or

(b) on summary conviction, to a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If hon. members do not say no, the Chair will accept the amendment.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on this amendment to motion No. 13 stands deferred.

[English]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

Motion No. 14.

That Bill C-2, and act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in clause 18 by striking out lines 8 to 13 inclusive on page 35 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"imprisonment for five years; or

(b) on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, for the same grounds that I have indicated concerning the previous three motions, I move:

[English]

That motion No. 14 be amended by striking out all the words following the word "following" and by substituting therefor the following:

"a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both; or

(b) on summary conviction, to a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on this amendment to motion No. 14 stands deferred.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

Motion No. 14.

That Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 39 and 40 on page 35 and lines 1 to 4 inclusive on page 36 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"imprisonment for five years; or

(b) on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as with the four preceding motions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpèque (Mr. MacLean), the following subamendment: That, in the English text, all the words following the word "following" be stricken out and the following be substituted therefor:

[English]

That motion No. 15 be amended by striking out all the words following the word "following" and by substituting therefor the following:

"a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both; or

(b) on summary conviction, to a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on this motion and on the amendment thereto stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to consideration of motion No. 16 appearing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 15 to 17 inclusive on page 37 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): There is no amendment. I had made a number of suggestions in conformity with the minister's set of amendments. I am satisfied with the text of the amendment. There is therefore no need for us to move a clarifying subamendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I dispense from reading the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed to consideration of motion No. 17 appearing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 27 to 29 inclusive on page 37 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, again for the same reasons as for several preceding motions, I prepared a subamendment; I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpèque (Mr. MacLean), that in the English text the following words be added after the word "following":

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will skip motion No. 18 and go to motion No. 19.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-2, an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 41 to 46 inclusive on page 38 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"imprisonment for five years; or

(b) on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I move the same amendment:

That motion No. 19 be amended by striking out all the words following the word "following" and by substituting therefor the following:

"a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both; or

(b) on summary conviction, to a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

● (1550)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment? All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on this amendment to motion No. 19 stands deferred.

Combines Investigation Act

[Translation]

The House will now proceed to consideration of motion No. 22 appearing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moves:

That Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out line 6 on page 42 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"to imprisonment for five".

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on this motion I wish to propose the following amendment, seconded by my hon. friend from Malpeque (Mr. MacLean):

That motion No. 22 be amended by striking out all the words following the words "Clause 18" and by substituting therefor the following:

"by striking out lines 6 and 7 on page 42 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

'to a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both.'"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment? All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the amendment to motion No. 22 stands deferred.

[English]

The House will now proceed to motion No. 25, which is the last of the group.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

Motion No. 25.

That Bill C-2 be amended in clause 24 by striking out lines 6 to 11 inclusive on page 48 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"imprisonment for five years; or

(b) on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would propose an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). It is:

That motion No. 25 be amended by striking out all the words following the word "following" and by substituting the following:

"a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for five years, or to both; or

(b) on summary conviction, to a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year, or to both."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment? All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on this amendment to motion No. 25 stands deferred.

This completes the grouping on these motions of a similar type. If the House agrees, we can now proceed in an orderly manner to the consideration, one by one, of motions 10, 11, 18, 20, and 21. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will call motion No. 10 standing in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

Motion No. 10.

That Bill C-2 be amended in clause 16 by

(a) striking out lines 18 to 22 inclusive at page 29, and substituting therefor "him elsewhere in Canada",

(b) striking out line 28 on page 29 and substituting therefor "to have such effect; or"

(c) adding immediately after line 28 on page 29, the following subsection:

"(d) engages in a policy of selling products as loss leaders, that is to say, not for the purpose of making a profit on that item, but for purposes of advertising or of attracting customers to his place of business in the hope of selling them other products,".

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the bill which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) introduced to the House permits a practice called loss leadering. He is prepared to accept this practice where, he says, it is not used to destroy competition in a particular marketplace.

What is loss leadering? It is the practice of selling a particular product at a loss. What possible reason could a corporation or a wholesaler or a retailer have for engaging in it? What loss leadering does, in effect, is to eliminate competition, thus creating monopolies. It deceives people into believing that somehow or other they are getting a bargain and that more than the price is right. Unsuspecting consumers believe that by going into a store and buying, say, cigarettes below cost they are getting a bargain. However, experience has shown that the loss which the company is prepared to take on the cigarettes is covered by the higher prices of other items in the store. Needless to say, that kind or practice makes non-smokers, for example, pay for the benefit smokers get in getting a better deal on cigarettes. The same argument can be extrapolated to other items.

● (1600)

This parliament has legislated that predatory pricing practices are illegal, yet we have here a predatory pricing practice that will be allowed to continue provided, as the bill says, that it does not lessen competition, whatever that means. The experience that I have had of seeing perfectly integrated trans-national conglomerates in operation leads me to think that the question is: somehow or other can they show us that they are not lessening competition? I hope that by the time I have finished I will have demonstrated that this kind of practice has indeed lessened competition, or contributed greatly toward lessening competition, and has destroyed the very concepts that the two old established parties in this House have always supported, namely, a free enterprise, capitalist system.

As I have said before, the practice of loss leadering has been an anti-competitive one and has been recognized as such by governments. As a matter of fact, in our present anti-combines legislation loss leadering is recognized as a defence to a charge of refusal to deal. In other words, if a supplier refuses to sell a product to a retailer or wholesaler, he can use loss leadering as a defence to such refusal. He can argue that his products will be sold at a cheaper price, and that somehow or other this brings down the value of the name of those products. This is why loss leadering is recognized as a legitimate defence to a charge of refusal to deal.

In this particular legislation the government is concerned that the products of large corporations might be subject to loss leadering, and hence permits loss leadering to be a defence. However, if the big corporations suffer from this practice, consumers suffer even more. In 1952 the MacQuarrie committee set up to study the combines act recognized this when it said:

> . . . as to the "loss leader" device, the committee believes that it is a monopolistic practice which does not promote general welfare and therefore considers that it is not compatible with the public interest.

That was the comment of a committee, set up by the government to take a look at the combines legislation of this country, on the practice of loss leadering.

A study done on loss leadering in the 1950s by the combines act director of investigation and research concluded in 1955 that no action was necessary at that time to deal with loss leadering. But times have changed. We are not in the 1950s any more. The report of the director in 1955 had this to say:

> It is very difficult if not impossible to obtain and hold a monopoly position in a given retail market.

In 1973, corporate chain stores had over 55 per cent of the grocery sales in Canada, with the percentage in some areas reaching 52 per cent from two chains alone. In 1972, the George Weston group of companies had sales of approximately $3.5 billion while total Canadian food sales were only $8 billion. This is the age of vertical integration. No longer are these companies prepared to be small, corner grocery stores. They have realized that to become large and monopolistic increases their profits. It does not necessarily increase their efficiency of operation, but it does a great deal to increase their profits.

The 1955 report said that it was difficult to believe that any significant increase in the sales of private brands could be made under such competitive conditions, let alone increases so large that they would constitute a monopoly situation. Chain stores are now so powerful that they can restrict shelf space to companies to the extent of economic ruin. In areas where a supermarket is the only store for miles there is no fear of comparative shopping, and these chain stores make use of this situation. On March 4, 1955, the IGA chain, for example, felt strong enough, when major Canadian bakeries raised their prices, to raise the price of the private brands they carried while maintaining the lower price on their private house brands, clearly giving themselves a competitive advantage with a market position strong enough that they feared no competition.

Talking of the bakery industry, it is rather interesting to note that the baked goods industry of Ontario has attempted to have passed legislation prohibiting the advertising of bread. This is not because they want to sell less bread but because bread is such an effective loss leader for supermarkets. The result has been more and more failures in the baking industry over the years. Incidentally, in Quebec there is already a law against advertising bread; but surely a law against loss leadering would be more to the point.

At the present time, one of the largest wholesale tobacco operations in Canada belongs to the same ownership group as The Bay, a chain store operator, opening the way for even more loss leadering. Loss leadering in the tobacco industry has become an accepted business practice. At the wholesale level recently in northern Ontario, the National Grocers Company Limited made a practice of selling cigarettes to its customers for less than it was costing an independent wholesaler to purchase them. The independent company, which relied heavily on tobacco sales for its business, had a choice of either cutting its prices and going bankrupt or directing its energy in other directions. The larger company was more diversified in its products and as such would have no trouble simply shifting any loss on cigarettes to other areas of our grocery bills.

I and many other non-smokers object strenuously to being forced to subsidize the cigarette addictions of others in this way. Other wholesalers make a practice of loss leadering such items as butter, and of making these special savings even more available to those who deal with them exclusively.

The 1955 commission also suggested that the practice of selling articles below their cost was not prevalent in any of the lines of trade for which information was obtained by the inquiry. But the commission ignored the subject at the wholesale level and in other areas. Thus, most of Canada's distribution sector was ignored. The practice today is widespread and is systematically indulged in by chain supermarkets who loss leader a range of items each week. They change the selection of items regularly and by geographic region in order to avoid a charge of making a practice of it.

What has been the result of loss leadering and other restrictive business practices in Canada? It is possible to look at almost any industry in Canada over the last 20 years and see the effect of concentration and monopoly as it slowly destroys the fabric of our so-called free enterprise system. Where competition once was the case, we see the following events taking place, and they serve to illustrate we have come a long way since 1952. In 1957 there were 2,557 bakeries in Canada of which approximately 2,400, or 94 per cent, had the owner working in the enterprise. By 1971 there were only 1,824 bakeries and 1,414, or 78 per cent, working owners. The situation in the dairy industry is even more startling over this period, with the total number of dairies declining by over 60 per cent. Since 1969 the number of chain stores, as a percentage of the total number of stores, has increased in every area, be it grocery and combination stores, general merchandise stores, hardware stores or jewellery or drug stores.

So what we have in this period of the monopolies is the destruction of what has been held to be hallowed by every member of this House, the free enterprise system. It would seem strange that a socialist should be standing in this House arguing the case of the so-called free enterprise system. It is rather interesting to note that those who represent the corporate sector—the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is a perfect example—will always argue, when these companies become more monopolistic, that the punishment should be cut down in respect of those who breach the law. We have heard this in the committee and elsewhere. They want this sidetracked.

One argument that is put forward is that the matter should go to the Supreme Court for a constitutional judgment before it is proclaimed and put into practice. That is the same that is played. Here we have a predatory pricing practice, that of loss leaders. I challenge any member of the House to say that loss leaders are not a predatory practice and that this is a practice which encourages free enterprise. I question that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Do you and your wife not buy any loss leaders at all?

Mr. Rodriguez: By using loss leaders and other illegal practices, some companies have been able to drive others out of business or severely limit access to the market. In the 1950s, for example, when Lestoil came on the market, it did a booming business. The large soap companies replied with products of their own, with massive advertising budgets and sale prices which almost caused Lestoil to go bankrupt. As a result, according to David Ogilvy in his book "Confessions of an Advertising Man", a war chest of $10 million would now be required to launch a new brand in this area. At the wholesale level, in Canada in 1973, two major eastern Canadian integrated wholesaler-retailers engaged in a price war on tobacco products. The main result of this battle was the closure of two independent tobacco and confectionery distributors. While the case is apparently under investigation, nothing will ever replace the two lost wholesalers to the market.

But of all the areas in the economy, it is the chain food stores that have made the most effective and destructive use of loss leadering. The hon. member for Edmonton West talks about wage and price controls, yet they are prepared—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I said that you buy loss leaders every day.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Rodriguez: —to accept the injustices which are permitted by the use of loss leaders in an area which is very essential to the large mass of the Canadian people, the food industry. The hon. member knows full well that loss leaders are used extensively in the food business, and I call upon any member of this House to prove that this is ethical.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You buy them every day because you get a bargain.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where are the corner stores? Why is it necessary for one to drive 50 miles to a shopping centre where there is only one supermarket? Every time the corporate sector is challenged, you jump to their defence and hold their hands. It is in the area of the food stores that the greatest rip-off takes place and where there is the great predatory practice of loss leadering.

Today, corporate chains control 40 per cent of retail sales with only five firms controlling 40 per cent of the grocery sales. One corporate group in the food industry controls over 200 companies, while another owns 32 shopping centres where they are the only food store.

In the United States, a federal court has pointed out that if a chain store sets its prices below cost in one area, there is an almost irresistible conclusion that its prices in another area will be raised to compensate for the loss. The supreme court of California has held that the reason a large retailer offers merchandise at less than cost is for the purpose of deceiving its customers into believing that the seller is offering all his goods at low prices, when in fact the majority of his prices are at least as high as those prevailing generally in the trading area, and sometimes even higher. Prices may indeed be higher if we remember that supermarkets operate on a total gross margin for their store, irrespective of individual product prices. Thus, a customer saves nothing if he purchases at a store offering a loss leader, if any saving on that product is merely averaged over the rest of his food bill.

Consumers are urged to shop at several stores to obtain the best bargains in loss leaders at several stores, but supermarkets make sure that they are the only major food store in a particular shopping centre. Have you ever seen a shopping centre with two large supermarkets competing vigorously for the consumer's buck? I have not seen it in Sudbury, nor in any part of my riding. I am sure members of this House could not point out two competing supermarkets in the same plaza.

Supermarket chains get prime positions in shopping centres because they advertise most, make the most sales and thus can afford the most rent. Considering that often the parent companies of the supermarkets own the shopping centres anyway, even this ability to pay more rent may not be necessary to offer these chains their growing monopoly position. When a chain owns the only food store in a 70-store shopping centre, and when that chain has 20 per cent of Canadian grocery sales, it is doubtful that they need to sell any of their items below cost, while recovering their profits on other items, to get business.

As I mentioned before, in this whole matter of the plazas and the shopping centres we see only one supermarket. It is quite common to see two hardware stores, or perhaps two clothing stores. There may be several shoe stores. But the same kind of competition does not exist in respect of the supermarkets. What this has resulted in, and what the growth of these chains is based on, is not efficiency in the food industry but, rather, the elimination of independent competitors and suppliers and all middlemen. The George Weston empire is a perfect example. George Weston is integrated from top to bottom in respect of such things as transportation, wholesale outlets, retail outlets and even the bags in which to place the groceries. It is completely vertically integrated.

There are 13 brands of salmon on the market, all owned by George Weston. Can we imagine the competition that is going on among those brands for the consumer's buck? I will bet a dollar that the house brands at Loblaws are selling at the same level as those of a small, private entrepreneur who is producing salmon, if there is any left. I can understand that. Anyone who does not think we are into that kind of monopoly pricing must be living on the moon.

It seems to me that this results in a crisis for the Canadian consumer. One would think that the complete integration of a monopoly such as that of George Weston could result in some economy for the consumer. That is hardly the case, because once the chains have their monopoly positions guaranteed, they return to their first concern. Their first concern, of course, is to make profits. The Food Prices Review Board reported increases in net income for food processors and distributors of as much as 35 per cent for 1972-73. Is this the work of competition, or does it merely show the result of the destruction of smaller competitors through methods at best described as shoddy?

There are 38 states in the United States which have outlawed loss leadering, so I am not urging this House to embark upon any new or innovative kind of legislation. It is recognized in other jurisdictions that it is predatory pricing which ought to be outlawed. There are two victims of the practice of loss leadering: the first is the independent competitor, the small businessman who has been driven out of business, and the second is the consumer. It seems to me that I hear much talk from hon. members to my right about the importance of ensuring that the small businessman can continue to exist. But how can the small retailer in the food business exist side by side with George Weston? I suggest that that is impossible, especially when the large monopoly engages in predatory practices which are so common in Canada.

I have heard hon. members to my right point out that small business employs over 40 per cent of Canadians, holds over 7 per cent of all outstanding consumer credit, and sells over 50 per cent of all retail sales. They provide many services not offered by large chain stores, including such things as convenience, things on which it is hard to put a price or to feel a need for until they have been destroyed by the business practices of the large chains.

Much concern has been expressed about the predatory practice of loss leadering and the fact that it destroys the fibre of this nation and also builds up the power base. It puts too much economic power in the hands of far too few. Every year, chain stores control a larger percentage of the retail market in spite of the fact that it is questionable whether such economies of scale are necessary or even efficient. Every year between 1960 and 1972 another 1,200 or more small wholesale or retail traders went out of business. Why is that? The reason is that some of them were unable to compete, but more often they went out of business because they fell victim to the greed and unfair practices of the avaricious commercial chains which use such practices as loss leadering, one of the most hazardous practices used by chains to destroy the small and independent businessmen.

Small businessmen today earn less than doctors and even salesmen, and it is not surprising in this free enterprise system in Canada where 626 corporations account for over half the assets and profits earned.

Mr. Nystrom: Did you say "free enterprise"?

Mr. Rodriguez: When I speak about free enterprise, it is understood that I refer to the appellation used by the established parties in this House. The corporations to which I refer account for 40 per cent of total sales and 58 per cent of profits earned, with only 46 per cent of taxes payable. This so-called free enterprise has resulted in greater and greater monopoly control of the economy, control which the government has allowed and which it is now encouraging through such clauses as they permit to stand in the bill before us.

This bill has been hailed as a step in the right direction. If the minister really wants to step in the right direction, why does he not indicate support for this amendment? Surely it is worthy of his support. This bill is called the competition bill, but what does it do to provide competition, and competition among whom? Obviously, it will not provide competition among the large chain food stores. What it is doing is entrenching an antagonistic relationship between those who are selling goods and those who are purchasing, the consumer and the wholesale retailer.

It seems to me that our amendment is a good one. We have urged the House to support the elimination of this predatory pricing practice called loss leadering. We have taken a very constructive approach to this bill. We put forward 42 amendments in committee to try to strengthen the bill and to make it into something which will offer protection to consumers who must go out into the marketplace, not a marketplace taken over by competition and which provides adequate prices to consumers but into a monopoly market where the prices are set not by competition but, rather, by profit-making.

We hear the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), speaking now as the great defender of the consumer, but when he was minister of consumer and corporate affairs he was as quiet as a mouse. Recently, he told a York University audience, when speaking on the competition policy in 1974, that a flexible approach similar to that used for other trade practices under Bill C-2 would be used for loss leadering to prevent the loss to consumers of a policy which might save them money. This policy will not save the consumer money. The clause which the minister has here permits loss leadering so long as it does not interfere with competition. It is not worth the paper it is written on.

The minister has indicated on several occasions that he wants competition in the marketplace and that this is what this bill is designed to do. The only way we can ensure competition is to support the kind of amendment we have put forward. It is also very interesting to note that the minister, in replying in the House to a question with respect to loss leadering, said that he was prepared to support an amendment. But this is the kind of clause he brings into Bill C-2. As a matter of fact, the subject was raised in the House on October 4, 1974, just over a year ago, when the minister said:

I think this is another example of the urgency to amend our competition act and I hope that the hon. member will persuade his colleagues on the other side to support my action.

This is the action he wants supported. He wants us to permit loss leadering so long as it does not endanger what he calls competition. I have tried to indicate to the House that we are permitting a monopolistic kind of approach by the large corporations and chain stores which are not interested in encouraging competition. In fact, what they are interested in is the monopoly of their particular sector. So long as this continues, loss leadering will be employed as a practice to obtain that end. The minister has only one course to follow, if he is really serious about ensuring competition and if he is really interested in providing protection for the consumer: he can support the amendment of this party with respect to loss leadering. It is a practice which should be outlawed in Canada. It does nothing for the efficiency of business and nothing to provide better prices for the consumer, even though it leads the consumer into thinking that he is getting a deal when in reality he is being shafted.

● (1630)

It seems to me that the remarks I have made this afternoon should have fully convinced hon. members that the amendment ought to be supported. I am reminded that I may have convinced reasonable members of this House, and of course all hon. members are reasonable, including the hon. member for Edmonton West. I am quite sure that when hon. members see the wisdom of this amendment, they will support it.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) dealt only with the second part of his proposed amendment, so to be logical I will discuss the second part first and then turn to the first part of his amendment.

The arguments of the hon. member for Nickel Belt have concentrated on the increased share of the market which has gone in the past several years to the food chain stores. He appears to attribute this shift in consumer buying to loss leaders. The standing committee studying Bill C-2 spent considerable time listening to representations with regard to loss leader selling. The questioning by the members of that committee was aimed at trying to find concrete evidence that the loss leader has eliminated or reduced competition. As many hon. members know, this has been a subject of discussion from time to time since at least the 1930s, and particularly since the publication of the report of the MacQuarrie committee to study combines legislation in 1951.

That committee decided not to recommend the prohibition of loss leader selling, but suggested that a special study of it be made by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. The very extensive study of the commission which appeared in 1954 recommended against the introduction of such legislation. The Economic Council of Canada, in its interim report on competition policy in 1969, also found itself unwilling to recommend legislation against loss leader selling.

When Bill C-2 was first introduced, it proposed deletion of the so-called loss leader defence against a charge of resale price maintenance, which is to be found in section 38(5)(a) and (b) of the Combines Investigation Act. That defence has been reinstated in the amended version of Bill C-2 and is to be found in clause 38(9)(a) and (b). It is not believed that we should go further than that, at least for the present. It will be the subject of further consideration, however, in the context of phase two of the legislative revisions.

Whatever decision is finally made, the wording of the amendment before us brings out some of the problems in drafting legislation against loss leaders. For example, it is very difficult to design a statute which will enable the courts to judge how low a price must be in order to be a loss leader, and how to judge what the motives of the seller were. The courts have tended to interpret existing section 38(5)(a) to mean a price below direct acquisition cost to the seller. The difficulty is that those who call for prohibition of loss leader selling want a higher threshold price, but surely this is no time to adopt a general rule which would prohibit sellers from selling below some arbitrary price which more than covers their direct costs.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt did not deal with the first part of his motion. If I may, I will refer to it under paragraph (a) of motion No. 10. The effect of this part of the amendment would be to require every seller of a product in Canada to adopt a policy of selling his goods at a uniform price everywhere in Canada. It would have the effect of placing businesses in a strait-jacket in their effort to survive in a competitive market. Just to take one example, a manufacturer might decide to sell at a low price, which nevertheless made some contribution to overhead, on the west coast in order to meet intensive import competition from overseas in that area. He would be faced with the choice, under this proposal, of abandoning the western market or of lowering all his prices to a point at which he could not survive.

The two parts of this amendment proposed by the hon. member for Nickel Belt have some emotional impact. However, anyone who listened to the deliberations in committee and to the representations from all sectors surely concluded that the bill as it is now introduced adequately takes care of the situation in which we find ourselves at the present time, and we should not cloud the issue, particularly on this amendment, by a discussion of the increased share of the market which is presently being taken by the large food chains. I am sure this applies to members of the official opposition as well as to members of this party. Surely that is a subject for discussion in another place, and this particular amendment is not the way to handle that particular problem. On that basis, I suggest that this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). He always manages to become quite emotional about his amendments. He rolls out words such as loss leadering, predatory pricing, trans-national corporations, multinational corporations, supermarkets, old-line parties, and small businessmen all under the same heading and does not come up with very much logic. I have listened to the hon. member for a number of years in this House and I have come to the conclusion that if he and his colleagues had their way they would strap the business community into an electric chair and ask them just one question, "Do you want AC or DC?" That is about the extent of the logic behind some of the amendments the hon. member proposes.

When we deal with the matter of loss leadering, as this amendment suggests, we are delving into a whole series of retail pricing practices, and we are on very dangerous ground when we get into that area. Considering the operation of small retailers, I am sure all of them, including the corner variety store, put on loss leaders at one time or another. The inference in the remarks of the hon. member is that large supermarkets, as he calls them, or large merchandises, as he calls them, buy certain products and decide to sell them at cost in order to attract other business into their stores. This may well be the case: they may make a decision along that line. But if we support this amendment, we put in jeopardy all the other retailing practices which retail stores and retail outlets use.

For instance, what can be done with Christmas cards left over after December 25? There is not a store in the country which does not sell them at a greatly reduced price. We could say that that is a loss leadering practice. We could say that that is making it difficult for small variety stores or gift shops which sell greeting cards. We could say the same thing at Hallowe'en with regard to candy which is left over and which is sold at give-away prices. We could say that is loss leadering and that it is working against anyone else in the candy business.

This line of reasoning can apply also to the haberdashery business where the haberdasher will buy a job lot of shirts or ties and in his retailing practise will calculate what his cost is and how many products he has to sell in order to recover his cost. Then from that point on, whatever he sells them for is profit. What does he do at this stage? He has a sale. If we accept this amendment, anybody who puts a sale on in a retail store, or any wholesaler who wants to clean out a line of merchandise in order to bring in a new line, could be brought in under the umbrella of loss leadering; somebody would accuse him of loss leadering.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the small retailer, Mr. Speaker, and I listened very carefully and read the briefs presented to us in the committee. Mainly they were talking about the sale of cigarettes and chocolate bars and were trying to cover the whole spectrum with those two lines. But the small corner store has many things working against it. It may be in a municipality where suddenly the street is made a one-way street and a lot of the traffic that would normally stop at the store goes the other way. Or a municipality may say there is to be no more parking on a particular street and the small retailer either has to buy a piece of property for a parking lot or move his store.

These are all hazards of the retailing business, and I have a great deal of sympathy for the people concerned. I think if we went along with this suggestion and accepted this amendment, however, we would be getting ourselves into a real mess. In order to police it, we would need three times the staff that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs already has. I understand that when we come to phase two of the legislation we will consider loss leadering again, and I suggest that the hon. member has not delved deeply enough into the subject. He has looked at it superficially and does not realize all the implications of trying to legislate loss leaders.

What is selling at a loss? Everybody has a different way of calculating overhead. There are few accountants who will agree with a hardnosed businessman on how to calculate overhead. I have had many discussions on this subject with accountants. They say that you take the square foot area of the store, figure out heat, taxes and all fixed expenses and divide them into the area, which gives you the cost per square foot, and each square foot has to produce so many units of profits—each square foot must bear its share of overhead.

This is the socialist way, the pure way of looking at things; but the fellow running the retail store is an entrepreneur. He has to pay taxes, heat and air conditioning in summer, but he accepts those things and does not want to get mixed up with square footage so he will come up with a different calculation of overhead. The method of calculating profit and loss is therefore going to be different from one retailer to another, and I think this is dangerous ground for us to move into.

I agree with many of the things we have done in this legislation. I think we have taken some constructive steps. I hope we can get this bill finished up by tomorrow night and get on with the next phase, so that at least this section can go into the marketplace to see how it works. If we find there are inequities, we can bring back the legislation and amend it.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to support an amendment of this type on the grounds that we are really doing something for the consumer. We are in a period of inflation, when consumers are calling for lower prices, yet here is a member of the socialist party telling us not to allow them to have lower prices. That type of reasoning does not get through to me at all.

An hon. Member: We will send your speech out.

Mr. Kempling: Send my speech out if you like; I am sure your people will enjoy reading it. The last time I spoke following the hon. member for Nickel Belt I received six letters of congratulation saying, "You are the first one who has stood up and knocked some sense into these socialist heads."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: They were from his mother, his father and his daughter.

Mr. Kempling: They were all from Sudbury. I do not believe I can support this amendment, Mr. Speaker, and I think my colleagues in this party agree with me. I think it best to leave the legislation as it is. We will look at it again when phase two is introduced and when we have had a chance to work with phase one for a while. If there is any real inequity we can look at it then and see if we can deal with it.

After we have discussed a section of a bill in great detail, I hesitate to wipe out all that discussion, all the briefs and testimony and just accept an amendment of this type, holus-bolus. That makes a mockery of the hearings and the witnesses. So, Mr. Speaker, I will not support the amendment.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I could not resist rising after hearing my good friend, the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), accuse us in this part of the House of somehow seeking higher prices for consumers by proposing a ban on loss leadering. That is a strange kind of logic.

If you follow the practice of loss leadering to its logical conclusion, the purpose is either to eliminate competition or to allocate a certain section of the market as a result of loss leadering, just as in the Lestoil case that the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) referred to. There are many other cases of loss leadering where a major corporation has such large financial resources that they can stand a loss for years and thus dominate and control the market. Once they have dominated and controlled the market, then they control the price.

This party is proposing this amendment for the purpose of lowering prices for consumers, not increasing them. The logic is perfectly clear: loss leadering results, in the long run, in higher, rather than lower, prices for consumers. Let me deal a little further with another point that the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth raised. He suggested that the hon. member for Nickel Belt had not studied the bill carefully enough. I suggest he should look at the proposed amendment. It does not defend loss leadering. I will read that portion of the amendment that seems appropriate:

—engages in a policy of selling products as loss leaders, that is to say, not for the purpose of making a profit on that item, but for purposes of advertising or of attracting customers to his place of business in the hope of selling them other products.

That is a little different from dumping or simply getting rid of something on which you are obviously never going to make a profit. But when it is a conspiracy against the consumer, it becomes an iniquitous practice. Consider, for example, the two oil companies, which conspire to sell gasoline as a loss leader in order to drive the small guy out of business.

● (1650)

Someone in this House should stand up for the small businessman. That is why my party supports the motion before the House. We support real competition, not the phony competition of giant corporations which has resulted in many loss leader practices in this country. I hope that the good sense and good judgment of the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth will prevail and that the House will show more good sense than it has up to now. We shall support this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question? The question is on motion No. 10 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

[Mr. Kempling.]

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on this motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to consider motion No. 11, in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt. Mr. Rodriguez, seconded by Mr. Symes, moves:

Motion No. 11.

That Bill C-2, An act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in clause 18 by

(a) striking out line 45 on page 30

(b) replacing the period (.) at line 14 on page 31 with a semi-colon (;); and

(c) adding immediately after line 14 on page 31 the following subsections:

"(e) make a representation to the public containing exaggerated price claims of a general nature, unless such claims are fully supported by evidence of a substantial nature;

(f) make a representation to the public that, either explicitly or implicitly, arouses or tends to arouse unwarranted expectations of product effectiveness;

(g) make a representation to the public containing claims for product effectiveness that are not fully supported by substantial evidence;

(h) make a representation to the public containing suggestions, either implicit or explicit, of product effectiveness in areas other than those in which the product is intended primarily to have effect;

(i) make a representation to the public that uses the word 'new', or any comparable word, to describe a product, unless it is a new product or one that has had a qualitative change in one or more of its active ingredients or parts, in which case the use of the word 'new' shall be limited to a period not exceeding six months;

(j) make a representation to the public that uses the word 'improved', or any comparable word, unless the change in an existing product is one that can be proven to be beneficial to the user, in which case the use of the word 'improved' shall be limited to a period not exceeding six months;

(k) make a representation to the public that ignores, or fails to describe fully, any undesirable side-effects that may result from the use of the product;

(l) and in all cases, products shall be sold on the basis of definable qualities and grades, where that is possible.".

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendment we are considering is to expand areas of the bill covering false advertising. Time and again my party tried to move amendments in the committee: we proposed 42 amendments to strengthen the bill and make it effective. Ours was a constructive approach. People who criticize my party say that we tend to be critical but do not offer suggestions for improvement. We have tried to improve this bill. We want it to protect consumers as they forage day after day in the marketplace. Our amendments seek to beef up the bill, as it were, to strengthen it and to put flesh on areas that we think are vague. One of those areas concerns false advertising.

Some of us have watched the warm relationship developing between the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and corporations which are to be governed under Bill C-2. It seems to some of us that the minister has been acting more like a minister of corporate affairs than a minister of consumer affairs. But let me not deal in generalities; let me deal with a specific incident which involved a company operating in Sudbury. The corporation is not exactly poor and the particular incident I shall tell you about was brought to the minister's attention by the provincial member for Sudbury, Mr. Bud Germa, who has alluded to the incident as the Sudbury fine ham-sausage caper.

Apparently, a Woolworth's store in Sudbury advertised for sale at $1.44 per pound a product which it called fine ham. On analysis, it turned out that the product was not fine ham; it was sausage and did not contain any ham at all. But this was not discovered until a great many letters had been written by various people. Under the Food and Drugs Act, Woolworth's could have been fined $500, or the person responsible subjected to a penalty of three months in jail. After Bill C-2 is passed, section 36 of the Combines Investigation Act will provide for firmer, stiffer penalties. The proposed amendment, I suggest, will make the intent of the law clear and result in action in cases of this kind.

What bothers me is the relationship between the minister and those who engage in false advertising. I want to know if the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is going to provide consumers with protection. After the provincial member of parliament brought the incident to the minister's attention, and after it was found that the ham advertised was not ham but sausage, the minister wrote Mr. Germa a letter which I think important enough to read into the record. He wrote:

> Officials of my department have now completed their investigation of the advertisement which you brought to my attention, concerning a product described as "Fine Ham" which appeared in the Sudbury Star, Monday, August 19, 1974.
> It has been confirmed that the product in question was actually pork sausage and not ham as described. Both manufacturer and retailer have been advised that the label and advertisement were in violation of section 5(1) of the Food and Drugs Act. Both have received official warnings.

This incident did not involve some small corner store; it involved Woolworth's, a powerful corporation. It had participated in false advertising. The false advertisement had run for many weeks and many customers had bought the so-called fine ham. But there was no talk of reimbursing them; nothing was said about compensating consumers who had bought under false pretences what they thought was fine ham but which turned to be nothing more than pork sausage. I use that example to illustrate the warm relationship between our minister of corporate affairs and the corporations this bill is supposed to regulate.

Other instances of false advertising could be alluded to. For example, how can we permit deodorant makers to run ads like the one run by Dial soap? It suggests that Dial anti-perspirant soap does two things for friendship. How does that help consumers who try to forage in the marketplace? How does that help them select the proper soap? I don't know. How can you claim that Dial soap does two things for friendship? Can you say that five-day deodorant pads are better than any spray? How can a company advertise that a particular product is better than any spray? My amendment would require them to justify their claims. The consumer would be fully aware of the proof verifying the claims made in the advertising. Does Right Guard, for example, have the best wetness fighter of any anti-perspirant spray? What is a wetness fighter? How can Right Guard justify that claim? When a company places an advertisement, it should provide the supporting evidence to prove their claim.

● (1700)

All sorts of products are being pushed. There is a toothpaste that will get you girlfriends, and hair creams that will make you more socially acceptable. Those claims are being made, yet there is not one piece of legislation to regulate the whole jungle of advertising. People are being pushed to purchase junk. They are led to expect certain things of the products they buy with their hard-earned money, but lo and behold, these products do not produce.

There is another prime example of false advertising which is in no way covered in this bill. For example, the Ford Motor Company made all sorts of representations to the public that implicitly or explicitly aroused unwarranted expectations with regard to product effectiveness. They claim that with a certain Ford car you can get 26 miles to the gallon. Obviously, those results were obtained in highway tests under conditions which no ordinary driver would encounter. However, people are led to believe that they will get 26 miles to the gallon only from that Ford product and not from any GM product. It is not made clear to the consumer that the tests were made in a controlled situation. The consumer spends his money with that expectation of performance, but it falls far short of that. As a matter of fact, the Ford Motor Company was taken to court in the United States under that country's false advertising legislation. They were found guilty of false advertising because they did not clearly point out that the 26 miles per gallon could only be obtained under controlled conditions.

Another area which falls far short with respect to consumer protection in relation to false advertising is the cosmetics industry. This party's amendment would demand that qualities not be claimed unless they can be proven. All sorts of claims are now being made for cosmetics. For example, certain companies advertise that their face creams will fight acne and make your skin smoother. There has been much investigation in this area. In fact, it has been proven that there is no difference between putting face creams or cooking oil on your face. Indeed, and this is very important, many face creams irritate acne or cause skin blemishes.

There are even cases where blindness has resulted from the use of cosmetics. A study made in Canada shows that 29 per cent of women over 18 years of age reported adverse or allergic reaction to cosmetics. If a certain side-effect may occur, that should be clearly indicated on the label and in any advertising. Any hazards should be clearly pointed out. For example, aspirin is a blood thinner. For people with certain kinds of heart ailments, that could be very harmful.

An hon. Member: We sell those to the Liberals.

Mr. Rodriguez: I would not want to do anything like that. They suffered enough of a heart seizure last night after losing the Hochelaga constituency.

The whole area of cosmetics advertising is very serious. The advertisements claim that these products will make women more beautiful and appealing. Well, they do that; but they can also do other things. For example, certain lipsticks can cause very serious damage to the lips. When applying eye shadow, if the tip of the brush gets into the eye, it could cause serious infection. Our amendment would place a serious responsibility on the sellers of these products to not only conform to fair approaches to advertising but also to health standards.

It is interesting to look at the penalties imposed on companies found guilty of false advertising. Woolworth's were given a slap on the hand. As I pointed out before, if a woman should rip off welfare for $65 a week, she would be put in jail and her children looked after by Children's Aid. If a fellow rips off the unemployment insurance, he receives a heavy fine. However, Woolworth's was only given a stern warning, a slap on the wrist. This is characteristic of our approach to false advertising.

At this time, when the push to sell products is so great, we should pay careful attention to legislation that will control advertising so that the consumer will be aware of what he is purchasing and aware of any side-effects of a particular product. It is only fair that all definable qualities should be described in an advertisement.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It should also apply to political advertising.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am glad the hon. member raised that, because it is a very important area. Perhaps the jails about which the hon. member was so concerned would be filled with members of parliament. It might be a good chance to see what they are like. What the hon. member is talking about might be dealt with under misleading advertising.

The amendments being put forward by my party are extremely important to the consumer. Advertising methods are becoming highly technical and the consumer is not trained to deal with this kind of mass advertising. We have to ensure proper protection for the consumer when he steps into the marketplace.

● (1710)

I know that the good sense which prevails in this House will encourage hon. members to support the amendments we have put forward. Think of what happened the other night in terms of wage and price controls. We know how easy it is to control wages. There is no problem at all. Falconbridge says to its workers, "We cannot pay more than 10 per cent; the government says so." When we consider providing protection for the consumer, on the other hand, all possible arguments will be put up. The minister will argue that too many bureaucrats would be required to provide the kind of protection we have in mind.

It seems to me that if we are serious about protecting the consumer against practices which unfairly separate him from his hard-earned money in times of inflation, some protection should be provided through the legislative process. The people who lost out as a result of the fine ham caper had no way of coming to grips with Woolworth's. Maybe a thousand people bought that fine ham and were ripped off. What is an individual to do? Can he take Woolworth's to court to get 60 cents back from them? I think our system has done much more than take 60 cents from that consumer: we have violated his trust. The company concerned has violated the trust of consumers, and that is a much more serious matter than taking 60 cents from a consumer.

The minister does not even allow class actions in this bill. He says we have to wait for the next bill, phase two. So the bill before us does not allow consumers to get together as a class in order to bring an action. I can only urge hon. members to use their good sense and the sense of fair play which I know they have, and support these amendments.

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Madam Speaker, in rising to discuss the motion put forward by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on behalf of his party, let me say, first of all, that it is difficult to deal with the remarks he made. He spent most of his time under the cover of what I would call a misleading representation that he would deal with the subject of motion No. 11. Instead, he told us at considerable length about the fine ham caper, and that, along with the other nonsense he spoke, could I think fairly be described as mainly boloney.

The motion itself seeks to make specific a series of offences under the general heading of misleading advertising. The problem is not that the hon. member has perhaps plumbed the depths of his imagination and come up with as many specific instances of misleading advertising as he can; the question is whether the consumer can be better protected by criminal law prohibitions of very specific practices or by well formulated general rules which can apply to new problems as they develop.

The government is not convinced that the benefits to be gained from specific enumeration of offences, such as those proposed, would be as important as the danger that these specific offences might be viewed as an exhaustive statement of the prohibited practices. The objective of dealing with misleading advertising might not be reached because the proposal would result in exempting other forms of false information from the purview of the act.

I do not think it should be forgotten, Madam Speaker, that the general prohibition of misleading advertising in the present Combines Investigation Act has produced very extensive jurisprudence which has applied a prohibition, stated in precise terms, to a very large number of specific representations. This process, however, has not restricted the application to new problem situations which may occur, and for the reasons I have advanced we oppose the amendment before us: we think it ill serves the objective set forward by the hon. member for Nickel Belt.

I was struck by the hon. member's remarks in an earlier lengthy speech which he made on loss leaders, in the course of which he suggested that stores in the food business were insufficiently competitive. He said there were not enough stores to provide adequate competition. It is interesting to note that the NDP government of Manitoba should have provided itself, at great expense, with a study on food prices—I have forgotten the name of the author—which concluded that one of the causes of high food prices was excessive competition, the excessive number of large food stores in any given area.

These stores were found to be half full at any given time and provided too much floor space, too many people selling and too much merchandise, thereby necessitating a higher price for the products. I mention this point because I think it serves to illustrate that this, like most of the other remarks made by the hon. member to substantiate his amendments, is really unsubstantiated rubbish.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: He comes before the House and at excessive, wearisome length belabours his points. He brings up instances of his personal shopping habits. He recalls numerous instances in which he has been treated offensively. He takes up the time of the House in this way, and then he asks us to show the good sense which he believes prevails here by taking him seriously when he puts forward amendments. I would simply say that whatever the inherent merit of some of the proposals put forward by the NDP, it is more than offset by the amount of time-consuming drivel offered by hon. members who support them.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, I was very pleased to second the amendment in the name of my hon. friend from Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) concerning false and misleading advertising. I was prompted to do so by the weakness of the existing clauses in the bill having to do with this serious problem.

I listened with interest to the observations of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott). Like many Liberals, he continues to hide his head in the sand, deriding the idea that misleading advertising presents any particular problem in this country. He and his friends do not listen to what people are saying, nor do they listen to the industry itself. For the information of the hon. member for Mississauga, and others, I intend to quote from a manual issued by the Canadian Advertising Advisory Board, an industry publication which reveals some rather surprising attitudes about advertising and also discloses a number of problems.

● (1720)

The first point I should make is that this industry body which is set up to regulate itself is not known to exist by consumers. Nevertheless, last year alone the Advertising Standards Council received over 1,826 complaints of all sorts about advertising, be it in newspapers, on television, etc., in this country. I was very much involved in the work of the broadcasting committee on the subject of misleading advertising and advertising directed toward children, and this House felt that it was a serious enough problem to pass a recommendation strengthening the broadcasting code on advertising directed at children. Yet the same problem, extended to a greater degree, exists for the adult population of this country.

There is a great deal of misleading and absolutely false advertising in Canada today. Anybody who takes the time to listen to commercials on television or on other media knows what I am talking about. But what is even more amazing is the attitude of many of the people in the industry itself. I was struck by a remarkable survey conducted in 1972, which appeared in the Advertising Advisory Board's own publication, of 140 marketing executives. The survey revealed that 50 per cent of the advertising executives who responded to the questionnaire indicated no real concern for truth in advertising. What is even more interesting is that 60 per cent of the respondents believed that their advertising is always truthful, whereas only 18 per cent believed that their leading competitors' advertising is always truthful. So even those in the advertising industry, the people who make up these ads, admit that they do not believe their opponents' ads are telling the truth or are in any way not misleading.

We have put forward a series of amendments that will strengthen this bill, a bill that needs a lot of strengthening since it is proposed by a Liberal government that has not been known for its protection of consumers. I would ask those on the backbenches who are once more groaning to listen closely to the first amendment. We seek to prohibit all representations to the public that contain exaggerated price claims of a general nature unless such claims are fully supported by substantial evidence. As I say, the advertising industry itself admits that a lot of exaggeration regarding price has been going on. For example, we often hear of a product that it is 10 per cent faster or that it produces 10 per cent more power. But 10 per cent more than what? That is never stated.

We also have the same kind of advertising claim regarding price. A certain product has the lowest price in town; that is often claimed to be a truism. But how do we know that? What kind of surveys have been done to back that claim? Where is the proof that the product advertised at the lowest price in town is being sold at the lowest price? Or where do we get proof that the new brand "X" will give us 20 per cent more than some other brand? These are the kinds of examples the bill does not deal with, things that we know are taking place. This is why we are proposing that it be an offence to make exaggerated claims of a general nature.

We are not saying that a manufacturer cannot honestly advertise his products. What we are saying is that if he is going to claim that his product is 10 per cent better, or is the cheapest in town, then he has to prove it. What could be more reasonable or honest for advertisers to comply with than this? We are putting forward a simple, straightforward amendment to cover a situation the minister does not cover in his legislation. I ask, where has the minister been? Has he never watched a television commercial or a newspaper ad that carries this kind of misleading claim?

This is why we say that this bill is a cosmetic one. There are so many areas of weakness, areas containing loopholes, that this bill will fail absolutely to correct. One example of the kind of thing we want to see stopped is exaggerated claims of a general nature that do not give to the consumer any exact or correct information. We are also concerned in a general way about the product itself, what it means to the consumer in terms of price, and how advertising relates to price.

I was intrigued by a program produced by the CTV television network, a documentary on cosmetics and the cosmetics industry in Canada, entitled "The Big Put On". I should like to refer to part of the transcript because I think it illustrates very graphically what is wrong with the advertising industry in this country and why we need the amendments before the House today. With regard to lipstick, which is the biggest product in the cosmetics industry, the documentary program through its research found that a lipstick made from any one of over 400 standard formulas for lipstick came out of the factory ready for market at a cost of between 10 cents and 30 cents, depending on how fancy was the container. Then on its way to market it is taxed, distributed, advertised and then retailed, each handler taking another slice of the cost to the consumer. By the time it gets into a woman's purse, the price is seven to ten times the price at the factory pick-up door, and 100 times the cost of the material in the tube. This, of course, is a fad industry; we notice this from the kind of advertising that goes on in the cosmetics industry.

This advertising is, of course, done at great expense to the consumer. If, through advertising, the consumer has to pay more for the product, then the least he can expect is that it is honest and not misleading advertising. So far as product cost is concerned, there is 12 cents worth of processed cleansing cream in a standard four-ounce jar, and three cents of liquid make-up in a make-up container. The mascara in a tube of mascara runs from three cents to nine cents, depending on the formula; and there is about two cents worth of nail polish in the little bottle that can retail for about $2 or more.

What the advertising industry is doing for cosmetics in terms of making them more expensive to buy, products that are already overpriced, is another serious problem. The industry does not reveal how the companies are spending the money, or the side-effects of some of the productions they have produced. For example, it is almost impossible to estimate how much the industry spends to promote or advertise its products. One company spent 30 per cent of its sales dollars on advertising, and another spent nearly three-quarters of a million dollars last year to push a single anti-wrinkle cream. Canadian radio and television networks alone last year carried $27.5 million in cosmetics advertising. The seduction process is all glamour, because if you are selling glamour you have, of course, to be glamorous. We are concerned about this kind of cost and about the misleading aspects of advertising which push up the cost of the product to the consumer.

We are very concerned about the type of advertising and the fact that advertising often may cause someone to buy an item under false impressions. We have covered this in our second amendment. We would prohibit the making of representations to the public which would explicitly or implicitly arouse or intend to arouse unwarranted expectations in respect of a product's effectiveness.

We all know about the type of toothpaste advertising which refers to sex appeal. Where is the proof of that? Where is the evidence that somehow one would become more sexually appealing? There are other products, such as perfume and deodorants, in respect of which it is stated that if one uses these products, somehow one will capture a man, or a woman, as the case may be. We say that this kind of false and really silly advertising which insults our intelligence should not be on the public airways or in the newsprint media. If it should be fair advertising, then in some way perhaps we can reduce the tremendous cost of the advertising that is passed on to the consumer.

In our third amendment we want to avoid what has been going on in respect of all kinds of advertising today. Specifically, we wish to prohibit the kind of representations which make claims in respect of the effectiveness of a product which are not fully supported by substantial evidence. Again, when one looks at the kind of things we find in advertising today, one cannot help being struck by the claims that certain products will cleanse one's face better than any other, or that certain types of deodorant will protect one better than any other brand. Where are the tests to prove this? The advertiser does not produce the evidence in this regard and there is no government agency to see that these claims are in fact true.

We want to make sure that if a company states that its product will do such and such, that it has been proven to some responsible authority that this is the case. I cannot understand why any member on the other side of the House would suggest that such legislation should not be placed on the statute books of Canada. Are we serious about doing something to control such misleading advertising, or are we merely engaging in a public campaign to pass this bill, suggesting that something effective is being done when we know there are loopholes?

We also have a motion which would make it illegal to make a representation to the public containing suggestions either implicit or explicit about the effectiveness of a product in areas other than those in which the product is intended primarily to have an effect. Again, I need not go into great detail concerning the kind of products on the market today and the type of advertising which takes place. We have to pop a pill, now, for every little ache and pain. If we feel a little depressed, we take a tablet which fizzes in water, and somehow or other we are supposed to be better because of this. Again, we would like to see the proof in respect of the effectiveness of these products.

I was amazed, during the question period a few months ago, by a reply from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to the effect that there are many new medical products or drugs on the market which have not been tested by his department, and his department only carries out random sampling. There are many instances of drugs being on the market which have potential hazardous side-effects. We rely solely on the companies to do the testing.

It seems to me it is time we had a more responsible agency, such as a government department, which would carry out the testing in order to ensure that the advertising contains the proof. We have also moved an amendment to the effect that any advertising which uses the word "new" or any comparable word would be illegal unless it is, in fact, a new product with a qualitative change or a change in respect of its active ingredients or parts. We want the use of the word "new" to be limited to a period of six months in respect of such advertising.

Many times I have watched commercials on television where statements have been made to the effect that Sanka coffee is new, or Maxwell House coffee is new. It seems that every few months there is something new about coffee. I should like to know what chemical, qualitative or substantive changes have taken place in respect of that coffee, or in respect of soap products such as New Fab, or Duz, or Tide, that makes them new. Is a bit of dye or colouring added to make the coffee browner? The consumer has the right to know these things.

Mr. Saltsman: The price is new.

Mr. Symes: As my colleague says, the price is new: that is about all. If we are serious about having tough consumer laws in respect of misleading advertising, it seems to me that we must adopt these amendments. Unless we do this, the kind of misleading advertising we have will continue, to the detriment of the consumers in this country.

We are also concerned about advertisements which use the word "improved". We notice claims to the effect that the product somehow is improved. Has there been an improvement in the box so that the product pours more easily? Does the soap pour more easily? Is that what "improved" means? Or does it wash clothes better? Let us have a definition of words such as "new" and "improved". These are important things. The advertising industry obviously believe they are effective, because they continue to use them in their advertising. We say they should justify that it is "new" or "improved".

We also wish to make illegal, references to a product which ignore fully undesirable side-effects which may result from the use of the product. Again there are many instances of this. There are instances in which products have been used which people have found to have very damaging side-effects. My colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt, referred to the lipstick industry, the cosmetics industry, and some creams which compounds the problem rather than solve it. We say if a product has a side-effect such as that in respect of Noxzema, where the product sometimes aggravates an acne condition, this should be made clear on the package. It must be shown that the product may have such a dangerous side-effect. Again, the consumer needs this kind of protection in society when the corporate giants are flooding the market with products of this kind.

In our amendment we also say that in all cases products must be sold on the basis of definable qualities and grades applicable to these products, so we would know what are the ingredients and would be in a position to compare, as purchasers, one product against another, not only in terms of what is being said in the advertisement but also in terms of what is placed on the store shelf.

● (1740)

I think these amendments are sensible and straightforward. The industry itself admits there is a problem. In its own publications, the industry recommends some of the very things that my colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt, has recommended in his amendment. The industry has recommended voluntary guidelines many of which are along the lines that my colleague has proposed. That is why I say it is important that the House adopt these measures.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Madam Speaker, in looking at the amendments placed before the House by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I find it very difficult to understand why there is so much opposition to accepting them and I am particularly appalled by the rather childish display of temper by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott). Because he could not come up with an adequate critique of the amendment before the House, he resorted to the worst of all possible approaches, that is, a personal attack which had no relevance to what is going on in this debate.

In a case before a court, whether a civil or a criminal case, these amendments would be considered to be the most mild criteria. Could anyone go into a court of law and make a case on behalf of something, using the arguments which advertisers use? If any one did so, he would be thrown out of court and told it was not evidence and surely no one would believe that. We insist that evidence presented in a court of law be hard evidence. Why should we insist less that it be hard evidence when we are talking to consumers?

Are consumers not entitled to some kind of protection? Do they not count? Are they simply to be patsies for the commercial interests of this country to use them as they see fit, as people were before we developed rules of evidence in courts of law? Before that time people could arbitrarily say, "That is what I say. Take it or leave it. I do not want to have to present evidence. I have the power and authority, and therefore that is my evidence". That is really what is going on in our society, with advertising today.

I want to make this point before I go on. Not all advertising is bad advertising; there is some advertising which is very useful to the consumer. Advertising that gives the consumer a chance to compare prices, a chance to compare values, or that provides him with useful information about a product, information which can be defined, is good advertising. If we are selling gasoline, advertising that talks about the actual quality of the gasoline is of some use, rather than advertising that tells the consumer that she has a tiger in her tank. That is the kind of thing we are talking about.

When you look at most of the advertising we have in our society, you find that it is not designed to enlighten the consumer; it is designed to confuse the consumer. Every trick in the advertising book is used to obscure what is really of value or to obscure the information which the consumer requires about the product he is being asked to buy. I can understand, perhaps not in logic, why a capitalist government committed to the principles of capitalism—the ideological hang-up—does not want to touch this kind of section because it cuts right at the heart of the system to which we are objecting, the kind of phoniness, the kind of commercialism that is foisted on society, a phoniness which depends on advertising not being touched, because the minute you start to say that advertisers have to tell the truth about products, the whole commercial practice starts to break down and people will be forced to bring products to the market that have real relevance to the lives of ordinary people.

Therefore, to touch advertising is to touch the system itself and what it operates on, which is strictly B.S. That is what the system operates on and that is why we cannot bring in any rules. If you can define things as complicated as the things we have in civil and criminal law, surely you can define things about commercial practice and behaviour—it is not that difficult. It is not that we cannot define it; it is just that we do not want to. Surely it is not too much to ask that the advertiser present proof of what the ad says. People will say, "You are really being silly; you are asking too much. Advertising is not supposed to be true. We all know it is puffery. It has some relevance to the truth; it has a passing acquaintance with what they are talking about." Everybody admits and knows that it is a great big game, and the game is to sit in the boardrooms and pay fantastic salaries to these guys who come up with incredible schemes for misleading and confusing the public, or with cutsie ideas.

If somebody, 200 years from now, comes back and takes a look at the clips on television, he will think we have a race of women who are all ninnies; who are all either washing, smelling each other, or having their hair flying in the breeze, or else their heads stuck in an oven, crying because the oven is dirty. That is the kind of impression he will have of women in the twentieth century, because that is the way the advertiser treats women. If women have a grievance, then the one sector they should detest the most is the advertising industry for what it has done to them. Did you ever see a woman on television getting a man because she talks about Schopenhauer, poetry or George Bernard Shaw, or because she is kind, or intelligent, or pleasant, or artistic, or considerate, or politically involved? No; she must have nice teeth, because that is all you need, she must smell nice, and her hair must look great in the breeze when she is running through the fields talking to herself about something.

The other night on television the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was speaking about the kind of malaise that afflicts our society, and that we have built up expectations in our society which cannot be matched. Who builds up those expectations and who has created expectations that nobody can match because they are not real? That is really what we are talking about, and that is why this eminently sensible and intelligent amendment is not being accepted by the government. The reason is that is it subversive. My friend, the hon. member for Nickel Belt, is a real subversive; he undermines the phony system in which we live. They know this is what the amendment does. If you have to make the advertiser speak the truth, there goes the capitalist system—and they do not like it. They recognize that my colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt, is a dangerous radical who wants to change society, who wants a better society than we have now.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What makes you think so?

Mr. Saltsman: The advertisers play a great game. Let me play the devil's advocate for a moment. If we have an open representative of the advertising industry here, let him tell us what he would say. I suggest he would say, "Do you want us to be like Russia, where all you can buy is black shoes or green shoes and you have to take them or leave them, and where the only size you can buy is five sizes too large? Don't you want a free society? Don't you want everyone to be able to make a judgment on their own? Are you telling us, the advertisers, that everybody in this country is so stupid they cannot see through these things? Should the public not be entitled to make a free choice? Besides, even if what we say is not tangible but is a psychic thing, such as perfume which does not do all the things it says but makes a woman or a man—because today everybody uses it—feel better, it gives them a psychic uplift, then surely it is their money which they should be able to spend freely in a free society."

● (1750)

There is only one problem with that argument: it is not just the person who buys the product or the person who receives the psychic benefit he is paying for; everyone in society is paying for it whether intelligent or not. Everyone in society is paying for it whether they use that product or not. The reason is obvious. Advertising is a deductible expense, which means that the advertiser can deduct that money, and whether we buy that product or not, that results in a loss of revenue to the treasury which has to be made up by other people.

If this situation is to be corrected, and if the advertiser in fairness really believes that these are psychic benefits which people should be willing to be foolish about if they choose, fine, then advertising should not be deductible before tax. Remove it as a deductible item, and therefore let the entire cost of the advertising be added to the product so that the consumer can see what it really costs to bring the product into the market.

As matters now stand, everything which is advertised is subsidized almost 50 per cent because of that deductibility feature. That is objectionable. Not only are people spending money on these things and may be spending money on them foolishly—or perhaps that is their choice—but everyone else in society who has far better use for their money has to underwrite and subsidize that. I do not mind subsidizing the sick, the old, the poor or the disadvantaged of one kind or another—I think that in a moral society all of us are prepared to do that—but why should I underwrite the expensive tastes of the rich and those who want to buy expensive perfumes? That is, in fact, what I do; I underwrite the cost of everything that is advertised, whether useful or not, and I prefer not to do that.

I am not given the choice whether to subsidize, because it is in the Income Tax Act and the more money spent on advertising, the more can be deducted. One can be as stupid and foolish about advertising as one likes. The advertisers will admit that they themselves do not know how effective advertising is. They will tell the buyer that he has to advertise because his competitors advertise, and if the competitor advertises and the buyer does not, the buyer will lose a share of the market. At the same time they are telling us that advertising reduces cost. They cannot really prove that.

I had sympathy with something the hon. member for Mississauga said when he talked about supermarket competition in Manitoba; that an excess amount of competition can in fact raise prices. That is what happens with advertising. If one person alone advertises, obviously that person has a commercial advantage. But if one advertises, all the competitors will advertise. Where is the advantage? They do not even sell more of the product because there is always a limit to what the market will absorb at any time. The net effect is to raise the price of the product and to increase the amount of subsidy received from the treasury.

To get back to this amendment, I think it is important for the government to do one of two things: either to deal with misleading advertising, and therefore everyone in society who is subsidizing advertising will at least have some assurance that their money is not being used to rip people off, or we should be given an assurance that if we put the legislation through without amendment the government will use whatever influence it has to see that advertising is removed as a deductible item for income tax purposes.

In that way we can have it one way or the other. We either try to make advertising moral, in which case we are prepared to subsidize it through income tax, or we say we cannot make advertising moral and it is the kind of thing the consumer will simply have to guard against. If the consumer is going to be foolish, at least it will be only the consumer who buys that product who is foolish; it will not be society which has to be foolish and stupid too. We cannot have it both ways, but it seems that this government wants to have it both ways when it does not accept this kind of amendment. What can the government possibly find objectionable in a statement of this kind, that goods shall be sold by definable qualities? No one is asking that goods which cannot be defined be sold by definable qualities, but there are all kinds of goods in our society which can be defined if someone wants to go to the trouble of defining them.

We used to say the same thing about medicines. The drug companies argued for years that they had some magic formula; that some little old lady with a pointed black hat and a cauldron was working in their modern factory putting something into their product. The product was not capable of analysis; it could not be put on the package; it would be altogether wrong to do that. We ran into such a disaster with the drug industry that the government was forced to make it define what it had put into its drugs. The minute that was done we got generic drugs and we saw that sometimes there was no more than a little bit of soda added. Then there was real competition. People could see there was no magic and that they could go to the grocery store and buy a whole carton of it for a nickel, as against killing their pain for $5. That has been a very useful exercise. With regard to drugs, I suppose it was a question of life and death and there was some urgency on the part of the government to take measures. In addition, the government was spending more and more on health programs and it became urgent that it find some way of reducing costs in that area.

However, when it comes to the consumer the government feels that he or she does not cost them anything so there is no sense moving in that direction and doing something on behalf of the consumer. Besides, the government feels it would upset too many people in the system and change things too much. If the system has to depend on dishonesty, whether it is dishonesty in advertising or in commercial practices, then it is not worth keeping. That is why we have been opponents of that kind of system.

It is quite clear that the government should accept these amendments, which anyone can see are eminently practical and can be made to work. The government is saying that we cannot say something which cannot be proved. We are saying no more than a court of law would say. You cannot make a statement unless you have evidence to support that statement. That is not so much to ask. If this amendment is not accepted, the only conclusion we on this side can come to is that the government does not want honesty in advertising and that the legislation before us is not worth voting for.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SUGGESTED DEFERRAL FOR INCOME TAX PURPOSES OF INTERIM PAYMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the announced objective of the Canadian Wheat Board to encourage producers to deliver grain to elevators as soon as possible this fall, in view of the announcement by the Canadian Wheat Board of an intended interim payment of $1.50 per bushel, and in view of the fact that it appears that the interim payment will not be subject to the same rules of tax deferral as in the case of an initial payment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That this House direct the government to take the necessary steps to have the interim payment on grain, anticipated next month, put into the same category as the initial payment for tax deferral purposes, so that farmers delivering grain as requested by the Canadian Wheat Board will not be adversely affected from an income tax point of view.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion dealing with an urgent and important issue.

Since it is urgent to give a new impetus to housing to eradicate unemployment and meet public needs and since we also have to increase at all costs our productivity and that the duty of any government is to make the life of the people as easy as possible, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House take the necessary means to reduce immediately the interest rates on mortgages in accordance with the recommendations of the white paper on control over inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMPILING OF MEMOIRS OF CANADIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER BY STAFF IN LONDON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 arising out of the low morale in the Department of External Affairs, and in this case pertaining particularly to the shocking state of the Canadian High Commission in London, England. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise the House of the number of persons on the staff of the Canadian High Commission in London, England who have at various times been involved with assisting the High Commissioner, the Hon. Paul Martin, in compiling his political memoirs at public expense, and specifically whether this total includes six persons, and further that the minister advise the House why it has now been necessary or justifiable to assign three permanent secretaries to Mr. Martin to devote almost full time toward compiling his political memoirs at public expense.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MANPOWER

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASING FUNDS FOR LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of extreme urgency which requires immediate attention.

In light of the recent publication of unemployment statistics which particularly affect Quebec, and since we are now in the process of choosing local initiatives programs related to this project, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the budgets earmarked for local initiatives programs be increased immediately in line with the higher unemployment rate, particularly in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion, therefore, cannot be put.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED DEDUCTIBILITY FROM INCOME TAX OF MORTGAGE INTEREST ON SINGLE FAMILY DWELLINGS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

If Canadians who want to buy a house find it increasingly more difficult to do so, it is in part because of the rising prices of houses, but mainly because of the high interest rates on mortgage loans. Since the steps taken by the government have completely failed in this area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That the House direct the Minister of Finance to come up with a policy which would allow owners of single family dwellings to deduct from their taxable income the amounts paid in interest on their mortgage loans. Such a policy would make it possible for low and middle income Canadians to buy a house, so as to live decently.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSITION OF QUEBEC ON CONSTITUTIONALITY AND POSSIBILITY OF PROVINCIAL PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister with regard to the constitutional position of the government respecting its restraint program and the report in the press that the government of the province of Quebec plans to introduce legislation to establish its own system of control of prices and incomes in that province. Has the Prime Minister received any positive assurance from the premier of Quebec that he accepts the constitutional position adopted by the Prime Minister of Canada and expounded in this House in that regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered a similar question in the House a couple of days ago and indicated that the constitutional problem had been raised at the meeting I had with provincial premiers. They indicated interest in knowing if we had examined the constitutional aspects of it. I indicated to them that we had and we were confident that the bill, as it is drafted, is within the constitutional power of the government of Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the premier of the province of Quebec indicated that he accepts the constitutional position outlined by the Prime Minister of Canada, and can the Prime Minister confirm or deny that the government of the province of Quebec does intend to establish its own system or its own program of controlling prices and incomes within that province?

Mr. Trudeau: On the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, the premiers expressed various opinions on my statement about the constitutionality. None of them rejected our claim that we would have a bill which was clearly constitutional. Of course, they had not seen the bill by then so they reserved judgment until they had seen it. None of the premiers indicated that they were challenging or even questioning the right the federal government had to do what they themselves, the premiers, had urged us on at least two previous occasions—at the interprovincial meeting of St. John's and the other interprovincial meeting of premiers at Toronto the year before—when they urged the federal government to take strong leadership in the fight against inflation. I think the discussion I had at the meeting with them indicated they were generally happy that we are taking leadership. They wanted to examine the bill and project in more detail.

On the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I have no information as to the course the Quebec government will follow. Mr. Bourassa has spoken to me since the Monday meeting indicating he was examining various ways by which they could co-operate with the federal government in enforcing our strong anti-inflation stand.

Mr. Stanfield: A final supplementary. Has the Prime Minister received an assurance from the premier of Quebec that it is the intention of the province of Quebec to co-operate with the policy as outlined in the white paper? I ask this question with regard to the province of Quebec simply because of press reports to the contrary today.

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is clearly an unequivocal no-yes, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Why don't you just compromise with "maybe"?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The truth will out!

Mr. Trudeau: It might be best to compromise by saying that the premiers will speak for themselves. I indicated previously what transpired at the private meeting we had. It was not up to me to say what position they had taken. I think I am free to say that the province of Quebec indicated a genuine willingness to co-operate with us in fighting inflation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON CHOICE OF LONG RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of National Defence is supplementary to the question of my leader. The minister stated on October 10, 1973 in a self-styled "new era" speech that:

National Defence will be increasing dramatically the amount of money being spent for new capital equipment.

Since 1968 we have been awaiting the choice of a new long range patrol aircraft only to see it confused with the question of a new interceptor and the restructuring of the Canadian air industry. Will the minister inform the House how the new program of restraint will affect the choice of the LRPA, if the choice has been made and, if so, the general terms of the contract?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, major decisions on procurement are before the cabinet at present in the form of the forces structure review and when the decisions have been reached they will be announced in the usual way.

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO COLLECTIVE SECURITY OF EUROPE—ROLE OF CF-5

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister stated his agreement with the need "to play a useful part in the collective security of Europe." Will the minister inform the House how he intends to acquire the capability to make such a contribution, and does the minister expect to be taken seriously when he suggests that the CF-5 is being considered as an alternative to the purchase of the F-15 or F-16?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I said in Brussels and here, and the Prime Minister said before the NATO heads of government, that Canada intends to maintain the level of its contribution to the NATO alliance. The form in which we are to do that is being considered as part of the structure review to which I have just referred. There is no suggestion that the CF-5 would replace the F-15, the F-14 or some next generation fighter, but that does not mean we should not make use of the CF-5 which is an excellent ground-support tactical aircraft.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF INTENTION OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD TO INVESTIGATE MARKETING BOARDS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, who is just entering the chamber. In view of the buffoonery indulged in yesterday and statements made by Mr. Pepin and Mrs. Plumptre at a press conference yesterday which clearly indicate a bias against agricultural marketing boards and the intention of the anti-inflation review board to give top priority to the investigation of agricultural marketing boards, will the Minister of Agriculture tell the House if the government intends to allow the controls program to destroy the best mechanism which agricultural producers now have for ensuring that their prices are related to costs of production? If not, if that is not the government's intention, how does he interpret Mr. Pepin's statement of yesterday?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I said before and I say again, a well-run marketing board has nothing to fear from anyone.

An hon. Member: You don't know Beryl.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While I may agree with the Minister of Agriculture's remarks, that does not deny the fact that the threat has already been made against marketing boards. As there are now over 100 marketing boards, federal and provincial, in the country, boards which farmers worked for and desired for decades, can the minister explain how we are to reconcile Mr. Pepin's remarks with the statement on page 18 of the white paper which says that prices received by farmers and fishermen for their products are exempt from the guidelines?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, all I know of Mr. Pepin's statements is what I read in the press. I will try to arrange a meeting with Mr. Pepin as soon as I can. I will hear what Mr. Pepin has to say, and I intend to meet with him as soon as possible. I am sure what the hon. member said, Mr. Speaker, is well recognized by many, namely, that marketing boards have a role to play in the pricing system, and that we support the concept of properly run marketing boards—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: These are closely related—

Mr. Hees: And so on, and so on.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I do not have to pay any more attention to John Turner than I paid before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: With regard to the government's program to control inflation, if hon. members study what a marketing board does, they will find that it is probably more closely related to this program than any other business operation.

● (1420)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I will direct my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I might say that I am very grateful for the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture about marketing boards. Yesterday Mr. Pepin referred to himself and Mrs. Plumptre as "two distinguished fools". I wonder if the Prime Minister could explain, in view of that ludicrous performance yesterday, what grounds Mr. Pepin might have for using the word "distinguished"?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF SETTLEMENTS WITH EXPROPRIATED PARTIES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Since 135 owners of land, plots of land, houses and other similar properties have not yet been granted a final settlement for the expropriations necessitated by the development of the Mirabel project, could the minister tell the House if the offers made to them will be increased by 10 per cent, as has been promised, in order to cover the increase in real estate values which has taken place since then? Moreover, could the minister say if those people will get $3,000 more as compensation for relocation costs and for the disadvantages to which their relocation has given rise?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look at the exact timing of the various settlement attempts in the case of Mirabel and discuss the details of that with the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Finance.

Can he tell the House whether the government is willing to consider the possibility of giving all Mirabel expropriated parties an increase of 50 per cent over the initial offer, just as he has agreed to do in the case of the expropriated of the Forillon park?

[Mr. Whelan.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

CONSULTANTS' CONTRACT TO RAY McLAREN—ALLEGED VIOLATION OF POLICY OF RESTRAINT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I note he is not yet in his seat. Perhaps I can direct it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the national call to restraint issued last Monday evening by the Prime Minister, and the notation in the white paper that the government plans a reduction in expenditures for private consultants, will the minister bring the spirit of these commitments to his own department and cancel the atrocious contract given to one Roy McLaren of Toronto?

An hon. Member: Here he is now.

Mr. Kempling: I will repeat my question to the minister. In view of the national call to restraint issued last Monday evening by the Prime Minister, and the notation in the white paper that the government plans a reduction in expenditures for private consultants, will the minister bring the spirit of these commitments to his own department and cancel the atrocious contract given to one Roy McLaren of Toronto?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member for not having been in at the outset. I am not sure if the contract is atrocious. In fact, I personally have not seen it. However, I am having discussions this afternoon with my deputy minister with regard to this and other related matters. Perhaps I might be able to reply more fully later. As far as I know at this moment, there is no contract.

Mr. Kempling: A supplementary question. We understand this contract was foisted on the minister's department by Messrs. Pitfield and Davey. Will the minister agree that a contract which calls for a salary of $50,000 a year and $40,000 a year in non-accountable expenses is not in keeping with the call for restraint and the commitment to reduce expenditures?

Mr. Jamieson: I am sure the hon. gentleman would agree that he and I are the least likely people in this House on which anything could be foisted by anyone. I look at it in terms of whether I consider the gentleman's services to be of the value that is now being negotiated.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON PRIVATE BILL CONCERNING FIREARMS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

I compliment the government and him on that appointment and endorse the words—the eloquent words—used by the Prime Minister when he said: "He will bring freshness and vigour to the post."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister having stated that he knows the dangers inherent in crime expansion, living as he does in Vancouver, I ask him, therefore, whether he would do something to expedite the private bill which I introduced to provide that any gun carrier committing an offence or endeavouring to commit one should, in addition to any other penalty, be subject to five years for possession of firearms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope he will do this, because while the package for which we have been waiting for months does not seem to come, this would do something to meet the serious situation today when gun carriers are holding Canadians up to ransom everywhere.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): I would, first of all, thank the right hon. gentleman for his kind comments. I trust I can live up to the words of the Prime Minister he quoted. In answer to the question, I should like, if I might, to review the right hon. gentleman's bill to determine whether some action on this side should be taken with regard to it. I should like him to know that I share his concern about the present adequacy of gun laws; my colleague the Solicitor General and I have proposals which are presently before cabinet for consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since this question of a package has been under consideration for several months, I hope that this one suggestion, which will in no way interfere with the package and which would strike terror into the hearts of wrongdoers, will be permitted to be brought in and expedited through the House at the earliest moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TREATMENT OF EMPLOYEES TAKING FRENCH LANGUAGE TRAINING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It concerns a grievance which has been directed to my attention by a group of CNR employees at the passenger sales department in Winnipeg. The grievance refers to the manner in which the Official Languages Act is being applied. After receiving the maximum amount of French language training which the CNR allows them, and passing, they are not designated bilingual. These people are now being demoted, with loss of pay, or being laid off. Will the minister implement an immediate investigation into the unjust treatment accorded to these employees and inquire why they are not receiving the 12-month language training courses as laid down in the official languages resolution adopted by Parliament in June, 1973?

● (1430)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will, of course, be very glad to look into any matter that any hon. member brings to my attention in sufficient detail so that I can follow it up.

Mr. McKenzie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As these employees are not receiving the proper job protection as laid out in the 1973 resolution, will the minister recommend to the cabinet that the resolution be made law by becoming an official part of the Official Languages Act?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will not draw any conclusions until I have investigated the matter.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR AID TO COW-CALF OPERATORS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Would he advise the House whether a specific program is being considered and will be implemented under the provisions of the Agricultural Stabilization Act to provide some relief, and hopefully some stability, to the cow-calf operators of Canada who are in a very serious state of affairs at the present time?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have had some meetings with the provinces and the different producer organizations and I can say this—I am sure the hon. member is aware of it. Some organizations are suggesting that nothing be done; others are suggesting that many things be done. I received letters from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture yesterday telling us what they think should be done. We are considering all of these proposals at the present time, though I realize some of them are late.

Mr. Mazankowski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that in Edmonton on September 19 the Minister of Agriculture indicated that a cow-calf stabilization plan would be unveiled within two weeks, may I ask the minister why he has changed his position, or was he simply engaging in a game of hot air, or in a game of politics where he says one thing in one part of Canada and another thing in the House of Commons?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, from what the hon. member has just said, certainly he should be the expert on hot air and politics, at least as far as I am concerned. I said that we were working on a program and that I hoped a proper program would be announced in due course. The hon. member knows full well that representations have been made by different people in the cattle industry. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association have been strongly suggesting that nothing be done, and also the Saskatchewan growers have practically said nothing should be done. If they are not representative, then let the hon. member say so here.

Mr. Mazankowski: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister said in his speech last night that he has assured the farmers that they will not be left holding the bag if the bottom drops out of the market for the product, would the minister not consider that the bottom has dropped out of the market so far as the cow-calf operators of Canada are concerned?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we are bound by the stabilization act to stabilize the price of beef, and we will do that.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTED LIMITATION OF HIRING BY CONTRACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the statement in the white paper that the government intends to keep the growth of the public service in the coming year to 1.5 per cent, and in view of the fact that some years ago when the Prime Minister announced a freeze on the hiring of public servants a large number of contracts were made by various departments with employees who were not permanent members of the public service, so that departments could get the people they needed, may I ask the minister whether he has given consideration to limiting the number of people who can be hired under contract by government departments?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the department will not be allowed to do indirectly what it cannot do directly.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether, in line with the statement he has just made, he has put a limitation on the total amount of money allocated for payment of contracts to hire people in the coming year?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, every department's budget provides a certain amount for contracts, naturally; those amounts will certainly not be increased, in compliance with the policy announced by the government.

MANPOWER

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASING FUNDS FOR LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board.

As the aim of the Local Initiatives Program is to invite the Canadian people to help create employment and fight effectively against unemployment; as much publicity was made to invite the population to submit LIP projects: as the public responded positively to the appeal of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, as shown by the many projects submitted in Bellechasse, to mention only my constituency, which total $25 million, as only one fourth of the budget was earmarked for this purpose, can the minister tell the House whether additional supplies will be allocated to the Department of Manpower and Immigration to subsidize more projects and follow the guidelines of the white paper, aiming at fighting inflation and particularly unemployment?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when the budget was brought down last June, the Minister of Finance had then provided for an additional sum of several million dollars for LIP projects this year, and as a matter of fact, more money will be available for those projects this year than last year. But if the hon. member wants to know if we are going to add more money to the budget brought down by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton last June, the answer is no.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary of the President of the Treasury Board.

As I always have taken seriously the government's policies regarding inflation and fight against unemployment, in view of the disproportion existing in the same budget mentioned by the minister for job creation through the Local Initiatives Program and the amounts allocated to unemployed persons, i.e. through the Unemployment Insurance Commission, may I ask the minister if he would urge his cabinet colleagues to reconsider that disproportion in order to face the unemployment problem more efficiently by allocating enough additional money to fund more projects?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, as I already said, we will be able to accept more projects this year than last year, but it is impossible, at this moment, to increase the amounts in this area under the current circumstances.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE PRIME MINISTER NOT ALLOWED TO BROADCAST SPEECHES ON EVE OF ELECTIONS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Communications. While the recent federal by-elections afforded good news for members on this side of the House, would the Acting Minister of Communications communicate with the head of the CBC, the CRTC and the relevant media bodies in this country and assure this House that in future no longer will the right hon. Prime Minister be accorded prime time on the eve of elections, be they general or by-elections, for so-called non-political speeches?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it was perfectly clear at the time that the speech that was made was perfectly proper and in accordance with the rulings.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION OF ATHLETES' SALARIES BY ANTI-INFLATION BOARD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Does the minister agree with Mr. Pepin that a first priority for the new Anti-Inflation Board should be an investigation of athletes' salaries?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have constituted the Anti-Inflation Board and will be looking for their active guidance in dealing with these questions. From my standpoint the principal areas of concern, initially at least, will be the areas of food and rents.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDING EFFECTIVE DATE

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and I should like to congratulate the minister on his appointment to this very important post.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howie: I attempted to give the minister notice of my question yesterday and I hope he received it. In view of the fact that the Regional Development Incentives Act applies only to companies achieving commercial production on or before December 31, 1976, and recognizing that the planning and implementation stages of new manufacturing projects often require 18 months or more to complete, does the government attach priority to the amendment of this act so that its effective date may be extended?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my appreciation to the hon. member for his kind words and for the fact that yesterday he gave me notice of his intention to ask this question today. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I may say to the House and to the hon. member that the government has decided it will extend the present act for five years past 1976. I am looking forward to tabling this very short bill in the House as soon as possible which is designed to achieve this objective. I hope that the interest shown by hon. members in this place would indicate that I will receive strong support and quick passage of this bill so that we will achieve the goals set in this department.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON FUNDING MULTIPLEX CORPORATION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for his very positive and wise answer which is well received. Is it the intention of the government to continue to fund the Multiplex Corporation in New Brunswick after December 31 of this year?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this specific question is under review at the present time. There has been some discussion going on within the department about that popular subject and I hope I will be able to report on some decision in that regard soon.

OLYMPIC GAMES

NAME OF HEAD OF SECURITY OPERATION—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE COSTS WILL NOT ESCALATE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a total force of nearly 10,000 men will be used for security purposes during next year's two-week Olympic games in Montreal, consisting of the RCMP, the Montreal and Quebec police forces, as well as 5,000 members of the armed forces, will the Solicitor General advise this House who in fact will be heading this mammoth security operation, and can he assure us at the same time that costs can be expected to remain at the originally projected figure of $90 million, particularly in these times of restraint?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the olympic security is under a co-ordinating unit which is directed by a representative of the Montreal urban community police force. The RCMP along with the Quebec provincial police and the armed forces are represented on the co-ordinating group, but the director, and I forget the man's name right now, is from the Montreal urban community police force.

As to the costs, I cannot give the hon. member the over-all figure, but I know that in respect of the RCMP for which I have responsibility we are doing our best to keep tight control of these expenditures.

POSSIBLE DIVERSION OF SECURITY FORCES BECAUSE OF BILLY GRAHAM CRUSADE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): I have a supplementary question. Keeping in mind that the costs are related to direct grants from the federal government, and therefore are taxpayers' costs, and because of the fact that during the Olympic games Billy Graham is planning a mammoth crusade at one of the Olympic sites, will the minister inform the House whether he intends to divert security from existing areas for the Olympic games, add further security or, indeed, is it the government's intention to ask Mr. Graham to hold his crusade at some other time in order to prevent further potential dangers developing in an already potentially explosive situation which will exist in Montreal?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I read that Mr. Graham will give a talk or a series of talks during the Olympic games. I did not hear that he would give them on Olympic territory. I will check into that. I must say in respect of the costs that the costs for which we are responsible are those relating to the RCMP. These are costs of equipment, men and facilities, and they do not relate to the other three groups involved in security.

PROPOSED INSTITUTION AT MORNA, NEW BRUNSWICK—GOVERNMENT POSITION IN VIEW OF OBJECTIONS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in view of the objection of the people of the Morna neighbourhood community to the choice of their area for the location of a minimum security institution, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he has abandoned plans for the construction of the institution at that location?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, not at this point because we have received approval in principle from the New Brunswick provincial government and from certain persons associated with the government of the city of Saint John. I understand there will be a further meeting of the council of the city of Saint John very shortly and we will await the decision that follows that meeting. If there is overwhelming objection to the site we will then consider withdrawing it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DATE OF ORDER GRANTING PAY INCREASES TO EXECUTIVE CATEGORY—SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF AMOUNT OF INCREASE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the President of the Treasury Board confirmed in the House on Tuesday that senior civil servants had received very large pay increases of up to $6,500 I should like to know whether the order granting all or part of the increases was actually signed on October 14, the day after the Prime Minister's televised statement?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I said recently, this decision was approved by the Cabinet in the month of July and the process of salary level selection went on during the following days. I do not know exactly when. The order to which the hon. member is referring was signed but I did not sign it myself at that time, I am sure of that. Besides, the agreement is for one year only. From April 1, 1976, the parties will be governed by the white paper guidelines. The holders of such positions will not be entitled to more than $2,400 a year.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, if the minister does not know whether he signed all the agreements, and in view of the new regulations, will he tell the House whether he has reconsidered some of the very large increases that have been recommended in order to obtain more equity within the public service of this country?

[Mr. Allmand.]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this decision had been made by the Cabinet in the month of July. It is not possible to review it right now.

NEGOTIATIONS OF AIRCRAFT OPERATIONS GROUPS—NEED FOR INSTRUCTION ON WAGE GUIDELINES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board which arises from a similar difficulty regarding the date of the signing of an agreement and the purport of the interpretation to be placed on page 20 of the white paper in respect of the matter of special considerations. Will the minister undertake to investigate the case presently before the conciliation board of the aircraft operation group of the Professional Institute of the Public Service, who are having some difficulty, as well as the chairman of the board, in interpreting page 20 and the provisions thereon? Perhaps he could give instructions to the Treasury Board negotiators on this matter so the chairman of the board can deal properly with this question that has been brought to the minister's attention.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire and if I can be useful in this matter, I will readily do so, but I do not know whether it is possible. Anyhow, if a collective agreement has been signed by that group, it could be reviewed by the board which we have just set up.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Does she feel confident that her representations to the United States Government have been successful in assuring that the environmental program for the Great Lakes, through an agreement with the United States, will not be delayed, reduced or watered down in any way?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, during our talks with Mr. Kissinger, reference was made to the agreement which Canada signed with the United States to clean the Great Lakes. He renewed the assurances already given by Mr. Train that the United States would try once more to make up slippage in the allocation of funds under that agreement.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, now that the Pickering airport project is back in the black box I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether any policy is being established regarding the use of agricultural land and, if so, when will that policy be forthcoming to indicate the kind of protection the federal government intends to give in respect of the utilization of agricultural lands?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as soon as we had heard that the province of Ontario was backing away from its previous participation in the airport project we indicated that for the present time the land we had acquired for airport purposes would be available for leasing back to the individuals to be put to use as soon as possible, and that is underway.

AGRICULTURE

DATE OF AVAILABILITY OF SOIL CLASSIFICATION MAPS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. When will the soil classification maps for Canada which were promised to soil scientists four years ago, be available, having regard to the fact that no sensible soil utilization plans can be developed until Canada has these maps available to soil scientists in the country.

● (1450)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of any promises having been made four years ago. I will certainly check on the position that this project holds and let the hon. member know.

COMPATIBILITY OF CONTROLS ON MARKETING BOARDS AND EXEMPTING FARM PRICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and it relates to the same subject matter as the question put to him by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. My question is simply this: is it the minister's position that the principle of exempting prices at the farm gate from price controls is compatible with the principle of subjecting farm marketing board prices to such controls? In other words, is it the minister's opinion that exempting prices at the farm gate is compatible with the imposition of controls on the marketing boards? Can the two work together?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I want to say first and foremost that I do not use the term "farm gate". I do not think it is practical because farm prices are much farther afield than that. I do say that what the marketing boards are doing is compatible with the policy under the anti-inflation program which we are trying to adopt at present.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROPOSED CAMP HILL COMPLEX AT HALIFAX—DATE OF TENDER CALL

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is it still the intention of the government to proceed with the much needed building of Camp Hill veterans complex in Halifax this fall and, if so, approximately when will the tenders be called?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the hon. member has been discussed by the provincial government of Nova Scotia and we are awaiting their views on this very important subject.

Mr. McCleave: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT SHORTAGE OF HOME CANNING SUPPLIES

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In the light of the minister's strong anti-inflation speech on Tuesday, will he undertake now to designate a specific section of his department to monitor the supply and delivery of home canning supplies for next year to prevent a recurrence in 1976 of the shortages that have developed in the last three years which have prevented many Canadians from fighting inflation as effectively as they wish to do?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, representatives of the companies concerned have met with officials of my department and that of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The meetings have been fruitful and I believe that not only has one part of the problem been solved this year but measures are taken to avoid any future repetition of last year's and this year's experience.

PROPOSED ABANDONMENT OF LIVERPOOL TO YARMOUTH SERVICE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport, but first I would like to congratulate him on his appointment to his new portfolio. The Canadian National Railways have requested permission from the Canadian Transport Commission to discontinue rail service between Liverpool, Nova Scotia and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. In light of the fact that this is the only CNR connecting link between Halifax and Yarmouth which services our export trade from the South Shore with the New England states and since this action will seriously affect industry, large and small, along the South Shore of Nova Scotia, will the minister investigate this request by the CNR in the hope that this rail service will be continued in the area?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the hon. member's representation and look into it.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL COMMISSION TO REPLACE QUEBEC CRIME COMMISSION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice and also wish him every success in his duties.

Now that the government has decided to allege before the Supreme Court that Quebec's crime commission, with whom the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and officials of the Department of Justice and that of the Solicitor General of Canada have cooperated for the last three years, sat and is sitting illegally, could the minister tell the House whether, in the event the Supreme Court agrees with that belated and astonishing allegation, he would be prepared to recommend the establishment of a federal inquiry commission on organized crime throughout the country to carry on the work of the Quebec commission?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, our intervention in this matter was only at the level of the Supreme Court of Canada where, I think, the Attorney General of Canada is expected to intervene. I have indicated that in the event that the position put forward by the Attorney General is the correct one, I am ready, willing and eager to discuss with the minister of justice of the province of Quebec alternatives to make the kind of inquiry under question properly and constitutionally well based.

FREEZING OF DIVIDEND PAYMENTS—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO DIVIDENDS IN EXCESS OF LIMIT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. Under the recently published anti-inflationary guidelines as they appear on page 24 of the white paper it appears the dividend payments are to be frozen at last year's level. Aside from wondering why dividends should not be subject to the same 10 per cent guidelines and other relevant guidelines as other forms of compensation, especially for the elderly who had the good sense to look after their advancing years, I am moved to ask the minister whether this means that company earnings are henceforth to be confiscated by the Crown should those earnings surpass the limits permitted under the guidelines.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman will be able to examine the procedural nature of this, but in general terms we feel that with regard to corporate dividends as with regard to certain other types of income, for example corporate profits, to put them at the level at which they have been in recent years is not doing them an injustice. We would be arriving at an agreement with all sectors of the community if it could be made clear that those who are owners of such property would be sharing in the restraint program.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DATE OF SIGNING OF OKANAGAN WATER BASIN AGREEMENT

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): My Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the promise that the minister made when she was visiting the Okanagan in mid August that she would sign the Okanagan water basin cost sharing agreement within two weeks, I would ask her now when she is going to sign it?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I did not promise to sign it within two weeks. I said I was expecting it could be signed within two weeks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Sauvé: I understand there are still some problems and it will be signed shortly.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think the answer to my question by the Solicitor General would be somewhat misleading and I am sure the minister does not wish to mislead the House or the public. It is my understanding that there is agreement between the minister and his counterpart in general as to the construction of a penal institution in the province of New Brunswick but that there is no agreement as to the specific location, particularly to Morna in the area of Saint John. I would be happy to be corrected if the minister would care to present me with documentation that would show that such an agreement has been reached, but I do not think the minister wants to leave the impression, which I think would be denied, that an agreement as to the specific location has been reached between himself and his counterpart in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that agreement in principle for the construction of the medium security institution in Saint John was obtained from the government of New Brunswick. Let me also say that the site that has been indicated was not picked by us but was indicated to us as a possible site by the authorities in the city of Saint John. We said that we wanted a site near the city or within the city, and that site was indicated as a possible site, but we are awaiting further reports from the open meeting of the city council to see what will be done.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY PROGRAM

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the government House leader what business we will have for tomorrow and the next few days, assuming that we are going to proceed with the government's bill with regard to price restraints. If, in the orderly progress of that bill, time is available for other matters, what matters will we be dealing with? Will the government House leader please go as far as he can so that this party may, as usual, attempt to facilitate such good legislation as the government may, as it infrequently does, bring forward?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention to proceed tomorrow with the anti-inflation bill, which will be read for the first time in a few minutes. I welcome the intervention of the House leader of the official opposition, but if possible I should like to lay before the House an orderly program for the consideration of this bill and others which are on the order paper. We are as anxious as he is to give hon. members due notice, with some idea of the time during which this bill and others could be disposed of. I think it is in the interests of everyone in the House that there should be an orderly and sufficient discussion of each of these measures but that it not go on indefinitely.

Mr. Baldwin: I listened with great interest to the hon. gentleman, and having said that, will he now indicate what other business we may be considering after we finish the one bill to which he referred?

Mr. Sharp: The bill on unemployment insurance and Bill C-65 dealing with the amendments to the Income Tax Act, which were not disposed of, have the highest priority. There are one or two other measures which there may be a disposition to put into committee, such as the bill on superannuation, which I would like to discuss with the various leaders; but I hesitate to commit them until I have had an opportunity of discussing the program in detail.

Mr. Alexander: I should like to have some clarification with respect to the bill regarding unemployment insurance and Bill C-65. Can the minister indicate, now, which one has the highest priority so that we can determine at what time we should be dealing with these matters?

Mr. Sharp: I have a little difficulty in this respect. Bill C-65 may turn out to be not very controversial and there may be a disposition to deal with it quickly. If so, I might be inclined to put it ahead. However, if that is not the case, certainly the unemployment insurance bill has the highest priority.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the government House leader of the fact that just before we broke up at the end of July the minister indicated that there would be laid before the House a bill as promised in the budget speech of June 23, amending the Government Annuities Act to provide for the escalation of benefits under that act. Can he say whether that bill is now ready, and will it soon be presented to the House?

Mr. Sharp: I expect that it will be before cabinet within the next few days and then will be laid before the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF STATE DR. HENRY KISSINGER

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am a little doubtful about the jurisprudence, but I am perfectly certain that this point of order should be raised and I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) can disabuse me quickly. Allegations have been made in Washington that both the speeches and the private conversations and comments at a dinner held by the minister in honour of the visit of Dr. Kissinger were broadcast to the press room of the Lester B. Pearson Building and have become the subject matter of news stories in the United States. I submit that this will do serious damage to an otherwise useful visit of the United States Secretary of State.

If these allegations are true, they surely affect the privileges of members of the cabinet and of parliament and constitute a serious invasion of privacy. I hope the minister can give the House an explanation and also assure us that if the allegations are correct, arrangements will be made so that such an occurrence cannot again take place.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for raising this matter. It is true that there was a story in the Washington Post this morning. In fact, I happened to be in Washington and I was given the Post as I was leaving the hotel for the airport. In the article there is an account of what I understand to be fragments of the conversation held between Dr. Kissinger and Madam Morin who was sitting next to him at the table. I am not quite sure how this happened, except that arrangements had been made that the toasts made by Dr. Kissinger and myself would be made available through a line to the national press building. If these fragments are correctly reported, the only explanation is that the microphone was left open at a time when it ought not to have been left open.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I think the hon. member raises a very serious question as to the propriety of any person reporting even fragments of what obviously was a private conversation between Dr. Kissinger and the hon. member of this House who was sitting next to him. I am quite troubled, personally, by this incident, and when I returned to Ottawa I called Dr. Kissinger on the telephone and expressed my regrets for it. I feel sure the hon. member will want to know that the Secretary of State said he would not permit this incident to mar in any way what he regarded as an extremely successful visit to Canada. It was an extremely successful visit and I regret that this incident did happen. I believe the fact that any effort was made to report a private conversation, even in fragments, is worthy of contempt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not in any way wish to diminish the importance of the matter raised by the hon. member. It is obviously of great importance. The hon. member has done, as expressed in the words of the minister, a service to the House by raising the point. It is difficult to see how we can get into a prolonged dialogue about it at this point. However, if the hon. member has another suggestion, we will hear it.

Mr. Fairweather: I appreciate the minister's frankness on this point. I think, however, that the House is entitled to know whether Dr. Kissinger knew of the arrangements with the national press building, and also whether the minister is conducting an investigation to see who was responsible for this extraordinarily sloppy arrangement.

Mr. MacEachen: I am quite certain that Dr. Kissinger did know that the tape—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —that the toasts were to be made available for distribution in Canada and the United States. Obviously, it was not intended to go beyond the official toasts in what was to be made available at what was otherwise a private occasion. I have asked that an investigation be made into the circumstances which permitted this to occur, and I am personally quite mortified at it.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

CANADIAN COMMITTEE ON OCEANOGRAPHY

Question No. 1,705—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the Canadian Committee on Oceanography still charged with the responsibility of the co-ordination of activities in marine science and technology?

2. Was this the description of the mandate of the Committee given by the Minister of State for Science and Technology in a news release dated July 12, 1973, entitled "New Oceans Policy"?

3. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,329 which stated that "the Canadian Committee on Oceanography has not met within the last six months", who now has the responsibility of co-ordinating the activities in marine science and technology and on what date was the change, if any, affected?

4. Does this Committee intend to meet within the next six months and, if not, for what reason?

5. Is it the intention of the Minister to in any way alter the parameters and outlines of the government policy on oceans from those presented July 12, 1973 and, if so, on what date?

6. What is the assessment of government of the value of the Canadian Committee on Oceanography and of the role of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology in Oceans Policy?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): 1. Yes

2. Yes

3. The Canadian Committee on Oceanography has met since Question 1,329 was answered, that meeting occurring on June 10, 1975. No changes have been made with regard to co-ordination of activities in marine science and technology.

4. The Canadian Committee on Oceanography intends to meet within the next six months.

5. The Minister of State for Science and Technology has no specific intentions of altering the parameters and outlines of this government policy on oceans from those announced on July 12, 1973; in his responsibility for conducting a continuing review of ocean policy, the Minister will recommend changes in that policy to Cabinet when the need arises.

6. In the view of the government, the Canadian Committee on Oceanography is fulfilling a valuable role in reviewing and advising on activities in marine science and technology. The government also considers that the Ministry of State for Science and Technology has performed, and continues to perform, an essential role in the development of the Oceans Policy and in the continuous review of issues related to this policy.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred questions No. 2,871 and 2,946?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

*AMOUNT OF MONEY SPENT ON SECURITY

Question No. 2,871—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What was the total amount of money spent on security or security-related matters from March 31, 1974 to March 31, 1975 and what is the identification of every vote in the Estimates which authorized such expenditure?

2. What was the total amount of money voted to be spent on security or security-related matters from March 31, 1975 to March 31, 1976 and what is the identification of every vote in the Estimates which authorized such expenditure?

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is not considered to be in the public interest to provide detailed information about security arrangements.

*DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—INSTALLATION OF COMPUTER, WINNIPEG

Question No. 2,946—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Is the Department of National Revenue planning to locate a computer centre in Winnipeg and, if so, will the Department or the Department of Public Works be buying or leasing a building?

2. Is the CAE Air Canada building at 570 Ferry Road being considered and, if so, will it be bought or leased?

3. If the Department of National Revenue occupies the building will renovations be required and, if so (a) what will be their cost (b) who will pay for them?

4. For how many years would either Department lease the building at 570 Ferry Road?

5. Did either Department advertise for tenders to lease or buy such building and, if so (a) who submitted tenders and in what amounts (b) was the contract to occupy 570 Ferry Road the lowest offer?

6. Who are the owners of the building at 570 Ferry Road?

7. Will the computer operation be affected if jet aircraft are only a short distance above the building when landing?

8. Are any other new computer centres being planned and, if so, in which cities?

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Departments of National Revenue and Public Works as follows: 1. The Department of National Revenue will open a Regional Data Centre in Winnipeg using some small scale computer equipment. The Department of Public Works will lease a building for that purpose.

2. The CAE Aircraft Building in Winnipeg will be leased to house the National Revenue Taxation Data Centre.

3. (a) The estimated cost of tenant services is $1,760,000. (b) The cost of the tenant services will be the responsibility of the Department of National Revenue.

4. The DPW will lease the CAE Building for a term of three years. The lease will include three 1-year options on the same terms and conditions.

5. (a) The DPW advertised for proposals to lease approximately 100,000 sq. ft. of space in an existing building. One offer only was received from Metropolitan Estates Properties Corporation. The offer was disqualified as it did not meet the terms of the tender document which called for space in an existing building. (b) Due to the limited time frame available, offers for space in existing buildings were solicited and the proposal received from the CAE Aircraft for accommodation at 570 Ferry Road was the lowest.

6. CAE Aircraft Limited, Winnipeg International Airport, P.O. Box 1700, are the owners of the building at 570 Ferry Road. Located on a site leased by CAE Aircraft Ltd. from the Ministry of Transport.

7. No.

8. Other Regional Data Centres are in the planning stage but no further cities have been selected as yet.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, POWERS OF INVESTIGATORS, OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Wednesday, October 15, consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I am rising, of course, in support of the amendments presented to this House by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I was most interested to listen to the debate yesterday, particularly the remarks of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott). He seemed to become very exercised about the effect of the amendments which have been placed before the House and the obvious interference in the marketplace of Canada. In fact, he became so upset that he suggested they were not only nonsense but were mainly baloney. That is pretty strong stuff, Mr. Speaker.

I know that the hon. member for Nickel Belt can get emotional from time to time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) on a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: My point of order is that I did not refer to the amendment as baloney; I referred to the content of the remarks of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) as baloney.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: In view of those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I am sure we can expect a favourable vote on the amendment today. Since the hon. member seems to find favour with the amendment but not with the speech, I will be delighted if he will join this courageous group on the question of advertising and vote for these very sensible amendments which certainly should recommend themselves to anyone with some experience in advertising and of enforcing the existing provisions.

I was interested in what the hon. member for Mississauga had to say about the general provisions which he said are satisfactory and general enough that prosecutors will not have their hands tied. In fact, the reverse is true. If you talk to anyone who has had experience in prosecuting firms for misleading advertising, they will tell you the success ratio is very low. One of the real problems is that we have no properly legislated, clear standards of what is a violation and what is not. The work "misleading" is far too broad and generic to be of any value whatsoever. Convictions under the act are difficult—almost impossible.

What the hon. member for Nickel Belt is attempting to accomplish is something that I thought would have recommended itself to all members of this House, that is, simply the question of providing truth in advertising. I am pessimistic enough, however, to believe that when these amendments come to a vote tonight we will have the usual lock-up between the government side and the official opposition in opposing the strengthening of those provisions dealing with the marketplace and the manipulation of the consumer by advertising.

There is no way that we can continue to argue out of one side of our mouths that society is becoming permissive, is becoming soft, and yet when it comes time to be counted in this House and lay some of the blame where it belongs, on the advertising media of this country, we say that we cannot interfere in the marketplace.

It ill becomes the Prime Minister of this country to go on television and waggle his finger at the Canadian population, as he did the other night, and say, "You fellows have been living too high on the hog. You are to blame for this inflation. You people out there have been buying too much; you have been seeking too much." Surely it is the responsibility of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to do something about the way the public has been manipulated, by advertising, into seeking the most useless kind of cosmetic junk that is promoted over and over again because of the capitalist demands of the media.

Nobody answers what the organs of communication tell us. There is no anti-advertising program. Therefore, when representatives of my party propose amendments to put teeth into the "truth in advertising" concept, they meet the typical response, "We cannot change the market-place. Besides, you may reduce sales; your proposal is too harsh on some who produce in the marketplace." Nothing is further from the truth.

I am going to talk about how some companies advertise. The other day we went to McDonald's. They have not improved their product; they have improved their menu instead. In the restaurant it is not the food that is important, but the picture of the food on the menu; and every time the picture gets better the price goes up. They have not improved service, but their advertising.

The Post Office also advertises. Because of the many complaints it received from across the country it introduced something called guaranteed mail service. The department painted post boxes with a nice white line and said, "Now you have guaranteed mail service". But the service continued to decline and became less and less guaranteed. That Crown corporation fell into a trap which had been set, by example, by major commercial corporations. The trick in advertising is to tell the Hitler-like big lie. Don't tell a small lie; you have to tell a really big one.

Imperial Oil's advertising about the north looks very appealing. They portray themselves as nice guys in the north who are concerned about our ecology. Let me tell you that if anyone is threatening the ecology of the north, it is the oil companies. Their advertising tries to counter criticism. They indulge in the big lie technique and say, "Our people are up there; they are concerned about the ducks." They show people rowing their little boats across lakes and having a grand time protecting "your ecology in the north."

Actually, in 1971 Imperial Oil was told to discontinue its operations in the Mackenzie delta because the company was breaking conservation rules laid down by the Department of the Environment. The department was slow to act. Companies like to use the big lie technique. Just consider what is happening in the north. If you watch "Hockey Night in Canada" you will see Imperial Oil using prime time every Saturday night to bring you this message: It takes a lot of money to develop the north. It costs $10 million to sink a hole in the Beaufort Sea.

The company really is saying that the government should keep its sticky fingers out of company business so that profits can be kept at a maximum, otherwise the company cannot operate. The company says this in prime television time and there is no opportunity for political response. It does not claim its oil is better or that its service is superior. It does not even try to sell its product directly. It is selling an insidious idea, an idea to which the government or those who hold the opposite view cannot respond. So you can see how the Hitler-like, big lie technique is one of the most insidious influences which we must fight in this country. It manipulates the public, its values and standards. This is done by advertising.

People tell us we are becoming a permissive society because we have so many welfare bums or people drawing unemployment insurance. Apparently we are soft because we do not want the poor to starve or the unemployed to go hungry. Actually, we are soft because subtly, insidiously we are being manipulated to want things which make us soft, and no section of our population is more open to manipulation by advertising than the female section.

I think the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) mentioned this yesterday and I believe the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) will agree: it is amazing how many women think that the way to be attractive is by buying cosmetics. Nobody in advertising suggests you can become more attractive if you become smarter, if you write poetry, if you become a sculptor or win the Nobel prize. Our women are told they can become more attractive if they buy pretty purple lipsticks, wrinkle cream which allegedly takes the years off, or wear attractive sets of fish across their fronts. What nonsense!

An hon. Member: Careful.

Mr. Leggatt: I hope the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway will not take offence. My point is that women, probably more than any other group, are being manipulated by the media.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I feel the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) is singling out women in this House, one woman especially—

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mrs. Holt: —and referring to her personal attire. I think that is totally inappropriate. I did not hear the hon. member singling out men in the House and drawing attention to their attire.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I assure you I intended to compliment the hon. lady. There are many attractive members in this House, but she just happened to catch my eye.

An hon. Member: There are many more. You need glasses.

Mr. Alexander: Withdraw.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I cannot possibly withdraw; I merely suggest that females are being corrupted and manipulated by advertising. But we are all manipulated and corrupted by advertising and I should not single out a special group.

Let me now speak specifically about the amendment. We say that advertised qualities must be definable and that you must not say something is new when it is not. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) suggested that we should consider a new name for our party—we have been around for some time—and instead of calling ourselves the New Democratic Party we ought to call ourselves the Democratic Party, a name which I feel is better because we are probably the most democratic party in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Leggatt: Why should hon. members object to an amendment which says that no company shall:

(e) make a representation to the public containing exaggerated price claims of a general nature, unless such claims are fully supported by evidence of a substantial nature.

Why should companies be allowed to lie? Why let them get away with something they could not get away with in court? For years and years you could adduce pretty well any evidence in court. Then the hearsay rule was introduced. But in the area of the public's manipulation by advertising we refuse to impose on companies standards of truthfulness which any court would enforce if the company were in court, or which we expect our children to abide by. We expect our children to tell the truth, but somehow people engaged in commerce are exempt from the normal rules of morality.

The next paragraph of the hon. member's proposed amendment reads:

(f) make a representation to the public that, either explicitly or implicitly, arouses or tends to arouse unwarranted expectations of product effectiveness.

Some ridiculous claims are made for products. I am thinking of claims made for wrinkle creams. The advertisers say that these creams will take the years off. What about claims made for toothpastes which are made of little more than artificial fat?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What toothpaste do you use?

Mr. Leggatt: Colgate's.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No commercials, please.

● (1530)

Mr. Leggatt: The next item refers to making a representation to the public, and I quote:

(h) make a representation to the public containing suggestions, either implicit or explicit, of product effectiveness in areas other than those in which the product is intended primarily to have effect.

That is a very simple request. Why not tell the truth about the product? There is no law requiring a commercial enterprise to say that its product is bad. We only say, "Don't lie." That is a very simple proposition; one that I think should appeal to all sections of the House. The last paragraph of the amendment the hon. member has proposed perhaps gets to the subject matter better than the others. I quote:

(l) and in all cases, products shall be sold on the basis of definable qualities and grades, where that is possible.

What we are trying to accomplish here is a way for the consumer to get a break in what he is buying. He has been manipulated. His needs have been artificially stimulated. What we are saying is that if the quality or grade of a product is defined, an objective judgment can be made in the marketplace. At the moment this cannot be done. Advertising has become so sophisticated that we are no longer capable of resisting many of the ploys or status approaches used by advertisers.

I do not think there is any industry more typical of the insidious nature of the advertising we have been faced with than the automobile industry. Over a ten-year period they have clearly been attempting to manipulate the public in order to sell high-profit, large, expensive gas-guzzlers. The public has been able to resist slightly but not entirely. People began to ask whether they really needed these large cars, and slowly the small cars started to grow in popularity. The resistance continued and Detroit would bring out a small car. However, the compact car of one year would suddenly become a medium-sized car the following year. As I recall, they fought for ten years to get the public to buy a wasteful, largely stupid product. A new small car has now been put on the market. The Chevette appears to be the only real attempt to bring out a small car. I hope that next year the Chevette will not become the Chevelle and we will not be back to a big gas-guzzler within three or four years.

An hon. Member: What about the Wally Wagon?

Mr. Leggatt: That was a very practical suggestion. My alma mater, the University of British Columbia, developed the Wally Wagon. I hope in the future one of the major manufacturing concerns will produce the Wally Wagon on a large scale so that Canadians will develop sensible driving habits.

In summary, it is not good enough to say that Canadians have become soft and permissive and do not produce anything, while we continue to have a value system imposed upon us through advertising. The amendments of the hon. member for Nickel Belt go a long way toward improving that situation.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to discuss the substance of the motion during the detailed consideration of the bill by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

I can assure the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) that I approve the object of this motion which could spell better protection for consumers.

I have stated on several occasions in the House and elsewhere the constant concern of the government and especially my department to assure that the Canadian consumer is not swindled or wronged when he is buying needed goods. This concern is more clearly and specifically shown in the bill under consideration and in my desire to publish as soon as possible a report on the second stage of the reform of the competition legislation.

As I stated on several occasions, part of the report on stage two will more precisely deal with commercial practices aimed at deceiving consumers.

This motion of the hon. member for Nickel Belt is based on some provincial legislation. On closer consideration of its content, one finds almost literally some excerpts of the British Columbia act on consumer protection.

But it must be noted that some provinces where such legislation is in effect have adopted a so-called civil recourse approach characterized by definite discretionary and controlling powers that cannot be translated or fitted in a piece of legislation which is characterized by a similar approach to that found in criminal law.

Several expressions used in motion No. 11 now before us illustrate this point very well. For instance, the words: "tends to arouse unwarranted expectations, implicit suggestions, undesirable side-effects". Those are expressions that do not agree at all with the spirit of criminal law which must necessarily refer to definite and clear offences, so that a person may know in advance exactly the scope of his responsibility.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, several suggestions made in motion No. 11 are already included in the bill under consideration. For instance, the suggestion in paragraph (g) is a copy of what already exists in section 36(1)(d), a section which, as a matter of fact, appears to me to be clearer and more effective than what motion No. 11 proposes.

I refer hon. members to section 37(2) of the current legislation which has been preserved in this bill and which is certainly more effective and useful to consumers than the gist of this motion introduced by the hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Speaker, paragraph (j) in the motion refers to the word "improved". In this respect, I should like to remind the hon. member for Nickel Belt that we have already succesfully instituted court proceedings against a manufacturer who was advertising his product as "improved" while, in fact, it was not improved at all.

There is no doubt—I want to make myself perfectly clear on this—that this motion offers nothing which does not already exist in the present statutes. The law, as it now stands, is in a general context and is implemented in a criminal context.

Now the words we find in the motion submitted by the hon. member for Nickel Belt are in a rather different context; he has a so-called civil approach which I think does not suit Bill C-2, which is of a criminal nature.

As I said, we are now examining the law in the area of commercial practices aimed at deceiving the public and I want to assure the hon. member and all hon. members in this House that I do not exclude at first the possibility of adopting a civil recourse approach and an approach of regulatory power in the federal legislation aimed at protecting consumers.

I can assure hon. members that the substance of motion No. 11, as submitted to us, will be examined with the same openmindedness as the other suggestions already under review when we formulate the reform on the law on competition in phase two. For the moment, such an approach seems to me untimely and unsuitable to the existing Combines Investigation Act, all the more so because certain parts of this motion are already provided for in the present legislation, that under the current legislation we have already prosecuted companies that have been accused of having used "improved" when in fact nothing was improved. Furthermore, in a recent case put before the court, a company was fined $5,000 after we submitted this case to the court.

So, I want to say that if, on the one hand, I agree with the spirit of the hon. member's proposition, I do not want, on the other hand, at this stage of the study, to approve the wording. I therefore recommend that the motion be rejected.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on this amendment stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 18.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion at this stage. You will recall that, before last summer's recess, I had said that, provided this House were prepared to limit the debate on Bill C-2 to two days in the fall, I would be willing, in a spirit of cooperation, to present, at a suitable time, an amendment to clause 31.4 of this bill, which would partly meet the views of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on the matter of franchises. Now there appears to have been discussions among the various leaders in the House concerning this and, if the House is agreed, I shall now move this amendment.

[English]

That motion No. 5 (Mr. Stevens) be amended by striking out all the words following the word "following" and by substituting therefor the following:

"(c) A company, partnership or sole proprietorship is affiliated with another company, partnership or sole proprietorship in respect of any agreement between them whereby on party grants to the other party the right to use a trade mark or trade name to identify the business of the grantee, provided

(i) such business is related to the sale or distribution, pursuant to a marketing plan or system prescribed substantially by the grantor, of a multiplicity of products obtained from competing sources of supply and a multiplicity of suppliers; and

and by striking out the word "and" at the end of line 29, substituting a semi-colon for the period at the end of line 34 and adding, immediately after such semi-colon, the word "and".

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this is a motion in substitution of motion No. 5? I do not think that was made very clear. In other words, the minister is asking for unanimous consent to reopen and reconsider motion No. 5. Whatever our view may be about the substance, we have no objection to the motion being reopened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair wishes it to be clear that there is to be a recorded division on motion No. 5, so it would need to be agreed that such division on the previous motion No. 5 would be eliminated, and that by unanimous consent the House allows the minister to forgo the provisions of paragraph (5) of Standing Order 75 which calls for 24 hours' notice of an amendment and authorizes the minister to place a new amendment before the House which will be studied and debated in due course. Is that agreed?

Mr. Kempling: We agree to this procedure, Mr. Speaker. It was my understanding that this motion would also apply to clause 38(7) on page 41.

Mr. Ouellet: No.

Mr. Kempling: That has been sorted out, has it?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, but it cannot be dealt with there.

Mr. Kempling: Very well. We shall accept it on that basis. Are we going on to debate this motion now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready to proceed with the consideration of new motion No. 5?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There were suggestions through the usual channels that we would now proceed to motions 18, 20, 21 and 24 and discuss motion No. 5 later today. Was that not the understanding?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can we stay with the understanding?

Mr. Ouellet: Certainly.

● (1550)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If that is agreed, we will proceed with motion No. 18 which appears in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). The motion is the following:

Motion No. 18

That Bill C-2, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in clause 18 by striking out lines 19 to 36 on page 38 and substituting therefor "chance and skill whatever".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, this motion is in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and you have put it in his name, but it would be appreciated if the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) could speak at this time and introduce the motion without denying the hon. member for Nickel Belt the right to make his speech later on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak in favour of this amendment which is put forward by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). The purpose of this amendment to Bill C-2 is quite simple and, I think, most important to the consumers of this country. The motion would remove from the marketplace the expensive practice of promotional contests. If this amendment is accepted, a few Canadians will no longer have the opportunity to win a free car from brand "X" or a trip to Hawaii from brand "Y", but all Canadians will be saved the price of these so-called give-aways.

The give-aways have been with us for many years and they always have to be paid for. At one time it used to be the custom among certain establishments in the business of selling liquid refreshments to offer a free lunch along with their regular wares. There is no such thing as a free lunch, Mr. Speaker. There is no such thing as a free drink. There is no such thing as a free trip to Hawaii with a few thousand dollars thrown in, as sometimes is the case with these contests. Somebody has to pay for that, and that somebody is the consumer who buys the product that is sponsoring the so-called give-aways. Indeed, there are a number of my constituents who could not even afford to accept such a give-away, the situation is that bad.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They can just buy one.

Mr. Firth: I do not know how many people buy one brand of breakfast cereal instead of some other, just on the off chance that they will win a free car, or what have you, but I do know that every person who buys a give-away brand is paying part of the price of the car that is offered in this promotional type of contest. These people are also paying the cost of advertising the give-away, of promoting the give-away, and the salaries of the bright young executives who think up these give-aways. As I say, Mr. Speaker, there is no such thing as a free lunch.

An hon. Member: Or a tax write-off.

Mr. Firth: Exactly. Surely we are having to pay enough for essential commodities like food, without paying a surtax. Perhaps "lottery" is a better word for these contests, but it is a cruel kind of lottery because the consumer has no choice in the matter. I suggest that if he or she wishes to purchase a brand that is running this kind of free lunch, then he or she is forced to buy a ticket. They are given no alternative and they are not even told how much of their money goes to support the give-away.

People should be able to take a chance. If you are inclined to gamble a little, then there are a number of lotteries in the country. People can go to the horse races, buy an Olympic lottery ticket, or there are many other lotteries in the provinces. In that case one knows exactly how much one's gamble is going to cost, one knows exactly what one's money is going into, and one has a free choice. That is not the case with promotional give-aways, especially in the food industry. In the great, promotional free lunch lottery the gamble is not so clearcut.

In Bill C-2 the government is offering us guidelines for some of these situations. It is giving us the ability to know the approximate value of the prizes offered, as described in the bill. The bill will ensure that the prizes are not unduly delayed. It will also let consumers rest easy in the knowledge that prizes will be distributed on the basis of skill or random selection. That is all well and good, but once again this government is marshalling its vast resources to solve the wrong problem. The problem is not that free lunch contests should be carried out in a fair and equitable manner; the problem is that they are carried out at all. I suggest we cannot afford them.

The government is now in the process of waging a dramatic war on inflation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has asked all Canadians to do their bit by accepting tough limits on their behaviour and cutting back on their expectations. The Prime Minister told us that the government was limited in its ability to act and that he needed our support to "knock the wind out of inflation". He said that our actions were absolutely necessary to win this fight and that the weapons were in our hands. Well, Mr. Speaker, we are quite aware that the government is having trouble fighting inflation, but here is an example of a weapon that is in their hands: they can adopt this amendment and save us the cost of a "free lunch" by putting their support behind the amendment moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt. That is all I wish to say at this time in support of the amendment.

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak against this motion. Bill C-2 includes a number of initiatives in the field of consumer protection which are not restricted to the prevention of false market information. These provisions in each instance focus on specific exploitative marketing practices, ranging from bait-and-switch selling to resale price maintenance, which can be shown to injure the consumer. Promotional contests, provided consumers have a fair idea as to the way in which the contests are conducted, would not seem to fall into this category of unfair selling methods.

For this reason, Bill C-2 specifies a substantial number of safeguards to ensure that correct and adequate information is provided to all possible participants in a promotional contest. I think it would be useful for all hon. members to draw their attention to the safeguards. A promotion would be unlawful unless the following criteria are provided for:

(a) there is adequate and fair disclosure of the number and approximate value of the prizes, of the area or areas to which they relate and of any fact within the knowledge of the advertiser that affects materially the chances of winning;

(b) distribution of the prizes is not unduly delayed; and

(c) selection of participants or distribution of prizes is made on the basis of skill or on a random basis in any area to which prizes have been allocated.

If the court decides after a fair hearing that a promotion is unlawful, then there are penalties by way of either indictable or summary process. The proposed amendment to motion No. 18 would prohibit all promotional contests, and I consider that in the absence of proof that an honestly run contest takes unfair advantage of the consumer, I cannot support the proposed amendment.

● (1600)

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), has touched on the very salient points and reasons for the introduction of this particular amendment. Having listened to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) explain the reasons for his and his party's opposition to this amendment, I suggest they are the same reasons which strike fear in my heart and which prompted my party to put forward this amendment.

He said Bill C-2 provides some protection to consumers because it outlaws certain practices. For instance, it outlaws the practice of double-ticketing. The new method of computerized pricing, with the new and the old price appearing on the article only as five coloured lines, makes a farce of this particular practice being outlawed. How does the computer, once it has registered a price change, inform the consumer of that change if the consumer is unable to read the coloured lines on the particular item?

The hon. member also said that suggested resale pricing was to be outlawed. I suggest that this practice will not be outlawed, because in another section of the bill it is stated that if a manufacturer places the price on the item or on the package, it is quite all right and that is exempt from this provision of the bill. So in fact we will not have lists of suggested resale prices; we will have the suggested prices on the item or the package.

Let me point out that the amendment would not prohibit games of chance or lotteries; it would prohibit the merchandising of products by the use of contests, games of skill and games of chance. I have mentioned before in this House that the marketplace is like a jungle and many consumers may not be as sensitive to market trends as certain members of this House who are in business themselves. Consumers are not generally in this field, and as a result they have to go into this jungle to make a selection of goods for which they must spend their hard-earned money. We are permitting, in this jungle, the predatory practices now being foisted on the consumer.

Let me refer specifically to this whole business of contests and games. As the hon. member for Northwest Territories correctly pointed out, somebody has to pay for these things. I suggest the people who do not believe in gambling or in this kind of hocus-pocus are forced to pay a share of the cost. Nothing is being given away by these stores. All consumers must pay the cost of this gambling in the prices they pay for their foodstuffs and other consumer items.

If a consumer wants to gamble, he has a myriad of lotteries and other such things. We will have the Olympic lottery with us for years to come, I suggest. If the consumer wants to play the horses, he can go to the racetrack. If he wants to participate in a provincial lottery, there are many of those around. If he wants to play bingo, I suggest there are bingo games in arenas right across this country, all being conducted under proper supervision and regulation. Why should we permit this kind of lottery in the marketplace in respect of consumer items?

Surely what is important is that the consumer knows the cost, the size, the quality and the ingredients of an article. By permitting this kind of lottery in the selling of consumer products, we are allowing stores to divert the attention of the consumer away from those things to which he should be paying attention, including quality, price and size of particular products.

We are not asking the government to interfere in the marketplace. The minister kept suggesting that this kind of thing would be an interference with the market. He suggested this would be difficult to administer. What has been tabled in this bill is the establishment of wage and price control legislation, and that is a complete intrusion in the marketplace. If the proposed board can overcome the difficulties involved in regulating prices, then surely it is not beyond reason to ask the government to legislate fairness in the marketplace so that consumers will not feel the pinch of inflation and, as a result, escalate their wage demands in order to keep pace.

I have mentioned only a few of the predatory practices that are allowed, but this business of contests and games of skill is really dishonest and should not be permitted in respect of the sale of consumer items. The consumer is faced with many other problems in the marketplace. In some instances he is faced with a proliferation of the size of packages. Cereal products, for example, come in 17 different sizes, and there are seven different sizes of frozen vegetable packages. There are six different sizes of instant coffee.

The consumer is therefore confronted with the necessity of making an evaluation as to the unit cost of these items. The consumer is confronted with all this gimmickry of loss leadering, being led to believe he is getting something cheap when in fact the retailer is making up the difference in the price of other items in the store. We still have the operation of double-ticketing. Even now, as we spend time here talking about the establishment of a board to look into these increases, prices are going up; even now they are being changed.

By this amendment we have tried to eliminate some of these practices which this government is not prepared to outlaw. We have tried to direct attention to and focus the debate on this particular issue because it reaches right down to the grassroots level. These are the issues the consumer is faced with every single day when he or she goes out into that jungle to forage for food. We have tried to focus the debate on the specific items because they are concrete and represent the concerns the Food Prices Review Board was set up some two years ago to look into. These are the kind of complaints the review board has been receiving. What we have tried to do is eliminate some of this legerdemain and foliage. We have tried to clear the jungle of a lot of this underbrush so that the consumer can be aware of what he is buying—the size, the quality and the price.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 18. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Combines Investigation Act

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

Motion No. 20.

That Bill C-2, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in clause 18 by adding immediately after line 46 on page 38 the following section:

"37.2A(1) No person shall offer a product for sale to the public under conditions which enhance, or are intended to enhance, the appearance, colour, or other characteristic of the product in an artificial way or through artificial means, or which are intended in any way to deceive the public as to the true appearance or quality of the product, or both.

(2) No person engaged in the supplying of products to the public shall obstruct the view of cash register windows or, in any other way, whether deliberate or not, conceal the price actually being charged to a customer.

(3) No person shall offer a product for sale to the public that does not have the price per unit clearly indicated on the item or in some other way.

(4) No person shall offer a product for sale to the public at a price which exceeds, in terms of price per unit, the price at which smaller quantities of that same product are offered by the same person.

(5) No person shall offer a product for sale to the public at a price that does not fully reflect the intended consequences of any government subsidy programme then in effect with respect to that particular product.

(6) No person who offers a product for sale to the public shall distribute, or offer to distribute, coupons or stamps of any kind that are redeemable for cash gifts, or any other consideration.

(7) Any person who violates subsections (1) to (6) is guilty of an offence and is liable

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment not exceeding five years; or

(b) on summary conviction to a fine in the discretion of the court or imprisonment for not more than one year, or to both."

● (1610)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendment that I am putting forward on behalf of my party is with respect to false advertising. The Food Prices Review Board, which this board set up at a cost of some $2 million to the Canadian taxpayers, did certain investigative work and made certain recommendations. The amendment that I propose incorporates many of those recommendations. It seems to me it is only right and proper that in a bill which purports to do so much for the consumer, according to the minister, many of those recommendations should be incorporated. Since the bill does not contain them, my party is proposing this amendment. For example, subclause (1) provides:

No person shall offer a product for sale to the public under conditions which enhance, or are intended to enhance, the appearance, colour, or other characteristic of the product in an artificial way or through artificial means, or which are intended in any way to deceive the public as to the true appearance or quality of the product, or both.

Surely, putting that kind of amendment into consumer legislation is not interfering with the way in which corporations do business. Surely, to ask the supermarkets not to place red lights over the meat counters—a practice that is common across this country—thus enhancing the colour of the product, is only common sense. The minister said once that this bill would be the Magna Carta for consumers. Surely, to amend the legislation in this way will assure consumers, when they go to the marketplace, that they will not be confronted with such gimmickry which is designed only to deceive.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

When we teach our children that it is important to tell the truth, we should demand no less from those who are in the marketplace trying to promote their products. There is a double standard in our society when we are prepared to say to our young people "be truthful" and then we permit the practice of deception. For example, it is a common practice to inject into meat certain colouring substances to give the impression that it is tempting or fresh meat. That kind of practice can even be harmful to the human body, yet we do not legislate that kind of deceit out of the marketing practices in this country.

This is not a radical or earth-shaking amendment to any consumer legislation; it is only common sense. I have never sat in the board room of any corporation, but I listen to the consumers in my constituency, as I know many hon. members here do, and I am sensitive to their reactions. One should also be sensitive to the ways in which consumers can be bluffed. This is, in many cases, a widespread practice and the consumer suffers as a result.

The second part of the amendment which we ask the House to consider provides:

(2) No person engaged in the supplying of products to the public shall obstruct the view of cash register windows or, in any other way, whether deliberate or not, conceal the price actually being charged to a customer.

Surely, every customer has the right to know what he or she will be paying and if that is the price rung up on the cash register. There is a move toward computerizing the registering of prices. As I have mentioned before, a new system is coming into being of coloured lines being put on the product. In effect, that is going to be recorded in the computer and the price rung up on the total amount for the consumer. Surely, it is not too radical a request to ask that the price which is rung up on the cash register be clearly visible to the consumer.

The Food Prices Review Board, in their 1973 report on practices which they noted were prevalent in November of 1973, called the hiding of cash register windows "another deceptive device, long protested by consumers". They said it was——the practice adopted by many stores, of hiding the back window of cash registers with a large quantity of minor items or magazines. This means that as they unload items from shopping carts, customers cannot watch the price being charged by the cashier for individual products. The board considers that regulations should require that both the cash register windows, back as well as front, should be clearly visible at all times.

The problem of the public not being able to see the price as it is rung up, however, is nothing compared to the problem the public is going to face when it tries to compare prices under a new computer check-out system which will completely eliminate the price marking from the product, at least in any language the consumer can read. I pointed out earlier that when such a pricing system comes into effect it will make the so-called outlawing of double-ticketing irrelevant because there will be no way in which the consumer will know when there has been a price change. Surely, this amendment is not asking too much, and surely it cannot be considered too radical. As I pointed out before, it is the right of the consumer to know, and to be assured that what he has paid is in fact the price of the item he selected and put in his basket.

Another part of our amendment reads as follows:

(3) No person shall offer a product for sale to the public that does not have the price per unit clearly indicated on the item or in some other way.

We have seen several instances of this. The Consumers Association of Canada has called on the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to make it illegal to sell any merchandise not marked with a visible price tag. Surely, when the item is advertised or the price is put on the item it should be possible to make a comparison with the price per unit of the same product in another container. Why should it be that when you buy ten ounces of a particular product for $1.50, which works out at 15 cents an ounce, you find that a 15-ounce package of the same product is marked with a higher price per ounce, even though it is exactly the same product, manufactured by the same company? The only thing that is different is the size of the package.

The matter becomes even more complicated when you get all sizes of packages. For example, we get a can of fluid containing 4.75 fluid ounces, and other cans of the same fluid containing 4.50 fluid ounces. I mentioned before that there were 17 sizes of cereals, 11 sizes of crackers, 7 sizes of pasta, 8 sizes of processed meat, 7 sizes of frozen vegetables and 6 sizes of instant coffee. One can imagine the problems with which the consumer will be faced if we do not try to standardize our procedures of marketing products so that the consumer can have the benefit of the best possible price.

Surely, if we were to standardize packages and place on them the price per unit, the consumer would be able to go into that jungle and compare prices in an intelligent and knowledgeable way. One can only assume that the reasons for these various sizes and for the absence of unit pricing is to confuse the purchaser and to obfuscate the issue and, as a result, rip off the consumer. Surely, to ask that kind of protection in a consumer bill is not an unreasonable request.

Another part of the amendment we have proposed is that no person shall offer a product for sale to the public which, in terms of price, exceeds per unit the price at which smaller quantities of the same product are offered by the same person. It seems to me that I covered that matter in my previous remarks. This part of the amendment attempts to bring some kind of order into the marketplace so that the consumer can benefit from that kind of system.

Another part of our amendment proposes that no person shall offer a product to the public for sale at a price which does not actually reflect the intended consequences of any government subsidy program then in effect with respect to that particular product. In the past there have been many examples of subsidies paid—powdered milk is one—where the government, in order to keep down the price to the consumer, offered to the manufacturer a subsidy on a particular product; and lo and behold, it was found that the consumer was not receiving the benefit of the subsidy. We found the price was steadily rising in spite of the fact that the manufacturer or processor was receiving a subsidy on the product.

Surely, it is not unreasonable to ask that a bill to protect consumers should make it illegal for any processor or manufacturer not to pass on the subsidy which he receives from the people of Canada for that specific purpose. If it is not passed on, surely it ought to be an offence against the people of Canada because it is taking money under false pretences. I also point out that we have never provided any machinery whereby a consumer who has been ripped off as a result of predatory practices can be reimbursed. However, we will have an amendment later which will try to correct that situation.

We have also included in this part of our amendment the provision that no person who offers a product for sale to the public shall distribute, or offer to distribute, coupons or stamps of any kind that are redeemable for cash, gifts, or any other consideration. We return to another very prevalent practice in this country, that is, the practice of handing out coupons or Gold Bond stamps for the purchase of food or other products.

My colleague, the hon. member for Northwest Territories, pointed out earlier that nothing is given for nothing: if you are receiving something, you have to pay for it. The practice of giving Gold Bond stamps and coupons is one for which the consumer pays; the cost is added to the price of the products. The company does not take a lower profit margin. Someone has to pay for the advertising of that program; someone has to pay for the gifts or prizes which are handed out. If a company is prepared to have that kind of program, instead of using money for the printing of coupons and for gifts it should use it to reduce prices.

Canadian Tire is a prime example of this kind of thing. If one buys $60 worth of goods, Canadian Tire is prepared to give $6 in coupons. If Canadian Tire is prepared to give $6 in coupons, it ought to be prepared to reduce the purchase price by 10 per cent. But no, the purpose is to have customers come back and spend more money there. Of course, this is discriminatory in respect of people who live in rural areas and do not often go to large urban centres where they can buy regularly from Canadian Tire stores. They may go once and not return. The point is that they never have the opportunity to take advantage of the lower price which may accrue to them by turning in the coupons.

Surely, it is not unreasonable to ask companies like Canadian Tire to advertise that they will offer a discount to customers and to indicate how much that discount is and what it is discounted from. Surely, it is not unreasonable to ask them to advertise in an honest and truthful way. Let the consumer know just exactly what he is paying for: that is very important at today's prices.

We are willing and anxious to jump in and control wages, and supposedly we want to control prices. It is not unreasonable to do even better than that and to tell companies how they shall operate when selling products to consumers. I suspect that if we did not have these predatory practices, prices would not be jumping as wildly as they have been and forcing workers to demand more wages, resulting in the kind of war measures act we saw introduced today.

Another part of our proposal deals with punishment for those who disobey this amendment. I would point out that it is not just the New Democratic Party which is advocating this: the Consumers Association of Canada and its 95,000 members have passed a resolution calling for many of the things I have listed in this amendment. For example, the Consumers Association of Canada last summer passed a resolution calling on the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to make it a legal practice that pricing be clearly placed on items consumers contemplate purchasing. The consumers of Canada as represented by that association are calling upon the minister to implement many similar proposals.

All we received during the meetings of the committee, and in this House, have been promises that some of these things will come in the next phase of the bill. It is always next year or the next phase of the bill. One has only to look at the history of this bill to see that next year is indeed a hollow promise, and has been since 1971. In 1971 it came in as phase one and phase two together. The government was going to do this as well as look at monopolies, vertical integration, interlocking directorships, and so on, but the corporate sector howled so furiously that the government decided to split the bill and bring forward its more innocuous part, which is here today.

Here we are, at the end of 1975. It took four years to get this part of the bill to the House. Can you imagine how long it will take before phase two comes before the House? Who is the minister kidding when he says we will have phase two next year? Don't forget all the flack that is put up when an attempt is made to move in on monopolies in this country; yet all we keep getting is that next year, or in the next phase, the government will consider these things. How easy it is to say to the people of Canada that there will be a freeze on wages; how easy that is to implement. But according to the minister it is difficult to start moving in the marketplace and telling companies that they shall operate in a certain manner for the benefit of consumers. Surely, Mr. Minister, if we can do one we can do the other. Surely, it is not unreasonable to expect that from the minister who calls himself the minister of consumer affairs. But it must be remembered it is "consumer and corporate affairs." We often forget that part, and I wonder if he really is not the minister of corporate affairs rather than of consumer affairs.

● (1630)

These amendments are not radical by any stretch of the imagination. They are not amendments which emanate just from this party, but from every interested consumer group in the country, and as a result there is wide support for them. As the minister has admitted, he will not be embarking upon a new area: many provinces have legislated many parts of this kind of proposal, so he will be strengthening their hand.

I appeal once again to the good sense of members on all sides of the House to support this amendment.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address myself to motion No. 20, starting with a few general remarks. As a member of the finance and industry committee, I spent more of my time on the competition bill, Bill C-2, last session than on any other piece of work. In addition to many committee meetings, I and my Liberal colleagues spent many hours preparing for these discussions. That time was well spent and was a credit to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) as well as his parliamentary secretary at that time.

The competition bill is not only important; it is extraordinarily challenging. Free enterprise is one of the most important elements of our mixed economy and our democratic way of life, and competition is one of the most important elements of free enterprise. Both are normal features of Liberal philosophy. However, every man's freedom encroaches on the freedom of every other man and, ironically, the more effectively a man competes, the more he tends to eliminate competition.

Thus, we have seen great powers develop in our type of society. We have seen freedom and free enterprise eroded by itself. Competition, the lifeblood of our way of life, has eliminated competition, because not all competitors are equal and not all competitors play by the spirit of the rules. Freedom and opportunity are sacrificed to efficiency and power. Thus, we must have a balance in both freedom and competition. Ideally, the market forces would safeguard this balance and government intervention would be unnecessary. But, unfortunately, it has not always worked out this way in practice and necessary legislation has resulted. Such necessary legislation is also a normal feature of Liberal philosophy.

Market forces are delicate and complex and very difficult to replace with a set of rules. But public opinion has decreed that there is no longer enough competition in the marketplace, no longer the best combination of high quality and low prices, whether for goods or services. Public pressure has decreed that the government must get involved, be the arbiter in the marketplace, protect the consumer; and not only protect the consumer but also the small competitor, the typical Canadian businessman.

As detail after detail of such legislation is examined, as witness after witness states his case, some general problems begin to emerge with this type of legislation. Firstly, much of it has to be left in generalities because it is a physical impossibility to cover all possible case examples which might occur. Secondly, there is a grey area in the middle of each ruling where only experienced and wise judgment can begin to cope with the right balance between protecting the interests of all parties involved—the customer, the big business, the small business. Thirdly, in many aspects of the legislation the fine line is crossed from the original intention of assuring healthy competition to the related and worthy area of protecting the customer from the businessman. For clarity, these sections should perhaps have been part of a consumer protection bill rather than a competition bill. Indeed, some aspects of the legislation might even suggest the need for a businessman's protection bill.

These aspects of the bill which tend more to protect the consumer or individual than to protect competition include perhaps foreign laws and directives, conspiracy relating to professional and amateur sport, misleading advertising, materially misleading warranty or guarantee, double-ticketing, pyramid selling, referral selling, bargain prices, bait-and-switch selling, sale above the advertised price, promotional contests and price maintenance. However, it may be argued that to whatever extent these tactics are able to deceive the customer or individual, there is also a potential to gain some market advantage and thereby eliminate competition. Therefore, these clauses will probably remain too difficult to define and need to remain in the act.

Whatever the content, this act will involve many fundamental aspects of our way of life. To be workable, it will require the co-operation and good faith of all sectors of society, including any tribunal or commission which might have to be set up to carry out the provisions. Such a body can become frighteningly authoritative, even unfair, but this must not be allowed to happen. Not only must the consumer and small competitor be protected, but also the legitimate rights of the large competitor. That, too, is only fair.

If all parties were to play fair with our own system, as they should, enforcement of this act would not be necessary. However, many of us, be we businessman, labourer, consumer or whatever, are our own worst enemies. Until we all understand the true spirit of our system upon which this act is based, there will be infractions which the marketplace cannot handle. Hopefully, this legislation will be able to resolve such cases, not with the precision we would prefer but at least with some measure of justice.

In that spirit, then, Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by speaking against motion No. 20 to amend the bill. This motion, as already indicated in discussing motion No. 11, poses the problem as to whether the consumer can be better protected by criminal law prohibitions of very specific practices or well formulated general rules which can apply to new problems as they develop. The government is not convinced that the benefits to be gained from the specific enumeration of offences, such as those proposed in motion No. 20, outweigh the danger that any such list will be viewed as an exhaustive statement of prohibited practices. This would have the unfortunate result of exempting other forms of false market information from the purview of the act.

It should not be forgotten that the very general prohibition of misleading advertising in the Combines Investigation Act has produced very extensive jurisprudence which has applied a prohibition, stated in very concise form, to a large number of specific representations. This process has not, however, restricted the prospects for application of the provision to new problem situations as they arise. With regard to the specific offences proposed in motion No. 20, there would also seem to be some question about whether the punitive power of criminal law is necessarily the most appropriate means of controlling in all cases the kinds of abuses mentioned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question? The question is on motion No. 20 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on this motion stands deferred.

● (1640)

The House will now consider motion No. 21 standing in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

Motion No. 21.

That Bill C-2, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in clause 18 by striking out the proposed subsection 38(5), lines 12 to 14 on page 41, and renumbering the following subsections accordingly.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment seeks to plug another loophole in Bill C-2. The bill on one hand outlaws a particular practice and on the other hand it creates a loophole through which an elephant could crawl. For example, the particular section we seek to amend says that a suggested retail price is outlawed, but in the next breath it creates an exception when it says that the prohibitions do not apply to a price affixed or applied to a product, its package or container; such items are exempt from the provisions governing suggested retail price.

In committee, I asked the minister his purpose for including that exception. He said, "I had a good reason for it some time ago; let me find out what it was." I suggest that his only reason was the creation of this particular loophole. Surely, the way to sidestep the provision forbidding the suggested retail price is by printing the price on the container or product at the factory. In that way manufacturers or wholesalers can sidestep the provisions governing suggested retail price. We ask for the loophole to be closed, for the exception to be eliminated.

This kind of theme runs right through Bill C-2. Most of us know that this country's anti-combines legislation has a bad reputation. When I first came here I heard talk of anti-combines legislation being introduced. Most members who heard the talk said, "We have no faith in it." Not many in this House put much faith in the sort of anti-combines legislation this House has passed ever since 1889. Even today, not many of us have much faith in this kind of law. The penalties for breaking our puffery anti-combines provisions were little more than a licence fee which companies paid to continue the practice. That is true even today, as is evident from monopolies which have grown up over the years. We must eliminate that kind of situation. I suggest that the proposed amendment will close at least one loophole. I will not labour the point. I ask the House to support the amendment so that we can plug one loophole by eliminating the exception provided in the bill. As I say, our amendment seeks to eliminate that exception.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on motion No. 21 stands deferred.

The House will now consider motion No. 23, standing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved:

Motion No. 23.

That Bill C-2, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be amended in clause 19 by striking out line 21 on page 43 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"may be instituted at any time within two years after the".

Motion No. 23 (Mr. Ouellet) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): I believe there is unanimous consent for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to introduce a new motion No. 5. With unanimous consent, the House will now permit the minister to introduce this motion.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated during committee consideration of section 3.14, strong representations were received to the effect that because of special considerations relating to the nature of the soft drink bottling industry, investments made in the industry might be jeopardized by the market restriction provision of this section. After careful consideration of these representations, the government concluded that an amendment covering the basic concerns of the industry would be acceptable. As a result, section 31.4(7) was proposed and accepted by the committee.

Some hon. members now wish to see this provision widened to exempt all franchise arrangements of whatever kind. Such an extension would effectively emasculate the provisions covering exclusive dealing, market restriction and tied selling, because these practices are not commonly used outside the area of franchised distribution. I should also point out that constraints on franchised distribution under United States law similar to those which appear in this bill have not prevented the United States from leading the world in the development of franchise arrangements.

In order, however, to expedite passage of this bill, the government is prepared to extend the exemption now contained in section 31.4(7) in a way that will ensure that the franchise operation involving a multiplicity of products obtained from a competing source of supply will not be subject to section 31.4. I am, therefore, ready to accept the amendment to motion No. 5 proposed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) but with a further amendment which will clarify and qualify certain aspects of franchise operations. I am, therefore, pleased to move that all the words in motion No. 5, in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, following the word "following" be struck out and that there be substituted the following:

"(C) A company, partnership or sole proprietorship is affiliated with another company, partnership or sole proprietorship in respect of any agreement between them whereby one party grants to the other party the right to use a trade mark or trade name to identify the business of the grantee, provided

(i) such business is related to the sale or distribution, pursuant to a marketing plan or system prescribed substantially by the grantor, of a multiplicity of products obtained from competing sources of supply and a multiplicity of suppliers; and

(ii) no one product dominates such business."

and by striking out the word "and" at the end of line 29, substituting a semi-colon for the period at the end of line 34 and adding, immediately after such semi-colon, the word "and".

● (1650)

It is my view that because the exemptions relate to a large variety of inexpensive goods, the possibility of serious distortion of the competitive process as a result of this exemption is more remote than it would be if the exemption covered big ticket items. We intend, however, to maintain a careful watch over development in this field. We will be prepared to amend the proposal I am now making to the House if this proves necessary in the future and if and when circumstances require it. However, I feel that this motion by the hon. member for York-Simcoe as now amended is acceptable. It will in a large way meet various representations that were made from all corners of the House on this subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It is my understanding that there have been discussions regarding motions Nos. 6 and 24. With the permission of the House, we will proceed to the business of private members' hour.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, am I right in assuming you have asked if the House agrees with motion No. 5 as amended, or is it just the amendment that has been voted on? Has the motion as amended been voted on?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It is my understanding that the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) was withdrawn, and the minister's motion stands and was carried. Is it the pleasure of the House to call it five o'clock?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when do we deal with motion No. 24?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And motion No. 6?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know that motions Nos. 6 and 24 were reserved in an earlier disposition, there being some reservation about the procedural irregularity of the two motions. As it is so close to five o'clock, perhaps hon. members would prefer to begin their procedural argument at eight o'clock rather than now. There is a private member waiting to begin a private members' matter at five o'clock, which is only three or four minutes away. The argument, I am sure, would scarcely begin before that time. It was for that reason I suggested we call it five o'clock, begin private members' hour and have the discussion on motions Nos. 6 and 24 at eight o'clock. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions for the production of papers. Is there agreement that motion No. 30 standing in the name of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) shall take precedence and be considered at this hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

COPIES OF AREA PROGRAM SUMMARIES FOR 1972-75

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

That an order of the House do issue for copies of the Area Program Summaries for the years 1972-73, 1973-74 and 1974-75, covering such areas as Commonwealth Africa, South America, Francophone Africa, and any other area breakdowns for which Area Programs have been prepared.

[Translation]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the motion in my name, I would have liked to congratulate the new Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss Bégin), but unfortunately I do not see her at this moment. In any case, I congratulate her and I also want to share her satisfaction with her new and well deserved appointment. I also wish to convey to her my best wishes in her new duties. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I cannot assure her of my full cooperation until she gives the government's answer to the request for production of certain papers.

[English]

When this motion for the production of papers was presented in the House on March 26 of this year, the then Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs requested that it be withdrawn on the ground that release of some or parts of these documents "might be detrimental to the future conduct of Canadian foreign relations". To which I say "rubbish."

I am asking for these programs for 1972-73, 1973-74 and 1974-75. I could perhaps understand the reply of the then parliamentary secretary if in asking for 1975-76 programs I was seeking the release of documents on projects now under negotiation. If that were the case, their release might be detrimental to the future conduct of our relations with that particular country or with a neighbouring country. That I can understand. However, I am not asking yet for current, newly shaping-up programs. I am merely asking for program summaries of projects that are already in the works, projects that are on stream. That is all I ask. Incidentally, I know that such summaries exist. I can hardly imagine how a desk officer in CIDA could operate if they did not exist. Therefore, they are available and I see no reason why they should not be made available to members of parliament.

I still say "rubbish" to the suggestion that the release to parliament of this material might prejudice our relations with the country in question, unless Canada is up to something just a little shady in that country. I have no reason to think we are, and I hope we are not. We certainly were not in any of the countries of which I have knowledge.

My main reason for wanting these documents to be made available to parliament is to enable us, as parliamentarians, to judge the nature and extent, in detail, of our overseas assistance programs. I will return to this aspect of my case in due course.

There is, however, a second reason for wanting these documents, these country by country project summaries, a reason that has been strengthened by developments since I originally put forward my motion. Last May, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence was able to wring from the government an agreement to allow the committee to examine the changing relations between the developed and the developing world in light of the changed world economic circumstances following the sudden and dramatic increases in oil costs to which we were all subject.

The question I have to ask myself, in these circumstances, is how we are going to examine the changing relations unless we know in some considerable detail what are our existing and present relationships. How can we know what we are changing to until we know what we are doing now and what we are changing from? One way to find out, I submit, would be to have these documents made available to parliamentarians, who could examine them carefully and then decide what we are changing from and what we want to change to. So I say these documents could be released, should be released and, indeed, ought to be released.

● (1700)

Having served for a number of years in the Department of External Affairs, I am aware how frequently, and at times how thoughtlessly, documents can be classified. I was probably guilty myself of overclassifying documents. But in my own defence I submit that I did make an honest effort to get documents declassified more regularly. I dreamed up all sorts of schemes to enable this to be done. But I was invariably shot down. Would it not be ironic in the extreme if, now, some of the documents for which I am asking are those which I myself classified at an earlier period? Ironic or not, I shall face that risk. The government has indulged in the overclassification of documents for long enough, and it refuses—as in the case of a report on personnel in CIDA which we sought to obtain—to declassify anything which might prove politically embarrassing.

I know the criteria for classifying documents; I had a hand in devising them. I respect the need to preserve individuals from hurt or to avoid public disclosure of material which could damage a person's chances of pursuing his career. But the principal criterion for classification is, and ought to be, national security at various levels, be it "restricted", "confidential", "secret" or "top secret". It should not be party political security, but national security. That is what we are talking about. Documents are being withheld because they could prove embarrassing to the party, not because they could be embarrassing to the nation.

So I contend that these documents ought to be released unless there is a real, down to earth risk to national security involved; for instance—and I use this only as an example—disclosing the improper provision of nuclear reactors to traditional antagonists. I sincerely hope this is not the case. Therefore, I say that failure to release these documents to which we are entitled leaves us with two conclusions. The first is that there is some skullduggery going on which the government is anxious to hide. The other, and I find it equally deplorable, is that the government is so disdainful of this House as to feel it unnecessary to grant its members the documentation to which it is traditionally entitled. In other words, it is declining to entrust to parliamentarians material concerning programs for which the Canadian people will this year be paying an amount in the order of three-quarters of a billion dollars in program development, and goodness knows how much more in export credits.

These conclusions are inescapable unless the papers are released. They were refused on an earlier occasion. I do not know who will be taking part in this debate and will refuse them for the second time this afternoon. But if they are refused, we shall be bound to reach those two conclusions. If we were to be guided by the departmental estimates and the figures contained therein, we would be led to believe that Canada's external aid program amounted, in 1973-74, to over $525 million, to almost $590 million in 1974-75, and to just short of $735 million in 1975-76. In other words, the program has grown from half a billion dollars to almost three-quarters of a billion dollars in those three years.

[Translation]

I am very happy to see the new parliamentary secretary here with us, and I congratulate her on her new appointment.

[English]

I base those round figures on the estimates only; I have not delved into the Export Development Corporation's figures to discover how much additional overseas assistance is being administered through that organization in the form of credit. As I say, the amount involved has grown from half a billion dollars to three-quarters of a billion in three years—respectable figures. I want the size to register, not because I want to question it but because I wish to discuss the ability we as parliamentarians have, or are allowed to have, to examine the way in which such vast sums are being spent.

As I went over the proceedings of the committee at which these matters were under consideration, I found we managed to work in eight meetings on CIDA. These meetings lasted about an hour and a half, giving a total of about 12 hours in which to examine the ways in which we are spending the vast sum I have just mentioned. If we go more deeply into the time at our disposal in the committee, we find that by and large half of the time allocated to the examination of the estimates was consumed by ministers or officials reading lengthy statements, statements which could easily have been given to members of the committee the night before: I find the excuses given for not doing so completely unacceptable. They could have been handed to us, we could have examined them and we could have begun our questioning immediately we arrived at the committee meeting.

About 20 of us, sometimes more, usually gathered at committee meetings to question the minister and his officials. We had, in all, about 360 minutes, roughly six hours, in which to discuss the manner in which the government is spending three-quarters of a billion dollars. Given that the replies are usually very lengthy, is it any wonder that we feel we have really not managed to get very far with our inquiries? We were allowed 360 minutes, at the most, for the entire estimates, and since each member is allowed only ten minutes in which to develop his line of questioning, how far is he likely to get? It is a major exercise in frustration to examine the estimates of any department, but when the amount involved is as high as this and the subject matter is of such importance, I am sure members on all sides of the House would like more time and more information to be made available to them.

Then, again, once the estimates have been examined, attempts to go into detail of CIDA's overseas activities are frustrated by the minister refusing to permit a reference to the committee of CIDA's annual report, for example. This occurred, to my knowledge based on my own requests, on three occasions this session, first on November 27, then on January 22 and finally on January 31. Each time I asked for a reference to the committee of reports of one kind or another. Each time I was put off and this reference never occurred. The entire exercise, from this disadvantage point, looks very much like a closed shop. Parliament has no right, according to the minister, to look into these matters. That is the government's attitude and it is an attitude I can only deplore.

● (1710)

When, on top of this, ministers take an almost sadistic pleasure in commenting witheringly that the opposition is incapable of formulating questions of substance about CIDA, as I have heard them say in their usual arrogant way, I begin to lose my temper and my sense of proportion. This is another reason behind my request, my insistence that the government produce, as a matter of course, country and area programs, showing country by country and area by area the way in which Canada's half-billion or three-quarter billion dollars are being spent. That is what lies behind my motion for the production of these papers: it is as simple as that.

I believe that parliament and, through parliament, the Canadian people, have a right to know project by project how their aid dollars are being spent. We have had enough criticism, particularly from those in need in these difficult days, about Canada's aid program. They say, "Why do you lend money at no interest rate abroad, yet we have to pay 12 per cent at home?" These criticisms do come up. How can that be explained unless we have this material? We are given a lot of pap by ministers about what good international citizens we are and how we are working steadily toward the United Nations goal, which seems ever elusive, of 0.7 per cent of our GNP as our aid figure. At the present time, if I am not mistaken, we have reached just over 0.5 per cent in working toward that goal. This is fine, grand, wonderful and makes everyone feel happy. But what are we spending the money on? We do not know—and we should know. The Canadian people deserve to know; the Canadian people are entitled to know.

On April 29 of this year I tabled a series of questions in committee. I knew, by name, some of these projects and therefore I was able to be specific. I will own that the answers were given promptly to those specific questions. But what about members who have not had the opportunities that I have had to know specific projects as they were begun or as they were working their way through the system? Who had ever heard of the Nam Ngum project, for example? It is unfair; members of parliament should have this information as a matter of course.

I therefore ask for the production of these country programs covering the 1972-73, 1973-74, and 1974-75 fiscal years. I think we are entitled to more than just CIDA's programs. For example, I should like to know in what countries CIDA is contributing to CUSO programs, and how far it is assisting other NGOs in particular countries. Further, I want to know whether export credits have been extended to any particular country, and I want the figures. How many students have been sent to Canada from these individual countries? That is not too difficult a matter to bring forward.

In the minutes of proceedings of our Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for April 10, there is a selected list of projects appended as appendix B. I have also seen, bound in convenient form, area or country programs relating to the 200 projects. We are offered a selection of programs. This was in June of 1974. I have also seen country by country programs listed in digest form. These are the documents that need to be produced. But we want all of them, not selections. I believe we are entitled to that, not just to add paper to the piles already covering our desks, and in some cases our floors, frequently finding its way into our waste-baskets. In this case it will not be put in our waste-baskets. We should know how many Canadians are involved on the ground, how much is allotted to each program, how the money is being spent, how much is being spent, and how a project stands on the critical path to completion. These facts are our due.

I placed a question on the order paper earlier this year which related to the number of universities granted funds to develop overseas aid projects, scientific teaching, and so on. I was told that CIDA's accounting system is not geared to extract that information except through a file by file search. I was asked whether, in consequence, I would withdraw my request. I probably will, particularly if I get the papers I am asking for in this debate, because if the documents I am asking for are properly and fully prepared, that matter will be revealed in due course.

I have asked questions in committee about the fundamental need in developing countries for developing proper water supplies and transmission systems for water, knowing how fundamental water is to the very notion of development. Anyone who has been in a developing country knows that it is impossible to calculate the number of man, woman and child-hours absorbed in the simple task of carrying water from a spring to the home for cooking and washing purposes. I raised the question and I was told that I should look at the tense of the verb—they "are" now going to be doing it; in the past they were not doing it so much. But why should that have been left to one side by CIDA and/or its predecessors for 15 years until it has now been taken on in this form? I encouraged the minister, when making a visit to Africa, to examine this particular aspect during his trip.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, the motion of my hon. colleague from Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) is quite important since it provides us once again with the opportunity to discuss the program of help to development, and to study the documents prepared by various civil servants from the departments which deal with that matter and I think that in the years and in the months to come it will be extremely important that we all give very serious consideration to that question of help to development.

Having had the pleasure and pride of belonging to the Canadian diplomacy, I think a lot of what my hon. colleague said was true when he mentioned the over-classification in the Department of External Affairs with respect to international policy. However, I think my hon. colleague is misled when he says that political parties or for that matter the political party in power hide behind that kind of classification. Madam Speaker, I cannot agree with that statement since unfortunately that policy may be one of the drawbacks of that career. People in the diplomatic service have to classify a lot of documents since you never know what might happen when a document which may look harmless to an ordinary civil servant is not reviewed, and since it may concern various departments, it might sometimes be prejudicial to declassify that document.

At the outset of his statement the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich also said that he resented the fact that those documents were not released because he was asking for documents relating to 1972-73 and the years before 1975-76. Here again I have to disagree with my hon. colleague, since when it comes to developing programs respecting countries, that programming cannot be effected on a mere 12-month basis. Quite obviously we have to take previous data into account, historical and economic data as well as information dealing with bilateral relationships, and we also have to take into consideration a five or ten-year projection, and more specifically with respect to foreign help, some programs extend over several years and others which, even if they are in effect for one year only, may have an impact over a number of years. I therefore believe that certain documents, even going back to 1972, may still be of a confidential nature.

I would now like to address myself more specifically to the motion by the hon. member requesting the tabling of area programs. After reading the motion and learning I would have to speak on the matter, I inquired with CIDA officials as to what exactly CIDA considers an area program, even though I had an inkling on what was being done in that field of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The answer I received from CIDA officials is that the so-called area program documents are a part of a whole, and I do not think this is a novel thing to the hon. member.

So these area programs are a part of an overall scheme. Every year they have to go through the same process. There are consultations in the receiving country. Governments for instance are consulted, in countries where aid is to be extended. Those governments are asked to state their priorities, their most pressing needs. Reports are sent to Ottawa by our embassies, by officials in CIDA, External Affairs, Trade and Commerce, National Defence or any other body with a foreign representation or contacts in receiving countries. We act on the basis of these reports that we study, along with certain reports from international agencies such as the World Bank, which are sometimes provided on a confidential basis. With all these documents, we are able to produce one program per country. But our troubles are not over when we get to that stage. The officer who works for CIDA on Bank Street receives some information and develops for a given year a certain program for a given country.

Officers at External Affairs, Industry and Commerce and other departments, including National Defence, do exactly the same job. Then, everything that has been done on this subject in each department is submitted to an extremely strict review because, of course, even though the officer concerned may be very knowledgeable about the particular country, he may not have all the data required to make a valid decision and can sometimes become over-enthusiastic if he favours the country involved, and so on.

This first draft of a program for a given country is then submitted to a program review. I shall not take the trouble to quote all the data related to this review, since my hon. colleague can find them in the paper provided by CIDA in April 1975. My hon. colleague will find that this first draft is submitted to the general review of the highest CIDA officers and that it is then examined by the chairman's office. Afterwards, a study of each program is conducted by an interdepartmental committee and the results of all these reviews are submitted to another interdepartmental committee which includes all departments with international involvements before being referred to the cabinet.

Madam Speaker, the papers requested by my hon. colleague are part of a whole; they are but a link in a chain. I believe that it would not necessarily help us to develop our foreign policy to produce such papers because we can find, in a specific paper, which has not been summarized and studied by the various people involved, things that could be detrimental, I think, and as my hon. colleague the former parliamentary secretary suggested, that could be detrimental to the carrying out of our foreign policy. I am firmly convinced of that.

I also consider that when my hon. colleague says that it is frustrating to work on the Committee on External Affairs and National Defense and to have to consider under pressure in a few hours estimates exceeding $700 million that it is undoubtedly frustrating for committee members to say that they must be passed in a hurry when sometimes one does not quite know what one is talking about.

However, I think it is not the purpose of the motion nor my purpose here to pass judgment on the system used in the parliamentary committee. My colleague could introduce another motion and we could discuss that subject at another time.

On the other hand, the question raised is of very great importance because we do not always have all the necessary tools to carry out our work conscientiously. I am not suggesting that the tool requested by my hon. colleague is the good one. However, I think we should all together here in this Parliament consider the possibility, and let us take the case we are concerned with at the moment, namely the question of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, so the political parties will have either a delegate or members of the Committee on External Affairs will be invited as observers to certain inter-departmental meetings where the main orientations of our aid policy are decided. I think that would allow us to pass a much more consistent and much more enlightened judgment on the policies put forward by the government.

I would finally like to point out that the problem raised, as I mentioned earlier, the problem of development assistance is a basic one, especially after the seventh special session of the General Assembly of the United Nations which was held in New York in September. The new economic order has been defined in a very general way.

I think that we must all, as parliamentarians, during this year endeavour to study more specifically the implications of the new international economic order and tackle the task which has been delineated not necessarily for us alone parliamentarians but also for the Canadian people. This task was defined by the president of the Canadian International Development Agency who, at the Vienna Institute, spoke on development and co-operation and concluded his speech as follows:

> The establishment of a new social order in which the men of all nations, rich and poor, will shape their common fate as a challenge to the collective conscience of mankind.
> From a moral point of view it is no doubt a matter of duty, but it is also a possibility which can become reality.

I hope, Madam Speaker, that we will all endeavour as parliamentarians to make this possibility come true.

[English]

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Madam Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) for trying to defend the indefensible, and doing so quite articulately and spiritedly. There is an old saying among lawyers that when you have a tough case you pound the books, and when you have an impossible case you pound the desk. I heard a lot of desk-pounding from the other side of the House.

● (1730)

I would also like to congratulate the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) for bringing forward this motion. Needless to say, our party supports him 100 per cent in his attempts to bring forward this necessary information to make parliament work because, quite simply, that is what he is asking. This is almost entirely a privilege motion asking those of us who have to work in this area to be given a chance to do the job.

This is not the first time the opposition has requested a fairer share of information about the operations of CIDA. Last February my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), spoke in support of a motion moved by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) which deplored the secrecy that surrounds CIDA. I am sorry to see today that nothing has changed in the government's attitude. The principle at stake, which is the openness of government operations in general and CIDA in particular, is most important. From time immemorial governments have desperately tried to protect themselves from the discovery and criticism of their blunders by throwing a cloak of official secrecy over as wide an area as possible.

The right of parliament and the public to information on foreign aid is absolutely vital and tremendously important if the foreign aid program is to have any continuing public support. At present it is losing support among the public, I am sorry to see, and one of the reasons for that is this continuing government secrecy about its own programs.

CIDA has been the subject of scandal and rumour recently. A number of very expensive programs have been found seriously wanting. The press has reported great sums spent on railways that do not exist and sewer systems that do not work. Beyond that there have been reports of internal dissension, staff turnovers, and serious criticisms by an independent professional body, Price Waterhouse. It was because of these rumours that the opposition called for further disclosures last February. Our party regretted the government's stubborn refusal to provide the necessary information. We will regret it again if the government refuses the reasonable requests of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

The necessity of disclosure has more important dimensions than those of the occasional blunder. It is important now for the country to begin to debate the spirit and purpose of foreign aid as it has developed since the war. But we cannot begin to do that without the necessary information. I said earlier that the government has not changed. Ministers continue to be the same stubborn, arrogant and secretive bunch. But our appreciation of foreign aid itself is changing.

There is a body of literature emerging now which puts the purpose and design of present aid programs into serious doubt and calls out for a very serious and fundamental review. Such a review cannot begin unless we are first able to understand the agency, its tasks and its approach, not only in general but in detail. We should really be calling into question the purpose and design of the foreign aid programs of the entire western industrialized world. What seems more obvious to observers every day is that, whatever may be the intention of these programs as they are now designed, far from helping third world countries to develop to a stage of independence consistent with their national potential, they prevent the third world from developing self-reliant socio-economic societies.

Most of Canadian aid, about 70 per cent, is channelled through CIDA's bilateral division. Aid in this division ranges from outright grants to loans at slightly less than the going rate. Increasingly this aid takes the form of loans which must be repaid, and increasingly such loans are being used by client countries, with the encouragement of the developing countries, to balance their budgets, in individual cases, a budget which then continues to increase in deficit and tie the developing country increasingly to the aid country.

The value in real purchasing power in terms of manufactured goods of the exports of developing countries has plummeted in the past 20 years until, with respect to commodities like sugar, cotton, coffee, jute and tea, their purchasing value has lost ground drastically. Quite obviously then, increases in the purchases of manufactured goods from developed countries distort local economies drastically, causing physical disaster and social disorder.

Borrowing from the World Bank in order to finance development is conditional upon acceptance of the advice of the IMF, advice which is founded on economic liberalism, the widest possible play for free market forces, and the narrowest play for government intervention which may protect the client country from imports and encourage indigenous substitutes for the products of the western industrialized world.

Acceptance of IMF guidelines encourages a dependence on imports in the client country, but with the continued decrease in the real purchasing power of their exports developing countries go more and more into the hole. Increasingly foreign aid is used and encouraged as a balancer to make up the difference in the cost of imports and the price received for exports. Therefore foreign aid is not fostering self-reliant development but just the opposite; it encourages increased dependence by cushioning its immediate effects on the local economy.

The hon. member for Charlevoix referred to the new economic order. I think it is probably the most encouraging thing to happen in terms of international aid in a very long time. I am disappointed from time to time, when I attend international conferences, to listen to the rhetoric of the third world representatives who blame so many of their problems on an imperialist system. In my view, some of that information may be right, but they do no service whatsoever to their own cause in continuing to belabour that argument because the developing world is ready to help and enter into serious negotiation in terms of the new economic order. I suggest that the third world representatives whom I meet at these conferences tend to be their own worst enemies. If they would forget about the shibboleths of the past and get on to the future in terms of the renegotiation of prices of world products, we would make significant gains in terms of helping third world countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: I want to end by agreeing with my colleague, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, in what he had to say about the operations of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. Those of us who have to struggle on that committee with almost no time to deal with meaningful questions, and to deal with a government which may refuse this motion—I hope it will accept it—cannot do a job with the kind of limited facilities that are available to that committee.

Area Program Summaries

I hope that the government will give serious consideration to expanding the role of the committee, to expanding its terms of reference, to providing us with wider powers in terms of subpoenaing witnesses, and let parliament itself take a serious and deep look at the subject of foreign aid, because I think that in that committee there is substantial agreement among all members, no matter of what political persuasion they may be, that they want to do a better job in terms of foreign aid. I think this is not the time for the government to be partisan on the subject. Good will in that committee can go a long way in helping our government do a good job abroad.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I fully support the motion presented by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). It is long overdue. We certainly need complete disclosure of all CIDA documents.

There has been a new CIDA committee established to deal with CIDA and its programs, but unless we have all the documentation and all the evidence in regard to how CIDA operates, there is no way in which we could do a complete job. The terms of reference establishing this committee are a farce. They are nothing else but a motherhood motion, and just another cover up by the government which is most reluctant to allow a complete and thorough investigation into the operations of CIDA. I have presented some evidence to the Auditor General who is looking into some of the matters for me. If we are going to be blocked as we were in the last committee meetings, I would call on the Auditor General to do more investigations into CIDA operations.

● (1740)

I should like to refer to an article which was written a number of months ago in regard to CIDA. The headline reads "'Spend, spend' (it's your tax money) How CIDA Squanders Cash on Bungled Overseas Aid":

The Canadian International Development Agency is rushing to spend $117 million within the next few weeks in an effort to impress treasury board officials.

Lagging disbursements in the bilateral branch of CIDA are causing concern because they shortfall the treasury board's $497.95 million limit set for 1974-75 spending.

CIDA apparently feels it must spend the leftover $117 million in order to strengthen its bargaining position when the treasury considers the agency's 1975-76 cash allocation.

This effort tends to bear out one of the main contentions of CIDA dissidents—that the chief emphasis in the agency is placed on producing figures to support an impression that Canada is in the vanguard of nations providing development assistance.

The purpose is to meet the target of the World Bank's commission on international development once headed by the late prime minister Pearson.

The target was that, by 1975, official aid should reach 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of donor countries.

In fact, the Canadian government has never set a specific date for achieving this objective. It remains a CIDA preoccupation without official sanction.

Commenting on the CIDA operation, Madam Speaker, the article says:

"Your career in CIDA depends on how you spend", a former agency official said. "You are constantly being hammered over the head and told 'Spend, spend'."

[Mr. Leggatt.]

That is enough reason right there for our looking at all the documents in dealing with the operations of CIDA. That is the least we can do for Canadian taxpayers. We should not suppress these kinds of goings-on in CIDA.

The article continues:

"It's not how well you spend your money, but quantitatively. Can you spend the budget allocated to you? That's what counts."

A second official said: "The whole criterai here is spend. Anyone who says it isn't doesn't know the facts."

Especially, there is CIDA's president, Paul Gerin-Lajoie, a deputy minister unlike the others, who has his own firm ideas about running CIDA.

When Gerin-Lajoie refused last May to let the Commons external affairs committee see a management consultant's report on CIDA's high personnel turnover, he was assured that the MPs would henceforward take a much greater interest in the aid agency's affairs than in the past.

The Conservative external affairs critic, Claude Wagner, said the refusal amounted to contempt of the House.

It is amazing how little information we have been able to obtain from Mr. Gerin-Lajoie in the committee meetings. As one newsman stated, the opposition did not even lay a glove on him. That is a disgrace. We cannot lay a glove on him because we cannot obtain the information. It is an exercise in futility sitting in those committee meetings. We had to hammer away at the government in the committee and raise motion after motion, and finally it condescended to allow us to establish this new CIDA committee, but with our hands tied due to very weak terms of reference.

I should like to give further comments on why there has to be complete disclosure of all these documents from an article which points out the following:

CIDA's critics do not argue with the use of even more money to send wheat to drought-stricken areas, to vaccinate cattle, to develop agriculture and commercial fishing, to build badly needed bridges, power dams and irrigation systems.

But many of CIDA's country-to-country projects have been arousing interest.

The article goes on to give as an example:

A machine which weighs grain and automatically fills and sews up bags, was delivered to Calcutta, India, about a year ago at a cost of $300,000.

Fortunately, it has not been installed for use since labour-saving devices have sometimes provoked riots in Calcutta, a city with massive unemployment.

What happened to this $300,000 machine? Has it been brought back to Canada, or is it sitting there rotting? We are entitled to have this information.

The article goes on:

But CIDA recently had tenders out for a second and more advanced machine of the same kind, estimated to cost $500,000.

So there has been $800,000 put out on two machines, and we are not even sure if they are operating.

The article continues:

In Senegal, where labour is similarly cheap and plentiful, the polytechnical school at Thies is equipped with automatic dishwashers, according to CIDA employees. Also a ham slicer, a curiosity in this Moslem land where dietary rules forbid the eating of the flesh of swine.

This would certainly indicate that there is great mismanagement in the CIDA operation. I should like to point out that the only way we were able to obtain any sound information at our last committee meetings was for CIDA project officers to telephone from countries like Kenya and other places to give us information, and to send us documented information on the mismanagement of CIDA's projects. Therefore I realize why the government does not want to reveal any of its documents.

The article continues:

Schools have been built in several hot countries along Canadian lines with few windows but plenty of electric lights.

"You know what happens?" said a CIDA man. "The hydro in these countries is a terrible price, so what happens is that the local government can't afford to use the building and it's wasted."

I should also like to read some other comments from CIDA staff members, such as the following:

"Ours is a terribly complicated agency. It requires people who know the whole range of subject matter in very sophisticated management."

That is exactly what we are trying to find out. If we have all the proper documentation, we can do a job in committee in regard to the CIDA operation and foreign aid. The staff member continued:

"Not only know it, but can implement it. But I can't see in our agency one single individual with that capacity. We have had them, but they have quit.

They have been hired only a very short time when they shrug their shoulders and say, 'Nobody wants to use any expertise. They all know better than I. I have been given no authority to implement things. I can't get decisions. To hell with you. I'll go somewhere else.' "

We have had reports from CIDA project officers that they are left stranded in countries; their telegrams are not answered; their letters are not answered. They do not know what to do or in which direction to go. This indicates more mismanagement within CIDA, and explains why we must have a complete examination of all these documents.

I quote again from staff comments:

"There are some projects where decisions have been made by a project officer who hadn't the slightest idea what he was doing when he put his name to a document which amended the project.

It's going to cost us our shirts and it's going to cost the countries involved their shirts, but they can't afford it like we can. There are errors based on sheer stupidity which are costing two, three, four million dollars.

There is a complete and appalling lack of leadership... I see a complete failure in the agency to develop younger people. God, some of these younger people have got an idealism.

We have grown up in an atmosphere of absolute amateurism. The only thing that has enabled the program to be as valuable as it is at the moment is the relatively small handful of people who by sheer work have got things done, if not as well as they should like.

I think the situation is getting worse, rather than better. The pity of the whole issue is that the senior levels of management don't themselves understand what is wrong."

It is a fair conjecture that all of these criticisms have not reached Gérin-Lajoie. His personal staff have a reputation for shielding him from such irritations.

Paul Gérin-Lajoie has been described as a man who loves humanity but dislikes people, according to a former top CIDA aide who once had regular contact with the... agency president.

It is said that many of the present 930 CIDA employees don't even know what their boss looks like in the flesh because he restricts internal office contact to the few.

I think it would be an excellent suggestion if some members of this new CIDA committee visited some of these CIDA projects to have a first hand look at what is going on, and to speak to these project officers.

I continue quoting:

Unlike all other deputies, Gérin-Lajoie does not make his home in Ottawa, preferring to commute to Montreal for weekends he is not travelling around the world.

The criticisms go on about the operation and its management, and we are hardly any the wiser. Had it not been for these project officers giving us this information in the last few months, we would know very little about the whole CIDA operation. I find it very strange that the government members want to conceal these documents. I think the Canadian people are entitled to full disclosure, and in order for this committee to work properly all these documents should be presented to the members for study.

● (1750)

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I should like to refer to my colleague who just talked, and I say it was rubbish what he said about Mr. Gerin-Lajoie—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) on a point of order.

Mr. McKenzie: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I was quoting project officers' statements from a news report, and this news report has never been repudiated. If those statements were rubbish, the government or CIDA should have answered the news report.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Madam Speaker, the matter under consideration today has, in substance, made a lot of ink and saliva run on the floor of this House as well as in the newsrooms of the media. I said, in substance, because I feel there is no doubt about the motives of the mover of this motion who is seeking, through his demand to table the Area Program Summaries of CIDA, to disclose the contents of government documents, a subject that is recurring periodically during the sittings of the House.

In my opinion, today's motion is nothing more than a pretext and the procedure is not new. Besides, we have noticed in that last few months a notable outbreak of this procedural device to raise periodically the well closed lid.

Periodically is even a mild expression, since every occasion is a good one, even the most futile subjects, to question the cogency of the "confidentiality" of some government documents.

Yet the rules of the game are clear and to make them even more obvious, so as to leave no room for doubt about the general principle of confidentiality, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) in a speech on March 15, 1973, explained some guidelines and tabled the 16 recommendations the government can sometimes invoke to deny the production of confidential papers and reports of consultative committees. The statement followed a speech by one of our procedure experts in the House, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who then gave the reasons why he thought the confidentiality principle should be changed so that every document would be considered public unless the government justified its wish to have the document considered confidential.

Area Program Summaries

Then rose in the House another procedure specialist, the then President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), who stated the position of the government on this subject. He said, and I quote:

My approach and the approach of the government is exactly the approach of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Our objective is to make as much information available as possible. We believe that Members of Parliament require factual information about the operations of the government in order that they may carry out their parliamentary duties. That statement is included in the general principle. We are also aware that the desire to make available as much information as possible must be balanced against effective public administration, protection of the security of the state and rights to privacy. It is always a delicate matter of judgment to balance the desire to make information available with the effective administration of the government, security of the state and other considerations.

Mr. MacEachen then went on to explain the reason for this general principle—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I got the impression, while listening to the hon. member who now has the floor, that he is questioning my motives to pursue this question. I protest energetically against this insinuation regarding my motives which are as parliamentary as can be. We are entitled, Madam Speaker, to have a look at documents which report on the activities of CIDA abroad.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member is certainly aware that the question of privilege can only be brought up when the rights of the hon. member are affected. Now, I doubt very much that the rights of the hon. member are limited. It is rather a question of debate.

Mr. Lachance: In spite of everything, I did not want to antagonize the hon. member across the way; I wished to reassure him. I have no intention of discussing his personal motives. I am merely trying to explain the position of the government, which has been the same for many a year. I shall therefore pursue my argument.

As I was saying, the principle has a historical background in that Mr. Disraeli, the renowned British Prime Minister, first explained it. In addition, many authors have explained it in writing. Others took the opposite tack, but that is democracy.

Having said this, I see I have very little time left. Let us say simply that my friend and colleague from Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) dealt with it much more ably than I did, saying that the interim reports requested have precisely this advisory and non mandatory character and on this sole basis the government seems justified in firmly dismissing the demands of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I would be remiss in failing to point out that the whole problem of the minister's responsibility towards CIDA and the power of evocation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been discussed at length and I feel the matter was settled once and for all. The bitter controversy which arose from that debate became the stock argument of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and of his party.

In spite of the claims of some members, particularly in the light of the remarks made by my colleague, the hon. member for Charlevoix, I think that this House has enough information to pass judgment on the performance of CIDA, without prejudice to the necessity of throwing some light on the matter and of requiring the responsible minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), to report to the House on the activities of CIDA.

[English]

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, POWERS OF INVESTIGATORS, OFFENCES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House having considered all motions except Nos. 6 and 24, it appears appropriate now to give those two motions consideration. It was agreed that those two motions would be deferred until all other motions had been considered. That point having been reached, presumably it would be more orderly to deal first with motion No. 6, and then with No. 24. However, I am in the hands of the House.

An hon. Member: Take motion No. 6 first.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: First we will consider motion No. 6. I had previously expressed my reservations about motion No. 6, but the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) who moved the motion has not appeared in the House this evening.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I speak to that matter? The reason for this amendment was the sense of frustration felt by all members of the committee, myself included, who felt that, in some ways, they had been dealt with cavalierly by the minister on this important point. We raised some serious constitutional questions about the power of parliament to assign to the Federal Court a criminal jurisdiction. Section 46 of the act seeks to do this. I do not have the details before me, but attention to a very serious breach was drawn by an eminent constitutional authority, on behalf of the Canadian Bar Association, I believe.

My colleague from York-Simcoe and I wanted to question the experts or law officers who advised the minister. All we now have is the minister's own assertion that he is satisfied with the advice of his officers. That is not good enough, and that particular point concerns me.

My colleague from York-Simcoe has said with regard to this important question of constitutionality that parliament cannot grant a criminal jurisdiction to the Federal Court, and that is what the act attempts to do. He said that the matter should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for a ruling before these provisions come into force. That is the purport of the amendment.

Someone can say, "But this is novel!" So what? There is always a first time. After all, Your Honour's predecessor on a couple of matters in which, I suggest, the procedural arguments were in my favour but in which he did not feel they were, said, "I am going to treat the matter as a first time and rule in such and such a way." I did not particularly care for his rulings because they went against the weight of the authority of precedents set elsewhere, not in this House. But he said that this was a first effort, as it were, in this House, and Mr. Speaker ruled as he saw fit. That was quite within his power.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is within your power to rule that such an amendment as this is acceptable. That is all Your Honour has to decide. Your Honour cannot rule on the legality, or on whether parliament can refer a matter or put a bill in suspension because part of it involves a constitutional question with regard to which there is grave doubt.

I say that it is the duty of the opposition, indeed of all members of this House, to question propositions in a statute which may be unconstitutional. Those of us who are lawyers would be remiss in our duty if we casually let such propositions go unchallenged. Our colleagues in the profession, who have the right to do so, could readily point the finger at each and every one of us and ask "Where were you when this matter was under examination? What opinion did you have? Is there or is there not constitutional authority?" If the answer were to be "Well, that did not bother us", then each and every one who said so would be derelict in his duty. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am going to put it quite plainly on that basis.

● (2010)

My colleague is questioning the constitutionality. Your Honour cannot rule on the constitutionality, but can accept a motion which deals with the question of constitutionality. If the procedure is put forward to the Supreme Court of Canada, which is the authority to rule on constitutional points, so be it. I submit that even if the argument is that this is the first time this has happened, my colleague has the right to put forward the motion, and it is not out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) raises one of the most interesting questions for constitutionalists and I cannot help answering the invitation put to me by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and give my advice as a lawyer on the constitutionality of the bill and on the implications the amendment would have on Canadian legislation if it were adopted as moved by the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

But before dealing with the contents of the amendment itself, I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion this amendment is inadmissible at this stage of the discussion. As a matter of fact, the amendment refers to one of the conditions for the coming into force of the bill in its present form, and these conditions are clearly defined in clause 31 of the bill. Now, the amendment as moved by the hon. member for York-Simcoe refers rather to clause 12 of the bill.

Consequently, if one refers to authors of doctrines, to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Citation 406, it is clearly established that an amendment which is not directly linked to the conditions governing the coming into force of a bill as stated in the bill is out of order. This opinion is brought forward again by May, on page 510, who says that an amendment must be declared out of order if it is not properly related to the clauses it is meant to amend. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the amendment should be declared out of order.

However, in the wording of the amendment there is an extremely important principle which is the right to refer to the Supreme Court. This right goes back very far in history. In the Middle Ages, when parliaments were meeting, they did not enjoy the privilege of drafting legislation.

They would petition the sovereign for their rights—he would consult judges and magistrates—and ask him to draft the bills. It was only much later that parliaments took upon themselves the right to phrase the bills themselves before submitting them to the approval of the sovereign who could only either accept or reject them but not alter them.

The contents of the amendment which the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has proposed would result in delaying the enactment of this legislation until the Supreme Court would rule upon the constitutionality of clause 31.1 of Part IV of the bill.

Evidently the hon. member is referring to section 55 of the Supreme Court Act of Canada, which was introduced for the first time when the Supreme Court was created in 1875, and to a section which was amended in 1891 when the act which set up the Supreme Court in Canada was rewritten.

Section 55 of the Act clearly states that any significant question of law or facts concerning the interpretation of the British North America Acts or the constitutionality or interpretation of any federal or provincial legislation may be referred by the Governor in Council to the Supreme Court for hearing and consideration.

Under the terms of the present legislation, I do not think it is essential for the government to go through that process of referring the bill to the Supreme Court should any doubt arise with respect to its constitutionality.

As a matter of fact, it has happened several times in the past that bills dealing with combines, for instance the Board of Commerce Act of 1919 as well as the Combines Act of 1928 were referred to the Supreme Court for consideration of questions of fact and law relating to those bills. In either case the Supreme Court did recognize the constitutionality of the bills and held that they fitted perfectly well within the prerogatives of Parliament.

The proposed amendment as it stands would give rise to a doubt with respect to the constitutionality of the bill as we are debating it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you know for a fact that any bill introduced in the House of Commons is presumed to be constitutional; in other words, when a bill is referred to a court, it is considered as having been adopted pursuant to the powers of Parliament, and as coming within the jurisdiction of Parliament or of the Legislative Assembly which have adopted it.

The proposed amendment would have the effect of casting a doubt on the constitutionality of the bill, and therefore of the powers of Parliament to legislate with respect to combines.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any need at this time to refer that bill to the Supreme Court.

As a matter of fact, the government has, I believe three good reasons for rejecting the amendment. First, experience has shown that any abstract question put to the courts of justice leads to an abstract answer, which is very often of little use in solving practical cases.

Second, the reference procedure historically stemmed from the lack of any right of appeal on the part of the private individual. Now, it is clearly provided in this bill that any individual or corporation that might be affected by any of the provisions has a right to appeal to the board, and may exercise that right and the board is required to give him an opportunity to be heard. The right of appeal is therefore explicitly recognized in the legislation, and no individual is now deprived of his right of appeal before an impartial court.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must mention that traditionally the reference procedure has been used in cases where individuals could not afford to defend their rights, or where there were conflicts between the provinces and the federal government.

● (2020)

The hon. minister who appeared before the parliamentary committee made it quite clear that contacts and exchanges had taken place between his department and the departments of the main provinces interested in the bill and that there was no disagreement which would warrant the government at this stage to question the constitutionality of the bill and refer it to the Supreme Court of Canada. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, for reasons of law, for reasons of the amendment as worded now being out of order when it should have been tagged to clause 31 and not to clause 12, and also for reasons of policy where the government at this stage has no reason to question the constitutionality of the bill I say, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion this amendment should be ruled out of order and turned down in its present form.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I want to ask the hon. member a question, Mr. Speaker. Since the hon. member actually questioned the position of the amendment, could he enlighten us on the matter? Under clause 12 of Bill C-2 we have paragraph 31 of the Combines Investigation Act, and it is precisely at the end of clause 12 of Bill C-2 that my colleague puts his amendment relating to clause 31. So I wonder where else one would put such an amendment because clauses 12 and 31 refer to two different statutes.

Mr. Joyal: I think, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, that there is some confusion in the wording of the amendment. Indeed it is right to argue, as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) suggests, that the amendment relates to clause 31 of the combines bill, a clause being amended under clause 12. But if the very content of the amendment of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is to be the coming into force of the bill to one condition, namely the decision of the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of the bill, that condition should rather be tagged to clause 31 which ties the coming into force of the bill to certain conditions which are defined under that clause 31. I think the amendment as worded now, should be turned down on a simple matter of procedure within a formulation and not as such within the content of the constitutionality of the bill.

My first argument, Mr. Speaker, is purely a procedural one, and is not a legal argument as such. It is a purely procedural argument. According to our administrative procedure, and Beauchesne and May have made it clear, if an amendment is not directly related to the clause of the bill that defines its contents, it must be declared out of order. Yet, in this case, the content of clause 31.1 of the Combines Bill is included in clause 12 while the content of the clauses concerning the coming into force of the bill is also included in clause 31 of the bill. This is why I think there is some confusion as concerns the texts, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If there are no other hon. members who are anxious to participate in this very interesting discussion the Chair is left very much with the conclusion it had come to at the beginning of the discussion.

[Translation]

I wish to thank the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) for his very interesting and well-prepared speech.

[English]

I also thank the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for his very spirited intervention on behalf of his colleague and the procedural regularity of this motion.

The fact is, and this seems inescapable, that the motion would exceed the scope of the bill in several relevant particulars, not the least of which is that it does indeed appear to use the words, "notwithstanding section 31 of the act" whereas in fact the statute before us does not propose to amend section 31. Further, the proposed motion uses the words "notwithstanding section 55 of the Supreme Court Act," which again is not before us. In any case, in its intent it puts within this very statute a section which refers to a section of the act which is before us for interpretation by the Supreme Court before this section can come into force. It further adds, in paragraph (b), what could very well be a purely hypothetical condition, and then in paragraph (c) goes on to attach a condition that the attorney general of each province shall be notified of a hearing under this subsection in order that he may be heard if he thinks fit. The fact of the matter is that it seems to add an indefinite condition, again in paragraph (c).

Basically, however, the major difficulty remains the same. That is to say, it is suggested that the statute, or this particular section of the act before the House of Commons, be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for an interpretation, and thereafter, depending upon what the interpretation of that Court might be, this part of the act might come into force.

It would seem to the Chair that even if the clause were to be proposed in respect of a substantive measure before the House rather than simply an amending statute, it would still be offensive, and would go beyond the scope of any bill which this House might enact.

It seems to me to be repulsive to any act to parliament that it should contain within it a condition that the act must be referred in any part, or in any particular, to any other body for interpretation before it comes into force. Indeed, power already rests in the hands of any citizen who wants to attack any bill on its constitutionality to take it before the Supreme Court of Canada. But to put such a clause in a statute indicating that an act of parliament, or any clause of an act of parliament, would not come into force until that was done, seems to me to go beyond the scope of any statute which comes before parliament. Certainly it goes beyond the scope of the bill before us which seeks only to amend certain clauses of another act. Therefore the Chair has come to the conclusion that the motion is procedurally unacceptable.

We will proceed to Motion No. 24. The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reasoning behind this amendment stems from the fact that we have expressed grave concern about Bill C-2 which amends Part V of the Combines Investigation Act, which is in the Criminal Code and which is the part of that particular act which deals with offences in relation to trade, and not only makes amendments there but also extends the offences in relation to trade. We were very concerned that there was no provision whatsoever for reimbursement to be made to those consumers who may have been taken advantage of for a long period of time. There ought to be some recompense to those consumers who had been ripped off. It was this motivation which prompted us to try first of all, a class action amendment to the bill, and then a restitution clause, which this clause is.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, we presented this to the Committee on Finance when the bill was still being debated, and the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) who was chairing that committee, a gentleman well versed in the law and a hard-working member of parliament who was recently promoted for his hard work, ruled that the amendment was in order. So you see, Mr. Speaker, I received no direction at that time that it was misplaced, and certainly if it had been indicated in the ruling given at that time we could have worded it in such a way as to be acceptable to Your Honour. Such an indication, however, was not given to my party or myself, and as a result it was debated in committee and negatived in committee.

I looked at Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, 1958, citation 406, to see under what conditions amendments are out of order. I note that in that citation amendments are out of order under the following conditions, and I quote:

> (a) irrelevant to the bill, or beyond its scope governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived;
>
> (b) inconsistent with or contradictory to the bill as agreed to by the Committee;
>
> (c) inconsistent with a decision which the Committee has given upon a former amendment;
>
> (d) offered at the wrong place in the bill;
> (e) tendered to the Committee in a spirit of mockery, vague or trifling.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have looked at that citation and I would say it is very relevant to Part V of the Combines Investigation Act, and certainly Bill C-2 opened up that part of the act to amendment. All our amendment does is give logic to that part of the act. Without our amendment it seems to me that this section is short. The amendment was put forward in that light and accepted by the committee, and I hope Your Honour will consider this when making your ruling.

Mr. Martin: In rising to speak on the acceptability of this particular amendment I think it is very important that we should recognize we are dealing here with one of the most complex pieces of legislation which has come before this parliament, and probably the most complex to have been introduced since the time of the new Income Tax Act which became effective in January, 1972.

It seems to me that this legislation, having come before three parliaments in the past, and having resulted in considerable debate in this parliament alone with some 25 sittings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, we must accept that it is a very complex bill. This point is important when we consider the amendment before us.

The other point I should like to make is that the amendment which has been suggested is basically the thin edge of the wedge in the area of class action. I think it is one that the Canadian people will have to look at in future, one that this parliament must examine. Whether or not this is the appropriate time is really the issue that we are talking about when we consider this point. By class actions, I mean the kind of situation where a simple citizen has the right to sue over a particular issue on behalf not only of himself or herself but on behalf of several other citizens.

● (2030)

It is important to realize when making this judgment that the hon. member's amendment is in the area of class actions. The words of the motion are:

—to refund to the persons from whom he—

Meaning the guilty party. Those are my words.

—derived the excess revenue if those persons are reasonably identifiable or, in any other case, generally to persons thereafter acquiring the product from him—

It is really a question whether it is appropriate at this time to consider class actions as we consider the particular amendment now before the House. It is my opinion that this particular amendment dealing with class actions would give greater power to a judge than was intended by the bill. I refer to power in the area of making refunds. This is one of the reasons why I feel this particular amendment is probably inappropriate under the circumstances.

The second point I want to make is that I believe—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have been attempting to discern whether the hon. member is addressing himself to the appropriateness of the substance of the amendment or the procedural irregularity, which is all that we are dealing with at the present time. I have the impression that the hon. member is engaged in asking the House to consider whether or not the amendment is appropriate. The question we are dealing with at the moment is whether the Chair ought to accept the amendment from a procedural point of view. If I am correct that the hon. member's remarks are addressed to the substance of the amendment, then perhaps he would hold them for a moment until I make a decision on the procedural acceptability.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, may I indicate to you my contention that in the matter of the procedural irregularity I would argue in the same vein as my hon. friend from Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal), that this amendment is irregular in the sense that it would be improperly placed in the statute. It is an amendment to clause 22, which basically deals with collection of statistics and the enforcement of the collection of statistics. It is essentially a penal amendment, namely, one that seeks to grant additional powers to the court relative to the refunding of any excesses collected. It has a penal quality and should have been included in clause 18 or some other clause of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There apparently being no other hon. members who wish to contribute to this interesting point, may I say that the text of motion No. 24 proposes to amend clause 22 of the bill. The fact is that clause 22 of the bill deals with the collection of statistics and with various aspects of reporting facts and figures. It does not in any way deal with penalties. This motion introduces not only a penalty, which does not belong or is any way germane to clause 22, but furthermore introduces a new concept into the penalty provisions as well.

In view of the fact that the amendment proposes to amend clause 22 and is beyond the scope of that clause, I have to hold that the amendment is procedurally unacceptable.

I just want to add that when this matter was first raised months ago I made the following remark. I am not going to quote it in detail, but I referred to the procedural difficulty facing motions 6 and 24 in a general way. The language I used with respect to motion 24 may have been confusing in that I obviously made a cross reference to some aspects of motion No. 6. However, I went on to say this. I do not have the date of my remarks before me but it was some time ago, certainly long before the recess when the report stage of the bill was first considered. At that time I indicated that motion 24 proposed penalties which, in the opinion of the Chair, were not in any way germane to clause 22 of the bill which it sought to amend.

Having made that reference at that time I thought it might have been ample forewarning, so that if it was simply a readjustment of the location of the motion, it might have been adjusted in the interval. In any event the matter is before the Chair at the present time. The motion proposes to amend clause 22. It is obviously well beyond the scope of clause 22; therefore with regret I have to rule that it is unacceptable.

That brings to a conclusion all of the report stage motions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a word on something that perhaps you were going to raise. We are now at the point where 14 divisions have been deferred. I know the Clerk of the House is looking forward to calling 14 divisions tonight and we would not like to deprive him of that experience, but it is the fact that nine of those deferred divisions are practically the same in that they deal with the same aspect of the matter.

We would therefore be prepared to make arrangements to have one recorded vote to cover the amendments of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) to motions 8, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 22 and 25, but we would like to have separate votes on motions 10, 11, 18, 20 and 21.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair was about to make a similar suggestion. The matter has been clearly put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Amendments 8, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 22 and 25 all deal with the aspect of penalties, and a pronouncement of the House on one might therefore be deemed to be a pronouncement on all of them. Technically it might be best to have a recorded division on motion No. 8 and thereafter ask the House whether it will resolve the others in the same way without further division, and then proceed to motion 10. The question must be resolved on each, and we could not take more than one vote at a time.

Therefore, we will take a division on motion No. 8, and having resolved that I will ask the House whether it is content that a similar result be recorded on the others. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Thereafter separate recorded divisions will be taken on motions 10, 11, 18, 20 and 21. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on motion No. 8 (Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West)) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 21 (Mr. Rodriguez) negatived on division.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the terms of the order it is my duty to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of all remaining stages of the bill.

Mr. Ouellet moved that the bill as reported be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? Pursuant to the order, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ouellet moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SUGGESTED ISSUE OF LOANS BY BANK OF CANADA AT COST—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent and important question.

Since the main objective of the Bank of Canada is to control credit in the interests of our economic life, since also it is an institution whose policy is dictated by the government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House take every possible action to enable the Bank of Canada to play adequately its role by directing its credit policy to promote the development of the national economy and by allowing the issue of loans at cost in public and semipublic areas.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF ADMINISTRATOR AND APPOINTEES TO BOARD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister relating to the restraint program. Has the government decided who will be on the anti-inflation review board in addition to the two distinguished individuals already appointed and who will be the administrator? If these decisions have not yet been taken, when may we expect to be informed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have added a few more members to the board by order in council, but I believe it would be preferable if we could get the full contingent before making the announcement.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REACTION OF PROVINCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question. Perhaps the Prime Minister might indicate when we might expect that information and, since we are beginning discussion of the legislation arising out of the white paper today, could the Prime Minister give us any more precise information about the response of the provinces in general who presumably will have a vital part to play in this program? In particular, has he had any direct reaction from Premier Barrett of British Columbia who is reported at least to have said some things antagonistic to the program? Is the Prime Minister in a position to give us any decisive information about the reaction of the provinces now that we are about to begin the discussion of the bill?

● (1110)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, on the last point I cannot. I have written to the premiers since last Monday's meeting, I believe, suggesting a date next week for meetings of the ministers of finance of the various provinces, and other ministers, with the federal Minister of Finance and other federal ministers. I expect that at that time they will ask detailed questions about the implementation of the plan and how it will work to improve the economic situation. We will know more then about their position. In the meantime I have not anything further to communicate beyond what I indicated to the House yesterday. The only premier who has discussed this with me since Monday is Premier Bourassa. He phoned and indicated his willingness to go along and under the law, establish institutions in his province to apply certain parts of the guidelines.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister? Can he be more precise as to the position taken by Premier Bourassa, and particularly with regard to the extent of the program which the government of Quebec wishes itself to administer? Has the premier of Quebec indicated a desire to establish a board in Quebec which will administer, within that province, perhaps some of the responsibilities which are to be administered by the federal board elsewhere in the country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have been as precise with the House as Premier Bourassa has been with me. He was courteous enough to tell me his general intentions. I repeat, they will be worked out in detail at the meeting of federal-provincial ministers to which I just referred. What is clear in the minds of the premiers, from our meeting last Monday is that the government is determined to make the guidelines stick, and they will stick.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—APPLICATION TO MARKETING BOARDS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister concerning consultations with the provinces? My question arises from references in the white paper to the effect that marketing boards will be discussed with provincial governments, to ensure that their operations are consistent with the guidelines. As the chairman and vice-chairman of the proposed anti-inflation review board indicated that they intend to investigate marketing boards, has the government held these discussions with the provinces and, if so, is there agreement to put marketing boards within the general price guidelines outlined by the white paper?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. It is clear that marketing boards, in their pricing practices, are expected to follow our general guidelines. On the question of whether this was discussed in detail with the provinces, the answer is no. That, again, will be discussed at the meeting next week.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—APPLICATION OF PRICE GUIDELINES TO FARMERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's reply, may I ask the Minister of Finance the following question: Will the profit margins of farmers selling to marketing boards be allowed to increase, or will farmers have to prove per unit cost increases before being allowed to raise their prices?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the white paper says, the price of farm produce at the farm gate will not be subject to the guidelines.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTED MANDATORY PROVISION FOR COMPANIES TO GIVE PRIOR NOTICE OF PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Finance? Since the new chairman of the proposed anti-inflation review board indicated that the board will not systematically monitor all price increases but will monitor them selectively, and since the bill introduced yesterday contains no provision calling on the 1,500 companies selected for special control action to inform the board of price increases before prices are increased, is the government considering introducing such an amendment to the legislation at the appropriate stage, in order to make it mandatory at least for those 1,500 companies to give the board advance notice of and justification for proposed price increases?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there would be the practical consideration as to whether we want to deluge the anti-inflation review board with literally thousands of price changes, as this would occur.

Mr. Broadbent: Would it occur with everything?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It would occur over a period of time. I put it to the hon. member that we import many thousands of different items into Canada, and I do not think the hon. gentleman, the NDP or anybody else has ever pretended that, through any magic formula, you can stop all prices from increasing.

Mr. Orlikow: You think you can, and that is the problem.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. gentleman has so much to say; perhaps he should open his ears a little, instead of his mouth.

An hon. Member: Touchy, touchy.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): However, I would point out to the hon. member that there is a power under the statute to make regulations in this regard. I think we will want to give some attention to whether this will be a useful proposal, and if an amendment will be required.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REASON FOR FAILURE TO APPLY PRICE FREEZE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Where I come from, Mr. Speaker, that is known as having it both ways. I wish to ask the minister if the idea to put a freeze on these 1,500 corporations, most of which are non-competitive, was considered by the government. This idea was proposed by an expatriate Canadian, Professor Galbraith. When dealing with monopolies, you put the freeze on and make them justify price increases. Can the minister briefly explain to the House why that approach was rejected, quite apart from the problem of imported goods with which I agree entirely.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In anticipation of the measure that will be before the House today, I have permitted questions on the general guidelines, particularly with regard to the reaction of the provinces and considerations of a general nature. However, I do not think we should go so far as to anticipate individual sections of the bill or questions that really are more germane to the debate on the actual measure itself. This debate will begin in about an hour's time. I do not want to cut down the area of questioning unduly, but I ask the hon. member to remind himself that we will be embarking on a debate on the actual measure. Perhaps that kind of question about that particular area might be more germane to that kind of provision.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—METHOD OF ENFORCING PRICE REDUCTIONS AS PRODUCTION COSTS REDUCED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have one final question. It is not with reference to the bill, but with reference to the white paper in which the guidelines are proposed. It is suggested that reductions in production costs are expected to be passed on to the consumer. If the board has no intention of monitoring general price increases, how does the government propose to enforce this requirement that reductions in costs be passed on to the consumer?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, while the board will obviously have to make some selections as to key sectors in which price increases will be of the greatest concern, it will be carrying on very extensive monitoring. It seems whether one is monitoring price increases or the absence of a price decrease, it is the same function. The board will indeed be carrying this out.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF ADEQUATE PENSION FOR INVALIDS UNDER AGE 65

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The minister had indicated that a study had been undertaken with his provincial counterparts concerning a new federal-provincial agreement to secure an adequate income for the invalids who have not reached retirement age. Could the minister tell us now if the results of this study can be expected soon and whether he intends to make an early statement in the House on this matter?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the end of the last federal-provincial conference on this subject, I tabled—if my memory serves me well—the press release which covers in part the point raised by the hon. member. Another federal-provincial conference will be held in late November or early December and I shall be happy to report to the House the result of the discussions that will have then taken place.

HEALTH

SALE OF TAINTED MEAT TO QUEBEC CONSUMERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPROVE INSPECTION SERVICE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare as well. It deals with the distribution of tainted meat in the province of Quebec. In view of the charge made by the Quebec crime inquiry commission that the federal government has shown a lack of vigilance in protecting the consumer, has any action now been taken to increase the inspection services in order that the consumer will be properly protected?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the report referred to was made public only yesterday. I have not seen it. I did not get a copy, but I shall try to study it as soon as possible, and then answer the hon. member's questions.

[English]

SALE OF TAINTED MEAT TO QUEBEC CONSUMERS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO FOOD AND DRUGS ACT TO PUT BURDEN OF PROOF ON SELLER

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): For the edification of the minister, the report recommends that there be an amendment to the Food and Drugs Act to place the burden of proof on anyone charged with dealing in tainted meat, which is a departure from the present law. Has the minister given consideration to making such an amendment to the Food and Drugs Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I have just said, I have not read the report and I should like to do so before answering. However, I am convinced that all members will have to do some serious thinking before changing the burden of proof, even in a case such as this, because it is a very serious matter in criminal law.

[English]

SALE OF TAINTED MEAT TO QUEBEC CONSUMERS—PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO CONDUCT OF INSPECTORS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): In view of the suggestion in the report that the federal government had known about the distribution of tainted meat in the Province of Quebec for the past seven years, since 1968, would the minister agree to initiate a ministerial inquiry into the conduct of officers of his department, namely, the inspectors who had known about this situation, in order to determine why no action was taken until the Quebec inquiry made its revelations?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept any of the premises stated by the hon. member. If he has his own copy of the report, I should be very happy to read it, but I am not willing to accept his allegations.

POST OFFICE

CONTINGENCY PLANS FOR MAIL DELIVERY IN EVENT OF STRIKE

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Since, according to the news, government departments have made arrangements for the delivery of their mail and are ready in the event of a long strike by postal employees, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman what arrangements he has made for small business people to send and receive mail, for example, accounts, bills and cheques? What arrangements have been made to enable weekly newspapers to be despatched as well as mail by private individuals?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): It is normal that the government would set up contingency plans but I am not prepared to reveal them, particularly since negotiations resumed at about 9.30 this morning and are proceeding at a fairly satisfactory pace.

INTERPRETATION OF STRIKE VOTE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My supplementary arises from news reports interpreting the vote which has just been completed by the postal workers as a strike vote. Can the minister confirm that the vote actually calls for endorsation of the national executive's formal written request to the government calling for further negotiations on the basis of the Moisan report and emphasizes vital issues such as fringe benefits, job security, automation and the employment of casual workers rather than the monetary issue as such?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The vote just taken is subject to interpretation by whomever wants to interpret it in their own way. To suggest it is an overwhelming vote by the membership for strike action would be unfair to the members. For instance, no fewer than 15 locals in the maritimes, which usually show some intelligence—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: —there are just pockets of them—have said they want to know just what they are voting on. What is more important is that we are back to the bargaining table. Workers, with the exception of those in only one little area in Canada, are working. Of course, if workers in too many areas stop working, as is their right, we would have to break off negotiations in order to permit the national executive and the negotiating team to talk reason to these people for jeopardizing what could be a fair settlement as an alternative to a prolonged strike.

EXISTENCE OF CONTINGENCY PLAN FOR MAIL DELIVERY IN EVENT OF STRIKE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Are we to take it from the remarks of the hon. gentleman that there is, in fact, a contingency plan in existence to assist small businesses and private individuals to move mail in the event that the postal workers do not carry on their duties, or is he simply telling the House that this is something which would be looked into at a later date?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): I am not telling the hon. gentleman, either. I am simply saying that the news last night stated that the government has a contingency plan for its own mail, as I mentioned earlier, for the distribution of essential cheques and social benefit payments. In a democracy such as ours some segments of the economy must be severely, sometimes unjustifiably, inconvenienced; but that is the price of our particular system.

POSSIBLE EXEMPTION OF EMPLOYEES FROM WAGE GUIDELINES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that the Postmaster General has indicated that postal workers are exempt under the escape provisions per se, while at the same time the Minister of Finance says no, that is not so, that any decision in this regard must go before the anti-inflation board—so we have a conflict here—would the Prime Minister clear up the matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no conflict unless it is in the hon. member's understanding. The white paper applies to everyone. The white paper itself contains the statement that special consideration will be given to certain cases, which are defined. Special consideration will indeed be given by the Anti-Inflation Board; it will judge whether any actions which have been taken by the federal government are within the guidelines, and we will respect the board's judgment.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF QUEBEC ESTABLISHING ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It is supplementary to those which the Leader of the Opposition directed to him concerning the provincial board Premier Bourassa intends to establish.

Will the Canadian government be invited to share the cost of such a commission or board, or will the province of Quebec fully assume the cost of such a board?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this aspect was not discussed with the provinces. I am grateful to the hon. member for bringing it to my attention. My first reply would be that if a province wished to establish its own board instead of using ours, it would have to assume all costs, as it is indeed the case when a province—Quebec for instance and Ontario sometimes—has its own tax-collecting agency. It must then assume the whole cost.

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—EFFECT ON FARM INCOME AND RETAIL FOOD PRICES

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Agriculture expressing government opinion with respect to the new wage and price controls policy of the government when he said recently in St. Jacob's, Ontario that Ottawa's wage and price controls will have no effect on farm incomes and little impact on retail food prices?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of that question. I did not understand it, but I will take notice of it and answer on Monday.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister did not hear the question I will repeat it because I think the answer is very important. Was the Minister of Agriculture expressing government opinion with respect to the new wage and price controls policy of the government when he said recently in St. Jacob's, Ontario that Ottawa's wage and price controls will have no effect on farm incomes and little impact on retail food prices?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, he was not reflecting government opinion because that would be a matter of foresight.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: As the Minister of Finance indicated, and as the white paper makes clear, farmers' prices are not frozen. They are not subject to the guidelines. What effect this will have at the retail level will depend very much, (a), on what the marketing boards do and, (b), whether or not some of the costs that the retailers are allowed to pass on are absorbed. We are confident that they will and that costs will be kept down, but to what degree, I repeat, will be a matter of prophecy and I do not want to engage in that.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTED APPLICATION TO RETAILERS OF PROVISION RESTRICTING PRICE ADJUSTMENTS TO ONCE IN THREE MONTHS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question which I will address to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the government's wage and price freeze in this anti-inflation fight indicates that manufacturers will not be allowed to increase their prices more frequently than once every three months but that retailers and wholesalers are exempt from this injunction, can the minister assure the House that such an injunction will also be applicable to retailers and wholesalers?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I should just like to correct the hon. member's terminology; it is not a "freeze". As I mentioned a moment ago, it is recognized that costs will be incurred, for example, with regard to imported fruits and vegetables which are so much a part of the marketing scene in Canada in the wintertime. With regard to the suggestion of the hon. member that any variations in import costs during the winter should not be passed on, this does not seem to be practical.

ENERGY

DATE OF SIGNING PIPELINE TREATY WITH UNITED STATES—PROVISION FOR COLLECTION OF STATE AND PROVINCIAL TAXES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell the House when the pipeline treaty with the United States may be signed and whether it will particularly include provisions to prevent undue harassments in the form of taxation by provincial or state jurisdictions as has been suggested as a possibility by the proponents of the Alaska pipeline?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member the precise date when it will be signed but I can indicate to the House that we have been making substantial progress with the United States on this treaty. The one issue that remains to be settled at the moment involves the question of fiscal regimes and protection in respect of state and provincial taxes.

HOUSING

POSSIBILITY OF COMBINING URBAN AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT AND CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and refers to his announcement on Wednesday of the appointment of Mr. William Teron, President of CMHC, to the post of acting secretary of the Ministry of Urban Affairs. Since this appointment places Mr. Teron in the position of making policy as well as the execution of such policy through another agency, would the Prime Minister tell us whether the government has now recognized that the Ministry of Urban Affairs and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation were not synchronized in their approach to dealing with the Canadian housing prices, and whether it is the government's intention to combine the two agencies at this time under the chairmanship of Mr. Teron?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of internal organization with which we are proceeding. There is a temporary solution which has been made public, and if any further actions are taken I will inform the House about them.

DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT OF MORTGAGE CORPORATION—ROLE OF MR. TERON

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether the government is now prepared to implement the act passed by parliament to establish a Federal Mortgage Corporation as a follow up to this latest move, and whether Mr. Teron through his many, varied and sizeable holdings will be asked by the government to facilitate such implementation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the insinuation was about private holdings, but I can assure the hon. member that the conflict of interest guidelines have been followed strictly by Mr. Teron.

DATE OF MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS AND SUBJECTS ON AGENDA

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that the mess in the government housing policy is now becoming apparent even to Liberal MP's, as so succinctly put by the hon.

member for Ontario who said that his government has been notably stupid in its housing policies—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: She is after your job, Barney.

Miss MacDonald: This is something which we on this side of the House have been stating for many months. Will the minister say when the proposed meeting with the provincial housing ministers will take place and whether the agenda will include proposals to increase the supply of serviced land, as promised in the white paper, as well as methods by which the abnormally high interest rate will be reduced?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the preamble to the question at this time when we are making quite incredible progress, which a couple of months ago we would not have thought possible, when the percentage of low and modestly priced housing has increased by some 50 per cent this year and when our housing starts are close to double the rate of our neighbour to the south, let me answer the question by stating that I am not quite certain about the proposed meeting of the housing ministers to which the hon. member has referred. We are in continuous contact, and I am always pleased to meet with the housing ministers when it is felt that is necessary. Quite frankly, I am in touch with their offices at the present time to see if a meeting is necessary at this time, as suggested by the new housing minister for Ontario. It is possible that such a meeting will take place, but the idea does not appear to have unanimous acceptance. If it is necessary, we will meet at any time with the provincial housing ministers.

AGRICULTURE

POSITION OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION ON AID TO COW-CALF OPERATORS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I would address my question to the acting minister. Will he please inform the minister that the official opposition to Her Majesty's government in this House is in favour of the Agricultural Stabilization Act terms being carried out in connection with the cow-calf floor price. The government promised this in the middle of September, and I am simply responding to the minister's challenge in his reply to the hon. member for Vegreville yesterday, by stating that the official opposition wants to see the terms of the act carried out, including the cost of production formula added in.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DATE OF TABLING BAYDA REPORT AND IMPLEMENTING RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, over a year ago Mr. Justice Bayda was appointed as commissioner to examine all aspects of grain handling through the port of Vancouver and to make recommendations to alleviate and improve the situation. As the government has now had Mr. Justice Bayda's report for some considerable time, can the Minister of Labour advise the House when this report will be tabled and when the government will bring forward measures to deal with this most serious and important matter?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would anticipate that the report will be tabled in the House within the next week. During this time we have been looking for certain people to assume certain responsibilities under the report and I hope to name those people at the same time I table it.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration relating to Local Initiatives Programs.

Is the minister aware that for the Pontiac riding the budget is about $716,000 whereas the requests are for $4,340,000, since 122 acceptable projects are under study? I am told that the available funds cover only 34 of those projects, leaving aside 88 others. Since the large number of project proposals shows not only the interest of the people from Pontiac in that program but above all the great needs of my riding, could the minister give—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is an excellent and very important representation, but not a question.

Mr. Lefebvre: Here is my question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the House if another study will be made to allocate extra funds to those areas where great need exists?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I would lead the House astray if I indicated any likelihood of additional funds in this area for this year. I am sympathetic toward the representations and concerns of this hon. member and others. Let me give an indication of the magnitude of this by saying that we now have on hand 16,405 applications amounting to $526 million against which we have an allocation available out of $150 million of about $135 million. This is a substantial program but there is no way, I think, that we can look forward to meeting all the demands upon it at this time.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES TO STIMULATE HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

As the Canadian housing industry is faring very poorly and, to my mind, as the problem lies above all in prohibitively high interest rates, would the minister tell the House whether he would be willing to recommend rolling back interest rates to stimulate that industry, while at the same time helping solve the unemployment problem?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said, the monetary policy of the government is determined with the governor of the Bank of Canada. But we have accepted that, because of the high level of international interest rates, it is not possible, for the time being, to lower interest rates in Canada. My colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, for instance, will be introducing programs intended to reduce interest rates in specific cases, but I cannot say that, generally, rates will be lowered in the industry mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary. Will the minister tell us whether he is speaking of housing or industrial construction?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I can refer the hon. member to my colleague. There are a few programs through which interest rates are subsidized in the housing industry.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTOR TO SOUTH KOREA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF SAFEGUARD PROVISIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On a recent visit to Japan the Minister's colleague, the Minister of State for Science, is reported as saying that he expected the agreement with South Korea for safeguards on the sale of a Canadian nuclear reactor would be signed soon and that it was a matter of getting the right kind of words rather than getting an agreement. Assuming this to be the situation, would the minister say whether the safeguards negotiated are adequate to prevent the possible diversion to nuclear weapons and is the minister prepared to table the proposed agreement so that Parliament and the people of Canada can judge for themselves whether the safeguards proposed are adequate or whether we are indeed embarking on a grave and possibly tragic course of nuclear proliferation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations with the Republic of Korea are in their final stages and we hope the agreement will be concluded shortly. I intend to table the agreement in the House of Commons when it is concluded.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF EXEMPTING NOVA SCOTIA TEACHERS AND STEVEDORES FROM WAGE GUIDELINES

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Observing the niceties of the House may I say: "Congratulations Don; you have lots of headaches". In light of the fact that the school teachers of Nova Scotia, as a result of the crushing burden of inflation, have been working for almost near-starvation wages for three years, and in view of the fact that they are presently negotiating for a new wage agreement, will they be subjected to the freeze as laid down by the Prime Minister and the minister himself or will the teachers and stevedores of the International Longshoremens Association in Nova Scotia receive the same treatment as the Postmaster General has indicated the postal workers will receive.

● (1140)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, may I express my appreciation to the hon. member from Eastern Nova Scotia, as one who ancestrally comes from Nova Scotia, for the kind words. With regard to his question, there are several answers that will have to be given by the provincial government before I could respond to it. Insofar as the public sector is concerned, we look forward to the answer from Nova Scotia concerning whether it would cover the public sector as proposed by the bill under the federal tribunal or whether it would do as Quebec is doing and set up its own. With regard to the private sector, the guidelines would apply and in that sense the anti-inflation tribunal would have to consider the situation. It would have to consider that with other groups in the transitional situation to which the hon. member referred. I say that in light of the sense of justice that where groups work side by side or in other ways are closely comparable, we should so far as possible try to analogize their basic compensation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CRITICISM OF ADVISORY COUNCIL OF METHOD OF FUNDING CANADA PENSION PLAN

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wonder whether the minister could tell us if he has received the report from the Canada Pension Plan Advisory Council or whether he has taken particular cognizance of the criticism of the Chairman of that council with regard to the borrowing formula under the plan whereby the provinces borrow from the fund. Since there is no government contribution into the Canada Pension Plan, any deficiency or any lack of proper funding is strictly at the expense of the beneficiaries of the Canada Pension Plan which so far in ten years amounts to well over hundreds of millions of dollars.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not only read the report, but

I have tabled it in this House yesterday afternoon. I therefore hope that the hon. member has had the opportunity to read it since then. The president of the advisory committee gave a news conference yesterday for the media on that subject. I am well aware of the main criticism made about that report, namely that in recent years the provinces other than Quebec have been given a preferential rate on the money they needed to borrow. It is a matter which I have raised previously in many speeches. Of course, any amendment in that regard would have to be discussed with the provinces since any such amendment will have a substantial impact on them and since it is impossible to amend the Canada Pension Plan without the consent of at least two thirds of the provinces making up two thirds of the population.

AIR CANADA

STATUS OF REPORT OF ESTEY INQUIRY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to report on the status of the Estey inquiry into the operations of Air Canada. Can he say whether the report is complete, whether he has seen it and can he advise when the report might be made public.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the report as yet and do not yet know on what date it will be received or when it will be possible to make it public. I understand that it is a fairly large report and that some further time is required for its final completion.

POSSIBLE REFERENCE OF 1974 ANNUAL REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the annual report of Air Canada has not been considered by the Standing Committee on Transportation for a number of years, would the minister indicate to the House whether it is his intention to refer the 1974 annual report to the standing committee as soon as possible so that the matter might be followed up by the committee.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly prepared to note the wishes of the committee in regard to the work they are doing. They were undertaking a fairly large piece of work in respect of the over-all transportation policy and a discussion with regard to the next steps in that would be useful.

MANPOWER

USE OF VANCOUVER QUADRA LIP FUNDS FOR HUMAN SETTLEMENTS CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration which concerns the Local Initiatives Program and the Habitat Conference. In view of the fact that the government has neglected to provide funds for the association in Canada serving organizations on human settlements, ACSOH, the agency responsible for providing facilities for the non-governmental organizations participating in the Habitat 75 Conference in Vancouver next year, with the result that 60 per cent of the LIP budget for Vancouver Quadra was recommended for these projects, will the minister consult immediately with his cabinet colleagues with a view to obtaining alternate federal funds for this international conference so that the residents of Vancouver Quadra will not be penalized by the effective removal of 60 per cent of their LIP allocation.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will note the recommendation of the hon. member, but I would add that the primary objective of the Local Initiatives Program is to provide employment to people who would not otherwise be able to obtain it. Certainly, the validity of the project itself is very important; it is of prime importance. However, I will look into the situation.

GRAIN

SUGGESTED DEFERRAL FOR INCOME TAX PURPOSES OF INTERIM PAYMENTS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The question is in respect of the recent announcement made by the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the very excellent co-operation of prairie grain growers in responding to the call of the Canadian Wheat Board for stepped up deliveries of the new grain crop, would the minister respond by considering the suggestion that farmers be given the option of deferrment of these adjustment payments, since current regulations do not permit deferrment for tax purposes?

● (1150)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question has been put to me by many hon. members and by many farmers, however, not incorrectly as was the case yesterday in connection with the need to get deliveries of grain, which obviously is not in issue because it should be clear that the increase in initial price can in fact be deferred in relation to grain delivered after October 9 when the increase took place. The issue is therefore in regard to the adjustment payments on grain delivered prior to October 9. In the ordinary course, those payments would be received and would be a part of the income tax position of farmers. I think it may be difficult to think in terms of any kind of change in the law in relation to that, and the only possibility is whether the way in which the cheques are in fact delivered can alleviate the situation, and I am looking into that question.

Mr. Hargrave: I want to point out to the minister that my question did relate to the adjustment figures payment, of course, but does he not feel that the excellent delivery was due in a good measure to the understanding of prairie grain growers that they would have at least this option of deferring that adjustment payment?

Mr. Lang: No, I do not think that would be the case because they knew in the last year that when the adjustment took place in November, it was possible for us to have the adjustment cheques go out only after January 1, but that was a mechanical situation which produced the deferrment result. Those farmers, organizations and hon. members opposite who were encouraging an immediate increase in the initial price should have realized that that carried with it in fact a tax consequence adverse to those who did not want to show additional income in the current year.

I should say that I was not correcting the hon. member when I referred to the lack of impact on deliveries, but rather the remarks of his colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, who yesterday seemed to think that there was some connection.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR LIST OF COMPANIES TO WHICH PROGRAM APPLICABLE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On Tuesday the minister, referring to his anti-inflation program, stated that the statutory provisions will apply to somewhat more than 1,500 firms, roughly 5 per cent of the total number of firms in Canada, and covering approximately 2,300,000 employees of those firms. Would the minister indicate if it is proposed to publish a list of the 1,500 firms, and if so, when?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board has already been in touch by correspondence with a substantial number of firms. I think it would be useful to have this kind of information available, and I will seek it from him at the earliest possible date.

BROADCASTING

REASON FOR EARLY START ON FRENCH LANGUAGE TELEVISION STATION FOR VANCOUVER—SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF FACILITIES TO PRIVATE COMPANY

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Communications. It is a follow up to the question I asked the other day. Has the minister yet been able to find out why the CBC French network began to install its antenna on Mount Seymour for channel 26?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I was in the process of writing a note to the hon. member to the effect that I can confirm that construction has indeed started in order to avoid any extra long delay in terms of providing service, assuming that a licence is issued, but of course there could be no possibility of beginning broadcasting without actual approval by way of licence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reynolds: In view of the restraint program which the federal government has announced, and in view of the fact that channel 26 has already been approved for a private UHF channel, would the minister ask the CBC to sell that installation to the private company which is going to be on channel 26 instead of having to ask them to move to another channel, thereby avoiding installing the CBC French network for a year or two until it is needed?

Mr. Lang: The restraint program is not designed to stop construction and investment in the private sector in Canada.

AIR TRANSPORT

BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL COMMUNICATIONS—SUGGESTED RESUMPTION OF STUDY BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Before I ask my question I think I can say for all or most members of the House that we are certainly happy that the threatened strike of aeroplane pilots has been averted, at least for tomorrow.

I would like to ask the minister what the government is going to do now that the strike has been averted with regard to getting the committee together to discuss the English-French problem which has arisen in the province of Quebec in relation to the five airports, and further to discuss the grievances which the airline people have.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not at all sure that that particular committee would be the best mechanism for making progress in regard to the problem the airline pilots have raised. We have been having, and will continue to have, discussions with all interested parties to demonstrate that, while where convenient and possible, we would want to make French language facilities available to pilots, the uppermost consideration must be conditions of safety in flight. We will continue discussions with all interested groups involved in the air industry to demonstrate that that is what we are trying to accomplish. We will thereby hope to encourage a certain amount of goodwill on the part of all the groups, some of which have perhaps been fighting with one another rather more strenuously than is desirable.

BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL COMMUNICATIONS—POSSIBLE ENLARGEMENT OF PLAN

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I gather that the existing policy for English and French communication at the five airports in the province of Quebec will stand. Is there any thought being given to the policy being enlarged to include all the airports in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): As I indicated, any such enlargement would only occur once we were quite satisfied that the safety requirements were in fact being met. There is therefore no immediate plan for such enlargement. In a case such as the Quebec city airport we are working on improved procedures to allow for even more effective handling of the kind of traffic which has been attracted to that airport after the change in policy which allowed pilots to use the French language when that was the most appropriate language for them on landing, and we will continue to work on the various recommendations, but always with safety very much in mind.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the very sympathetic President of the Treasury Board.

In answer to a question put to him yesterday by the hon. member for Bellechasse on the possibility of increasing funds for the LIP programs, the President of the Treasury Board alluded to the budget introduced last June by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton, who was Minister of Finance at the time, and he said this, and I quote:

—if the hon. member wants to know if we are going to add more money to the budget brought down by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton last June, the answer is no.

If I am not mistaken, as the amount in the budget of the former Minister of Finance was more than $300 million, does not the President of the Treasury Board, in the circumstances and given the numerous demands from all parts of Canada, including the Gaspé Peninsula and the Magdalen Islands, intend to give an additional amount over the $350 million to meet the needs of the Canadian people?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I must answer with as much sympathy as possible that it is now impossible to change the estimates as regards LIP programs for the present year.

POST OFFICE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. He indicated earlier that negotiations were taking place between the government and the postal workers' union. I would like to ask the minister whether he or the government has indicated either verbally or in writing to the union that the government is prepared to accept the recommendations made by the chairman of the conciliation board.

[Mr. Murta.]

• (1200)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have made this point rather forcibly on a number of occasions. Contrary to any propaganda that may have gone out, our representative on the conciliation board, Mr. Boncause accepted the basic premise of the chairman, Judge Moisan that there was a catchup needed comparable to that of the letter carriers and he recommended an identical sum of money and the identical length of term. I accepted that on behalf of treasury and Post Office and reiterated, on half a dozen occasions that until the union came to its senses on the 71 per cent for a 30 hour week it was obvious there was no progress to be made at the bargaining table. Now that their vote is in—I am not sure what its purpose was—we have at least come to the point that we are now negotiating. I hope progress will be made which with endorse again that particular report and settle it according to the guidelines and according to the restraint program, particularly in light of the fact this settlement has been recommended not only by Judge Moisan in this case but by an equally competent authority, Mr. Martin of the letter carriers.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Sixth report of Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections—Mr. Blaker.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills: the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). Stand.

Mrs. Appolloni, seconded by Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey), moves for leave to introduce a bill entitled an act respecting National Employment of the Handicapped Week.

Mr. Leggatt: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps you missed my nod indicating that I was intending to introduce the bill you referred to standing in my name.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I inadvertently took the movement to indicate that the hon. member for New Westminster was prepared to have the bill stand. The hon. member moves for leave to introduce a bill entitled "An act for the parole of Dr. Henry Morgentaler", which I might say has given the Chair considerable concern in respect of its procedural regularity.

I am sure the hon. member is familiar with the difficulty in that the bill, rather than being an amendment to the general law, appears to be a specific application of law to only one person, or an exemption from the general law for the benefit of one person. It therefore would appear to the Chair to be the subject matter, not of a private member's public bill as it is drawn, but of a private member's private bill, which is different in procedure.

If the hon. member proposes to argue that point, I think he ought to have the opportunity. However, I think that opportunity ought not to arise at this hour of the day but, rather, during private members' hour. I do not think we should engage in that kind of procedural argument now and hold up the kind of measure that is to be debated by the House today.

I wonder if we might not stand the bill for the moment, not in an indefinite way but simply for today or Monday, and come to an agreement that soon in one of the private members' hours this matter should be raised and argued at five o'clock. If we cannot come to that resolution, perhaps the hon. member can be permitted to go ahead and argue his point on Monday at three o'clock. Is that agreed?

Mr. Leggatt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, that is agreed. Apparently I was not aware of the procedure; I thought we could introduce the bill for first reading and hold the argument regarding the procedural question. But I defer to Your Honour's ruling, of course, and that is quite satisfactory.

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT OF THE HANDICAPPED WEEK ACT

MEASURE TO DESIGNATE SECOND WEEK IN OCTOBER AS NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT OF THE HANDICAPPED WEEK

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-412, respecting National Employment of the Handicapped Week.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to create a climate of public awareness of the value and fairness of employing handicapped men and women, and to encourage all employers throughout Canada to review and broaden their policies toward the employment of the handicapped.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

USE OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE CENTRE BY AN INTERNATIONAL GATHERING OF LIBERALS

Question No. 1,176—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the statement by the Prime Minister on page 2135 of Hansard on May 8, 1974 to the effect he assured the Member for Leeds that the Liberal Party was paying for the use of the National Conference Centre by an international gathering of Liberals and with reference to the answer to Question No. 67 to the effect that no rental was paid by the Liberal Party for use of the National Conference Centre on the occasion in question (a) how does the Prime Minister explain this discrepancy (b) did the Prime Minister misinform or mislead the House in his statement of May 8, 1974?

2. (a) What is the total cost of all aspects of the operation of the National Conference Centre for any period of 24 hours (b) what was the total cost of all aspects of the operation of the Centre for the period of approximately five days that it was in use by the Liberal Party from April 29, 1974 to May 3, 1974 (c) will the government be billing the Liberal Party for this sum paid for by taxpayers money?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) and (b) It is suggested that the hon. member for Leeds review the statement and answer referred to. Catering and similar expenses were not charged to public funds. Therefore no discrepancy exists. The House was not misinformed or mislead.

2. (a) and (b) The work and man-hours involved in arriving at a 24-hour cost of operation is not warranted. In the period April 29, 1974 to May 3, 1974, 1,860 persons attended 26 conferences and meetings in the Conference Centre. (c) See answer to Part 1.

PROGRAM FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF INDUSTRIAL TECHNOLOGY (PAIT)

Question No. 2,920—Mr. Reynolds:

Is information made available as to those who receive PAIT grants and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The name of PAIT grant recipients and the amount paid is annually listed in the Public Accounts of Canada. Such information is therefore made available on request.

PURCHASE OF CANADAIR AND DE HAVILLAND

Question No. 2,921—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Have various Canadian companies made proposals to the government for the purchase of De Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited, Toronto and Canadair Limited of Montreal and, if so, which companies submitted bids and what was the amount in each case?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Two Canadian companies, Spar Aerospace Products of Toronto and Cornat Industries of Vancouver submitted a joint proposal to acquire Canadair and de Havilland. The purchase price was subject to negotiation. To date negotiations have not been undertaken.

ELECTRIC ROAD VEHICLES

Question No. 2,972—Mr. Robinson:

1. Are any Canadian companies developing electrical road vehicles and, if so, what are their possibilities of success?

2. Does the government intend to encourage such developments with financial assistance in the interest of alleviating pollution and energy problems?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. There are several Canadian companies in various stages of developing electric road vehicles. However, as yet none have reached the production stage and it is not possible to determine their commercial acceptability.

2. Yes, the Government is encouraging such developments under the existing incentive programs.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the other questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Are the other questions allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we had an extensive survey of this question earlier in the week on the day devoted to the economy. Much of what would have been said on second reading was said at that time, so I will not repeat it; rather, I will deal with a number of questions raised by opposition members in that debate and since then in the question period, and a number of questions that have arisen in the community. I will also address myself to some of the specific terms of the bill which I think have relevance in its consideration.

I would start off by reminding the House that, while we are dealing with a specific part of the program, the government's request for support for the anti-inflation program is directed not just to any single group but to the whole community. It is founded on the expectation that there is, amongst Canadians, a sense of fairness with regard to the sharing of the resources of our community and everyone, whatever his income level, whatever his occupation, should recognize that we have a responsibility for restraining our demands on the community.

Having said that, however, I would recognize at once that particularly those at the lower end of the income scale are in the least position to pose demands of that kind and are in the most difficult position from the standpoint of protecting their incomes, in light of the inflation that we have experienced in recent years. Therefore, what we have proposed in this particular bill is to get after the big guys, to get after those with clout, landlords and owners of property, to get after the big corporations, to get after big labour in the event that any one of those groups should, contrary to that sense of fairness, seek to draw from the economy more than would be reasonable in relation to the demands of the whole.

The purpose of this bill is to make provision that if there are demands of this kind, the Anti-inflation Board can seek to persuade those who are making the demands to moderate them, and seek to persuade them that if they do not do so, the course of law will have to be followed and in the extreme case, if there is still a refusal, then there would be resort to the law. The fact of the matter is—and this is the basic fact which has to be recognized by all of us who speak on it; it is basic for the person for whom we have responsibility, the little fellow at the low end of the income scale—that if the kind of people with clout, in order to get more, always seek high wage settlements and price increases, the less there will be available for the Canadian of modest income. For this reason, we feel we have to seek this power to protect that particular group.

Retired persons and those on fixed incomes, those in jobs but not organized—those, in other words, at the lower end of the income scale—are not, contrary to what has been said in some circles, the victims of this particular bill. They are the principal beneficiaries of this program and this bill.

The bill recognizes that there are groups with major clout in the community. We seek the support of the groups with major clout in the community in order to achieve our objective. As I have said, the enforcement provisions recognize that if those who have power refuse that kind of support, refuse that co-operation—and I hope it will not be refused—we can resort to the provisions of this particular legislative proposal.

Reference was made in the previous debate to the excellent statement made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada several weeks ago on the important question of inflation, and to the position taken by leaders of the Canadian Labour Congress and other individual labour leaders. Their basic position, as they have said several times, is that the inflationary problem from which we suffer in Canada was not created by the workingman.

I say that the proposals the government has put forward for curbing the present situation in this country, a situation which has not arisen merely in the present but has existed for the past 18 to 25 months, recognize the truth of the statements made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada and labour leaders. We have recognized that the causes of inflation in Canada, as in many other countries, have been increases in real costs. They have occurred in Canada because we have an open economy and because we import so many things.

The problem has arisen in particular because of the increased cost of food, not only here but throughout the world, which has arisen because of shortages of supply.

Costs have also increased most significantly in the past 12 to 18 months as a result of the dramatic increase in the costs of energy in the world, costs resulting from political decisions taken by governments which are under the closest control of those engaged in the petroleum industry. Clearly, we have witnessed real, increased costs which inevitably have affected this community.

As I had occasion to remind hon. members on the other side of the House during today's question period, certain inevitable cost increases arose in the past and certain costs will come forward in future, increases about which we in Canada can do nothing. If we seek to import foreign commodities, if we seek to obtain a supply of energy for the future, we must pay those costs. We must pay increased costs for production in our own country; for example, in agriculture. So we will have to pay more for the things we get. In other words, we will need to allocate our resources to pay for these additional costs.

For these reasons, we think it reasonable—and we thought this at the time of the 1974 election—to give the workingman an opportunity, in salary and wage arrangements, to catch up with those real costs which have emerged in our community. We take that position now, and that is why we are coming forward, not with a freeze, as has been suggested on the other side of the House, but with a flexible system which recognizes that we must make adjustments in costs in our community.

On the income side there will need to be adjustments as time goes on. Those adjustments in income are recognized in the basic protection factor and other elements put forward in detail in the guidelines. We are not complaining, Mr. Speaker, because it is too late to complain about past increases. They were involuntary and, as I said, unavoidable. They are a thing of the past. Those increases in costs and catch-up attempts in salary are now behind us.

Some people may say that Canada's price performance as compared with that of OECD countries, on average, is not out of line. Personally, I do not agree. I feel that our cost increases have been greater than our people can bear. But can anyone suggest that in the future we can tolerate increases of 20 per cent, 30 per cent, 40 per cent and more demanded by different groups in the community? For example, in my constituency I found, from a door-to-door survey, that people had those kinds of rent increases pushed on them with the renewal of their leases.

When we have this kind of thing put forward by the people with big clout in the community, can there be any answer when we say that we have to restrain these increases in costs wherever they may occur, and from whatever group they may come in Canada? There can be no doubt about it: if those kinds of increases in our economy become general, they will affect not only incomes and the rate of increase of inflation but in the long run they will affect employment, the general prosperity of Canada and our ability to compete in our own and foreign markets. That is what the program of restraint is all about.

The program is not punishing anybody for the past. It is trying to look forward, to reach into the future and to head off those anticipatory price, salary and income increases which, in our belief, some people are seeking and which are out of line with what is going to happen in the economy. We believe that these should be restrained so that they do not get out of line in future, because we must bear in mind the economic costs.

Therefore, to reinforce the program and to ensure that the public interest, to which I just alluded, prevails, the bill provides for administrative machinery and for the necessary authority to ensure that the guidelines are complied with by the larger economic forces in our community which are predominant in establishing cost and price patterns.

As we emphasized previously, provincial governments will play a vital role in complementing and supplementing actions proposed by the federal government. I confirm, again, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has proposed to the provincial premiers the holding of a federal-provincial meeting in Ottawa next Wednesday and Thursday in order to discuss the prices and incomes program generally and, in particular, the role the provinces may play in the public sector and in restraining rents and professional fees. The meeting will be attended by ministers of finance, ministers of labour and other provincial ministers responsible for public service compensation.

An hon. Member: What about housing?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If I may refer in detail to the bill in order to bring attention to some of the measures we feel essential and important, I ought to point out that under clause 3 the governor in council, by order in council, will have responsibility to translate the provisions of the guidelines as set out in the white paper and as modified as may seem advisable by the kind of reaction and advice we are now getting from all sectors of the economy. In other words, it will have responsibility to translate those guidelines and concepts into regulations under the act. For this purpose I draw attention to my remarks of Tuesday last in which I gave notice to parliament, and therefore to the community, that under clause 3(3), as of Tuesday, October 14, those guidelines would be applicable for the purposes of the law.

As I have said, it is obvious that the reactions of provincial governments, the labour movement, business and the professions will give us cause to reflect on the guidelines as set out, and we shall seek to mould the provisions of the guidelines and the regulations to the actual experience of Canadians.

Another problem which has been discussed in the last several days is the treatment of those who were in the process of negotiation before the guidelines came into effect. The policy paper states that special consideration will be given to those cases where contracts have expired and negotiations are under way, where the expired contract was signed prior to the beginning of 1974. Employees and employers in this position who are subject to enforcement should first attempt to reach a settlement, after which they should refer it to the Anti-Inflation Board for its assessment. The board will be expected to give special consideration to the settlement in these circumstances, taking account also of any of the special modifying provisions in the guidelines which may be applicable in deciding whether the settlement is acceptable.

Perhaps I may supplement an answer I gave earlier to the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) in response to one specific part of his question. The longshoremen and stevedoring operations aspects of Cape Breton, being under the jurisdiction of the CNR, will, of course, be covered by the actions of the Anti-Inflation Board.

I would now turn to the bill which defines the areas of application and enforcement of the guidelines, establishes the Anti-Inflation Board, the administrator and the Anti-Inflation Appeal Board, provides enforcement powers and gives authority to enter into agreements with provinces which provide for application of restraint in the provincial public sectors. As I have said, the act will empower the governor in council to promulgate the guidelines in the form of regulations for the restraint of prices, profit margins, compensation and dividends.

● (1220)

As hon. members are aware, the Anti-Inflation Board has now been established under an order in council pursuant to the Inquiries Act. The board so constituted will be succeeded in its existing form, but with the same personnel, by the board once this statute has received royal assent. The two senior members of that board are well known to the House. Already appointed is the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin as the chairman, and Mrs. Beryl Plumptre as the vice-chairman. It is intended that a third full-time member should be appointed to the board to sit in Ottawa, and five full-time members to sit in each of the major regions of Canada, assisted by additional part-time members. It may be that further members will be added later, depending on the form of participation decided by the provinces.

Commenting on a question raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), there have, of course, been contacts made with prominent individuals in the community whom we feel would be very apt to assume this responsibility. I hope we will be able very shortly to announce both the personnel here in Ottawa and on the local boards.

I believe that the responsibilities to be exercised by the Anti-Inflation Board are reasonably clear. What is perhaps less clear is our reason for proposing the establishment of the separate office of the administrator to oversee enforcement procedures that may be required under the act. Undoubtedly, this function could have been performed by the board, but it was our feeling it would be preferable to divide it.

The role of the Anti-Inflation Board goes considerably beyond that of ensuring compliance with the guidelines by those sectors of the economy subject to enforcement. It has, as I remarked elsewhere, the responsibility to go out—we hope with missionary zeal—and persuade all sectors of the economy to keep their demands within the guidelines. It was our view that to better fulfil this role we should not call on one person to act at the same time as both conciliator and enforcer.

If the board is called on to persuade a party to modify prices and incomes which it considers in violation of the guidelines and subject to the provisions of the law, it would be empowered to refer the case to the administrator for his consideration. If the administrator concludes the guidelines have been breached, he can issue an order enjoining their contravention and requiring reimbursement where appropriate. Orders of the administrator may be appealed to the Anti-Inflation Appeal Tribunal which is already established under the bill. The decisions of that tribunal will, of course, be subject to the general provisions of the Federal Court Act with provision for appeal to the Federal Court. The administrator's orders may from time to time be changed or rescinded by the governor in council.

With regard to the so-called teeth of the bill, it provides penalties for failure to comply with an order of the administrator, for failure to keep appropriate records, and for misrepresentation. It enables the administrator to levy a penalty of up to 25 per cent of the amount by which revenues received or compensation or dividends paid contravened the guidelines where the person knowingly contravened or conspired knowingly to contravene the guidelines without having reasonable grounds for believing that the contravention could be justified.

I would like to refer to the period during which the legislation will be in effect. This question was raised in the earlier debate. As members are aware, the bill provides for a termination date of December 31, 1978, although it may be terminated earlier than that by proclamation, or extended beyond that period with the concurrence of parliament. Because inflation is so deeply entrenched, it cannot be expected that it will be possible to wind it down quickly or easily. Certainly, no dramatic results can be expected in the early stages. For my own part, I am very anxious that this intervention by the government in the operation of the economy should end at the earliest possible date. When that will be, however, will depend very much on the extent to which we are successful in achieving our objective.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity to respond to some of the concerns, questions and criticisms that have been raised in connection with the program announced by the government to launch a concerted attack on the major underlying problems confronting our economy. I very much welcome the generally strong support for the program that has been expressed across the country during the past few days. I recognize that the hosannas were, of course, not universal—that was to be expected—but I appreciate the sense of responsibility displayed by those who differ with our judgment, and I respect their points of view.

A few days ago I read with some bemusement an editorial in a newspaper which has long urged adoption of controls upon us. It was berating the government with all its usual acerbity because of the complexity of the measures put forward. It is rather simple-minded, it seems to me, to believe that in an economy as large and complex as our own it is possible to devise a simple prices and incomes program which is at the same time reasonably fair and effective.

As I indicated when I spoke in the special debate on Tuesday, and would like to emphasize again, we are well aware that the program proposed in the legislation before the House is bound to create difficulties and uncertainties. They are inherent in the nature of our economy. We will be working very hard in the days ahead to do everything possible to minimize those difficulties and uncertainties in consultation with the provinces, labour, business and other groups. But there is certainly no such thing as a perfect system that will be fully acceptable to all the people all the time. No doubt there will be conflicts and contradictions, particularly in trying to deal with the tough problems that will arise during the transition period. As the Leader of the Opposition has suggested, perhaps the best that one can hope for is some form of rough justice. That, however, is surely far more preferable than the rough injustice created by inflation itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I must say that I am obliged to the members of the official opposition for referring to the past. I want, with the same kind of gentleness and restraint for which I am always known—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —and which the Leader of the Opposition demonstrated the other day, to refer to the question raised about the policies followed by his party at the time of the 1974 election campaign and before. I would probably be less than human if I did not comment on the remarks that he made, perhaps out of context, about energy conservation. There was a lot of talk by the Leader of the Opposition last Tuesday about changes of mind, changes of direction and suggestions about problems of immorality. I invite the House to go back several months to the evening when the conservation program was announced here. The most fundamental observation the Leader of the Opposition could make at that time about that program was to trot out his rather tired old joke about underwear. Indeed, those who were present at that time will recall the statement had to be made over the hollering and yelling of his supporters who at that time were not deeply interested in energy conservation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There is a learning factor in these things. If several months later the Leader of the Opposition is prepared to take a positive viewpoint toward energy conservation, I welcome him to the fold and promise not to berate him again for his change of heart.

● (1230)

As I anticipated, the Leader of the Opposition could not resist the temptation to characterize the program now being put forward by the government as a vindication of the mandatory, comprehensive prices and incomes control program he advocated during the last election campaign and for 15 months before that. It is, of course, nothing of the kind.

I referred the other day to an important and valuable witness in this context whom I should like to summon—and I will call only one witness in this regard—with respect to the assertion made by the Leader of the Opposition and the wisdom of the policy he put forward during the 1974 election. I refer, of course, to the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), a professional economist, a former dean of the school of business at York University, a former chairman, on behalf of the big blue machine, of the Ontario Economic Council, a former Conservative financial critic, and the architect of the wage and price control program which he first proposed in this House on behalf of his party on February 22, 1973.

Mr. Alexander: This is what you call co-operation? I get the point.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is an interesting notion implied by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). This is the kind of parliamentary give-and-take that he likes: he gives, but he cannot take. Speaking to the Kiwanis Club of Toronto on September 3, 1975, the hon. member for Don Valley contended that a case could be made for the position adopted by the Conservative Party when it was first put forward in the Spring of 1973. But, he added—and this is a direct quotation from his text:

> As you will recall, in the fall of 1973 the OPEC countries raised the price of oil and started their embargo and the economic situation throughout the world changed. Obviously, new economic policies were required but the response of the Progressive Conservative Party was that the public expected national parties to stay with their position.

The hon. member continued:

> On the face of it, such a stand is absurd because policies must change with prevailing conditions. The party lost credibility and, as usual, the Canadian people were not willing to elect a party that seemed so incompetent.

I will say no more about the Conservative view in this connection. It would seem to me that in all probability the more meaningful debate which could take place on this subject would be inside the official opposition caucus room rather than in this chamber.

As for the New Democratic Party, to adapt an immortal phrase of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), it seems to me the leader of that party tipped over a few ashcans himself when putting his policy forward the other day. During the course of the debate, the hon. gentleman agreed that inflation presented a very serious problem, but his proposals for dealing with that problem were notable for their absence. He by no means stands alone in his contention that, while the prices and incomes measures proposed by the government may well be effective in restraining wages and salaries, they will be quite ineffective in restraining prices and profits.

He gave two reasons—two contradictory reasons—to support this contention. He said there was no way of preventing an army of company accountants circumventing the guidelines by padding costs and manipulating profits. I have to confess that this is an arguable case. At the same time, I know of no one with less credibility to advance that argument than the leader of the New Democratic Party. How many speeches have we heard inside and outside the House by a succession of NDP leaders and their followers demanding the establishment of some kind of federal agency to restrain excessive profits and prices? During the last election campaign, David Lewis stomped back and forth across the country calling for the creation of a national price control board to investigate and roll back prices which it found to be unjustifiably high. Speaking in Vancouver two weeks ago, Mr. Lewis' successor, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), is reported by the Canadian Press to have told a news conference that Canada should meet inflation head on by establishing a prices review board with teeth in it. He keeps referring to the teeth. While he was out in Vancouver he must have gone to see "Jaws".

An hon. Member: We can see the jaws working now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The teeth should operate over many sectors of the economy, he said, and the board should have power to roll back inflationary price hikes. I am not surprised that the NDP leader should not have repeated that particular statement here in the House the other day. It must have been transparently obvious, even to him, that he could not at one and the same time call for the establishment of a prices review board with teeth in it and then argue that such a board would be rendered toothless by an army of big business accountants. That, after all, would have made a sham and a mockery of his own proposal put forward just two weeks ago and of the position taken by his party 15 months before. What he was doing, apparently, when he referred to jaws, was enlisting the aid of the shark and then saying it was going to be a rubber shark.

When he spoke in the debate, the leader of the New Democratic Party contended that some measure of control could be established over prices and profits only by creating "an army of bureaucrats". I have never heard it suggested by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby or by any of his supporters that a similar army of bureaucrats would be needed to man the prices review board which his party has repeatedly advocated. It is easy to conjure a vision of a phalanx of furtive accountants labouring long into the night to work their deceptions. I might remind the hon. member, though, that over the years a comprehensive and well established system of accounting practices has been developed, particularly in connection with corporate income tax, in order to prevent just such deceptions.

I would remind him, also, that when he suggests it is impracticable to deal with price increases after they have occurred by regulating profits, he further contradicts the position taken by his own party. Mr. Lewis, it may be recalled, proposed to regulate prices by reference to returns of profit on capital.

An hon. Member: Let us talk about the bill.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is true it is our intention that the staff of the Anti-Inflation Board should, at least at the outset, be reasonably small and compact. We have no wish to create another army of bureaucrats if it can possibly be avoided; and I think it can. But the board will have power to engage outside services as may be required from time to time to augment its own facilities. In addition, I anticipate that the administrator will also be able to call on existing government services, for example, those of Revenue Canada, to assist him in carrying out his responsibilities under the act.

In this connection, I might advise the House that I have been informed by the chairman of the board, Mr. Pepin, that he is sending letters to all of the larger companies covered by the compliance provisions requesting their assistance and co-operation. The letter indicates the records they will be required to keep in order to comply with the terms of the policy statement and the bill, copies of which are also being sent. The companies are further advised that in some cases they will be required, under the authority of this legislation, to give the board prior notification of proposed price increases once the act comes into force, a power the board does not now possess under the Inquiries Act. We are calling for at least some prior notification of major price increases. While I cannot pretend that the administrative machinery we are proposing will ensure total effectiveness in the area of prices and profits, I am confident it will play an extremely important role in discouraging price and profit violations.

During the course of his remarks, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby referred to certain figures related to price and wage levels in Canada over recent years. I think it is important to reflect on this, because enforcement is the backbone of the whole program. The contention made at that time was that restraint over wages and salaries was unnecessary. I might say this was notwithstanding his suggestion, which I understand the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby made at a press conference in Vancouver, that a prices review board—the one he referred to—should have authority to investigate sharp wage hikes.

It is, of course, a matter of judgment whether there is reason for concern over the fact that for a period of several months the rate of wages and salary increases in Canada, and more particularly claimed increases, has been rising at twice the pace of that achieved in the United States. I find that his position contrasts rather strongly, however, with that of the three NDP premiers, all of whom expressed concern, in their responsibilities of office, about the impact in their communities of very substantial increases.

On a number of occasions the leader of the New Democratic Party has noted, as he did last Tuesday, that over a three-year period to mid-1975 the consumer price index rose by 33 per cent, while the average industrial wage rose by 36 per cent, which meant that the real increase in the standard of living for working Canadians was at about the level of 1 per cent annually during that period. Therefore, he concluded, Canadian workers had received less than their fair share of the increase in national wealth.

I think it is fair to remind the hon. member that in most of the major industrial countries, the real standard of living of the industrial worker has not increased but in fact has declined significantly. Also during this period the real GNP per worker in Canada declined by 3.2 per cent, notwithstanding the relatively strong expansion of our economy by comparison with other countries, because of lagging productivity growth and the exceptionally large increase which has been taking place in the size of the work force. But the real, personal disposable income that is available per worker—that is to say, what he has in his hands when he takes home his pay—after payment of direct taxes increased by 3.8 per cent in Canada; and one of the major factors accounting for this development is the personal income tax reductions and higher income support programs which this government has espoused.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to respond to suggestions by the leader of the NDP that the program we have proposed is unfair because the minimum increase provided for under the guidelines of up to $600 a year for those of moderate income is unreasonably low and, perhaps more importantly, that there is no mandatory requirement that an increase of that amount be provided. There is nothing magical about the $600 figure that we have proposed as a minimum. What figure should be selected is obviously a matter of judgment, and I noted with interest that while the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby was critical of that figure, he expressly avoided indicating what figure he thought would be reasonable under the circumstances.

We have attempted, for our part, Mr. Speaker, to strike a balance that would make room for some greater increase in income for those in the lower brackets than would be permitted under the guidelines, and which at the same time would be reasonably consistent with moderating the pace of inflation in Canada.

Were we to have taken no action to attempt to dampen the present spiral of costs and prices, there would be equally no assurance that those of lower incomes would receive increases that matched or exceeded this minimum. In fact, the prospect is that those on the lower rungs of the income ladder would be significantly worse off, in real terms. That is the point I made at the start of my remarks, that in this period of rapid escalation of demands it is those with the least power, those at the lower end of the income scale, who suffer most at the expense of those with the real clout. If the more powerful groups in our society are able to continue successfully in carving out an increasingly larger real share of the economic pie, there will be that much less available for those who are less powerful; and it is for that reason that we recommend this program on behalf of that particular income group.

It is often suggested, and we do not disagree, that greater equity must be achieved in the distribution of the nation's income. It is one thing, however, to acknowledge this goal in principle; it is another to observe it in practice. In practice, there is no way in which those on the lower rungs can secure a greater share of real income if those on the upper rungs continue to be successful not only in maintaining traditional differentials in income but in widening those differentials as circumstances and economic power permit.

It is sometimes contended that some form of social assistance, either by way of a tax credit or other means, should be adopted to bring about greater equity in the distribution of national income. Indeed, we in this country have adopted over the years one of the most advanced systems of social assistance to be found anywhere in the world. I think it should be remembered, however, that the means to achieve this objective has to come from somewhere. The goal of narrowing the gap in income distribution can be thwarted if those in higher brackets are successful in maintaining or increasing their own real, after tax share of take-home pay by pushing up their income levels. Hence the program that has been put forward.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this is not the time to embark upon major new social assistance programs which one way or another would add substantially to government costs. As I have said, the greatest contribution that we can make now to improving the well-being of those in lower income groups is to focus our energies on breaking the spiral of inflation which threatens to leave them farther and farther behind.

Before I conclude, may I underline the fact that the prices and incomes program which is embodied in the legislation before the House does not, and of course cannot, stand alone but must be seen as part of other interrelated policies and programs. It cannot be expected, for example, that the measures to bring about price and income restraint will be successful in moderating inflation and facilitating the restoration of sustainable economic growth unless we also pursue appropriate fiscal and monetary policies. Special additional measures will undoubtedly be required to deal with special problems, such as housing. But it is essential to recognize that there are very real and severe limitations on what governments can do in terms of their over-all fiscal position.

If we were to increase substantially the total cash requirements of governments by sharply increasing spending, by sharply cutting taxes, or by both, we would add further to the already high demands that governments are making on capital markets. This would push interest rates to still higher levels and, in turn, further impede economic recovery, particularly of housing construction. Some might suggest that in order to accommodate increased government borrowing we should expand the growth of the money supply. Any brief effect that that would have—

An hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Hon. members opposite ask who it was. It seems to me that we had a general chorus of dissent against the Governor of the Bank of Canada when he increased interest rates as a means of moderating growth of the money supply. You cannot have it both ways. So there has been support for increases in the growth of the money supply on the other side of the House, I think it is fair to say, by their objection to that particular decision.

As I was saying, any brief effect that such a move would have—namely, increasing the money supply—in reducing short-term interest rates would be quickly engulfed by the substantial increase in longer term interest rates that would also follow because of the impact that excessive monetary growth would have in generating expectations of still higher inflation.

In the operation of our economic system, therefore, I think hon. members have to remember that everything connects. I think that the prices and incomes policy established in this bill can make an important contribution to restoring the stability of Canada's economy so long as our other programs and policies are carefully directed toward achieving the same objectives. That, Mr. Speaker, will be the objective of this government within the over-all context of the prices and incomes policy, as well as to concert policy-making generally, so that we may be able to reduce the spiral of inflation in Canada and, in particular, bring about a better comparative position for those at the lower end of the income scale, people who, whatever the side of the House and whatever the party, should be the prime concern of all of us.

● (1250)

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would begin—

Mr. Trudeau: Is this a point of order, or is the hon. member making a speech?

Mr. Stanfield: I hope so, because you need to be brought to order in some way.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) objects to my making a speech, but I am going to go ahead anyway.

An hon. Member: When is he going to make a speech?

Mr. Trudeau: On Monday.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I will deal with the Prime Minister after I have demolished the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). During the course of this debate I intend to make some comments about the Minister of Finance in his capacity as a lawyer and in relation to some of the provisions of this bill. I say this to him to begin with, that he has at least learned something. If one has a weak case, one concentrates on irrelevant issues, and that is exactly what the Minister of Finance has done.

Mr. Speaker, we have before us one of the most important bills of all those that have been placed before parliament for a great many years, probably since the last war. I intend to say something about its values later on. At the same time, we have a Minister of Finance who has failed miserably, abjectly and utterly to defend the bill or to explain those provisions about which some of us are deeply concerned. He spent most of his time engaged in a scurrilous attack on the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the leader of the NDP and other members.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You know that is true.

Mr. Baldwin: This minister has failed to meet the test by dealing in plain and honest terms with this extremely important measure. I am sure his predecessor would not have failed to do that. There is every indication that this minister has not done that because he cannot, and perhaps he cannot because his heart is not in it.

An hon. Member: He just doesn't understand it.

Mr. Baldwin: It is rather interesting to note that in his preface the minister went into the matter of the constituents in his own riding having to pay tremendous increases in rentals for housing accommodation. I suggest to the minister that this is a responsibility which he and his colleagues must bear. During the time that this difficult situation has been developing—I refer to the difficulties in respect of inflation which have now occurred—members of this party and others in this House have put forward suggestions and propositions. Many were put forward during the last election campaign and even before that time; but the trouble was that a group of bloodless zombies masquerading as a cabinet did not have the guts to do anything about the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Is that a scurrilous attack?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Baldwin: That is a fair description, in a political sense, of that group of people sitting opposite me; and I am speaking in a political sense. It pains me to have to say this, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is rather interesting to note that what we have heard from the Minister of Finance today is a preview of his next budget. He has talked about government objectives, and I think we have an indication of what is likely to be in his next budget, if this minister should survive that long.

An hon. Member: He will resign before then.

Mr. Baldwin: What else can we take from this minister's statement? We are faced with an exceedingly complicated and difficult problem, with its pressures upon so many sectors of our economy. This is a problem which will require co-operation from all segments of our society, particularly the provinces and the municipalities. Is this proposed government co-operation to be achieved by the kind of comments made by the minister today? Will that kind of comment result in the kind of conciliation, understanding and co-operation that is required? Is this the kind of thing we are going to hear throughout this land from the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and others in the government? If that is the case, then with all the good will in the world I doubt that the government will be successful.

While we have most grave reservations about this legislation in its present form, we want a program to be put in place by this parliament which will work to do something about the inflation that has plagued the people of Canada for altogether too long.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I admonish the minister and suggest to him that he find a more conciliatory and reasonable approach in dealing with the people of Canada, starting with the members of this House and carrying on to include provincial governments and those segments of the labour and business communities with which he will be dealing. I suggest to the Prime Minister that otherwise he should buy a muzzle and make it available to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might call it one o'clock, as this seems to be an appropriate time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, having had time to reflect during the lunch hour, I feel I dealt a little too harshly with the Minister of Finance, particularly in one instance. The Minister of Finance has lightened the labours of myself and other members of our party by making it crystal clear that the program envisaged in the legislation and the guidelines which have been presented to this House in the form of a white paper are completely distinct and different from what was advanced by this party during the election campaign of 1974 and before.

I refer to the proposals advanced by my leader and supported by members of this party which constituted, in fact, a workable package and lacked the monstrous qualities contained in the program the government has brought forward. The minister's admission is now on the record, and it is quite clear that what, in fact, is contained within the four corners of the bill and of the guidelines is not the package which was proposed by our party.

Before leaving the speech made by the minister, I want to say, again, how genuinely sorry I am that he made no real effort to deal with the bill and to explain its provisions. It is an exceedingly difficult set of proposals which the government is bringing forward. The proposals are full of enigmas, confusion, ambiguities, puzzles, doubts and uncertainties.

At times we in this House become too introspective, but outside the four walls of this chamber there are thousands of people who have important decisions to make involving the economy of this country and the well-being and social and economic future of millions of Canadians who are anxious to know what is involved. I did not expect the minister to have at his fingertips at this time all the answers not only to the questions which have been asked by hon. members in this House but those which are being asked by people all over this country. However, in his second reading speech in which he set out to seek approval in principle of this type of measure, I think it was reasonable to believe he would come before this House prepared and equipped with knowledge and information to provide at least some of the answers. This he has not done. I do not know whether the minister has not done this because there is not complete agreement among members of the government. If so, that is a tragedy. It may be because the minister himself is not too certain of the facts, the law and the economics involved. I do not know.

When I look at the number of clauses and the draftsmanship in respect of the clauses, I have every reason to believe this bill has been around the Privy Council for some time. If that were the case, and if the minister and the Prime Minister believed in the bill and the program, the minister would have come here with a speech of some length—and I would have been prepared to listen to it—in which he would have dealt in depth and in detail with the problems which face this country in respect of our inflationary condition, the problems which this bill poses and the problems to which the bill supposedly offers solutions. I am particularly sorry this has not been done. I hope the minister, when he closes the debate, will rectify this mistake. I hope he will do something to answer the questions which are being asked by people all over this land.

I propose to deal in a brief way with some of the issues consistent with this being a proposal for approval at second reading and reference to a committee. I shall raise, from time to time, various issues dealing with parts of the bill. First, I should like to emphasize what I suggest is an absolutely imperative and essential condition if this enterprise is to have any success. I refer to the need for the wholehearted, enthusiastic and highly visible involvement of the Prime Minister. We did not get that feeling from his appearance on television the other night and have not been encouraged by the reticence of the Prime Minister to this point, although I was glad to hear him suggest today that he might be speaking on Monday. The impression I have is derived not only from what he has left unsaid but from the manner in which he said what he did say.

If I were a show critic and had only one sentence by which to describe the performance of the Prime Minister on Monday night, it would be, "Leading man mumbles lines he doesn't believe in a play he finds unreal". I suggest that this is not the way in which to fashion and secure the confidence and co-operation of the great mass of Canadians. Even with such confidence and co-operation, which are conditions precedent to any realistic and reasonable effort to solve the crisis of inflation which has overwhelmed us, it will be difficult—without them it will be impossible. One gets the sinking feeling very early in the proceedings that the Prime Minister is heading for the bunker. This is totally unacceptable, in the circumstances, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister was the country's leading salesman against mandatory controls until Monday night. He alone can undo what he has done. There is no other way. Parliament and the country cannot tolerate another "death of a salesman."

The Prime Minister is not renowned for listening to advice, but perhaps he might take some of his own which he put forward on February 28, 1974, as recorded at page 36 of Hansard for that date. This is what he said:

● (1410)

—income controls risk hurting the small and the poor more than they do the big and the rich; and while that might be of minor concern to the more conservative governments and political parties, it is of great and fundamental concern to this government—

We do not believe that the workingman should be expected to bear an unfair share of the cost of solving the problems of inflation, and that is why we will ask him to treat with great skepticism any argument for general controls which does not set out all the facts, the pleasant as well as the unpleasant, those with political appeal and those without.

In all honesty, I say to the government and to the Prime Minister that if he really believes that a program of restraint can be made to work—and I am one who not only hopes but feels that it is essential—so that inflation can be contained, then he was to assume real leadership. Not only must he be sincere but he must also be perceived to be sincere. He is required to convince this parliament and the nation that this is his immediate and major task. I have to suggest that this has not happened so far, and what the Prime Minister said on Monday night could not in any way be construed as dealing with my remarks.

I have already set forth what the Prime Minister said in 1974. He may well think that he covered that up by his words etched in stone on television the other night. If this is what he thinks, he is not only wrong but he is, more importantly, doing a disservice to the program of the government and to Canadians. A one-shot commandeering of the television networks is just not good enough. His taciturnity in parliament is counterproductive in its effect. The working man, who was of so much rhetorical concern to the Prime Minister in February of 1974, does not have videotape equipment on which to replay the Prime Minister to bolster his spirits.

How is it helpful to this program if the workingman feels that to a muffler installer he may be a somebody, but to the Prime Minister it seems that he is just another neglected nobody on society's back benches?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I confess that there is a certain enjoyable element in reminding the Prime Minister of his earlier statements, but let me hasten to assure the House that we are very serious about the point being made. We have a bill before us of unprecedented dimensions in peacetime. I agree with the Minister of Finance that it will be generally perceived to be frightening. If there is also a general perception that the Prime Minister has pressed the button and then gone off to languish by the pool, we are all headed for a morass of confrontation through our society. I would like to raise what I consider to be some fairly important and contentious aspects of the legislation which in our view will have to be taken into account and corrective measures applied before the bill is finally passed through all stages by this House.

To begin with, I am simply appalled at the effrontery of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the government in asking this House to grant to it the unique, extraordinary and terrifying powers, to use the minister's words, which are asked for for an open-ended period of time. I would protest if my own party asked for those powers. Despite the respect and admiration I have for my leader, I would oppose him if he introduced legislation of this kind, although I could never see him seeking to do so in these terms. Let me put it simply in this way: the legislation as it presently stands would permit this government, some time in the late fall of 1978, to put forward and ram through motions which could extend for another two, three or four years the kind of legislation which we are considering. I am not prepared to entrust this power to any group of people, and certainly not to this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I repeat, that as far as we are concerned, this aspect is totally unacceptable and simple will not wash. We will be proposing an amendment at the appropriate stages of committee and later to deal with this, and in our view failure to provide something to cover this problem, so that we will not be in a position where we sit here until 1978 waiting for the government to decide whether to extend the legislation, is unacceptable. We will propose an amendment which will provide that at an earlier date during the life of this legislation, this House will have, as it must, the right to decide whether under the circumstances which then exist the extension of the legislation is warranted.

Then there is the idiotic procedure outlined governing the lines of communication and appeal between the anti-inflation tribunal, the administrator, the deputy administrators, the appeal tribunal, the Federal Court and the cabinet. This is a sort of hydra-headed monster, a form of legislative Rube Goldberg caricature which is going to cause great trouble for the people in labour unions, business and all elements of our society affected by this legislation.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Even the marketing boards.

Mr. Baldwin: There is the question of the extent and nature of the penalties, the way they are imposed and the judicial power given to the administrator to act as investigator, Crown prosecutor, judge, jury and executioner in connection with the administration of the legislation. There will be the question of detailing the special circumstances which will permit decisions to be made in order to provide complete equity. However, I will leave these for others to deal with. I would say, however, that it should come as no surprise to members of this House when I express my anxiety as to the extraordinary extent to which the House is being asked to place in the hands of this government unique and tremendous authority to deal, in the most intimate detail, with the property and the social and economic well-being of the people of Canada.

The whole course of the history of this government, of the Trudeau administration and its immediate predecessor, has been marked by the extent to which they have reached out year by year, session by session, act by act, and stolen from the people the right to order their own affairs, and vested that right in the bureaucrats of Ottawa; and in doing so then have refused to provide adequate safeguards to prevent the abuse of that power.

I will not take the time of the House at this stage to go through the bill clause by clause and to point out the extent of and the places where vast, authoritarian fiats have been granted to the various tribunals, the administrators and the cabinet. It is complete, unrestricted and unabridged authoritarianism granted to a government composed mainly of bureaucrats blooded by experience in high positions of one kind or another before coming into politics, and whose appetites have been whetted by their period in office as members of the cabinet.

● (1420)

Mr. Speaker, this party and this House would be delinquent in its duty if it failed to provide, by way of affirmation or negative resolution, that parliament should retain some measure of control and supervision. It ought not to be asked, nor must it agree, to yield on behalf of the people its duty to examine from time to time the salient aspects of what is being done under authority granted by the legislation. It is our intention to press to see that apt words to this effect are included in the bill.

I see my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), is in the House. I think only he and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) were in the House at the time it was found necessary to wrench from another Liberal administration the powers it had taken during the last world war and retained year after year, long after the crisis had evaporated. I think that is a lesson we cannot forget.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Same old gang.

Mr. Baldwin: I would not say it is the same old gang; I would say they are a lot worse, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Same old jokes.

Mr. Baldwin: It would have been the intention of this party, if it had been placed in that position following the last election, to have dealt with the problems of inflation to provide, in any legislation passed, the most salutary means of supervision by parliament. This is one aspect of public life which distinguishes our party from the governing Liberal party: our unreserved belief in the supremacy of parliament and the right to supervise, on behalf of our constituents, the actions of the government, particularly a government which shows itself to be power-struck and imbued with the belief that there is a divinity in the Liberal hierarchy which gives them the right not just to govern but to rule.

Under these circumstances, I would be most unhappy to see this legislation passed in its present form without there being some capacity left in parliament to exercise its ultimate supervision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Let me say that I utter these words with complete sincerity and deep earnestness: the end product of the weakening of the legislative system and the power grab of the executive system is dictatorship. There is no doubt about that. Whether it is done in one bite, or by gradualism and the whittling away process, is immaterial. There are countries today in the world, in Europe, which have gone so far along this road, often under the feeble disguise of socialism or democratic socialism, they cannot turn back. The tragedy is that as they float along on their easy ride, they do not even know their boat has been caught in a destructive whirlpool.

I turn to the question of information, knowledge, facts. As to this, also, there is no argument as to my position, the position of my leader and of our party. We have stood for a number of years for a program of freedom of information so that the people of this country will know what are the facts, what is the truth, and the basis upon which the governments are operating. I say we have no confidence in this government or in its good faith on this issue. We insist that it must be answerable to this House, on behalf of those who will be so deeply affected. We will want to know what discretion it is exercising under the bill, how it is exercising it, and why.

Here we have a Prime Minister and a cabinet which, almost up to the final moment when it produced the program out of which this bill was formulated, continued to assert in budgets, in speeches, in debates, in and out of the House, that things were improving, that there was no need for controls; which has, in general, engaged in a measure of calculated deception through secrecy, misinformation, half truths and outright lies. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we will expect, before this bill is passed, that some of its very rigid provisions at the present time with regard to confidentiality—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Surely the hon. member will withdraw that last remark.

Mr. Baldwin: —will have to be amended and provide for freedom of information. Because of our experience in the past—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member referred to this government as having engaged in "outright lies". Surely that is not a parliamentary expression. I think he should withdraw it.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think what we are talking about is privilege of members of the House. If the minister wants to indicate that I was talking about him, of course I will be glad to withdraw the remark. But I was not talking about him, Mr. Speaker, I was talking about the government; and the government, of course, includes ministers, deputy ministers, stooges, parliamentary assistants—so I would defy the thin-skinned and sensitive minister to find anything in the precedents which provides that I am not entitled to say that. However, if the minister is really worried about it, I will be—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is parliamentary practice that you should withdraw.

Mr. Baldwin: As it applies to members. If the minister is that thin-skinned about it, so sensitive and worried about it, I am perfectly prepared to say I might have stretched my imagination just a little bit.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is scurrilous.

Mr. Baldwin: Before this bill is passed there are some other things that we think the government should do. Because of our experience in the past, and because of the waffling in the speeches during this debate with regard to the question of government restraint, we should require and should obtain, before the bill is passed, a commitment of the firmest kind that the government will exercise fiscal restraint—not just the airy-fairy, vague statements of the past, always made with tongue in cheek, never meant and never carried out, always left in the realm of fantasy. If the government is to be credible, it is essential that before the debate is concluded a responsible minister stands in this House and by verse, chapter and number, gives this commitment. If they do not, then I suggest it will sadly impair their credibility in the country for the purpose of the program which they have proposed in this legislation.

Let me return to the point I made at the beginning. If any form of incomes policy is going to work, there must be the utmost trust and confidence between the governed and the governors, and that confidence cannot be maintained unless the governors are prepared to take the governed into their confidence, to tell the facts truthfully, honestly, accompanying the decisions which are being made. I am convinced that the people of this country have the capacity, endurance and willingness to assume the responsibilities which they must to help solve this inflation, but only if they have respect for those at the top who are making the rules and can expect to be told the truth. I repeat, before the bill is passed it should contain a statutory right of access to information.

I could talk about the constitutional issues, Mr. Speaker, but this is not the place to do so. The minister and I have been over this ground before on his energy bills, where we have tangled over the constitutionality question. I am not going to waste the time of the House by engaging in another argument with him. I left those other debates, however, wondering who the professor was who passed him in constitutional law. I often wonder if he was at the University of Montreal in 1961 when the Prime Minister was a professor of constitutional law.

This matter has been raised by my leader and by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. In reading the provisions of the bill, I note there is a very careful distinction between the basis on which it proceeds the preamble, and the preamble in the legislation passed during the course of the last world war. I do not know whether this is because the government has doubts about its own legislative capacity. That doubt may be maintained because they have not seen fit to exempt the provinces. I do not object; I merely say that a fair survey of the provisions of the bill indicates that the government doubts its own legislative capacity.

● (1430)

When the minister replies to end the debate, I hope he will tell the House if it is intended that this legislation shall abrogate the Bill of Rights. One provision of this bill is that the provisions of the act shall apply notwithstanding any other legislative proposals existing in any other acts of this country. Does the government intend the Bill of Rights to be subordinate to this legislation? I ask this because on the order paper there is a bill dealing with human rights, a bill which will be far reaching in its effect. Does the government intend this bill to override the human rights legislation? Perhaps the minister will answer these questions when he closes the debate.

I hope that any defects which may exist with respect to powers the government seeks will be met by the pursuit of a vigilant course of communication between the federal government and the provinces, to ensure that if a bill is finally produced it is acceptable to this House. That cannot be said of the bill we are looking at now. We hope that the bill will be not constitutionally unsound or susceptible to challenge by provinces which are unwilling to submit to the federal jurisdiction.

It appears that this bill will go to a standing committee. Let me make it quite clear that it is not the intention of my party to hold up the legislation unnecessarily. That is far from our purpose. But we should be failing in our duty to our party, our constituents and our country if, on a measure as important as this, we do not take every reasonable opportunity to cross-examine officials as to the meaning of certain clauses—unless the minister can demonstrate a knowledge, later, which he has not indicated so far—to secure explanations, to move amendments, some of which I have indicated, and to some extent at least to allow for the calling of witnesses and the presentation of briefs.

I want to make it clear that in our opinion this does not mean that the committee should be thrown open for the whole world to appear. This would cause difficulties. To some extent, time is of the essence. But having in mind what I observe to be the approach of the chairman and vice-chairman of the proposed Anti-Inflation Review Board, I suggest that there is obviously some lack of understanding and comprehension of what is involved on their part and they might well appear before the committee to obtain some on-the-job training and experience which they have not had so far. It is absolutely essential to give representatives of labour, business and of consumers the opportunity to appear before the committee and give their views, so that they can discover what is involved in the legislation, ask questions and present their points of view.

I suggest to the minister and to the government that if government supporters on the committee are determined not to allow this kind of committee investigation, they will be doing a disservice to the committee, to parliament and to the general opportunity to introduce a program which will work. It will be far better to seek some indication at the committee stage of the problems and difficulties which are liable to occur, so that administrators and tribunals may plan accordingly, rather than wait until the actual foul-up takes place, a foul-up which would necessitate their doing these things after the event. For this reason, I make it plain that when the bill goes to the committee we will hold the government to be completely in the wrong if it should attempt to railroad the measure through without the kind of careful study it deserves.

I want to conclude on a note of caution. I think we all realize the problems which exist for any government at this time in connection with the administration of the affairs of the people they are governing. To govern today is often to have to make a choice between a number of alternatives, usually unpalatable, difficult and sometimes even dangerous. The decision this government is making has become infinitely more dangerous, more difficult and more unpalatable because it has refused obstinately until now to do anything to curb inflation in this country in a realistic manner. Consequently, the medicine they are proposing will be far harder to swallow.

I do not like government intervention. I do not like controls. I do not like being part of a legislature, nor would I like to be part of a government, which faces the duty of having to legislate for and establish guidelines and restraints on prices and compensation in order to deal with a highly inflammable situation. It is not in my nature, not in the nature of my leader, not in the nature of my party nor, I think, in the nature of the people of this country to indulge in this kind of exercise. But we are now, and have been for some considerable time, faced with the hard choice of either allowing the inflammable situation to continue until there is an explosion or taking the route our party proposed some time ago. We have always made it plain that the lesser of the two evils was action. If the sort of action we wanted many months ago to take had been taken, these problems would not have assumed their present proportions.

It now appears that reluctantly and, so far, half-heartedly on the part of the Prime Minister, the government has swung around to the same view. I note that Mr. Geoffrey Stevens, in an article published in this morning's newspaper, suggested that the Prime Minister is taking off on a countrywide educational tour. Significantly, that information came from some official, not from the Prime Minister. Many on my side of the House and many in the country feel that the Prime Minister's heart is not really in this legislation. Here is his chance to show that that impression is not right. The government's willingness to accept proposals for improving and modifying the bill will go a long way to disposing of the impression that the Prime Minister is being pushed into enacting this measure and that his mind is not on it.

The methods the government is using are not the methods we would have used. The overcomplicated, overstructured mechanism, with the grotesque assertion of powers which the government has brought forward without safeguards and provision for parliamentary supervision, do not satisfy us; nor will they do the job. Clearly, the bill will need substantial alteration and improvement. These improvements cannot be made at the present stage. In my view, the bill ought to go to committee within a reasonable time in order that these improvements can be inserted. Then we in parliament, and the people of the country, can get on with the job.

If the government is not prepared to bring this measure into line with what is reasonable, and to accept amendments which my party will indicate ought to be part of the bill, then I say that we reserve our right to vote against the bill when it comes back at the final stage.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the last statement of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), to the effect that his party reserves its right to vote against the bill. I think they may finally be on the right track with regard to price and income controls. When the white paper was first tabled in the House, a number of members of parliament were saying that a lot of questions were left unanswered and that we had to wait until we saw the bill. We now have the bill and there are even more questions left unanswered.

● (1440)

I do not think we have seen since the war and the invocation of the War Measures Act—and I have checked this with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others—so much power, so much authority delegated to a private board, commission or group of individuals outside the Government of Canada.

I have questioned senior people in the Department of Finance and talked to various members of the government, and I find that there are many, many questions they themselves cannot answer. What happens to contracts now being negotiated? What is a fair price? How are they really going to determine the profit of many of the commodities referred to? In many cases, they say they do not know. They say that these regulations will be left to the board, to Jean-Luc Pepin, his side-kick Beryl Plumptre and a few others to draft, with their own biases and their own interpretations. They will interpret whether the guidelines will be broken. They will interpret whether certain negotiations can continue and, indeed, whether collective bargaining can continue in this country. Those determinations will not be made in a bill we are going to be debating and voting on, but by a couple of highly paid bureaucrats. That is not the kind of thing that people in this country or people in this House want, approve of or should vote for at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: If I am wrong anywhere throughout this debate, I would like the minister to challenge me. We in this party believe that what we have seen in the white paper, the legislation before us, the comments of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the bureaucrats is unfair, unworkable, politically wrong and misleading. We believe it is a contravention and a contradiction of what the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), said in the budget last June. I could give quote after quote of what he said when he brought down that budget which was approved by this parliament. The economic direction authorized by this parliament has now been changed. We do not think that is right.

We believe the measures before us are very unfair. Basically, they are effective wage controls on working people with limitations that are very inequitable. We do not have any effective price controls. That is a matter I will deal with later. We have exemptions for many people who are collecting money from interest rates, stocks and bonds, mortgages, and so on. If we are to have a program that is going to work, I do not believe those sectors of the economy should be exempted. We believe that this is unworkable. When talking about wage and price controls of this nature, we should look back at a statement made by the Prime Minister. We should look at this week's issue of Maclean's regarding an interview carried out a few weeks ago with the Prime Minister.

We should also look at statements he made a few months ago to the press and the electronic media. I wish to read a quotation from a speech by the former minister of finance, a man who has had a lot of experience in the Department of Finance. He said eight months ago:

> The experience of many other countries, most particularly the United States and the United Kingdom, suggest that broad and comprehensive wage and price controls not only tend to disrupt economic growth but over time do little to curb inflation and may, in fact, even aggravate it.—It is an expanding economy that in time will enable us to grow out of inflation by providing the increase in real purchasing power Canadian families need to meet the increased cost of food and energy.

That was the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton. Suddenly the government changed its mind. What changed in the economy to make the government change its mind so suddenly? Another point is that the economic package concentrates on inflation. It seems to ignore the slump in the economy, unemployment and the housing crisis in this country. It is also deceiving. One reason it was brought in was that the government wanted to do a good PR job across the country to convince the people it is doing something.

There are indications from around the world that the rate of inflation may drop two or three points in the next few months. That will not be as a result of anything that is happening in this country, but because of external pressures from around the world. If that does happen, the government will try to claim credit for it because of this measure being brought into the House.

Unless amendments are moved, or the minister can clarify this, it is in essence nothing but a wage control package for workers. It will fall squarely on the shoulders of the little people and pensioners. All I can say is that, as a member of this House, I will do what I can not to co-operate with the government unless major amendments are made. I urge Canadians not to co-operate with the government in this measure. It is unfair. It is unequal. It will fall squarely on the shoulders of the ordinary, little people of this country.

Let us look at the proposals step by step. Wages can be easily controlled because they are bargained for. The negotiations are open to the press and the electronic media. The guidelines laid down by the government state that wages can increase 8 per cent this year, 6 per cent next year and 4 per cent the third year. In addition, there can be a productivity increase of 2 per cent per year. Meanwhile, professionals, corporations and companies can have unlimited increases in productivity. One clause of the bill states that fees will be controlled for lawyers, for example. However, if a lawyer expands his business and increases his productivity, his income will not be controlled. For the worker there is only a 2 per cent increase in productivity, regardless of the increase in productivity in the country.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: If the hon. member in the back row will look at the bill, he will see that certain exemptions are made in productivity for corporations and companies, but there is no limitation. Why is there no limitation there? A limitation is placed on the wage of a working person, a teacher or anyone else in this country who has to negotiate for his income.

Mr. Peters: His productivity is only 2 per cent, regardless.

Mr. Nystrom: As the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) says, his productivity is only 2 per cent, regardless of the productivity of that industry or the nation as a whole. Wages are easily controlled. They are negotiated out in the open. We then have the limitations on wages. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) said the $600 figure was just taken out of the air, perhaps some other figure should be used. I suggest that having the maximum for people earning the lowest salaries in this country at $600 is very unfair, when the salaries of those earning $25,000 or more can increase by $2,400 and still be within the terms of the guidelines. If there are contracts existing where there are automatic escalation clauses, that $2,400 limit can even be exceeded. That is very unfair.

● (1450)

If the minister wants a suggestion, I would say to him that instead of using a percentage increase, which really widens the gap between the rich and the poor, he should be looking at the increase in the cost of living and at the productivity of the nation and coming out with an across-the-board dollar figure for everybody in the country, regardless of whether it is for the charwomen in this building, or the workers upstairs, or the lawyers, or the doctors or E. P. Taylor.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, instead of using the figures we see in the guidelines everyone should get an increase of $1,000 or $1,200 a year. Or, if you wish to be really equitable and try to narrow the gap between the rich and the poor—and I am sure this is something Liberals do not want to do—why should not the maximum for the low-income people be $2,400 a year and the maximum for high-income people $600? Of course, that would penalize the rich friends of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) and other people across the way. But it certainly would not penalize the old age pensioners or the people out there in small towns in Saskatchewan, or the person cooking in a restaurant in Regina. It would certainly help those people.

It would put purchasing power back into their pockets, and they would purchase goods and commodities. It would help expand the economy and increase employment in Canada, and in the long run it would also help the Minister of Finance—as the former minister of finance said a few months ago—to cure inflation in Canada.

The other thing that strikes me as being very unfair about wages is that a few weeks before this bill was brought before the House the senior civil servants in this country had been given authorization by the cabinet for very large increases in salaries. Many of these senior bureaucrats are the people who drafted the very legislation we are considering today. I think that is very unfair.

I have before me a copy of the report of the Advisory Group on Executive Compensation, a report which was, I understand, given to the cabinet in April, authorized in July, the final authorization to grant the increase being signed only a few days ago for some of these people. For example, Mr. Speaker, there is an increase in salary for deputy ministers II—this is the maximum category—from $54,000 to $60,500, an increase of $6,500. For DM III, an increase of $6,000 per year was granted, from $60,000 to $66,000. These are wage increases approved by the government only weeks before the very same bureaucrats drafted the white paper and the legislation we are now being asked to approve in the interest of little Canadians, of the workers, the pensioners and the ordinary citizens of this country.

What about the poor? What about the unorganized? Even if a benevolent corporation wanted to increase the salaries of the poorer workers in its textile factory, it could not do so if that increase were to exceed the guidelines. Any increase in salary above the guidelines would not be exempt from the profit margin a corporation is making, at least that is the understanding I have of the bill from questions I have put to senior civil servants.

What about contracts which are about to expire or are in the process of being negotiated? How does one determine if one industry is related to another industry in this country? How does one determine if there is an historical relationship? These are questions we are asking. They are the questions that no one is prepared to answer except Jean-Luc Pepin and Beryl Plumptre, and I do not think this is very fair. These things should be outlined and stipulated in the bill. We should be able to vote on these particular matters, as parliamentarians, and make specific decisions on them.

I turn now to prices. We have a proposal to control prices here, as the Prime Minister says, by controlling profits—the per unit profit or the over-all profit of the corporation which is involved. Let us consider the loopholes. What kind of loopholes are there going to be if you control prices in that way? First of all, any lawyer or any accountant worth his salary or his salt is going to figure out some way of padding the books or arranging the accounts so that corporations do not suffer the penalties being advocated in the bill for exceeding the guidelines. If that lawyer or accountant does not do so, then he should be fired. I am sure he would be fired if we were directors of such a corporation or the presidents of companies so involved.

There are many ways to do it. A corporation could claim its expenses had increased—and there are "maybes" and

"buts" for increasing expenses in the bill as well as in the white paper. A corporation could say: Well, the interactions or the sales within the corporation have gone up, or the fees have gone up, as Bell Telephone purchases some commodity from one of its subsidiaries or sells other commodities to a subsidiary. If corporations like IT and T or the Weston Company carry on transactions between companies, how do you police that? Again, I have heard no explanation of how such transactions will be policed. I am sure no mechanism can be devised which will accurately police that type of operation. Yet our questions remain unanswered. If a corporation is going to make larger profits, then perhaps rather than being penalized it will prefer to put them into retainer or expand its plant.

What about the question of foreign ownership? Canadians drive cars in this country which are made by companies which are foreign-owned. What kind of an arrangement do we have to police the fees which a Canadian subsidiary, say in Oshawa, is paying to its parent company in the United States for certain parts, commodities, licences, and so on? There are just so many possible loopholes and questions which no one has answered. The only people who will be able to answer these questions are those on the board which is to be established by this legislation.

Then, to top it off, in the bill there is a clause which says that companies may be exempt from the guidelines if they have unusual productivity gains. What is meant by unusual productivity gains? The 2 per cent imposed on working people? I am sure that is not what the government has in mind. They can also be exempt if cost development is greater than was anticipated. What cost development is not anticipated by a large corporation?

I also suggest—and I think this is a major point—that while the wages of workers will be going down by 2 per cent each year in terms of increases, from eight to six to four, the profits which will be allowed to corporations will be going up for the next two or three years. The reason is that corporate profits in Canada for the last three years have been high, and in the two years before that they were considerably lower. The profit guidelines are based on the last five-year average. So if you move into the next two years, the average is bound to increase and therefore the allowable profit of the corporations is also going to increase. The ceiling will be higher. But the ceiling for the working person is going to decline, instead of keeping up with prices in this country or the possibility of price increases.

Turning again to price increases, I would refer to the appointment of Mr. Pepin and Mrs. Beryl Plumptre as chairman and vice-chairman of the Anti-inflation Board. As the member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) said in the House yesterday, Mr. Pepin describes himself and his colleague as two distinguished fools. If that is their own description of themselves, I wonder what kind of job they will do. But let us look at it in a serious way. Who is Jean-Luc Pepin? What are his biases? What are the biases of these people who are going to be placed in a position of so much power and so much authority?

Mr. Pepin comes from the boardrooms of many corporations in this country and has experience with Power Corporation. When he was minister of industry, trade and commerce he was famous for handing out grants and concessions to large corporations across this country. If you look back on the speeches he made as minister, as well as to those made by him when he was not a minister in this House, you find time and time again a defence of the corporations and the free enterprise system, the profit-motivated system, wherein one should take a large profit to keep on expanding. Certainly it is his right to have those ideas, and I do not denounce him because of it. But why should the chairmanship of this board go to someone who has a clear bias of that nature, someone who is not concerned about the person who is unemployed, the person on welfare, one who is an old age pensioner or one who may be working for a minimum wage?

Then there is Beryl Plumptre. Here I come to the little girl from Rockcliffe who is the expert for the consumers of this country. I have watched her very closely, as has the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) during the last couple of years. What has she found in terms of excessive prices of food which is going to help the consumer? She has had two villains, that's all. She blames the farmer for increasing his prices too rapidly at the farm gate, and she blames the marketing boards for contributing to the high price of food. But what does she say about the Safeway stores and the Loblaws stores or the Dominion stores, or the profiteering which may be done by the meat packing plants or processors or wholesalers, the transportation industry or the advertising industry? She, too, has a bias, the same bias that is held by the chairman of the board, Jean-Luc Pepin—and I say that is very unfair. Why do they not have a balance of view from people who will administer one of the most drastic laws and set of regulations that this country has seen since the second world war, with the exception of the invocation of the War Measures Act five years ago this week?

● (1500)

Another thing that weakens the bill in terms of its being fair and equitable for the consumer is that probably there will not be any real price control. The minister said today, and he is right, that there is power in the bill to force a company to notify the board before any increase in price is made. But will this power be used? The minister said he did not know to what commodities the bill would apply. Prior notification of a price increase may be required; it is not mandatory.

I suggest that if we are to have these controls the anti-inflation board must authorize any increase in prices beforehand, and that it must be a just price increase by reason of increased cost. But with this government things do not happen in this way. They say this may occur. Knowing Mrs. Plumptre and Mr. Pepin, the chances are that it will not occur. If a corporation wants to increase its prices, they are clearly biased on that side.

Let us suppose, for example, that the hon. member for Sault St. Marie (Mr. Symes) has an Aunt Fanny out in the Sault, an old age pensioner who wants to buy a can of beans for lunch. That can of beans costs her 19 cents. Then all of a sudden she finds that the price has gone up to $1. What can she do about that? I know I am exaggerating, but this is because I want to prove my point. She can notify one of the offices of Revenue Canada, or her MP, and the matter can be taken up with the board. But there is no guarantee whatever in this legislation that the board will do anything about increase in price, which may be as much as 400 or 500 per cent. They may or may not take a look at the situation. What they are likely to do is look at the profit of the store, and if a can of beans has gone up by 80 cents in a Safeway's store in Sault Ste. Marie, eight or nine months later the board will look at the profits of Safeway or of the people running the store.

One thing the board will not do is look at the unit price of the cost of production of a can of beans. The profit it makes on a can of beans might make up for the loss sustained on a bad investment or because the store has not increased the price of some other commodity by the same rate. These situations can occur when price control legislation is based on profit control at the end of the year. The price of any commodity can skyrocket without the anti-inflation board even taking a look at it.

Mr. Symes: How would they compensate people anyway?

Mr. Nystrom: As the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie says, even if they did take a look at the price of a can of beans, how would they compensate the consumer? Do they give old Aunt Fanny the difference between the price of a can of beans this week compared with the price last week? These are questions that remain unanswered which the government is not prepared to examine in a serious way.

Another thing about the bill that concerns me is the general feeling on the part of the government that there should be a cutback or restraint in government expenditure. I agree with all hon. members that there is government waste, that there are extensive expenditures. But when you cut back on government expenditures, Mr. Speaker, you must be very careful to cut back on programs or eliminate programs that will not hurt the ordinary people of this country. We must make sure that the federal contribution to health in Canada is not decreased but increased, so that there are uniform health services and distribution of costs in all parts of the country, regardless of the economic wealth of the province concerned.

We must also make sure that, instead of cutting back on old age pensions and unemployment insurance, these programs have adequate money so that Canadians who are out of work or retired have an adequate income on which to live. Transfer payments to the poorer provinces must be adequate so that their programs keep stride with those of the wealthier provinces such as British Columbia, Ontario and Alberta. Educational programs must not be cut back. All of these are programs regarding which the government should contemplate no restraint.

There is needless expenditure—for example, the opening of Mirabel airport, the champagne, the caviar. There was a lot of wasted money there. Talk of restraint a few days after that extravaganza cannot be taken seriously by Canadians. We can cut out waste by eliminating such organizations as Information Canada. We should eliminate the other place. I see no reason in the world why we should have a Senate. It is not elected, it is undemocratic. It is made up in many cases of barons from the corporate boardrooms who lobby the various government departments and officials on behalf of their corporations, and who are living on a large guaranteed annual income that increases each and every year.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

These are steps that could be taken to eliminate waste in this country, but no action from the government is forthcoming. I suggest that instead of being concerned only with inflation, which we all realize is a big problem, the minister must at the same time be concerned with unemployment, housing, and the recession in the economy. I would also remind him of the statement made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, and by many trade union people, that wage demands always follow large price increases.

If we are to bring down inflation levels we must first stop price increases. Our party has suggested many times that the way to do this is to have a prices control board to which companies must apply before any price increase can be authorized. There should be selective controls over basic commodities which are produced in Canada. We control oil prices, but this control should be extended to commodities like iron, lead, zinc, and others that we produce.

I also suggest that we should have controls on interest rates and on the financial community. If we do not control interest rates and the financial community, how in the world can we be serious about controlling inflation? We should be bringing down mortgage rates and pouring hundreds of millions more dollars into housing in all parts of Canada. This would not only expand the economy but would tend to bring down the price of housing because of increased supply. These are steps that should be taken. No reference to them is made in the bill, or in the white paper, or in the speech that the Prime Minister made on television last Monday evening.

Government must also concern itself about the high rate of unemployment in Canada. The rate is now 7.2 per cent. Having regard to the statements made by the former minister of finance and by the Prime Minister a few months ago, one of the consequences of this particular program might be an increase in the unemployment rate. If we are going to lessen and limit the spending power of ordinary citizens, the little people, then naturally they will be unable to purchase as much as they did previously, and this could lead to an increase in unemployment.

These are matters that concern me, as a member of the House, about this anti-inflation package that is before us today. I want to tell the government that I believe that Canadians are skeptical about it. I believe that many politicians have over-emphasized or misjudged what we think is a cry for comprehensive price and wage controls in Canada. A few days ago the CBC released the results of a poll which showed that only 38.4 per cent of the Canadian public really favour price and wage controls at the present time, and I suspect that that is true.

● (1510)

In conclusion, unless major changes are made in the bill that will increase its equity and fairness in respect of low income people, unless amendments are moved and accepted, and unless many of the questions that have been raised by members of our party and the Conservative party are answered within the next few days, then the best advice the Canadian people can take is that they should not co-operate with this effort because it is going to be unfair and unworkable, and will penalize them and put the full burden squarely on the shoulders of the working people.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this anti-inflation legislation now being considered will be of any use in solving the problem of inflation since first this is a legislation which was tried out elsewhere without success; second, this legislation will create problems for everyone, businessmen, employers and employees. The Anti-Inflation Board as well as the administrator appointed to implement the proposed measures as well as the appeal tribunal will have lots to do to ensure the observation of the requirements contained in the white paper tabled in this House on October 14 last and the legislation now being considered. Through this legislation and the methods of implementation proposed therein the government will have the right of life and death over any Canadian corporation or business. It will have the same power vis-à-vis any group of employees united under a labour union because the great inquisitor will put his nose in all private business in Canada. We saw a similar system, Mr. Speaker, in Stalin's Russia and Mao's China. We are now preparing to impose upon the Canadian people a dictatorship that some people have the gull to call voluntary but that, in fact, is mandatory.

I was pleasantly surprised to see that despite the election campaign that the Tory party made in 1974 calling forcefully for a wage and price freeze, that party fears overcontrol by the government or administrators in the implementation of that legislation.

I was also surprised to see that the Canadian socialist party, the New Democratic Party itself admits to be apprehensive as concerns that clearly leftist legislation.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, if we really wish not only to control but reduce prices durably let us turn aside from the beaten track, let us seek for other alternatives.

This government has been in power since 1963 and had every opportunity to fight inflation, but through its action, through all kinds of measures in all departments, advised by the most famous economists, it got into the situation where it is now. It put our country on the verge of bankruptcy and each time we asked the government, last year, two years ago or even before, to take action to stop the spiral of inflation, the government always answered that it was the same situation in Europe, in the United States or in Japan.

Yet, today, it decides to do something and resorts to the same measures that were implemented in England and in the United States without any results or at least not the results anticipated.

There is no use, Mr. Speaker, to discuss at length about inflation, its causes and its effects but yet, on page 695 of the Encyclopedia Britannica it says:

> The value of money reflects the value of goods and services that you can obtain for your money when you decide to exchange it. The value does not depend directly on the substance of money nor on the will of governments.

When we talk about price increases it means the loss of value of the dollar. This is what we also call inflation. Inflation is legal theft and fraud. The reduction of the dollar value means that the pay cheque buys fewer and fewer products. Savings, in spite of higher interest rates, allow to buy fewer and fewer products today than it would have been possible some time ago.

Labour unions, seeing the loss of value of their money, put pressure upon industry to obtain higher wages, not only because of the lower actual value of their salaries but also because of the expected decrease in their purchasing power. Hence the escalation of claims for higher salaries. But higher salaries are inexorably reflected in costs and also possibly in prices.

Only one remedy is open to political parties and officials of the finance department. They curb the amount of cash available by restricting bank loans, cutting down government expenses and limiting or preventing salary increases.

That is called a deflationist policy.

But such a policy leads to industrial stagnation, rising unemployment and hectic industrial relationships. The years between the two world wars are a classic example of that situation, when deflation was successful in cutting down prices, but caused millions to go unemployed and thousands bankrupt and resulted in general strikes and the destruction of real and concrete riches. Factories and shipbuilding yards were dismantled and sold for scrap, fields lay fallow and goods needed by consumers were dumped into the sea.

● (1520)

We must find a new course of action. During the past 100 years we have experienced booms and crises with increasing frequency mainly because of fluctuations in the value of currencies. Issuing more money would mean lowering the value of currencies, in other words inflation, whereas a reduction of the amount of cash available means an increase in the value of currencies, that is deflation. But what we need is equation, equality, an amount of cash which would match the amount of prices exactly.

There is no need to explain here how banks generate credit. It can be read in the pamphlet Only Banks Create Money, in the MacMillan report, where banking mechanisms are explained, or in the report entitled Comment les banques créent l'argent, which was published in the February 1971 issue of Regards. The justification of banks for claiming that exclusive right comes from the fact that long ago, banks kept gold reserves which depositors could claim at any time.

That theory collapsed at the beginning of World War I, when the banks, unable to meet their commitments, had to ask the government to print paper money to save them from bankruptcy. Today, gold plays absolutely no role in our domestic monetary system. Therefore, the banks are not justified today to claim exclusive monopoly on credit formation.

The real basis for the overall money supply is the goods and services that may be bought for money, and the banks do not own that basis. The monopoly on credit formation must be broken, because it has no more justification and because bank credit, to all practical purposes, is supplied exclusively to agents in the economy. The production of goods and services is scattered among a multitude of people. Our industrial system rests on work already done by a number of generations. We, as inheritors of that complex system of production, can view it as our real credit.

Unfortunately, we cannot produce at full capacity because of the credit formation monopoly held by the banks. The real credit must be "monetized", so the people can reap now the benefits of their inheritance. It must achieve the growth needed to produce the maximum amount of goods and services required.

The instrument capable of monetizing our real credit is the people's bank, that is, the Bank of Canada.

Money worth reflects the amount of goods and services that can be obtained in exchange for it. To restore its worth, we must increase the amount of goods and services to be obtained for each monetary unit. To be fair, we must at this stage establish a system that we call social credit, the compensated discount system or national discount. Its implementation requires:

(1) That the government first require all retailers of consumer goods, including publicly owned corporations supplying retail goods to the public, to register with the retailer registry agency.

(2) To register, the main condition for retailers would be to commit themselves to limiting their profits, say to 15 per cent of their business turnover, whatever the capital invested.

(3) All registered retailers would have to make up bills, at least in duplicate, for any sales over $1.

(4) The total shown on the bill would be submitted to a discount, say of 20 per cent, which would be clearly indicated on the bill.

(5) A copy of these bills would be given to the retailer's bank which would credit him with an amount equal to the discount given and shown on the bills.

(6) The banks would be periodically reimbursed by the Bank of Canada which would issue the credits required. I should add here that this would create new credits which would not come from taxes. It is important to emphasize this, Mr. Speaker.

It will have been noted, Mr. Speaker, that this way to fight against inflation is the opposite of what has been described and what we have seen in the white paper given on Monday night on television by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and tabled in the House on the next day, Tuesday, October 14. Of course, the figures that I have quoted are only illustrations. The discount rate could be reviewed every three or six months and a new discount could be announced for the following period. In several provinces, sales taxes are administered as the national discount would be. Instead of adding a tax on the bill, we would rather grant a discount. The commercial banks would be refunded for the work burdening them. What would be the outcome?

With a discount of say 20 per cent, each $1 item would cost only 80 cents, which would increase the value of money. More retail sales would be felt by wholesalers and subsequently by manufacturers.

The latter would be led to boost their production, expand their plants and hire more workers. The national discount would add to the purchasing power of consumers without inflating wages and consequently prices.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Except at the level of the retailer where the discount would be applied, nothing would be altered in the present system and thus no confusion would be created in the production system.

Even if the registration of retailers would remain voluntary, a real penalty could be imposed on those who refuse to take part in the program because of their prices higher than the registered prices, they would have more difficulty to support competition.

Some penalties for fraud or offences could be imposed, such as suspension from the list of registered businesses. Monopolies as well as nationalized retail sale enterprises will have to be incorporated into this plan.

Credits created in the name of the people by the Bank of Canada will constitute only bookkeeping entries. There will no longer be any need to print more bank notes than at present, the only difference will be in increased value of each monetary unit, which will permit the purchase of more goods.

We, the public, would stand to gain a higher purchasing power, retailers would also profit through increased sales while wholesalers and manufacturers would see their volume of orders grow. The whole country would benefit from an adjusted currency that would maintain a stable value and a constant purchasing power.

Strikes started to get nominal wage increases would be less defensible than today. Men and women engaged in production would soon realize that by improving their output and eliminating waste, they would be allowed greater discounts. Employers and employees would work with the same end in view.

Savings would retain their value and money saved for future purchases would buy goods and services of the same value. Credit sales with their high interest rates would gradually disappear. Sales taxes would finally be abolished.

As I said the figures given are only examples. The allowed profit and the discount rate could be higher. It would be up to the government to decide whether any such imported finished product could be subject to the discount. The problem of dumping from countries where wages are lower could be solved in this way.

● (1530)

Mr. Speaker, with a prosperous industry, an export trade profitable to our plants could operate at full capacity. That is a program which is completely in opposition with what the government is offering us. The government has been falling back in the same ditch for a number of decades. We always end up with the same results. That is why, as members of the Social Credit Party, we urge the government to take other steps, to try something new. The action it is taking now has already failed elsewhere.

Then, why not try a different approach, a different way to operate? Why try to aggravate everybody with all sorts of controls? The compensated or national discount plan I talked about a while ago would not require any supervision. People would understand and accept it. But the so-called "voluntary" restraint program which the government is trying to impose will necessitate the hiring of an army of additional bureaucrats to visit the 1,500 corporations concerned, to go wherever people are employed, and to search through books of workers' unions to see if they are not trying to hide something or cheat.

Mr. Speaker, this program is already enticing businessmen and labour unions to cheat the government. That is what we do not want to happen. That is what the government should seek to avoid. So, instead of imposing on Canadians a control policy, a socialist policy, let us apply a policy worthy of the democratic government label, a free enterprise policy, allowing every one to develop according to his free will and to achieve his desires, and thus we will permit the production of useful goods, products desired by the population, and let us at the same time provide the population with enough purchasing power to get the goods producers can supply, the goods the population needs. That is the program I recommend to the government as we have before us this legislation which will be sent to the committee for study and will come back before the House. We will try to get that program adopted.

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister publicly announced last Monday night the measures proposed by his government to fight inflation, I was glad to see that Bill C-73 would be sharp-edged and that the review board would have real power.

There is no doubt that during the last months considerable public pressure among Canadians demanded firm and, I dare say, authoritative action to oppose what it is now common practice to call a collective psychosis created by the present and future galloping inflation.

Many thought and feared that once more the anti-inflation plan would at best be a persuasive measure. Unfortunately, past experience has shown that mere incitement to moderation was not sufficient and that in times of anticipated crisis each of the powerful groups of our society tries to protect itself as well as possible by catching up with the purchasing power of the dollar that has been lost and by protecting this purchasing power for the future in case the economic situation would deteriorate even further. That is what is meant by the collective psychosis of inflation and everybody has understood its psychological causes and felt its economic effects, the unions, the large companies, the professionals and the civil servants.

So, last spring's stimulants having proved inefficient, new solutions had to be found and formulated to exercise greater, closer control over the laws of the market. Fortunately for us Canadians, we have been able to gain some insight from the experience acquired in that field by our neighbour to the south. Through a series of controls, the latter managed, from 1971 to 1973, to lower by several points its rate of inflation. But at what cost! An acute economic recession, chronically high unemployment, social unrest, state bankruptcies and black market activities.

Conclusions had to be drawn and efforts made to avoid the errors and pitfalls from which those evils stemmed. The result of that cogitation is Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada. What is it, essentially? First of all, two economic techniques intended to use present mechanisms to better guide the market have been used, namely fiscal and monetary policies aimed at increasing total demand and production at a pace compatible with lessening inflation and, secondly, structural policies aimed at dealing with the particular problems of energy, food and housing, to make the economy more dynamic and more competitive and to improve labour relations.

Another mechanism has been advocated by the government in these anti-inflation measures; although not new since it was already featured in last June budget, it is nonetheless a serious indication of the new trend toward restraining government expenses. I refer to a policy of public outlays geared to stifle the growth in expenditures as well as the pace of growth in employment in the public service.

But the item which is really new—and it is the one we should examine in the debate on Bill C-73—is the new price and income policy, which reads as follows, on page 3 of the white paper:

establishes guidelines for responsible social behaviour in determining prices and incomes of groups, together with machinery for administering these guidelines and ensuring compliance where necessary.

I will not dwell in detail on the whole Bill C-73, which is of an incredible complexity and the importance of which—as indicated by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin)—is minimized by nobody. I will not discuss in particular the price control issue, leaving to somebody else the task of bringing out its main characteristics, its advantages and disadvantages, its eventual means to face it and the legal procedures applicable. Let us simply say that the control board will have a big responsibility to bring certain industry majors under discipline and that it should not hesitate to enforce to the letter the penal provisions now that we have, for once, legislation with teeth in it.

I would rather speak at some length on the second facet of this act, namely the guidelines on incomes. First of all, it is important to emphasize that these guidelines are flexible and allow the newly set-up Anti-Inflation Board a lot of room for interpretation and discretionary power. By the way, I would like to take this opportunity to greet its president, Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, and its vice-president, Mrs. Plumptre, to whom I wish good luck and good cheers.

The guidelines regarding wages and salaries and other types of remuneration consist of four elements: (1) The basic protection factor. (2) A share in increased national productivity. (3) The improvement of past salary policies; and (4) the minimum and maximum increments in dollars.

I shall briefly deal with the third point and in more detail with the fourth, which makes up the core of my argument. I contend it is very important that this new policy provide for a so-called "catching-up" factor.

● (1540)

Indeed, the aggravation of some unbalances has been the first consequence of inflation and the tendency in the last few months to provide for considerable increases in collective agreements, and I have in mind those of policemen and MUCTC drivers or even mailmen. It would have been socially unacceptable not to provide this stabilization factor particularly in the case of different bargaining units within the same company or service, when collective agreements unfortunately, do not expire at the same time and one unit obtained what others, on account of a date arbitrarily set, cannot get.

Having said that, I shall take a look at the aspect of wages proper and especially the imposition of minimum and maximum increases of $600 and $2,400 respectively.

Let us start with the easiest part, which is paradoxically the ceilling of $2,400. At first sight, the figure would seem to be reasonable, in the circumstances, particularly in the light of the table on page 25 of the white paper, and giving the permissible increase for each income level and past wage practices. I would even go as far as saying that after analysis and despite the inevitable arbitrary nature of the figure very few wage earners directly affected by that ceiling will want to complain. And that is where you find a hitch. They will not complain because most often they will know how to go around it. And they will not be short of means.

First there will be a brilliant junior executive of an agressive business in full expansion who will be promoted by an elegant lateral arabesque to a practically equivalent position but with a big title that will allow him to go around the 12 per cent annual increase. There will be senior executives who, as usual, will find tax artifices to put to even better use an expense account that is yet already well built up. There will be those dear professionals—of which I am, God forgive me—who will be the least affected of all because in most cases try and check the number of hours a lawyer spent writing a factum, an architect spent on his drawing board, a physician—and that is calculated in minutes—spent with each patient, and so on. In any case, the official rates set out by professional corporations are generally flexible enough to allow nice and clean twists.

And they also have an expense account, I had forgotten. But let us be serious; I think it is utopia to think that any form of control can be applied effectively to professionals, and basically that is not more important than necessary I think as they only represent a relatively insignificant percentage of the inflationary factor.

So, to control properly the effectiveness of that ceiling of $2,400 tight steps will have to be considered for employers, for example by monitoring the wage package and making sure that the average overall increase for employees does not exceed the standards, and by urging the employees themselves to submit to the law in good faith, for example, by taking penal steps against them. Clause 44(1)(d) could be used for that.

So let us take for granted that the upper ceiling of $2,400 is realistic and enforceable. There remains to see what is happening in the less privileged classes of workers. For them the ceiling is $600, in the sense that authorized increase percentages apply only above $600; $600 mean a 10 per cent increase for a worker with a yearly $6,000 income. Below that figure, the percentage increases accordingly. It should first be fully realized that a worker at that level has very little freedom of action. His scope of initiative is limited and he probably can expect no promotion. He is taxed at source and can therefore find no fiscal loophole to better his position. For him, the ceiling is a reality. Here again, discretion has its part to play. There had to be a ceiling somewhere, and it was decided that it would be $600.

Allow me to quote some statistics which will substantiate my argument. The average salary of a Canadian worker is close to $9,000. According to Statistics Canada, the poverty line for a family of four amounted to $5,295 in 1973, which means, with an 18 per cent factor of inflation, approximately $6,295 at the end of 1975.

Now, the poverty line as determined in the Senate report on poverty, the Croll report, was at $6,990 in 1973; which would mean, with the same 18 per cent factor, approximately $8,000 in 1975. I will not elaborate on the reasons which lead me to pick up the index of the Senate report on poverty instead of the Statistics Canada index. Let me just explain the reasons for the noticeable difference between the figures of Statistics Canada and those of the report on poverty.

Poverty line as defined by Statistics Canada is the amount of money needed by a family which has to spend 70 per cent or more of its total income on current necessities: food, housing and clothing. Poverty line in the Senate report is set at 50 per cent of the average family income in Canada, considering inflation and gross national product. The difference between both approaches is quite important and explains the gap between figures. A simple logical operation would in my opinion provide a more liberal, if still arbitrary, way of assessing the minimum amount below which there are no percentages. Because 10 per cent being the recommended increase percentage, if we use the $8,000 figure referred to in the poverty report, we get an $800 amount of annual increase.

This is once more an arbitrary way. But if we increase by $200 the minimum amount, we would help small wage earners to close the revenue gap between haves and have nots. This is a desirable objective. And although controls of any kind inevitably entail inequities, we must minimize this legislation's impact on that segment of our population that is least capable of defending itself and the first to suffer, at least on a short term basis.

I will have an opportunity to explain my views more fully when the bill is referred to committee. But I feel it is my duty to indicate to the government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), that they should seriously consider increasing from $600 to $800 the threshold for the application of controls.

To conclude, I thank the Minister of Finance for the anti-inflationary measures he introduced today. He himself said they would hurt, but in these troubled times of very unsettled world economies, they were required. I therefore urge all Canadians to accept the scheme for what it is, an invitation to restraint and an articulated effort to put the Canadian economy back on its rightful orbit, which is balanced growth and distribution of wealth.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, on this Friday afternoon we have before us a rather fascinating scenario. It reminds me of the man who watched his barn smoking for an hour, and when the roof was falling in he suddenly decided to call the firemen. In the interval he had been hosing down his house in order to protect it and not the barn.

For seven years the government has been conscious of inflation. In July, 1969, when there was not quite the same need for a dramatic gesture, I was in Sydney on Cape Breton Island and saw the self-same right hon. gentleman, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on television speaking to Canadians on inflation. There was inflation about in the country. We had inflation in 1968, and there are some here who might remember the steps that the government had to take—there had been a dollar crisis and there had been an election in 1968. There have been elections in 1962, 1963, 1965, 1968, 1972, and 1974, and I might say to the hon. Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) that I participated in every one of them.

Miss Campbell: They were blessed!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I can go back to 1957, if hon. members opposite want me to, but the point is that in 1968 there was very serious inflation, and in 1969 there was very serious inflation. I might say to members of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of today that at that time there was a special committee on banking and finance which sat for months considering the problem of inflation. It was under the chairmanship, I believe, of the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs and, if I may say so, since I was a member of the committee, it brought in a very able report on the problems of inflation which gave the government an idea what it should do to deal with inflation at that time.

What happened to the 1969 program? There was to be a limitation on the public service, with certain departments exempted. One of them was the precursor to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It was the "Marchand Expansion Bureau". That was not to be limited. There were a couple of other such departments as well. You know, the expansion of those departments more than outweighed reductions elsewhere. So on that score the government's program of restrictions went down the drain. I recall the same right hon. gentleman, who had said in 1969 that inflation was so serious, saying in 1971 that we had licked inflation. Oh, yes, inflation was beaten, mastered.

Then the government had the misguided sense to introduce a new income tax act. Ah, with that gesture they negated the principal recommendation of the finance committee of 1969 about increasing productivity because that income tax act, with its steeply progressive rates of personal income tax, has stunted and blunted the elements of productivity in this country. We have seen, ever since, a steady decline in average productivity. Any economist will tell you that as productivity declines, unit costs go up and we have the strongest push toward inflation. That income tax act has been one of the elements leading to inflation.

Secondly, in the act there is a built-in incentive to inflation. As hon. members and all others in this country were taxed more and more, so those with economic crunch sought more and more. The more they got, the more yield there was by way of tax. But this government's answer was not to deal with the root cause. As I said a little while ago, it put the fire hose on the hose itself alongside the burning barn. It did not want the firemen to put out the fire; it wanted them to hose down the house beside the barn. We have seen a fantastic increase in moneys transferred from one source in Canada to others—in other words, a redistribution of personal income. We have seen increases in UIC benefits, in old age pensions, in war pensions, in—you name it—welfare—

An hon. Member: Do you call veterans' pensions welfare?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, if the deputy whip had recovered from his appointment and kept his ears open he would have heard me say that these payments are all in the category of transfer payments to persons. Of course the government had plenty of funds, because of the yield of the personal income tax, to transfer to these groups, groups which were very much affected by inflation. They were the ones that had not, shall we say, power to increase their own revenues. The protection was there for them. But the whole process was feeding on itself in a vicious circle.

As the government obtained more money through taxes, the people with economic power wound up getting more and more on each cycle of wage settlements. We have seen the percentages go up and up. Cast your minds back to about 1968 and consider the changes in wage settlements that have taken place and how the percentages have increased. We can see how inflation has eaten like a cancer into the Canadian economic body. It has grown and fed on itself. Of course now at the third or fourth cycle even this government, with its myopia, has suddenly discovered that inflation has reached such a stage that it has asked the people of Canada to accept, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)), and the Prime Minister said, one of the most serious steps that the Government of Canada has had to take in 30 years.

But why has the situation changed to the extent that the government wants to take this action, wants to eat its own words, reverse entirely its stand of 1974, reverse the stand the former minister of finance took in February, and reverse the stand of his budget of June 23? Why has this happened? I will try to offer an explanation. It is not that the government has suddenly become conscious of the perils of inflation and become concerned. What has happened since June to cause it to be more severe? We have seen much higher individual monthly increases in the CPI, since the budget, than the latest increase. Oh, yes, the unemployment figures have varied somewhat; there have been minor adjustments, plus and minus, owing to seasonal changes. But what jolted the Ministry of Finance and the Prime Minister into the sudden consciousness of the economic plight of Canada? There are two theories.

The first theory is that the Prime Minister wanted to divert the attention of the country from the effects of the resignation of the former minister of finance. That is one theory. He wanted to do something dramatic. Certainly, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) has almost sunk into obscurity, because the media and the mind of the public are suddenly seized with the idea of economic controls. That is all they are talking about. You know, this is a standard ploy of the right hon. gentleman. If a real problem faces him, a situation is created on the side and attention is diverted to it.

There is a further theory regarding the reason which would lead the Prime Minister to adopt this idea. Ever since the last election the right hon. gentleman has been constantly criticized for not providing the necessary leadership. Editorial after editorial, commentator after commentator, both in the written and spoken media, castigated the Prime Minister and his administration for lacking guts, lacking leadership, and for failing to take action. Well, the right hon. gentleman is very conscious of his political image; so, what did he do? Even at the price of swallowing himself, he decided, suddenly, to try to show leadership by saying, "All right, we are going to impose price and wage controls." He appeared on television posing as the valiant knight—yes, Madam Speaker—as the valiant knight defending the Canadian economy. May I call it four o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It being four o'clock, this House will now proceed to consider private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills. Is it agreed that order No. 8 under public bills shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): With the consent of the House, shall all orders under this item stand until we reach No. 51?

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I believe there is agreement to consider item No. 51.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT ACT (FISHERIES)

SUGGESTED TITLE OF DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved that Bill C-251, to amend the Department of the Environment Act (fisheries) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this bill would to a certain extent offset some of the serious harm that was done to the fishing industry as a result of the government re-organization bill of 1971 whereby the Department of Fisheries, as it was then known, ceased to exist. It was merged into a new Department of the Environment. I say serious damage because the Department of Fisheries was dis-established at a time when the industry in Canada was beginning to face very serious problems, the most serious in the history of this ancient industry. I say they would offset the damage that move caused to a certain extent, because the purpose of the bill is to create a deputy minister of fisheries. There is no such person in the organization of the Government of Canada at the present time.

I might say that as a result of my amendment to the Government Organization Act of 1971, there is now a Minister of Fisheries. According to the law, the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) is also the Minister of Fisheries. Of course we now also have a Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc). This gives me an opportunity to digress for a moment to congratulate the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) who has just been elevated to the post of parliamentary secretary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: This debate will give him an opportunity to make his debut as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Fisheries, and the Minister of State (Fisheries). He indeed has three ministries to which he is assigned.

I also wanted to make some very complimentary comments about the Minister of State (Fisheries) who was in the House until a short time ago. However, since he elected not to dignify this debate with his presence, I will withhold the comments I intended to make about the minister and his role in the recent ICNAF conference in Montreal.

Also may I take this opportunity to extend my congratulations to my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), who has been elected by our caucus to be our official spokesman on fisheries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I offer my congratulations as well to his predecessor, the former member for St. John's West, who is now the minister of fisheries in the government of Newfoundland.

This is a very important bill because it would create within the Department of the Environment a deputy minister of fisheries. In other words, the public servant within the Department of the Environment who now presides over that division known as Fisheries Service would be elevated to the rank of deputy minister. That would have certain obvious advantages, not the least of which would be to re-emphasize, underline, and restate the importance of fisheries in the over-all budgetary considerations of the Department of the Environment.

It is fair to say that the major weakness of the present setup that we now have for the organization of the government whereby we have a Minister of State (Fisheries) is that the minister is virtually powerless because he does not preside over or control the budget of the Department of the Environment. The Minister of State (Fisheries) is dedicated to his job. However, let him explain to the House and the country why among the first items to be eliminated from the budget of the Government of Canada as a result of the budget brought down last June was the vote of $10 million for small craft harbours. That $10 million was about a third of what we had for the current fiscal year to spend on wharves, breakwaters, and facilities for our fishermen. That was eliminated much to the surprise, chagrin, and consternation of all members, certainly those who represent constituencies in the Atlantic provinces, British Columbia and indeed the fresh water fishing areas of this country.

The appointment of a Minister of State (Fisheries) and the elimination of the small craft budget for fisheries is contrary to the expressed wish of the Liberal Party of Canada. A resolution was passed by the 1973 Liberal convention in Ottawa. I would like to hear the new parliamentary secretary address himself to this, but he must be careful that he is not swallowed by it. The resolution was as follows:

That in view of the increasing importance of the fisheries to the people of Canada, particularly to the people of the coastal provinces, that there be re-established immediately a department to take charge of this area to be known as the Department of Fisheries and Marine Resources.

That is an exact quotation of the resolution passed at the 1973 Liberal party convention. I suspect the parliamentary secretary was not at that convention. However, he certainly attended the meeting of the Atlantic provinces' Liberal candidates in Halifax during the 1974 federal election campaign. They passed a similar resolution calling for a separate Department of Fisheries, claiming that the 1972 government re-organization bill had submerged the department and created the Department of the Environment.

Following the meeting of Atlantic provinces' Liberal candidates, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was quoted by the press as saying he supported that resolution. He made a solemn pledge to the people of the Atlantic provinces that he would in fact re-institute the Department of Fisheries. I would like the parliamentary secretary, who represents probably one of the most important fishing constituencies in Canada, to explain how he can reconcile his present role in the Liberal party with the fact that this resolution of the Liberal candidates of the Atlantic provinces has been virtually ignored by the Government of Canada.

The industry is going through a crisis. The very survival of the industry is at stake, as is the very survival of the economy of the Province of Newfoundland which is so heavily dependent upon the industry.

While I would be the first to congratulate the Minister of State for Fisheries and the government on their success at the ICNAF conference in Montreal in getting through that resolution which would provide for a 40 per cent reduction in the total catch of ICNAF members, as well as a corresponding increase in our own portion of the catch, I would at the same time caution the government that this is not enough. This in no way diminishes the critical need for Canada to extend its jurisdiction for the purposes of managing the control over the 200 miles economic zone as the Republic of Iceland has already done, and as the Congress of the United States has already voted to do.

I hope the minister will lead the Canadian delegation to the Law of the Sea Conference when it resumes in New York in March, and that he will carry with him the desire of the Parliament of Canada, and the desire of the people of Canada as expressed by all the premiers meeting in St. John's a few months ago, in order to preserve this vital industry, for Canada to extend its limit up to 200 miles for the purpose of conservation. Anything less than that will not succeed because we know from past experience the weakness of ICNAF.

The inherent weakness of the ICNAF treaty is, basically, the inability of member countries to live up to the commitments they have made. We have no reason to suspect that this situation will be changed in the future. We do not possess at this time the surveillance capacity to put into practice the authority we have under the ICNAF agreement to board vessels fishing off our coasts to determine whether they are living up to their quota commitment.

Canada must have the right to exclusive management. I do not mean to imply for a moment that Canada would exert its right to the exclusive harvesting of the resources. But somebody must be responsible for the management of the resource and, obviously, that somebody should be the coastal state adjoining the resource. Canada should exercise its right to management of the resource not only for ourselves, vital as the industry is for us, but for the other nations of the world, and certainly for the nations signatory to the ICNAF agreement whose vessels fish off our shores.

I know the minister will carry with him when he goes to this conference the good will of the House and of the people of Canada. I hope he will see fit to include among the Canadian delegation members of the opposition parties who could go along as observers. This would be a tangible indication to other countries at the conference that Canada stands united in this effort.

I do not intend this afternoon to outline the problems of the industry because I think they are well known to the House. I merely wish to conclude by saying that in the midst of this tremendous crisis, this life and death struggle of the industry to survive, it is a matter of considerable regret to me that we should be without the support of a separate department of fisheries in Canada. I give credit to the Minister of State for Fisheries. He is doing the best he can when one takes into consideration the handicap under which he is obliged to operate. Specifically, he does not preside over the department; he has little or no input into the management of the department's budget, and hence he is virtually powerless to discharge his responsibilities in the department toward the fishermen of Canada.

I hope the House will agree to allow this bill to be referred to the committee so that we may have a chance to call witnesses and study the impact of the proposals I have made. All the measure calls for is the creation of a position for an officer within the present Department of the Environment who would be known as the Deputy Minister of Fisheries, and whose function would obviously be to look after the operation of the fisheries and assist the Minister of State for Fisheries in this regard. I hope this bill will commend itself to the support of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): May I first of all thank the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for raising this matter and giving us the chance to take part in this debate, one which is so important to us on the Atlantic coast and, indeed, to people all over the country because fisheries have become a national issue, and rightly so.

I should like to join the hon. member in congratulating my hon. friend from Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on his appointment as parliamentary secretary. I take it this is not only an indication of the ability of my hon. friend and the esteem in which he is held, but that it is a recognition of a particular province, that is to say, the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. He follows a number of members of this House, including myself, in that position, and I am sure he will live up to his responsibilities most capably.

I should also like to extend congratulations to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) on his appointment as spokesman on fisheries for the opposition. I hope this does not mean he will not speak on behalf of the veterans; I doubt very much whether he will discontinue his representations on their behalf. I might add that it is going to be interesting having two Newfoundlanders talking about fisheries across the aisle, and that we are likely to hear a lot about fisheries in the coming year.

The bill before us appears to contain two main points. One is that there should be a deputy minister, and the other is that fisheries should be given priority. With regard to the first point, I understand that in law the Deputy Minister of the Environment is, in fact, legally the Deputy Minister of Fisheries. As the hon. member knows, within the structure of the department there is a deputy minister and two senior assistant deputy ministers, one for fisheries and one for the environment.

I am sure the hon. member knows enough about organization and structure to realize it is a good idea to have one man at the top. Structurally, I do not think this arrangement can be faulted. However, I should like to make it clear that, within this departmental structure, fisheries and environment are treated as co-equals. Each has a senior assistant deputy minister at its head and, if I may say so with respect to fisheries, a very capable senior assistant deputy minister supported by a most capable staff.

As I am sure the hon. member knows, many of the staff both in Ottawa and in the regions do in fact come from Newfoundland, and the people of Newfoundland have no cause to feel that their interests are not being served by the people who work in the public service in the fisheries branch of the Department of the Environment and Fisheries. I could name names but I shall not do so in the House this afternoon.

I would simply point out, for example, that the chairman of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, an organization created by the Government of Canada, a Liberal government, and one which has been a Godsend to the fishermen in my area, is a Newfoundlander. We also had advisers at the Law of the Sea Conference like Dr. Arthur May who has now returned to Ottawa and will be advising us on quotas and stocks—a most capable man, an outstanding Newfoundlander and an outstanding Canadian—who will be playing an active role, I am sure, when the Law of the Sea Conference reconvenes next spring.

I am merely calling attention to the fact that within the departmental structure, within the Ministry of Fisheries, there are capable people, dedicated people, who know their jobs and who are working on behalf of the people not only of western Canada but all across the nation. If the hon. member is seeking an organizational structure for fisheries, it is already there. It is separate, distinct, unique. It is working.

[Mr. Rompkey.]

One point we should consider is that Environment and Fisheries have to work very closely together. The main point is preservation of stocks. Fishery stocks live in an environment. Obviously if you are to protect the stocks that you have, you must protect the environment. There is a good and adequate, sound basic reason why environment and fisheries should work very closely together, should be intregrated in the best way possible, and I think this is happening at the present time.

● (1620)

It is also true to say that the fisheries should be given a priority. I notice in the bill the phrase that the fisheries should be given a priority. One indication of the fact that this government does give priority to the fisheries—indeed Liberal governments in the past have given priority to the fisheries—is the appointment of the present Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc). Earlier the hon. member gave credit to the minister and in fact was prepared to give praise to him for his efforts on behalf of the fisheries up to the present time, and I echo that praise. He has been a good minister and I am sure he will continue to do a good job. But the appointment of the minister must surely be more important than the appointment of the deputy minister.

There are people who say that the bureaucracy is strong and that it is growing stronger every day, but I for one would like to believe that the minister is still the important figure. He is the creator of policy and sees that that policy is carried out. I think the fact that the minister was appointed by a Liberal government on the recommendation of the same Atlantic caucus, the same meeting of Atlantic candidates to which the hon. member referred earlier, is an indication of the priority given to the fisheries.

With regard to his control over budget, if the minister was able to get $50 million from the federal treasury to subsidize price support in Canada, I think this is an indication that he has certainly the ear of cabinet and that he will not fall short when it comes to obtaining funds to carry out the particular programs that he has in mind. I can point to other programs as well where the fisheries have been given the necessary sums to do what is required to be done at any given point in time in the industry's history. The minister has shown that he can get these funds, and I believe he will continue to do so.

With regard to small craft harbours, it is true that the budget this year has been cut. But it was a Liberal government that tripled the budget for small craft harbours two years ago. The fact that the budget was cut this year shows that we cannot have restraint on the one hand and not on the other. If we are to have a policy of restraint and budget cuts where necessary, then this policy should be applied across the board.

Where does one make cuts? The answer is in areas that are capital intensive, in areas that are not labour intensive. This does not affect fishermen in small communities who want to work in the off season. This is where the minister chose to make his cuts and I think he has probably made a wise decision.

The building of wharves, breakwaters and what have you, is done more and more by equipment and machinery rather than men. But let me also tell the House what direction the minister is heading in with regard to the building of marine facilities in small harbours. For example, this year the minister's small craft harbours branch is operating in conjunction with the Department of Manpower and Immigration and in some cases providing funds through LIP to meet the labour portion of the cost, and in this way wharves and breakwaters are being built. Even when the minister was a private member he was talking about this kind of approach whereby the building of such facilities is put in the hands of the people who will be using them later. That is a sensible approach, one that is making the building of marine facilities in small harbours more labour intensive. It is putting money into the pockets of our fishermen, at the same time giving them the required facilities. That sort of thing has been happening this year and is an approach that I personally endorse.

Another example of the way in which the government has given fisheries a priority is in the attempt to obtain a 200 mile limit. Let us not forget in all this talk of a 200 mile limit that it was a Liberal government that raised the idea in the first place. While others were talking of a 50 mile limit the Liberal government was talking about 200 miles. It was the people in the Department of Fisheries and in the fisheries branch of the Department of the Environment who drew up the mechanics of our argument, in conjunction with the external affairs department, which was presented at the Law of the Sea Conference. So let us not forget that this was a Liberal initiative.

The question is not so much whether we should have a limit; the question, of course, is how to get it. There we differ. Members on the other side of the House are saying that we should get it unilaterally, that we should go out with the gunboats and start shooting and running people down. I think events lately have shown a possible course, that what we have advocated is a wise course. We showed we meant business, in closing the east coast ports and, following that closure, in the later discussions which brought about a 40 per cent reduction in the catch. That is effective action, action, that is meaningful. It is action that people in my riding see and appreciate.

A 200 mile limit is not going to solve all our problems, and I do not think we should think that it will. I should like to list some of the problems that I became aware of as a result of recently travelling around my riding. For example, a 200 mile limit is not going to solve marketing problems, a real source of concern at the present time. There are fishermen in my riding who are throwing away herring and mackerel because they cannot get people to buy them. I do not know whether the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) has found the same problem in his riding; he has the same geographic area I have, but certainly it is a problem in my constituency. I hope that he will talk to his colleague in Newfoundland and impress upon him the necessity of having a good, sound marketing organization in the province, particularly along the northeast coast, to look after fishermen in small communities who are now throwing away part of their catch.

As I say, the problem is a marketing one, and if individual businesses cannot improve their marketing policy so that the situation is taken care of, the government will have to step in and create some sort of marketing board, or extend the jurisdiction of the Salt Fish Marketing Corporation so as to include other species.

Experiments along this line have been tried. The Salt Fish Marketing Corporation this year is buying species other than salt fish, but I should like to see it focus on that portion of the province, the northeast coast of Newfoundland, and the coast of Labrador, where some sort of marketing organization is needed to dispose of those species with which the fishermen find difficulty.

A 200 mile limit is not going to solve the income support problems of the fishermen. There are fishermen in my riding this year who made as much as $400 to $600 a month as a result of the $50 million subsidy program that I alluded to earlier which the minister provided. The federal Liberal government this year for the first time put money directly into the pockets of the fishermen. Heretofore we subsidized the companies; this year we subsidized the fishermen directly. The fishermen see the value of that money, and it is a program that we should continue.

I have already talked of the small craft harbours program. A 200 mile limit is not going to solve the lack of holding facilities. The federal government now has a program that puts up 50 per cent of the cost of such facilities. Again this is sorely needed by many fishermen. A 200 mile limit will not supply marine service centres, as DREE has in many parts of the Atlantic provinces and on the west coast. Once again more of these centres are sorely needed.

I have been referring to the kind of policies that we have and that we need. Changing the structure of the department, talking about various organizations and the Department of the Environment I do not think will solve the problems of the fishermen on the east and west coasts. What these fishermen are saying is that we should get on with the job, that we should produce the policies required. Evidence that this is being done can be seen today, but the point is that changing the structures is not, to my mind, as important as the policies themselves. We have done a lot as the federal Liberal government for fisheries in Canada, but we are going to do more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is a Newfoundland afternoon.

Mr. Marshall: Madam Speaker, I want to commend my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), for again focusing attention on fisheries. I guess the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) is getting a little embarrassed by the commendations that are being offered, but I too want to offer my congratulations on his appointment.

If I recall correctly what the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) mentioned about marketing, I fully agree that marketing is particularly important to Newfoundland. Is this not all the more reason for having a deputy minister directly concerned with fisheries in order that he might get into that part of the job and also do something about the income support program which we have been awaiting for so long? Such a deputy minister could then do something about the other problems the Minister of State (Mr. LeBlanc) cannot find time for except on an over-all basis.

The Minister of State for Fisheries has been doing an excellent job since taking over this portfolio, and I suggest he deserves to have a deputy minister of that department in order to make sure that all the programs referred to by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador are being carried out. In the Department of National Health and Welfare there is a deputy minister for health and a deputy minister for welfare.

Mr. McGrath: And they are not assistant deputy ministers.

Mr. Marshall: They are not assistant deputy ministers, as my colleague reminds me. Would it not be just as important to have a deputy minister of fisheries in order to focus attention on the importance of fisheries? We should have a deputy minister with the title and everything that goes with it.

While speaking of marketing, it is difficult for me to reconcile that our catches of fish have been decreasing and our exports have been dropping with the increase in our imports. In 1973 we exported $499 million in fish from Canada and in 1974 this value dropped to $437 million. The fish marketing board has reported that we are building up fish inventories, but we still imported $120 million worth of fish last year. I suggest that we are buying our own fish back.

The foreign draggers are coming in and taking our fish back for processing and then selling it back to us. In 1973 we imported $111 million worth of fish, in 1974 this increased to $120 million, and this has taken place at a time when our exports dropped from $499 million worth to $437 million. So it is very important that the issue of marketing be attached as one of the duties of a deputy minister of fisheries.

The other serious problem I should like to refer to today relates to this massive income support program for fishermen that was promised back in 1974. On July 26, 1974, the minister of fisheries for Newfoundland wrote a letter to the then Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Jack Davis, pointing out his feelings about the income support program for fishermen that was to be established. We have heard periodically that it will be forthcoming in a few weeks, but here we are in 1975 without this program. Fishermen are giving up the fishing industry because they cannot afford to replace their gear, yet we still do not have a support program.

Let me remind those hon. members opposite who were saying during the last election campaign that, were it not for the Conservative party forcing an election, we in Canada would have an income support program for fishermen, that it is now 1975 and we still do not have such a program. I am now wondering with the proposed restraints that are to take place whether we will see an income support program for fishermen in the near future.

This is an important matter and is an element in the proposal for a unilateral 200 mile limit. Even though the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and I represent sister ridings, I am sure he knows that the stories he hears from his fishermen are different than the stories I am getting from mine.

It is worth while to point out that while Canada is moving toward negotiating a 200 mile limit, or perhaps a continental shelf limit, four countries which have been distressed, disturbed, and discouraged by the slow progress made at the international Law of the Sea Conference have already moved toward their own 200 mile limits. Those countries are Norway, Mexico, little Iceland, and recently the United States.

The hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) was with me in Washington when we discussed with a fisheries committee there a bill they proposed for submission to the House of Representatives proclaiming a unilateral 200 mile limit. If I may, I would like to quote one or two of the reasons they give in respect of this bill. They are first:

> That international negotiations have so far proved incapable of obtaining timely agreement on the protection and conservation of threatened species of fish and marine life;
> That there is further danger of irreversible depletion before efforts to achieve an international agreement on jurisdiction over coastal and anadromous fisheries result in an operative agreement; and
> That it is therefore necessary for the United States to take interim action to protect and conserve overfished stocks and to protect our domestic fishing industry.

If the United States can see fit to declare unilaterally a 200 mile limit for the reasons outlined here, surely Canada should focus the attention of all nations at the Law of the Sea Conference on the fact that we mean to take action. We can bring attention to the fact that we are not going to hurt anybody by such a declaration in respect of fisheries alone, and following that we can negotiate in respect of the other resources.

In order to give some of my other colleagues a chance to speak on this very important bill I just want to refer to one other matter, and that is the elimination of the $10 million allocated for small craft harbours. This will be of great harm to the fishermen who need those bases to take advantage of the fish stocks off our shores that are not being taken by foreign draggers. It is extremely important that the government immediately reallocate this $10 million in order to provide those bases for the fishermen so that they can at least get the fish the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador says they are now throwing back.

I want to commend my colleague again for presenting this bill. I am sure the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate will be speaking on it, so I want to leave enough time for a vote in order that we might get agreement from everybody in the House.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I appreciate being recognized, Madam Speaker, because otherwise this might have turned into an international Newfoundland day.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has, in my opinion, today served two purposes. First, by bringing forward this bill he has proved that action has indeed been taken by the government on the issue of giving greater prominence to the role of fisheries in our country. The string of successes already attributed to the Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) is really quite impressive, and I was pleased to hear the hon. gentleman opposite acknowledge at least some of these attainments. In addition, the hon. member has my gratitude for providing this opportunity for discussion of elements of fisheries which are close to the hearts of many of the people I have the honour to represent.

There is an inequity between the east and west having to do with the continental shelf. I must bring forth for consideration this natural inequity, because when one considers the extent of the continental shelf and slope there is really quite a difference in the east and west.

The continental shelf is defined as the seaward extension of land mass. Canada has a very large continental shelf on the Atlantic coast, sometimes extending far beyond 200 miles, as in the instance of Flemish Cape. However, on the Pacific coast we have only a 50 mile extension south of Vancouver Island.

In the early spring of 1974 the former minister released a map showing British Columbia's seaward extension as being a line drawn along 48 degrees, 29 minutes west which cut off part of the La Perouse bank and an area of Canada's natural extension of the land mass of approximately 500 square miles. This median line principle would be applied because of the situation on the Atlantic coast. I refer to the 1,800 square miles at Georges Bank. Therefore, the proposal for 500 square miles on the Pacific Coast is not unreasonable. In April and May of 1974 herring schools in the area of Juan de Fuca Canyon to the proposed median line were estimated to be in the neighbourhood of 300,000 tons. This is herring of Canadian origin, an anadromous species.

● (1640)

Surely when management, fish processors, the UFAWU, the trollers and native brotherhood agree on this potential food fishery, there should be a means to harvest these resources for a hungry world. There are international inequities which our fishermen must face. I offer this single example but there are many others which could be given. At present Canadians are taking a large amount of scallops from Georges Bank, but Canada has a size limit of 50 scallops per pound while the United States has a limit of 40 and is talking now of going to 30. Some Canadian companies are starting to do the same. What will Canada's catch be then? Assessment has yet to be made of ocean perch, halibut, grey cod, ling cod and herring in the 500 square miles of Pacific territory on which I address my remarks today.

The most lucrative of B.C. fisheries, again an anadromous species, is the salmon. As long as salmon at sea have no national status the salmon resources of this country are in jeopardy.

In my opinion examination of the canyon principle would prove an equity of access for fishermen east and west in this country. I have been warned, however, that adoption of the canyon principal on the coast comes into conflict with the interests of mining and oil industries. There are, we know, untapped oil resources in the area of Georges Bank, even within present boundaries. There are oil shales existing in Hecate Straits, between the mainland and the Queen Charlotte Islands in British Columbia, but in my view it is shortsighted to give away a self-sustaining food resource for a non-renewable resource for which our technology is charged with developing an alternative. I submit we can, we have in fact, developed other forms of energy, but I ask are we able to develop other forms of protein as readily?

I suggest that the canyon line approach to dividing a continental shelf between nations is not new, and is an easily recognizable line for management and conduct of fishing operations of each nation. In the ongoing negotiations of the Law of the Sea Conference, Canada has been instrumental in getting into the future convention a special regime relating to anadromous species, those species such as the salmon coming to life within our coastal state's fresh waters, then spending the greater part of their adult life migrating to the high seas, and finally returning to the waters of the state of origin to spawn and die. The problem arising out of the present legal situation is that these stocks may, in accordance with the traditional freedom of fishing the high seas, be harvested on the basis of unsound management principles and in a way likely to jeopardize the investment made by the state of origin toward keeping the spawning waters in a state so as to retain the returning species.

The position that Canada has adopted is that salmon should be caught in accordance with the exclusive management powers of the state of origin; further, that there should be a ban on high seas fishing of anadromous species.

There are countries which cannot envisage a coastal state exercising any rights beyond the 200-mile limit. This strict interpretation of the 200-mile economic zone would deprive states of origin such as Canada of any management rights over salmon stocks as they follow their migratory course in the high seas beyond the carefully defined economic zone.

To tell the truth I am really quite confused by the hot demands of members opposite for precipitous unilateralism. There is far more at stake here than a simplistic extension of our fishing zones to 200 miles from our coastline. I find it hard to believe for instance that an able and affable diplomat such as the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) could accept a unilateral declaration now at the cost of control over salmon and other anadromous species in the future.

Salmon are really rather like anadromous Tories in fact; they are independent, range far and wide, and acknowledge none of their members as leader.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They do not spawn very much though.

Mrs. Campagnolo: We have a corner on that.

The intent of the bill before us today is to ensure fisheries continue as a priority. The appointment of the Minister of State for Fisheries has more then accomplished this beyond any dispute. He has a high level of accomplishment in extending markets, rehabilitating and strengthening certain sections of fishing such as the groundfish industry, embarking on massive salmon development in British Columbia, which is still proceeding in spite of economic restraints, extending reciprocal fishing privileges, providing deficiency payments where needed, revising vessel subsidy programs, encouraging very real progress in international negotiations—which I was happy to note was acknowledged by the hon. member for St. John's East—and developing small craft harbours in the amount of $35 million this fiscal year, as well as a host of other outstanding moves of benefit to Canada's fishermen.

The serious intent of the government to maintain a constant level of civil servants at this stage of our economic fortunes should not be taken lightly. Members opposite frequently criticize added senior appointments but in this case we have a request for more. It reminds me of those who demand cuts in government spending and then say "but not in my constituency". The Department of Fisheries has a Minister of State, and the Deputy Minister of Environment and Fisheries is the Deputy Minister of Fisheries, and therefore the provisos of this bill are unnecessary given the excellent job being done by senior personnel in fisheries administration at this point in time.

I too should like to offer my congratulations to my colleagues and neighbour.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I understand that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) is anxious to make a few remarks so I will be fair with him and keep my speech short so that he may have an opportunity to participate in this debate. I should also like to tender my congratulations to him on his new appointment.

I merely want to say that in my constituency which has many concerns relating to the fishing industry there is a great deal of dissatisfaction, and I think justly so. This applies not only to Nova Scotia but all over the Atlantic region. The fishing industry is in trouble. There is no question about it.

Although the present Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) is doing his best to remedy these troubles—and I must say he is off to a good start; his public image is excellent and he is certainly well accepted—I think it is only fair to do two things this afternoon so far as I am concerned. The first is to support the principle put forward in Bill C-251 by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and to suggest that while I am doing so I ought to bring to the attention of the House once more some of the long-standing difficulties that plague this industry.

Everyone who has followed the fishing industry knows that it is in great difficulty. The quota system as it is being applied in the Atlantic region is ridiculous, as the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) has pointed out so many times, when valuable species of fish are being dumped and wasted simply because the quota system is unrealistic. Everyone knows that even in the field of unemployment insurance fishermen do not get the same break as their counterparts in other industries.

The curtailment of the small craft and harbours program is just another example of the fact that the Minister of State for Fisheries does not have the clout or the influence he ought to have at a time when, as the last member said, there are great international implications involved implicitly in what the fishing industry and the Department of the Environment are trying to do. It is pretty obvious that the Department of the Environment is not working out as one would hope it should. It is a vast, sprawling department in which the fishing industry, or what used to be a separate ministry of fisheries, and what used to be a separate ministry of forestry are merged, or rather submerged.

● (1650)

There were studies and talks about applied biological principles, but they did not appear to do very much. One of the things the present Department of Fisheries needs is an influx of some people who have a modicum of practical experience in fisheries. I have been informed, and I believe it to be true, that of the hundreds of federal employees or civil servants who are involved in some way with peripheral or direct activities of the federal fisheries jurisdiction less than two dozen of them have any practical common sense, knowledge, or background based on actual experience in the fishing industry. If that is true, it is an appalling situation.

At some time when the Minister of State (Fisheries) has an opportunity, I would like to see him give us a breakdown of how many of his associates and employees or civil servants do have any hard, practical background in the fishing industry similar, for example, to that of the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), who was a successful fishing captain in his earlier days.

I will conclude now by simply giving one example of the ridiculous state to which the fishermen in my area are reduced as a result of the present situation. In a small area called Pictou Landing in my constituency there is a yacht club called the Royal William Yacht Club, which at the present time is the only place fishermen in that area can moor their boats or use facilities which they otherwise would have had, since construction of a wharf which was scheduled to be built was curtailed because of the particular cancellation implicit in the small boats and harbours program reduction.

This is a yacht club used by people for recreational purposes. Out of a spirit of neighbourliness and a desire to help, the club turned over its facilities to fishermen simply because a badly needed wharf, one which has been demonstrably needed for many years, the original having been demolished by the department in anticipation of building another one, cannot now be built. Some people wrote to me recently stating that they were glad to help, but asked whether something could be done to give the yacht club some compensation for allowing the fishermen to use its facilities.

The previous speaker spoke about Tories being like salmon. I think salmon are referred to in many quarters as the noblest of all fish, and I would like to say to the hon. member that, on the basis of my experience so far, I should like to draw another simile by saying that the present government, and the department in many cases, have exhibited the tendencies of another marine creature, and that is the octopus. An octopus has many tentacles, a great talent for obscuring issues by issuing great clouds of what is known as ink, and can change colours when desired. I think we have seen a great deal of that recently from this government in its administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate): By the time the applause subsides I will be finished. I would like to thank everyone who congratulated me on finally getting into a position of great power in the federal government. It reminds me of how fishermen look upon ministers of fisheries. The minister of fisheries and the premier of our famous province of Newfoundland rode out to Conception Bay to do some fishing. They finally got to the place where they were catching some fish, and the minister of fisheries said, "We don't know where we are, but we shall have to mark this spot somehow." The premier said, "How about putting an X on the bottom of the boat." The minister of fisheries said, "Yes, but we may not have the same boat tomorrow."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate): The House leader for the New Democratic Party will appreciate what I will be saying in the next two minutes. Who decides where government money is spent in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec or any province but provincial governments? The kind of money I am talking about is the money which is used for industrial development and industrial incentive, and I would love to be in the position of the hon. gentleman who introduced this motion because he could simply pick up the telephone and telephone his friend who was elected with him in 1968 to this chamber, who is now the minister of fisheries in Newfoundland. If the minister of fisheries of Newfoundland says that his government does not have enough money, then the hon. member can phone another friend of his who was elected in 1968 to this House and who is now the minister of industrial development in Newfoundland. If this is not successful, he can telephone another of his friends who was also elected in 1968 to this chamber, and who is now the premier. Certainly he can get somewhere then. That is where the action is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate): We must realize that the actual production facilities in a province receive their great incentive from within the province. Consider the government of British Columbia. I wonder why certain sections of its industry are progressive. It is because help has been obtained. B.C. does not have a budget for its department of fisheries which is less than its budget for the department of social services, as is the case in some provinces in this country. May I call it five o'clock, Madam Speaker?

An hon. Member: A minute to go.

An hon. Member: Wrong clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Judging by the clocks in front of me, we will call it five o'clock. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF INCIDENT AT EMBASSY IN TEL AVIV—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion which arises from the low morale of the Department of External Affairs, particularly, from attempts by the Department of External Affairs to hush up an incident which occurred in the Canadian Embassy in Tel Aviv, Israel. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs give a complete statement to the House of all circumstances and details involving an incident at the Canadian Embassy at Tel Aviv, Israel, and that the statement should include particulars of the threatened walk-out of members of the embassy staff, the immediate dispatch of a senior departmental official to investigate the problem, the recall to Ottawa of the ambassador at the time, Mr. Paul Malone, and the reasons why he will shortly be reassigned as Canadian Ambassador to Helsinki.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion of pressing public necessity and importance. Concern of veterans' organizations about the transfer of hospitals to provincial and municipal responsibility, particularly in regard to hospitals not yet transferred, prompts the demand that veterans' organizations should be allowed to present their case to the government, in order that their point of view may be heard. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That the matter of transfer of DVA hospitals be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, to ensure that agreement is reached by veterans' organizations concerned to satisfy the interest of Canadian veterans.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

DANGER THAT FOOD ADDITIVES MAY CAUSE HEALTH PROBLEMS IN CHILDREN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion. As every day there is more evidence to suggest that food additives, particularly artificial colours and flavours, cause health problems in children, and as the Ministers of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has not taken initiatives to look into this problem but seems content to wait for and then benefit from the results of American research, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley):

That this House deplores the inaction of the minister in this area of danger to the health of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

APPLICATION OF PRICE GUIDELINES TO MARKETING BOARDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. On Thursday last the minister said he would try to arrange a meeting in connection with the application of the restraint program to marketing boards. Has the mountain, if you will excuse the expression, yet been able to go to Mohammed and, if so, what truth did Mohammed utter on the occasion?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when I tried to call, the phones in his office were busy. When he tried to call me, my line was busy. Therefore, we have not yet been able to arrange that meeting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the minister's position that prices charged by marketing boards can be regulated and yet have prices left unregulated at the farm gate?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the other day I said that a well run marketing board does not have anything to fear. The prices set by a well run marketing board on behalf of farmers are within reason. This anti-inflation program is a program of reason.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the minister recall telling farm audiences during the last election campaign where my program would end up; that it would go right through the farm gate, into the kitchen and end up in the manure pile?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Does the minister feel that guidelines with regard to prices set by marketing boards will end up in the same place?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I want to be sure that the Leader of the Opposition is not mixed up about what I said. I said that his program would freeze prices at the farm gate and that everyone knew it would not stop there. It would go through the yard, through the barn and into the manure pile. It did not have anything to do with the kitchen at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: The Leader of the Opposition knows that his program belonged out in the barnyard. The government program is completely different. It does not put a ridiculous freeze on prices, but allows increases where there are increased costs. We are stopping the cost increases where the farmers are concerned. Their input costs will be under strict control. The farmers, therefore, will not have to ask for more money.

IMPACT OF MARKETING BOARDS ON FOOD PRICES—ALLEGED DIFFERENCE OF OPINION BETWEEN MINISTERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get the Minister of Agriculture back into the kitchen for a minute. In view of the statement attributed to the minister in a speech he made in St. Jacob's, Ontario last Thursday to the effect that the control program will have little impact on retail food prices and in view of the concern that statement has caused throughout the country, has the minister discussed his differences of opinion with regard to the impact of marketing boards on food prices with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible for what a CP reporter has said. If the hon. member wants to listen to the tape—and every word I spoke was taped—he can listen to it and see for himself. I said it would have an impact on food prices because they had the authority to roll them back at the retail level; the essence was there. I said it would not have much effect on farmers themselves; it would not kill the incentive of farmers to produce those commodities which are in demand in Canada.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister, then, whether he can explain the statement he is purported to have made in Vancouver when he said that marketing boards would continue to set their own prices as they have in the past. Can he reconcile those words with the statement made on Friday by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance that marketing boards would be subject to the guidelines.

Mr. Whelan: I never said that marketing boards would not be subject to the guidelines. What I said was that any well run marketing board had nothing to fear from the guidelines.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—EFFECT ON THE POOR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Last year the Prime Minister said with regard to the kind of controls the minister has now introduced that any advocate of such controls would be, to use his words, indulging in "political opportunism" if it were not pointed out that a number of serious social costs were involved. One of these the Prime Minister specifically cited, and I quote his words—that "income controls risk hurting the small and the poor more than they do the big and the rich". In view of this concern expressed by the Prime Minister last year, would the hon. gentleman now inform the House what specific elements in his control program are designed to benefit the poor as opposed to other sectors of the community?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I would want to ascertain whether the hon. member has made a fair quotation, but I would observe that this program is directly related to the powerful in our community—the big corporations, the professions, the owners of property, particularly the owners of land, and, of course, to big labour, big unions. Any measure which prevents them from taking more out of the economy than is their just share is sure to leave more for the rest of the community, particularly for those in the lower income scale. In this sense it is a program specifically directed to the interest of those who are least in a position to protect themselves.

Mr. Broadbent: Since it is entirely possible that if the growth rate of the economy continues to be zero or negative, the groups which the minister described as being larger and more powerful could get less without the poor people getting any more, is the minister really assuming that if there is some reduction in the overall level of inflation the poor are going to benefit as a result? If this is really his argument is it not also the case that the rich will benefit even more because they have more income to spend?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It seems to me that a program which prevents the rich, and, in this case, the large and powerful in the community, from getting what all their power could give them and preserves the position of those who are less privileged is very much in the interests of the less privileged. This program is intended to assist those who have not been in a position to seek 20 per cent, 30 per cent and 50 per cent settlements or 20 per cent, 30 per cent and 50 per cent rent increases, and in that sense it is very much in their interests.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REASON FOR FAILURE TO INTRODUCE REDISTRIBUTIVE TAX MEASURES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): If the minister really wanted to provide benefits for the group for which he is now expressing concern, why could the government not have simultaneously introduced a redistributive tax measure which would have brought specific tax benefits to the very people he is now talking about at the cost—and I acknowledge this—of increasing the tax burden on upper income individuals and corporations?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): As the hon. member knows, that kind of tax burden hits not only those in the upper income brackets but those in the middle income brackets as well. I would remind him that in the past year by amendments to the family allowances program, by amendments to the income tax system itself, and by changes in the provision of old age security and the guaranteed income supplement, we have specifically directed extra payment to those groups in the community which are the government's special concern.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON NEGOTIATIONS OF PAPER-MAKERS IN DOLBEAU

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Since the paper workers' union in Dolbeau, in my riding, have been negotiating since early in 1975 and had to go on strike, could the minister tell the House whether the legislation the government presented will bear upon their union demands and to what extent?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, without knowing the exact nature of the negotiations, I can say that the guidelines in the legislation will apply to all economic sectors in Canada; that it is quite possible that the union referred to will see its expectations reduced in that sense. In any event, when there will be a contract, it will have to be submitted to the Anti-Inflation Board.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance.

In connection with a new labour contract within the new anti-inflation legislation, if there is an agreement on the maximum 8 per cent increase, will this affect the previously accepted high cost of living escalation provision?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the guidelines of the new legislation do not affect contracts signed before October 14, 1975.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a last supplementary question for the Minister of Finance.

Could the minister advise the House whether fringe benefits will be included or excluded within the 8 per cent increase?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, such benefits are included within the guidelines.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

EFFECT OF REFUSAL OF BID BY WHITE CONSOLIDATED TO TAKE OVER WESTINGHOUSE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT JOBS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A few months ago the Foreign Investment Review Board disallowed a takeover bid by White Consolidated Industries of Cleveland, Ohio of Westinghouse Canada appliance division. Inasmuch as the Canadian takeover bid of General Steel Wares does not appear likely to succeed, and in light of press reports that the jobs of 2,300 Westinghouse Canada employees are in jeopardy, what action does the government plan to take prior to October 31, which is the expiry date of the General Steel Wares bid?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have been apprised of this situation and have been meeting both with my officials and other departments in connection with this matter. Obviously, we are much concerned for the jobs of the more than 2,000 workers involved. We are also disturbed that this may very well represent a defiance of the intent, at least, of the foreign investment review regulations. We are continuing to meet on the subject. I hope to meet with the principals concerned over the next few days to determine what is the best course of action open to the government in the circumstances the hon. member has outlined.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for that answer and appreciate the fact that he is looking into it, but I should like to ask him this question. Inasmuch as White Consolidated Industries has purchased the rights to the Westinghouse name and is now a supplier of captive parts to Westinghouse Canada, and knowing that White Consolidated is unlikely to convey the name "Westinghouse" to a competitor nor supply the competitor with captive parts, did the Foreign Investment Review Board not foresee this eventuality bearing in mind the substantial difference between the bids by General Steel Wares and White Consolidated?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will appreciate that that is a very complicated question to try to answer in the question period. In any event, I do not have all the answers because I have not had a full briefing from the Foreign Investment Review Board on it. In so far as I understand the situation, it is a highly technical, legal one involving the ownership of the trade mark in a world-wide sense. It is this issue, along with the others the hon. member raised earlier, which are now being examined and hopefully later this week I will be able to provide him with more information.

LEGAL IMPLICATIONS OF WHITE CONSOLIDATED'S REFUSAL TO CONVEY WESTINGHOUSE NAME—DATE OF DECISION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice with respect to this same matter. It has been reported by the Minister of Labour that the justice department is involved in terms of looking at all the legal implications of the White refusal to convey the Westinghouse name, and that there are options being discussed. Can the minister advise whether he has in fact reached any conclusion as to the legal implications here, and can he give the House some indication of the options that are being discussed at this particular time?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can simply advise the hon. member at this point that we are, as he has said, reviewing the matter.

Mr. Alexander: I think my colleague has brought before the House the urgency of this matter in terms of the 2,300 jobs and the GSW offer to purchase which expires on October 31. I would ask the minister then in the time he has had, is he now able to assure this House, the employees of Westinghouse and the Canadian people that there will be an answer by this government, and particularly by the minister before October 31?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, if it is appropriate for the Department of Justice to make its views known to the Minister of Labour or the public it will do so before that date.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING FEDERAL CRIME COMMISSION TO REPLACE QUEBEC PROVINCIAL COMMISSION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice, and I should like to congratulate the minister on his elevation to his new post. If he is not successful in the very near future in transfering legal authority to the province of Quebec to resume its very successful probe of criminal activities in that province, will he institute such an inquiry under his own jurisdiction?

Hon. Ron. Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated I think outside the House, that I was considering, in the event that our constitutional challenge was successful, ways of proposing such provincial bodies on an appropriate constitutional basis, and I am considering that.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

POSSIBLE APPLICATION OF CRIMINAL CODE TO INTERCEPTION OF CONVERSATION WITH MR. KISSINGER BY MECHANICAL DEVICE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Justice, but before doing so may I just take a moment to congratulate him on his new post. I am happy to see two former Ministers of Justice sitting beside him, so he will be able to get the necessary guidance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: My question has reference to a reply by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the distinguished member for Fundy-Royal regarding the reporting of a private conversation between the Secretary of State for the United States and one of our distinguished colleagues. The Secretary of State for External Affairs promised an explanation. Has the Minister of Justice reviewed Section 178(2) of the Criminal Code dealing with a possible offence whereby a private communication has been intercepted by certain mechanical devices and such conversation reported and disclosed, contrary to the Criminal Code which calls for a penalty of no less than a maximum of two years?

Hon. Ron. Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the best thing would be to have the investigation concluded by my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, so we have the complete picture of what happened, as best we can, and then consider, as I will, the legal consequences that flow from that.

I should like to thank the previous speaker for his kind words to me and my two colleagues who sit next to me.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that it would not take much time to conclude the investigation. The report which I read in the Washington Post verified that there was a report of a private conversation heard over a mechanical device. I would ask the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, to look at the precedent set in the city of Calgary when a similar situation developed where a private conversation was reported by tape recorder and reported on the radio and in the press. Charges were laid in that regard as this was a serious offence infringing on the privacy of the individual under these particular circumstances.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I will direct the precedent to my officials.

OLYMPIC GAMES

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO ADDITIONAL FEDERAL AID WILL BE GIVEN

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in light of the so-called anti-inflationary measures before this House, and in view of the fact there is speculation backed by some evidence that the over-all costs of the Olympics will now reach $1 billion, will the Prime Minister advise this House whether the government has received either up-dated reports on Montreal's further financial problems or requests for additional federal aid, and at the same time will he assure this House that no further federal increases in direct or other costs will be allowed, not only in respect of security but in all other areas? Perhaps the Prime Minister would see fit to advise Mayor Drapeau to seek financial help from the city of New York?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, and I would refer to page 2 of the government's policy paper on wage controls where it is noted that unless decisive action is taken unemployment will continue to increase.

● (1430)

This morning one of the government's favourite forecasters, the Toronto Dominion Bank, predicted that, as a result of the controls, growth in the economy will slow significantly and unemployment will rise. In view of the degree of unanimity among economists that unemployment is a serious problem of specific concern, does the government intend to undertake to lower unemployment?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government accepts the fact that unemployment is an important matter for substantial concern through this winter. It recognizes in particular the difficulty from the Canadian standpoint because of the unemployment involved particularly in our export industries. My colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Housing will be announcing a program to deal with that sector of the economy and in other sectors, particularly the export dependant sectors, we recognize there is a real difficulty.

Mr. Peters: In view of the fact that the government is now trying to shift the unemployment insurance costs from the UIC and away from itself, what specific steps does the government intend to take that will provide employment in light of the fact that restrictions are taking place in all government expenditures?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Despite the hon. member's repeated request for specific steps, I am sure he is well aware he is in a very general area in talking about the whole program concerning unemployment. Perhaps he could be more specific.

Mr. Peters: I would be particularly interested, Mr. Speaker, in finding out whether the government has intentions of increasing some of the make-work programs it now has in areas such as mine where unemployment is at the rate of 10 per cent. I would also be interested in knowing of whether there is an intention of increasing the amount of the winter works program, the local initiatives program, and some of those programs which are part of the stop-gap employment aid policy.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, Mr. Speaker, I would not be making an announcement of such a program at this time.

EFFECT OF REDUCED FEDERAL EXPENDITURES ON ATLANTIC REGION—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the first question. It concerns the likely increase of unemployment, and the particularly chronic and seasonal difficulties in areas like the Atlantic region, in view of the likelihood of there being some restrictions in federal expenditures. Will the minister be announcing a program or will he be designating the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to be responsible for making sure that possible cut-backs in federal expenditure will not create further unemployment but rather that a specific program will be devised to deal with the difficulties in regions of economic and social disparity.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the colleagues of the hon. gentleman call for reduction in total expenditures we all bear in mind the difficulty this can cause in areas such as his.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary by the hon. member for Egmont.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am rather surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the minister did not hear the question I asked. I asked specifically whether there would be some flexibility with regard to these potential reductions in order that greater hardship is not created for substantial numbers of people in underdeveloped areas.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I might point out to the hon. gentleman that, of course, the call for reductions in expenditures would fall particularly heavily on those sectors of his area—

An hon. Member: It is not flexible.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —would fall particularly heavily on those sectors of his area. We, of course, have been concerned about maintaining the status of transfer payments to the provincial governments and to individuals and that will be continued.

Mr. Stanfield: There is no flexibility. Is that the situation?

POST OFFICE

DISPUTE WITH UNION OF POSTAL WORKERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS ON TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE AND CASUAL WORKERS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. It arises from the continuing saga of the postal negotiations. Now that the Postmaster General has become directly involved in the negotiations, could he indicate to the House whether he has been able to focus the discussions on the key issues of technological change and premium rates of pay for casual employees, particularly women employees especially in this international women's year? Would he tell us whether these are the matters which still remain to be settled in the negotiations.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will be pleased to know that the matter of automation or the clause on technological change has been resolved. Our inability to come to agreement stems from the unrealistic attitude of the negotiating team which fails to understand that whether they are on strike for one day, three months or three years they will not obtain more in terms of wages than the letter carriers obtained which is $1.70 per hour over 30 months.

If they were to accept that and get on to other areas of the settlement to be negotiated, then the contract of course could be submitted to the Anti-Inflation Board for its approval. The union fortunately has three choices today—and they are meeting now. One is to accept the report of Judge Moisan. Another is to reject it or, third, submit it to the membership to find out whether in their opinion the sum of money which resulted in an 82 per cent ratification by the letter carriers is sufficient for the inside workers as well.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF EXCEPTIONS TO PROGRAM OTHER THAN POSTAL WORKERS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the position of the government which appears to be that an exception will be made by the anti-inflation board with regard to the postal workers, can the minister state clearly whether any other exceptions will receive the endorsation of the government in advance of an appeal to the Anti-Inflation Board.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member misunderstands. The guidelines are quite clear that the board will consider exceptional circumstances, but neither the postal workers nor any other group will be given the assurance in advance that they will be entitled to an exception.

TRANSPORT

NEED FOR DREDGING AT LIVERPOOL, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether my question should be directed to the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Public Works, but I am sure the minister responsible will deal with the problem. Dredging has not been carried on for several years at Liverpool, Nova Scotia and the harbour has deteriorated to a point where navigation is hazardous because of the shallow depth of the water. In light of the fact that the harbour is navigable only about four out of every 12 hours, or in other words at high tide, and ships are going aground in the harbour, will the minister investigate this situation in the hope that urgently required dredging for the protection of the shipping industry will be carried out.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take note of that representation.

GRAIN

SUGGESTION FEED GRAINS BE SUBJECT TO WHEAT BOARD QUOTA LEVELS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of reports that the Canadian Wheat Board advisory committee has passed a resolution to the effect that feed grains for the domestic market should be subject to the same quota levels as those in effect for grains delivered to the Canadian Wheat Board, is the government planning to initiate any steps in this respect having regard to the resolution passed by the advisory committee.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. Indeed the rather rapid increase in quotas for grains delivered to the Canadian Wheat Board has put that question into the academic basket. However, in any case the feed grain policy really will work well only if there is open access to delivery points by farmers who wish to deliver their grain into that open market. That was clear at the beginning. We did provide for certain safeguards in case congestion occurred as a general rule, but there has been no sign of that at all as a result of the feed grain policy and therefore there is no reason for change.

INLAND WATERS

REPORT ON USE OF OTTAWA RIVER BY PLEASURE CRAFT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hard-working Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister had an opportunity to study the very realistic report on the possibility of opening up the Ottawa River to pleasure craft navigation. Have his officials studied it, and is he ready to inform the House today or soon what stand he and his department will take on this very important development for both sides of the Ottawa River.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member indicated we have received this report. I have gone through the report. It is currently being studied by the officials of the department. We are somewhat concerned about the magnitude of some of the costs involved. However, we are looking at this seriously, particularly at some of the earlier stages, to see what can be done.

● (1440)

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, would the minister be willing to attend a public meeting in the upper Ottawa valley—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lefebvre: —when he is ready to make such a statement, so that the citizens who are very interested in this project could be there personally to question him on his statement?

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PROVISION IN PROGRAM FOR PRIOR NOTIFICATION OF PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On Friday, in answer to a question concerning prior notification of price increases on some products, the minister noted that such a proposal was impractical and then went on to say that he would consider the suggestion. On the same day, Mr. Pépin announced that certain companies would be required to give prior notification of price increases. In view of that, can the minister say whether or not such prior notification will be part of the government's control package?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): To put the record straight on that, may I point out that I said that prior notification on all products was impractical. I also pointed out in my speech—which I commend to the hon. gentleman—that indeed Mr. Pépin proposed to require prior notification in some cases where that was a practical possibility.

Mr. Nystrom: As a follow up I should like to ask the minister whether he can tell the House for which industries or which products or commodities prior notification of price increases will be required as a necessity. If he cannot tell that to the House now, can he say when he will be notifying the public?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is allied to the question asked by the hon. member for York-Simcoe earlier about notification and about the companies to which notification has been sent. I will be glad to advise the House and the standing committee on the full details of this as soon as I can provide the information.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO COVER FISHERMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is responsible for unemployment insurance. In view of the fact that the proposed income support program for fishermen, which was to be implemented by July, 1975, is not as yet implemented, and there is a danger that it might be further delayed, has the minister taken action within his jurisdiction to change the Unemployment Insurance Act as proposed by various provinces to overcome the existing inequities to fishermen?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it was decided some time ago that policy development in these areas more properly falls within the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of State for Fisheries, while the Unemployment Insurance Commission may continue to provide the delivery system and the administration of whatever policy change will be decided upon in that area.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—EFFECT OF WAGE GUIDELINES ON FEDERAL EMPLOYEES AWAITING RECLASSIFICATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. Many employees of what was once known as the Defence Research Board, a part of the Department of National Defence, and possibly other public servants have either been denied their normal salary increments or have been prevented from bargaining because they have been waiting for months now on Treasury Board for reclassification and certification. Since the situation has been protracted inordinately as a result of Treasury Board dilatoriness, will the minister say whether the recently published guidelines will be made applicable to these employees?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I could draw the attention of the hon. member to the guidelines he might find the section in which reference is made to the transitional situation of such employees.

GARRISON DIVERSION PROJECT—POSSIBILITY OF ALTERNATIVES BEING CONSIDERED—REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. In July the text of a note of protest from the Government of Canada to the government of the United States over the Garrison Diversion project was issued, part of which reads:

> The Government of Canada, therefore, is pleased to learn that consideration is being given to alternatives to the current Garrison Diversion unit which would not adversely affect Canada.
> The Government of Canada has not yet been officially informed . . .

I should like to ask the minister, since that note was issued some four months ago, if she could inform the House whether or not there are alternatives to the Garrison Diversion unit being considered, and whether or not

Canadian and United States officials have had talks on this important matter?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we have gone very much beyond the note to the United States authorities. We are now in the process of handing to the International Joint Commission a joint reference with the U.S.A. about the Garrison Diversion unit which calls for such measures including modifications to the Garrison project.

Mr. Murta: I should like to ask the minister if she can outline briefly what the terms of reference on the Garrison Diversion project will be to the International Joint Commission and if she has any further information to add.

Mrs. Sauvé: The reference to the International Joint Commission outlines the fact that we are not satisfied that the project as conceived will not do damage to Canadian property or the Canadian environment. Therefore, we state that we feel that a new assessment of this project must take place and that modifications must be envisaged in order to ensure that the United States will really fulfil its obligations under the Boundary Waters Treaty.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF REGIONAL DIRECTOR AT WINNIPEG TO MEET WITH INDIAN BROTHERHOOD—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and it stems from the incident which took place in Winnipeg about a month ago in which the regional director walked out of a meeting just prior to the presentation by the vice-president of the National Indian Brotherhood. When asked by the press why he was leaving, he said he had heard it all before. Would the minister indicate to the House whether he has reprimanded the department or whether he concurs with the action, or what the future performance of the department will be with reference to such a meeting?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not reprimanded the departmental officials. It seems to me that there are more logical and sensible ways to try to deal with these matters than barging into meetings. That is the reason we have established the joint committee of the cabinet and National Indian Brotherhood as the committee to deal with these problems. If it is a grave concern, that is the logical place in which to deal with it rather than barging into regional directors' meetings.

POSSIBLE CANCELLATION OF LIP PROJECTS BY PROVINCES IN VIEW OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Since generally speaking the provinces seem to join in the collective effort all Canadians must do to stop inflation, according to the guidelines of Bill C-73, can the minister tell the House if provinces, or a particular province, have expressed the intent to cancel LIP projects for their area in 1975-76, in line with this will to cut the expenses?

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON COST OF IMPORTED FARM MACHINERY—CONSULTATION WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the minister's statement made to the agricultural undergraduate society of the University of British Columbia that controls on industry will hold down farmers' costs of production, and in view of the fact that a large portion of growing farm operation costs is due to the ever rising price of imported farm machinery, was the minister's statement a result of discussions he had with Henry Kissinger during his Ottawa visit or with any other representative of the government of the United States?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, these statements were made on the basis of facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That's a joke!

Mr. Towers: Will the minister inform the House what the results were of the discussions he had on the costs of production of farm equipment?

Mr. Whelan: I have had many discussions regarding the farm machinery industry. I think that, because of free trade, we have lost a big portion of our farm machinery industry. I mentioned it to Mr. Kissinger when he was here.

EFFECT OF PRICE GUIDELINES ON MARKETING BOARDS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and it relates to the applicability of guidelines or controls to farm marketing boards. Can the minister tell the House whether it is the position of the government that farm marketing boards could not increase the price of the commodities they sell beyond the increased production costs of those producers who make up the membership of that particular farm marketing board. Is that the test that will be applied?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first, it should be made clear to the House that there are very few marketing boards that set the price. They do not have that authority. We only have three federal boards which set prices for commodities, the Canadian Dairy Commission, CEMA and the Turkey Marketing Board, which come under my jurisdiction. The rest are under provincial jurisdiction and many of them do not have authority to set prices. Those which have authority to set prices take into consideration the cost of production features when they are negotiating the price with the processors who are going to buy the product. I can tell the hon. member this, and I am sure he is aware of it already, that they never do get exorbitant amounts of money for their products. Most contracts are signed for one year, and if inflation increases production costs during that year the farmers do not get an added bit of pay for the product that year. With this new program, some marketing boards should be asking for less next year.

EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH PROJECTS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture and I am hopeful because he is dealing in facts today. In view of demand around the world for increased agricultural production and in view of the need to bring restraint into our economy, has the minister discussed with the Minister of Finance what programs will be adopted in Canada in agricultural research in order that they may be expanded and we might get back to increased productivity and get our economy back under control?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have said it many times before and I will say it again. If all other segments of the economy had increased productivity by the same amount as farmers have, that is 100 per cent per capita in the last ten years while the rest of the economy, only increased productivity by 40 per cent, we would not have to put the kind of programs into effect that we have.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister what progress he has in mind for expansion in agricultural research so that productivity will increase?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes this is no place for a recitation of that sort. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

PROPOSED LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that some 400 employees are to be laid off from the CPR shops in Winnipeg this Friday evening, and in view of the fact that my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North and I have been raising this matter with the minister's predecessor for some considerable time, can the new Minister of Transport say whether he is in a position to do anything this week to prevent this lay off from taking place?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not have anything new to report.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the seriousness of this situation will the minister communicate with the CPR about this matter this week?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will give that matter the serious consideration I always devote to the hon. member's comments.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO CONTROL VIOLENT CRIME—OPPORTUNITY OF MEMBERS TO VOTE ON SEPARATE ITEMS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I am referring in this question to the statement by the Prime Minister on Thanksgiving Day that the government's program to reduce violent crime would be introduced shortly, and the minister's indication that this was to be the case. Can the minister tell the House today when that package of amendments or statutes will be introduced in the House? Can he also tell the House whether those amendments will be in a form to permit members to vote separately with the respect to each item in the package, bearing in mind that there are reports of such diverse items as gun control, parole and abolition of capital punishment as well as a number of other items. Are members going to have an opportunity to deal with each of those subjects on their merits?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member a definite answer in that it relates to discussions with my colleague and certainly consultations would have to be held with provincial governments and others as to when we can commence drafting the legislation. On the second question, some decisions remain to be made within the government on that issue. As to the nature of any bill or bills to be introduced, however, I would point out to the hon. member that in the normal course of events each bill goes to a standing committee where each separate proposition can be voted on by itself.

ADMINISTRATIVE ERRORS IN CONNECTION WITH RELEASE OF PRISONERS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General on the subject of "administrative errors" as he referred to them last week, resulting in inmates of penitentiaries being released when they ought not to be, often with tragic results. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman now about the converse, where an inmate is kept in custody when his sentence has been completed which occurred not too long ago in the province of New Brunswick. I would ask if the minister can assure the House that in future he will try to keep those prisoners in who should be in, but will also let prisoners out when it is time for them to get out?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt whatsoever about the capability of the Canadian Armed Forces to provide security and to assist the other authorities in making certain that the athletes and spectators at the Olympics are secure. I think all Canadians would be glad to know that the armed forces are able and ready to do that.

EFFECT OF PRICE GUIDELINES ON MARKETING BOARDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who said a few moments ago, no doubt quite correctly, that generally speaking marketing boards take into consideration the costs of producers when negotiating a price. Can the minister tell us whether marketing boards are subject to a guideline under which they can increase the prices they negotiate only to the extent of the increase in the costs of their producer members and can marketing boards be asked by the Anti-Inflation Board for justification of increases within its terms of reference? No skating around, please.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would say that most of the requests previously made by marketing boards would be within those terms of reference.

An hon. Member: That is nonsense.

2. None.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE—CONSULTANTS

Question No. 400—Mr. MacKay:

1. From the 1968 fiscal year to date (a) how many consultants were hired (b) what were the terms of reference and time length of the work assignment (c) what was the amount paid to each (d) what was the name of each for the Prime Minister's Office

2. What are the names, positions, number and salaries of public servants for the Prime Minister's Office that held a position similar to that of the outside consultant hired by the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See reply to question No. 399.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Question No. 1,520—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names and addresses of all persons who have, since April 20, 1968, acted in any way by retainer or contract or any other arrangement, as advisors, consultants, or so-called experts to the Prime Minister's Office (a) in each case, what are the dates such work was performed, what was the nature of such work and what fees were involved (b) what is the total cost involved during all the time since April 20, 1968 (c) what are all the reasons, in each case, that such persons were used instead of the services of the Public Service?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See reply to question 399.

STATEMENT BY MR. K. R. MacGREGOR

Question No. 1,844—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Prime Minister aware of the following statement by Mr. K. R. MacGregor, Chairman of the Board of Mutual Life and former Federal Superintendent of Insurance, made to the annual meeting of the Mutual Life Assurance Company "We are heading rapidly towards the essentials of the U.S. Presidential system. Power is becoming concentrated in the Prime Minister's Office and the Privy Council Office with inevitable lessening of the influence of the Cabinet and Parliament and with inevitable changes in the character and status of the Public Service."?

2. Does Mr. MacGregor's statement represent an accurate picture of the way the government is operating and (a) if so, what are the additional steps the government has planned to move further towards governing Canada from the Prime Minister's Office (b) if not, what are the specific and detailed reasons that the government considers Mr. MacGregor's statement inaccurate?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, Citation 171 (nn).

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Question No. 2,535—Mr. Lawrence:

Has the Prime Minister, or any person acting on his behalf, given verbally or in writing any opinion, certification, or undertaking to any Cabinet Minister, other than the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, respecting a real, possible or potential conflict of interest arising from the holdings or investments of such Cabinet Minister, or the absence of any such conflict and, if so, who are the Cabinet Ministers and which of their investments or holdings are involved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Yes. These consultations led to all Ministers bringing themselves into compliance with the conflict of interest guidelines that were announced in the Prime Minister's statements to the House on July 18th and December 18th, 1973.

PAYMENT FOR USE OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

Question No. 2,767—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Has the government received any payments from the Prime Minister or any Minister personally, or on their behalf, respecting the use of property of the government since January 1, 1972 and, if so, what are the particulars and dates of such payments?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Prime Minister is concerned: Yes. See Section 5, Official Residences Act.

IMMIGRATION OFFICES OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 2,977—Mr. Caccia:

1. How many immigration offices does Canada maintain outside Canada?

2. How many immigration officers are stationed in each such office?

3. How much money has it cost to maintain and staff each such office in the years 1970 to 1975?

4. How much money does the government expect to spend to maintain and staff each such office in the fiscal year 1975-76?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. As of July 31, 1975, 59.

2, 3 and 4. See Table following.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Question No. 2,978—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

What specific regulations, directives, guidelines or other action have been issued or taken by (a) the Prime Minister (b) the Clerk of the Privy Council (c) any other officer to ensure that any person employed in or by the Privy Council does not interfere with ministerial responsibilities in the formulation and evaluation of policies?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See pages 33:18 and 33:19 Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for Monday, May 12, 1975; and pages 36:26 and 36:27 of Issue No. 36 for Tuesday, May 20, 1975.

[Mr. Andras.]

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE—NAMES AND TERMS OF REFERENCE OF OFFICER OR GROUP UNDER CONTRACT

Question No. 2,979—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What are the names and specific terms of reference of any officer or group in or under contract to (a) the Privy Council Office (b) the Prime Minister's Office (c) any other government agency who are presently engaged in any analysis of any aspect of the working of Parliament with the intention of proposing suggestions for reform of Parliament to the Prime Minister or with any other purpose?

2. In each case, which areas of parliamentary activity are being analysed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): As stated previously to the House (see page 6022 of the House of Commons Debates for May 22, 1975) I take responsibility in my capacity as President of the Privy Council in matters concerning the reform of Parliament.

ABORTIONS

Question No. 3,074—Mr. Robinson:

What has been the cost to the taxpayer to provide free abortions under health services for each year 1968 to 1975 inclusive?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada collects data on the number of therapeutic abortions performed in Canadian hospitals. Refer to House Question 3077 for this information. Statistics Canada does not collect detailed data on the cost of providing various specific types of medical services.

ABORTIONS

Question No. 3,077—Mr. Robinson:

How many (a) legal (b) illegal abortions have been performed in each accredited hospital in Canada in each year 1968 to 1975 inclusive?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that data on legal therapeutic abortions from August 1969 to December 1973 are available. Data for 1974 have been collected and are currently being processed. Data for 1975 are being collected but have not yet been analysed. Data on illegal abortions in Canada are not available since these are, for the most part, not reported. Data on the total number of legal therapeutic abortions performed in each province in each year from late 1969 to 1973 inclusive are presented in the attached table. The number and location of accredited and approved hospitals with therapeutic abortion committees have been reported by each province and are available from 1972 to 1974 inclusive. See Table II. The Statistics Act specifically precludes the release of information on the number of therapeutic abortions performed in each individual accredited hospital.

NUMBER OF REPEAT ABORTIONS

Question No. 3,088—Mr. Robinson:

How many women in Canada have had more than one abortion at the taxpayers expense?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: Detailed data on repeat therapeutic abortions are not yet available for 1974. Data for 1972 and 1973 are available through the individual case reporting system. In 1972, in reports from six provinces and the Yukon (excluding Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia) there were a total of 413 repeat abortions out of a total of 6,382 abortions reported. In 1973, in reports from eight provinces and the Yukon (excluding Ontario and British Columbia) there were a total of 591 repeat therapeutic abortions out of a total of 11,249 abortions reported. As therapeutic abortion has been considered a required medical service by provincial departments of health, payment for this service would fall within the terms of the shared federal-provincial Health Insurance program.

MIRABEL AIRPORT

Question No. 3,119—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the Prime Minister say at the opening of the new Mirabel Airport: "The Torontonians will be down here on their knees" and, if so (a) for what reason did he make the statement (b) what is the full meaning of the statement (c) was it meant as a public affront to the people of Ontario and Toronto in particular?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms Citation 171(1).

PRESIDENT OF CIDA

Question No. 1,583—Mr. Jones:

1. Under the rules of protocol, does the President of CIDA take precedence over the Prime Minister and/or Cabinet Ministers in certain foreign countries?

2. Are the citizens of certain foreign countries led to believe that the President of CIDA is supreme over the Prime Minister and/or Cabinet Ministers?

3. (a) What are the responsibilities and duties of the President of CIDA (b) how many persons are on his personal staff (c) what is the total staff of CIDA?

4. (a) What is the name of the President (b) on what date does his appointment expire (c) what is his salary?

5. (a) What are the names of all employees of CIDA (b) what are their salaries?

6. What persons, firms, companies and organizations, have received monies and/or contracts from CIDA and what are their names, the amounts of the contracts and the officers and personal shareholders or owners?

7. (a) Through what Minister does CIDA report to Parliament (b) on what date was the last report tabled (c) on what date will the next report be made?

Return tabled.

Mr. Blais: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to do with the first three questions on the order paper, Nos. 28, 62 and 69, which I placed on the order paper on September 30. They were on the order paper in the previous parliament, and remain unanswered. Two questions concern the Prime Minister. One has to do with designers, architects and others who have been employed at heavy public expense on projects at 24 Sussex Drive. Surely the answer to that question is straightforward.

The second question deals with the numerous journeys the Prime Minister has made at public expense. The answer to that too, I should think, is straightforward. The third question concerns my constituency: the Post Office Department moved the post office from premises in the village of Lyndhurst, for which the rental had been $120 per year, to similar premises for which the department pays $5,500 per year. Such a rent increase may not seem important to the high-spending people opposite, but I suggest that when the rent goes from $120 a year to $5,500, something smells.

That question should have been answered long ago: it has been on the order paper for a year and a half. I have raised these matters a good many times, and I suggest that the parliamentary secretary or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—who has left—ought to tell us why these answers have been outstanding for so long.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

The House resumed, from Friday, October 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the government white paper opens its text with this deathless prose saying "Canada is in the grip of serious inflation." The government has suddenly discovered inflation. On Friday, during the short time available, I asked what were the reasons for the government's apparent volte-face; what were the reasons behind the government's flip-flop, as it were, with regard to an incomes policy or wage and price controls? To include rents as well—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I ask hon. members to carry out their conversations behind the curtains and allow the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) to continue his remarks.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I know that important government decisions must be taken, but not here on the floor.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They are usually ad hoc.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They are ad hoc. For all we know, they may be contemplating a tax change right now, as happened suddenly not long ago when the decision to change an excise tax provision was made in this House during conversation.

I want to know whether this is a bona fide policy or whether the government's sudden change was motivated by other reasons. Why did the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suddenly furnish leadership and seize on controls as a means of fighting inflation? It seems as if the government suddenly discovered inflation. On Friday I canvassed the reasons as to why the former minister of finance may have resigned. I am glad to note the presence of the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) in the House, because I will ask him to do something which he owes this country. I will ask him to participate in this debate and tell us precisely why he resigned his position as minister of finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): After all, the former minister went out on hosannas of praise sung in the press and elsewhere. We want to know if he advocated a program of full controls after he came from the meeting of the World Bank, and if there was a dispute between himself and the Prime Minister. After all, the Prime Minister and the former leader of the NDP, ably abetted by the media which had not reflected deeply enough on the question at the time, were not in favour of anti-inflation controls. During the last election campaign it was felt that the smart thing to do was to knock out the concept of an incomes policy. The media went chasing some red herring which the Prime Minister wanted them to chase. Nevertheless, the policies at issue in the 1974 election campaign had to do with the deficiencies of this ministry; they had to do with the budget brought forward by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton, on which the government was defeated.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The budget failed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The budget failed lamentably. Therefore, why was there this sudden change in October? I suggest that perhaps this is an effort merely to divert public attention. If there was a quarrel within cabinet which forced the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton to resign, then this is a beautiful diversion of attention. The newspapers, radio, television—just about everybody—are ignoring precisely what happened in the cabinet.

Mr. Stanfield: Ask him once more to speak.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The request has been repeated for the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton to speak. I hope we shall hear him in this debate. He is a good man. I believe him to be an honest man. I think he must give an honest answer regarding the proposals incorporated in this bill.

An hon. Member: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I hear someone say, "Speak to the bill." We are speaking to the bill, the principle of the bill. I am not nit-picking, but unless there is this opportunity—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Would the hon. member please address the Chair?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Of course, Mr. Speaker; I will not neglect your august presence. But hon. members opposite want us to become involved in, shall we say, the shallow details of this mean and miserable bill. I will say this: we advocated the principle of controls, and still do.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

● (1510)

Let us consider what inflation has been like since this administration under the present Prime Minister took over. In June, 1968, the CIP was 120; in September of this year it was 189.3. Let us see how it has moved. In 1970 it was 129.7; in 1972, 139.8; in 1973, 151; in June, 1974, 166.7. After the right hon. member and his cohorts in the Liberal party won the election in 1974, it went to 176.6 in January, a period of six months. In February this year it was 178; in June, 184; in August, 188.4; and in September, 189.3. Inflation has been with us for a long time.

In 1969 the Prime Minister made a dramatic appeal over television on the subject of inflation. That campaign soon died. In 1971 the Prime Minister said that inflation in Canada had been stopped. We have had all sorts of statements from the right hon. gentleman saying that the government's chief task was to wrestle inflation to the ground. It has not done a thing to achieve that end. Look at the statements made by the former minister of finance. Did he speak about the need for controls, in his June budget, on inflation? Inflation was going ahead at its fastest rate from June, 1974, to June, 1975, right through the February budget into the June budget, but no real steps were taken to fight it. There was a bit of a tax cut and the odd fiscal measure, but nothing very serious. The results show on the charts. If hon. members doubt what I have to say, my figures come from the Bank of Canada monthly report.

I have here a transcript of the proceedings of the 1970 Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, a committee in which there was a Liberal majority. Today, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance say we have to break the inflation psychology that exists. That is why we have this bill. Certain aspects of it are made to appear harsh. We are now to get a great sales campaign. The Prime Minister leaves tomorrow morning for various parts of the country and we will not see him until some time next week. We will hear ministers talking about the dangers of inflation psychology. They will say that the public was not aware that we had inflation, that they got caught up in this and it must be the objective of the government to try and deal with inflation.

Two years ago, most of the inflation that we had was imported. Now it is due to a cost-pull: wages, salaries and revenues have been too high. It is not a case of demand-pull. We know that a great part of Canadian industry is lying idle and that there is less than our full potential being used. Unfortunately, I do not have here the membership of the committee; however, I do know that the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) was the chairman. I cite as follows from page 392 of the Journals of parliament dated February 6, 1970:

> Today's inflation has tended to institutionalize itself as a persistent and would-be permanent guest in our system, through, among other factors, the widespread development of an inflationary psychology.

This government was told by its majority-dominated committee in February, 1970, that there was an inflationary psychology. What have they done? In 5½ years they have done precisely nothing except feed that inflation. In February, 1970, the CIP stood at something less than 129. The figure for June was 129.7. The last figure, for September, was 189.3. That is an increase of 60 points, or 50 per cent inflation. There has been an increase in prices since 1970 of 50 per cent. Is that satisfactory? Is it satisfactory that the government has not done anything in that time? However, we are now getting this spinning of wheels, revving of motors and dashing off in all directions at five minutes to midnight.

No one has talked about unemployment, the second bugbear or characteristic of a sick Canadian economy. There is overly high unemployment, more than 7½ per cent at the present time. What will it be by next February? We have not had one indication in this white paper or in speeches of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance or any other government spokesman as to what they propose to do about unemployment.

In September, the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs, the hon. member for Windsor West, made a speech to the Rotary Club in Windsor. As is the habit of former ministers, they send out their speeches. The former minister keeps talking about his anti-profiteering bill, saying it was the great thing in the armoury of the government. He proposed it in 1972, and it died amoaning. It was again proposed, in a different form, but it did not see the light of day. It should be brought forward again. This was done on behalf of the Liberal party even though that former minister is very critical of government policy or government inactivity with regard to inflation. Yet on the basis of advancing the cause of the Liberal party, the hon. member for Windsor West calls for an antiprofiteering bill, one which is even tougher than the bill he introduced. Is there mention of an anti-profiteering bill? Not that I very much care for one, but that is what the government said it was going to do.

● (1520)

What are the fiscal and monetary measures which the government would propose? Are there to be any incentives to productivity? There was a great deal of talk in the speeches of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister about a decline in Canadian productivity. Let them go back to that committee report of February, 1970. They will find the committee members, including the majority Liberals, talking even then about a regrettable decline in Canadian productivity and saying it was one of the major causes of inflation.

The great issue at that time was high interest rates; that is what motivated the government in naming this committee to look into inflation. Back in 1969-70, as the committee reported, interest rates were around 8.5 per cent. But today, as of October 15, interest rates are 9.52 per cent. On October 1, the federal government's long-term investment rate had reached 9.84 per cent. This is a clear indication of the inability of hon. gentlemen opposite to deal with inflation.

The average coupon rate on Government of Canada Savings Bonds is priced to yield 9.38 percent. Imagine the federal government borrowing those hundreds of millions of dollars and having to pay that kind of coupon rate. And this is not just for today; it is for the long term—the life of those bonds. What sort of a yoke are they fastening on the neck of the Canadian economy when the government puts us into a strait-jacket of that type, probably for the next nine years? I have not seen the bonds, but I assume they will mature in nine years. It means that high interest rates are going to be with us for a long time. Invest in mortgages at rates less than 9 per cent, when 9.5 per cent is being paid on government bonds right now? Who is fooling whom? Those high interest rates will remain with us as long as the present government is in charge of economic policy.

As far as this bill is concerned, we support the principle of control. I certainly did so to the best of my ability and with my full strength during the last electoral campaign; and with success, because the people understood when one talked to them about the wastage and cancer of inflation, its effect upon their incomes, their bond holdings, their private pension plans, and so on. Imagine a schoolteacher going out on pension in 1968 with the CIP at 120, and today facing 189.3. Mr. Speaker, that is worse than highway robbery. We throw robbers into jail; sneak thieves go to jail; but the biggest sneak thief of all has been the Government of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —for permitting this to go on while, all the time, hiding their heads in the sand. True, they offered a band-aid here and there. But what was done for pensioners, what was done for retired people living on their hard-earned savings, those whose resources were being eroded? From time to time the government came forward and announced grandiloquently that they were increasing pensions or supplementing them in accordance with the cost of living index. What cynicism, to carry on in that way!

The bill before us sets up a big, new agency. Already we are seeing it in the process of expansion. The chairman is saying things which make the vice-chairman wince with pain. We are likely to see an interesting performance there. Here in the House, one minister is saying that wage increases of 38 per cent and 40 per cent qualify under the guidelines, while another is saying no, they do not. Then, again, this bill provides for a period of 3½ years, long enough to get the total economy wired into a system from which it will never emerge: it will never come out after 3½ years.

Moreover, there is power in the legislation, subject to the approval of parliament, to enable those controls to be continued further. An opportunity will be provided for an even more synical performance of the kind for which the Prime Minister is noted. Some three months before the 1978 election the controls will come off or it will be announced that they will come off at a date close to the election, not during the election, because we know there would be certain repressions which would burst forth at that time. Mr. Speaker, at the end of 18 months surely parliament should be able to review this program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): After all, why cannot the government take parliament and the Canadian people into its confidence? The government is imposing this particular economic program, these heavy controls, controls that the Minister of Finance says are absolutely frightening and which are going to frighten us for 3½ years. Parliament should say no to that, and so should the Canadian people.

● (1530)

What is required is a careful analysis of the situation at the end of 18 months, so we can decide where we have gone. Obviously, there will be some errors made. It is a tough program. I am quite honest when I say that had the Conservatives won the election in 1974 and introduced our system of controls—the 90-day freeze and then a short period of controls—there would have been mistakes; there would have been some difficulties. After all, we could not get into the blessed mess that we are in without it costing us something to get out. If the situation were so simple that there would be no problems, then the art of government would be extraordinarily easy. But that is not the case.

This House will ultimately, undoubtedly, pass this bill in principle so that it can go to committee to be examined in detail. We will then see the proof of the pudding. The bill is being sent to the finance committee, but I can assure the House, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be just government officials who will speak to the committee—not likely. The minister has already confused everybody, including himself, and has he done so just to confuse the committee?

I am sure that organized groups, farmers, manufacturers, many walks of life both organized and unorganized, will want to let the committee know what they think about these controls and some of the dangers. I hope their criticisms will be constructive. But there will be criticism and it will take some time to express. I hope we can arrange our work in this way so that those people who are vitally concerned with this problem of administration, on both sides of the House, will be able to devote appropriate time to the matter; that we will not have piled on to the committee more and more work so there is pressure to work morning, afternoon and night, week in and week out, so as to hide and obscure, as is often the case when government tries to ram through a measure.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I hope that in his reply the Minister of Finance will be forthcoming in regard to some of the questions posed by my colleagues and others in the House. We say that inflation is so bad that we must have the most straightforward honesty both from the Minister of Finance and from the Prime Minister. And last but not least, we must have an honest exposé of what went on by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton when he was acting in his capacity as minister of finance.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset that I am relieved that the government has at last faced up to its responsibility to do something about inflation. This certainly is not the occasion to reiterate the arguments that we have been putting forward for so long calling for positive, strong action. Suffice it to say that we welcome this declaration of intent.

Our hopes were raised many months ago when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, and as he has repeated so often, that he would wrestle inflation to the ground. Well, that announced that the match would be held, but unfortunately the date was never set. At last the government has entered the ring. That is good and necessary. But I cannot help wondering, Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me to prolong the analogy, just what the government has been doing during the training period, this long, long training period. Obviously, the government was not doing roadwork. The provinces, the unions, business—none was brought in on the preparations.

Nor do we have any evidence that the government was even doing exercises at home in preparation for the fight. Indeed, the entire plan so far revealed has every mark of being put together in considerable haste. What we have before us is obviously the result of the burning of midnight oil for a period of about three weeks or so, probably since about September 26 when the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) moved into Place Bell Canada. Could it be that when he moved in he could find no contingency planning, no strategy for the forthcoming match, not even a few notes on a blotter?

Of course, that raises the still unresolved question—just referred to—of why one of the seconds left the team before the bell rang. We still have not had a proper account of what lies behind that change in the line-up. In my view, an explanation is owing, and badly owing; but that is another matter which I hope will be answered by the former minister of finance.

We certainly had no idea that the fight was coming soon, in view of the government's diet during the training period—salary increases, complement increases, a quarter of a million dollars worth of smoked salmon and champagne to open Mirabel, regret than $400 million will not be spent at Pickering, with the suggestion that other places will be found to spend the money, and an absolutely shattering deficit as well. No, Mr. Speaker, there was no dieting, no trimming of fat, in preparation for the wrestling match. I suppose the idea was to go in heavy, to gain as much weight advantage as possible.

Why, then, did the government also feed its opponent? Why make the contest more difficult? Why increase, for instance, so dramatically the price of fuel? Did we really have to add to rising costs everywhere for home buyers and businessmen by putting up the interest rate so high? Did we have to go so deeply into the money markets that private borrowers are finding the pot dry or the price far too high?

However, that is past: we now come to the day of the big event and the bell has rung for the first round. And what a fight it is going to be. It will be a long one, Mr. Speaker, a very long one. There is no expectation of an early decision. There is no indication or suggestion that once inflation is on the mat it can be pinned quickly so we can then turn our attention to other matters. We have been told by the Prime Minister that it is going to be more than three years before the referee is asked if the fight should continue, and that worries me very much.

I worry that the powers granted will be kept by government. I worry that what is being done to meet an emergency may turn into a way of life, a continuing condition of being Canadian. I worry that the free forces that have helped us reach the prosperity we have will be forever checked as a result of needing regulation at this particular time. I plead with the government to give us some concrete and meaningful assurance that parliament will be able to review these powers, not three years hence but six months hence or at least a year hence. We had problems enough with one War Measures Act; let us not make this a parallel in the "war against inflation measures act."

● (1540)

An hon. Member: Let's not make jokes.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): It will be no joke if you have to live under those kinds of regulations. The granting of powers such as these to the government is, and should always be, recognized as an extraordinary measure. Let us demonstrate this. Let us show the people of Canada that this is a temporary measure, not a new government program of indefinite or interminable duration, and that the form of this legislation makes this very clear. The bill should not be proposing a major change in the economic and social structure of the country. It should not be using a temporary crisis brought about in large part by poor fiscal and monetary management by the government to give lasting and sweeping powers to the government.

Neither should a special bureaucracy be created to administer this legislation. Surely that can be done in a way that will not add yet another increase to the permanent civil service. Let us do it right. Let us not leave any room for false impressions. For once, let us see that the action matches the intention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): The proposals my party put forward, and which I supported, called for a timetable of controls and an early cut-off point. This is vital and is a condition for the support I would give the government's current plan.

I have another concern, Mr. Speaker, and that is about how tough a fight we can expect. As you know, our party's proposal was for a short but total freeze to be allowed by selective and limited controls and only for the duration necessary. This was a program, in other words, that would move from comprehensiveness to flexibility and then to abolition. That is not what the government's current proposal provides. This bill before us starts with an array of guidelines and exemptions. It moves from flexibility to rigidity with no provision for parliamentary review or even analysis of the saliency of the program, and regardless of a flexible approach at the outside, imbedded within this bill are provisions that can be activated at any time the government chooses, which will give it unprecedented regulatory powers in peacetime.

The government has chosen to start with a soft approach. If any program is to beat inflation, it must be seen to be tough. The government must convince the people of Canada that the program will initially in fact stop the inflationary cycle. The climate of the expectation of inflation must be broken. That is what the Prime Minister said the other night, and I agree with him on that particular point.

If the inflation psychology is to be beaten, people must be convinced that inflation will be beaten. They will never believe that if they see exemptions being made for a range of special cases. I fear that greatly, because if some people escape the net and get higher pay raises, or if some companies can put up prices and get away with it, people just simply will not believe that the program will work, and they will have very clear evidence that they are still falling behind and will continue to want and demand more, and in all likelihood they will need more.

I can imagine some of the very difficult decisions that will have to be taken. It is not easy to be tough; and let there be no mistake, being tough will sometimes mean being unfair. But unless the government is tough, it will never convince people that they should discipline themselves to the controls and that they will not be doing themselves and their families a disservice by following the law.

I think it is dreadfully unfortunate that this program has been launched in a way that seems to maximize confusion. Hardly anyone knows how the controls will affect him or her. Each and every exemption the government introduces increases the confusion. We, absolutely, must get clarity and certainty and we must get it fast. I call on the government to be strong and to show, in the really hard decisions it will have to make, that it has the power and it has the will to win this battle. Let it be seen to have determination and confidence in the course it has undertaken.

This will mean that its decisions will not always be as fair as we would normally expect. It will not always be fair to stop some price rises, but we must. Exceptions for some pay raises may look equitable, but to allow them will destroy the whole program. Many inequities exist today and they are suffered mainly by those who do not have great power; those who are unlikely to benefit from any exemptions that will be asked for or achieved.

Tough controls will mean rough justice, as my leader has said. That is just another reason why controls must be of short and limited duration. If the people of Canada anticipate years and years of the exercise of these powers, they will not put up with unfair treatment. If they can see light instead of dark at the end of the tunnel, and if they are convinced that remedy is not indefinitely postponed and that a wait of a limited period will allow redress in an atmosphere from which inflationary expectations are removed, then it will be possible to live within guidelines even when it means suffering temporary and relative disadvantage.

I suggest that the government will incur support if it adheres to a strict interpretation of the legislation, but I predict that it will incur a failure of the program, a loss of the fight and a collapse of confidence if the hard decisions are not taken.

There are many specific items in the bill before us that require careful attention. My colleagues will deal with many of these. Before continuing with my general remarks, I should like to comment on one specific area that does not appear in the legislation but is in the white paper, the action plan, and I refer to the area of rents.

The government will ask the provinces to take action. It has been suggested in the white paper that rents be allowed to rise to some as yet undetermined percentage increase. Beyond that, increases must be justified by demonstrated rising costs. New rental accommodation, as is stated in the white paper, that has no history of rental contracts is exempt for five years. Why is it exempt for five years? Is that the real horizon for this program? Is that what the government means?

I also want to know how the allowed percentage increase referred to will be decided. Obviously, this is an area within the jurisdiction of the provinces, but this is also a problem that is real, pressing and urgent all across Canada. There are few of us in this House who have not had the problem of rents brought forcibly to our attention. The provinces have repeatedly urged the government to take a lead in this fight against inflation.

● (1550)

I hope the government will not duck its mandate in the area of rents. Certainly, the provinces have prime jurisdiction, but the responsibility for leadership rests here in Ottawa. In this connection I hear rumours that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) may convene a federal-provincial meeting to discuss this specific subject. This must go ahead. Surely this is an opportunity not to be missed.

Please don't let us hear, in effect, that the confusion in which that ministry has just been thrown by a restructuring of its hierarchy necessitates the passing up of this responsibility. Let us not say that the ministers of finance can handle this little item. It is a housing matter and should be dealt with by the ministers responsible for that function.

Is the government prepared to act like a government for Canadians, or will it once again relegate housing to a tag-end item for the financial mandarins? Will the Minister of State for Urban Affairs be given a chance to do his job, or will he have to keep sitting where this government's order of precedence puts him—on the sidelines? The answer to this question will tell Canada what priority this government really gives to one of the three essentials of human life—shelter.

This leads me, Mr. Speaker, to some of my broader concerns about the program that has been presented for our consideration. Everyone knows that inflation is not an indivisible, single-based problem. There are sectoral factors that must be considered. Housing is certainly one of those. Supply of accommodation, not just greed of landlords and owners, is the root of increasing housing costs. And in a major degree the supply of housing is determined by the effective cost of mortgage money. We now have mortgage rates that border on the usurious and put home ownership beyond the hope of all but a few. Those same rates make it uneconomic for business to build rental accommodation.

Does anyone here know of any unsubsidized rental housing being built, for instance, here in Ottawa? I can tell you that the amount of such construction across Canada is completely inadequate to meet the needs. Rent control will not solve the housing problem. More housing will. But that depends upon mortgage money being available at reasonable cost and in sufficient supply. The anti-inflation package is incomplete until it solves this problem.

What are the government's plans? Which of the many alternatives available does it propose to pursue? I have already suggested a range of programs that could be used. Mortgage interest payments over a fixed per cent—I suggest 8 per cent—could be deductible from income for tax purposes. Mortgages for new starts can be subsidized down to a fixed rate—here, again, I suggest 8 per cent—and an upper limit for each mortgage should of course be established. An investment tax credit could be given for funds directed entirely to mortgages. To help ensure the supply of serviced land, a fund could be established to provide low-cost loans to help municipalities in servicing and developing land.

We need to know what the government intends. Veiled and hazy comments about pleasant surprises to come are insufficient. Here, clearly, is a sector where specific, I might almost say concrete, government action is called for. We have heard rumours that new housing initiatives will be forthcoming. We await the completion of the dance of the mandarins to hear what they will tell the minister to say. But be forewarned. If the new strategy tries to take credit for the recycling of the approximately $300 million already budgeted but not yet allocated from Central Mortgage and Housing, we will see through the deception. The problem cannot be settled by a rehash; it requires new thinking and new commitment.

The debilitating effect of interest rates has crippled not only the housing sector but is also a major contributing factor in perpetuating our prolonged economic slump. Business just cannot afford to invest in plant and equipment at current rates of interest; the need for working capital must go unfulfilled. We must know what monetary policies the government intends to pursue. Legislated controls are now necessary to fight inflation, but the rest of the government's weaponry must be brought to bear—and we must know how it intends to use these weapons.

Without a substantial improvement in the growth of our real national output, the attack on inflationary pressures can only achieve momentary success at best. What plants, what incentives, what help does the government propose to increase productivity? Our economic malaise requires clear and direct action. Our productivity declines; perhaps most importantly of all, it declines in comparison with our trading partners. How long does the government intend to allow our relative competitiveness to fall back? Sure we import some of the world's inflationary pressures, but how long will we compound this folly at home? Unless the anti-inflation packages deals with this problem, it is woefully incomplete.

How does the government intend to get the economy moving? Our plants are working far below capacity. We have hundreds of thousands of unemployed. This cannot be ignored and it cannot be solved by the government's usual answer of printing more money. What fiscal policy will be used? We hear that government spending will be restrained. Where, and how? The details of this aspect of the government's program are just as important as the details on the operation of controls.

How will the deficit be brought under some reasonable control? A strong policy of spending restraint, with detailed guidelines, must be instituted immediately. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) must act, and he must tell us immediately what that action will be. I have said that I want to support the government in its anti-inflation program, but that program must be a totality. No single initiative, however laudable, will suffice. I challenge the government to unveil the rest of its program.

Mr. Speaker, the country is looking for strong and immediate leadership in the war against inflation. But it also wants assurance that we are not about to see another 100 years war. I am skeptical that the weapons for battle are provided by this legislation; I am fearful that the prolongation of the war is imbedded in this bill.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, having been out of action in the debating ring for a while, this is my first venture back into it and I assure hon. members that my comments in respect of Bill C-73 will not be unduly long, so that the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) will be able to be heard very shortly.

Mr. Nystrom: Can he have some of your time?

Mr. Penner: Certainly. I should say at the outset that all the many arguments that have been made in the past against economic controls probably could well be repeated in the debate on this bill and would still have a considerable amount of validity, depending on how those arguments were made. I made many of those arguments myself, having served on the committee on trends in food prices and having used them during the election campaign of 1974. I refer to such reservations as the possibility of very serious inequities resulting from a comprehensive policy of controls or even a limited policy of controls.

There is also the very great likelihood that controls could cause very serious dislocations in the economy, particularly on the supply side. I think these are some of the major reasons the government, quite properly, delayed making this momentous and even drastic decision until this time. The question now is why, at this moment, has the government made such a decision? I should like to come back to that point a little later. First, let me refer to my own view of controls. I have already indicated that I have argued against them. I still have reservations concerning them as, I believe, do many members.

During the late summer and early fall certain experts in our society began to look at the economy as it was functioning and a number of them reached a very radical decision about what must be done. I refer particularly to one man who influenced my thinking in this regard, Mr. Ian Macdonald, president of York University. Mr. Macdonald, who served as deputy treasurer of the province of Ontario, made several important speeches during this past summer and early fall. He emphasized, in a most convincing way, that now is the time for immediate wage and price controls to be introduced.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Did he mention John Turner?

Mr. Penner: You would have to ask the hon. member about that. At the moment I am talking about what influenced me. Mr. Macdonald said that to do nothing is to accept the harsh reality that we could have 10 per cent unemployment and 15 per cent inflation this winter. He indicated that he came most reluctantly to this decision about the need for wage and price controls. In his view, however, this was necessary in order to curb far more serious problems in our economy than we have at the present time.

I think this is the view that is now shared by the government. The government has reached the decision that we are entering at this moment a completely new economic era in Canadian history, and that unless strong measures are adopted and followed we could be heading for economic and social upheaval. The white paper which was introduced earlier expressed it very well in the following words:

● (1600)

> If this inflation continues or gets worse there is a grave danger that economic recovery will be stifled, unemployment increased and the nation subjected to mounting stresses and strains.

I have referred to the apprehension which members of parliament and others feel about controls. We know that there will be many vexations and annoyances as a result of this policy, and frustrations as well. Members of parliament will have to deal with these on behalf of individuals and groups in their constituencies. But the real question with which we have to struggle now is whether it is preferable that we live with these feelings and attitudes with respect to controls—feelings and attitudes which are not desirable and nobody would wish to encourage them—or to face what otherwise could take place, namely, economic and social chaos.

My most immediate concern about the selective controls policy of the government has to do with the transition period. I listened carefully to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) who advocated that the government be tough, that they take as hard a line as they possibly can and not yield to any kind of concessions that some groups in our society may feel that they can justifiably make. I am not able to adopt such a hard-line approach; it seems to me to be callous and rather unfeeling and not to take into account that there are groups in our society who are caught in a very difficult situation in this transition period.

For example, there are groups that have been in the process of bargaining with their employers. These collective bargaining negotiations have either broken down, or in some cases have continued but without much progress having been made. Surely some consideration has to be given to these people, and some flexibility has to be present so that they will not find themselves largely out of step with their fellow workers.

I am thinking, in particular, of the pulp and paper workers in northern Ontario. Many of these people have been trying to bargain in good faith for what they estimated the industry could afford to pay them. They were looking at the expected profits of the industry, and I think they bargained as best they could. The industry, however, decided that they were going to take a strong stand and as a result there were very few settlements. Now the workers find themselves caught in this transition period. What are we to say to them? That they should not continue with their bargaining; that it is all cut and dried; that it is set; that it has been decided for them by the government? Or should we, rather, look at what the white paper says, namely, that there is some room here, some flexibility, taking into account historic patterns and relationships, so that they do not have to fall out of line with their fellow workers?

There is another group caught in a similar situation—the secondary school teachers in the province of Ontario. They find that their colleagues who are elementary school teachers have made settlements. There has always been a salary relationship between those who teach at the elementary level and those in secondary schools.

Mr. Broadbent: You have a conflict of interest there.

Mr. Penner: Who does not?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: The conflict is more apparent than real, at the moment anyway. I am concerned that this relationship between settlements which elementary school teachers have made already and what secondary school teachers have expected should follow through.

Probably it could be asked, why are we in the federal parliament talking about secondary school teachers, since this is a provincial responsibility and the provinces will have to work that out, being aware of the federal guidelines? However, we know that in the province of Ontario, at any rate, the problem will be thrown squarely upon us because of the current political situation in the Ontario legislature. This is bound to be a political hot potato, but they have decided to throw it our way and let us solve it—or, more properly, the Anti-inflation Review Board must solve the problem.

So, then, here is another group of people who are in a difficult situation, and I do not think we can take a hard-nosed attitude such as that taken by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and allow inequities to exist because we want to be tough and because if we do not, the program is bound to fail. I do not take that position at all. I think there are good grounds for certain exceptions to be made in the transition period because, as the white paper says, there are long-established, historic relationships between wages of closely related groups and other special cases of equity. This seems to be a catch-all phrase which means that if the Anti-Inflation Review Board is fair and takes into account the good arguments that can be made by, for example, the pulp and paper workers and by the secondary school teachers in Ontario, then there will be some room in this transition period to remove some of the inequities about which I am concerned.

I will turn now to the principle of Bill C-73 and to my thoughts on controls. I have indicated already that some of my thinking has changed with respect to controls, and I mentioned the arguments of Mr. Ian Macdonald.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I hope so.

Mr. Penner: If it is a sin or a crime to be a thinker, then I am guilty.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: During the summer I read the speeches of the president of York University, a man whose credentials, it seems to me, are good ones. Members of parliament would be well advised to read what he has said. In addition, I read the OECD report on the Canadian economy, which was another factor that influenced my thinking about the need for something drastic to be done with respect to the Canadian economy, some kind of shock therapy that needed to be introduced in order that we could do something about the serious economic situation.

Mr. Broadbent: Shock therapy frequently kills the patient.

Mr. Penner: I will be listening to the leader of the NDP shortly. I am always interested in what he has to say, and I will listen to him carefully. I find it difficult to hear what he is saying now over the sound of my own voice. If he wants to say something, I will pause for a moment so I can hear him, or perhaps he could make his comments later.

The other document that influenced my thinking was the report on Canada of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. This report refers to the decline in real output in Canada during 1975—something that has been talked about a great deal—and the fact that productivity has fallen. I do not know all the reasons for productivity having dropped; how much of it is due to what goes on within the factory or plant and how much has to do with the kind of markets available to Canada. At any rate, there is a decline in real output, and this is serious. The report talks about the likelihood of unemployment rising to over 8 per cent, and of course everyone is concerned about that.

● (1610)

There is the possibility of a huge trade deficit. The OECD report talks about a deficit that could go as high as $5 billion or $6 billion, compared to the $1.2 billion of 1974. It is futile to lash out at the government for this trade deficit because we are all aware of the factors that have brought it about: those nations which had to spend an increasingly high proportion of their national income on energy have had less money available for the other things that we would have liked to sell them. There is no point in blaming the government for this situation. It is a problem that we have had to live with and it is part of this new economic era that has been referred to which calls now for some kind of radical policy, a shock therapy policy.

Part of this debate on Bill C-73 revolves around the question of whether controls are warranted now, when they were not warranted before. I think the answer to that question is clearly yes, they are warranted now and they were not warranted previously. That is because of the combination that was referred to in the OECD report—a large external deficit, rising unemployment and sluggish economic activity, together with stubbornly high rates of inflation. It is the latter factor that helps complicate the whole situation—overreach and overkill are aggravating all the other negative aspects within the economy and therefore it calls for strong, decisive, determined government action so that the psychology of inflation can be brought to a halt.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Are you not really saying the government was wrong in 1974?

Mr. Penner: You were not listening to my comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. Please address the Chair.

Mr. Penner: I said quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, that a combination of factors has warranted the action of the government at this moment, when that same action was not warranted previously. If I have not made this argument to the complete satisfaction of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I will have to let it go and let other members attempt it.

The OECD report emphasized that while a voluntary period of restraint is clearly preferable—and that is the view that the government took—it may be desirable to use legislation if agreement among the parties could not be reached quickly. That is exactly the situation that occurred: a determined effort, a hardworking effort was made to bring about voluntary restraint, but that did not work so the government took the next logical step, which was to introduce legislation. That is exactly what the OECD report recommended ought to be done in Canada.

The report goes on to say that although there are inevitable difficulties in introducing a prices and incomes policy, the general economic environment should be more conducive to the successful operation of such a policy now than has been the case for a number of years. So the argument can be made, and we can meet it head on, that there are good and justifiable reasons for this kind of economic policy now, when there were not as good and justifiable reasons six months or a year ago. I think there are. The government does have the supporting argument that now is the right time for controls, when such might not have been the case in the past.

It has been pointed out by some that the economy is now on the upturn, that there are some factors which indicate that productivity is up and that the gross product will increase. Then why do we need controls at this time? Is it not the wrong time to bring them in, when there are some signs that we are in an upturn: surely, some have said, it would be better to have a continuing laissez faire economic policy with respect to incomes and prices, and the end that we all want to see achieved will come naturally. If I may return to the OECD report, it suggests that increasing economic growth is not at all incompatible with anti-inflationary policies; in other words, they do not work against one another but they can work together. They are compatible and can achieve the same ends, and achieve them more quickly. In fact, the two things together—stronger expansion along with an anti-inflationary program—can work to reduce costs and price pressures, particularly if both are associated with marked improvement in productivity. That is a third element, our rate of productivity must increase along with the upturn and the anti-inflationary program.

To a great extent, the success of the government's anti-inflationary program will depend on what happens to prices in the supermarket and what happens in the housing sector. These are the final two points I wish to mention. I want this program to succeed, naturally. I want it to accomplish what the government hopes it will accomplish to break the inflationary psychology; to bring us to our senses so that we will not continue to take more out of the economy than there is in it. If it is to succeed, if the citizens of the country are to accept it, its success depends to a certain extent upon what happens in the supermarket and in the housing sector.

No one disagrees that our primary producers must be encouraged to continue to produce all the commodities we need for our tables and that they must produce them efficiently. I am quite convinced, however, that the consumers of this country want an assurance that the primary producers of Canada will follow the general principle enunciated in the white paper on the attack on inflation; that is, that their increases will reflect only legitimate costs incurred, and nothing more.

Everyone knows that there has been a good, healthy turn-around in farm income in the last number of years and that farmers who were not getting their fair share of the economic pie in the past have now been doing much better. I suppose it could be debated endlessly whether they are doing well enough. At the present time, however, consumers will not be at all happy if the primary producers expect to get more than their own particular increases in costs. If they pass along more than that, there will be a considerable amount of unhappiness.

The suggestion that the Anti-Inflation Board will look at marketing boards should come as welcome news to all of us.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): To everyone except Eugene Whelan.

Mr. Penner: He can make his own arguments.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He did.

Mr. Penner: The operation of marketing boards is a relatively new area in Canada. No one is quite sure to what extent they really benefit the primary producer and to what extent they may simply be subsidizing inefficient operations, or even to what extent the consumer is having to pay for all this. I am pleased that the Anti-Inflation Board is going to look at the question carefully, and I think consumers will demand that much from it.

The second area I mentioned is the housing sector. I was impressed with the recent report of the C. D. Howe Research Institute on housing which seriously questions some of the existing housing programs in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: I can imagine.

Mr. Penner: When we are talking about housing in Canada, we are talking about a very relative situation. We all know this is still the country with the best housing in the world. I think we realize that we are the best housed people in the world and we should all take justifiable pride in the quality and standard of our housing. If we are not happy about our housing, if we criticize certain aspects of housing, we must criticize it in the context that we have done well in the last few years. This is not to suggest that we cannot do better.

● (1620)

The C. D. Howe report talks about the futility of encouraging demand when the rate of new supply has been declining. It refers to the encouragement being given to first-time buyers. One thing can be said about federal grants to first-time homeowners: they were directed to people in the greatest need. Other provincial programs were more all-encompassing, and as such were hand-outs to those who did not need that type of assistance. Do we want to encourage demand? Do we want to encourage people already adequately housed to look for something better? I suggest that such a policy of encouragement at this moment, when the rate of new supply has been decreasing, is not good. The C. D. Howe report suggests that governments should do much more to increase the supply of housing and to place less emphasis on the demand side.
