ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED RIGID ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS GOVERNING TANKER MOVEMENTS AT EAST COAST PORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the threat to the environment resulting from the waiving of regulations by the Ministry of Transport, allowing loaded oil tankers to enter east coast harbours and dock without pilots, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That the Minister of the Environment take immediate steps to ensure that all regulations governing tanker movements in Canadian waters are rigidly enforced, and further, that the Minister of Transport instruct the committee set up to administer vessel movements during the pilots' strike not to waive regulations with respect to safety and environmental hazards.

Mr. Speaker: The motion, proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FOOD PRICES

PROPOSED SUBSIDY ON BREAD AND FLUID MILK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that milk and bread provide the nutritional cornerstone of the diets of Canadians; in view of the fact that price increases for these very basic foods have been astronomical, bread prices having risen 51 per cent and milk prices having increased 54 per cent over the past two years; and in view of the conclusion of the Food Prices Review Board's July study on the consumption of bread and fluid milk in Canada that the financial impact of rising bread and milk prices hits hardest at those on low incomes, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminister (Mr. Leggatt):

That the government reinstate the subsidy on fluid milk and introduce a subsidy on bread, and that these subsidies be effective immediately.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED DEBATE ON ADMISSION OF PALESTINIAN LIBERATION ORGANIZATION REPRESENTATIVE TO TORONTO CONFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with a most important and urgent matter.

As a syndicated group in Quebec, designated as the Quebec-Palestine Association, threatened yesterday to hold certain government authorities responsible for eventual reprisals if the Palestine Liberation Organization is barred from the international crime conference organized by the United Nations and to be held in Toronto next September, and further, as a Montreal daily announced that the government of Canada, acquiescing to the wish of the PLO, had decided to give them access to the conference, while postponing to a later date publication of its decision, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That this House be allowed to discuss immediately this whole matter with a view, on the one hand, to analyzing its implications both national and international, and on the other hand, to determining clearly and without equivocation the Canadian position on this matter of prime importance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR RESUMPTION OF BARGAINING WITH STRIKING SHIP PILOTS AT HALIFAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to take advantage of Standing Order 43, which is something I seldom do, to ask leave of the House to move a motion under that standing order relating to the energy shortage, more particularly the transfer of fuel from a super-tanker to a smaller ship at the entrance to Halifax Harbour. I would move, by leave of the House, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave):

That the government be instructed to take every proper step to bring the parties to the Atlantic pilots' contract dispute back to the bargaining table within the next 48 hours.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR CABINET DECISION ON APPEAL BY CONSUMERS ASSOCIATION AGAINST FARE INCREASES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the appeal taken by the Consumers Association of Canada to the cabinet from a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission respecting the granting of increases in domestic air fares, and in view of the fact that the government has neglected or refused to hand down a decision to this appeal for an undue length of time, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House direct the government to hand down a decision on the appeal by the Canadian Association of Consumers and report same to this House, through the Minister of Transport, before the day this House adjourns for the summer recess, or July 31, 1975, whichever date first occurs.

Mr. Speaker: This motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ENERGY

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF QUESTION OF SAFETY CONNECTED WITH THE OPERATION OF NUCLEAR REACTORS—MOTION UNDER S.O.43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminister): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the report today that Canada will participate in a study on the feasability of CANDU reactors being constructed in the United States and in return will receive the benefit of the intensive United States studies on safety, and in view of the question about Canadian research into the safety of its own reactor, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That the question of safety for the operation of CANDU nuclear reactors be referred to the Standing Committee responsible for environmental matters.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR FREIGHT SUBSIDY ON FISH SHIPPED TO THE FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O.43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the critical state of the fishery in northern Manitoba I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith):

That the Minister of Transport take immediate steps to implement a system of freight subsidies on a poundage basis for all fish shipped to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation north of the 53rd parallel in that province.

Mr. Speaker: This motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY ON THE PRICE OF SUGAR—MOTION UNDER S.O.43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on an important and urgent problem.

Keeping in mind that there is no adequate control over the price of sugar and since the unpredictable rises and declines of the prices of that commodity are liable to spread doubts among the people concerning the true role which must be played by the government in this matter, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House suggest to the minister to make immediately a statement to enlighten the Canadian people about those deplorable conditions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, therefore the motion cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF ESCALATION IN 1976—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENCOURAGE RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Now that the economists have had an opportunity fo examine the economic outlook in the context of the minister's budget, I wonder whether the minister shares the concern being expressed that inflation is likely to escalate again in 1976, and if he does share that concern when may we expect a significant reaction from the government and could he tell us what it might be.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I stated that concern fully in the budget speech which I am sure is familiar to the Leader of the Opposition. It depends very much on food prices and on the effect that wage and cost of production increases may have on the price structure of the country.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the minister having said on May 9, I believe it was, that "all of us must face up to the fact that time is running out," and since we have this prospect facing the country in 1976 of further inflation could the minister tell us whether he proposes to adopt any further policy to encourage restraint not having exercised this option in the budget? Does he, for example, intend to make any further effort to achieve voluntary agreement on restraint.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I said on budget night, and to the press after the budget, that I would wait to assess the reaction to the budget by the leaders of the various sectors of the economy; that I felt one of the advantages of the consensus process had been a further opening of communication between the government and leaders in the economy, and that I intend to keep those channels of communication open.

Mr. Stanfield: Is there any conclusion that anybody can reach other than that the government's only policy for maintaining any kind of restraint in the economy is the continuation of a very substantial unemployment which the Prime Minister has said will be with us for a good long time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not the conclusion I would ask the hon. gentleman to draw.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think I have been misquoted by the Leader of the Opposition

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: It is impossible for me to tell whether the point of order needs to be deferred until three o'clock until I hear it.

Mr. Trudeau: I believe the Leader of the Opposition misquoted me, and I am sure he would want to correct that if given the chance. If I am allowed to state the misquotation, I will do it now.

Mr. Stanfield: I see no reason to withdraw the comment, in view of the Prime Minister's attitude and particularly in view of what he said the other day in response to a question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether other questions will turn on the quotation. If not, perhaps the point of order should wait until three o'clock.

Mr. Stanfield: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was not—

Some hon. Members: Three o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Either there is or is not a point of order to be taken now, but the rule must apply the same to both sides of the House.

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF ADOPTING VOLUNTARY RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's statement in reply to my leader that the consensus talks would likely continue, could the minister indicate whether he anticipates he will be able to bring in a voluntary control program as he originally intended?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said on budget night, that depends on the reaction of the leaders of the various sectors of the economy to the budget.

MINISTER'S ESTIMATE OF RATE OF GROWTH THIS YEAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): As the minister has repeatedly stated that he has always been frank with the Canadian people, and in view of the anticipated high inflation rates, would the minister be frank enough to tell the House and the people what he anticipates will be the real rate of growth in Canada in the current year, a figure he gave in each of his four budgets for each year but not in his June 23 effort?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): If the hon. gentleman would read the budget speech carefully he would find that I estimated the rate of growth at somewhere between zero and one per cent.

Mr. Stevens: In view of the apparent indecision so far as the minister is concerned, I would direct a further supplmentary question to him. Is it the intention of the minister to continue in his present portfolio and face the result of his economic policies this time next year?

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR PRIME MINISTER'S VIEW OF WHAT CONSTITUTES POLITICAL CRITICISM BY TRADE UNION REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it arises out of a question I put to him yesterday concerning the suspension of a civil servant by the name of Mr. Arthur Stewart. The Prime Minister at that time said he knew nothing about the details of the case, but went on with a process of reasoning that some might well regard as being tortuous unless they were trained as Jesuits. He went on to conclude, as recorded at page 7619 of Hansard;

. . . I agree with the stand he has taken—

"he" being the Minister of Supply and Services —That it is not proper for civil servants to criticize and make political statements against the government.

Considering that the article in question, which led to the suspension of Mr. Stewart was essentially criticism of the administration concerning the failure on the one hand of the minister to meet trade union officials, and second—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I allow the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby the leniency to which he is entitled as leader of a party in making a preamble to his question, but I wonder if he would get to his question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to ask the Prime Minister if it is his view, and the view of the government, that such criticism by a trade union official constitutes political criticism. If so, what would the Prime Minister say is non-political criticism coming from a trade union representative?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret the slur on the Jesuits which the Leader of the New Democratic Party has just made, in view of the fact that they are not here to defend themselves.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond were of another order I am sure he would be up on a point of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is asking me a question about the details of the case. I told him yesterday that I had not examined it. I discussed it very briefly with the minister in the House yesterday. I suggest that the question be addressed to the Minister of Supply and Services. He is certainly more able than I to answer on the particulars of the case. The principle is still the same as it was yesterday—and I would hope that a former professor of political science would support it—that it is not necessarily the job of public servants to enter into politics against the government.

Mr. Broadbent: It is my intention to have the difference between political criticism and non-political criticism clarified. My question follows upon the Prime Minister's very general statement on this subject yesterday which pertained to all civil servants. In all seriousness, would the Prime Minister clarify for the House what the general view of the government is as to what constitutes political criticism by a trade union official as opposed to what does not?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mark a C minus on that, please.

DIFFERENCE OF TREATMENT BETWEEN EMPLOYEES ALLEGEDLY GUILTY OF POLITICAL CRITICISM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Even a Jesuit would not have remained silent on that. In his last answer in the House yesterday, the Prime Minister made reference to an Admiral in the defence forces in Canada. He objected to political criticism coming from that source, with which I am in agreement, but I would like to ask him if he considers it just to suspend an ordinary civil servant for what he regards as political criticism, such suspension resulting in the loss of three months pay, but simply to reprimand an Admiral in the navy.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—MEASURES TO PROTECT CONSUMERS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications.

Since the conference of communications ministers ended yesterday in a stalemate, could the minister assure the House that public interest will be protected, that it will not fall into the hands of the private sector, of people who have no say in that debate? And could he also assure the House that acceptable provisions will be submitted again so as to reopen the case and not indefinitely deprive people in and around Rimouski of an adequate cable service?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that I thought the hon. member had not read the papers carefully, but I have just been reading them and I understand his being utterly confused as, depending on the paper you read, the outcome of the conference was a success or a failure. I might tell him though that I do not agree personally, after attending the whole meeting and even presiding over it, that an impasse was reached. I regret the province of Quebec decided to withdraw, but we did take a positive step in agreeing to establish the Council of Communications ministers of Canada. There will be an empty seat, and as I said I regret that, bur eight and even very probably nine of those seats will be occupied, so that our discussions can progress. The province of Quebec decided to remain outside the council and to go its own way. Unfortunately, I cannot help that, and I can barely take it as a fact. As to the suggestions at the conference, I would tell the hon. member that the ones which were put forward by the federal government have been deemed acceptable, at least for further discussion, by nine out of ten provinces, which in baseball would be a fairly satisfactory batting average.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

I am grateful to the minister for his explanations. However, considering that the province of Quebec may have withdrawn sort of banging the door, which I do not know, are we to infer that in spite of the absence of Quebec, the people of the Rimouski area and its vicinity will not be deprived of the service they have been seeking for many years?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize first of all that Quebec withdrew quite civilly and without banging any door. I want to assure the hon. member that the Rimouski area will not be deprived of anything by the federal government. As to the steps which may be taken in this respect by my Quebec counterpart, because I decided long ago not to try any longer to predict what they will be from one week to the next, I cannot assure the hon. member of anything. He will have to seek any such assurance from the Quebec minister of communications.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A few days ago the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley attempted to put a question to the Minister of Labour about a single bargaining agent. I indicated that he ought not to be allowed to put the question because he had put the question at another time and that it had been answered. He has contended that all he had done the previous day was to put those remarks pursuant to a motion under Standing Order 43. Upon checking the record it turns out that he is absolutely right and I was wrong. He ought, therefore, to be allowed to put the question.

Oral Questions

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSED SINGLE BARGAINING AGENT FOR PUBLIC SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am happy that the minister has had time to study the question and I hope he will come up with a good answer. In view of the fact that there has been an unprecedented record number of lost man-days in productivity in recent months due to strikes and walk-outs—as a matter of fact nearly two million man-days were lost—and because the existing fragmentation of union power within the public service and other federal agencies is partially responsible for this drastic loss in productivity, could the minister advise the House whether the government intends to look at the possibility of having union groups in a single public service sector bargaining with the government simultaneously in order to avoid the fragmentation of union power and, if so, when can this House expect an announcement?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the House and to the hon. member before that there was a good deal of sympathy for this type of approach in terms of consultation and rationalization. I might indicate also there have been discussions toward this end, not only with the chairman of the Canada Labour Relations Board but with the business community and the labour movement itself. There is a general disposition to try to achieve this type of objective. I might say we have achieved something along these lines already. I have indicated in this House before that Mr. Joe Morris, president of the Canadian Labour Congress, has already met with people in the grain handling area to achieve this type of consultation.

Mr. Jelinek: A supplementary question. In view of the minister's answer and his obvious interest in this suggestion—which, by the way, I made in this House over six months ago—could he advise if he intends to take all appropriate steps to assure the passage of my own bill dealing precisely with this subject?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I, of course, welcome the hon. member's enthusiasm for this approach but I would say that the success toward this type of objective is such that I believe it requires a good deal of co-operation from all parties concerned. I am talking in terms of the labour movement and their rights, rights which have the support of all members of the House, and I am talking about employers. I do not necessarily believe that coercive type legislation will help to achieve this objective and I make this plea to hon. members and others: let us see whether it cannot be achieved through co-operative effort, as opposed to legislation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DATE OF DECISION ON ADMISSION OF PALESTINIAN LIBERATION ORGANIZATION REPRESENTATIVES TO ATTEND TORONTO CONFERENCE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As he seemed to reach his usual low boiling point rather early today, I suggest that he should not blow his top, because it is bad for his health.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: My question is this: as the government has now had an additional week, on top of many previous weeks, to discuss whether it intends to allow the PLO, an organization whose mode of operation is based on organized terror and murder, to come to Canada for the United Nations conference in September, has the government made up its mind on what its decision is to be on this matter and, if so, will the Prime Minister announce it to the House now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I point out that the hon. member blew his top a long while ago; that will explain why he has none.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: What happened to your own? You are not too well off in that department.

Mr. Hees: It is time to adjourn parliament.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that. I really should not talk that way to a senior citizen, although he is in such good shape that I keep forgetting he is over 65.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the substance of the question, as opposed to the preamble, I would say that my commitment still stands. We will make an announcement on this next week.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister referred to my distinguished age. I suggest that if he does not cool it a little more than he has in the past, he will not make it.

My question is this: Is it not a fact that the government has already made its decision on this matter but has decided to hold up the announcement until next week, in the hope that parliament will then be recessed, so that the government can avoid the anger of the opposition which the Prime Minister's announcement will provoke?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. If it is held up until next week, it is in the hope that a few more Conservatives show up to sit on their benches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR RETROACTIVE FREEZE ON FREIGHT RATES ON FRESHWATER FISH IN NORTHERN MANITOBA

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As the tripling of CNR freight and express rates has brought the freshwater fishing industry of northern Manitoba to its knees, will the minister take immediate action to freeze freight rates, governing the transportation of fish in northern Manitoba retroactively to May 1, so that this important industry may survive and provide much needed jobs for the people of northern Manitoba?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if such a problem exists, I think it should be discussed not only with the Department of Transport but also with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, because many industries are in the same position.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANCELLATION OF AIR CARRIER SCHEDULES II AND III—ALTERNATIVE METHOD OF RECEIVING SUPPLIES IN NORTHERN COMMUNITIES

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister has successfully brought air transportation in the north to a virtual standstill, by cancelling air carrier schedule II and III operating certificates, can the minister advise how remote communities and Indian reservations which have no other means of transport are to receive supplies, mail and medical services?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, while a number of airports had no certificates from the Department of Transport, others have had their certificates cancelled for security reasons. We shall certainly not endanger the lives of the people in the north merely to please my hon. colleague opposite.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED CLOSING OF HAYS TRUCKING COMPANY, VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO REASONS AND POSSIBILITY ACTION RESTRAINS COMPETITION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I hope he received notice of the question. In view of the announcement by Pac-Car, a U.S. truck assembly company, that the Hays Trucking Company of Vancouver will shut down on September 30, thus entailing the loss of some 500 jobs, and as this company also operates Kenworth, a competing truck assembly in Vancouver, will the minister advise if he or his department have inquired into the reasons for this shutdown, if this is a feasible operation and if the action constitutes restraint of competition in the Vancouver area?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have looked into this situation. There are two other companies in addition to Hays and Canadian Kenworth operating on the Pacific coast. There is the Pacific truck division of International Harvester and White Motors of Kelowna, B.C. Hays has been closed down because the market for logging trucks has declined owing to decreased demand for wood and wood products.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW ACT

INQUIRY WHETHER ACT PREVENTS CLOSING OF ONE OF TWO SUBSIDIARIES BY PARENT COMPANY TO REDUCE COMPETITION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the House if, pursuant to phase two of the Foreign Investment Review Act, provision has been to prevent foreign companies which own or control competing subsidiaries in Canada from closing down one business in order to reduce competition in the area in which they operate?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think that question is outside the ambit of the Foreign Investment Review Act.

TRANSPORT

APPLICABILITY OF FREEZE ON RAIL LINE ABANDONMENTS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Does the policy of freezing rail line abandonments apply only to the prairie provinces, or does it apply to the whole of Canada, including British Columbia? If it includes B.C., how can the CPR abandon service on the only rail line on Vancouver Island?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it applies to all western provinces.

BILINGUALISM

REASON FOR REFRESHER COURSES AND SENDING OF FAMILIES TO PARIS IN VIEW OF PROPOSED REDUCTION IN EXPENDITURES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the federal government's proposal to cut back expenditures, how can the government justify $925 per week refresher courses in bilingualism for a select 125 senior civil servants in the Laurentians during the summer months?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there was no question of bilingualism expenditure cuts except that of $4 million in special programs. This is part of study sessions that enable high officials to speak both official languages and thus deal with all Canadian citizens in the discharge of their duties.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the minister just said. Can the minister tell me why a directive was sent out or can he inform the House why families are being sent to Paris for further post-graduate French studies, at much higher fees, and why this is necessary at this time?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the details relating to the second question. However, I shall inquire and give details to the hon. member with pleasure.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED DRUG TRAFFICKING AT MONTREAL AIRPORT—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. He has had notice of it since June 3. He said he was first made aware of the matter I am raising when he talked to reporters about allegations concerning drug trafficking at Montreal airport, the involvement of organized crime and also the involvement of various departments of the federal government. Could he report what he has learned from the Commissioner of the RCMP?

● (1440)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the story in the newspapers is correct in that there is an investigation at the Montreal airport. I might say that there are investigations at other airports with regard to drugs as well. However, the report is not correct in that there are a large number of federal government officials involved. As a matter of fact, the number is very small. I think it is three or four. That does not mean that others in other areas are not involved. I cannot say anything more about the investigation now, except that it is continuing.

ALLEGED DRUG TRAFFICKING AT MONTREAL AIRPORT—POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE EMPLOYEES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I am sorry the Minister of National Revenue is not in the House as he was for several days when I was trying to get the floor.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Can the minister assure the House, and he came close to it in his first answer, that there are no officials of National Revenue directly involved because for over a month and a half this smear against National Revenue has been outstanding. It has not been clarified. Can the Minister give that assurance?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I said that a small number of federal government employees were involved, but I would not want to identify them. I said that the large number referred to in the article was not correct. I might say as well that the release of this information was not authorized. It was due to a misunderstanding. Some measures have been taken to correct that.

Mr. Nowlan: Can the minister advise whether the officials that have been involved are still working or have they been suspended?

Mr. Allmand: I cannot say that, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTION RELEASE OF MORE INFORMATION WOULD OBVIATE NECESSITY FOR ACTION BY TRADE UNION REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It arises out of the question asked by the leader of the New Democratic Party. I may not be a Jesuit, but I cannot follow the tortuous and convoluted reasoning of the NDP leader. Without taking sides on the philosophical problem, does the Prime Minister agree that if more information is disclosed of the nature which had been kept secret here, thus persuading the civil servant in question to make public the information he did, but if more information was revealed which should be revealed, this kind of incident would not take place.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not knowing the details of the case, the question seems kind of theoretical to me. It seems that the kind of criticism which is being made here is the kind we should be hearing more about from the opposition, if it were doing its job.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We would do our job if the government would have the courage to disclose the facts.

HEALTH

OUTBREAK OF CHOLERA—INQUIRY AS TO TRACING SOURCE OF INFECTION AND CHECKING OF VACCINE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the cholera outbreak among students returning from a trip to the Far East and the Middle East, and as this disease has a short incubation period, was a tracer put on their travel route to pinpoint the source or possible source of the infection? Since this disease has a mortality rate of 5 to 10 per cent and high cost health care, has the number of the stock vaccine been checked and reported to the manufacturer and have all contacts been reported on?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer with regard to the stock of the vaccine, but I will inquire and give the information to the hon. member. As far as the particular students are concerned, they have all been taken into hospitals for tests, either as in-patients or out-patients. Only one case has been diagnosed as having cholera. I would point out that this was not the classical kind of cholera, but a much milder kind. All the students have been examined and they are all out of hospital at the present time. All the contacts have been reached and we do not expect any further developments in this particular incident.

Mr. Rynard: The minister did not answer all of my first question. Can he advise whether they have gone back over the travel route to pinpoint where this infection might be picked up so that other tourists can be prevented from calling there or having it cleaned up?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the group of students were visiting India. One person in particular got sick at a stopover in the Netherlands. That student was treated there. She returned with a nurse and with a diagnosis of salmonella poisoning. Only subsequently did we hear from Holland that after further checks and analysis, they concluded that it was not a case of salmonella but, rather, some kind of cholera. We were then in touch with the student immediately.

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN REGULATIONS TO PERMIT PEOPLE IN NORTHERN AREAS TO RENT PREMISES OWNED BY DEPARTMENT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, I will address this important question to the Prime Minister. In view of the housing crisis in the Northwest Territories and the fact that in the Yukon small apartments are renting for as much as $400 a month, and in view of the fact the Department of Public Works have vacant in the Yukon 130 homes, 200 detached homes and some apartments and some of the homes have been vacant for as long as five years, and in view of the fact there is a regulation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact there is a regulation—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member put his question?

Mr. Gilbert: I am directing this to the Prime Minister. I hope he listens. In view of the fact there is a regulation of the Department of Public Works not to rent to employees who are local people who reside in the area, will the Prime Minister change the restrictive and discriminatory rule and permit local people to rent these vacant homes and apartments to ease the critical housing shortage in the Northwest Territories?

Right Hon. P.E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister who has been quite ill for some days, I will take notice of the question.

Mr. Gilbert: Is the Prime Minister aware that the same problem pertains in Fort Smith, Hay River, Inuvik and that the local people feel that if persons are from the south they can get accommodation whereas if they are from the local area, they are denied accommodation. Will the Prime Minister also direct his attention to this and have this very serious problem cleared up?

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question and supply the information to the member.

ENERGY

JOINT STUDY OF CANDU TECHNOLOGY WITH UNITED STATES—ACTION TO ENSURE CANADIAN TECHNOLOGY REMAINS IN PUBLIC SECTOR

Mr. J.J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises out of the report that there is to be a joint study of CANDU technology as requested by the United States Energy Administration for Research and Development. In view of the fact that in the United States nuclear technology is in the private sector, and undoubtedly Westinghouse and General Electric will be requested to take part in this exchange, what measures is the minister proposing to take in order to ensure that Canadian technology remains in the public sector and under Canadian control?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that the United States administration has sought further discussions with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited with regard to the CANDU reactor. Indeed, within a matter of some weeks, AECL officials will be meeting with the Americans for the purpose of discussing this further. I am not certain that this will yield any kind of commercial arrangement between the two countries. I will have to determine after these discussions, and when there is an arrangement, whether it would be possible or indeed desirable to confine this to the public sector, the public power utilities only in the United States, or have it available on a general basis. We will be selling this technology, if there is to be an arrangement, under the full safeguards arrangements and, indeed, make certain that Canada gets the best possible return on its outstanding nuclear system.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REASON FOR LARGE NUMBER OF GRANTS TO CARL LEMAY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct this question to the Secretary of State. I notice he has left the chamber. I will therefore direct it to the Prime Minister. In an answer to a question on the order paper, No. 2,412, given me by the Secretary of State, he indicated that a Mr. Carl LeMay of Montreal was given help for ten different movie productions in the past several years by the Canadian Film Development Corporation. Would the fact that Mr. LeMay has received more than any other producer have anything to do with the fact that his brother is assistant commissioner of the National Film Board?

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—PERCENTAGE OF REDUCTION IN EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF GRANTING ENERGY BOARD POWERS OF ALLOCATION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the face of yesterday's statement by the National Energy Board that our natural gas reserves are much less than we had anticipated, whic will require a decline in the exports that we make of this important product, and since current natural gas exports to the United States are averaging about 45 per cent of our annual production, could the minister tell us what percentage of exports to the United States he is aiming for in his reduction of use of this resource?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think we would hesitate to give specific figures before having a full opportunity to discuss with the United States the impact of this decision on various American users. The view of the government is that with a commodity of this kind, which if withdrawn could have a severely adverse effect upon the United States community, we should have the fullest possible discussions with the Americans before taking any final decision. For that reason, the National Energy Board and the government have been reluctant to set out at this point, and without further discussion, any strict numerical limit.

Mr. Gillies: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to grant to the National Energy Board the power to allocate natural gas among the provinces as requested and, if so, would that involve direct rationing, for example, at the consumer level?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the statement yesterday, the board has sought the powers of allocation, and if they are to be achieved it would require an amendment to the National Energy Board Act which would have to be brought into the House. At this point we have not finalized our decision on whether allocation would be the best and most desirable proceeding. We would like to talk to the provincial governments in this regard. If we find that the only way to achieve a good allocation is by a statutorily imposed allocation, then we would seek that remedy. as for allocation at the retail level, this, of course, would be the responsibility of the provincial agencies, like the Ontario Energy Board, which has jurisdiction over the individual distribution companies.

INDUSTRY

FOREST PRODUCTS—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister tell the House whether his department is planning any special assistance to the paper and allied industries sector, in view of their reduced volumes of shipments, their skyrocketing inventories and their reductions in employment; and if the minister is launching any assistance programs, could he advise the House what form this assistance will take and whether it will be directed to any particular regions of the country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have intensified our efforts in the export markets of the world, trying to find new markets for Canadian forest products. About two weeks ago I was in Japan, and made a special effort when meeting with Japanese businessmen and officials to promote the forest products of Canada. At that time I also participated at a particular meeting at Osaka which dealt with the new timber frame construction system which the Japanese have now endorsed as a result of the work of the federal government, the provincial government and the industry itself.

PROPOSED AID IN ESTABLISHING PAPER MILL IN IRAN—EFFECT ON CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister plans, as an aid to the Canadian industry, also to supply Canadian assistance in the construction of a pulp and paper facility in Iran, a country to which Canada exports well in excess of $10 million a year in pulp and paper products, can the minister assure the House that studies within his department show Canadian assistance in establishing a potential competitor will not have a long-term, damaging effect on Canadian pulp and paper production, exports and employment? If his department has studied this possibility, would he table the study?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think that, as a result of the meetings that we had with the Iranian delegation last week to the joint economic council, a set of arrangements were worked out which should produce close to $1.3 billion in Canadian exports to Iran over the next five years. Part of that particular arrangement dealt with the pulp and paper industry. I believe that the opportunities are two way; that is to say, that there will be substantial opportunities for the export of Canadian forest products, particularly pulp and paper, to Iran, perhaps some investment in the Canadian pulp and paper industry, and assistance by Canadian companies in the transfer of technology to Iranian companies.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. It arises out of an answer given the hon. member for Hamilton West yesterday with respect to the harbour inquiry. The Prime Minister said that an announcement had already been made. In view of that statement and the statement attributed to the Minister of Labour yesterday in the Hamilton Spectator that he would have a statement to make soon in this respect, indicating one has not been made, does the Prime Minister now wish to make a correction to his statement? If not and in fact an announcement has been made, what was in it, to whom was it made, and when in fact was it made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour had indicated some days before his position on this petition by the Hamilton council. I believe he indicated it to some newsman. It was the government's position then and the minister is continuing to develop that position. I believe he may have some further statement to add, but the minister did indicate what was the government's position.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplemantary question, Mr. Speaker. Was an announcement made by the Prime Minister or by anybody else with respect to the inquiry?

Mr. Trudeau: I have just said.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Well, has an inquiry been called? If so, what are the terms of reference, when was the announcement made and to whom was it made? That is the question.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member, as the Prime Minister has indicated, that we are looking into the situation and that—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Did you read Hansard yesterday?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Let me finish. I then said that I would comment later on, and later on has not yet arrived. That is what the Prime Minister said.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No, he did not.

COMMUNICATIONS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR FURTHER DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

In view of the results of the last federal-provincial conference on communications, with Quebec's position as stated by the provincial minister of communications being now referred to Quebec's premier, who publicly endorsed that position Sunday last, and since the political impact of a possible break would be harmful, would the Prime Minister indicate whether he discussed the matter with his Quebec counterpart, whether he intends to do so and whether he can put forward a suggestion conducive to the province of Quebec joining the committee involved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not been contacted by that province's premier after the conference. I suggest the federal Minister of Communications' position is the one I pointed out to the honourable member last week, namely that the conference was not empowered to bring amendments to the constitution or transfer jurisdiction. Such was the position taken by the federal Minister of Communications. It appears from the debates that Mr. L'Allier was requesting constitutional changes indeed. Although I doubt opposition members themselves would agree to such a position, I would be interested in hearing them. As far as we are concerned, I must state I have received no communication from the premier since the end of the conference.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I ask the government House leader about the business for the rest of this week and next week? In light of the motion standing in the minister's name regarding an adjournment, can the minister indicate what directives were given to him by his caucus yesterday about terminating this part of the session?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, the business outstanding that we wish to complete, if possible, before we recess is Bill C-2, the combines legislation, Bill C-66, the Excise Tax Act, and Bill C-70 on the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The latter piece of legislation was dealt with expeditiously by the committee yesterday and I hope it will go through without much debate.

I am less optimistic about the other two bills, C-2 and C-66. I know there is a desire on the part of members to participate in the debate, particularly on the Excise Tax Act, and I think there is a general feeling that we should not take too long and that we should reach a decision as soon as possible. I am confident I will get the co-operation of the House in extending the hours and in shortening the length of the speeches.

Some hon. Members: No way!

Mr. Sharp: I shall be having discussions with my very co-operative friends, the House leaders of the various parties, and I am sure that in the interest of democratic progress in this House, where we take decisions without unreasonable delay, I shall have no difficulty in obtaining consent.

We shall be continuing the discussion on the Excise Tax Act tomorrow. I am not sure whether we shall do this without interruption; I may want to call third reading of Bill C-70 and perhaps Bill C-2. But our main order of business will be the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since the House leader is now aware of the mood of the House, would he not consider dropping Bill C-66 so that we could adjourn tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: No way!

Mr. Sharp: If the hon. gentleman is suggesting we should recess before we complete that bill, then, of course, the responsibility would be upon him for the lack of refunds.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. During the question period, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in response to a question put to him by me with respect to the real growth in the economy this year, misled the House—I am sure unintentionally—by stating, "If the honourable gentleman will read the budget speech carefully, he will find I estimated the rate of growth at somewhere between zero and 1 per cent." The fact is, there is no such reference in the budget speech. I realize the minister is under a lot of pressure, and perhaps he confused the budget address with his speech to the first ministers' conference. I wonder if he could be given an opportunity to correct the record.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will send the honourable member the reference.

Mr. Leggatt: I rise on a similar question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Answering a question today concerning the Foreign Investment Review Act, the minister indicated that the problem of parent companies shutting down subsidiaries was a matter outside the ambit of that legislation. The criteria the minister set for approving takeovers included beneficial impact on employment and increased competition. Where a takeover has occurred and thereafter one of the plants taken over is shut down, it is clearly within the ambit of the act. I wonder, therefore, whether the minister would like to correct his answer, because he is unintentionally misleading the House if he suggests that this situation is outside the ambit of the Foreign Investment Review Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is a very interesting point of debate which the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) has just raised.

CRIMINAL CODE, CROWN LIABILITY ACT, IMMIGRATION ACT, PAROLE ACT

JURISDICTION GIVEN TO CANADIAN COURTS TO TRY PERSONS FOR CERTAIN OFFENCES COMMITTED OUTSIDE CANADA

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT

PROVISION TO ENSURE THAT CHARGES RESULTING IN ABSOLUTE OR CONDITIONAL DISCHARGE DO NOT APPEAR ON CRIMINAL RECORD

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-406, to amend the Criminal Records Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Maine: The purpose of this bill is to ensure that any person who is given an absolute or conditional discharge by a court is automatically relieved of the stigma of a criminal record. As the law now stands such a person suffers undue hardship as a result of the lengthy procedure involved in obtaining a pardon.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 2,484, 2,519, 2,537, 2,571, 2,584, 2,628, 2,782, 2,784, 2,827 and 2,870.

Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 1,784 and 2,533 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

I ask Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

CNR—ACQUISITION OF GULF TERMINAL RAILWAY LTD.

Question No. 2,484—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. On February 17, 1975, did the Canadian National Railways acquire the Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway Limited and, if so, at what cost?

2. Has Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway Limited received subsidies from the government and, if so (a) what was the amount (b) on what date?

3. Had Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway Limited received land or other grants from the government?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. On February 17, 1975 the president of the C. & G.T. Railway Company officially accepted on behalf of the principal shareholders of the company an offer made by Canadian National to purchase this line. This offer is subject to certain conditions that are currently under negotiation, and to the approval of competent authorities, federal and provincial.

2. For construction, a federal subsidy of $210,053.39 was paid under the Railway Subsidies Act of 1906. The Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway Co. received payments under the authority of the Maritime Freight Rates Act for each year from 1927 through January, 1975 in the total amount of $1,374,189.20. Also, under the National Transportation Act in respect of calendar years 1959-1974 payments were received totaling $661,364.00.

3. There were no land grants from the federal government. The Quebec government provided a grant of 147,713 acres under the authority of Quebec statute, Edward VII, Chapter 2, 1904.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT—EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,519—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. As of May 15, 1975, how many persons were hired (a) through the Public Service Commission (b) under contract by the Department of the Environment for duties relating primarily to the (i) implementation (ii) administration of the proposed Environmental Contaminants Act?

2. In each case, what was the date of the original employment or commencement of contract?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. None.

2. Not applicable.

ASPHALT PLANT EMISSIONS

Question No. 2,537—Mr. Marshall:

1. Under a news release outlining guidelines limiting the emission of particular matter into the air from asphalt plants, what action has been taken by the Department of the Environment (a) to demand that the 350 asphalt plants in Canada provide equipment to control emissions of particular matter (b) to have the asphalt plants make an effort to provide such equipment?

2. Have any of the asphalt plants applied under the accelerated capital cost allowance programme to provide such equipment and, if so, what are the names of such plants?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. (a) Although national emission guidelines are not federally enforceable, the provincial agencies are encouraged to adopt these in order to promote a uniform nationwide approach to air pollution control. Several provinces have already indicated that their regulations would be based on the federal guidelines. The federal government does not have the authority to make any demands directly on the asphalt plants in Canada at the present time. (b) During the process of guideline development, consultation with the industries took place to ensure that a concerted effort would take place to obtain the necessary control equipment in asphalt plants in Canada.

2. Yes, forty-seven applications have been submitted by asphalt plant owners: Standard Paving Co., 1224 Lawrence Avenue West, Toronto 390, Ontario; Meloche & Frères Equipment Ltd., 3125 Boul. St. Charles, Kirkland, Quebec; Peel Construction Co. Ltd., Box 1000, Brampton, Ontario; Armstrong Bros. DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—LANGUAGE TRAINING COSTS

Question No. 2,571—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. $267,000.

2.(a) Due to the changing nature of the number of conditional appointments to the department, it would be extremely difficult to forecast this information for the fiscal year. (b) Nil—These costs are borne by the Language Bureau, P.S.C. (c) $178,000.000—in-house training programs. (d) $89,000.00—Berlitz.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS—LANGUAGE TRAINING COSTS

Question No. 2,584—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. $33,000.

2. (a) Nil, (b) Nil, (c) Nil, (d) $33,000.

Order Paper Questions

CBC EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

Question No. 2,628—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Is CBC advertising or otherwise soliciting in other countries for applicants to positions with the Corporation and, if so (a) in which countries (b) for what positions (c) what are the other details?

2. For how long and for what positions has such practice been employed in the past?

3. What is the reason for such practice?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Yes (a) Britain, France, U.S.A. (b) Britain: television production and program management staff, engineers, clerical staff. France: technician, clerical staff, U.S.A.; clerical and research staff. (c) See below.

2. Advertising for staff in other countries to work in Canada is not a common practice of the CBC. Staff have been sought in this way only within the last two years.

3. The clerical staff are hired by the CBC's foreign offices in London, Paris, New York and Washington because in these locations the law requires that local people be hired if they are capable of doing the work. This category includes stenographers, accountants, switchboard operators, researchers and messengers. The television and program management staff were sought for possible employment in western Canada. This was in order to attract exceptionally well qualified and experienced television staff to western regional centres. In addition, international searches for a head of television drama and a head of television variety programs for the English services division were carried out. On a referral basis persons of international status were sought in Canada, Britain and the United States. In the case of drama the search took place in the spring and summer of 1973, in the case of variety the search began in the spring and summer of 1974 and was resumed in 1975, once the position of director of television entertainment programming, which had become vacant in the meantime, was filled. Both positions were filled with Canadians. Also hired by referral within the last year in order to obtain exceptionally well qualified and experienced staff were three television drama directors from Britain, one of whom was a Canadian resident in Britain, two current affairs producers from Britain and one current affairs researcher from the United States. Engineers were sought in Britain after an extensive advertising campaign in Canada produced only three qualified candidates for approximately twelve positions. Similarly, a technician was advertised for in France after a search had been made in Canada for a broadcasting technician qualified to train other personnel.

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR THEATRE GROUPS

Question No. 2,782—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government provide any financial support for the theatre groups (a) Factory Theatre Lab (b) Tarragon Village (c) Globel Village (d) The Theatre, Second Floor (e) Toronto Arts Foundation (f) Stratford Shakespearean Theatre Foundation (g) Young People's Theatre (h) Phoenix Theatre (i) Toronto Free Theatre (j) New Theatre (k) Toronto Truck Theatre (1) Open Circle Theatre and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: The Canada Council has provided financial support for the groups listed as (a), (b),(c), (f), (g), (i), (1). For the fiscal year 1974-75, these groups reveived the following amounts: (a) $30,000; (b) $35,000; (c) $5,000; (e) $235,000; (f) $467,000; (g) $20,000; (i) $27,500; (1) $5,000.

LAUNDRY PRODUCTS

Question No. 2,784—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Do certain laundry products designed to cut static electricity in dryers have the tendency to clog lint screens in dryer exhaust vents and cause dangerous overheating and, if so, is it the intention of the government to ban the use of such products?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): These antistatic laundry products leave a residual film in use. The film will desposit on tent screens of dryers and cause more rapid clogging than would be encountered when they are not used. This effect is increased when excessive amounts of the antistatic product is used. Product labels provide very specific use instructions and a caution to clean lint from traps after each dryer load. In view of the label information provided to consumers, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is not considering a ban at this time.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,827—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. As of May 15, 1975, how many persons have been hired (a) by the Public Service Commission (b) under contract by that section of the Department of Justice responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board for duties relating primarily to the implementation and administration of Bill C-53, An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, No.2?

2. In each case, what was the date of the original employment or commencement of contract?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board is concerned 1. (a) (b), Nil.

2. Not applicable.

MR. W. LUYENDYK

Question No. 2,870—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

Did Mr. W. Luyendyk leave the Public Service and, if so (a) on what date (b) for what reason?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes. (a) November 15, 1974. (b) Accepted an appointment with the city of Edmonton (see Privy Council Office Press Release of November 29, 1974).

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

MINISTER'S SPEECHES

Question No. 1,784—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. During the period March 31, 1974 to February 28, 1975, on how many occasions did a Minister of the Crown employ or otherwise arrange for the services of a freelance or contract speech writer?

2. In each case (a) who was the Minister (b) what was the fee (c) what was the occasion of the speech (d) who was the freelance or contract writer?

Return tabled.

FIREARMS

Question No. 2,533—Mr. Whiteway:

1. For the year 1974, how many crimes were committed in which firearms were used?

2. How many crimes were committed in which knives, clubs, axes, scissors etc. were used?

3. How many such firearms used were (a) unrestricted (b) restricted but unregistered (c) restricted but registered and, in each case, how many (i) murders (ii) homicides (iii) suicides were committed?

4. What is the official estimate of (a) unrestricted (b) restricted but unregistered (c) restricted but registered firearms in Canada?

Return tabled.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, July 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 7416).

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has had to leave the chamber.

An hon. Member: He is back.

Mr. Muir: I am happy to see him return; I am sure that, of all members, he would want to hear what I have to say. Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to criticize this minister because he really is a pretty fine guy. It is difficult to hit him hard. I shall try not to be too hard on him and his budget proposals.

Yesterday evening, just before the hour of the adjournment at six o'clock, I was referring to the fact that after the budget, when this resolution came on, all the members of the cabinet, it seemed to me, divorced themselves from the minister, from the budget and, in particular, from the resolution before us—this iniquitous tax to which I referred last night. So far I have not heard anyone come to the minister's defence saying how wonderful this measure is and what a great idea it was. I would hope some Liberal members, although of course not all, would support the minister, particularly the bumbling House leader who messes up everything: I would hope that he, at least, would support the Minister of Finance who in this case needs much support.

I also asked if the government could defend this tax, but of course there is no defence whatsoever. The budget and this resolution will increase the degree of inflation that has become such a cruel and crushing blow for all Canadians, but especially for the poor and the elderly who are fixed incomes. It means that next winter will be even more severe for them than last winter, and that their savings—if indeed they have any—will be eaten up at an even faster rate. It will also mean that many small businesses which have their backs to the wall as a result of the government's diabolical policies will face closure and bankruptcy.

Indeed, we are seeing the results of closure of industries in Cape Breton Island at the moment. Lay-offs and unemployment will become even more commonplace in the days ahead, although goodness knows the situation is bad enough now and I do not want to see any more lay-offs and unemployment.

It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to tell us that things are picking up in the United States, and how wonderful that is, just as he has told us in the last few years that because the economy is bad in the United States it will be bad here. He blamed many things on the weather. I think he also talked about praying, and so on, but it has not had much success. It is all very well for the minister to suggest that we read the glowing testimony of selected economists who say that we are just around the corner from recovering from the recession, which indeed has worsened because of the policies of this government, but it will take more than glowing statements to convince the people of my constituency that we are anywhere but in the throes of deep depression on Cape Breton Island.

Unemployment there at the moment is between 15 per cent and 20 per cent at a minimum. Every aspect of our economy is in desperate trouble. The figures I have quoted are produced by the office of the Minister of Manpower and his officials. I suggest that, if anything, they are conservative figures, considering the source from which they came. Last year in my riding we faced the loss of the General Instruments plant, which meant the loss of close to 1,000 jobs. That was indeed a major blow to our economy. Regardless of the suggested efforts to overcome that disaster, we still have an empty plant and we still have 1,000 former employees seeking jobs that do not exist.

What will this ten-cent a gallon tax on gasoline do for those people? Will it assist them? I am afraid not. When these unemployed men and women are told they will have to pay ten cents more for a gallon of gasoline, and more for the oil to heat their homes out of their UIC cheques that are quickly coming to an end, if they have not already, there will be little appreciation for the logic of the budget or its intent.

Yesterday Mr. Speaker announced that the Minister of Finance had given permission for a new coin to be struck to celebrate the one-hundredth anniversary of the Library of Parliament. At the same time it might be well for the minister to have a new ten-cent piece struck to commemorate this tax he is imposing: on one side of it there could be an effigy of the minister with his hand in the taxpayer's pocket.

As a result of the problems I have outlined, instead of new hope we face new disasters one on top of the other. We have just learned of the forthcoming closure of the Canadian Motor Industries plant and the elimination of 70 jobs by October. The sad fact of this closure is that those 70 employees have nowhere to look for other employment on Cape Breton Island. What does the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) suggest? He refers to the mobility program. That was the suggestion of Walter Gordon, chairman of the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects. That was the proposal for the ills of the Atlantic provinces back in 1957.

The situation has not changed very much since that time. This government gives the people of the Atlantic provinces a one-way ticket to Ontario. It suggests that they move out, leave everything and go. The sad fact is that the move is a little different now. People are coming back from Toronto, St. Catharines, Hamilton, Welland and all over Ontario. They are coming back east because they have been laid off from their jobs and have nowhere to look for employment.

What does the Minister of Finance or the government intend to do to assist these workers and their families? What does the budget or Bill C-66 hold in store for them? Just more hardship. As an indication of the degree of frustration associated with this situation, Tom Kent, president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, failed in his efforts to assist the Canadian Motor Industries plant to continue operations on Cape Breton Island. Rather than work with Devco, the company decided to close. I am sure the budget and the attitude of this government toward business left a stronger impression in their minds regarding closure than anything Devco could offer in the way of help.

What is really alarming and is becoming more so with each passing day are the lay-offs at the Sydney Steel plant. Since March, 500 employees have been laid off. Sysco president Ernie Alderton announced a few days ago that another 300 employees would be laid off. This makes a total of approximately 800 employees thrown on the street. That is close to a quarter of the total work force, which is between 3,200 and 3,600 when the plant is running at full capacity. What does the minister or this government intend to do to assist these workers and their dependents? Obviously, the minister and the government will merely increase their problems with the additional ten cents tax on gasoline.

The sad fact of the matter is that there is no alternative employment available, and no guarantee that there will not be more lay-offs rather than a revival of development. Let the Minister of Finance show me how anything in this budget or this resolution will help those who have been laid off, or how we can anticipate anything from this tax except bad news for those who are working and for those laid off who hope and pray they will be recalled. What the people and the economy want is a policy directed at increasing employment. While we favour a two-price policy for oil, and while we know funds must be available in order to lower the price of the oil eastern Canada must import, we do not believe the funds should be raised on the backs of the working men and women, the poor and the elderly, as will be the case in respect of this tax.

All Canadians, regardless of where they live, should shoulder this burden collectively. No group or class in this nation should be singled out to carry the burden for others. If we lack energy—certainly this government lacks energy except in creating problems for the workingman—why are we not moving at greater speed to utilize the tremendous potential of the coalfields of Cape Breton? While we are working on a replacement for the Prince mine at Sydney Mines, and now that we have the Lingan mine in Glace Bay operational, there is no reason we could not move forward with two additional mines opening on Cape Breton Island. We need the coal and we need the jobs. We have the work force—and it is a good work force—to do the job. All there has to be is direction from the government to get the show on the road.

While we cry about the cost of energy produced from oil, we will not take action to provide alternatives that are available and could be utilized immediately. What about the new steel complex for Cape Breton Island that we have heard so much about? My Liberal opponent in the last campaign went from one end of the riding to the other promising that it was coming and that it would be located in Gabarus, a few miles from Sydney. After listening to him you would have thought it would be there almost the next day. What a transformation! Now we hear the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) saying it might be located in Baie Comeau, Gros Cacouna, or it could be somewhere else. He is not saying it will be on the east coast. This simply means that my Liberal opponent deceived the people of Cape Breton-The Sydneys. Here we are, a year later, and it is just another broken promise by the Liberal government. This complex could be of great benefit to the economy of the island, without question, but the Liberal administration takes no action.

I remember a little over a year ago when I was accused of being against the proposed new steel plant in Cape Breton because I said the study should only take in the area where the steel had been produced since the early part of the century. Instead of that, they wanted to take in the whole eastern coast before deciding where the complex would be. With every passing day it seems to be farther and farther away from where it should be and where it is most needed. The longer we wait to take advantage of our alternatives, the more expensive it will be to undertake the construction, because of inflation and because the Minister of Finance is contributing to inflation with this budget. Unfortunately, he is deserted by his cabinet colleagues who will not defend him or his policies. It seems most unfortunate because, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, he is a pretty fine guy and at least they should make a pretence of defending him.

Mr. Stanfield: It is difficult to defend the indefensible.

Mr. Muir: Still, he is a good tennis player, a fine gentleman and a good friend to have, and it is unfortunate that he has to produce this type of budget which I do not think is of his own doing; I think he was forced to bring it before the people by a higher power—and I do not mean a higher power from the heavens.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Wally Baker said God was on your side.

Mr. Muir: Members of the Liberal Party have said they have the right of God or the right of Allah to govern, and that only they can govern, no one else.

In the coal mines of Cape Breton we once had 6,000 employed; now the number is down to 3,000. There is no reason why we cannot look forward to a work force numbering an additional 1,000 coal miners, in view of the present cost of competitive energy alternatives. It has been my contention for some years that the rail operation at Sydney and between Sydney and Truro requires drastic overhaul. Yesterday the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) spoke—I enjoyed listening to him, although I disagree with some of the things he said—of the great speech which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made in Cornwall and his speech in Toronto regarding rapid urban transportation and assistance for transportation. These are just Liberal promises; nothing has come of them.

This assistance could be used, for instance, in Cape Breton where the railway tracks should be relocated outside the city of Sydney. In that way the present bottlenecks within the city would be eliminated and there would be a tremendous saving in the long run for the Canadian nation. Work of this kind has been done here in Ottawa and it could be done in Sydney if the government wanted to get the job done.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have a different kind of member of parliament.

Mr. Muir: It seems strange that almost anything can be done in Hull, Ottawa, Toronto or Montreal, but when it comes to the Atlantic provinces, northern Ontario and a number of other places, the money cannot be found. Money is always found for the central strip in our nation. Action of the kind I mentioned by the CNR would provide much needed employment immediately. It would provide work for the steel plants and it would result in further modernization of the Sydney area, which would bring long-term benefits both from the environmental and the beautification point of view.

The minister indicated that he hopes the ten cents per gallon tax will result in the conservation of our oil supplies. For most Canadians it will mean nothing more than an additional expense, because most people in this nation consider the car a necessity and they will continue to drive their cars. This will cost them more because of the increase in the price of fuel. Since many people live some distance from their place of employment, it will cost them more to get to and from work. As a result, these workers will say. "We must have more money to pay for the higher cost of gas. To get the money we must negotiate, and if we do not get it we will go on strike". Indeed, this must be done so often under this government.

If the minister wishes to help conserve oil, why does he not urge the government to undertake the reconstruction of the CN roadbed between Sydney and Truro? I am sure the minister is familiar with Truro. That is the place to which he went at one time to make his famous speech damning the proposals of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). On the road to Damascus he became converted and later implemented everything that the Leader of the Opposition had proposed. He stole the ideas of the Leader of the Opposition. Now, however, he is forced to put in these crazy programs. As I said, he is getting orders from up high but no support from his colleagues. This is unfortunate. I feel really sorry for the minister. I think this is his last budget. In fact, it may be the last of many things for him.

An hon. Member: Let us hope so.

Mr. Muir: If we have more budgets like this we could not stand it. If the minister really wants to help conserve oil, why does he not recommend that the government undertake the reconstruction of the CN tracks between Sydney and Truro? The line between these two junctions is as twisted as the minds of those who produced this budget and this ten cent tax. Those who are forced to take the train between Sydney and Truro face a ride two hours longer than it should be. If the roadbed were reconstructed, straightened, and a double track put in—that is the important thing—it would have the effect of conserving oil because many more people would opt to travel by train. That would mean a real saving in oil and it would also provide work for the unemployed in construction, as well as work in the steel plant producing the required rails.

It is not long ago that my colleague in the adjoining riding made a tour of Africa. We had glowing press reports of the emerging African nations asking for new rails for their railways. It appeared that these orders might go to the Sydney Steel plant. But suddenly we had cutbacks, a softening of the steel market and layoffs. For some time, every summer we were able to put 100, 150 or 200 students to work at that steel plant to make a few dollars to enable them to go back to university. But not this year; they are not working and there have been all these lay-offs. If the minister really wants to conserve oil and to put people to work, those are a few ways to do so on Cape Breton Island, rather than imposing a discriminatory tax which will only lead to greater inflation, more unemployment and more labour strife in this nation.

With regard to labour strife, the minister goes to one part of the country and makes a statement about how bad labour is, what it should do and what it should not do. Then the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) says something else. Far too many people in this country—indeed, many of them supporters of this government—are all too willing to condemn the workers and the union movements and to blame them for everything from inflation to the weather. These people run around saying that the problems we face are the fault of labour because it is on strike. There are many people in my party who are great supporters of labour.

Mr. Symes: Oh, oh!

Mr. Muir: They have always been supporters of labour, and were so long before the hon. member who just opened his mouth either worked or knew what a labour union was. That poor, unfortunate individual has not even grown up yet; he has never been in a union. I would bet that he has never been on strike, has never been on picket duty and has never negotiated for or served in a union—yet he is the great expert! He does not know what it is all about. I am a former coal miner and active trade unionist.

My record can be checked at any time. I suggest that the hon. member should not wrap himself in a robe or purity, sanctity and holiness. His party claims to be the only party that can speak for the working man in this country. It claims to be the only party that worries about the working man. I get fed up with this phony drivel. They say that, being socialists, they are the only people who worry about the working man.

Does the minister not work when he is in his office? Sure he works. Doesn't the man who drives a taxi work? He works. What is a worker? Hon. members to my left say that they are the supporters of the workers and they are the only people who worry about the poor, the depressed, senior citizens, the disabled and the sick. They say that those damned Liberals, Tories and Socreds do not worry, that they are the only ones who do. It is so damned phony. As a man who formerly worked in the mines and who was active in unions, I know, as do many of the people in my party. There are farmers and fishermen in my party among hon. members opposite and in the Social Credit party; but these great intellectuals to my left have only worked as professors in universities. They think they know what it is to work. They worked for three hours a week and made a lot of money.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have digressed. The workers to whom I was referring are earning a salary. One can be dressed up nicely and still work hard. Many times I have worked harder, with clean hands, at a desk, than I did in the coal mines. I used to shovel coal all day. I wonder what hon. members to my left define as a worker. In God's name, let us have no more of this silly drivel from people who claim a monopoly and say that they are the only people who can be responsible for those in need in this country. We in our party have ways of speaking on behalf of our constituents. I do not mind being criticized. Hon. members can criticize me as much as they wish, but I ask them not to insult the intelligence of the thousands of people in Cape Breton-The Sydneys who support me, and have done so for eight consecutive elections.

Some hon Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: I ask hon. members not to insult the members of the Longshoremen's Association at the docks, the United Steelworkers Union, the United Mineworkers, or the CB of RT. You name it, I have it. They know what they are doing. They do not have to be told by sanctimonious phonies that they are the only people who look after them. One reason for the number of strikes is that workers must make more demands to keep their real income up to the point where they can make ends meet. They do not go on strike because they want to, but because they are forced to by the ever continuing, ever increasing high rate of inflation in this country brought about as a result of inadequate government policies. All the bafflegab, doubletalk and gobbledygook by "Ten-cent John" and his cohorts will not make it otherwise. It is going to hurt and it will cause inflation and other problems. I want to thank the minister for staying in the House. He is a dear fried of mine and I hope I have not been too critical of him.

I understand that a few remarks I made last night may have upset someone. Last night I referred to the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) as an hon. lady. She is a delightful and beautiful lady; but she said that she was not a lady, but a member of parliament. I feel badly about this. The hon. member for Skeena really should know whether or not she is a lady, and I am not one to criticize. The hon. member took umbrage at being referred to as a lady. Before I resume my seat, I just want to say that in politics one should take everything seriously except oneself, and I commend that to the hon. member for Skeena.

[Mr. Muir.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this excise tax bill, Bill C-66, which came out of the very cruel budget presented on June 23, I would first like to commend the minister for taking the excise tax off wine which he put on just a few months earlier in his previous budget. At that time we in the opposition pleaded with him and tried to obtain help from the government side of the House, but none was forthcoming. We pleaded with the minister not to put this tax on, but he did anyway. I think it shows that we were correct because he removed it so shortly after imposing it. I think it shows that we almost had him taking it off at the time he brought in his last Excise Tax Act amendment, but he was just not going to give us too much at that time. He gave us a little bit on the boats, but he was not going to give us very much more. So it took only this long to have the tax removed from wine and wine products. I hope no harm has been done to the producers of grapes. A big crop is coming this year and I hope it can be taken off in time.

It is nice to see that the tax is being removed from insulation materials used in buildings. In the last excise tax bill it was reduced by half, and we have been pleading with the government to eliminate it entirely, It seems it is to be done a little bit at a time, but it is long overdue and the tax should be taken off all building materials. Perhaps the government is concerned that the bureaucracy which has been created to collect the tax would become redundant. I suspect that is one reason why it has not been removed entirely. By taking it away a little bit at a time the government can probably maintain that department, although to remove it entirely would make much more sense.

In the last speech I made on the excise tax a few months ago in this House, I said that it was a port way for governments to collect money. I repeat that today. In my opinion, if people have to be taxed at all, the fairest way to do it is through income tax. Excise taxes are very gimmicky; they are imposed here and there at the will of the government, often with no real purpose. More often than not, these taxes are imposed on those who are least able to afford them. It is not nearly as fair a way of taxing as income tax.

Provincial governments often have to resort to this type of tax because they do not have the same authority to collect income tax as the federal government Indeed, they have to make deals with the federal government about income tax. As the federal government has the right to impose income tax, I do not think they should be imposing excise taxes as well, especially in cases like putting a ten cents per gallon tax on gasoline.

This tax is going to hit the workers and people on pensions as well as the younger generation. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said that certain categories of people and business would be exempt. This was an effort to soften the blow, to confuse the people—and they certainly are confused by that stipulation. Who is going to be exempted, and how are they going to get their money back? There is a lot of talk about rebates. The government House leader keeps saying that if we do not get this bill through, people will not get their rebates on gasoline. As soon as the government brought in the budget, the tax was imposed. Now they are trying to blackmail us to say nothing about it, not to let the people know what is going to happen to them. But within a year or two they will know all about this kind of tax.

Do the people who are going to be exempt know who they are? Do those who are going to get a rebate know who they are? When asked to elaborate on this, the Minister of Finance said that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) is going to announce the categories that will be exempt. This should have been the first thing to happen, Mr. Speaker. It appears to me that imposing this tax in the first place, and then making refunds to certain people, is going to create an administrative nightmare.

As a farmer, I have had some experience in getting exemptions on gasoline tax at the provincial level. At one time we were required to fill out a form for rebate or exemption on that portion of the gasoline that was used in the farming operation. This has the effect of people putting in for exemptions that they should not have: it is a licence to steal. It would have been a tremendous cost to the farmer to keep accurate records of the amount of gas that should have been tax free. He would have had to put in gas pumps to measure it, so most of the time it was just done by guess or by golly. I realize that most farmers do their level best to keep their records straight; nevertheless, the opportunity is there and some people may try to get far more money rebated than they are entitled to for the gas they have actually used in their operations.

I am not sure who is going to be exempt, because that is not clear from this bill and the Minister of National Revenue has not made any statement on it. So we don't know who it is going to be. It appears that most people in business are going to get a rebate. They will buy gasoline at the pump, pay the full price and keep records to show exactly how much they bought. Some time or other they are supposed to make representations to the federal government for a rebate of the tax they paid. Just think of the cash flow which is going to be involved, and the amounts of money which will be paid as a rebate. Just stop and think of the bureaucratic organization this government will need to put in place if it is to police this tax properly. Let us hope that this is not the first step, or another step, toward a police state in Canada.

The Minister of Finance said the government is going to make $350 million in revenue from this tax. My guess is that if the government has to put in place the organization to police the tax properly, it will cost just about as much to collect the tax as the amount the tax will bring in. Think of all the costs, think of all the problems and troubles of individual people in Canada who will try to get a rebate on what they pay for their gas.

Are people who are working to be considered as businessmen? Are individual people to be considered as being in the realm of business? How about the loggers of my constituency of Okanagan Boundary? They have to go to work every day on an individual basis. There is no real way that a bus system can be put in place to carry them to work. Are they going to get a rebate, or are they to be considered as individuals and is this tax to be just part of the cost they must carry in order to get to their jobs?

If the logic of this tax is carried far enough, and if it is only going to apply to people who are not in business, or who are on vacation or driving their car for the fun of it, it means that everybody is going to be able to apply for a rebate. When you stop and think of it, you will realize that what I say about bureaucratic organization for policing and collecting this tax is very true. How about the miners? They cannot live at the mine site. In my riding the mine sites are back in the hills. They cannot live there; they have to drive to the mine. Are they to pay this tax to go to work, or will they be exempt as they should be, as any other business person is to be? Is the tax to be, as I say, imposed right on the backs of workers?

In my riding there is no transportation system, really, other than cars. It is not easy to put in place a bus system. My riding is not like a big city, although in the 100-mile extension up and down the beautiful Okanagan Lake and valley it is just like a city. But there is no way that they can put in a proper bus system to accommodate the people. So the car has to be used for transportation. At one time we used to have a rail system out of the valley, but that has been abandoned. A little while ago they even decided to take the railway station out of the junction at Kamloops. There is not even a railway station there any more for anyone who wants to catch the main line CNR or CPR train to eastern Canada. Our transportation systems do not exist; they are not in place; they are not what the minister visualized.

I do not think anyone really sat down and constructively thought about what this ten-cent a gallon tax would really mean for the ordinary Canadian people. No one thought about how they would administer the tax or if it would really work. I think it was a dream perpetrated on the Canadian people. I can tell you, I have never talked to anyone who likes it—except a few backbenchers on the government side.

Mr. Epp: And they want to withdraw it.

An hon. Member: No, we do not.

Mr. Epp: Come off it. You still want to withdraw it.

Mr. Whittaker: None of them get up to speak. A few make little asides here and there, but they are not getting up to speak and tell us what they think about the tax. That leads me to believe they like it. They think it is great just because the cabinet decided to impose it on the Canadian people. It is a very unfair tax. It is one of the most unfair and unrealistic taxes that could have been imposed on the Canadian people. I do not believe it is going to generate the revenues for the government coffers that the government expects, because the government will have to put in place a very much greater bureaucracy. This money is just going to go through their hands, and we will find another budget being introduced and another great bureaucracy organized to try to collect this tax.

I think Canadian people are greatly concerned about the use of energy—about the use of gasoline, oil and natural gas. The Canadian people are beginning to understand that there has to be conservation in this field. I also think that there is great concern in Canada today over inflation. Even though the Minister of Finance told us that he was not going to do anything really drastic to try to control inflation because the Canadian people were not ready for anything drastic, I do not think he was right; I think the Canadian people are ready for action—but they want leadership. There has to be leadership from the Government of Canada before the people will accept that action; and they are not going to accept it piecemeal, not if it is imposed on one class of persons but not on another. If programs are brought in that are realistically oriented to control inflation, and if they are applied to all the people at the same time, I believe the people will accept them. They are certainly ready for that kind of thing.

Someone said the other night that the provincial government of Ontario had brought in a speed limit of 50 miles an hour. Look at what happened in the United States. You will find that the federal government there imposed the speed limit in all states. They imposed it equally across the United States and it was acceptable to the people. It should be done through strength, not piecemeal.

In British Columbia we have a 55 miles an hour speed limit which was imposed by the government of the province. It is working well. In order to conserve gasoline, these kinds of things must be done, through strength, by the federal government, not by gimmicks such as putting an excise tax on gasoline of ten cents a gallon. It is nonsensical. It will do nothing except cause hardship for the people. There will be great areas of dishonesty. It will not work without a policing system, which will be very costly.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House to impose a tax of ten cents a gallon on gasoline is one that the people of Canada do not accept, judging by the mail that members of parliament are receiving and by the commentary in the press. I find it very interesting that not one Liberal member has risen to defend this ten-cent tax imposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). These Liberal backbenchers who in the 1974 election campaigned as protectors of the consumer and friends of the working people, now—with their majority—support a Minister of Finance who has imposed one of the most regressive, discriminatory and unfair taxes experienced by Canadians in many years. These Liberal backbenchers who are obviously at a loss to rationalize and explain this tax have no option but to sit quietly or to heckle when opposition members bring out the inadequacies of this discriminatory tax.

[Mr. Whittaker.]

We listened to the arguments of the Minister of Finance as to why Canadians consumers who drive cars must pay an extra ten cents a gallon for gasoline. He gave two reasons. First, he says he needs more revenue to add to the oil compensation payments that are being made to eastern Canada as to a stopgap measure for lack of any national energy policy by this government. The other argument is conservation. The minister hopes this ten-cent a gallon tax will reduce gasoline consumption in this country. In the course of my speech I would like to show why neither of these arguments are valid. I would also like to state why I claim that this tax is regressive, discriminatory and unfair.

We call it a regressive tax because it hits everybody the same. It hits the low income worker equally with the high income worker. That is most unfair. If we are to have a tax system that takes into account the differences in income in this country, we must do it by means of a progressive income tax, not by direct excise or sales taxes such as we see in the measure before us. The majority of workers in this country are in the low and middle income group. This is the group that drives the most cars in this country. This massive population in our country will be paying this tax, although they cannot affort it.

This tax is discriminatory because it not only hits the low and moderate income group but it provides specific exemptions for certain groups of people who will not have to pay the tax. Those receiving exemptions are businessmen, doctors and other professionals who have to use their cars in the course of their work. I ask those Liberal who are so silent on the issue, do the workers not have to use their cars to get to work? I come from northern Ontario where there are many small, scattered communities outside the larger centres where the major employer is located, such as the mine, the steel company or whatever. The employees do not have the option of public transit. They cannot travel on an efficient bus or subway system. They cannot leave their cars at home and take these public transit mechanisms to work; they must travel by car.

Many of these workers must make round trips of 100 miles a day. However, they cannot deduct the cost of gasoline in their daily course of work in the same way as a doctor, a salesman or others who use a car. That is why we say this tax is discriminatory. It is unfair to working people who have to use the car. Because there is no option for public transit, this tax should be withdrawn.

During the 1974 election campaign members of this government went across the country promising new initiatives for public transit so that people would not have to depend on the car and the car would not continue to congest our cities. In June, 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised that $270 million would be made available to assist public transit. In the same month he promised there would be a new Crown corporation for railway passenger service and that they would set up a national urban transportation development corporation to take bold initiatives in order to improve public transit in this country.

What has happened to those promises? They are not worth the paper on which they are written. This government now has a majority; it feels secure; it feels it does not have to live up to its election promises. Instead of providing measures to aid the beleaguered commuter in our society, it turns around and slaps a ten-cent a gallon tax on everyone who has to drive a car or a truck either for work of for pleasure. This is a government that is purely cynical when it makes promises. I hope the Canadian electorate remember those promises when they go to the polls in 1978.

Let us look at the provincial governments. Of course, I am most familiar with the government of Ontario. That government is not much better. When we look at their attempts to assist in developing public transit in this country, we see that their policy is also a mess. The government of Ontario—a Conservative government—is content to spend millions of dollars on a so-called magnetic levitation, modern transportation system experimental study in Toronto. The project has fallen through. After spending millions of dollars it proved to be impractical. After years of delay there are no new public transit options open for commuters in the province of Ontario. They have to rely on the car. They, of course, will be hit by the gasoline tax both in the province and the tax this federal government has imposed. It is interesting to note that the Ontario Motor League conducted a study in 1974 which showed that the Ontario motorist is paying 120 per cent of the total cost of highways in Ontario.

In this bill the Liberal government is imposing an additional tax on the Ontario motorist of ten cents a gallon on gasoline consumed. This hits everyone in the province, but it hits the people in northern Ontario more than those in southern Ontario since we in the north have to pay higher gasoline prices. The price of a gallon of regular gasoline in northern Ontario ranges from 75 cents to 85 cents a gallon so, as I say, we are hit even worse by this kind of measure.

When the ten cents a gallon federal tax is added to the 19 cents a gallon provincial tax, it represents a really unjustifiable burden on the drivers of automobiles. I should like to give the House an example, Mr. Speaker, of what it will cost to drive a car in Ontario. Before the imposition of this tax as announced in the finance minister's budget of June 23, the Ontario motorist had to pay a provincial gasoline tax of 19 cents a gallon. If a motorist drives a car 10,000 miles a year and gets 20 miles per gallon, he consumes, on a yearly average, 500 gallons of gasoline. Before the budget this would have cost him $95 a year in provincial gasoline tax. When we add the ten cents a gallon federal tax to that, he pays $145 a year—an increase of 53 per cent.

If that is not discrimination, Mr. Speaker, if it is not fighting the attempts of the ordinary people to jump ahead of the inflation rate in this country, then I do not know what is. Take as another example the motorist with a large family who has to drive around in a station wagon. Say he drives 15,000 miles a year and gets only 15 miles per gallon. Before the budget he had to pay $190 provincial gasoline taxes in the province of Ontario; he is now going to pay $290 a year—an increase of $100.

What does the government mean when it says it is seriously trying to combat inflation? Can any Liberal backbencher, or the minister himself explain to me how this measure, which hits the bulk of the consumers of this country who are in the low and middle income brackets, in any significant way fights inflation and reduces the problems of the ordinary working people in meeting the rising cost of living? The case just cannot be made and the Liberals know it. They hope that this House will adjourn soon so they will not have to stand up to the kind of criticism that we are putting forward on behalf of the Canadian people.

What are the other lacklustre arguments that the Liberals make in order to justify this increase in gasoline tax? They tell us that we should be grateful, because in Europe people are paying $1 a gallon or $1.25 a gallon. I say, what a ridiculous comparison. How can you compare countries in Europe which do not have any indigenous oil supplies with a country like Canada, one of the most oil-rich countries in the world, sitting on a reserve called the Athabasca tar sands that contains more oil than all the oil in the Middle East? To tell Canadians that they should be content to pay 70 cents or 80 cents a gallon is ludicrous.

The reason the government is saying this is the lack of an energy policy, which has enabled the multinational oil companies which control 90 per cent of the oil industry of this country to jack Canadian prices up to world prices, despite the fact that we are one of the most oil-rich countries of the world. Years of mismanagement by the Liberal government have now forced Canadian consumers to pay one of the highest prices for oil and gasoline in North America. This is a nonsense kind of comparison that is not worthy of further counter-argument.

The minister has put forward another argument. He tells us that we are consuming too much energy in this country, that our oil supplies are running tight. Of course they are running tight, because the government allows the multinational oil companies to export half of our daily production of oil, and has done for the past few years. We are now running short, so the minister says we must conserve our energy supplies. What kind of logic is this? A few years ago, specifically in early 1973, oil was selling in this country for $2.90 a gallon. Today the price is $6.50 a gallon, and by August 15 it will cost $8 a gallon. The price has escalated tremendously. Has there been a reduction in oil consumption in this country? Not in the least. Demand has risen yearly despite the fact that the price of oil has gone up.

The fact of the matter is that, given no options, Canadians still have to consume energy. They still have to heat their homes in the wintertime by oil or natural gas, despite the fact that oil prices and gas prices will go up. If they have no option but to drive their cars to work, then they have to pay higher prices for gasoline. The argument that an extra ten cents a gallon will somehow reduce gasoline consumption in this country is totally false. The minister should not try to fudge the issue by bringing forth the argument of conservation so as to justify this horrendous ten cents a gallon tax.

I now come to the real reason for this increase, Mr. Speaker, which is that the Minister of Finance is desperately searching for extra revenue. He needs money to compensate eastern Canada for the higher price of world oil which we are importing because Canada does not have a pipeline from western Canada which would bring $6.50 a barrel oil to the maritimes and Quebec. As we have found ourselves running short of oil, we have reduced our oil exports. This means that the revenue from the export tax is reduced, and therefore the minister wants to find additional funds to keep up the compensation payments. The compensation payments, of course, are being made to these very multinational oil companies that got us into the shortage mess and the cost escalation mess in the first place.

Is that the only option the minister had? Why does he sock it to the consumers so he can make up the compensation payments? In view of the years of profit-taking by the multinational oil companies, it would seem more logical to me to increase their federal income tax than to make the ordinary consumer bear the burden, particularly when the oil policy of this government and the oil companies acting in collusion got us into this predicament in the fist place.

There are ways of raising revenue other than by imposing a discriminatory and unfair ten cents a gallon tax on the consumers of gasoline in Canada. For example, the minister could begin to revise the tax system so as to take away some of the concessions that the minister has been giving multinational oil companies in his budgets. Why does he tax the ordinary consumer when the ordinary consumer, the working person, is already falling behind in terms of real income? Last year we experienced an inflation rate of some 12 per cent. This had led to a great deal of labour-management unrest in this country because workers who have seen their real purchasing power decreased by 12 per cent necessarily have to try to catch up. Just as they are in the process of negotiating, and sometimes having to go on strike, the minister again takes away their real income by imposing this tax.

For example, let us see what happened to wage earners last year because of runaway inflation that the government was unable to control. If you were making an hourly wage, in 1974, of $3.50 an hour, last year because of inflation you lost $499 in real money. Your income went down by almost $500 because of inflation. If you were making $5.50 an hour last year, you lost $783 because of inflation. Then the minister comes along with this extra, inflationary tax on gasoline.

This tax plus the increase in the price of a barrel of crude oil by $1.50 a barrel to take effect on August 15, will add an extra 2 per cent to the inflation rate. Is it any wonder that we are likely to be faced with a massive number of strikes as workers realize they are falling behind because the government has been unable to cope with inflation or bring in a tax system which is fair to the mass of the working people? Yet as the workers continued to fall behind in terms of real income, the Minister of Finance wanted to bring in wage controls. How ironic that the Liberal Party, which in the election of 1974 fought so strongly against the suggestion by the Conservative Party that wage and price controls be brought in, should through the Minister of Finance seriously consider imposing wage controls on the workers.

The minister still would like to do it, but he knows the workers who have seen their incomes eroded in the way I have described will not stand for that kind of policy. But the fact that he was thinking about it seriously indicates that there is not much difference between the Liberal and the Conservative parties. They are still the same old gang, and when they want to find a scapegoat it is the working person they find. In 1973-74 they let the companies enjoy the largest profit increases they have ever made, and now that the companies have been able to make a pile of dough they are going to sock it to the working person. They wanted to do it by means of a wage control policy, but this was not accepted so Turner turns around and comes up with this kind of discriminatory tax.

We in northern Ontario, as I mentioned, are hit hardest by this kind of tax because so many workers have to drive great distances to get to work, because we have to pay higher prices, to begin with, for gasoline and because working people from my part of the country do not take their vacations in the same way as the minister and the executives with whom he associates. They do not take off by plane when they go on vacation; they take their families in the car, towing a tent trailer or a camper behind it, and they visit our provincial and national parks, travelling across the country. This tax, of course, is going to take away that hope of pleasure from the bulk of our working people because they just will not be able to afford vacations by automobile.

This tax will have a serious and detrimental effect on the tourist industry in northern Ontario. Tourism is perhaps the second most important industry. Automobile drivers are not going to travel as far, or perhaps at all. I have talked to some constituents who have had to scale down their travel plans a great deal. Of course, it will mean a reduction in tourism and vacationing in northern Ontario and this will have a spin-off effect on restaurants, motels and amusement enterprises in our part of the country. Therefore, we are going to see less business in tourism, we are going to see more lay-offs and higher unemployment. We know that this tax, which is supposed to bring higher revenues to the government, is discriminating against the working people.

I have received a number of letters from constituents who have expressed very eloquently their frustration and anger at this unjust gasoline tax. I should like to read into the record a letter I received from Mrs. Montone, of Elliot Lake, Ontario, which is near my riding. It is, in fact, in the riding of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), a Liberal member. I would very much like to see how he replies to her letter: She writes:

Dear Mr. Foster:

I must pick up groceries to feed my growing family—pleasure driving?

My child has had an accident and I must rush him to the hospital emergency department—pleasure driving?

Time for the children's orthodontic appointment (200 miles away return)—pleasure driving?

My husband has been referred to a specialist and we must travel to Toronto—pleasure driving?

A death in the family in Ottawa—I must leave immediately to make funeral arrangements—pleasure driving?

The above are only a few items that we in the town of Elliot Lake find necessary and mandatory in the use of a motor vehicle. There are no deliveries made in Elliot Lake, as well as no means of public transportation. With only one taxi company who has approximately two to four cars and these do not run 24 hours a day. The miner, as you are aware, must travel at least 20 miles return to work (the companies do not supply transportation) and they have been using "car pools" for many years. Many northern constituents live in rural areas and are forced to travel many more miles to obtain the necessities of life. Those who sit in Canada's capital do not seem to understand the problems of living in the north and the long distances one must travel to get from A to B, and yet they are continually trying to persuade southerners to relocate in the north.

The letter continues:

I fail to see how Mr. Turner's budget will accomplish his goals on conservation, unemployment and inflation. We in the north, while paying the highest prices for fuel oil to heat our homes, are already faced with longer and more severe winters than our city dwellers in southern Ontario. Therefore, I cannot see any incentive to those on unemployment and welfare to find work and join the working economy. When they take into consideration higher transportation costs to get to and from work, higher UIC premiums, and in the near future higher OHIP premiums, the incentive to work is lost!

Persons on fixed incomes (pensioners) are going to be particularly hard hit since, for the past few years, they have been struggling to literally exist in today's economy. It is rhetoric that government chooses to thank these people for contributing for years to Canada's GNP as "laying their lives on the line for their country" in the past wars.

Those with higher incomes will surely feel the "pinch", but they already have the moneys to cope with the new budget amendments.

My purpose in writing is that I would like to find out what Mr. Turner's interpretation of "pleasure driving" is. I fail to agree that driving to work (because of no public transportation) should be considered "pleasure" or has Mr. Turner ever jogged 20 miles to work and back in 30 degrees below zero (fahrenheit) weather? He should try it some time.

That is a letter from a person in Elliot Lake. It represents the feelings of many people in northern Ontario about this ten-cent a gasoline tax. I should like, now, to read from another letter which also illustrates the hardhip this tax will put on people. This letter is from Laureen Shaw, a resident of my constituency of Sault Ste. Marie:

And then I think of all the disabled people in Canada who rely on their cars to get them to and from work and just to get them out of the house. How can they afford 80 cents and up for gas? Especially if they are on a disability pension. Its hard enough to live on a pension as it is. So thanks to this new brilliant budget, over half of the disabled people in Canada are going to be sitting at home in front of their window watching the world go by. They can't even afford to go out for a ride. I know, because I'm disabled and this budget has literally changed my life. I can no longer afford a car, and giving up that bit of independency is hard to do.

And so, Mr. Symes, I extend my congratulations to the government for this fantastic budget. Perhaps this will at least get some of the apathetic people of Canada to stand up and be counted. Something beneficial has to come out of this.

To that I say amen. This hypocritical government that poses as the champion of the working people, the disabled and the poor of this country, really is hitting them most unfairly by this kind of tax. Not one Liberal member has risen to oppose or even to defend this tax. There are other ways money might be raised rather than by the imposition of this excise tax. If the government were serious about conservation, other measures could be taken, such as the federal government pressing the provinces to reduce the speed limit to 55 miles an hour as has been done in the province of British Columbia.

The government could also put pressure on the auto industry to improve their automobile engines in order to bring about greater fuel economy. It could fulfil its election promise by providing better public transit in the cities and towns of our country. If this government were serious about conservation, it could implement a national energy policy that would benefit Canadians in terms of supply and price, rather than leave us to the mercy of the pricing system of the multinational oil companies. If this government were serious about raising revenue in a non-discriminatory way, it would use the income tax system to gain extra revenue by taxing the corporations as they should have been taxed long ago, and by taxing other Canadians so that the gap would be lessened between the rich and the poor.

In this way, the government could help the people on low income and compensate them for the very heavy inflation from which this country is suffering. These measures would be much more realistic than this excise tax. The people of Canada are enraged and they are speaking up. The members of this party are prepared to sit here until the end of the month or as long as it takes to pound some sense into some of the Liberal backbenchers so they will stand up and put pressure on the Minister of Finance to rescind this most discriminatory and unfair tax.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I really had not intended to speak on this particular bill.

An hon. Member: Then sit down.

Mr. Martin: I appreciate the acknowledgement from the other side when I rise to speak: it is very encouraging. I rise in part, however to respond to the challenge that has been thrown out by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) and members of the official opposition. They have continually referred to the lack of activity on the part of Liberal backbenchers to get up to speak. If hon. members opposite are not aware of the 100 per cent support that exists among members of this party for the budget and the policies introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), they should be aware of it very soon. I wish to refer also to the comments of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) when he was waxing particularly eloquent.

I find it rather strange that these two members should be bedfellows in putting forward exactly the same viewpoint, but I suppose this is understandable when one realizes that they accept their responsibility simply to oppose anything put forward by this government, without carefully considering the measures and what they are intended to accomplish.

I think we should remember that the only reason we are looking at a potential ten-cent tax on gasoline today is a policy introduced by this government and supported by all parties on the other side of the House. I refer to the policy to create one-price gasoline for the whole of Canada, subject only to differences in transportation costs.

The cost of maintaining this particular system which, I reiterate, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and the parties they represent so solemnly supported at the time, was to be met by a tax imposed on exports of Canadian crude oil from western Canada. We all know that these exports are now diminishing, for two main reasons. The first is that our own supplies of crude oil are not as great as was anticipated by the National Energy Board two years ago; in fact, they are much less. Second, we know that the United States economy is in some difficulty. The United States, therefore, is not taking up the imports at its end to the extent it is entitled to do so at this point. Therefore, the revenue from this special tax has diminished at a very fast rate.

I think hon. members opposite would expect that the money for any subsidy program would have to be raised through revenue in one form or another. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie and his party do not ever believe it is necessary to raise revenue to meet expenditures. However, if there is to be a one-price system in respect of oil across this country, revenue indeed will have to be raised somewhere in order that this subsidy system will work. The opposition parties have put forward their ideas. Now I am responding to their challenge that Liberal backbenchers stand up and support the tax.

If revenue is to be raised to pay for this subsidy, where should it come from? I hear a comment from the other side that it should come from general revenue. I would ask these people to define where this general revenue should come from. They now define it as being corporate income tax. I think it has been generally accepted that if this revenue is not to come in the form of a special excise tax, it will have to come from some source, probably in the form of additional income taxes, and I should like to remind the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie—who is very worried about the middle income taxpayers—that any increase in income tax substantial enough to meet this revenue would hit hardest the middle income tax group.

Mr. Rodriguez: What is this excise tax doing?

Mr. Martin: The battle continues. I think the choices before the government were clear. It could either raise this revenue from additional income taxes—which, I repeat, would hit the middle income taxpayers hardest—or it could endeavour to raise the money from those most directly involved in the consumption of the product. The decision to impose the tax on gasoline was made for this reason, so at least some discretion was left to the individual user as to whether or not he would indeed pay the tax.

Mr. Rodriguez: Who is exempted?

Mr. Martin: The point has been made that a great many rural people must use their cars to get to work. That is very true. But there are also a great many Canadians in urban areas and elsewhere who are completely dependent on their automobiles to get to work. In fact, in many cases they are not earning enough money to run an automobile. In these cases they are completely dependent upon public transportation systems. These people will not be required to pay any part of this additional tax. If, on the other hand, the tax had been imposed at the income level, they would be paying their share just the same as people who are using the gasoline. So the decision was made to impose the tax on those who are directly consuming the product.

The shallowness of some of the points put forward by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie surprised me somewhat, because with his background and his knowledge of what lies behind this tax he should have known better. He should have known that $350 million to $400 million must be raised from some source, otherwise people in Ottawa, Cornwall, and east of the Ottawa Valley will be faced with paying the world price for crude oil, which we know now costs approximately $12 a barrel. This could result in gasoline prices at the pump moving up to the world level of $1.80 or $2 per gallon.

An example was given by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie of the effect of this tax. I believe he made a calculation and told us that the tax would amount to $50 a year. This works out to approximately 15 cents a day. No tax is ever popular. There will never be a tax that is popular. So you will always have letters and expressions of unhappiness when a tax is imposed. The question is whether 15 cents a day is unreasonable from the point of view of the individual who is driving his car to and from work. I ask the hon. member to consider this point. Personally, I do not think it is unreasonable and it is a much more equitable way, not regressive, in which to raise this kind of revenue which is for a specific purpose, namely, to pay for the subsidy that is involved in keeping oil and petroleum prices at one level across the country.

Other points were made by the hon. member on which I would like to comment, but I wanted to speak in particular at this time in defence of the ten cents tax and to assure hon. members that the imposition of the tax has the complete support of all hon. members on this side, backbenchers and others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to speak on this amendment, particularly after we have finally flushed one of the government backbenchers out of the woodwork. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) pointed out that all hon. members opposite support this tax. I wonder if they are all so sure that all their constituents support it. I represent the riding of Hastings and I try at all times to represent the views of my constituents. I am sure that I do not always do so, especially on such emotional issues as abortion, capital punishment or bilingualism. I am sure that from time to time I differ in my views from some of my constituents. However, on this issue I know that I represent a vast majority of the residents of Hastings riding.

Despite what the hon. member for Scarborough West says, I for one—and I know I speak for some of my colleagues at least—am not here to voice opposition to every issue that comes up. We are quite prepared to support the government when and if the government merits our support. But with the record of legislation that we have seen recently, it is very hard to support this government, especially on the poor legislation that has been put before us, from this rip-off of the average Canadian to the outright fraud in the Olympic coin legislation. I find I have to warn some of the coin collectors in my riding that they are faced with the possibility of getting coins that are only half the value of others, yet they will have to pay the same price for them.

How do you support this government when it takes upon itself the spending of money in ever increasing amounts? The other day the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said that he does not decry the value of $1 million—he was not quite as blunt as one of his predecessors—but he pointed out that $1 million is not that important in this context. I tell the House that $1 million to the residents of Hastings county is a good deal of money. As I say, I know I represent all the people of Hastings when I spend whatever time I can trying to convince the government that this ten cents tax is iniquitous, demoralizing, disgraceful and shameless. People in all walks of life, particularly working people, find it extremely difficult to pay this extra ten cents tax.

The county of Hastings is a large county, although not as large as that of my colleague and neighbour, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). It is a long, narrow riding, rouhgly 100 miles from north to south and it is about 30 miles wide. The county seat is in Belleville. Over the years during which I have been involved in municipal politics and public life in the area, we have tried to encourage north-south commerce in the county. As I said, the only major city is Belleville, and there is also the small city of Trenton. The rest are all villages.

In the north end of my riding we have timber and minerals. Timber, of course, is down in production now. The Domtar plant north of Bancroft has either not been running or running on short shifts. Fortunately, the situation with minerals is good. The Madawaska Uranium Mine is getting ready to commence its operations, and the Marmoraton Mine in Marmora has a reprieve of four or five years of operation. Commerce and industry are largely in the south, in the area around Belleville. The supplies travel from south to north, and the raw materials from north to south. However, people drive in between.

If you think, for example, of people in Deloro, Malone or Millbridge who have to drive to Belleville because the industry in which they worked was closed, you will realize that these people are now faced with the necessity of driving 35 or 40 miles each way. I know they use car pools and try to save as much as they can in the cost of transportation, but necessarily it will cost them a great deal of money. That is just one example. We also have people in Belleville who used to work in the Farraday and Grey Hawk and Dyno mines in Bancroft and who are now looking forward to working in the Madawaska mine.

There are people in Belleville and district who travel as far as Oshawa to go to work. Because of lack of protection by this government, the Ideal Vendors plant is closing in the Deseronto area. These people will have to travel extra mileage in order to get to work. We cannot blame them for that; it is not their fault that they have to travel this way. But they are being taxed because this is their way of life. There are no trains or buses travelling north and south in Hastings county. There is no means of public transportation. People must use their own transportation, and when the time comes for negotiations with the industries this year and next year it will not be unreasonable that the men and women who work in the industries will want a wage increase to cover this tax. This tax is fueling another round of inflation and is escalating costs, not only in the consumer price index but also in the cost of labour and other areas.

The Highlands of Hastings is one of the more famous tourist areas in my part of Ontario, with all due respect to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. A tremendous number of tourists come through our area. These include many Canadians and a great number of Americans on their way to the myriad lakes which are part of Hastings county, or the gateway to Algonquin park. This tax is designed to hurt our tourist operation. It can do nothing else.

In addition to people writing to me—and we have heard other hon. members quote from letters—I have already receive resolutions from the municipalities in the area. The municipalities, as commercial enterprises, are exempt in their dealings, but the municipal councils feel very strongly. Already the village of Madoc is on record, dealing with the proposed increase effective in July, as saying that it is excessive and not justified. They sent notice of their opposition to the county of Hastings, where I know some 30 other municipalities will agree. Very shortly I will have a flood of letters from municipalities in the county asking that this tax be removed.

The ten-cent tax is quite unnecessary. The hon. member for Scarborough West said that it must come out of the cost of gasoline. I do not think it need come out of the cost of gasoline for once, and I intend tonight to look to see if there is a second moon in the sky. I agree with my colleagues to the left both physically as well as physiologically.

An hon. Member: Philosophically.

Mr. Ellis: Yes, philosophically.

An hon. Member: Probably physiologically as well.

Mr. Ellis: Probably.

Mr. Epp: They are left in every way—left out, in fact.

Mr. Ellis: The approximately $500 million which this tax will return to the federal coffers will be used for nothing else but to fuel federal government spending. It could just as easily come out of the general revenue of the government by putting into effect some savings. I just do not buy the estimates of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Martin: Where?

Mr. Ellis: The hon. member for Scarborough West asks where. Let us consider some of these. The cutbacks promised by the Minister of Finance are phony. Two of these cuts, Petro-Can and the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation, do not even exist at the moment. Petro-Can, as we all know, was created here just a short while ago, and the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation was created 18 months ago. Neither has anything in the estimates now, yet the minister says he will cut them back. The minister mentioned that there were two other agencies. One was the Federal Business Development Bank, which is really still the IDB, and the other was the Farm Credit Corporation. Both of these were conceived to help small businessmen and farmers. It seems to me that those are poor choices in which to make cuts. If we want to cut back, how about cutting back Information Canada? Let us throw the whole thing down the drain. There we could save quite a few million dollars.

Mr. Nystrom: And the Senate.

Mr. Ellis: I have risen a number of times in this House to speak about the extravagant spending of the Department of Public Works, another department which spends over half a billion dollars per year. I can assure hon. members that there would be not much trouble taking quite a few million dollars out of that budget. The cuts of the minister were phony from the beginning. They were taken from new estimates. Going back to Public Works, the example with which I am most familiar, in committee we did not have enough time to consider its estimates. There were two very short sessions and there was absolutely inadequate time, but in the few minutes we did have I can assure hon. members that we found there were funds which could be cut back.

The budget promised restraint, but did absolutely nothing. I have the feeling that if there was an increase required in the per barrel cost of oil from $6.50 to $8, which would have put the price up by five or six cents, my neighbours in Ontario may not have objected to that. They understand the problems which exist.

Mr. Speaker, I see that you are ready to rise and it might be a good time for me to call it five o'clock. I will resume my remarks at eight o'clock this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I thank the hon. member for seeing the clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle)—Government Administration—Alleged leak of cabinet document—Government action; the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt)—Administration of Justice—Suggested representations to Quebec minister of justice concerning treatment of Dr. Morgentaler; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Suggested reference of status of Securex and discharge of officers Brunet and McCleery to Judge Marin's commission.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

[Mr. Ellis.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Shall motion No. 30, standing in the name of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Motion stands. Shall motion No. 36, standing in the name of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Motion stands. Shall motion No. 34, standing in the name of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Motion stands. Shall motion No. 37, standing in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Motion stands.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to proceed now with private Bill C-1001, standing in my name, before proceedings to consider the notice of motion for the production of papers standing in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

REQUEST FOR CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND UNITED AIRCRAFT AND CONTRACTS RELATING TO FEDERAL GRANTS

The House resumed from Thursday, May 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between United Aircraft and the government over the past year and copies of contracts relating to federal grants accorded to United Aircraft over the past five years.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, after consultation with parties represented in the House, it was agreed that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook) would speak on motion No. 17 on behalf of the government and that the mover, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) would also speak on it, and then the Chair could put the question to the House.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is an arrangement to which we have agreed so that following these two speakers, unless the motion carries on a voice vote, there would be a recorded vote.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, this debate, as you know, involves a private member's motion for the production of papers, specifcally for correspondence between the government and United Aircraft—now Pratt & Whitney of Canada, Ltd.—and contracts relating to federal grants.

The motion was already debated on May 1, 1975. I congratulate those who participated at that time, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc), and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. McFarlane).

I especially congratulate the mover of the motion, the distinguished member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and new leader of the New Democratic Party. He has again illustrated his concern and that of his party, indeed the concern of all of us, for the very important issues involved. Those issues are federal funding to private corporations, the rights of Canadian workers re settlements and working conditions, and standards for good corporate citizenship. Such issues are certainly important to me, both because my riding of Halton is highly industrialized and because I have personally had the privilege of serving many years in industry at all levels of responsibility.

As a labourer, I certainly became aware of the worker's needs for security and fair treatment. As an executive, I certainly became aware of the corporations' needs for confidentiality to protect their investments and meet the intense challenges of competition in the open market place. At one time we faced the requests of governments for full knowledge of our pharmaceutical formulations as well as most other critical data. It should be obvious, even to someone without background in business or industry, that such private commercial knowledge is the last basis for a company's survival. How well can such strategic material be safeguarded in public service files?

Fortunately the reasonable men involved quickly agreed that this move was both unnecessary and impractical to achieve the goals desired in this free enterprise society. In fact there were good arguments that such searching investigation could be counter productive. I believe my own experience is relevant to the case of United Aircraft. As consumers, we should all be aware of the need for government, business, and labour to conduct their relationships in a spirit of both honesty and mutual trust, in a balance reflecting our mixed economy. Information should be exchanged freely, but only where necessary and fair.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has made available to the House considerable information and provided a number of documents in an effort to provide the greatest amount of information possible to assist members of the House to understand the circumstances concerning the activities of the United Aircraft Company. It is important to recognize that the effective exercise of the industrial development function of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce depends, to a great extent, on the discretion of the department with regard to the use and distribution of highly confidential commercial data received from a broad range of companies, such as United Aircraft, in the many industrial sectors and subsectors in Canada.

The firm in question freely provided information to the department on the understanding it would be maintained as confidential. In these circumstances the publication of such data by the department would be prejudicial to the raison d'être and aims of the department to such an extent that the Canadian economy could eventually suffer. In addition, the foreign competitors of United Aircraft would gain access to information which they could use at the expense of that corporation, thus impeding its efforts on international markets. Such a situation would lead to economic hardship for the company and would cause a loss of jobs for Canadians which would be unacceptable, particularly in view of the present economic conditions.

Since 1960 the government has been participating with United Aircraft of Canada Limited in a development program covering small gas turbine engines. The support is in keeping with the government's objectives of maintaining a design and development capability to build light utility transport aircraft in Canada.

The government has advanced some $73 million to programs jointly shared with United Aircraft. In that 15 year period the company has invested in excess of $250 million respecting research and development, start up expenses, and new capital expenditures. These funds have been used to develop a high grade technical capability in Canada to produce small gas turbine engines for world markets. These engines are recognized internationally as being the most successful in their class for use in aircraft and have additional applications in ground transportation—Canadian turbo trains, marine use, Bell Voyageur and Viking hovercraft, and for auxiliary equipment at airports, pumping and compression stations, and other industrial applications. The joint development program related basically to two aircraft engines, the PT-6 and the JT15D.

This program has been very successful. Sales from Canada have exceeded $500 million, and market forecasts for these engines project sales in excess of $1.5 billion over the next five years.

To bring matters up to date—and this is important—the company is continuing its capital investment plan in spite of the current general economic slowdown, to expand its manufacturing, assembly, and test facilities in order to increase in-house production capacity. This investment of $6 million in 1975, compared to $3.5 million in 1974, includes the doubling of size of the engine assembly area and refurbishing an existing engine test cell to enable expanded production of JT15D engines. Current engine production rates have increased by 50 per cent over the level at the beginning of 1975. The employment at the Longueuil plant has returned to the previous peak 1973 level of 5,300 workers.

Although the union is officially still on strike, the company has agreed to accept the recommendations of the Quebec minister of labour to effect a settlement of the dispute. The majority of the union members have returned to work and there is a willingness on both sides to continue to negotiate in good faith. The government has continually pressed the company for repatriation of work temporarily transferred to the United States. The company has given assurances that all of the work temporarily transferred from Canada will have been repatriated by mid-1976. In fact the company is currently improving upon that agreed target date.

The March 15, 1973, document on the production of papers, which was referred to earlier, made provision for 16 exemptions, at least four of which are important to the matter in question. These were defined on May 1.

The government's main reason in establishing these exemptions was to give the widest possible information not only to the public but also to members of this House, for the proper understanding of the major issues and, at the same time, to provide a reasonable level of confidentiality for the government's operations.

It is very difficult for a parliamentarian to make a judgment on the balance between the expressed will of the government to supply as much information as possible and the obligation to provide sound administration. Sound administration is made possible in many instances through access to information given on a confidential basis. Having regard for the importance of this balance, the government has, to the greatest possible extent, made available information on the case in question.

On January 27, 1974, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tabled in the House copies of all development agreements between the Crown and United Aircraft, with the exception of three amendments to them. These amendments were excluded on legal advice because they contain classified engineering and cost information which would violate industrial security if made public to the company's competitors.

Correspondence between the Government of Canada and United Aircraft over the past year continues to be of confidential nature. It concerns critical matters to the company, such as the improvement or addition of product lines essential to the company's future which may, because of the high costs, require joint venture undertakings. If this information were disclosed it would be detrimental to Canadian production and employment in this important sector of the Canadian aviation industry. The circumstances which prompt the government to maintain the continued confidentiality of information in the case of United Aircraft are central to the effectiveness and credibility of the government in the course of its efforts to encourage technical innovation and industrial development capability in Canada.

As members are aware, United Aircraft has provided complete access on a privileged basis to its financial records, to its market analyses, and to its long term plans for product and market development. Disclosure of this data to the international competitors of United Aircraft could destroy its competitive advantage in the small aircraft engine field and would be contrary to the Canadian interest. Similarly, United Aircraft's dealings with its subcontractors and suppliers in Canada and abroad could be adversely affected by disclosure. In addition, the government would not wish to disclose indirectly matters of a confidential nature of Canadian companies having dealings with United Aircraft.

Finally, release of the information could inhibit the future flow of information between government and United Aircraft, as well as with other Canadian companies, to the detriment of our industrial development and trade objectives for this high technology product sector and other sectors of the Canadian economy. I believe, Madam Speaker, that the effective government action taken to date has resolved the concerns expressed in the hon. member's motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I see the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) rising. Before recognizing the hon. member I must advise the House that, if the hon. member speaks, he will close the debate.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Madam Speaker, this will not have been the first time when a government supporter began a speech by enunciating laudable principles which are supported by members of both Houses—

Mr. Epp: Surely the hon. member means hon. members on both sides?

Mr. Broadbent: I beg your pardon; I ought to have said, "by members on both sides of the House." The hon. member's speech, which at its beginning ostensibly supported the principle enshrined in the motion, ended on a different note. The members of my party reached the conclusion that, far from complying with the principle at one time enunciated by the Auditor General, the government is trying to do the opposite. It does not intend to follow those principles. I will elaborate on this in the few minutes available to me.

The point at issue is that the people of Canada, through parliament, have provided between $80 million and $120 million, depending on what figures you use, to United Aircraft Corporation of Longueuil, Quebec. That this company used this money positively, no one will deny. The company developed in Canada two excellent aircraft engines which have sold remarkably well at home and abroad.

That company also happens to be one of the most vicious anti-labour companies in North America—by which I mean in Canada and in the United States. It has an absolutely deplorable record in its dealings with its working staff, as evidenced by the strike which has gone on for more than a year and a half at Longueuil, Quebec. The company's employees have been on strike for that period.

The members of the New Democratic Party, reflecting the concern of the people of Longueuil, say that the company was using money provided by the people of Canada and that the company was able to prolong the strike because nothing in the contract entered into between the company and the government prohibited that company from transferring work, financed by the people of Canada, to the United States. That is precisely what the company did during the strike. The hon. member who just spoke acknowledged that the work which was sent to the United States and was supposed to have been done in Canada will not be repatriated fully to Canada until late in 1976.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Broadbent: That work, transferred out of Canada during the strike, enabled the company to prolong the strike, and enabled the company more readily to implement its profoundly anti-labour policy.

When we asked for the contracts and correspondence to be tabled, we wanted to know if there was anything in those contracts which would prohibit this course of action. We discovered in the contracts, and in the information that was provided to us, that there was no protection for Canadian workers. There was no protection either for the taxpayers of Canada who had put up the money.

We also wanted to look at the correspondence entered into between the Government of Canada and the company. And here let me say I share the hon. member's view, and the view of the government. If there are matters of a confidential nature the disclosure of which could jeopardize the company's commercial competitive position in the economy, or impair its ability to compete with other aircraft manufacturers, those matters ought to be kept confidential. But that position does not justify the total refusal to reveal any correspondence. Presumably a good part of it in the last year and a half dealt with the strike.

Surely the minister or other members of the government wrote to the company, and surely there were replies regarding the company's attitude to that strike. Surely there was some discussion about the obligations of that company to Canadian workers it was employing. But our requests were met with a blanket refusal. The minister refused to provide us with any correspondence.

I repeat that, if information can hurt the company's competitive position, it ought to be kept confidential. But we do not accept the attitude that the people of Canada have no right to know anything concerning the spending of amounts in the neighbourhood of $100 million put up by the taxpayer. We feel we have the right to know, on behalf of the taxpayer, what went on during any discussions. Specifically, we seek information in relation to workers at Longueuil, Quebec, who were adversely affected during the past one and a half years, and continue to be adversely affected. Therefore we do not accept the government's attitude, and we intend to force a vote on this important issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Those in favour of the motion will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Those opposed will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill S-28, An Act respecting the Royal Canadian Legion, to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 5.56 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 7416).

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, before the dinner hour I had just started to elaborate on the difference between the 10 cents tax and the increase that comes as a result of the increase in cost from $6.50 a barrel to $8 a barrel. The point that I want to make is that people in Ontario would probably not have complained that loudly or that long about the increase had it been the result only of the increase in the per barrel cost.

My friend to my left, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), went into some detail a day or so ago when he explained how Ontario, as a result of the national oil policy, had paid a higher price for oil and oil products over the years. His calculations put it at something like $5 billion. As he pointed out, there was no loud outcry because we, as Ontarians, had felt that our responsibility was to Canada first and therefore we knew that this policy was good for all Canada, so we paid the higher price. We did that for 11 years.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his speech opening the debate, as recorded in Hansard at page 7411, criticized the Ontario government, and specifically the premier of Ontario. He said:

> Moreover, by freezing the price on oil the Ontario government is creating an impossible situation for one million consumers in eastern Ontario who do not draw their supplies from Ontario refineries. The government of Ontario also seems to be opposing the single price system for petroleum across Canada, and this will likely have repercussions in other provinces.

There is only one word to describe that sort of rhetoric, and that is hogwash.

Backbenchers on the government side may remember that not many months ago the government of Ontario imposed a 7 per cent tax on heating oil. They will remember that the backbenchers on the government side in the Ontario legislature rose up almost to a man and said that this tax is not good for our people, it should not be put on, and that this is not the time to put on that kind of tax. As a result, the government of Ontario, the cabinet, the premier, and the minister who imposed the tax, thought about it and had the courage to back off because they agreed finally that the time was not right to put on the tax. Now we have the Government of Canada, the federal Minister of Finance, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) putting on a 10 cents tax on gasoline, and not one backbencher here has the courage to rise and say that this tax is not good. I know that their constituents are not happy with the tax. I am confident that there is not a member over there who has not received a letter saying that this tax should not be imposed.

Mr. Herbert: Don't include me because that is not true in my case.

Mr. Ellis: I am confident that these people have not agreed to it. The provincial minister of finance says that Ontarians will not agree to this. The provinces paid the bill for a long time, and enough is enough, and too much is too much. I support the freeze in Ontario as the only course of action open. It would not be necessary if the cabinet had the courage to face up to what is obviously an error, and take the tax off.

The Minister of Finance also quoted the minister of energy for the province of Ontario, and I should like to read that quotation which appears at page 7412 of Hansard and is part of the speech of the Minister of Finance on the Excise Tax Act. This is what the provincial minister of energy said:

> It must be increasingly apparent to all of us that energy is too rare, costly and precious to waste. I will go further: I hold the view that if as a world community—particularly the industrialized world—we fail to adjust our use of energy and accept the shift in our lifestyle that may be implicit, within a decade or two changes in lifestyle will be irresistibly imposed upon us. And those changes may be ones that we like less than the alternative that is still our option.

The federal Minister of Finances justifies this as a reason for imposing this tax and increasing the cost. I suggest that it might justify some savings, but it does not justify imposing a tax.

I have driven down highway 401, as I am sure have many hon. members, at the legal limit of 70 miles per hour, and I have been passed by federal vehicles as though I were standing still, despite the rhetoric which we hear. I read the advertisements by the federal government to the effect that it is saving energy by turning out lights in buildings. There are more buildings which are federally owned or controlled which have their lights on all night in the city of Ottawa than one could shake a stick at. In the next few days I will list them for hon. members. The Ontario government, however, is forcing cutbacks in Ontario Hydro and in other areas.

If I may change the subject slightly, the administration of this tax has to be a nightmare. We do not know if we will ever receive rebates. Eventually, I expect we will, but—

Mr. Foster: Call off the filibuster.

Mr. Ellis: There is an expression that we huckleberries in Hastings county use to answer that kind of remark, but I would not dare use it in this House. What is happening is that we are being led down the garden path and told that, unless we pass this bill, we cannot receive the rebates. I suggest that if this bill were passed tonight there would not be a rebate for the next three months because the administration is not ready. The paper work is not ready, and we know that this government runs on paper. The government will not be ready for three months whether we pass the bill tonight or not.

One of the things which was promised in the budget was a cutback in the civil service. That cutback turns out to be a cutback in the projected expansion of the civil service. Actually it is to be cut down to about 10,000 plus man-years in the coming fiscal period. Comparing ourselves with the province of Ontario, we find that Ontario is actually cutting back on its civil service.

The minister was wrong in November when he brought down his budget, and he is wrong now. For example, in November the minister imposed a special tax on light aircraft. At that time he made the incorrect statement that this would save fuel. After serious pressure from all members on this side he backed off some, but not all. In the past few months I know that he has been given all the statistics he needs to prove that that particular use of energy is far more efficient than the average motor car. I personally believe that the minister falsely thought that he was taxing the rich, and he thought that this was a popular thing to do. He has found out since that in actual fact many businessmen in the middle income group use this form of transportation because it is fast and flexible. They need that flexibility, and in fact the minister was not taxing the rich as he thought he was.

Not only will this increase in tax fuel the fires of inflation, but it will hurt the population of all Canada in many other ways. It is becoming difficult to buy a house. For someone who has to drive 100 miles per day that 10 cents per gallon added up will make the difference in whether he can save the money to buy a house, as housing costs increase. With regard to the figures which we hear the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) batting around of 180,000, 200,000, or 210,000 starts this year, I do not think he really knows which is correct, and I am not sure he cares as much as he should.

I know that in my riding there is a plant which makes telephone equipment, Northern Electric, and because housing starts are down, that company has laid off 350 or 400 people. It just does not have enough business. I suggest to the minister that these people are less able now to pay that extra 10 cents tax on gasoline than they were when they were working, and they are wondering whether this government, in not keeping the housing industry going, is in large measure responsible.

In the excise tax bill it is proposed that the government will remove the tax on insulating products, storm windows, and screens. How long have we on this side of the House said that the tax on building materials should be removed, period? All that is happening with this tinkering and playing around with little bits and pieces is that the cost of collecting that tax per unit is going up. I am sure hon. members will agree that the cost of collecting the tax on building materials has not reduced. The tax which is being collected has reduced as it has been cut slowly but surely, but the cost of collecting it has not gone down, and the percentage reduction of the cost of a new home will be so minimal that it will not be noticed. Certainly that reduction will not be reflected in the cost of a new home. If CMHC programs were more receptive to smaller homes and to re-using some existing housing, I think we would be in considerably better shape.

I wish to make reference to one final brief quote which has been brought to my attention:

A gilt-edged committee of the C.D. Howe Research Institute has called for a list of measures, headed by strict limits to growth in government spending, to deal with Canada's current economic difficulties—

The committee says there can be no easy or quick solutions to all the economic problems of Canada, but a start must be made now on a framework of longer term policies designed to streghten (Canada's) productive capacities, competitive position, productivity and employment and to achieve greater fairness for lower income groups.

I suggest that the government has been tinkering with Canada's economy, and speaking strictly to the amendment, if we would use the time proposed in the amendment to consider the bill, and if some of the backbenchers would go home and listen to the complaints of their constituents, I think we would have an entirely different bill when we come back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I want to add my words of protest against this cruel tax which will weigh heavily on the people of Canada. It will weigh especially heavily on the people of my province.

In the province of Newfoundland at the present time, as a resullt of the imposition of this tax, the price of gasoline ranges between 90 cents and 95 cents per gallon. As a result of the increase in crude oil prices announced in the minister's budget and a further 5 cents per gallon increase, before the year is out we expect that a gallon of gasoline in Newfoundland will cost $1. That is in a province which has the rather dubious distinction of having the highest cost of living as well as the highest rate of unemployment in the country.

We are discussing a bill to impose this tax—or to give the minister the statutory authority to continue to collect the tax, because the tax has already been imposed—in the midst of figures released by Statistics Canada just a week ago on July 11, showing that over-all inflation had increased by 1.5 percentage points in the month of June. That is a substantial and significant increase, one of the highest monthly increases during the past ten years. Incorporated in these figures was a 3.3 per cent increase in the price of food.

It is also significant that the government has introduced a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, the effect of which is to decrease the benefits payable to an earner with a large, dependent family. As well, the bill will provide for the elimination from the insurance rolls of old age pensioners. These are the two groups that are hardest hit, the low income earner who has to pay cash for his food like everybody else, and the pensioner. These are the people who cannot write off the cost of gasoline on an expense account; they have to pay cash. These will be the two groups hardest hit, and they will be hit still harder if the government insists on imposing this tax.

Following on the heels of the consumer price index came the unemployment figures which showed a substantial increase. Canada today has an unemployment rate of 7.2 per cent; in my own province the month of June showed an unemployment rate of 17.9 per cent, a rate more than double the national average. It is also significant that incorporated in these unemployment statistics released just a few days ago are figures relating to the disproportionately high rate of unemployment in the young age group.

Young people coming on to the labour market following the commencement of the summer holidays in the universities and colleges are unable to find employment, and this, notwithstanding the millions of dollars pumped into the Opportunities for Youth Program. It means that these young people will have to go back to the universities and colleges in the fall under a severe financial handicap because they are unable to find summer employment. This group will be hard hit by this tax.

We should bear in mind as well the report of the Food Prices Review Board released in July. This is one of the special studies of the board on the prices of bread and fluid milk in Canada. An information bulletin released July 15 had this to say:

Substantial bread and milk price increases during the last two years appear to have caused considerable hardship for many Canadians, especially those with fixed and limited incomes—

At page IV of the report entitled "The Consumption of Bread and Fluid Milk in Canada", it states:

Comparing across families at differing income levels, it is clear that the absolute amounts spent on bread and milk varied little.

What the board is saying is that consumption of those essential items has not decreased. People still have to buy bread and milk. The report continues:

For example, a two-adult two-child family had roughly the same expenditure on bread and milk whether that family had an income in the $2,000-$3,999 range, or in the $10,000-$14,999 range.

Again, this tax will weigh most heavily on the low income earner who already has to spend a disproportionately high amount of his income on food, and who has to pay a disproportionately high amount of his income for essential food items like bread and milk.

What happened to the government, this same government that responded in the last parliament when it was struggling for survival and announced a special consumer subsidy on these two items? That consumer subsidy was rather inhumanely and cruelly withdrawn when the government returned with a majority.

The fact remains that what we are discussing tonight is a tax which will affect the low income earner who is already burdened with high food prices, which will adversely and cruelly affect the pensioner, the Canadian on a fixed income who has to watch his pension being eroded month by month by inflation. These are the groups that will be hardest hit.

I believe the government should give serious consideration to withdrawing this bill. Perhaps it is just as well that it comes at a time when parliament is scheduled, at any rate, to adjourn for the summer recess. Perhaps that will give the Minister of Finance and members of the government an opportunity to feel the pulse of the nation, to get the direct reaction of the people of the country who have to pay that tax every day, every week, every month as they fill up their tanks with gasoline.

In addition, we can anticipate further increases, another five cents per gallon, and increases in energy prices which will impose a heavy hardship on low income earners. It will mean a direct increase in the price of heating fuel and will cost more to heat homes. Who has to bear the burden? Who has to bear the excessively heavy burden? It will be the low income earner, the pensioner, the man on the fixed income, the unemployed person trying to get by on unemployment insurance or social welfare payments. If the low incomer earner is unfortunate enough to be in the ranks of the unemployed, and if the government has its way, he will see his unemployment insurance decrease if he has a dependent family.

This measure is highly inflationary. It is an inflationary measure contained in a disastrously inflationary budget.

According to the OECD, Canada is the only member country, with the exception of Great Britain, that does not have its inflation under control.

The Conference Board of Canada made a prediction on July 4, referring directly to the increase in the price of oil and the excise tax on gasoline. The board said:

● (2030)

Our estimates of the impact of these measures on prices is a 1.7 per cent increase in the Consumer Price Index over the next twelve months.

Statistics Canada took an unusual step when announcing their CPI figures for the month of June. In the preamble to the announcement they said the figures did not include the impact of the increased price of gasoline which will result from this excise tax measure.

The Food Prices Review Board predicts that this measure will increase food prices.

The Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada think food prices will go up. This is the way the Globe and Mail of July 16, 1975, puts it:

A high rate of food inflation is indicated in 1975, G.G.E. Steele, president of the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, says.

The association estimates that food prices this year will increase by 12 per cent.

Already in the month of June food prices have gone up by 3.3 per cent. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced measures to restrict the importation of eggs to Canada from the United States. Mr. Speaker, eggs are a most important source of protein for low income earners. We were led to believe and have it on the authority of the minister, that these import restrictions were only imposed after CEMA put its house in order.

It is interesting to note the provisions of the new agreement signed by CEMA and the marketing boards of the provinces. Two provinces had to be forced to sign the agreement. The Minister of Agriculture threatened Alberta and New Brunswick that if they failed to sign, those provinces would be flooded with cheap eggs. Alberta announced, when signing the new agreement, that it will be withdrawing from CEMA, and served the required one year's notice.

The United States has indicated it will retaliate. That retaliation may further affect food prices in Canada. Beef prices alone rose 18 per cent last month owing to restrictions imposed by this same Minister of Agriculture a short time ago. There are indications that the United States will retaliate and, as I say, this could drastically affect Canadian food prices. Already egg prices have responded to the minister's announcement and risen. They could go higher still.

We are discussing this measure at a time when Canada is facing record high unemployment. We are discussing the imposition of this tax at a time when Canada faces another wave of record high inflation, at a time when food prices will continue to escalate and impose a severe burden on low income earners.

What will the proposed tax mean? I estimate that the average family in Canada will have to spend $70 more per year on gasoline. It is all very well to eliminate certain users from the impact of this tax. I maintain that its net result will be inflationary. The net result will be to increase transport costs in Canada. Food production costs in Canada will rise and the increase will be passed directly on to the consumer.

I submit that this is not the time to propose this tax. The government can talk all it wants about filibuster. If this is a filibuster, so be it. We can only tolerate this tax if we force the government to push it through with closure. We can be justified in passing this measure only if there is closure, as this tax will impose an additional burden on the people of this country. I am prepared to stay here and speak as often as necessary. In any event, the government might be well advised to hold this bill over to the fall. if we adjourn. The adjournment will give the government an opportunity to gauge public reaction. Members will talk to their constituents and gauge the reaction of the people who must pay this tax. The unemployed must pay it. The middle income earner, who at this time of year is highly mobile on vacation, will find that his holiday cost more be reason of this tax.

What is happening? There is to be an increase in egg prices, an increase in gasoline prices, an increase in beef prices, and an increase in fuel oil prices. There are to be decreased benefits to low income earners with families, who must depend on unemployment insurance. The old age pensioner is to be eliminated from the unemployment insurance rolls. What kind of budget is this? What kind of Minister of Finance is this? What kind of government is this and, Mr. Speaker, what kind of parliament is this that can tolerate or accept such a measure?

The amendment put forward by my party should be considered seriously by the House. It is not a debating ploy, not a tactic to filibuster. It is a genuine and sincere expression of our concern on behalf of the people of Canada, because we think this tax should not be imposed, at least not at this time.

I hope the Minister of Finance can find it in his heart to reconsider this measure and remember the effect it will have on the poor of this country, on our pensioners, on our unemployed and on our low income earners. I say this to the Minister of Finance: if he wants to salvage what little there is left of his reputation, which has suffered badly because of this disastrous budget, he will put this bill over to the fall, reconsider it and, hopefully, after having reconsidered it, have the heart to withdraw it.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-66, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, and on the amendment to this bill introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

The amendment to this bill which seeks to delay its introduction for six months is a most significant one. It tells us a great deal about the policies of those who support it. The most charitable description I can think of is that it represents the ostrich school of political thought—"Don't do anything to solve the problem; just stick your head in the sand for six months and maybe it will go away."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: I remind hon. members that the voters of Canada looked at that ostrich just over one year ago and proclaimed it a dead duck. They elected, instead, a government which would provide leadership and was not afraid to tackle serious issues, even if it meant taking some unpopular steps.

● (2040)

I am confident, as a new resident of at least five days a week in this province, that the voters of Ontario will vote similarly this fall and replace the big, blue ostrich of Queen's Park with a progressive and forward-looking bright red Liberal bird, of substance, thought, and good government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: The Leader of the Opposition admits that we have a serious problem to face in ensuring a continued supply of energy for Canadians at a realistic price, but from there his policies seem to hesitate and slow down like the pace of a turgid river.

He does not approve of the excise tax, but he does not want to increase income taxes. Nor does he want to increase government debt. Yet he is in favour of a single-price system for petroleum products as long as we who are supposedly thought of in intellectual metropolitan Tory circles as "nasty" westerners do not feel too badly about subsidizing the Atlantic provinces.

No wonder he wants to hide his head in the sand for six months. In his position I think I would be tempted to keep it there until some time early next February.

I think that all Canadians, with the possible exception of big blue ostriches, realize that we face in the months ahead some very serious and very difficult decisions about the future, and particularly the future of our energy supplies—where they are to come from, how we are to obtain them, and then how we are to pay for them. Our known petroleum reserves are diminishing at our current rate of consumption, doing so steadily during the next ten years. Our untapped resources can only be obtained at a price much higher than that we are now used to paying, or perhaps even willing to pay.

We will pay more for oil and gas in the future. That is an irreversible fact, a simple statement of demand and supply, and not a sinister plot of Leninist communism, as the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) would have us believe.

However, since the parliamentary guide says he has 274 Leninists in his own constituency, I must assume he knows whereof he speaks, so I bow to the hon. gentleman from Pembina in his definition of Leninists, though I must confess I laugh out loud at the thought that he considers the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a Leninist or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) a communist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) ought to know and, if he read the budget, so should my hon. friend from Pembina know that this is a stringent right-leaning budget geared to tough times. The question of oil and gas prices is one which is critical to our country's future as a major industrial nation, and I wish to commend the Minister of Finance and his colleagues in the federal cabinet for having the political integrity to face this problem now, and for their leadership in determining to resolve it while it is still only a problem, and not waiting for it to become a flaming crisis in this nation, as the ostriches would have us do.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) is usually correct in what she says in this House. However, there are two areas which she mentioned here that are incorrect. I would like them corrected for the record. I did not refer to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) as a communist. Nor did I refer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as a Leninist. I said the Prime Minister followed the teachings of Lenin.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I do not see any point of order in that. However, the facts are clear in the parliamentary guide book. Marxist, Leninist and communist candidates ran in the hon. member's constituency. I bow to him with all the grace I can muster in his knowledge of Leninists.

The question of oil and gas prices is critical to this country's future. I was saying, when I was interrupted, not by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) I hasten to add, but by some outcries from the opposite side, that ostriches are notably quiescent and tranquil. They are big birds, but they are seldom noted for their brightness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: This tax is an unpopular one, and this legislation is not popular legislation. Paying taxes is never popular. But the real test of leadership is the ability to make difficult decisions and not blow in the wind like blue ostrich feathers, tinted and curled, and ready to fly away with every passing breeze.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: The June 23 budget showed leadership, leadership which will provide us with a fair and equitable energy policy in the years and decades ahead. This government is not afraid to look at the long term needs of Canadians, perhaps not even born yet, as priorities.

We know that prices for oil and gas are going to continue to rise. We know that it will take a massive commitment, and equally massive amounts of money, to bring the tar sands and the oil deposits in the high Arctic into full production.

The question then is not whether these things are going to happen, but what policies are we going to have to ensure that their impact on Canadians is as minimal, and as fair and equitable as possible.

That is why we now have a single national price for petroleum products in Canada. That is why the export charge on petroleum sold outside of the country is used to subsidize the cost of petroleum for those Canadians who are still dependent on Venezuelan and Mid-Eastern oil. That is why we accept that petroleum prices must be brought closer to international levels in order to encourage the development of our untapped resources and ensure a continued supply of Canadian oil for Canadian users.

The ostriches would have us sit with our heads in the sand until our current reserves are used up, dried and dead, and then place us at the mercy of the OPEC cartel. I do not accept the ostrich school of thought, formidable though it might be in aviary circles. Neither do my constituents.

I would tell the hon. Leader of the Opposition if he were here that we do not harbour resentment toward the eastern part of this country every time we buy gasoline because we are subsidizing those Canadians who are dependent on imported petroleum products. For, Mr. Speaker, even in far away Skeena, we are Canadians too, and we are proud of it. We have no time for short-sighted politicians who feel they must put their picayune interests ahead of the good of the country.

We do not like paying the extra ten cents a gallon when we buy our gas, but we are willing to do it because we are aware of the need for it, and are aware that it is a part of the price we must pay to keep our country growing and developing, and to ensure that the people of this nation do not suffer severe financial hardship just because they live in a certain part of the country.

Ours is a young and growing country, and the costs of its growth must be as equally divided as the benefits. Surely, Mr. Speaker, all members are aware of and accept that basic principle. That is the basis on which our country was founded.

Certainly the ten cents per gallon is unpopular and expensive, even exasperating to some, but they are the users and able to pay. I might remind hon. members that the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway was pretty expensive, and pretty unpopular as well, until Pierre Berton made it profitable. So were those high tariffs designed to create and protect the Ontario and Quebec manufacturing industries. They were considered necessary, despite the cost, as part of the price of the shaping of our country as we know it today.

A responsible and constructive opposition would have accepted this basis—a basis accepted by the people of our country as part of the price of unity and confederation—and would have offered positive and realistic criticisms of the government's policies. Hopefully they would have put forward some alternate proposals. Instead, what have we seen?

The main criticisms, once you wade through all of the high and mighty verbiage and a few ostrich feathers, appear to be that the excise tax is the wrong way to collect the money, and that anyway, it is not necessary. The only need for it, in the words of the biggest ostrich in Queen's Park, is the "propensity of the Government of Canada to consume money". Well, I would like to see him explain that one to the residents of his present federal leader's riding in Halifax, who would be paying well over $1 per gallon for gas if it had not been for the leadership of this federal government. As it is, the oil subsidy program will operate this year at a deficit of between $400 million and $600 million. So, simply stated, the money is needed.

Which brings me to the second criticism by the opposition—that the excise tax is a vile, iniquitous, and a generally nasty way to raise money. On the other hand, however, they agree the money should not be raised by increasing personal income taxes, and the government deficit is already too large. I do not really know what else that leaves, unless the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has something else up his sleeve—perhaps another bank.

The excise tax is not perfect, and I have my own criticisms of it which I will come to shortly, but I believe it is the fairest means of collecting the needed revenues because it is based on the principle that those persons who buy petroleum for their own personal use should be called on to bear the financial burden of implementing an agreed upon national petroleum policy.

I accept that there are inequities in this tax, and it penalizes those who must rely on an automobile for their only means of transport. But let me point out to hon. members that in my constituency it is not a drive of 50 or 60 miles into the city, but a drive of 500 to 600 miles—1,008 miles if one wishes to visit the beautiful metropolis of Vancouver.

However, we must accept the fact that we have to change our energy consumption habits, and I would sooner have the car driving residents of my constituency pay this tax than I would have them subsidized by my constituents who do not drive automobiles, and by the senior citizens who practise conservation not through choice but through economic necessity. As I indicated earlier, however, I do feel that this tax is, in areas, unfair, and that it places a special burden on the residents of my constituency as well as the residents of other more remote parts of our country.

I regret to advise the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) that this excise tax will not have a significant conservation effect in Skeena. Are all hon. members ready to accept the fact that the people there are paying $1.03.9 cents per gallon for regular gasoline? That is what I paid last week in Dease Lake, which is in my constituency, and when you pay that price you are fully aware of the need not to waste gas.

I mentioned earlier that the prices of confederation must be high, and that there is a need to share equally the costs as well as the benefits of building our great country. In Skeena we accept that principle, and we do not object to sharing the costs of the oil subsidy program or any of the other elements of national unity which are essential to Canada's future.

It seems to me that too many hon. members from all sides of the House, who sit here complacently and smugly representing their "comfortable cat" urban ridings and then complain about something like this excise tax, have forgotten that there are still parts of Canada which do not have the facilities and services they take for granted. Some of these hon. members seem to forget that the mines that produce the metals that feed the automobile plants do not operate themselves, that the trees in the wilderness forests do not chop themselves down, that the fish do not jump out of the ocean into nice, neat little cans, ready for the grocery store in Scarborough.

It takes people to do these things, Mr. Speaker—Canadians. And these Canadians from not only my own riding of Skeena but from other ridings in our north and mid-north all across Canada do their jobs and live their lives without the social, recreational, cultural or medical amenities considered necessities by our country's comfortable southern urban population.

This last Tuesday was a very important day in my home town of Price Rupert. A ceremony was held to mark the opening of a new dental clinic. And why was this such an eventful day? Because this city of 20,000 people now has a grand total of three, instead of two, dentists, and each dentist has only 7,000 people to look after instead of 10,000.

As I have said, my constituents accept the necessity of this excise tax as one of the costs of keeping our country together. But they are also beginning to wonder when they can expect some consideration regarding costs themselves. Those in the mid-north would like a little more regional assistance.

Expensive gasoline is not something new to us. I recall that there was a royal commission on gas prices in British Columbia in 1964, and the average price of regular gasoline in Vancouver was then 39.9 cents per gallon. In Prince Rupert it was 49.4 cents per gallon. Today the average price of regular gasoline in Vancouver is 71.9 cents per gallon. In Prince Rupert it is 84.9 cents; in Terrace and in the Bulkley Valley 86.9; and, as I have mentioned, in Dease Lake I paid $1.03.9 per gallon for regular gasoline.

What my constituents would like to know, Mr. Speaker, is why it is so much more expensive for gasoline in our part of the country. When you take away the new ten cents excise tax, the 3.2 cents in other federal excise taxes, and the 17 cents in provincial road taxes on a gallon of regular gasoline, the price in Vancouver is 41.7 cents per gallon, and in Burns Lake 56.7 cents, or 36 per cent higher.

And that money is not staying in Burns Lake; it is going to Vancouver, or Calgary, or Houston, Texas.

My constituents do not object to paying ten cents per gallon to ensure a reasonable gasoline price for those Canadians dependent on imported oil. But we are a little less enthusiastic about subsidizing multinational oil companies who swear by their belief in competition so long as it does not interfere with their ability to charge whatever the traffic will bear.

In 1963 the previous government of the province of British Columbia authorized a royal commission on the gasoline price structure in B.C. as is the case with most such studies under that administration, it was essentially a manoeuvre to cool off a too hot political issue, and little consideration was paid to its recommendations. But this report contains some very interesting information, such as the conclusion by the commissioner, Mr. Justice William Morrow, that "the present high retail mark-up in some areas is unfair", and his statement that "the figures do show that there are a number of centres in B.C., such as Prince Rupert... where the average gasoline sales per station are not very much below those in metropolitan Vancouver. This is an important fact, inasmuch as the major oil companies have mentioned that one of the reasons for the high dealer mark-up in outlying centres is the relatively low gallonage going through the service stations in those areas, as compared with the lower mainland."

The commissioner further reported that, according to the oil companies' own figures, of the 9.4 cents per gallon mark up on regular gas between Vancouver and Prince Rupert in 1964, only 2.58 cents per gallon could be attributed to transportation costs. There were 6.82 cents of fat in there in 1964, and there is a lot of fat in there somewhere today, Mr. Speaker, and it's certainly not going to my constituents in Skeena. I only hope that hon. members opposite will pull their heads out of the sand for long enough in the near future so that we just might be able to pass phase one of the competition act and allow the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to examine closely situations such as this.

What does this have to do with excise taxes? A great deal, as hon. members from the comfortable south will see. In researching this subject for my speech today I talked for a considerable time with a resident of my constituency, Mr. Cyril Shelford, who was a cabinet minister in the previous Social Credit government of the province of British Columbia, a man who has for many years pursued the inequities of the gasoline prices we in the north must pay; a man, too, who was investigated twice for being a communist simply for saying what I am saying now. He is a Social Crediter, and as the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) will tell you, Mr. Speaker, a Social Crediter is just a little bit further right than he is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The chief ostrich has just walked in.

Mrs. Campagnolo: I received considerable information on the subject from this constituent as well as from many other people to whom I have spoken throughout my riding. Perhaps their thoughts are best summarized in this quotation from a letter I have received from Mr. Hank Hoornenborg, who, by the way, would never be considered a leftist since he was the head of a local conservative organization and is President of the Chamber of Commerce in the town of Houston. Mr. Hoornenborg says:

> The Houston Chamber proposes that efforts should be made to equalize fuel costs across the province. It is a well-known fact that because of the environment, distance and fewer opportunities, Canadian in northern areas make use of their automobiles to a larger extent. Because of often rigorous conditions of climate and roads they must purchase more costly vehicles and face higher maintenance costs and insurance premiums . . . Ottawa, we feel, must find a means by which to come to grips with the inequities Canadians in the north are constantly facing.
> This land needs its northern residents, yet at the same time it penalizes these same people time and again for their willingness to withstand harsher conditions of life, and having the independence of mind to become personally involved in development of our nation.
> Energy is such a basic commodity that the whole nation might well make it its responsibility to help carry the costs of energy expended in Canada's north.

Mr. Hoornenborg's point is a most important one, and it reflects accurately the concern felt not only by my constituents but by persons across Canada with the initiative to become personally involved in the development of our country instead of sitting back in the comfortable southern cities. In the light of the 10 cents a gallon we are now debating the ensure the continuation of an equitable and reasonable price for gasoline in all parts of our country, I suggest to hon. members that they give consideration to the extension of this equitable and reasonable price to the more northern areas of Canada as well as to the fortunate south.

I have been advised that, based on the total volume of gasoline sold in the province of British Columbia, it would require an over-all increase in price of only three-quarters of a cent per gallon to equalize the north-south differential in the price of gasoline in all parts of the province. Transposed into national figures and applied to the situation in northern Manitoba, northern Saskatchewan, northern Ontario, northern Quebec, and even northern Alberta, I am sure the cost would not be significantly different.

I leave this thought with hon. members and ask them to consider it if and when they return to their amenity-filled ridings in the comfortable south—ridings to which we will be welcomed back with questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: I say to our outstanding Minister of Finance that, unlike the members of the Progressive Ostrich Party, my constituents accept the measures he is introducing in this legislation and accept the cost of ensuring that we have a strong and united country. When I vote for this bill and against the amendment I will do so knowing that this is another aspect of the price of being a federal nation, and in the full knowledge that ultimately northern disparities will be as visible as eastern energy disparities and that appropriately just action will be taken to share in larger measure the benefits of confederation from south to north as well as from sea to shining sea.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Cape Breton-The Sydneys who spoke last evening was soundly rebuked for referring to the previous speaker as "a delightful lady". I read her comments with regard to that. She was not, she insisted, a delightful lady, but a member of the House of Commons. So I thought I had better be careful about entering this debate immediately following her contribution.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Better not!

Mr. Patterson: I hear a comment from the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi. I have not heard him make any reasonable or decipherable statement since I have been here.

An hon. Member: You have not been listening.

Mr. Patterson: If we keep him here long enough maybe he will reach the point at which he is able to get up and make a reasonable contribution to these debates.

An hon. Member: Don't count on it.

Mr. Patterson: The hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) told us there was sound and decisive leadership by the present government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, if there were sound and decisive leadership we should not be facing the massive problems we are facing in Canada at the present time.

With reference to her comments on certain individuals not wishing to do anything to solve these problems, I would only refer her to the fact that in several successive budgets the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) told us he was tackling some of our major problems in Canada, specifically, inflation and unemployment. I have heard him make that comment when introducing several budgets at various times. I also heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) state that he intended to wrestle inflation into the ground. Well, these problems are still with us and, whether the government has done anything at all or not, the fact remains that unemployment is still a major problem, that inflation is a gruelling problem, and that as far as the economy is concerned it is much worse than a great many Canadians realize.

We have been told that the policies being followed by the government are geared to tough times. If I may make an observation, it is that if we are experiencing tough times now they are nothing compared with those ahead of us unless the government does, in fact, show some decisive leadership and take appropriate action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: For a number of weeks we were waiting for the introduction of the budget. Time and time again we were advised that its presentation had been delayed. Finally he minister brought it down on June 23. I wonder why he waited so long. Was it because he could not make up his mind about what he wanted to do? Or did he wish to delay the budget to the point at which he felt the opposition would not be prepared to sit it out and debate the legislation based on the budget resolutions he was introducing? Mr. Speaker, we are still here, and I am not sure how long we are going to be here. As I look at some of these resolutions I believe I can say we are justified in carrying this debate on in spite of the charges of filibuster.

We know the people of this country are desperately concerned about the implications of this measure we are currently debating. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) speaking in this debate stated that he represents a party which is 100 per cent behind this resolution in respect of the gas tax. Could it be that 100 per cent of the Liberal supporters in this House tonight believe without any reservation that this is a policy which could be justified in the eyes of those who elected them to this House? If so, I am sure we will not hear them because there are many who would be embarrassed if they stood and made statements such as those we have heard from the one or two government members who have spoken, because they know they will have to go back and answer to those who elected them to the House of Commons.

Although there are a number of items contained in this bill, the item of prime importance is the application of the ten cents tax on gasoline across this nation. This brings us back to consideration of the government's policies in respect of energy. If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the government want to make Canada self-sufficient in resources and bring down the price of oil for Canadians, I suggest they could not have chosen a worse course over the last two years to achieve that goal. In addition to that, they have introduced this tax.

I would go so far as to say that if the government wanted to make Canada dependent on world energy supplies and ensure that Canada would have to pay high prices for oil and gas, it could not have adopted any better policies than those which have been placed before this House and submitted to the Canadian people. In other words, I believe the government has botched its energy program. It has failed miserably in everything it has tried to do in this regard down through the past months.

Let me illustrate the way in which this whole situation has been bungled. In 1973 Canada was potentially self-sufficient in respect of oil. There were some 334 oil drilling rigs operating in Canada. However, the course the government has followed since that time has driven the oil people out of the country because of its oppressive tax system, its intrusion into the tax field, as illustrated by the National Petroleum Act, the Petro-Can legislation, and the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) policies of confrontation in respect of taxation, as well as the government's wishy-washy ad hocery in dealing with the very crucial problem of exploration in this country. Because of this, as pointed out by my colleague from Battle River in the debate on Petro-Can last week, one-third of all those oil rigs have left Canada, and oil exploration activity has declined something like 20 per cent since 1974, while production of Canadian crude has dropped 17 per cent since 1974. It appears that the government, having set the stage and having created a problem, is trying to put in place some policy to solve the problem it has already created.

The government claims that exploration for oil is down. This is one of the justifications for the introduction of the bill to form a national petroleum corporation. I say again that this is the reason. This is why we are faced with the situation before us today. The government, which is supposed to be giving leadership to thhis country, seemingly has dedicated itself to the abolition of the free enterprise, private enterprise, system in this country. It could not resist the temptation to have a contrived crisis and to jump into the private sector with both feet and trample both the consumer and the producer underfoot. Needless to say, the uncertainty created by the government with regard to an energy policy has meant an undermining of the confidence the oil industry has traditionally had in the Canadian industrial environment. This uncertainty has resulted in a substantial decline in activity in Canada simply because the industry could not depend on what the government would do next.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says he is dedicated to the goal of keeping down the price of oil and gas for Canadians. This seems rather ludicrous in view of what is before us at the present time. Where was the minister on the night of June 23? No doubt he was in the House, but I am sure he must have been cringing in his seat as the Minister of Finance announced his ten cents a gallon tax increase, which is diametrically opposed to the principle announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Perhaps we might have an explanation of this. On the one hand we have the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stating that he wants to keep down oil prices for Canadians, while on the other hand we have the Minister of Finance raising the price of gasoline by ten cents a gallon in one shot.

The situation is not that the oil companies will have more money for exploration but that the government's take from the pockets of the poor, the oppressed, and the already overtaxed Canadian consumer will be increased. So here we have one minister wanting to keep prices down while another overrules him and unilaterally increases them. I suggest this is indicative of the situation in respect of cabinet ministers in this government.

There is a policy conflict. We witnessed this some time ago when there was a conflict between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). They were at each other's throat because one was enunciating a policy that was undercut by the other minister. Then in order to try to smooth over the difficulty the Prime Minister stated that it is a healthy exercise, a healthy symptom, to have disagreement in the cabinet. That was a change from the cabinet solidarity we heard so much about.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I remember your old Social Credit Party.

Mr. Patterson: That party had some tremendous policies when we were here in times past, and I am glad to see that a great many of them are being advocated by us today. I believe the minister would like to move a little in that direction if he were not held back by his cabinet. I can think of no more oppressive a tax the government could put on the working people of this nation than that contained in Bill C-66. This increase places an unjust direct tax on all private motorists. It creates another hardship for the majority of motorists who are in the lower and middle income groups.

It has been pointed out very clearly that this tax will add tremendously to the burden of the Canadian taxpayer in general, and will fall particularly on those who use their automobiles in order to struggle to make a living. In this connection we realize that the minister is not too concerned about that, because if he was very concerned he certainly would not have brought in this measure. The burden will fall on those people who have retirement in mind and the hope of enjoying a little of the fruits of their labours over a period of 30, 40 or 50 years. Now the minister plunks another ten cents tax on them and thus curtails the enjoyment they were looking for in their retirement. So the tax is falling upon those who have every right to expect some consideration from this government. Surely to goodness they will come to the realization pretty soon that they cannot expect it from the administration that we have at present.

The government's complete bungling of the housing situation over the years has forced many Canadians further and further away from the cities in search of reasonably priced land for their accommodation. Here again this tax will fall directly upon them. I had a letter just the other day from a constituent who pointed out that he had to travel 80 miles a day to and from his place of employment. If you figure 20 miles on a gallon of gas, it just shows how much extra money he will have to spend on getting to and from his place of employment.

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Patterson: Surely to goodness you have the competence to figure it out in your head.

Mr. Corbin: Say it.

Mr. Patterson: As we consider this particular aspect, we realize that this measure will not conserve gasoline, if that is the reason for the imposition of this tax. I do not believe it is. I believe it is just a matter of getting some more money. If there is any justification in the claim that has been advanced that this tax will conserve gas, let me point out that it will not conserve gasoline because that man will still have to drive to and from work, but he will have that much less with which to buy food for his family. So the whole situation is ridiculous.

We find now that people are being forced, because of government policy—the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) is here in the House tonight and I am sure he realizes this—and because people will have to move farther and farther away from their place of employment in order to find accommodation, to become more dependent upon energy in the form of gasoline. So this tax will fall upon them in a very real sense.

It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to talk cavalierly about people cutting down on their driving and switching to public transportation, but this has no relevance to Canadians who live out in the fringe areas of the cities. Here we come to another area of hardship imposed on the people of this nation, that is, the lack of protective and efficient rapid transit systems in our cities. Some may say that this is not relevant to the bill before us, but it certainly is because the minister and the government said, "Let them find other means of transportation". But there is no other form of transportation. An automobile today is not a luxury; it is an absolute necessity.

Mr. Herbert: It depends on what you drive.

Mr. Patterson: I did not hear that interjection.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You did not miss much.

Mr. Patterson: I do not worry about them. I am saying there is no other mode of transportation, and these people will have to use their automobiles and will have to use gasoline. So the minister comes along now and says, "Too bad, folks, you are using too much gasoline to drive back and forth, you will have to walk now". This places him in a position beyond reason altogether, and the imposition of his tax will add an additional burden on the people.

I have in my hand a document which I received in the mail entitled "Notes for a Speech by the Hon. Herb Gray, P.C. M.P. to a meeting of the Ottawa Kiwanis Club, Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, Friday, July 4, 1975". I would like the privilege of putting a paragraph or two on the record. It reads:

The Minister of Finance stated the purposes of the excise tax are to encourage conservation of petroleum energy and to provide additional government revenues needed to make up the deficit in the program to cushion eastern Canada against the burden of paying the full world price for the oil it has to import—

As a conservation device, the new excise tax in unrealistic and is also unfair to millions of Canadians. It implies a government view that Canadians who use their cars to travel to work, for essential family purposes like food shopping and visits to physicians, can turn to alternative forms of public transit instead.

By allowing a rebate of the tax to those using cars for so called commercial purposes (basically those who can deduct the cost as a business expense) the government is implying that all other use has elements of frivolity and be cut down easily or that rapid transit can be a realistic substitute for it. There may be some element of discretionary use which can be reduced—people can cut down perhaps on pure pleasure trips and the recreational use of snowmobiles and boats. But for millions of Canadians who have little or no opportunity for this type of activity because of their already hard pressed incomes, there are no alternatives to continue using their cars as before and therefore to paying the tax.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Stay home and drink wine.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is a great platform. You can run on that one.

Mr. Patterson: For the edification of the minister I would like to quote further from this statement. The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) said:

Contrast this with the transportation policy in the election platform of a year ago. In it were a number of clearly spelled out commitments to specific federal government action—action to bring about the speedy development of urban rapid transit.

However, the government's recent transportation policy document did not even say (as it might have) that the government continues to hold to these commitments, but has reluctantly come to the view they would have to be carried out over a longer period of time.

Where is the 100 per cent support for the imposition of this tax to which reference was made in debate a short time ago?

Mr. Epp: Whose statement did you read from?

Mr. Patterson: It was a statement by the hon. member for Windsor West.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Patterson: By the way, talking about rapid transit, may I say that during the election campaign I was amazed to read in the paper or hear over the news a statement by the right hon. Prime Minister, who said that a rapid transit system would be implemented through Fraser Valley, B.C.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Run by beavers.

Mr. Patterson: I was reminded of the statement he made right in this House that he would do everything he possibly could to help his friend—

An hon. Member: Gerry Pringle.

Mr. Patterson: The gentleman whom I had the privilege of dethroning in the last election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: The Prime Minister said that he would do everything he possibly could to help his friend in Fraser Valley East. I suppose that was a promise pulled out of thin air, and I do not believe there was ever any intention to implement that policy. I must say that the Prime Minister's friend has gone to his reward.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I should point out to him that we are now discussing Bill C-66, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

● (2130)

Mr. Patterson: I am conscious of that fact, and I am talking about the Prime Minister of Canada making the statement that he would put in a rapid transit system in my riding to facilitate travel, and the ministers are now saying that people have to go to that type of operation in order to conserve energy and not to use automobiles. With all due deference, I would think this is very relevant to the issue we are debating.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: In passing I wish to point out that the gentleman to whom the Prime Minister made reference has gone to his reward, or come to his reward, because like all good Liberals who were defeated, he is finding a job provided by the government, as are some of the others who were appointed just recently.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Oh, oh!

[Mr. Patterson.]

Mr. Patterson: There is my hon. friend over there again. It is good to hear his voice even though he does not say anything.

In his budget speech the minister referred to the fact that even with a 10 cents tax per gallon added on, Canadians still pay less for their gas than people in countries like France, where the price is $2; Tokyo, where it is $1.80; London and Geneva where it is $1.70; and Bonn and Stockholm where it is $1.60. What in the world has that to do with the price of gas in Canada?

Mr. Kempling: It's 15 cents in Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Patterson: I cannot see any relevance in those references.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Oh, oh!

Mr. Patterson: We hear again from our friend, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi. We are glad to hear from him even though he makes no sense.

If Canada were a small nation like the ones referred to by the minister where even on our old 50 mile per hour trains we could get from one end of the country to the other in eight hours or so, I am sure Canadians would get by with a 10 cents per gallon increase, but none of those countries have a 300 mile per hour train, and the fact is that those countries are so small that one can go anywhere in them in a very short period of time.

I had the privilege of going over to Marville, France, some years ago. I wanted to see a friend, and I asked a question of the officers in charge. I asked them if my friend was there, and they said that he was over in Holland for the weekend. Later I went back again and asked if my friend was around. I was told that he was in Spain for the weekend. Here we have a reference to the price of oil in countries where people can go wherever they want in a very few hours, whereas in Canada hundreds and thousands of miles are involved.

This tax will not conserve gasoline. It will not make Canadians cut down their use of the automobile, simply because they must travel that way. This tax will further increase the inflationary spiral. Now that we are supposed to wrestle inflation to the ground, the minister slaps on another tax which will add perhaps 1½ percentage points to the cost of living. I wonder if that is the kind of rationale the minister is accustomed to using. The tremendous increase in the cost of living has been pointed out by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). In other countries the inflationary spiral is declining, but at a time when in Canada the rate is increasing the minister imposes a new 10 cents tax on gasoline.

What effect will this have on wage demands? If workers have to pay an extra 10 cents per gallon for gas to get to work, they will say that they need higher incomes and that they need to go on strike to get them or they will lose ground. So there is a pressure exerted for higher wage settlements.

This tax will place an increased load of work upon businessmen. Those who are using their automobiles are to receive rebates. How much more work will they have to do? How much added cost will there be for these people? They are overloaded now with work they are doing for the government. Right across the country they are saying they are doing much work for nothing because the government is imposing this and that, and requiring forms. These people are spending much of their time doing work which does not increase their income one cent, but it adds to their cost of operation.

If this tax is not for conservation, the government says it is to subsidize the price of gasoline. My leader and my colleagues have already placed our position on the record. While all parties have agreed that there should be one price for gasoline across the country, there are different ways in which this can be done.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): How would you do it?

Mr. Patterson: We have equalization taxes. Western Canadians are saying that they are already paying millions of dollars to equalization funds, and they are not complaining, but this is something which should be borne by all taxpayers and by society as a whole instead of having the burden of responsibility placed upon those who must use their automobiles for transportation in order to make a living.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: If the minister wants more money, why does he not cancel, for example, Information Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: If he wants to save money and use it for other purposes, why in the world is he trying to set up Petro-Can?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: I believe he knows as well as anyone else that private enterprise can operate a business better than can a government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: What about the continued growth in the public service, in spite of the fact that the government says it will reduce it or hold the line? What about unemployment insurance deficits? The government claims it will solve the unemployment problem, but it is because of government policies that unemployment rates are as high as they are. This is another problem the government has created, and for which it is now seeking some solution.

The amendment introduced by my leader certainly should be seriously considered by the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: The hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) said that we do not want to make any decisions, and that we do not want to do anything; but we do not want to impose a further burden upon the working people of this country. We do not want to impose a further burden upon those who thought they would be able to enjoy their leisure years travelling around and seeing Canada, beautiful as it is. It is because we do want to do something that we believe the government ought to accept this amendment, give this bill at least a six months' hoist, and take another look at it.

Perhaps the government can come up with some measure which is far more reasonable and far more equitable as far as the whole nation is concerned.

● (2140)

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, we have had one or two rather interesting speeches this evening.

Mr. Cullen: Two out of three is not bad!

Mr. Blackburn: I heard, for the first time, the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo), who left me with the distinct impression that most of the poverty in this country is in northern Canada. There is no doubt that in northern Canada a great many people are suffering, principally because of the policies of the government.

We are speaking about Bill C-66 tonight. I do not know why people have to be penalized in their pocketbooks if they go to the riding of Skeena to live, or go to the Northwest Territories, or the Yukon, or northern Ontario, or any other part of northern Canada. I do not know why they have to be penalized to help develop the frontiers of this country. Yet the hon. member for Skeena, while she was very sincere in her remarks and said she was not happy with the 10 cents per gallon increase in the price of gasoline, did not really drive this point home.

One of the major weaknesses in the development of this country is that we do not have a government that will look to the north, and the northwest, and the northeast, and say that we have to put people into those parts of the country and therefore we must make special provisions for them to settle there without being penalized financially.

I should like to remind the hon. member for Skeena that in the province of Ontario where we are supposedly all millionaires—thanks to the Ontario Progressive Conservative government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn: —there are over 350,000 families, not individuals but families, who tonight are living below the poverty line. That is a despicable thing considering the wealth of the province.

Here we have Bill C-66, and the amendment to hoist it for six months, that is again going to put a burden—not on me because I have a big income—bigger than I could get when I was teaching school although their salaries are coming up rather rapidly—that 10 cents per gallon is not going to hurt me. Who is it going to hurt? It is going to hurt average Canadians, those making $8,000 or $9,000 a year, or up to $12,000 or $13,000 a year. That is where the burden is going to fall. It is going to fall equally in monetary terms, but when it comes to coping with the problems of living today it does not fall equally. It falls in a most unequal way.

In trying to justify this budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said repeatedly that the main reason for the tax was to acquire further revenues. We know on this side of the House, and they know on the other side of the House, that this is not the major purpose. The major purpose is to work out some kind of common national petroleum policy.

Mr. Gillies: The major purpose is to penalize the poor.

Mr. Blackburn: As the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) says, its main purpose is to penalize the poor. I will not say it is the major purpose, but unfortunately that is what happens when this kind of tax is imposed.

Take physicians, for example, I do not oppose the fact that physicians have a write-off on their cars and an exemption if they use their cars in their day to day work. We know, however, that a lot of doctors make very few house calls today. They do make some, but usually the patient goes to the surgery or the hospital. Yet doctors can deduct this 10 cents per gallon, and they can claim a high depreciation on their cars. If a doctor lives in a large city and is not ashamed to drive a Cadillac or a Lincoln and changes his car every year, the amount of depreciation is immense. We have had that under successive Liberal and Conservative governments since income tax was first introduced.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That was in 1917.

Mr. Blackburn: Right. But what about the working man or woman today who has to drive to work? A car is an absolute necessity in most of our cities, particularly the middle sized cities. It is also a necessity in rural areas where people might have to drive 15 or 20 miles each way to go to work. But they neither get a write-off for that ten cents a gallon excise tax nor a depreciation allowance on their automobiles. I dare say they put a lot more miles on per day, however, than the physician who goes from his home to his office.

When is this kind of thing going to change? When are we going to realize that while we are not all equal when it comes to ability, or ambition, or intelligence, we are equal before the law and deserve the same kind of treatment based on equality when it comes to taxation? The problem today is that the Liberal government still has not come to grips with this kind of equality.

We have talked about how this tax will affect home heating fuels, and we realize that natural gas is going up in price. We are living in a very high inflationary period and yet we have in this budget and this bill an inflationary spiral built in. I do not know why the Minister of Finance would bring in a bill at this time that would increase the cost of living by about two percentage points. We are paying $2.20 for a pound of bacon, and over a dollar for a dozen of eggs, and these are basic commodities. A modest apartment in the city of Brantford for a family with one or two children cannot be had for less than $150 or $160 per month.

We have unemployment, and certainly this bill will not help that problem. By next January we will probably have in the neighbourhood of 900,000 or maybe even a million people out of work in this country.

What does it all add up to, Madam Speaker? We were expecting the budget and this bill in particular to relieve the inflationary spiral, or at least reduce it, and we were also looking for measures to put Canadians back to work. In this bill we are to get neither. We have before us a typically hodge-podge, band aid approach—"If you can solve a little part of the problem now, wait for another three or four months and see what happens".

That is not the way to approach the problem. We need to plan our onshore economy, that is, the economy of this country, in such a way that we do not suffer from these ups and downs, from periods in which there is high inflation and high unemployment at the same time, and from periods of boom followed by periods of bust. There is no indication that Bill C-66 will even out the business cycle of this country. I am not talking about the effects of offshore inflation, or of offshore foreign economies. I am talking about this country, about our problems in urbanization, problems to do with rents, mortgages and housing. This budget does little for housing.

I want to address myself to other aspects of Bill C-66. This bill actually touches on the nub of the problem confronting this country. We are trying to fight inflation but, at the same time, we are adding to it. We are forcing, not just a few Canadians, not just wealthy Canadians, not just middle income Canadians, but all Canadians, the great majority of whom are low and middle income earners, to pay more for a commodity which comes from our country's own soil, which is produced by Canadian workers, and which is largely financed, and could be entirely financed if we went the right way about it, by Canadians.

The opposition party to my right and the Liberal party have always drawn across our path that good old red herring that the inflation rate of Great Britain is 25 per cent, of Italy, 17 per cent, and so on. The people of Canada are not buying this argument any more. If we had to rely on Italy or Great Britain for our oil, O.K.; what could we do but pay their prices? But we have the oil; we have great potential for oil in the tar sands. We need not pay $2 per gallon for gasoline. We need not pay what we pay right now. Members talk about what they must pay in northern Canada. I assure you, Madam Speaker, that in southern Ontario, where gasoline prices supposedly are lowest, you will pay between 78 and 82 cents a gallon, depending on where you buy.

An hon. Member: You should see the prices on Highway 401.

Mr. Blackburn: The hon. member refers to prices on Highway 401. No doubt those prices are high, but perhaps you could drive a few miles off the highway and buy cheaper gasoline.

The difficulty is that we don't know how to handle our own resources. We can develop them, yes, if we beg foreign corporations to do this. The problem lies in the distribution of our national resources. The government's excuse for imposing this excise tax is that it supposedly wants to conserve oil, whereas, in reality, it wants to create revenue; and I say the people of Canada are being had. I think the people know it.

I have been a member of this House for going on five years; I know many members have been here longer. Granted this is a political forum, this is the place to declaim and to exude confidence. I have always been under the impression that the Liberal party thinks of itself as representing both God and the majority of Canadian voters. I do not know much about God, but I remind my Liberal friends and adversaries in this House, you do not represent, electorally, the majority of Canadians. We, on my side, represent the majority of Canadian voters. You should keep that in mind when you bring in bills like Bill C-66. You seem to think that you can bring in a bill three years before an election, stuff it down our throats, and then feel justified in being angry with us for holding up its passage. You accuse us of blocking the legislation.

Is it any wonder the people of Canada are becoming disillusioned with the electoral and parliamentary process? Is it any wonder that we are debating at length this issue? I don't care what you call it; I will stay here all next month, if necessary, and all September, if I think I can hold up this bill, or if we can pass the amendment to hoist this bill for six months. And when it comes forward again in the House, we will want to hoist it for another six months, if possible.

It is an iniquitous bill. It is unfair, and is unfair to people that you, on your side of the House, represent; and do not forget it.

Hon. members opposite try to leave the impression that they are not getting flak from their constituents. Let me tell you something: they are getting more flak from their constituents than we are from ours. But they will not stand up to admit it. They have to kow-tow to the cabinet.

An hon. Member: Pure demagoguery.

Mr. Blackburn: That is what that great solidarity of their means. They cannot stand up and really say what they want to say on the bill.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I wonder if we can confirm if we are to consider this bill tomorrow, as there was some question about this earlier today.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I understand that we are to consider this bill tomorrow, subject to discussions which my colleague, the House leader, may have with the House leaders of the other parties at ten o'clock tomorrow morning, in which case, if there is any mutual consent, there might be a change.

Mr. Paproski: We can stay here to the end of September, if you want to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought we were to consider the recess tomorrow.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION—ALLEGED LEAK OF CABINET DOCUMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, the subject I am proposing for debate on the adjournment motion relates to a question I raised in the House on May 28. Then I requested some information from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) regarding an incident that took place on May 6, 1975, when a secret cabinet document was exposed to officials of the National Indian Brotherhood and subsequently found its way into the hands of the national press.

I raised this matter originally because the occurrence I spoke of was similar to one of about two years earlier. The earlier incident took place on October 5, 1973. The situation was identical, and resulted in the firing of a senior official, Mr. Walter Rudniki of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, his secretary, and other officials of the department.

May I enumerate the events involved in these two incidents? In December, 1974, a meeting was held between representatives of the National Indian Brotherhood, and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, for the purpose of reviewing Indian housing. At that meeting the Brotherhood submitted their proposal for a new housing policy, and the commitment to the consultation process was re-affirmed to the National Indian Brotherhood at that time.

On September 20, 1973, a meeting was held between the National Assembly of the Native Council of Canada and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. At this meeting the National Assembly of the Native Council presented their proposals on Metis housing and obtained commitments to a consultation process. Mr. Leseaux, deputy minister, wrote to the National Indian Brotherhood committing the Minister to a consultation process subsequent to the meeting of December 1974.

In March two representatives of the National Indian Brotherhood met with the minister to discuss Mr. Leseaux's letter of January 15. During this meeting the National Indian Brotherhood asked for funding for a consultation process on housing with their provincial associations, and insisted on further meetings to discuss the housing proposals in detail. The minister agreed that no action would be taken to place the housing proposals before cabinet until there were further meetings with the National Indian Brotherhood. This is almost identical to the commitment made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford).

A draft cabinet document was prepared, mostly in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and was ready by April 2, 1975. It was reviewed between the minister and his senior officials and apparently approved by him. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) signed the original of this cabinet document and forwarded it to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) with a covering letter dated April 3. In this letter he indicates that both ministers had discussed the document the previous week, presumably an earlier draft, that some revisions had been made as a result, and suggests that both ministers should meet again to review the manner in which the presentation to cabinet should be made.

In the case of the Metis housing draft policy, it had not been reviewed with the minister or signed by him, although he had a copy at the time of the consultation meeting on October 5, 1973.

On May 6, 1975, a consultation meeting was held including representatives of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and the National Indian Brotherhood. The representatives from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development were Arthur Kroeger, the deputy minister, Peter Leseaux, the assistant deputy minister, and Bob Connelly.

The Central Mortgage and Housing representatives were Alain Nantel, vice-president, and Sam Cormier. There were 11 representatives from the National Indian Brotherhood, including George Manual, the president. At this meeting the provisions of the draft cabinet document were reviewed in detail and copies were distributed to the representatives of the National Indian Brotherhood to take away for study. The deputy minister of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development chaired the meeting.

The draft proposals on Metis housing were similarly distributed to the Metis consulting group on October 5, 1973, by a junior member of CMHC who presumably thought he was acting with the sanction of the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the minister. In this case, however, the papers did not leave the room.

The situation currently is that the National Indian Brotherhood have rejected many of the proposals in the joint Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development policy draft. The National Indian Brotherhood object to placing their housing needs at the tender mercies of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation priorities which, in the past year, have done little or nothing for Metis housing. The National Indian Brotherhood suspect that the proposals are simply a device for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to dilute responsibility for future failures throughout the public service so that they, themselves, will not be such a large target.

Indian housing policy is still under development. The question which is relevant now is whether this will continue to be done in consultation with the National Indian Brotherhood or whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will try to force an unacceptable housing policy down the throats of the Indians. He should at least be prepared to present the Indian point of view to cabinet.

[Mr. Oberle.]

In terms of the parallels in the Indian and Metis consultation process, there are a number of interesting questions that remain unanswered. First, can the incident involving the joint review by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and the National Indian Brotherhood of a draft cabinet document on Indian housing on May 6 be viewed as a new departure by the government from its former excessive preoccupation with the confidentiality of such documents?

Secondly, if the government has not introduced a new policy with respect to the preparation of cabinet submissions, is it contemplating disciplinary action against officials of the Indian affairs department and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

If such action is not being contemplated, could the government explain the difference in the consultation process that has just taken place on Indian housing and the consultation process on Metis housing that was authorized by the previous minister and the president of the Central Mortgage and Housing in September, 1973? The issue here is both consultation and justice.

The late Lester B. Pearson, on October 25, 1963, stated the policy that that government and subsequent Liberal governments would follow in the area of cabinet secrecy. He laid out two points that would have to be followed, both of which were ignored in the first and second instances that I have outlined here tonight. As reported at page 4044 of Hansard for October 25, 1963, the right hon. gentleman said:

> The first of the new requirements is to inform the person involved when his security or reliability is in doubt and may have to involve his dismissal.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, in replying to this question I should perhaps point out at the outset that a document does not become a cabinet document until it has been approved by the responsible minister, signed by him or her, and forwarded to the Privy Council office. The document being distributed at the meeting with the National Indian Brotherhood is not of this character. Each copy was clearly marked "Draft—for discussion purposes only".

The action taken by departmental officials in distributing the draft document had been explicitly authorized in advance by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan). It was the objective of the minister and departmental officials to make the meeting as productive as possible, and for this purpose they thought they should take Indian representatives fully into their confidence. It was also anticipated that, after examining the draft document, the National Indian Brotherhood would wish to suggest changes and improvements in it.

Discussions with the National Indian Brotherhood have not yet been concluded. The nature of any proposals that the Minister of Indian Affairs may decide to submit to cabinet therefore remain undertermined. In view of the explanation I have just given I think the hon. member will agree that the issue of a release of a secret cabinet document does not arise in this case.

Mr. Oberle: Would the hon. lady allow a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. There can be no question, point of privilege, or point of order at this time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS TO QUEBEC MINISTER OF JUSTICE CONCERNING TREATMENT OF DR. MORGENTALER

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Madam Speaker, this matter arises from a question that I asked the Minister of Justice some time ago in which I requested that he intercede in the case of Dr. Henry Morgentaler of Montreal. In addition, and perhaps more important, I asked that consideration be given under section 680 of the Criminal Code to granting a full pardon, or that at the very least exceptional parole be granted in the case of Dr. Morgentaler.

I raised this point not out of any sense of partisanship or out of any differences we may have in this House over the question of abortion. I raised it because of the minister's admission—through the amendments which were introduced in the House today and promised a short time ago, amendments on which I congratulate the hon. gentleman, removing, as they do, what he calls an anomaly in the Criminal Code which allows a court of appeal to superimpose its own verdict over that of a jury without referring the case back for trial—that there was a situation which needed to be remedied.

The fact is that Dr. Morgentaler, regardless of the view one might take about the case, continues to sit in jail in Quebec as a direct result of this anomaly. And when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) says to the House that he is guilty, the hon. gentleman—I say with the greatest respect to him—shows a misunderstanding of the traditions of English justice. When a jury of one's peers, not once, but twice, acquits someone who comes before it, it has rendered a judgment in that community, and the person concerned is not only entitled to the benefit of that verdict, he is entitled to the position which it gives him among the rest of the citizens.

In this particular case, such was not to be. No special consideration has been given to the fact that in spite of the government's admission that there is an anomaly in the law, and that we cannot permit a situation to prevail in which a court of appeal is able to superimpose its own judgment as to facts over that of a jury, no provision has been made for exceptional parole, or a pardon, or a new trial under Section 617 of the code.

This, I think, is tragic for all of us who respect the law, who respect the ancient democratic process which has been so important in British and Canadian jurisprudence, namely, that one can be tried, not by one's superiors, not by the elite, not by judges, but by 12 good men and true who can decide on the facts. This is what is being denied in this case, and it is fundamental to our system of justice that the situation should not prevail. As long as we allow this man Morgentaler to remain in jail we are denying our democratic heritage, and that is a mark of shame upon this government.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, rather remarkably the hon. member's question seems to indicate that he is completely unaware of the fact that the provincial attorneys general are responsible for the administration of justice. That responsibility, of course, includes all matters relating to investigating breaches of the criminal laws, the laying of charges, and appeals by the Crown. I can only suggest, therefore, that if the hon. member is in fact serious in asking his question, he should not try to confuse this issue in the minds of the public by suggesting the federal government is in any way involved in the case, but should direct his query to the attorney general of the province concerned.

The hon. member also seems to have some difficulty in remembering that, in keeping with the traditions of this House, cases before the courts are not discussed. The reasons are clear and hardly need elaboration, even for the hon. member opposite. But I would suggest to him that, in the interest of justice he keeps them in mind.

I should like to add for my hon. friend, and this is the first time I have the opportunity of saying this, that the people of Quebec have had their fill of those who intervene in the administration of justice. I can say that in the minds of the majority of Quebecers, Dr. Morgentaler defied the law. He bragged about have done do; he paid a just price for having thus shown contempt for our laws, as he boasted of doing. My hon. friend forgets that thousands of human beings disappeared because of the illegal acts of Dr. Morgentaler. May I bring my excellent friend to his senses and tell him that Quebecers feel that the administration of justice is a matter for the Quebec government; the vast majority approve that decision, though I recognize that it may not coincide with the opinion of my hon. friend, whom I respect; but I must say I also respect the opinion of the majority of the Quebecers I represent here in the House of Commons, as well as all Canadians.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF STATUS OF SECUREX AND DISCHARGE OF OFFICERS BRUNET AND McLEERY TO JUDGE MARIN'S COMMISSION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova):) Madam Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is here tonight to take part in this debate. As he is well aware, many questions have been asked in committee and in this House up to this point about the pure injustice in the case of two former policemen, namely, Don McCleery and Gilles Brunet.

I understand that the Solicitor General has been preoccupied with other issues these days, including capital punishment. However, I am becoming annoyed with the apparent inability in this particular instance to take control over the situation and find out from the responsible officials of the RCMP the truth of the circumstances, background, and considerations that exist in the matter of Messrs. McCleery and Brunet. I would also be very interested in asking the Solicitor General at this point how many other such instances have come to the attention of his office since he assumed his portfolio. But we can perhaps pursue that at another time.

I would suggest to the Solicitor General, without going into excessive detail, that many of the problems in which McCleery and Brunet were unfortunate to find themselves were caused by a misunderstanding and arbitrary approach by certain RCMP officials in their particular case.

The minister was neither right nor very careful in his answer to me a couple of days ago when he said that McCleery and Brunet were before Judge Marin's commission, implying that the purpose for which they were there had to do with the issues I raised. In point of fact, as the Solicitor General will discover if the checks carefully, Brunet was never before Judge Marin. McCleery was, but his purpose, as I understand it, was to outline some of the deficiencies and injustices in the way in which members of the force were treated, presumably to prevent others being treated like he was. McCleery felt then, and must still feel, that it is a simple matter of justice that members of the RCMP be afforded protection and a chance to have a fair hearing and answer any charges made against them.

If the Solicitor General is as concerned with matters of conscience and philosophy as he maintains he is, and I believe he is, he should want the people of Canada to believe that he would be interested enough and have sufficient control over his department to make sure that this matter, which may be a continuing injustice, is resolved.

He ought to realize the paradox in expecting police officers to have the proper attitude for the rights of others and to uphold our laws when they themselves are not afforded the same rights as other Canadians in matters of fundamental protection for themselves.

I say to the minister sincerely that unfortunately it is becoming apparent that he is not running his department, that his department is running him. He is not giving the guidance and direction to the RCMP that a man in his position should. If there is any department of government that the people of Canada cannot afford to have running itself, it is this particular department over which the Solicitor General has jurisdiction.

I am further suggesting to the minister and to the House that the one reason Messrs. McCleary and Brunet were ultimately discharged—although no one has yet had the decency to give them their discharge papers, which I believe in itself is contrary to the RCMP Act—is that no one on the force would take the responsibility of issuing the proper orders to either one of these gentlemen to cease the so called activities which were used as a justification for their discharge.

To be more specific, when assistant commissioner Gorman, as he then was and still is, made his investigation which finally led to their discharge pursuant to section 173 of the RCMP Act, he first recommended that they be transferred. However, a series of events changed the attitude of the force and led to the unfortunate situation which now exists.

It is also interesting that, at the time of the investigation, assistant commissioner Gorman refused to give an order that these two officers should have had, if that indeed was to be a serious offence, to desist from any contact with Mitchell Bronfman. Mitchell Bronfman, by the way, was on occasion of some assistance, and may still be, to the security service division of the RCMP, a fact which the minister can easily determine if he wishes to check the proper records. But that is another story.

The national crime intelligence unit, which either lacks the basic understanding of the situation or did not interpret it properly, amassed a lot of information which was and is demonstrably false, unsupported and speculative, and will not stand up to any competent and impartial analysis.

The investigation concerned more than simply the alleged misconduct of Brunet and McCleery. It involved, among other things, the true status of Mitchell Bronfman. The investigation at times assumed almost a comic opera atmosphere. Superintendent Marcoux flew to British Columbia on a supposedly ultra secret mission to check into certain aspects, and I suppose he was quite perplexed when he came back to Ottawa when he received a call from Brunet asking him how the weather was in British Columbia.

I would think that even in an organization which, justifiably, is not known for having a sense of humour, this should have brought at least a smile to the officer's face, but apparently this was not the case judging from what happened as a result.

I suggest that up to the point that Gilles Brunet telephoned superintendent Marcoux on this occasion the worst that was slated for him was a transfer to Newfoundland—Grand Falls as a matter of fact—which apparently was going to be sufficiently distant from the baleful influence of his associate, Don McCleery, who was slated to be transferred at the same time to Moncton, New Brunswick.

However, because of Gilles Brunet's telephone call to see how the investigation was proceeding—an investigation which concerned him—and about Don McCleery about whom he had no word for weeks, because of the audacity of this simple act which was the only recourse he had under the circumstances, and he was understandably curious, I am suggesting that was one reason why what was supposed to be a transfer, and perhaps a rap on the knuckles, turned into a discharge from the force with tremendous consequences and implications for these men. I therefore feel responsible for directing questions to the minister on the status of the company which they are using as a vehicle, and which also involves Mitchell Bronfman.

I see you are indicating that my time is up, Madam Speaker, so I will finish briefly by suggesting to the Solicitor General that he make every effort to look into this matter on a more factual and detailed basis and, if possible, as soon as we come back in the fall—if we have a recess—arrange for these gentlemen to come before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to give their testimony and tell us their story.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, unfortunately I was only given notice of the hon. member's adjournment debate question at 6 p.m., and consequently I am not able to give him as complete an answer as I would like.

In any case I must tell him that this matter was first brought to my attention near the end of 1973. I was approached by the attorney for Securex as well as the attorneys for Messrs. McCleery and Brunet. Although I did not know and have never met Messrs. McCleery and Brunet, it appeared to me that they were seriously pursuing their grievance and that they wanted to clear their name. As a result, I immediately looked into the case and determined to see if anything could be done for the two officers who had been dismissed from the RCMP under section 173 of the RCMP regulations. I was told that these cases had been fully investigated and that nothing could be done.

When a new commissioner was appointed on January 1, 1974, I approached him to have these cases reviewed. He later replied to me that he was fully aware of these cases and that he saw no grounds for reversing the decision of the former commissioner, and in any case there was no legal basis to do so.

Later, in order to pursue all avenues, I sought an independent legal opinion to determine whether the dismissal of the two officers was fully legal and in accordance with all the statutes and regulations of the force. I received an opinion that the dismissals were legal, and I wrote to their attorneys to give them this information.

In the fall of 1974, Messrs. McCleery and Brunet brought their case before the Federal Court and I re-examined it completely once more. Later the members decided to withdraw their cases and no decision was made by the court.

I should point out that the RCMP have maintained time and again that Messrs. McCleery and Brunet were properly dismissed and that they were ready to go to court to defend their behaviour, that is, the behaviour of the administration.

During the last two weeks I was approached once more by one of the principals in Securex and his attorney, and asked to look into this case again. They alleged that they were losing certain contracts because of allegations made against them. I promised them that I would look into this case once more, and I am doing so at the present time.

I will also look into the point raised by the hon. member that the two members have not received their dismissal papers. The commissioner of the RCMP tells me furthermore that the RCMP has never made a recommendation against Securex.

The hon. member asked me if any other cases of this nature had ever come to my attention since I was appointed Solicitor General, and I must say yes, there have been cases of this nature, and it was for this reason that I established the Marin Commission to investigate the whole matter of discipline and related procedures within the RCMP. I must point out that the Marin Commission was not appointed to review individual cases but to review the entire disciplinary procedures, and we will expect a report in the fall.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

CABLEVISION—PROPOSED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON GRANTING JURISDICTION TO PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

Because the present imbroglio about jurisdiction over telecommunications threatens to lead to conflicts, the consequences of which could be serious for the country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the government immediately order that a federal-provincial conference be held on the constitution for the purpose of sharing definitively provincial and federal jurisdiction over telecommunications.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTED DISCONTINUANCE OF ATTEMPTS TO TRANSFER CRUDE OIL FROM LARGE TANKER TO SMALLER ONE AT HALIFAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43. Inasmuch as the renewed attempt by Imperial Oil to effect a transfer of the crude oil cargo from the Esso GOA to the Imperial St. Clair at the entrance of Halifax Harbour today poses unprecedented and unnecessary risk to the environment, made all the more real by their failure to effect such transfer yesterday under almost ideal conditions; and, in light of the imminent exhaustion of existing fuel energy supplies which will bring about real havoc in all segments of the economy of Atlantic Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave):

That this House instruct the responsible authorities to bring an end to this very dangerous exercise and instruct the principle negotiators to return to the table with the Atlantic Pilots for the purpose of resolving the very narrow 3 to 4 per cent differences between the two parties.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the motion to be presented. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROPOSED CHANGE IN EXECUTIVE STRUCTURE OF CORPORATION TO ACHIEVE EFFICIENCY IN OPERATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, in view of the collateral matters being revealed during the course of Chief Justice Estey's inquiry into the financial affairs of Air Canada and the increasing evidence that the top executives of our national air carrier are either unable or unwilling to follow the enabling statutory guidelines which set out Air Canada's specific authorization and terms of reference for doing business as a Crown corporation authorized by this Parliament, the latest such instance, Mr. Speaker, being a confidential agreement with the Tourism Minister of Lebanon for the promotion of Air Canada in that country, a matter which has diplomatic overtones, the unusual nature of which is well illustrated by the quote from John McGill, Vice-President of Air Canada, who allegedly said: "I don't understand the mores and morals of the Middle East"—obviously, Mr. Speaker, it is not only the Middle East that the executives of Air Canada do not understand—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport, entirely apart from the report of Chief Justice Estey which will be tabled in due course, that there is now sufficient evidence that the minister make immediate changes at the top level executive structure of Air Canada to assure that management conducts the airline's affairs in a way that will be businesslike, and within the statutory authority granted by Parliament and in accordance with accepted international procedures, so that Air Canada may be a credit to Canada in every respect.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE BY WEST GERMANY TO BRAZIL OF NUCLEAR MATERIALS—ADEQUACY OF SAFEGUARDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State, in the absence of the Secretary of State, relating to the sale being negotiated by West Germany to Brazil of a very large package of nuclear facilities, materials, reactors, enrichment facilities and separation plants. In view of the controversial nature of this sale and safeguards surrounding it, can the Acting Secretary of State or the Prime Minister say whether the government of Canada has inquired from its friendly ally, West Germany, what the safeguards are relating to this arrangement?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member wishes to direct his question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, not the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think the Leader of the Opposition inadvertently directed his question to the wrong minister, but I will answer it. I gather it was directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. The government has had some discussions with Germany about co-operation in applying safeguards. We have had very good co-operation on that.

Mr. Stanfield: My supplementary question is directed to the same minister or to the Prime Minister. Has the government of Canada, through its responsible minister, whoever he may happen to be, inquired from our friendly and presumably responsive ally, West Germany, as to the safeguards surrounding this contract for nuclear facilities and materials?

Mr. Sharp: It is my understanding that the German government believes it is establishing safeguards that are in full accord with international standards.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I am being offensive in asking the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to answer my question. Has the government of Canada inquired as to specifically what these safeguards are that West Germany proposes for this arrangement? I ask this question particularly because the United States has protested against those safeguards being indequate. I therefore ask whether the government of Canada has even inquired as to what specifically these safeguards are and, having obtained this information, has it made any comment on these safeguards to our ally, West Germany?

Mr. Sharp: I think I did attempt to answer this question. The government of Canada has had discussions with the government of Germany about the safeguards that it does apply on the supply of its technology to all countries, including Brazil. We have no reason to believe that they are not fully in accordance with international standards.

ADMISSION BY EXXON TO UNITED STATES SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES—SUGGESTION CANADA REQUEST COPIES OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since Imperial Oil of Canada, in conjunction with the hearings of a committee in the United States senate, acknowledged recently that they had given more than $1 million to three political parties in Canada, and since Exxon, the parent firm in the United States, has acknowledged that millions of dollars were given by them to political parties in Italy for the express purpose of obtaining tax concessions and other legal benefits, would the Prime Minister request our embassy in the United States to obtain for Canada all documents and testimony on this subject from the U.S. senate subcommittee looking into multinational corporations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will gladly relate that question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

DONATIONS BY IMPERIAL OIL TO POLITICAL PARTIES—REQUEST LIBERAL PARTY MAKE PUBLIC AMOUNT RECEIVED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Considering that a senior official of Imperial Oil of Canada acknowledged at a recent stockholders meeting in Toronto that his company has been giving money for a number of years to political parties in Canada supporting this company's political philosophy, and considering that the Election Expenses Act came into force only last summer, would the Prime Minister undertake on behalf of this party to make public the total amount of money the Liberal party has received from Imperial Oil and other oil companies during the period from 1968 to 1975?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have answered that type of question many times and indicated that it was in order to ensure that present and future donations were known that the Liberal party brought in the election expenses legislation a few years ago.

Some hon. Members: Parliament did that.

Mr. Trudeau: Of course; the first version of it was blocked by the opposition, but finally we got a version through about a year or so ago. We do not intend to apply this legislation retroactively.

IMPERIAL OIL—SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO FINANCIAL OPERATIONS IN VIEW OF PARENT COMPANY'S ADMISSION OF POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I was asking the Prime Minister if he would follow the example of the Social Credit Party, which stated yesterday in a straightforward way the amount of money it had received in the past from Imperial Oil Company. However, in view of the fact that Senator Church's committee in the United States discovered from internal Exxon documents that political contributions were covered up in Italy by charging them to bookkeeping accounts labelled "fuel to power plants, natural gas imports, licences, taxes and deferred tax payments," and considering that Imperial Oil has only paid in taxes to the Government of Canada in excess of $12 billion in revenue in the past five years, an effective tax rate of only 6 per cent, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he would inquire under the Inquiries Act and investigate all the financial operations of Imperial Oil of Canada during the past five years.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I fail to see why the Leader of the New Democratic Party is talking about what happened in Italy. I suppose he could talk about what happened in ten or twenty other countries where Exxon operates.

Mr. Broadbent: It is a multinational, remember.

Mr. Trudeau: But if the hon. member wants to know about the Canadian practice, we answer across the floor of the House.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REASONS FOR HIGH PRICE OF SUGAR

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Considering that the price of sugar is not subjected to any control in Canada, and because unexpected price fluctuations of this commodity tend to create confusion in the minds of the people concerning the true role the government should play in this area, could the minister indicate to the House, for the information of consumers, the reason behind the price instability of this commodity?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am taking this question as notice and will refer it to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, so that he may reply to it when he returns to the House.

OLYMPIC GAMES

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY POSTMASTER GENERAL CONCERNING FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Postmaster General in Halifax that the federal government may have a moral obligation to cover any deficit incurred by the 1976 Olympics, would the Prime Minister clarify whether this view reflects current government policy with respect to the Olympic financing needs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the moral obligations of the Postmaster General are those the government states in its policy, but I have not seen the statement of the Postmaster General. He is a very moral man, and he pleads that way in cabinet.

Mr. Baldwin: When was morality ever related to the Liberal Party?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: In view of the reference of the Prime Minister to morals, would he inform the House if indeed he shares the view that there is a federal moral obligation to finance the debt, and if so, how does he reconcile this position with his former "inretractability?"

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Try that word again.

An hon. Member: It is a medical term for "retract".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not have to reconcile anything with my intractability.

Mr. Stevens: As the Postmaster General qualified his comment by stating that the deficit would only be covered if a majority of Canadians supported the action, would the Prime Minister indicate how such majority support might be determined? Is it planned to have a referendum and if so, as this is a matter of financing, would the Prime Minister also hold a referendum on the ten cents per gallon gasoline tax and see if a majority of Canadians support that?

AIR CANADA

ALLEGED DEAL WITH LEBANESE MINISTER OF TOURISM—SUGGESTED QUESTIONABLE OPERATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I would address my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the latest evidence that Air Canada has again moved into a quasi-diplomatic area by virtue of a recent promotional arrangement with the Lebanese minister of tourism, Mr. Khanamarian does the Prime Minister not agree that our airline is being operated in a bizarre and questionable way outside, in some respects, the authority given to Air Canada by the statutes passed by parliament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the member is apparently referring to some evidence which is being given before Judge Estey at a commission of inquiry. I have not been following that, but I do have confidence that Judge Estey will do his job properly.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for his answer. I also have great confidence that Judge Estey will do a very good job in his inquiry. I should like to put a supplementary. In view of the secrecy involved whereby Mr. Khanamarian's position as Air Canada's representative was not to be made known either to his cabinet colleagues or to the rest of the business community in Lebanon, would the Prime Minister not agree also that Air Canada's position in this matter would justifiably be looked upon as dishonest and there would be resulting diplomatic repercussions, since this rather shoddy deal involves our national air carrier and could bring disrepute not only to the Minister of Transport but to his cabinet colleagues, particularly the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I fail to see what line the hon. member is following. There has been a request for an inquiry into this matter. I think the minister anticipated the request and announced that an inquiry would be held. The opposition is frequently asking for a commission to inquire into many things. We have set up the inquiry. Let us see what it says. I do not think the hon. member should be conducting a parallel inquiry.

FISHERIES

REASON FOR EXPLORATORY FISHING FOR SWORDFISH—POSSIBLE LIFTING IMPORT BAN ON SWORDFISH BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the tender call for the charter of two vessels by the federal fisheries and marine service for exploratory fishing for swordfish during the months of July and August, could the minister indicate the reason for this exploratory work and inform the House if the United States food and drug directorate has lifted the import ban on swordfish as imposed some four years ago?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): In the absence of my colleague the Minister of State in charge of Fisheries, I will take notice of that question and inform the hon. member.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question. In view of the economic importance of this industry at this time to Atlantic Canada, and in view of the tremendous economic difficulties being faced by the fishing industry, in Atlantic Canada, would the minister again contact her counterpart in the United States in the hope of reactivating this important industry, since the Japanese and certain European countries are still catching and eating swordfish without any obvious effect on their health?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must know that the Minister of State (Fisheries) is at the present time trying to devise a policy and help out the restructuring of that industry. The concerns of the hon. member are certainly being taken into account in that over-all restructuring of the industry. I will, however, take this matter up with my colleague.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

MACKENZIE HIGHWAY—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CUTBACK OF PROJECT WILL NOT INTERFERE WITH NATIVE TRAINING

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the minister's statement in the House on Wednesday, July 15 regarding the slowdown of the construction of the Mackenzie highway and the speeding up of construction of the Dempster, Carcross-Shagway and Liard highways, can the minister assure the House that the construction of the Mackenzie highway will proceed in such a manner that there will be no cutback in the native training in that area?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this is one of our major concerns. We are doing our utmost to assure that, if there is any phasing down on the Mackenzie highway, there will be opportunities available on the Liard highway to take up the slack for the native people.

OLYMPIC GAMES

POSSIBILITY OF QUEBEC REQUEST FOR AID IN FINANCING DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one put by the hon. member for York-Simcoe to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of statements made by Quebec Municipal Affairs Minister Victor Goldbloom to the effect that the province will attempt to renegotiate with the federal government further financial aid for the purpose of reducing the ever-mounting Olympic deficit, can the minister advise this House if the government has been approached in this regard?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker.

COMMEMORATIVE GOLD COINS—STEPS TO PROTECT PUBLIC FROM CONFUSION AND COUNTERFEITING

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General? As there will be some confusion, owing to the minting of two similar gold coins bearing different weights of gold, and as there are indications that there will undoubtedly be attempts to confuse the consumer with foreign counterfeits, will the minister advise the House of the steps he intends to take to protect the Canadian public from counterfeit coins, and from the obvious confusion which the two gold coins will create?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the confusion will occur only in the minds of those lacking intelligence to distinguish between two distinct coins. If you want to buy coins, the safest way to protect yourself against counterfeiting or fraud is to know the people from whom you are buying the coins. Fortunately, the gold coins will be sold by chartered banks, accredited agencies and outlets across Canada and around the world. These outlets I think will provide maximum protection against fraud.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I want to make something clear to the hon. member for York-Simcoe. When answering a reporter's question he suggested we had a moral obligation to share in the Olympic deficit. I said that while we may have a moral obligation, we have no legal obligation. Next time the hon. gentleman asks a question of concern to the Postmaster General, I wish he would put it directly to the Postmaster General so that I can inform the House of his normal bias against Olympics in general.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR SUBSIDY ON BREAD AND FLUID MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In light of the finding of the Food Prices Review Board in its most recent report on bread and milk that:

> The substantial price increases in milk and bread over the past two years probably caused considerable hardship to many Canadians, especially those with fixed and limited incomes . . .

And given that this hardship is being incurred despite measures the government has already taken, namely, its current subsidy on skim milk powder and the two-price wheat system, will the minister now take action to reinstate the subsidy on fluid milk and also place a substantial consumer subsidy on brown and white bread?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

BREAD—INQUIRY WHETHER DECREASE IN COST OF SUGAR TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN SETTING PRICE

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister been monitoring the increases in the price of bread and, if so, can he assure the House that the dramatic decrease in the cost of sugar is being accurately reflected in present prices since, in the February, 1974 Food Prices Review Board report, the increasing price of sugar was used to justify increases in bread prices.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Food Prices Review Board has a very clear mandate on this matter and I think it is taking its responsibilities in an admirable fashion.

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTED DECREASE IN NUMBER OF NEW STAMP ISSUES

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. I know that he has been busy recently with other matters. I ask him if he will, when he has time, consider the advisability of halting the proliferation of new stamp issues, in view of Canada's diminishing reputation with philatelists who, after all, give the Post Office its only profit by buying unused stamps, and in view of the high cost of tooling for new stamp issues.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I know that because of the Olympics, we are issuing more stamps than usual. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that the two recent stamps, one in honour of the Calgary Stampede and the other commemorating L. M. Montgomery of Anne of Green Gables are among the finest stamps in the world.

ENERGY

OIL—CONTINGENCY PLANS FOR ASSURING SUPPLIES TO EAST COAST REFINERIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister? It has to do with security of sources of oil for Atlantic coast refineries. I directed this question to the Prime Minister the other day, as the two principal refineries in Halifax, the Imperial Oil refinery and the Texaco refinery, will run out of crude and other light oils for refining some time next week. Can the Prime Minister tell the House what he has been advised by officials with respect to contingency plans for security of crude oil or other energy fuel supplies for the metropolitan area?

● (1130)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I might be allowed to answer, we have contingency plans to assure that there will be no shortage of crude oil. There will be a transfer from large to small vessels. This operation was supposed to start yesterday but did not because of sea conditions. It is now supposed to start today. We have made arrangements so that the refinery will not be short of oil.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED DISCONTINUANCE OF ATTEMPT TO TRANSFER CRUDE OIL FROM LARGE TANKER TO SMALLER VESSEL AT HALIFAX AND RESUMPTION OF BARGAINING WITH HARBOUR PILOTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment. Will the minister take the simple expediency of bringing to an end the very dangerous exercise being carried out at the mouth of Halifax harbour which, under almost ideal conditions, failed yesterday? Will she bring to an end this potential horror near Halifax Harbour? Will the minister get together with her colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, and get the harbour pilots and the Atlantic Pilotage Authority back to the bargaining table for the purpose of resolving this 3 or 4 per cent difference so that we can again have orderly conduct in the ports of Atlantic Canada, bringing to an end this exercise in madness off Halifax harbour?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, those whose responsibility it is to get the parties together are trying very hard to do that. The Department of the Environment has a representative on the committee which is issuing these waivers and looking at the passage of tankers at this time. However, we do have a strike, and the environmental concerns are taken into account when giving permission for passage of ships. We are doing our best under the circumstances.

TRANSPORT

FAILURE OF ATTEMPT TO TRANSFER CRUDE OIL FROM TANKER TO SMALLER VESSEL AT HALIFAX—AMOUNT OF OIL ON HAND AT REFINERIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I will direct my final supplementary to the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact that every time the two ships were tied together yesterday they broke apart, and God only knows what would have happened if they had been pumping oil at the time, will the minister advise how much crude oil reserve exists in the Imperial Oil plant and the Texaco plant in the port of Halifax and Dartmouth? How much is there? When will they run out? What will happen to the security of energy sources if in fact the Esso Goa and the Imperial St. Clair are not able to effectively transfer that oil?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are many questions contained in the hon. member's question. First, I must say that the Department of Labour is working hard to get the parties together. Second, we are working with the Department of the Environment so that if any move of that kind is made, it will be made in the safest way. We have advisers there and we will not be taking any risks. If there were no transfers yesterday, it was because we thought it constituted a risk. They did not take that risk. The Department of the Environment so advised us yesterday because of the condition of the sea. However, it can be done. It has been done many times in the past. All the companies and technicians say that it can be done very safely. We do not want to take any risks. If something happens, I am ready to take the responsibility for it. With regard to the reserves of oil, I do not know exactly what it is. I will inquire and inform the hon. member on Monday. There is enough until Monday and I will advise the hon. member of the exact amount at that time.

POSSIBLE USE OF INTERPROVINCIAL POWER GRID TO OBTAIN POWER FROM NEW BRUNSWICK TO ALLEVIATE SHORTAGE IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I pour some oil on troubled waters—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCleave: —metaphysically but not physically. My question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the acting minister. Will the minister check to see whether any power shortages looming in Nova Scotia can be made up by using the interprovincial power grid, that is using New Brunswick power, since that grid was paid for by federal money to deal with emergencies?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of those representations on behalf of the minister and secure an answer for the hon. member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DATE OF DECISION ON SELECTION OF LONG RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN COST IF DECISION DELAYED AFTER AUGUST 1

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is for the Minister of National Defence. I know that he was asked about a decision on the LRPA program a few days ago. Can he now assure the House that a decision will be made on or before August 1 at which time the firm tender prices advanced by Lougheed and Boeing will expire?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I told the House last week, this major purchase for National Defence is now actively being considered by cabinet. It will be before cabinet next week.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, it has been considered by cabinet since May, 1968. We fought and won a war in a shorter time than it is taking the cabinet to make up its mind on the LRPA and come to a decision. Can the minister advise what escalation factor there will be in the contract bids if a decision is not made before August 1? What rough percentage?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I obviously cannot prejudge any cabinet decision. If we should have to go beyond August 2 and we have both competing manufacturers in the race, there will be no escalation in price.

AGRICULTURE

SOUR CHERRIES—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE MARKETING DIFFICULTIES—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF EGGS

Mr. Wm. Andres (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact we have had some serious problems in marketing our sour cherry crop, what if anything is the minister doing with regard to marketing this crop? Further, is there any truth in the news media reports that there has been an increase in the price of eggs?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of speculation about the increase in the price of eggs, but no decision has been made under the new formula. I would report that Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec are still selling below cost of production. With regard to the cherries, we have a program to make sure that this crop does not go to waste. We hope the trade will purchase these. If not, we will purchase them to the tune of 11 million pounds maximum. We hope this will ensure that none of the crop will go to waste.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—PROPOSED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON GRANTING JURISDICTION TO PROVINCES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the Quebec Minister of Communications expresses the very decided view of the provincial government, which wants absolute control over cablevision, and since that issue is likely to cause disastrous constitutional unrest, is the Prime Minister considering reviewing the government's attitude on that matter or ordering in the near future a federal-provincial conference to determine the respective jurisdictions in that field?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday for the hon. member for Joliette. I told him I did not intend to convene a constitutional conference to turn over federal powers to provinces. I also said that Quebec's premier did not ask for such a constitutional conference.

As hon. members know, there is one question pertaining to this matter which is now in dispute and will end up in court. We may get a court ruling on the constitution from that court but it is the contention of the federal government—and I hope our view is shared by the Progressive Conservatives and the Social Credit Party of Canada—that the federal government has jurisdiction over all matters pertaining to broadcasting.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask another supplementary question: first, I would like to suggest to the Prime Minister that he seems to place himself above the constitution, and I do not think jurisdictions can be determined as easily as that. In any event, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not he has received any communications from the premier of the province of Quebec on this matter, since the records are now in the hands of the Quebec premier, and whether or not he will, upon the premier's request, summon a constitutional conference?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must remind the hon. member that the government did not place itself above the constitution. On the contrary, we have first proposed administrative arrangements for the last two years now that the Minister of Communications has been calling for those conferences. We have also pointed out there was a doubt as to the constitutionality of our bringing the case jointly to the Supreme Court. We did not place ourselves above the law. What we did say is: let the Supreme Court interpret the constitution. The province of Quebec did not accept either suggestion. As for the last of the question, the answer which I gave yesterday is still no. Premier Bourassa has not consulted me since he was handed over the records by Mr. l'Allier.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED LICENSING OF ITALIAN FIRM TO CONSTRUCT CANDU REACTORS—ADEQUACY OF SAFEGUARDS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister or to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding reports that the Canadian government is negotiating an agreement with a private firm in Italy for licensing the construction of CANDU reactors in that country? I want to ask the minister, first, whether this report is correct and, second, what safeguards will be imposed, in view of the fact that the private company is not a sovereign power but is subject to the policies of the country in which it is located and that it is not accountable in the way a government would be. What safeguards is the government proposing to put in place in the event that it grants this far-reaching power to manufacture CANDU reactors for export to other countries after a given period of time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a question of the same kind was directed to my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, either yesterday or the day before. He gave a fairly detailed answer, but I would have to study very carefully the question the hon. member has put in order to determine whether there is anything additional by way of information that is required.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I heard the answer given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It does not explain how the Canadian government can insist on adequate safeguards with application to a private company which has the power to manufacture CANDU reactors in another country and export them. I want to ask the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs this question: if the main safeguard, in the view of the government, is supervision by the International Atomic Energy Agency, is he satisfied, in the light of the fact that by the end of this year there will be some 650 nuclear reactors in 38 countries while the International Atomic Agency has less than 70 nuclear scientists on its staff, that this type of inspection provides adequate safeguards against the misuse of plutonium produced from nuclear reactors? Is the government satisfied that this type of inspection provides Canadians and the world with adequate safeguards?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Several questions have been directed to me by the hon. gentleman. As the House is aware, Canada has been trying to get international standards upgraded, so I can say we are not satisfied with the standards which now prevail, in that sense. As to the precise form of the safeguards we have applied to this technology to a co-operating company, I must take the question as notice and get an answer later.

SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF SALE OF CANDU REACTORS PENDING IMPROVEMENT IN INTERNATIONAL SAFEGUARDS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I thank the minister for his reply, particularly when he says the government is not satisfied with the present international safeguard standards. In view of the fact that agreements similar to the one which is now being negotiated with Italy are also being negotiated with Rumania and Argentina, I ask the government whether they are prepared to stop either the licensing or the export of CANDU reactors until such time as they are satisfied with the international safeguards.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): I cannot answer that question positively because I am very much impressed, as I think we all are, by the facts which have been put forward by the hon. gentleman, namely, that nuclear energy is being spread all over the world and it is absolutely essential that we should not find ourselves caught, as we did recently, by reliance on one source of power which is concentrated too much in one area. So I support my Prime Minister by saying we believe it is important that the advantages of nuclear energy be available throughout the world in order to improve standards of living in other countries. This is something with which I would hope the NDP would agree.

[Mr. Sharp.]

GRAIN

WHEAT—POSSIBILITY OF ADDITIONAL SALES TO RUSSIA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the current wheat sale from Canada to Russia and the fact that we sold some 74 million bushels of wheat to Russia in the past few days—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: I do not think the Liberal party would want to take credit for a crop failure in Russia, so I do not know what they are applauding about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You would have been over there announcing it from Moscow!

Mr. Murta: In view of possible further grain sales, especially to the United States, I want to ask the minister whether the Wheat Board is still continuing to hold negotiations with Russia with a view to further grain sales from Canada to Russia in the very near future.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I presume that when the hon. member referred to grain sales from Canada to the United States he was talking about sales made by Canada to Russia. Just as this sale was evidence of the extremely good relationship between Canada and the U.S.S.R. with regard to trading in wheat, that relationship will stand us in good stead in the course of further negotiations. The Wheat Board is, in effect, constantly in touch with buyers in the U.S.S.R.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSED SINGLE BARGAINING AGENT FOR PUBLIC SERVICE—METHOD BY WHICH SERVICES OF MR. JOE MORRIS OBTAINED

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Yesterday, my colleague, the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley asked a question about the fragmentation of union power within the Public Service. The minister replied, as reported at page 7657 of Hansard:

> There is a general disposition to try to achieve this type of objective. I might say we have achieved something along these lines already. I have indicated in the House before that Mr. Joe Morris, President of the Canadian Labour Congress, has already met with people in the grain handling area to achieve this type of consultation.

My question to the minister is this: with respect to the instance to which he referred yesterday, is that as a result of the formation of the Canadian Labour Council which the minister discussed in the House previously, and if not, was it merely an ad hoc arrangement made by members of his own department trying to obtain the good services of Mr. Morris in this direction?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): It was due to several factors, the principal one being that when the CLC made its presentation here a few months ago the Prime Minister indicated that this might be a beneficial way for discussions to proceed. That was a great help in promoting this particular policy. The various elements which are working together on this council have considered this to be a high priority. Both these factors had a good deal to do with the initiative which was taken in this direction.

POSSIBLE ROLE OF PROPOSED CANADIAN LABOUR COUNCIL IN SETTLING DISPUTES OUTSIDE FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): As the minister is aware there are a number of work stoppages taking place in the country at the present time which are outside federal jurisdiction. It has been some time, now, since we have discussed the Canadian Labour Council. How soon can we expect this council to come into being? In what way will the council, as envisaged by the minister be successful in assisting us in dealing with these work stoppages and difficulties of negotiation that are outside the federal jurisdiction, but which are very important to the economy of Canada and the wellbeing of relations between management and labour?

● (1150)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, I take it, his party has always stood firmly for these policies, namely that we should not interfere in areas of provincial jurisdiction. There are 10 other labour departments in this country. All I can say is that when you have effective and influential members of management and the labour movement meeting at the federal level to try to cope successfully with problems at the federal level, hopefully they will come up with constructive solutions that will have a beneficial spin-off on labour problems in this country.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REFERENCE TO ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER THAT WHERE SEVERAL COUNTS INVOLVED ACCUSED OUGHT TO PLEAD GUILTY TO ALL IF FOUND GUILTY ON ONE

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. When the Minister of Justice was replying during the adjournment debate on July 15 to my question concerning Dr. Henry Morgentaler, he indicated he believed that if there were a number of similar counts against an accused, and if the accused is found guilty on one, then the accused ought to plead guilty to the other charges. Would the minister now assure the House that he was wrong in so indicating, that in fact he believes that an accused ought to have full rights to a trial on all charges if the accused so desires, and that he was not trying to indicate a new government policy of coercing an accused into pleading guilty?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check Hansard on that. If it shows the word "all", I should have preferred to use the word "often" and that is what I intended. I think, in fact, that is the word I used that night. It is, in fact, a very common practice, and that is all I was referring to.

IMMIGRATION

REFERENCE TO ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER CONCERNING RELOCATION OF IMMIGRANTS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is in respect to the CBC program "Spotlight". May I ask the minister whether some of the statements that he made do not, to his mind, seriously jeopardize the credibility of the joint committee studying the green paper on immigration; and if the minister has already decided on the relocation of immigrants in less densely populated areas by offering incentives, can he explain what these incentives are and what the policy of the government is in relation to those incentives?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think, as the hon. member knows, I have been doing my best to respect the integrity of the process by not prejudging or pre-empting any decisions of the committee which the government hopes to get before too long. I cannot recall any statements made in the program, which as the hon. member knows was an interview, that would breach that commitment.

As far as the redistribution of people across the country is concerned, this has been talked about a great deal, not only by myself but by others, and I must honestly tell the hon. member and the House that no, we do not have any predetermined idea that this has to be done or how it would be done. I believe I have said on occasion that this is an area that has to be explored. I hope the hon. member would agree that I cannot be muzzled in any response that I would be called upon to make in reply the questions about these matters.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I take it that the minister was expressing different options as opposed to specific policy decisions that have already been taken?

Mr. Andras: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The only firm commitment that has been made by me on these matters is the statement of the four assumptions that we suggest we would like to hold to—the non-discriminatory aspects of our immigration policy, the family reunion, refugee considerations, and dovetailing of the assessment of entry to Canada with economic, social, linguistic and cultural matters, all of which have been stated quite frequently and were in fact contained in the green paper.

SUGGESTION FOREIGN WRESTLERS ENTERING CANADA WITHOUT WORK PERMITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the consistently high unemployment rate in Canada, and in view of the fact that Canada's greatest athlete Gene Kiniski, has protested the fact that professional wrestlers from India, Europe and the U.S.A. are entering Canada without work permits for the purpose of staging wrestling matches and depriving our Canadian athletes of jobs, would the minister have his departmental officials check out these so-called aliens so that Canadian wrestlers will find full-time employment and not start collecting unemployment insurance?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will try and wrestle that one to the ground! Without knowing precisely the application of the work permit to that category, I believe there are certain exemptions that apply to professional entertainers. However, I will certainly take with the usual respect the hon. member's representation on behalf of his friends in that business and see what can be done.

HOUSING

NON-PROFIT AND CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING—AMOUNT OF MONEY COMMITTED BY ONTARIO

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs responsible for housing. Has the minister any indication of the amount of funds actively committed this year by the province of Ontario to support non-profit and co-operative housing units?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the province of Ontario has allocated some $200,000, none of which has been committed. In so far as CMHC is concerned, we have committed something over $100,000 for core funding of the non-profit groups. With reference to non-profit housing itself, we have commitments or active programs under assessment of just over $60 million in Ontario.

PICKERING—REFUSAL OF ONTARIO TO PROVIDE ACCESS ROADS—DATE OF MEETING WITH ONTARIO MINISTER

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. Last week the Ontario government announced that it would not supply the roads and other infrastructures needed for the proposed Pickering airport. On that occasion the minister told the House that he would be conferring with Mr. Rhodes, the Ontario Minister of Transport, as to the full meaning or implication of his statement or the letter that he had written. May I now ask the minister when he expects to see Mr. Rhodes, and when will he make an announcement to the House, if it is still sitting, on the results of his interview?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did propose to Mr. Rhodes that we meet next Tuesday. That was not convenient to him and he proposed July 29, so I am trying to arrange a meeting for that day.

PICKERING—SURVEY CONDUCTED BY ELLIOT RESEARCH INDICATING MAJORITY OPPOSED TO PROJECT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the attention of the minister been called to a poll conducted by Elliot Research Limited in March, 1975 showing that in metropolitan Toronto 54 per cent were opposed to Pickering airport as compared to only 34 per cent in favour? In view of the fact that the minister promised he would not proceed with the airport if the people in the area did not want it, has he taken into account the result of this poll?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the poll and I should like to see an analysis of the data and figures, if the hon. member would forward them to me.

POSSIBILITY COMPANY DIVERTING FREIGHT FOR NEWFOUNDLAND FROM PORT OF NORTH SYDNEY—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the disturbing fact that the tonnage of freight going through the port of North Sydney to the great province of Newfoundland has dropped very seriously during the past few weeks, resulting in fewer jobs being available, would the minister be good enough to use his good offices to check with Canadian National and see whether they are diverting freight through other ports to Newfoundland?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire into this and give an answer early next week.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR FAILURE TO DELAY SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS PENDING IMPROVEMENT OF SAFEGUARDS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. In terms of clarification, is it the position of the government that the delay in supplying reactors to countries like Korea, thereby slowing down their energy development sufficiently long in order to work out safeguards, would create more problems and difficulties and be of more concern to the world than the fact that providing these reactors might indeed add to nuclear proliferation around the world? The point that I want to get clear is this. Why does the government believe that it is doing something morally correct by making them available, when in fact a delay of a year to work out safeguards would surely be of less significance than the possible damage that might be done if these sales went ahead?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman seems to have overlooked the fact that while we are dissatisfied with the international standards we, for our part, have been applying stricter standards than anybody else.

● (1200)

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS TO KOREA AND ARGENTINA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF SAFEGUARDS AGREEMENTS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs the following question: Given the fact that this is a matter of enormous importance not only to Canada but to everybody in the world, why will the government not table in this House those standards and allow them to be debated? I am referring to the standards in the Argentine contract and in respect of South Korea and not to the general safeguards which the minister brought down last year. I refer to the specific safeguards which will make the government confident that it has safeguards which will make it impossible for Canada to be known as one of the great spreaders of nuclear weapons.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did put forward very specific safeguards that we apply to all contracts. The hon. gentleman has not disputed these. He just wants to create the false impression that Canada is participating in traffic which I am sure is not supported by the Canadian government. He is trying to make cheap political points out of the efforts of the government.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I would hope the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs would know that in all the time—it is not a long time—that I have been in the House of Commons I have never tried to make cheap political points. Let me say that I find it really quite intolerable, as I believe do most Canadians, for the government to say it has fine safeguards but is afraid to table them in the House of Commons and tell the Canadian people what those safeguards are.

BILINGUALISM

SENDING OF FAMILIES TO PARIS FOR FRENCH LANGUAGE COURSES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday the hon. member for Edmonton Centre asked me whether it was true there were directives allowing civil servants to go to France with their families to learn French. I want to report to the House that there is no such directive. Civil servants are not allowed to go abroad to take advantage of language instruction programs. To learn French or English, one must stay in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I gave you notice that I would be raising a point of order relating to answers that ministers have been providing the House relating to nuclear contracts abroad. However, since my point concerns not only the House leader but also the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacDonald), it might be preferable if I put if off until Monday when perhaps the other minister will be in the House.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) suggested that the other night I had said that under certain circumstances defence counsel ought to plead their clients guilty, and I indicated I would check Hansard but I thought the word I meant to use was "often". I find, on checking Hansard, that the word shown is in fact "often". I regret that the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton has left the House, and I would like to ask him at the earliest opportunity to confirm that he had asked the question carelessly, without checking Hansard, and did not attempt intentionally to mislead the House.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I rose on a question of privilege to point out that in answer to a question put by myself, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) had indicated that in his budget speech there had been a forecast of real growth in the economy of between zero and 1 per cent. I indicated yesterday that there was no such forecast in his budget speech and said I hoped the Minister of Finance would correct the record. He replied that he would send me the reference. I still have not received the reference and I wonder if the minister could be given an opportunity to correct the record.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is perfectly correct. Those number were given in the speech I made at the federal-provincial conference which was tabled in the House by my parliamentary secretary, and the budget reflected those figures.

TABLING OF REGULATIONS AND GUIDELINES RESPECTING NEW BUSINESS PROVISIONS

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I am tabling today copies, in both official languages, of three documents: first, the regulations and, second, the guidelines concerning implementation of the new business provisions under the Foreign Investment Review Act. In addition, I am tabling the new "Principles of International Business Conduct."

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON PHASE II OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, hon. members know that the first part of the Foreign Investment Review Act, governing takeovers of Canadian business enterprises, was proclaimed into force on April 9, 1974. When the bill was before parliament I undertook, on behalf of the government, that the second part of the act, phase II, relating to the establishment of new foreign-controlled businesses in Canada, would not come into force until the government was satisfied on two scores.

The first was that the government should have gained some experience in the actual administration of the review process under phase I. We have now had well over a year's experience and we are satisfied that the review process is working well.

The other commitment was that phase II would not be introduced until there had been further consultations with the provincial governments. During the past year there have been several meetings with representatives of all provincial governments. Those meetings have involved very full discussions on the administrative procedures for consultation on individual cases between the federal and provincial authorities, and I am pleased to say that there is general agreement that the procedures which have evolved are sound and workmanlike.

Accordingly, the government has now, by proclamation, fixed the date on which phase II is to come into force. That date is October 15 of this year. The lead time we have provided will give investors and their advisers the necessary opportunity to become familiar with the phase II guidelines and regulations. It is also intended to avoid disruption in investment plans which are now being developed.

It should be noted in this regard that investments which are under way on October 15 are not reviewable under the act to the extent that they are established businesses. To show that a business was already established by October 15 it will not be necessary to show that the business was fully operational on that date. Where there are one or more employees, together with contractual obligations or other definite commitments relating to the new business, those factors should be enough to show that the new business has been established and is therefore not subject to review.

In the administration of phase II of the act we will, of course, continue to follow the procedures that have been developed for close consultation on individual cases with the provincial governments. We will also ensure that there is effective co-ordination between the Foreign Investment Review Agency and other departments and agencies of the federal government.

In this regard I would like to advise investors who intend to apply for incentives under the Regional Development Incentives Act, and whose investment proposals are also subject to review under the Foreign Investment Review Act, that they should discuss their plans first with the appropriate provincial or regional office of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I want to assure hon. members that there will be no unnecessary delay in investment programs important to the development of designated regions of the country through duplication of administrative procedures.

I should again like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of the Foreign Investment Review Act is not to block foreign investment from any source or to discourage it but, rather, to ensure that such investment is of significant benefit to Canada. Since its beginnings Canada has had to rely heavily on foreign investment to help us develop this country. Clearly, it has been beneficial. We shall continue to need a great deal more investment in Canada by our friends abroad if we are to develop our full potential as this government is determined to do.

A mere glance at the guidelines concerning related business will clearly indicate that great care has been exercised to ensure that there will be no interference with investment for the maintenance and expansion of the ongoing business in Canada. This was clearly parliament's intention when the act was passed into law.

Mr. Speaker, the House is aware that ownership and control of enterprises engaged in the extraction and processing of uranium are matters of important concern to the national interest and to Canadians generally. The government's intention to limit nonresident ownership in this industry is well known. The government is considering alternative measures to consolidate this policy with respect to the ownership of uranium mines within the general ambit of our policy regarding foreign ownership and control of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, I am also tabling, on behalf of the government, copies in both official languages of new "Principles of International Business Conduct." These are not to be confused with the guidelines concerning related business under the Foreign Investment Review Act. They are intended as an updating and a replacement of "Guiding Principles of Good Corporate Behaviour in Canada" which were announced by the late Hon. Robert Winters on March 31, 1966. Like the earlier set of guiding principles of good corporate behaviour, the new set of principles reflects broad government policy regarding the activities and responsibilities of foreign-controlled business enterprises in Canada. They thus provide an added indication of the sort of benefits the government looks for in assessing investment proposals under the Foreign Investment Review Act. But they are directed towards all foreign-controlled enterprises doing business in Canada, whether or not they are involved with the Foreign Investment Review Act.

The basic content of the 1966 guiding principles has been retained. However, we have to recognize that new developments have taken place and that these developments should be reflected in the revised principles. In 1966, the government was especially concerned over certain financial aspects of the activities of foreign subsidiaries in Canada because of particular balance of payments measures which were introduced at that time by the United States. The guiding principles did not lay particular stress on the need for subsidiary companies to have more autonomy or sufficiently underline the need to identify more closely with Canada economically, socially, and culturally.

A major omission from the old principles of good corporate behaviour was that they made no reference to the conditions under which foreign or foreign-controlled technology and know-how may be transferred to a Canadian subsidiary. These can often serve to inhibit the local subsidiary from operating at its full potential. To emphasize our interest in the technology-related activities of foreign-owned subsidiaries, we have added a new principle, number 14, and we have tied it in with the observance of the preceding principles.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for providing us with a copy of his statement a few hours ago. The opposition endorses the principle of less foreign ownership in the Canadian economy and agrees that quick action is necessary to monitor the amount of foreign investment we have in the Canadian economy, but we wonder why the government and the minister are making an announcement at this particular time of the proclamation of phase II.

We have been told that the minister had to wait until he had reached some agreement with the provinces on the operation of phase II, and until he knew whether phase I was working and how it was working, before he was prepared to go ahead with this new proclamation. On the latter score, that is whether phase I is working, I am not surprised that there has been a delay, because it was not until more than a year after the proclamation of phase I that the foreign investor, the Canadian public and members of this House had any indication of the specific criteria to be applied in the evaluation of proposed foreign investment. It would have been preferable had the agency become familiar with these criteria somewhat sooner.

On the first point, that of provincial consultation, I wonder whether the minister is prepared to assure the House that his consultations with the provinces had greater scope than making them aware of what he intended to do. I hope the minister will take the time to assure the House in more definite terms that all the provinces across Canada agree with the imminent proclamation of phase II.

I am sure the minister was faced with a difficult balancing act in deciding on the proclamation of phase I in October. The need for proclamation is there, but the full act comes into force at a time when Canada is suffering from recession and is plagued with one of the most significant balance of payments problems it has ever had. After listening to the minister, I conclude that he is quite satisfied that the critically needed foreign capital inflows will not be disrupted by the proclamation of phase II, and that phase II will not damage the business confidence required for the large volume of equally critically required new capital investment.

I hope the minister will also find the time, perhaps today at the conclusion of the remarks of the various spokesmen on this issue, to indicate more fully that he has had discussions with his colleagues, with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in particular, and that there is no concern about the implementation of the proclamation of phase II at this time with respect to our serious balance of payments problems.

Although I have not had the opportunity to study the guidelines concerning related business in detail, I find at this stage that they are relatively non-controversial, although there are one or two peculiarities. For instance, vertical integration is classified as related business expansion under guidelines 1 and 2. Thus, we find the government again doing what they do so often, taking action on the one hand which is contravened by action on the other, because we see that they will now apply vertical integration through the Foreign Investment Review Act, while they created a royal commission on corporate power to study this problem to find out whether it is a good thing for the Canadian economy. Guidelines 4 and 5 also seem to be in some disagreement. Guideline 4 permits expansion if the same technology is used, and guideline 5 only if the technology is new and Canadian.

We are also pleased to see some comment in the report about the policy with respect to ownership of uranium. However, we hope the government does not believe that by looking at this ownership issue they have, in fact, solved the problem or indeed put forward a solution that is adequate for all Canadians as to how we are going to deal with the export of this most important product.

The minister has also provided us with an expanded set of criteria under which the significant benefit test is to be conducted. We can only say we hope the minister has made up his mind clearly and distinctly about this matter, because the hallmark and characteristic feature of the present government is to do something one day and change it the next. If we are to have the sort of investment we need in this country, the business community must have confidence that the government knows precisely what they will do.

Much of the need for this legislation would be reduced if the government were only to take a more positive attitude toward business in this country. Foreign ownership regulations are really only a short-term answer to the over-all problem of foreign investment and the development of the Canadian economy. The real answer to our problems lies in the generation of a healthy Canadian business climate, and the minister must know that his job is not complete until he has measures installed which will accomplish this end and until he has produced what Canadians have been looking for for a very long time, namely, some sort of industrial strategy to guide the development of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, when the Foreign Investment Review Act was debated in the House, the NDP supported it because it represented an improvement over the then existing situation with respect to foreign investment, that is to say, over a situation in which there were no controls in this major area. We reserved judgment on the act, however, as it was clear from the way in which it was worded that the attitude of the government to foreign investment and the regulations implementing the act would be the crucial determinants on the issue. We now know, if there were any doubts before, that the government had no real intention of limiting or controlling foreign investment in Canada.

Our support of the Foreign Investment Review Act was on the basis that it would encourage rational control of investment in the Canadian economy so that Canadian resources would be developed in such a way that the maximum benefit would go to the people of Canada as a whole and not to foreign-owned, multinational corporations. The prime benefit had to remain here, and not abroad. However, as the operation of the first phase of the act demonstrated beyond doubt, this was not the purpose the government had in mind for its own bill. Its purpose was simply to stem the criticism of Canadians legitimately concerned that the Canadian economy was being more and more controlled by outside governments and outside corporations. There is no discernible pattern in the agency's activity since the passage of the bill in relation to takeover approvals, which have run at the rate of some 80 per cent of all applications.

The guidelines for takeover are so vague as to be worthless. The reason for this is that the government does not intend to plan in a rational way investment patterns in Canada. Every time this government gets into trouble, under any circumstances, in the economy it runs off and asks foreign companies to bail it out: witness recent speeches—and by "recent" I mean in the last six months—by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), both at home and abroad, assuring foreign investors that they would have no problem at all in embarking upon ventures in the Canadian economy. Hence the expressed reason for the delays in proclaiming part II of the act.

The regulations under part II clearly demonstrate that the government's real position will not be found in the royal commission set up by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to investigate corporate power, which is a sham if ever there was one created in Canadian politics. The real attitude toward the power of corporations in Canada, and particularly multinational corporations, is to be found in what is included in the regulations just tabled by the minister and, more importantly, to be found in what is not included in those regulations.

The statement of the minister is a blatant and shocking attempt to reassure foreign investors that the government has no serious intention of interfering in the slightest in their investment decisions. I wish to quote briefly from the minister's statement as follows: "I should again like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of the Foreign Investment Review Act is not to block foreign investment from any source or to discourage it but, rather, to ensure that such investment is of significant benefit to Canada. Since its beginnings Canada has had to rely heavily on foreign investment to help us develop this country. Clearly, it has been beneficial."

Later the minister said: "A mere glance at the guidelines concerning related business will clearly indicate that great care has been exercised to ensure that there will be no interference with investment for the maintenance and expansion of ongoing business activities in Canada." That sentence in particular is one of the understatements of the century in Canadian politics, and one of the great understatements of the underlying economic philosophy of the Liberal Party.

Under the regulations, the list of exclusions of new foreign-owned businesses which do not need government approval to start operating is exhaustive: it is difficult to imagine any foreign investor who would have to apply for approval before establishing a new business. But of even greater importance is what this second phase does not review, the vertical integration of multinational corporations. The list of exclusions encourages the future development of vertical integration in our economy. What are the problems associated with it? Let me list the problems for the Canadian economy and, therefore, for the people of Canada, with further vertical integration. First, such integration allows transfer pricing between related companies which can artificially increase prices in Canada. Second, it reduces tax liabilities and encourages tax dodges at home and abroad. Third, it continues the trend to have research and development done outside Canada, making us increasingly technologically dependent on other countries but particularly on the United States. Fourth, it encourages the importing of machinery from foreign-based multinationals with plants in Canada. Fifth, it discourages the export of machinery and technology which would compete with the American parent company.

The exclusion of any concern over vertical integration means, to the New Democratic Party that the government has bypassed the most important aspect of the foreign domination of our economy. This is presumably a summary of the position that will be taken by this Liberal government until the next election, when it will probably trot out some other vague, unspecified and general commitment to deal with the problem of foreign ownership. But I hope that finally the poeple of Canada will shed whatever illusions they may have about the determination of this government to do anything about regaining economic independence for Canada. The battle against foreign economic domination has not yet begun in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in his statement the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) mentioned that he was pleased with the good feeling and understanding which existed during his consultations with the provincial governments. We were thus spared the disgraceful scenes which occurred during the last weeks between the federal Minister of Communications and his provincial counterparts, especially the Quebec minister. However, I think that the interests were not the same. In the communication field, domestic interests are involved while the interests which concern the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in foreign investments are especially foreign interests of multinational companies which are much greater. It is then easier to agree on such matters.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I was struck by points in the minister's statement, particularly when he assures foreign investors that their applications for regional development grants would be considered and processed rapidly. The minister wants to assure hon. members that there will be no undue delay in the investment program necessary to the development of designated areas in Canada because of red tape duplication.

We know how slow the department or officials of the Department of regional Economic Expansion are in considering or accepting applications for grants from Canadian companies or businesses. I remember a case when a contractor or businessman applied for a $40,000 grant. It is not all that much. All possible complications were made to delay the awarding of the grant probably to discourage that businessman. We are a lot nicer to foreign investors than we are to Canadians who want to create new jobs and offer people the consumer goods they are asking for.

We know how things go generally regional development grants awarded to foreign companies who come to invest in this country amount to about 35 per cent. And those foreign investors get another 55 per cent from the local market so they have to come up with only 10 per cent of their own money in Canadian investments. That prompts us to say that somehow they are being paid to put us out. We know that about 80 per cent at least of our industries, and particularly those which are most important and profitable, are in the hands of foreigners.

Mr. Speaker, rather than say we are happy to promote foreign investments in Canada we should strive instead to encourage Canadians to own our own industries and businesses so we will know better what Canadian consumers want. I think one is best served by himself. That is what I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The statement itself was of some length, as were the replies. I would think that four questioners ought to suffice, in light of those circumstances. I propose to see the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) and two other questioners and perhaps conclude the matter in that way.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, when the minister referred to consultations with the provinces, he referred to acceptance. Is that confined to acceptance in terms of the machinery being established? Could he tell us how many provincial governments have objected in whole or in part to part II at the present time?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the answer cannot be given in precise terms because the position of the provinces varies. They are not easily classified into categories. I can say, for example, that a number of provinces, particularly the Atlantic provinces, do not agree with the Foreign Investment Review Act in principle at all, phase I or phase II. That is quite clearly their position. Other provinces accept it, and the need for the second phase. I know of one province out west that was particularly concerned about the timing of phase II and tied its concern to working out the necessary consultative arrangements. We were able to satisfy them on that. In general, I can say that there are a number of different views in the provinces with respect to phase II.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister could tell me briefly what provinces objected to part II altogether? What provinces, in addition to the Atlantic provinces, objected to part II completely?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall any other province saying that they felt we should never proceed with phase II. There were concerns on the part of other provinces about the timing of phase II.

Mr. Stanfield: How many provinces?

Mr. Gillespie: I cannot give the precise number. I have indicated that one province tied its conditions to the question of working out the consultative arrangements.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell the House whether he has any impression that the proclamation will have any serious positive or negative effect on the Canadian balance of payments situation?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will have any significant effect on the balance of payments question. Let me put it in this context: we are faced with a deficit in our current account this year of probably between $4 billion and $5 billion; perhaps closer to $5 billion. Foreign investors do not invest in Canada, or anywhere else, because we are running a deficit in our balance of payments account; they invest because they see industrial opportunities. That will be the basis in the future, as it has been in the past. When foreign investments are made, they will not be motivated, in other words, by a desire to help Canada finance any deficit in its current account.

The second point that I should like to make is that all deficits in the past that I am aware of have relied far more heavily, in terms of the financing of the current account deficit, on portfolio investments, that is to say, debt, borrowings of municipalities and provinces, institutions and corporations in foreign markets. I would expect that would be the way we would finance the major part of our deficit this coming year, as we have in the past.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister why he is excluding the vertical integration of multinationals from the screening under the act. It seems to me this is the biggest area of foreign enterprise. When we were dealing with the act in committee about two years ago, we tried to nail the minister down on this question of the regulations and he refused to make any commitment on it. Take, for example, a foreign-owned food company: would it be allowed to establish a farm machinery company and not be screened for doing so, and then in turn be able to supply the food to retail or wholesale outlets? Are there any regulations when it comes to vertical integration and, if not, why not? This seems to me to be a major loophole in the regulations.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I commend the regulations to the attention of the hon. member in relation to the particular example he used of a food company going into the tractor business. If he were to read the regulations he would find such a company would not meet the conditions of relatedness. That kind of an arrangement, in my view, would in all likelihood be seen as an unrelated activity and therefore screenable.

As an example, we could use the constituency of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). There we have a very large automobile manufacturer, General Motors. A few years ago that company decided to build a battery plant. That is a form of vertical integration. I do not know whether the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is against that kind of investment. It seems to me, in the nature of things, that anybody in the automobile manufacturing business is likely to be more efficient if they can integrate back. I think the constituency of Oshawa-Whitby is a good example of that process at work.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister why it took so long to proclaim this part of the act. We understood that it would be proclaimed long ago.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, it took longer than I would have wished—and I have stated that on other occasions—for one reason: it was a consultative arrangement. As the hon. member may remember, the provinces sent me a telex at the end of the year, asking for further consultations. We had a series of consultations with officials of the provinces, including Manitoba. I do not think it would have been right to introduce the second proclamation without having completed that consultation process to the full satisfaction of the provinces concerned.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO ABOLISH DEATH PENALTY AND INCREASE MANDATORY TERM OF IMPRISONMENT FOR MURDER

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-407, to amend the Criminal Code (punishment for murder).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, the purpose of this bill to amend the Criminal Code is to abolish, once and for all, the death penalty, the taking of human life by society. At the same time, however, these amendments are intended at last to provide the Canadian public with some real assurance of safety and security by dramatically increasing the mandatory term of imprisonment, without parole consideration, to 25 years for a much broadened category of murder. My colleague for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and I also believe that these proposals will provide criminal elements with the kind of deterrent they will understand.

PROVISION FOR APPEAL PROCEDURE IN RESPECT OF THERAPEUTIC ABORTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-408, to amend the Criminal Code (abortion).

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, this bill will remove a serious discrepancy in the Criminal Code as it relates to abortion. It will provide for an appeal procedure in the case where a medical board or therapeutic abortion board has issued a permit to terminate a pregnancy. No other section of the Criminal Code denies recourse to such procedure.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFERENCE OF PETITION OF ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Saint-Henri): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy):

That pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 99, the petition of the Royal Canadian Legion, not filed within the period specified in Standing Order 90, be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, along with the second report of the Clerk of Petitions presented to the House on Thursday, July 17, 1975, so that the committee may make the recommendations it deems necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 441, 2,001, 2,102, 2,315 (Supplementary), 2,406, 2,507, 2,523, 2,550, 2,606, 2,630, 2,644, 2,685, 2,688, 2,698, 2,699, 2,771, 2,803, 2,824, 2,836, 2,853 and 2,873.

Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 2,090, 2,170, 2,232, 2,477 and 2,764 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

CLEARANCE OF POLICY STATEMENTS THROUGH SENATOR KEITH DAVEY

Question No. 441—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On what specific date prior to July 8, 1974 were instructions or recommendations made to the effect that Cabinet Ministers should clear policy statements through Senator Keith Davey and (a) by whom and how were such instructions or recommendations conveyed and what is the complete list of names of all those receiving them (b) who, specifically, made the decision that this should be done and for what purpose (c) what, if any, is the exact nature of the Prime Minister's involvement therein (d) how many referrals were made to Senator Davey as a result and, in each case, by whom, on what dates and what specific matters were involved?

2. Have any government policy statements been taken up in any way before they were issued with Senator Davey since July 8, 1974?

3. Is it government policy to have an unelected Member of the Senate in any way examine government policies before they are announced to the elected representatives of the Canadian people in the House of Commons and, if so, what is the justification for this?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. See opening sentence in reply to Question 119, Hansard February 4, 1960, page 756.

3. No.

CANADA-UNITED STATES PRODUCTION SHARING ARRANGEMENTS

Question No. 2,001—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Is there any dollar amount affixed to procurement under the production sharing agreements between the Department of National Defence and its US counterpart?

2. How involved is the economic and inter-governmental process with requirements of military procurements?

3. How critical is the balance of payments impact of defence procurements?

4. How is the procurement effort guided in terms of appreciation for the present and future potentials of the economy in fields of research, development and technology of military requirements?

5. To what general need is the defence procurement mechanism appropriate for Canada?

6. To what extent is there Canadian direction and control of the major military systems procured by the Department of Supply and Services?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce, National Defence, and Supply and Services as follows: 1. Canada/United States Production Sharing Arrangements were originally worked out in 1959 by the Canadian Department of Defence Production and the United States Department of Defense. Responsibility for the Canadian side of these arrangements was transferred in 1968 to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There is no dollar amount affixed to procurement under the Production Sharing Arrangements but the long term goal is to achieve a rough balance in reciprocal defence procurement.

2. As part of the equipment acquisition process, much inter-governmental and inter-departmental discussion takes place to ensure that the most cost effective and economically attractive arrangement is arrived at consistent with meeting the military requirements. The Department of Supply and Services is responsible, as far as it is economically practicable to do so, for maintaining a Canadian production base adequate to supply the material requirements of the Department of National Defence. Cooperative supply arrangements, through NATO or other intergovernmental arrangements have helped to lessen the cost of developing and providing complex or unique equipment.

3. In relation to the overall value of transactions entering into the Canadian balance of payments calculations, the value of defence procurement transactions is minimal (estimated to be less than ½ of 1 per cent). The value of such transactions, however, is one factor considered in the selection and acquisition process.

4. Technical specialists in the Department of National Defence and the Department of Supply and Services maintain close contact with all Canadian centres of research and development in industry, government and the universities to ensure we are fully informed of all developments which could meet military applications. Similarly effort is directed where possible and practical to concentrate on fields of technology and products which offer the broadest commercial, and therefore employment benefits to Canadian industry: for example, advanced communications systems, and new aircraft engine designs.

5. As long as Canada has defence forces, there will be a need to procure equipment to support these forces. The defence procurement mechanism is appropriate for Canada in as much as it strives to: (a) Procure in Canada these items which are technically and economically feasible to produce. (b) Take advantage of defence equipment developments in other countries, and where such equipment meets DND requirements, procure abroad, thereby, reducing costs to DND by eliminating costly development. (c) Cooperate with our allies in programs of mutual interest in an attempt to eliminate costly duplication of effort and take advantage of economics of scale in production. (d) Offset defence procurement from abroad, in so far as practicable by promoting the export sale of defence equipment produced in Canada. Canada has developed expertise in the development and production of defence equipment in certain specialized high technology areas such as transport aircraft, aircraft engines and parts, navigation and communication equipment, flight simulators, sonar equipment as well as sub-assemblies and components. Procurement of such equipment in Canada for export assists in maintaining the defence industrial base, as well as assisting manufacturers to penetrate civil markets with products whose manufacture utilizes the expertise and technology acquired in the production of defence equipment.

6. While Canada may, from time to time, select for technical and economic reasons military equipment and systems which have been designed abroad such systems once acquired are under Canadian direction and control.

AIR CANADA PASSES

Question No. 2,315—Mr. Cossitt: (Supplementary)

What are the names of any members of families of the Prime Minister or Cabinet Ministers who have held passes at any time on Air Canada since April 20, 1968 and, in each case, on how many occasions have such passes been used?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: Records of passes issued by Air Canada are retained for only two years following the year of pass issuance, in accordance with Canadian Government requirements. Records for the years 1973 and 1974 are currently held by the airline. A list is attached of family members of Cabinet Ministers who were issued individual member passes during 1973, 1974. The wife and children of the Prime Minister hold term or "annual" passes with no restriction on the number of times they may be used. It would be a difficult task, requiring an inordinate amount of clerical time for searching, to determine the number of occasions these passes have been used. Trip passes are rarely returned for cancellation and it is usually assumed that they have been used. 1973, Pass Issues—Wives of Cabinet Ministers: Mrs. R. K. Andras, Mrs. W. Allmand, Mrs. S. R. Basford, Mrs. E. J. Benson, Mrs. J. Chrétien, Mrs. J. E. Dubé, Mrs. A. W. Gillespie, Mrs. H. Gray, Mrs. D. Jamieson, Mrs. M. Lalonde, Mrs. O. E. Lang, Mrs. L. Lamoureux, Mrs. J. Marchand, Mrs. P. Martin, Mrs. J. Munro, Mrs. D. Macdonald, Mme. A. Ouellet, Mrs. G. Pelletier, Mr. M. Sauvé, Mrs. R. Stanbury, Mrs. E. Whelan; 1974, May 15, 1975 Pass Issues—Family Members of Cabinet Ministers: Mrs. R. K. Andras, Mrs. W. Allmand, Mrs. S. R. Basford, Mrs. J. Buchanan, Mrs. J. Chrétien, Mrs. B. Danson, Mrs. J. E. Dubé, Mrs. H. Faulkner, Mrs. A. W. Gillespie, Mrs. H. Gray, Mrs. S. Haidasz, Mrs. D. Jamieson, Mrs. J. Jerome, Mrs. O. E. Lang, Mrs. J. Marchand, Mrs. P. Martin, Mrs. J. Munro, Mrs. D. LEGAL AGENTS RETAINED IN CONSTITUENCY OF YORK-SIMCOE, 1971-74

Question No. 2,406—Mr. Stevens:

For each year 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974, what amount was paid to members of the legal profession in the Constituency of York Simcoe by the (a) Department of Justice (b) Department of National Health and Welfare (i) Health Protection Programme (ii) Food and Drug Programme (c) Veterans Land Act Administration (d) Solicitor General (e) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, including any fees paid by mortgagees out of the proceeds of CMHC funded mortgages and, in each case, what was the name and address of the lawyer?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Justice and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: (a), (b), (c) and (d), None. (e) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation retained the lawyers listed below to handle mortgage documentation for loans approved in 1971 to 1974 in the Northern part of York County and the Southern part of Simcoe County. (Townships of King, Whitchurch, East Gwillimbury, North Gwillimbury, Adjala, Essa, Flos, West Gwillimbury, Innisfil, Medonte, Oro, Tecumseth, Tosorontio, Vespra.) 1971, Ross B. Linton, Newmarket. R. Noel Bates, Barrie. 1972, 1973, 1974, Harvey J. Bliss, Toronto. John A. Coates, Toronto. R. Noel Bates, Barrie. C. L. Wilson, Q.C., Barrie. Legal fees in connection with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation direct loans are paid by the borrowers, and CMHC, therefore, has no record of the amounts paid to these lawyers. The following lawyers were retained to handle legal actions for 1971 to 1974 for loans approved for the Northern part of York County and Southern part of Simcoe County: 1971—1974, D. M. de Monte, Q.C., Toronto. MacKinnon, McTaggart, Toronto. D. S. Sugg, Barrie. Where actions are settled prior to trial, the costs are paid by the borrower and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has no records of the amounts. The basic geographical units for the compilation of CMHC data are the municipality and county, and not Federal electoral constituencies. The data are governed by individual loans approved under the various sections of the National Housing Act, and not by the places of those who provide professional services.

DREE—GRANTS TO ENTERPRISES IN CONSTITUENCY OF TÉMISCAMINGUE

Question No. 2,507—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. In the past ten years, how much has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion paid to enterprises in the Constituency of Témiscamingue?

2. How many projects received grants and, in each case, what was the amount involved?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1 and 2. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has paid money to enterprises in the Constituency of Témiscamingue under the ARDA program and through its regional development incentives program. As regards ARDA II, no request was made between 1965-66 and 1969-70. The total paid during the years 1970-71 and 1974-75 under the ARDA III program for agriculture and forestry projects was $4,000,239. The amount paid for projects connected with tourism, mining and industry under the ARDA III program during the period 1970-75 was $1,677,944. The total amount of grants offered and accepted under the industrial grants program (RDIA) was $9,794,955. The grand total amounts to $15,473,138.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCES—EXPENDITURES FOR SUPPLIES

Question No. 2,523—Mr. Cossitt:

Since April 20, 1968, what was the total of public funds spent at the (a) Prime Minister's official residence, 24 Sussex Drive (b) Prime Minister's summer residence, Harrington Lake, for (i) supplies, including food (ii) alcoholic beverages?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): See Appendix "Q", Issue No. 36, dated May 20, 1975, of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. The supplies column includes food, cleaning materials, non alcoholic beverages, etc. The sundries column includes, among other items, alcoholic beverages for official entertainment purposes. Over the past seven years, the purchase of alcoholic beverages for purpose stated averages $2,055 per annum. It should be noted that the expenditures listed in Appendix "Q" referred to above have been paid annually from government funds since fiscal year 1951-52.

CNR HOTELS—HIGH LOSSES AND LOW RATES OF RETURN

Question No. 2,550—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What are the reasons for the high losses and the low rates of return on constructed investment realized by CN Hotel (a) Beauséjour, which lost $388,491 in 1973 and $96,588 in 1974 (b) Fort Garry, which lost $186,091 in 1971, $265,868 in 1972, $157,460 in 1973 and $160,218 in 1974 (c) Macdonald, whose rate of return has ranged from 0.2 to 0.5% during the past four years (d) Nova Scotian, which lost $277,120 in 1974 compared to a $178,267 profit in 1973?

2. Is it expected that the hotels will become profitable enterprises and, if so, on what date?

3. What steps are presently being considered towards achieving profitability?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. (a) During the first two years special expenses were incurred associated with the opening of this hotel. (b), (c), (d) The unsatisfactory results of these three hotels are directly attributable to the increased competition from new hotel construction by others and from improvements to the CN hotels to keep them competitive with the new properties.

2. Except for the Fort Garry, on the basis of present estimates all hotels are expected to become profitable within the next two or three years.

3. General and specific promotion of the hotel chain, completion of renovation programs, and expansion of certain revenue producing facilities.

INCREASE IN BUDGET DND FOR PURPOSE OF SERVICING DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 2,606—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the government given any consideration to increasing the budget of DND for the purpose of servicing the requirements of other departments in remote sensing field using the DASH-7 and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, what is the result of the consideration?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): The government has considered but has not yet decided the desirability of having DND provide remote sensing services, using the DASH-7, to other departments.

CBC—FUNDS ALLOCATED ANNUALLY

Question No. 2,630—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. What amounts have been allocated annually by the government to the operation of CBC for the English and French networks since their inception?

2. What average percentage of the taxpayers' income tax do the amounts represent?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. The government approves the allocation of annual funds to the CBC, but this is a total amount for the capital and operating costs of the Corporation and is not divided into specific amounts for French and English language activities of the CBC. The figures listed below include the amounts from receiving licence fees, broadcast licence fees, excise tax on receiving sets and parts and grants. For the period 1965-74 inclusive, loans received for capital construction were included, but excluded were the amounts provided in operating grants for the repayment of the loans.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—CONTRACTS AWARDED TO SECUREX LIMITED, MONTREAL

Question No. 2,644—Mr. MacKay:

1. In the years 1973, 1974 and 1975, were any contracts awarded by the Department of the Solicitor General to Securex Limited of Montreal and, if so (a) in what amounts (b) for what periods (c) for what specific services?

2. In each case, were tenders called and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, who were the other firms who submitted tenders and did Securex submit the lowest bid?

3. Were any contracts awarded to Securex terminated before the expiry date and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Nil.

PURCHASE OF AIRCRAFT

Question No. 2,685—Mr. Forrestall:

Does the government, as a matter of policy, require departments other than DND to contribute towards the capital cost of purchasing aircraft which will be operated by DND but will be available for use by departments in the pursuit of their respective objectives and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, on what date was the policy announced and where may it be obtained?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): No. DND aircraft are provided primarily to meet the operational requirements of the Department and are financed from the DND capital budget.

PURCHASE OF ARGUS AIRCRAFT

Question No. 2,688—Mr. Forrestall:

Will the government require departments other than DND to contribute towards the capital costs of acquiring a replacement for the Argus aircraft and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so (i) which departments (ii) on what basis (iii) what is the present estimate of such contribution, if any?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Current policy is to finance procurement from the capital budget of the department having the primary need for the aircraft. In the case of the replacement for the Argus Aircraft, the government is now considering the desirability of charging to other departments the costs of additional DND aircraft procured to meet their needs.

PRODUCTION OF MOVIE "SWEET MOVIE"

Question No. 2,698—Mr. Woolliams:

Who authorized the production of the movie "Sweet Movie" in which the Canadian Film Development Corporation invested $115,000 (a) where was it filmed and produced (b) were the participants Canadian actors and actresses and, if not, what nationality were they (c) in what cities in Canada, if any was it shown?

Hon. Hugh James Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: "Sweet Movie" was produced by two independent companies: Mojack Films (a Canadian Company) and V.M. Productions (a French Company). (a) France, Holland and Canada. (b) Some Canadian actors and actresses were included in the cast; the majority came from Holland and France. (c) In Montreal.

CFDC INVESTMENT IN FILM "SWEET MOVIE"

Question No. 2,699—Mr. MacLean:

1. Has the Canadian Film Development Corporation an investment in the film "Sweet Movie" and, if so, what is the amount of such investment?

2. Was the investment approved by the Advisory Committee to the Corporation?

3. What are the criteria applied when judging the suitability of a film before it is chosen to be subsidized or invested in by the Canadian taxpayer?

4. Is the nondiscriminatory policy of the Corporation so extreme that it is impossible for them to distinguish between cinematic artistry and perversion?

Hon. Hugh James Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: 1. Yes. The Corporation does not disclose the amount of its investments in individual feature films.

2. The investment was approved by the members of the Corporation.

3. The members and the staff of the Corporation take into consideration the scenario of the proposed film, the previous experience of the proposed producer and director, the cast, the budget, the distribution arrangements and other financial details before it decides to invest in any project which is proposed to it.

FOREST PRODUCTS TERMINAL, SAINT JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 2,771—Mr. Landers:

With respect to the government's commitment to complete the forest products terminal in Saint John, New Brunswick (a) on what date will Treasury Board sit down with the National Harbours Board and complete the financial details (b) will tenders be called?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): The government has not made a commitment to complete the forest products terminal in Saint John, New Brunswick. (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable.

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT TAX MONEY SPENT BY CFDC ON "SWEET MOVIE"

Question No. 2,803—Mr. Jones:

1. How much government tax money was used by the Canadian Film Development Corporation for the production of the movie "Sweet Movie"?

2. Is this an example of how the permissive attitude of government is wasting hundreds of thousands of dollars on insane, filthy productions?

3. When is this policy of the government going to stop?

Hon. Hugh James Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. I am advised by the Canadian Film Development Corporation that it is not its policy to make public the amount of its investment in an individual film.

2. To attempt to answer part 2 would be to accept the premise on which the question is posed, which the government does not do.

2. In each case, what was the date of the original employment or commencement of contract?

Hon. Hugh James Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. (a) (i) and (ii) Nil. (b) (i) and (ii) Nil.

2. Not applicable.

BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY DISTURBANCE JUNE 9-11, 1975

Question No. 2,836—Mr. Reynolds:

With reference to section 214(2) of the Criminal Code, have the three inmates at the British Columbia Penitentiary involved in the disturbance between June 9 and 11, 1975, that led to the death of Mary Steinhauser, been charged with capital murder and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): From the information available at this time with reference to this particular case, it appears that the decision as to whether these persons will be charged and as to what charges will be laid against them is under consideration by the crown attorney.

PUBLIC SERVICE—APPOINTMENTS TO BILINGUAL POSITIONS

During the calendar year 1974, of the 19,773 appointments by the Public Service Commission to bilingual positions (a) what percentage of the 10,900 (55.1%) appointees who claimed French as their preferred working language (b) what percentage of the 8,873 (44.9%) appointees who claimed English as their preferred working language were considered competently bilingual upon appointment to the bilingual positions?

Hon. Hugh James Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: (a) Of the 55.1 per cent appointees who claimed French as their preferred working language, 95.5 per cent were bilingual upon appointment to the bilingual positions. (b) Of the 44.9 per cent appointees who claimed English as their preferred working language, 68.8 per cent were bilingual upon appointment to the bilingual positions.

CANADA'S ASSISTANCE TO UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

Question No. 2,477—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

1. For the past five years, to which under-developed countries has Canada given assistance and, in each case (a) what was the amount of the contribution (b) what was the amount of the loans (c) what was the interest rate?

2. What type of technical assistance has been extended to such countries (a) what was the amount of the contribution in each case (b) what was the purpose of assistance?

3. What type of academic assistance has been extended to such countries (a) what was the amount of the contribution in each case (b) to what academic levels was the assistance directed?

4. What were the amounts of Canada's contributions to such countries through international associations or agencies of which this country is a member?

Return tabled.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to object to the request of the parliamentary secretary. I take exception to the manner in which question No. 2,764 is to be answered. I point out that the question is of considerable public interest. The very purpose of asking that question was to have placed on the public record the manner in which various countries of the United Nations are keeping their commitments for the agreed, universal sharing of costs of the United Nations peacekeeping effort in the Middle East. The figures will demonstrate that even the great powers are tens of millions of dollars in arrears under their obligations to finance these peackeeping operations.

Canada is one of the very few countries of the world which contributes to these forces. It is our obligation to our own taxpayers, to those of other countries and to the participants in these forces to bring to public and world attention, and particularly to the attention of this parliament, the degree of good faith with which countries have undertaken those obligations to finance the forces and the progress they are making in keeping up those financial commitments.

I draw to the parliamentary secretary's attention the fact that a similar question, No. 2,438, relating to the state of affairs as of April 30, 1975, has not been answered. The question being answered relates to the state of affairs at the end of May, 1975. My question No. 2,909 relates to the state of affairs at the end of June. I give notice that I intend to continue placing similar questions on the order paper so that there will be an opportunity to know at the end of each month what is the state of affairs. This month, at least, I believe it is important for the answer to be treated in the normal way. It is not excessively long in relation to many answers which have appeared in Hansard in the past and I ask that it be treated in the usual way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can withhold his agreement when the parliamentary secretary asks if his question is to be treated as an order for return. We have been over this difficulty previously. Sometimes hon. members are not fully forewarned that questions which are to be transferred and treated as orders for return are their questions. In the circumstances, perhaps the proper solution would be for hon. members to consent to treating the answer to the question which was deemed to have been made an order for return as if it had been read and, accordingly, to consent to its being transcribed in Hansard in the usual way. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

UNITED NATIONS FORCES—ACCOUNTS

Question No. 2,764—Mr. Stanbury:

As of May 31, 1975 (a) what amount was owing by each country in arrears of payment of the special United Nations assessment for maintenance of the UN Emergency Force and the UN Disengagement Observer Force in the Middle East (b) how much has Canada received on account of its contributions to these forces (c) what amount is owing to Canada on this Account?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): (a) The arrears owing by members of the United Nations in respect of assessments for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force in the Middle East, as of May 31, 1975, are shown on the attached list. (b) As of May 31, 1975, Canada had received $3,636,548 from the United Nations as reimbursement for personnel and air support costs incurred in connection with peacekeeping operations in the Middle East. (c) Canada has submitted bills in the amount of $3,902,414 in respect of personnel costs and material and services supplied to the United Nations. The United Nations has agreed upon a formula of $500 per man per month, of which it has made payments on account of $400 per man per month for the first six months of the operation and $200 for the second six months. It is not possible to give a definitive figure for the total amount owing to Canada, since negotiations are continuing between the troop contributors and the United Nations Secretariat on the qualifications for specialist pay and the modalities of reimbursement for the provision of certain material and services by Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I overlooked the motion standing under motions on the order paper in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp).

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to second it.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the motion is to stand. May we consider the motion as having been called?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, why should it stand? I believe, if the minister were to ask for unanimous consent, it would pass now, without debate.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as long as we pass Bill C-66 and Bill C-2, we will agree.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No way!

Mr. Baldwin: Let's not have blackmail.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, July 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 7416).

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House long on this matter. I will have other opportunities during the days that lie ahead to participate one way or another in this debate.

An hon. Member: You mean in the weeks ahead.

Mr. Baldwin: I am pleased to observe members on the government side intervening. I have listened to some of their contributions and read others. Although they are totally unconvincing as to logic and fact, and although their findings, arguments, submissions and conclusions are asinine, it is interesting to note that they are being driven by the wave of outrage and indignation from their constituents to take part in the debate. That wave of outrage and indignation is finally compelling them to become involved in the debate and answer some of our logical observations. In these warm and mellow summer months we may observe that this will be a debate in which both sides of the House participate. Until a few days ago that was not the case.

Mr. Stanfield: And we have lots of time.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not intend to deal, basically, with the substance of the excise tax. That subject has been dealt with by other hon. members. It has already been demonstrated beyond doubt that this is a wicked, iniquitous measure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Nor will I associate myself with the completely false suggestion made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that this measure involves certain elements of energy conservation. That is one of the most stupid, one of the most ridiculous arguments I have ever heard advanced in this House—and I am not forgetting the many demonstrations of stupidity and ignorance from time to time on the part of the front benches opposite. I wish to direct the attention of the House to one phase of this bill which has been neglected. Hopefully, I can do this before one o'clock. I refer to the matter of exemptions and the question of who should receive rebates.

● (1250)

A cursory examination of what has happened with regard to this measure shows the improvisation, the hasty, ill-conceived, badly prepared and poorly digested nature of this bill which the Minister of Finance took to cabinet with the paste still dripping off it. It was a scissors-and-paste job if there ever was one. I formed those views on examination of the ways and means motion purely for the purposes of comparison. I dealt with this partly the other day in argument to Mr. Speaker. Paragraph 3 of the ways and means motion, (a) to (g) inclusive, lists seven areas where there should be exemptions. I ask hon. members of this House to observe the classes of people who are entitled to apply for and receive exemptions and rebates.

When we examine the original bill, not the reprint ordered by Mr. Speaker, clause 5(4) on page 3, in describing the categories and classes of people and corporations entitled to a rebate refers to paragraphs (a) to (j). In other words, when this bill came before cabinet, in addition to those classes that appear in the ways and means motion there were four other classes which the minister had recommended to cabinet as being available for rebate from the payment of the tax and had included them in the bill. This is quite plain, because clause 5 dealing with the amendment to section 47.1 of the Excise Tax Act has paragraphs (a) to (f). Paragraph (f) is the one which Mr. Speaker ordered to be thrown out. This leaves only five groups.

I point this out simply to establish that the people and corporations suggested as being entitled to a rebate were included so hastily that when the bill came before cabinet there was that degree of uncertainty about it. Cabinet or a cabinet committee obviously changed it materially, throwing out four of the categories and substituting the one which was included in the original bill, namely, those people and corporations covered by section 149 of the Income Tax Act.

I wish to take one minute to show the absolute absurdity of suggesting that those classes enumerated under section 149 of the Income Tax Act be covered. I will read very briefly from the headings in that particular section:

—a municipality in Canada—

That is fine. It was set out in the original ways and means motion and, of course, was carried forward by this section of the Income Tax Act.

—an agricultural organization, a board of trade or a chamber of commerce ... a charitable organization ... a corporation that was constituted exclusively for charitable purposes ... a trust all the property of which is held absolutely in trust ... the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, incorporated by chapter 75 of the Statutes of Canada ... a corporation that was constituted exclusively for the purpose of providing low-cost housing accommodation ... a corporation that was constituted exclusively for the purpose of carrying on or promoting scientific research ... a labour organization or society or a benevolent or fraternal benefit society or order ... a mutual insurance corporation ... a limited-dividend housing corporation ... a trust or corporation established or incorporated solely in connection with, or for the administration of, a registered pension fund or plan—

It goes on ad nauseam. I suggest that at the time the hasty insertion was made in cabinet of this particular clause from the Income Tax Act in place of those clauses which the cabinet had thrown out, absolutely no thought was given to this most important matter of who should be entitled to receive rebates of this tax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: This goes to the root of the matter. This is a tax of several hundred million dollars. Several classes of people should be entitled to receive rebates of the payment of that tax. Surely, when the Minister of Finance comes to this House he should have something better prepared than he had with regard to this particular question. It was a contempt of this House of Commons for the minister to come here with a bill in the form it was, asking this House to approve it. The bill should not have been brought into this House unless and until the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) had put together a properly conceived program for those people entitled to rebates and the method to be adopted for paying them. Anything else should not be acceptable to this House and is not acceptable to this party.

In conclusion, I say to those who are attempting to blackmail and shove this bill forward by saying that no rebates can be paid, that that is not the case. Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act shows that there is now in place in the Statutes of Canada a method by which rebates can be made without this legislation being passed. I do not suggest the use of that particular procedure any more frequently than need be. However, when we are being blackmailed and told we must pass this bill promptly because there is no way in which people can get rebates, I say that is not so; I give the lie to those who make that assertion and say there is a method by which it can be done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in introducing the excise tax of ten cents a gallon for private automobile use of gasoline, the government has clearly indicated its failure to develop a comprehensive energy policy or even outline the bare bones of what might take place in the future. It is a tax which it will be difficult to impose fairly; it is a tax which is almost impossible to apply without "working a fiddle", as the saying goes; it is a tax which is so unfair that it does not include all those who travel, and at the same time does not allow the inclusion of those who have no alternative form of travel such as rapid transit. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, if it is a tax designed to serve in the conservation of the environment, then it should apply to airplane travel as well as to the automobile.

Canada shares, along with Australia, the distinction of being the only industrialized country to increase its consumption of petroleum products last year. In the United States, the use of petroleum products dropped in 1974 by 4.5 per cent over 1973. This was at a time when we were reducing exports to the United States to conserve our own dwindling supplies and, to make matters much worse, when we were faced with a massive balance of payments deficit of upward of $6 billion, imports of petroleum making up a good percentage of this deficit. The use of petroleum products in the United States is currently being reduced but our use of petroleum products is increasing particularly in areas which are dependent upon offshore supplies.

In Canada there was an over-all rise of 1 per cent, with gasoline consumption rising by 2.8 per cent and gas diesel oil by 4.1 per cent. The consumption of fuel oil dropped by 8.6 per cent, which may well have reflected the mild winter or an effort at conservation on the part of individuals. The decline in the United States was the first in 32 years and it is said to result from the combined effects of product scarcity induced by the Arab embargo, warm weather in the early months, energy conservation efforts, higher product prices and a slowdown in the economy. Most of these factors apply to Canada, but prices were not so high and there was no lead toward conservation.

Today we received the announcement of the second phase of the foreign investment review legislation whose effect will be to further increase our balance of payments problems by discouraging investment in this country. There may well be good reason there should be selective investment in this country, but we do need to remember that we have a balance of payments deficit of $6 billion this year and it is forecast confidently that it will amount to at least $4.7 billion in 1976. Analysis of these figures suggests that Canadians are more aware of the need for conservation of our limited natural resources than are our governments. The crucial shortage in Canada in the energy field is leadership, both by the federal government and by other governments.

Mr. Speaker, this tax is directly brought about by the decline of exports to the United States, with resulting lessening of the yield of the tax to offset the cost of increased imports for Quebec and the maritime provinces. In effect, the government is charging the motoring public world prices for oil which amounts to 25 per cent or so of our total usage. But none of this tax will go to the producing provinces and none will go to the industry to find new sources of gas and oil. Indeed, the yield of this tax may well be used to fund Petro-Can by which the government intends to further intrude upon provincial rights and further intrude on the private oil industry. The minister could well have found enough money merely by withdrawing the activities of Petro-Can and Information Canada; by this means he would have found enough money to pay for the subsidy to eastern consumers.

Nevertheless, if there is any merit in this tax it would be that it signals a retreat from the position that there can be for any length of time a two-price system for oil and gas in Canada much below the world price, or at least the North American price. The use of the two-price system, particularly for diminishing resources like oil and gas, only encourages wasteful use, and industry becomes uneconomic. When finally it is exposed to world trading, it feels the blows; there is diminished activity in exploration and a lessening of the drive to find alternative sources of energy or to use those alternative sources.

The Science Council of Canada pointed out that we use the equivalent of 55 per cent of oil in energy, making us the second highest per capita users in the world. The factors listed as responsible for this high demand are our climate, our sparse population, a historically low price for energy, and our high standard of living extending to a proliferation of gadgets and benefits.

By resorting to this tax, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) can only further antagonize the producing provinces as well as the consuming provinces. The producing provinces in the west might well complain that their diminishing resources are being sold at lower than competitive prices for which they will receive nothing in return. The producing provinces rightfully have a grievance here, even if they have been too greedy in their demands on the new value of oil. Alberta decided to take two-thirds of the new value of oil and gas, while Saskatchewan and British Columbia decided they should get almost all, with little or nothing for the producers.

The federal government's decision that Canadians should be insulated from much of the increase in OPEC costs was to hold western oil at a level of $6.50 per barrel. In November of 1974, the federal government put into effect a drastic move proposed in May of that year. It disallowed as an expense to oil, gas and other mineral producers every penny of the stiff royalties and other collections being taken by the provinces. The double-taxation measure levies income tax on resource companies in respect of money they do not receive. It drains away a sizeable part of the cash flow left to Alberta producers and leaves Saskatchewan and B.C. in an even worse position than before the OPEC price boost.

Alberta has made some move toward continuing exploration and development, but Saskatchewan and British Columbia have made only minor concessions. Ottawa is now in a spot of its own making. The export tax revenue has been sharply reduced as the government has overpriced Alberta and Saskatchewan oil in the United States market while restricting western production to the current 500,000 barrels a day, the low capacity in order to stretch out reserves for future eastern Canadian needs, and the Minister of Finance now has to charge ten cents a gallon to all the motoring public to maintain his eastern subsidy. All these manipulations by the federal and provincial governments—and the November budget was one of the worst factors—have meant reduced capital for exploration and development.

The increase in the field price of $1.50 per barrel, in the absence of some important changes in producer provinces and federal policies, simply adds to government revenues and leaves little for the industry. It is estimated that royalties and tax in the Alberta production would absorb 75 per cent of any price increase, and Saskatchewan and B.C. production would actually result in governments taking more than 100 per cent.

The recent budget changes of the Minister of Finance will not materially affect the incentive to producers to continue exploration. The Canadian petroleum industry now faces a jungle of rules and regulations, incentives and rebates. It is becoming the most complex system in the world with its mish-mash of federal and provincial schemes. The $1.50 increase per barrel was estimated to return to the industry anything from zero to 40 cents, depending on how you figured it.

The plight of our oil industry can be summed up in a letter written to the shareholders of Madison Oils Limited by its president. Madison Oils is a small Canadian oil company, 99 per cent owned by Canadians, in which all governments have said they are interested. The president said:

The year 1974 will be remembered by all involved in the Canadian oil industry as the year in which the industry got caught in the midst of the dispute between the provincial governments of the oil producing provinces and the dominion government... a dispute in which both parties appear to have completely lost sight of the fact that in order to survive the industry must be allowed a return on investment commensurate with the risks taken.

Governments have abandoned long-standing approaches to taxing the industry and in their haste to grab the profits have also imposed double taxation on the industry. In Madison's case the production from two properties in Saskatchewan produced 5,124 barrels of oil during the period 1st January, 1974, and 30 April, 1975. This sold for a total of $30,970. Madison paid operating costs of $5,860 and royalties and other payments to the Saskatchewan government totalling $13,400—leaving the company with a mere $11,710—38 per cent of the gross. On top of this, since the oil is exported, the dominion government, via the "export tax" shaved off about $5 per barrel, taking a total of almost $26,000 and raising the price to the buyer to a total of approximately $57,000 on which basis Madison's share amounted to just over 20 per cent. Owing to the new double taxation rules the payments to the Saskatchewan government, lost to the company, are considered taxable income... so that for income tax purposes Madison is subject to tax on $11,710 plus $13,710; taxed at 45 per cent the payment due is $11,300—which were Madison in a taxable position (due to past losses we are not)—would leave Madison with $410 and the dominion government with $37,300. Had pre-1974 patterns continued we would, on the same oil, sold at the same price to the buyer, have been subject to royalty at 12½ per cent or so with the following result... total return, $57,000, operating costs, $5,860, royalty $7,125—leaving Madison with $44,815—instead of the pre-tax return of $11,710 which we received—a difference of $32,000 which would have permitted us to drill and complete one well somewhere, with the possibility of a discovery bringing us new income.

I think that sums up what this government has done to the oil industry. In the report of the Energy Board on Canadian natural gas supply and requirements recently tabled in the House, the board, which is a government appointed group, had this to say at page 84:

—a lack of adequate growth in deliverability resulting from low finding rates and from a lack of incentive for producers to explore for and develop new reserves because of inadequate and uncertain netback. Producers have moved drilling rigs and personnel to the United States and other areas where opportunities at this time appear to be more attractive. The decline in exploration and development activity starting two or more years ago is now being reflected in fewer reserves being available to maintain deliverability.

Further, they say:

An essential component of a solution to the problem of deliverability would appear to be a known system of pricing and a stable system of royalties and taxation adequate to provide producers with the incentive to carry out vigorous exploration and development programs.

Further, at page 86:

A further problem relates to the competition of the United States in particular, and the energy-short world in general, for drilling rigs, skilled personnel and investment funds. The uncertainty and lack of economic incentive on the Canadian scene in the past two years and the large exploration and development program under way in the United States under more favourable incentives, have caused an exodus of equipment, men and money south of the border.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

This tax has been made necessary only because the government has mismanaged the oil industry, and it is a tax that is most unpopular. It hits one segment of the motoring public that uses oil but is unfair in that it penalizes individuals who might live in areas where there is no public transport and who need their automobiles for daily commuting. It will bear more heavily on those who live in rural areas and must of necessity use their automobiles for even daily living, like trips to the grocery store.

If it has any value whatsoever, it must mean that the government should move within reason toward the world price for our highly valued oil and gas that are so very desirable. A two-price system has not prevented us from entry into a recessionary phase from which we may well be a long time emerging. Even today the industrial index has not bottomed out, and all indications are that Canada will lag far behind the United States in returning to a full-time industrial position.

During this coming recession it may well be necessary to raise the price of oil and gas to world levels, or even above, in order to encourage exploration and development of our energy sources. But, most of all, the federal government along with the provincial governments have not worked out a taxation structure that will likely ensure us a reasonably secure supply in the next few years.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on budget night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) introduced a special excise tax on gasoline purchased for personal use. This ten cents a gallon tax is imposed on the producers and importers of gasoline and will be passed on to the consumer in its entirety. Provision will be made to refund the full amount of the tax on gasoline used for farming, fishing, construction, mining and most forms of commercial transportation.

There are a number of objectionable features to this tax with which I shall deal in a moment, but I suggest we cannot simply look at the tax alone. We have to look at the full range of proposals to change taxes which the minister has made and which I maintain will go a long way, by the time they are implemented, to wipe out most of the improvements in our social security system made by Liberal and Conservative governments over the last 25 years.

Let me make reference to some of the proposals of the minister. The hospital insurance plan, which was first begun by the province of Saskatchewan under a CCF government, was made a national plan really by a Conservative government which agreed to pay 50 per cent of a universal hospitalization plan that was implemented by a province. The minister has given notice that as soon as he can, the federal government will cease to pay the 50 per cent of the cost of hospitalization which it has paid since the commencement of the plan.

Similarly, in the case of medical insurance a number of provinces, particularly the province of Ontario, were, to say the least, loth to come into a medical insurance scheme. They thought that their people were adequately protected by the various voluntary plans in existence, and they felt that all they wanted from Ottawa was help in covering those people who had not seen their way clear to joining a voluntary plan. At that time the federal government said—and I know they were right—that that was not good enough, that we must have a universal plan, one to which every citizen of a province belongs and by which he will receive protection against medical costs.

This was to be, and has been until now, a shared-cost program, with the federal government and the province each paying half. Now the minister has given notice that as soon as he can—which I think will be by 1985—Ottawa will no longer pay that 50 per cent, that there will be a limit on the amount Ottawa will pay in any year. If the increase in the actual cost is more than the federal government is prepared to pay, then obviously the provinces will have to meet the increase or cut the standard of services. The province of Manitoba calculates that its cost by the year 1985 to cover the shortfall from Ottawa for hospital and medical insurance will be between $40 million and $50 million a year. We should keep in mind that this is one of the smaller provinces.

Ottawa has been paying 50 per cent of the cost of post-secondary education, but this year that payment is being limited, in respect of an increase in any year, to a ceiling of 15 per cent. This year the provinces will receive $118½ million less than they would have received had the government not unilaterally imposed this ceiling. It is interesting to see that the province of Manitoba is hit the hardest. The province of Quebec, which has been faithful to the Liberal Party in electing members of parliament, this year will lose $82 million because of this unilateral decision of the federal government. The province of British Columbia will lose $20.7 million this year as a result of the decision to put a limit on the increase in respect of grants for post-secondary education.

We have heard much from Liberal prime ministers and Liberal ministers of national health and welfare about how great the Canada Assistance Plan is and the fact that it was a Liberal government which encouraged the provinces to consolidate and rationalize their social security programs under the Canada Assistance Plan. Ottawa paid 50 per cent of the cost. Now Ottawa says, quite unilaterally, that the days of the Canada Assistance Program are numbered. The federal government now proposes to replace the Canada Assistance Plan with a new series of acts including a proposed social services act. Under that act, the position of the federal government is that unless a province meets national guidelines it will not be permitted to receive 50 per cent of the cost of its programs from the federal government. That is a very worth-while objective.

If the provincial standards are lower than the standards set by the federal government, this would not be desirable, if this is one country in which we should have minimum standards which apply to every citizen regardless of where he lives. This limitation will also apply to any provinces which have programs in respect of which the standards are higher than the standards Ottawa has set for those provinces, so that the citizens of such provinces will begin to suffer as soon as Ottawa puts its intention into effect.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has been travelling from one end of the country to the other, talking very eloquently about income support programs and supplementation programs which the federal government proposes and in which they want the provinces to co-operate with them. Not once has the minister been willing to sit down with the provinces and estimate, with them, the cost of these programs. The programs about which he is talking may be good programs, but in light of what the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) intend to do with the shared-cost programs, it is not surprising that the provinces are at least suspicious.

Ottawa's timetable is very restrictive. The policy under the Canada Assistance Plan will go into effect in 1976-77, but the income supplementation program for the working poor, about which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been talking, will not become effective until 1978. The time to protect people against inflation is now. The time to stimulate the economy is now. Now, when we have an unemployment figure of 8 per cent, is the time we need assistance. Yet now is the time when the federal government is beginning to put the screws on and is turning them very hard.

Let me speak for a few moments about another proposal of the minister. I refer to the proposal to increase the unemployment insurance premium. We have heard a great deal, from one end of the country to the other, both inside and outside parliament, about the supposed rip-off of the unemployment insurance plan by people who really do not want to work. I have said before, and I say again, that I am sure there are some who fall into that category. I think in cases where such people are found, they should be weeded out so that they do not receive benefits. I believe the number of people receiving benefits to which they are not entitled is not very large. I would not have been surprised had the minister come forward with proposals to try to tighten up the qualifications for benefits so that people who really are not trying to find work would not be able to obtain benefits. Although I would not have been enthused by such a proposal, I would not have been surprised.

The proposal we have from the minister, and I presume from the government as a whole, is that the premiums be increased in respect of all the people, including those who work regularly, the people with steady jobs. These people will have to pay more money every payday. These people form the backbone of this plan. Those who work regularly will have to pay for the benefits of the unemployed who to a large extent are a result of the economic policies designed by the government to create more unemployment. It could not have been a more unfair or a more regressive proposal. The minister, in effect, is taxing the wrong people through this increased unemployment insurance premium.

Let us look at the tax on gasoline. I said that it is regressive. It makes no difference whether the person concerned has an income of $6,000 a year, $30,000 a year or $60,000 a year; he or she will have to pay ten cents extra, in the form of an excise tax, on every gallon of gas used, with the exception that some people who are able to prove to the satisfaction of the Department of National Revenue that they use their cars for business will be able to obtain a refund of part of the excise tax. The percentage of the refund these people receive will depend on the type of deduction they make in respect of automobile expenses for purposes of calculating their income tax.

This means that a doctor can probably get a refund of this tax, so can a lawyer, an architect or a salesman. They can all get refunds on all or part of this tax. But what about the worker who has no other means of getting to work except driving his car? He has no chance at all, although he is probably in the $6,000 or $7,000 a year category, as compared to the businessman who is in the $30,000 or $50,000 a year category. But, as has always been the case with Liberal governments and Liberal finance ministers, "to those that have shall be given."

One would have thought that if we are in a situation where it is obvious that we must begin to think about a more rational use of our resources—and one of the ways of conserving our resources would be to reduce the use of gasoline—we would have had an entirely different set of proposals from the minister. We should have had a serious attempt to implement, not wild ideas advanced by wide-eyed visionaries who have no practical experience with life or government, but the promises made by the Prime Minister in the election campaign last year.

Let me summarize a couple of speeches which the Prime Minister made, both of which were reported in the Montreal Gazette. On June 17, the Prime Minister, in a speech in Toronto, announced a $270 million program to aid public transit. He said the Liberal government would pay 100 per cent of the cost of Canadian-made commuter vehicles and 50 per cent of the cost of platforms and stations. The government would also pay 25 per cent of the cost of Canadian-manufactured vehicles for public transit within cities. Encouragement and assistance would be given to smaller municipalities in the creation of new transit systems. Canadian industry would be encouraged to develop passenger vehicles, and experimentation with new transit systems would be assisted by federal financing of demonstration projects.

The next day the Prime Minister was speaking in Cornwall, and he said that the Liberal government would take responsibility for rail passenger service out of the hands of CNR and CPR and entrust the task to a new Crown corporation. The corporation would run high-speed rail services in heavily populated areas such as the Windsor-Quebec City corridor, it would introduce luxurious transcontinental excursion trains and establish a super bus service between medium-sized cities.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Was that during the election?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes. Those were just two speeches the Prime Minister made. I wish I had more time to put on the record all the promises the Prime Minister made about what the Liberal government would do in the field of transportation. We have not seen hide nor hair of any of these promises. Has there been the slightest beginning in this respect? We do not have plans and proposals which would help the ordinary person. What we have is the kind of blunderbuss proposal that we are debating today, the ten cents tax on gasoline. One would think that ordinary citizens had a choice about whether or not they should use their cars. I will give just one illustration from my own city of Winnipeg because I know it best.

My son-in-law lives four miles due east of where he works. He can drive to work in the morning and drive back in the afternoon in less than ten minutes. But if he wanted to co-operate with the Minister of Finance and cut down on the use of his car, and if he wanted to use the public transit system, unfortunately for him the main direction of the transit system in the city of Winnipeg is not east-west but north-south. So if he wanted to go to work using the public transit system, he would have to take a bus, transfer twice, go all the way downtown and all the way back to his place of work. It would take him—I am speaking very cautiously and conservatively—about one hour and 15 minutes at the minimum, as compared to ten minutes by car.

Did the minister give any thought to that kind of problem? Of course not. All he was concerned about was to prove to the people of Canada that he was concerned about inflation. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), when he spoke yesterday said, in effect, "You people in the opposition who are criticizing this tax are not facing up to the fact that this great Liberal government is pledged to protect those parts of Canada which have to to be served by imported oil, and this will help to pay the cost of subsidizing their expensive oil". What is the cost of that subsidy? It is about $350 million. The hon. member for Scarborough West said that the minister had to find the money and that is what the tax is for.

It is a laudable desire. People in the maritime provinces, the people in Quebec and all the people east of the Ottawa River should have assistance in keeping the price of oil and gas down. But was that the only place from which the minister could get the money? I do not believe that for a moment, because if one looks at the minister's budget of November, 1974, and then at his budget of June, 1975, one finds two illustrations of alternatives which the minister could have used. In his November, 1974, budget the minister extended to all corporations the fast write-off provision for the purchase of equipment. The loss of revenue to the federal government from that one measure alone, according to the minister, himself, for this current year is over $500 million. In his budget of June, 1975, the minister introduced a new investment tax credit for corporations. This will lead to a further loss of revenue to the federal government of at least $200 million this year.

In these two provisions alone the minister gave up over $700 million in revenue this year—twice as much as the minister will get from his ten cents a gallon tax. I say that that tax was, and is, unnecessary; it will bear down hardest on the people who can least afford to pay it. What will the tax mean to the ordinary citizen? It has been calculated by economists, and not challenged by the government or the minister, that the ten cents a gallon excise tax and the $1.50 increase on a barrel of crude oil, which the minister is approving, will increase the cost by 2 per cent: it will cost the motorist who drives 15,000 miles a year, and who gets 20 miles to the gallon in his car, between $75 and $90 a year to drive his car. The $1.50 a barrel increase in the price of oil will cost him $35 to $40 a year, and the cost of heating his home will increase by $60 a year. This, I assume, is just for cities such as Ottawa, Toronto, and

Montreal and does not apply to cities such as Edmonton and Winnipeg where it is much colder, and it certainly does not apply to the northern part of Canada where it is necessary to heat a home for six or more months a year.

These are the effects this excise tax will have on the ordinary citizen in this country. I have already indicated that the minister could have obtained the extra revenue he needed by not going ahead with the extra goodies he promised to corporations in the last year or two. He could also have increased the income tax. At least in theory, income tax is a progressive tax, if one can ignore all the little gimmicks which permit people in the upper income brackets to avoid paying their fair share of tax. At least in principle income tax is collected from those who are best able to pay. But no, the minister had to apply this tax which is very regressive.

The minister expressed the hope that the excise tax, combined with the increase which will be at least 5 cents per gallon and probably more, would encourage motorists to make their driving habits more efficient in terms of saving gasoline. There is no hard evidence that such price increases have anything but a temporary effect on consumption. The Statistics Canada table entitled "Canadian Crude Oil Requirements—Anticipated and Actual Refinery Receipts of Crude Oil" show that the demand for crude oil by refineries has been increasing every year and that there is a rigidity in the present patterns of gasoline consumption. From 1971 to 1975 there was an increase in refinery production from 51 million barrels to 68 million barrels—an increase of over 25 per cent. While that was happening, the price of oil was increasing from $4 to $6.50 per barrel and now it will be increased to $8 per barrel.

I could understand this if there was evidence that the oil companies needed the increases they have received over the years. Let me remind the minister that in 1971 the oil companies were receiving between $2.80 and $2.90 per barrel for western oil. They were doing very well. They were arguing that they needed price increases to expand and to explore for new oil, and so on, and they were indicating that they needed price increases of the nature of ten cents per barrel, per year, for ten years. In other words, by 1981 they would have been looking for $3.80 per barrel. Mr. Speaker, it is not 1981, it is only 1975, and they already will be receiving $8 per barrel. They are doing this because this government has refused to get involved in planning to meet our needs. We do not really know what our oil reserves are. We have to go on from year to year depending essentially on the information we obtain from the oil companies. This information has fluctuated wildly, as it suited the oil companies, for their own good and for the good of the multinational owners of these corporations, but not for the good of Canadian citizens.

A former Liberal cabinet minister, Mr. Kierans, has pointed out that the Canadian Petroleum Association published misleading statements of Canadian oil and gas reserves in 1970 in order to encourage the federal government to authorize exports to the United States. He warned that we are in a desperate situation, which we are. That desperate situation was highlighted yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) in his announcement about new restrictions on the sale and distribution of natural gas. Mr. Kierans warned that we are in a desperate situation because of the massive amounts of oil which we in Canada sold to the United States at $3 per barrel until last year, and we must now develop it at a probable cost of $13.70 per barrel. In 1970 the Canadian Petroleum Association estimated that Canada had 125 billion barrels of oil and 725 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, when in fact we had only 7.7 billion barrels of oil and 52.5 trillion cubic feet of natural gas.

It was on the basis of that kind of information that the federal government and the National Energy Board allowed the export of up to 1.2 million barrels of oil per day and an additional 6 trillion cubic feet of natural gas to the United States in the early 1970s. Do we have any more real information now than we had in 1970 when the National Energy Board and the government permitted that disastrous sale at those ridiculous, disgracefully low prices to the United States—sales which had to be made if we were to honour contracts entered into? I am one of those who realizes that it is difficult, if not impossible, to back out of a contract made in good faith.

How did we make that decision? We made it on the recommendation of the National Energy Board. Did it have its own technical people, its own geologists, engineers and economists who were able to obtain the information and to assess it in a way which was beneficial for the people of Canada, or did it in fact depend almost exclusively on information obtained from the oil and gas companies, information which was slanted to be of benefit to those corporations and not to the people of Canada? I must ask the minister whether we are in any better position in 1975 to make the kind of decisions we ought to be making than we were in 1970. I doubt it.

When I listen to the minister—another apologist for the government—and the oil companies talk about the necessity for higher oil and gas prices, which will mean higher costs for the people of Canada, I listen in amazement and wonder on what they base their arguments. I am not an expert in business, but I can read the English language and I think I understand what I read. Since coming to Ottawa I have received the Toronto Globe and Mail every morning. I refer the Minister of Finance to an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of May 16, 1975, under the heading "Western oils turn in best profit performance in quarter with 48.1 per cent increase". What does it say in the first paragraph of that article? It reads as follows:

> With a 48.1 per cent year-over-year increase, western oils turned in the best profit performance in a preliminary Report on Business survey of after-tax profits of Canadian corporations for the first quarter. They did the same thing in three of the past four quarters.

Has the minister never asked the oil companies, "Isn't enough enough"? If he has, I wish he would send me a copy of the text, because I do not remember him ever making that kind of speech. But I do remember the minister saying that workers who ask for wage increases, not of 48 per cent but of 15 and 18 per cent, to keep up with the increase in the cost of living are being unreasonable, unpatriotic and that they are going to wreck the economy.

We have had that kind of speech from the minister quite often, but we do not hear it when it comes to oil companies. They get a further increase in price. I went to the parliamentary library and got the Financial Post "Survey of Oils for 1975". I should like to put a few of the figures on the record. Hon. members know that I am one of those terrible socialists who does not have much use for the free enterprise system. Let us see what the Financial Post says about some of the oil companies. Take Imperial Oil's net income, that is, after taxes and everything else: 1971, $136 million; 1972, $151 million; 1973, $228 million; the Globe and Mail of January 24, 1975, shows their 1974 net income was $290 million.

Maybe Imperial Oil is an exception, so let us look at Gulf Canada, another poor oil company which needs that increase or it will go broke tomorrow. In 1971 they had a net income of $53 million; 1972, $64 million; 1973, $101 million. They have not released the figures for 1974, but we can be sure they are in the same "marginal" increase range as Imperial Oil.

Mr. Boulanger: How many employees do they have?

Mr. Orlikow: Of course, they have Canadian people working and Canadian customers buying their products. That is the point. Let us look at Shell Canada. In 1971 their net income was $61 million; in 1972, $78 million; 1973, $112 million. I do not have figures for 1974, but no doubt they will be in the same range as Imperial Oil.

When is enough enough, Madam Speaker? How much more do the Canadian people have to pay to keep the poor oil companies in business? The minister says that we have to give them higher oil prices, and unless we do they will not look for new oil; and if we do not find new oil, of course, we will be out of it. I think we have a right to compare the oil industry with the electric power industry.

Mr. Boulanger: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member is always interjecting. I like to have his interjections, particularly when I am not on a 20 minute limit. But I would like to hear the hon. member make his own speech some time. I do not mind his interjections, but some members are disconcerted by his bleating.

In Manitoba they are bringing into production power from the Nelson River. That is a long way from where the power will be used. The plants and transmission lines will cost hundreds of millions of dollars and the power will probably cost three or four times as much as the power now being used in Manitoba. Ontario is building a nuclear power station whose power will cost four or five times more than the power at Niagara Falls. They do not tell the people of the province that it is going to cost four times as much for the nuclear power; therefore they want them to pay four times as much as for the cheap power they are getting now. They put the two costs together and come up with one price.

We have oil in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and the companies were making good money selling it at $3 a barrel and less. Now they want $8, $10 and $12 per barrel, not only for the new oil which they hope to find in the Arctic or off the east coast, which will be very expensive, but they want the same price for the oil they found years ago on which they are going to make tens of millions of dollars. The minister goes along with that and says we have to give them the increased price.

The Canadian citizen is going to have to pay through the nose for every gallon of gasoline he buys for his car, for every gallon of heating oil for his home, for every cubic foot of natural gas for his home, for every bit of gas used to fuel the industries.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if I could have a few more minutes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member would like a few moments, or a minute, if he could put it into that time-frame—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. This can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There being no agreement, the hon. member cannot continue. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen).

An hon. Member: Who said no?

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-66 which is another exposé of the iniquities that this government heaps on the Canadian people. I cannot help but reflect on the speech made last night by the hon. ornithologist from Skeena who was long on emotional metaphors and dramatic nuances but very short on logic.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Oh, come on now. Be nice.

Mr. Friesen: The weaker the argument, the more strident her voice became. She provided a lot of laughs for government members, but I can assure this House that no one is laughing in the federal riding of Skeena, at Burns Lake, Ootsa Lake, François Lake. They are not laughing on the streets of Smithers or Kitimat and the union shops there, or in the shopping centres at Terrace or Prince Rupert, and certainly not at Port Clements or Charlotte City. She says her riding supports the ten-cent tax. I can see it now: when she gets off the plane for the summer recess, there will be senior citizens welcoming her with bated breath to thank her for this opportunity to give the Government of Canada another ten cents per gallon for gas.

The taxi drivers will be lining up to say they have been waiting for a long time for an opportunity to pay another tax to the federal government. The fishermen and independent loggers will say, "We know that each of us cannot go to Ottawa, but in our stead you shall go to the Minister of Finance and thank him personally for this opportunity to give another ten cents a gallon to the federal government. Tell him the people of Skeena thank the government for this opportunity."

Let us look for a moment at the impeccable flow of logic from the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) in support of this new tax. The second half of her speech criticized regional disparities in Canada. She pointed out that the west is getting short shrift and is being shoddily dealt with in confederation. She is right. For example, if you buy an airline ticket from Toronto to Ottawa, the cost is approximately $70. If you buy a ticket to fly from Vancouver to Prince George, approximately the same distance, you pay 30 per cent more, or $100. There is good example of regional disparity, and it cannot be justified.

● (1500)

I think all members on this side agree on the existence of regional disparity, especially between the north and south of Canada, and we say it cannot be justified. I well remember the royal commission the hon. member spoke about, the one of 1964 headed by Cyril Shelford, or inspired by Cyril Shelford when he was working for the British Columbia government. I think he got the double shuffle. I have travelled extensively in northern British Columbia and I know that the people of the region are paying too much for gasoline. I understand perfectly what the hon. member is saying, but I point out that the official opposition did not do that of which she complains. The opposition did not create that disparity. Yet the first half of the hon. member's speech was devoted almost entirely to berating the opposition. She calls our approach ostrich-like and accuses us of putting our heads in the sand. Incidentally, if she will check I think she will find that her ornithology is not quite correct.

An hon. Member: Her speech was for the birds.

Mr. Friesen: The opposition has criticized the government for that very reason. We object to this country's disparities. The question remains, why did the hon. member devote the first half of her speech to berating the opposition, when she agrees with the opposition? If she looks closely, she will find that the ostrich is coming close to her, and has come back to roost.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to note that the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) is so adept at naming places in my constituency. I wonder if he is as adept at naming places in his own. In any event, the voters of the constituency of Surrey-White Rock are asking where he stands on the issues on which he is speaking. I suggest that he should devote some time to his own people, rather than to mine, who are being looked after very well.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I remind the hon. member for Skeena that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) said in this House that the people of Surrey-White Rock are being well served by their member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not exactly what he meant.

An hon. Member: But that's what he said.

Mr. Friesen: It strikes me that there is an appropriate line in Hamlet, which could be applied to the hon. lady: "The lady doth protest too much, methinks." Near the beginning of Hamlet a character says that there is something rotten in the state of Denmark—I submit that it is not only in Denmark.

Let us consider this tax. The minister suggests that the budget is non-inflationary, that he is introducing a non-inflationary tax—if there is such a thing—and non-inflationary policies. Let us examine the workings of these policies. A man came to see me and we had a long discussion about the very problem we are considering today. That man is a small businessman in my community. He runs a small bus line, and is responsible for a total payroll of $150,000. His profit margin is not wide.

I understand that rebates from the tax department are now running between six months and one year behind time. The bus company expects this tax to add $1,000 a year to costs. Because the operator is operating on a small margin of profit he will probably need to borrow that $1,000 at 14 per cent, which means that the company must pay extra expenses of $1,400. This man has to make up this cost somewhere. He cannot pull the money out of a hat, as the government seems to be able to do; therefore he must consider increased rates. He has a contract with the local school board. The school board must get its money from school taxes, and school taxes in British Columbia, as the hon. member for Skeena knows, are away beyond the reach of the individual taxpayer. The operator also runs charters for senior citizens and others.

If the bus company wants to increase its rates, it must justify the increase before the Transport Commission. The Transport Commission will not sit for three months. What is the company to do in the meantime? How is it to survive? If tax upon tax is imposed on such small companies, the only alternative they face, sooner or later, is to sell out.

An hon. Member: Or give the company to the government.

Mr. Friesen: The owner can either sell to the government, or to a large corporation—to the sort of large, multinational corporation the hon. member berated so strongly.

Let me digress. Today the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce introduced phase II of his program which is designed to limit foreign investment. We know, I think, that most of our foreign investment comes from the United States. United States companies take over small Canadian companies which can no longer bear the kind of tax burden the government is forcing on them. Large, multinational corporations can bear the burden. They can pass on the extra cost to the consumer, but the small companies cannot hold out. And the hon. member help up Petro-Can as the panacea for all the ills brought on by the greed of large, multinational corporations. I ask this: if a bureaucrat switches from a multinational corporation to a government, does he thereby become a pillar of morality, a bastion of morality?

My socialist friends keep talking about equality, but there is one equality they always tend to overlook, the equality of human nature and man's tendency to evil. No matter whether you work for a government or a private corporation, temptation is there. The temptations and the greed still exists. The possibility of mismanagement is just as great, whether you work for a private corporation or for the government. Incidentally, the role of government is to exercise some control, either by passing laws or by appealing to conscience.

This new tax will entail simply another cost which large corporations can easily pass on to consumers but which small companies will not be able to cope with and, consequently, sooner or later they will sell out to large corporations.

If the tax were imposed only to conserve energy I could argue in support of it, on condition that the motorist is provided with an alternative.

One year ago I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promising a $1 billion urban transport policy. The Prime Minister promised that, when travelling across the country. We were wafted to the Elysian fields by the Prime Minister's dulcet tones promising answers to our transportation headaches.

An hon. Member: Do you like poetry?

Mr. Friesen: I love poetry. Does the hon. member prefer John Donne, Shakespeare, Spencer, Chaucer or Matthew Arnold? Take your pick.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We will take the hon. member, the bard of White Rock. He is just great.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, the Prime Minister made a memorable trip across the country one year ago. Incidentally, about the only time he crosses this country is during election campaigns. The rest of the time he likes to go to places like Bermuda, Switzerland, and so on. Since that trip we have heard no word about alternatives for the motorist. He must now pay this tax, this unfair tax, and he has no alternative. The commuter who moved from the heart of the city to get away from the problems of urbanization, or because he wanted cheaper housing, is now forced to pay an extra $1, $1.50 or $2 per week in tax, just because he tried to save a buck. There is no way we can justify this.

Let me make one more point—I am sure this will come as a relief to government members. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) promised a reduction in the rate of bureaucratic growth. That is the absolute conundrum in the face of—

● (1510)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That's a nice word.

Mr. Friesen: Nice, isn't it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, it is very nice.

Mr. Friesen: I will use it again. That is an absolute conundrum in the face of the refund policy the Minister of Finance wants to impose on the country. He says he wants to reduce the growth of the bureaucracy from 9,300 to 6,000. Much against my nature, I would simply caution that the minister will need that army of bureaucrats to shuffle the papers and get out the rebates within a year. They will be needed for income tax.

[Mr. Friesen.]

Mr. Paproski: Use Information Canada; they are not doing a damn thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: I remind the government members that since they plan to go home next weekend, they ought to spend the intervening time looking for answers that will help them face the voters to whom they promised so much a year ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mrs. Campagnolo: No, Madam Speaker. I rise on a question of privilege. I would like to thank the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) for his personal attack. It is only by his words that I know I have been finally accepted on equal terms with the 255 male members here.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the hon. member rising to ask a question?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Will the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Friesen: Yes.

Mrs. Campagnolo: The Parliamentary Guide lists the hon. member as having been born in 1959, which would make him 16 years old. I would like to know whether he was born in that year.

Mr. Friesen: If the hon. member would read a little further, she would find that I was born ten years before my daughter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Mr. Friesen: It is obvious from the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) that the rest of her family has the last word, which is, "Yes, dear".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Madam Speaker, it is going to be somewhat difficult to follow the oratorical skill of my colleague and friend, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen).

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That will be no trouble at all.

Mr. Holmes: I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-66. The regressive measures embodied in this bill, for example the excise tax on gasoline, the air transportation tax, and the other inadequacies of the easure such as the removal of the sales tax on insulation :flect the failure of the budget which the minister :ought down last June.

The over all impact of the budget on the Canadian :onomy has been adequately described by previous)eakers. The inflationary effect of the budget, including ıe excise tax on gasoline, the degree of unemployment ıat will result from the budgetary items, and the negative :fect it will have on the growth of the gross national roduct, are all part of the record. However, the notable :ature about the budget has not been the technical anal-sis of the effect it will have on inflation, unemployment, r the gross national product, but the instantaneous nega-ve reaction of the working man and woman, those on low nd fixed incomes.

I do not recall when my correspondence and telephone alls have been heavier or busier with constituents regis-ering legitimate complaints about the discriminatory spects of the budget and the dire consequences it will ave on their future.

I am certain the minister must be receiving similar omplaints from his constituents, and indeed from across anada. I have no intention of reading the correspondence ıto Hansard, but it may be useful to the minister in his eassessment of the budget if I mention the nature of the omplaints received.

Not unexpectedly the major objection is related to the pecial excise tax of ten cents per gallon on gasoline for ersonal use, with an exemption for industrial and com-ıercial users through rebates. I will have more to say bout that later.

The second matter that has been brought to my atten-ion is the increase in unemployment insurance premiums ffective early in 1976, plus other proposed measures, in articular those related to employees retiring, which pro-osals are meeting with opposition.

Although the removal of the sales tax on insulation naterial has received minimal notice, the reaction to the nadequacies of budgetary matters related to housing are ıotable.

The increase in the wellhead price of oil and the ncreased price of natural gas, with their obvious impact n the average consumer struggling against the relentless ncrease in inflation, are of concern to my constituents ınd, what is more important, they are faced with the ealization and fear that the government cannot or will ıot introduce measures to reverse this feeling of ıelplessness.

I want to turn to a very important matter in the budget, nergy. The adverse effects that the energy proposals, ncluding the excise tax of 10 cents, will have on inflation ınd unemployment, have been stressed by previous speak-rs. It has been estimated that the measures introduced by he minister will add two points to the consumer price ndex and, in Ontario alone, will cost the citizens an ıdditional $700 million annually.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in presenting his udget indicated that the price of crude oil must rise to world price levels. He also emphasized the policy of a single national price for crude oil. I can accept the argu-nents in principle. He made reference to the importance of a conservation program. I agree with and accept in principle the policy of a single national price for crude oil. I will mention later than I think the minister has taken a most discriminatory route to accomplish this. I have no difficulty in recognizing that there should be differences in terms of variations in price with respect to transportation costs.

I would support a program that encourages exploration and development to ensure continuing supplies to all Canadians. I would welcome and encourage a more aggressive program in research and development. I would respond in a positive fashion if the government truly demonstrated leadership in the development of a conservation program. I can understand the arguments to maintain a world price for export.

However, having made these observations, one might reasonably have expected that the budget would have contained measures designed to assure Canadians of energy supplies, measures to ensure further exploration or to promote something tangible by way of research and development; or we might have looked for a bolder and more imaginative conservation policy. But it is impossible to find any such proposals in the budgetary measures.

Further, what the minister has failed to explain, and what such a policy of world price fails to recognize, is that foreign oil-producing countries have established artificially higher prices, producing massive cash surpluses. Many thoughtful Canadians reject the necessity of Canadian consumers being exploited in the purchase of their own resources so as to maintain an artificial world price. The minister has a responsibility to explain in more detail the simplistic approach of adopting an artificial world price figure, particularly at a time of rapid increase in inflation and growing unemployment.

Earlier in the debate the Minister of Finance was very critical of the province of Ontario, in particular of its attitude toward energy matters. In my view the Ontario minister of finance acted responsibly by coming to the defence of the working man and woman, and of those living on fixed incomes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holmes: I wish to commend the comments made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) of the New Democratic Party in his defence of Ontario and its responsible attitude toward energy matters over the years. It should not be forgotten that Ontario has supported a national oil policy for 11 years simply to stimulate the development of the oil and gas industry in Canada. I find it deplorable that the government should ignore this when it finds it convenient to do so.

As I indicated earlier, a major part of my correspondence and of the phone calls I am receiving concerns the excise tax of ten cents a gallon on gasoline for personal use. There is no question that this is a most discriminatory tax measure. Indeed, it is the most discriminatory and oppressive tax I have seen since coming to Ottawa in 1972. The minister tells us that such action is required to close the gap between the payments needed to hold down the cost of imported oil for eastern consumers and the revenues from the charge on oil exports to the United States.

I have no difficulty in accepting the principle of a one-price policy for Canada, but surely it is obvious to the minister that under his proposals the burden of carrying out this policy will be shouldered by those who can least afford it. As I indicated previously, I have received substantial representation strongly protesting this regressive measure. As one might expect, protestations came from men and women living in small towns and villages who drive, in many instances, more than 50 miles to and from work. They are excellent citizens, they work regularly, and they wish nothing more than to be able to raise their families in a small town or rural setting. What is the minister's answer to this? What is the penalty he exacts? It is a gasoline tax of ten cents a gallon. Surely the minister is aware of the difficulty many small towns are experiencing in maintaining their viability. This is simply another measure which will tend to add to the exodus of some inhabitants from the rural areas.

It has been suggested that car pools could be used to counteract any hardship. But this method of transportation was in use long before the introduction of the ten cents tax. Many people are already using it to counteract the spiralling increase in the cost of living. It must be obvious, too, that pleas for a rapid transit system would have little relevance to people living in an area such as my own.

I cannot accept a one-price crude oil policy the cost of which must be borne by the working man or woman and other individuals who live on fixed or low incomes. Of all the options available to the minister as a means of maintaining a one-price policy, he has chosen the most discriminatory and regressive.

The minister also gave us to understand that this tax measure was intended to encourage immediate conservation of gasoline. Surely the minister cannot be serious in believing that the introduction of an excise tax amounting to ten cents a gallon will conserve energy. He should realize that previous increases in gasoline prices have not reduced consumption. Indeed, statistics confirm that there was an increase in consumption at the same time as prices were rising.

The simple fact is that the automobile remains and will continue to be the most essential and important mode of transportation in the foreseeable future despite glowing reports about the possibilities of rapid transit systems and other modes of travel. I have no doubt Canadians will respond to a reasonable and responsible program designed to conserve energy but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that they will not accept this as a true conservation measure; they will recognize the proposal for what it is—a guise for collecting tax dollars for the federal coffers.

I wish to make a few brief remarks with respect to the imposition of the tax at producer and importer levels. The minister, in introducing his discussion paper on commodity taxation, was obviously aware of existing pricing systems and the inequities introduced by imposing taxes at the manufacturers' level. It must be apparent to the minister that his decision to place the excise tax on producers and importers means that the ten cents a gallon increase is likely to be 11 cents or 12 cents in future months.

[Mr. Holmes.]

During the course of this debate several members have drawn attention to the administrative nightmare which would be involved in supervising and policing the refund program. The minister, with some justification, has declined to comment on the size of the bureaucracy that will be needed, or on the cost which will be incurred in the handling of such a program. I use the words "with some justification" because I have contacted the Department of National Revenue seeking answers to questions asked by constituents regarding eligibility for exemption. And the department does not know the answers.

I find it ironical that earlier this week the government House leader should have been pleading with the opposition parties to deal quickly with this bill, implying that any hold-up in its passage would result in a delay in the payment of refunds, responsibility for which would then fall on opposition members. I wish to congratulate my hon. friend from Peace River for pointing out that under the Financial Administration Act, section 17 as I recall, it is possible for the government to proceed with these rebates.

If the government House leader is truly interested in relieving the taxpayer and reducing the numbers of an unproductive bureaucracy he would encourage the Minister of Finance to withdraw this iniquitous bill rather than call for its speedy passage. As I say, I can appreciate the minister's reluctance to discuss the administrative cost of this program, particularly following the announcement that the growth of the public service was to be reduced. He knows perfectly well that the administration of this program will be a severe blow to any program of restraint. Indeed, I read an article during the past week or two that appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail, indicating that the administration of the program will require at a minimum 1,000 people, and a multimillion dollar price tag.

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock referred in his speech to the difficulty with the rebate. I have had a similar experience this past week and I think it is analogous to what we will be experiencing with this measure in the future. I refer specifically to the beef industry assistance program. May I remind hon. members that this program covered the period from March 16, 1974, to April 30, 1975, and it was a support program with a price of $23.21 a hundredweight for grades D-1, D-2, D-3 and D-4 cows.

This past weekend I had a call from a constituent who sold cows in November of last year, and again in January of this year, but has received no word about the subsidy payment. On returning I checked with the department this week, and not one payment has been made since the introduction of this program. More than that, the staff had increased by 400 per cent during this period. It is not difficult to realize the magnitude of the proposed program that the Minister of Finance has talked about and the difficulties that we can experience, when a program of the magnitude of the beef industry assistance program has obviously been an absolute failure.

Another measure that I referred to earlier was the removal of the sales tax on insulation. Although a modest step in the right direction, once again it is a symptom of the inadequacy of the June budget. If there was one area that justified the intervention of the federal government in a meaningful way for both economic and social reasons, it was certainly in the area of housing.

In response to this critical problem the minister has simply injected funds which do not meet half of Ontario's needs to correct the housing crisis that exists in Canada. Yet these funds are expected to resolve the entire problem. In addition, in this particular bill we have the introduction of the removal of the sales tax on insulation. Surely, as indicated in the past, it would be more prudent for the government to have eliminated the remaining 5 per cent sales tax on all building materials.

When the minister reduced the 11 per cent sales tax it was indicated during argument at that time that the entire tax should be removed because the cost involved in administering the program would not be commensurate with the net gain. We also pointed out that the removal of the entire tax would have a very positive effect upon the housing situation in Canada.

What is happening at the moment, Madam Speaker? With the introduction of this new tax measure, obviously the revenue accruing to the government will be somewhat less. Yet we know that the same administrative cost will be present. However, we must recognize that there will be additional administrative costs to the housing supply industry to handle this tax exemption, and it will therefore negate to a great extent some of the effect of the 5 per cent sales tax reduction. As I said a moment ago, it would surely have made far more sense to eliminate the 5 per cent sales tax on all building materials.

I expressed earlier the disappointment that has been experienced, certainly in my area, and the concern that has been expressed over the budgetary aspects in relation to housing. Despite the removal of the tax on insulation and other budgetary matters, there will be little effect on the supply side of mortgage funding, and almost negligible effect on the stimulation of housing starts.

The inadequacy of the proposals is quite obvious and has been outlined by many members, both during the budget debate and in this debate. As I indicated earlier, the $200 million allocation does not even constitute 50 per cent of Ontario's repeated requests and demands for additional funding commitments. For the first five months of 1975 housing starts were projected to be 176,000. The additional $200 million increase will provide for approximately 7,500 new starts. I would point out to the minister, as I am sure he is aware, that this combined figure falls short by 13.6 per cent of the government's goal of 210,000 starts, and 25.9 per cent short of the Economic Council's suggestion.

Both the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) and the Minister of Finance have cited soaring land costs and the unavailability of serviced land as two of the major causes accounting for the poor housing situation. Yet as I interpret the budget, no provision is made for municipal funding which will be necessary in order to release serviced land on to the market or to abate the escalating cost of land.

Another feature in the budget that concerns me is the $1,200 mortgage subsidy to builders for home construction, and the $900 subsidy for rental accommodation. As I understand this subsidy program, it terminates on March 31, 1976. In effect, the government is attempting to lure potential home owners into the housing market with attractive mortgage subsidies, but again, as I understand it, there is no provision for continuing financial support.

I think a very valid question must be asked here. What happens come March 31 when the home owner is suddenly faced with a $50 a month increase in his mortgage payment? I ask, will the Minister of Finance be there to assist him with this particular measure?

I am glad to see that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs is in the Chamber because he and the government have attempted to justify the reduced activity in the housing market on the basis of the success of the AHOP program. However, because of the income and dwelling cost restrictions of this program, a large number of people qualifying for AHOP are unable to purchase a single family dwelling. There is also growing evidence that private AHOP is not being well received and is not expected to result in a significant net addition to the funding supply as it will be largely funded from money already earmarked for housing.

In summary, Madam Speaker, I have tried to point out those matters of particular concern to the constituency I represent. In particular I have emphasized that the excise tax on gasoline is a most discriminatory and regressive tax measure. I have also tried to point out the inadequacies of the budget in the field of housing, and a symptom of this inadequacy of the budget is the reduction of the sales tax on insulation. As I have indicated, I very strongly suggest that the Minister of Finance reconsider this particular bill and remove this iniquitous taxation that is before us at the present time.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Madam Speaker, I want to take brief part in this debate because I think that what is being perpetrated upon the House of Commons, and more particularly upon the people of Canada, is not simply a measure that is very nearly fraudulent when it is said it is the only way revenues can be raised, but is also a measure that is very unfair. It is as inequitable in its application as any measure that could be devised by a government to hit the little guy. This tax hits the little guy who is not in a position to pass on his costs, and provides havens for people who might be able to hide their cost under this clause and claim benefits for professional or other reasons.

It is a grotesquely unfair bill. I am not surprised that only a scattered few backbench members on the government side have had the courage to defend this bill because they know their constituents read the record, and when their constituents read that they have defended the ten cents Turner tax which applies unfairly to the poor and those who cannot shift it off, they know that their chances of being re-elected to this House diminish. If they dispute this statement, let them get up and defend this iniquituous tax which applies unfairly to those least able to bear it.

Today I wish to speak about two aspects of this measure. The first is the conservation aspect, so-called. The second is the unfairness of the impact. I want to speak in constituency terms because all of us come from constituencies. Many of us would prefer to be back at our constituencies, and if the government would come to its senses and devise a fair way to meet its revenue problems we would be able to get back more quickly.

I do not want to start speaking immediately about the impact of this tax on my constituency. I am sorry the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) left the House a few moments ago. I passed him on the stairway and invited him back to hear my remarks, but he declined the opportunity. I want to draw attention to the very real problems this ten cents Turner tax causes the constituents of Ottawa-Carleton, to take one example, because the constituency which is represented by the Minister of Finance is one which, among other things, contains commuters who must drive from where they live to their work, whether it be from Cumberland, Vars, Russell, Navan, Sarsfield or Orleans, whether their work be in this city or elsewhere. As I understand it they will not be able to claim this as an expense. The burden of the extra ten cents will fall straight on the shoulders of the people who must commute to work from the communities in the constituency of the minister.

What is particularly inequitable about this is that if these individuals want to come to Ottawa to see their Member of Parliament they would have to pay ten cents a gallon extra for that privilege of seeing him, but if the minister deigns to go to see his constituents—and perhaps he does not do that very often now that he has brought in this unfair tax which lies particularly heavily upon the commuters and people in the villages I have enumerated—he will probably travel in a Government of Canada limousine and will not have to bear the burden of the tax. This is not a tax for the minister but is a tax for his constituents. That is a most unfair situation.

Before leaving the subject of the constituency of Ottawa-Carleton I might say that if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were to visit Navan, to take one place as an example, not only would there be a cost involved to the people who might drive to Navan to see this magnetic personality but also to the Government of Canada, particularly the Department of National Defence, which probably would have to pay for the helicopter that is the preferred way of travel of this conservation minded Prime Minister.

Let me deal for a moment with some of the very severe problems this unfair tax imposes upon the people in the constituency I represent. There are constituents of mine who commute distances of 150 miles per day in order to get to and from their work. They will not be in a position to claim any rebate or to shift the burden of this ten cents tax. The example I have given is perhaps an extreme one. It represents the distance from Whitecourt to Swan Hills and back. However, there are constituents of mine, and there are constituents of many other members, whether they be in urban or rural areas, who will have to pay through the nose in order to meet this unfair tax that lies particularly upon the little guy, the one who cannot cast off the tax under some kind of write-off.

Indeed in my constituency some of the individuals who are commuting are forced to commute because of a federal policy. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, which is responsible for our national parks, has laid down a directive that Banff and Jasper may not grow too large, and therefore many people must live elsewhere such as in Hinton or Canmore, and drive from there to work and then back home again at night. That situation was difficult enough at the best of times, but is now much more difficult because of this unfair ten cents tax which will be imposed upon these people very soon. It is a grotesquely unfair tax.

I received a letter the other day from a lady in Montreal who is very much concerned about conservation matters. She devotes a great deal of her time to voluntary work in an attempt to stop the government following some of the policies that offend the environment of Canada. In doing this work she is not in a position to claim any relief in the sense that it is charitable work. She does this work voluntarily, as a concerned Canadian. She made a calculation that, since she is a woman who has very little income and does not have any prospect of ever holding down a big job unless the Prime Minister should appoint her to a royal commission, or something like that, she will have to cut her voluntary work in half because she cannot afford to carry on under the extra burden of this tax.

One might say that is an isolated case, but all of us know that most of the valuable work done in the name of public service in this country is done by individual volunteers who do not work for a large organization, and are not in a situation in which they can claim a tax advantage. These people work out of the goodness of their hearts and now, because of this tax, they will be faced with an additional burden. This tax amounts to a tax on volunteerism in Canadian society. It will undercut the capacity of individual Canadians who want to help improve their local community or neighbourhood, or help bring forward important points in respect of public issues. These people are seriously undercut in respect of the capability to do this. This is a very serious aspect of this bill.

I notice that when the minister spoke the other night he said that the tax did not apply to hospital or similar boards. What does the minister intend to do in respect of the members of local hospital boards and other such boards in rural districts in my constituency, and in the constituencies of many vocal members on this side of the House, and in the constituencies of many of the silent members on the other side of the House? They have to travel literally hundreds of miles a week to carry out their civic responsibilities. Unless there is some way—and it would require some gymnastics in bookkeeping and accounting which would probably be beyond even the manipulators of this government—for the government to recompense those individuals, inevitably there will be demands for increases in expense allowances by members of these local boards.

Again you can say that this is a trivial thing, but it is not so trivial when it happens in country after county and municipality after municipality across this country, and when the cost is taken from the already too scarce funds of hospital boards, municipal authorities, and groups of this kind. That is another harmful blow that this ten cents Turner tax will strike at the people of my constituency and I am sure at the people in the constituencies of other members of the House, including the silent, aquiescent members on the government side.

Mr. Béchard: We are not silent.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I am pleased to see that my colleague, the hon. member for Bonaventure-Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) is entering the debate. I hope he will rise later today, or when the debate carries on next week or next month, and have the courage to defend this bill, because so far there have been very few backbenchers, and no ministers apart from the guy carrying the can, the poor Minister of Finance, to defend this bill.

Mr. Boulanger: Tell us the good side of the story.

Mr. Clark: (Rocky Mountain) My friend knows that I would tell him the good side of the story if there were one, but I cannot because there is not.

There have been a number of individuals who have already spoken in the House about the bureaucratic problems which will be encountered in trying to work out any system of rebates for those who might deserve them.

Not being a member of the government I have no cause to be afraid of my constituents, so the other day I went from door to door in my constituency and asked people what was troubling them and what I could do to help. I found that 50 per cent of the people I encountered in one town stopped me and asked how they could get around this ten cents tax, and in what way they could become eligible for some rebate. I warn the government that however clever and ingenuous it thinks it might be in working out systems of rebate, it has awakened a remarkable wave of ingenuity in the country, and that people will try to find out some way of escaping the burden of this unfair tax and put themselves in the position of the Minister of Finance, who is not going to pay it, and of doctors and other professionals who will find some way of evading it.

What is bad about that is not that people's ingenuity has been inspired, because this country owes much more to the ingenuity of its private citizens than it does to the policies of the government, but that people are being required to turn their ingenuity not to a respect for the law but to a way of getting around it. That is another very dangerous social consequence that falls from a bill as bad as this bill.

There is not much time left this afternoon, and I want to deal for a moment with the argument which has not been put forward very strongly, even by ministers of the Crown who are accustomed to putting forward weak arguments with great force, and that is the argument that this is in some way or other a conservation measure.

That argument debases the cause of conservation.

The Government of Canada, and all of us in the House know that the days of cheap energy are gone, the days when we can waste our resources. But if the government were serious about devising a policy of conservation, it would have started with something else than a ten cents tax that applies unfairly to the weakest elements of society. If it were serious about turning people away from the excessive use of automobiles, it would have given high priority to the development of alternative methods of transportation, but it has not done that. If it were serious, it would have devised other means to relieve high consumption. If it were serious, it would have established a general policy of conservation. The conservation policy of the government is one part a comic book which tells Canadians not to bathe, and one part a bunch of public relations ads which carry the smiling image of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. Muir: That frightens me.

Mr. Clark: As my colleague says, this simply serves to frighten people. It probably frightens them so much that they get out from the library where they were reading that ad and go and take a drive around, thus wasting more gas.

That is the extent of the conservation policy of the government. For the minister to argue that he is advancing the ethic of conservation by bringing in a ten cents tax which applies unfairly across the country to people who cannot afford to pay it, and who cannot find any way to evade it, a tax which, in addition, has the unfortunate consequence of causing problems in rural areas and local municipalities for people who have to commute, is simply a fraudulent approach.

Mr. Cullen: Madam Speaker, I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I would like to say, on a point of order, that the House leader of the opposition raised a point today. He indicated that rebates can be paid under the Financial Administration Act. We disagree with that. This is a question I would like to discuss with the House leader. I know he did not wish to mislead hon. members. If he does a little more research he will find that there is no provision whereby a rebate under this bill could be paid under section 17. I will raise this point with him on Monday, but I know he would not want to mislead the House or the country.

Mr. Clark: I am not exactly sure how that point of order was smuggled in between my remarks, but it is significant that before that weak argument was attempted on behalf of the government, the Minister of Finance fled the House and left it to his parliamentary secretary to make it.

Before closing I want to draw to the attention of the House one more very serious consequence of this ten cents tax. One of the measures in which many of us across the country are interested, including many provincial governments, is the decentralization of industry and other activities to communities outside major centres. If we are going to impose this tax on people who have no other way to get from where they live to where they work, on people who commute, it will seriously frustrate the policy of decentralization to which many of the governments, including some governments of the stripe of the government here, if they still admit to kinship, are committed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McKinley: Madam Speaker, before we go into private members' hour, I wonder if it could be confirmed whether we will be on the same business again on Monday?

Mr. Lefebvre: So far as I know, Madam Speaker, we may be on Bill C-70. But I understand that there will be further talks between House leaders concerning this.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

[English]

The House will now consider public bills, order No. 8. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). Shall the order stand?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I would like to ask how much longer this item will stand. It has been at the top of the list for almost three months. I am referring to the bill having to do with Heritage Day. Why can we not proceed with it?

Mr. Lefebvre: I cannot answer that , but I think the hon. member will find there is agreement that today we should discuss Bill C-239 standing in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), an act to amend the Supreme Court Act (private citizen's reference).

● (1600)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I will agree to that after we have dealt with Heritage Day.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Shall all the bills on the order paper prior to that bill stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Bills stood.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

SUPREME COURT ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO CONFER CONSTITUTIONAL REFERENCE RIGHTS ON CITIZENS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova) moved that Bill C-239, to amend the Supreme Court Act (private citizen's reference), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Madam Speaker, this bill is intended to emphasize that each and every citizen has a unique and personal interest in the constitution of our great nation and an individual interest in the way in which he or she is governed since, by long tradition, each Canadian has the right to expect consideration of individual rights and freedoms. Therefore each citizen ought to have a means to act directly to protect his or her interest without necessarily waiting for a government, federal or provincial, to do it.

It seems that at this particular time our government is not sufficiently conscientious in referring matters, in which constitutionality could be an issue, to our Supreme Court regardless of the implications of its failure to do so. As one example, I cite the situation arising out of a current piece of legislation, Bill C-2, known by those who are most familiar with it as the competition act.

As far back as 1973 the government was well aware that there were possible constitutional difficulties and in one of its publications, "Proposals for a New Competition Policy for Canada," the following appears:

> While the constitutionality of new section 31.1 may be challenged as relating to property and civil rights or matters of a local or private nature which, under section 92 of the B.N.A. Act, are within provincial, rather than federal, jurisdiction, it is nevertheless hoped that the section will be upheld as a matter ancillary to the criminal law—

In debates of the other place, as reported in Hansard for Wednesday, March 19, 1975, Senator Hayden, when speaking about certain aspects of Bill C-2, said that the Senate Committe on Banking, Trade and Commerce was concerned about the doubtful constitutionality relating, and I quote:

> —to the proceedings under Part IV.1. This was also mentioned in submissions, inlcuding that of the Canadian Bar Association—

I do not intend to smuggle a speech on Bill C-2, into this private member's hour, in case that was the suspicion but I am merely using it as an example of a case where a constitutional matter has some bearing, in my opinion, on this bill, which is in my name.

Still later in April of this year, during proceedings of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, an official of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Bertrand, spoke about certain aspects of the constitutionality of Bill C-2. At the same time a legal consultant to the committee, Mr. R. J. Cowling, acknowledged that representations were made to the committee suggesting that the constitutional question, and I quote:

> —should be settled before the bill is enacted so that a private litigant would not be left with the burden of testing the provisions all the way to the Supreme Court, which could be quite costly and perhaps even ruinous for that individual.

Finally, the chairman of the committee, the Hon. Salter A. Hayden, made a very significant observation when he said the following:

> We simply point out the areas in which there is doubtful constitutional validity—so doubtful that we think they should not come into law until that doubt has been resolved.

It seems that our Supreme Court ought to be used more and ought to be more easily accessible and at less cost to the ordinary citizens of this country, and I have some support for my contention from lawyers across the country. If I may, I would like to read briefly an excerpt from a letter I received from a prominent Ontario lawyer, who wrote the following:

> Dear Mr. MacKay:
> I would like to lend my support to your proposal that the Supreme Court Act be amended to allow private citizens to refer questions to the Court relating to any public law made by or under the authority of the Parliament of Canada.
> Judges in this country, and no doubt in others too, have many times declared themselves opposed to any development in the law that they consider would have the effect of increasing the workload on the Court. A recent instance of course is the refusal to hear Mr. Thorson's application for a ruling on a constitutionality of the legislation on bilingualism.
> I think it is time the Courts were informed that their services are required in this area.

I do not necessarily share the opinion of the solicitor who wrote to me in respect to the special example he used, but I do think it is significant that a practising lawyer would voluntarily support the concept embodied in this bill.

I anticipate that some of my colleagues this afternoon will say that this legislation will increase the workload of the Supreme Court and that there will be cases where matters would be referred to the court which, in the name of common sense, ought not to be. In response to such observations it may be said that in a democratic country such as ours there are bound to be cases where people will act to protect themselves without considering all the implications of what they are doing, but I suggest most strongly that this is not a weakness. It is a strength that a democracy is, by its nature, less rigid and more indulgent in granting its citizens a means to express publicly their dissent in the advancement of their rights, and this is what I am seeking to promote by this legislation.

The court can, by the application of its own rules, or, if necessary, by changing the rules with approval of government, sort out and dispense with those cases which are frivolous or vexatious in their objects, and still permit access to the Supreme Court of our country to those who have an important issue for adjudication.

I do not wish to speak at great length on this bill, preferring rather to put it before my colleagues for informed comment and consideration. In my opinion this bill does not impinge on any provincial rights, and it might act as a catalyst to cause some provincial administrations to consider some of their own rules of civil procedure.

This bill does provide for notice of hearings to be given to the proper federal and provincial officials in appropriate instances, and provides as well that the court has the power to give notice to interested persons and classes who might be affected. There is also provision for the situation where there may be unascertained classes—the unborn, for example—and the court may, in its discretion, request any counsel to represent such parties.

As the public service becomes larger, and as the doctrine which some call collectivism grows more popular, at the expense of the traditional respect for the individual and his rights, it becomes more important to have the services of our Supreme Court available in appropriate cases so that our court can come easily to the aid of Canadians who are the victims of expediency, or of big, impatient governments.

There is much to be said for the proposition that, as the power of the state grows at the expense of the private sector, the principal menace of the common man is not the large, greedy corporation or the dictatorial or corrupt union executives or leaders, but his own over officious, bureaucratically oriented government.

Therefore I hope that if this proposal contained in my bill does not find favour with my colleagues at this time, it may be the basis for a similar move by government in the not too distant future, because I feel that a step such as this would reinforce and supplement the aims and objectives of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemount): Madam Speaker, I took great pleasure in studying Bill C-239 today: I had the distinct impression of being back at the university, attending a seminar on constitutional law. I feel that, for a Friday afternoon, we are dealing with a most interesting and edifying subject.

Before I start, I should perhaps bring up some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) when he was referring to Bill C-2 which he claims is anticonstitutional. He suggested that bill should be referred to the Supreme Court for a decision. To my mind, he is wrong because, as we see it, Bill C-2 is very much constitutional, both from the point of view of the powers given to the government and that of the power of law and order stipulated in the bill in question. But that is a mere digression.

Bill C-239 would grant the citizens the right to refer constitutional matters, in other words the right of referral, pertaining to federal laws, to the Supreme Court with a view to obtaining its opinion on such matters. Now, as we know, under Supreme Court Act section 55, at the present time the Attorney General of Canada, that is to say the federal government alone has the right to refer a constitutional matter to the Supreme Court for a decision.

In order to better understand the reasons which prevailed in having section 55 inserted in the Supreme Court Act, it might be well to summarize this history of the Supreme court itself, and the British North America Act which gives the Supreme Court its powers and mandate.

In 1875 the Supreme Court by an act of the Parliament of Canada under Section 101 of the British North America Act was to have a general power of appeal. It was not to be a constitutional court as such but was to be given a general power of appeal on all matters of either civil, common, or penal law, or if constitutional issues arose out of a specific case introduced before a court of common law, civil or penal jurisdiction. But in principle a purely constitutional matter could not be referred because that was not provided for in the British North America Acts.

Indeed, the federal government at that time would have liked very much for this constitutional power to be put in the constitutive instruments of the Supreme Court. Unfortunately, that was not possible for several reasons, mainly the antagonism, indifference, and even refusal of certain provinces to grant the Supreme Court that right to examine constitutional issues, and more particularly the validity of certain federal or provincial legislation.

Furthermore, it must be remembered that at that time there was another very important judicial body, even more important than the Supreme Court—the Privy Council—which had the power in last resort to decide on matters submitted to the courts. In other words, that was the highest court in Canada at that time. It suited everyone at that time, particularly Lower Canada—Quebec—to let the Privy Council have the power of adjudication in the constitutional area because if that right of adjudication on constitutional matters had been left to the Supreme Court injustices could then have taken place in the opinion of Quebeckers or Quebec political representatives, in the application of constitutional laws and the jurisdiction of the provinces in their relationships with the federal government.

To counter somewhat that lack of power of the Supreme Court in the constitutional area, the federal government of that time nearly imposed an additional jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court. It had to accept an ad hoc reference power in practice under which the Attorney General of Canada could refer to the Supreme Court and its judges for decisions on matters involving the constitution, matters concerning the validity of provincial legislation, matters involving federal-provincial relations, and even issues concerning interprovincial relations.

I repeat, that this power was nearly forced on the Supreme Court because, in principle, this power exceeds the powers allowed in the British North America Act, and it is very important to understand this when studying Bill C-239, which simply extends the powers conferred on the Supreme Court by section 55 of the act, which is the power of reference. Indeed, everyone knows that as concerns strictly provincial acts, provincial attorneys cannot refer constitutional matters to the Supreme Court; they must refer them to their own Supreme Court, that is, the Appeals Court in Quebec and the Provincial Supreme Court in Ontario.

Hon. members know that in 1949, the powers of the Privy Council as the court of last resort in Canada were abolished and, in practice, the Supreme Court was given supreme power in constitutional matters. Once again, I emphasize the use of the expression "in practice" because, legally, it is not a constitutional court, but a general court. I say "in practice" because there was no other instrument or agency empowered to resolve constitutional problems; the Supreme Court received these powers in 1949. This new power conferred to the Supreme Court caused concern, and maybe justifiably so, to the provinces which, in their relations with the government and the various jurisdiction conflicts which have occurred throughout the decades, had to refer such problems to a court created by the central power, whose judges were appointed by that central power and which could not finally shift in its interpretation of the legislation and more especially of jurisdictions between the federal and provincial governments. The doubts and problems of the provinces as to the real fair-mindness of the Supreme Court in fact has given rise to various federal-provincial conferences.

At first, the Quebec government took the lead. In 1950, at a federal-provincial conference, the Quebec delegation clearly stated that the Supreme Court should only be an arbitration body and as such, the provinces should be entitled to show more interest than they do at the present time, even in 1975, in the appointment or in the process for the appointment of the judges or members of that superior constitutional organization.

The Quebec delegation then stated:

● (1610)

[English]

We consider that the Supreme Court of Canada in constitutional matters and in Canadian intergovernmental relations must fulfil all the requirements of an arbitrator.

[Mr. Lachance.]

Quebec had realized by then, maybe a little too late, the dangers of leaving that agency of the central power, the federal government, with the last say or the last decision with respect to jurisdictional disputes between provinces and the central government, in other words, with respect to the interpretation of the British North America Acts. The province of Quebec went on with its action, and the Tremblay Commission which had been appointed by the government of Quebec at the time came up with an argumentation with the thrust on two mainstays or central elements. Those two mainstays were actually the fact that the court in question—the Supreme Court—emanated from the central power, and since there was no provision in the Constitution, in the British North America Acts, with respect to that power of adjudication in constitutional matters, Parliament must necessarily increase ad hoc, in the facts, by and by, step by step, the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in constitutional matters. This was a very progressive process, and a process which, once again, is provided for nowhere in the British North America Act.

The constitutional powers of the Supreme Court only stem from a series of over 180 decisions on constitutional matters which by and by created precedents and established the powers of the Supreme Court with respect to constitutional problems. It should actually be remembered that the decisions of the Supreme Court and the resulting recommendations when it is submitted a legal matter or a point of law for adjudication, do not have any legal binding power. They are only a means of trying to convince governments. Provinces are not bound in any way to accept the recommendations of the Supreme Court. There is, therefore, an important gap to be filled in that respect.

The second element of the findings of the Tremblay Commission was to the effet that, since Supreme Court judges are appointed by the central government, their decisions had to be, consciously or unconsciously, unfair to provinces. That is a trivial matter, but anyway a new process had to be found for appointments, possibly from a pool or through consultations with the provinces, I don't know. The Commission then said:

● (1620)

[English]

It would be sufficient, for example, to establish the custom of appointing to it former deputies or federal ministers. It would have been satisfactory if it had only been a matter of judging ordinary civil and criminal cases, but in constitutional conflicts it is neither normal nor satisfactory that a single party choose, appoint, and pay all the arbitrators.

Then followed a whole series of recommendations which remained ineffective for a number of years, because of a misunderstanding between federal promises, misunderstanding which is notorious over the years, since it repeated itself during the 1960 conference, when the then premier, Jean Lesage, presented once again the same arguments, and during the famous conference of Victoria when, once again, attempt was made to restore the situation in order to enable the provinces to have a consultation right in the process of nominating members of the Supreme Court.

So, the bill before us today, Bill C-239, is designed to increase the powers of reference by putting them in the Supreme Court Act, to give individuals the opportunity to refer directly to the Supreme Court matters affecting them and regarding the constitution or the validity of legislation.

I feel that under the constitutive powers and statutes of the Supreme Court as they now exist, nothing may be done because that constitutional power does not actually exist in right but is simply an extension of a general appeal procedure as confirmed under BNA Act section 101. I feel that if we broaden such competency by adding provisions to section 55, provisions that would prove theoretically valid, we would be granting the Supreme Court a jurisdiction to which it is not entitled. In fact, such action would be unjustifiable, and I am not speaking here of the additional work that this would entail for Supreme Court judges, but rather strictly from the standpoint of the interpretation of our constitution which should not permit, in my opinion, that the Supreme Court be granted these new powers, as suggested to us today by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). This being said, we do not mean to wave aside the arguments of our colleague from the opposition party.

We have no constitutional court in Canada, which is a deficiency. Could we possibly institute a Supreme Court with constitutional jurisdiction, as in the United States? We all know that the U.S. supreme court has only a power of reference strictly in the constitutional law area. It is not empowered to receive evidence. If, for instance, a case is brought before a trial court or a Court of Appeal in the United States and that a matter of constitutional law arises the constitutional matter is referred to the U.S. Supreme Court which gives its ruling on that particular matter, brings it back to the trial court and on the basis of recommendations from the U.S. Supreme Court, the appropriate judgment is passed.

The same principle, with a few variations, exists in Yugoslavia, Germany, France and countries of the European Economic Community. Perhaps we have there a striking example of a court strictly specialized in the interpretation of the respective jurisdictions of the various European Community member states and which has no other competence. That is then complete, total specialization in constitutional matters. That is what Canada is lacking.

That constitutional court that we could establish through a reform in depth of our present Supreme Court versus general competence in appeals, could have exclusive and first jurisdiction in disputes occurring between provinces and the federal government, or still between provinces, or in the interpretation of the constitutionality of a federal or provincial law. It would be its sole and exclusive competence.

I suggest decisions would then receive much better acceptance among the parties involved, and we would indeed have a worthy adjudicating body, an impartial one, to the extent of course provinces would have their say in the selection of members of the court. This could therefore be a part of an organization that could render highly specialized decisions in constitutional areas. Maybe we could use the suggestion by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) that citizens should be given an opportunity to refer to that court points of law, for adjudication, without having to go through the usual process of superior court, appellant court and all the way to the Supreme Court, if and when the latter accept to hear the case. I believe this cannot be done under the current Supreme Court Act. If reform were undertaken to establish a body with exclusive specialized jurisdiction in the constitutional field, this would be possible.

Madam Speaker, I will conclude these brief remarks by commending the hon. member for Central Nova for raising the matter. Once more, this is a most interesting constitutional problem, and I very much hope we can achieve the objective he pointed out, in the years to come or at least during a subsequent federal-provincial conference.

[English]

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Prud'homme: You should have been leader.

Mr. Leggatt: Speak up, Marcel, so that Hansard can hear you.

When I initially looked at this bill I had certain reservations about it. I thought it might open the door for the proliferation of constitutional wrangles. But, I see the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) has fully covered this concern in the second proposed section which allows the court to decide if a question is "an important question". Deciding such questions has, of course, been the traditional role of our supreme courts. Therefore that apprehended shortcoming has been removed from the bill.

I congratulate the hon. member for Central Nova for bringing forward a bill which will, if passed, do something that is long overdue in this country, something toward which our jurisprudence is slowly edging. It will make our courts more accessible to citizens who have suffered a wrong or who wish to have their rights determined. These rights to access long ago were enshrined in the constitution of the United States. We are slowly moving in that direction.

It has always been a principle of our law that, when there is a wrong, our legal system must provide the remedy. That remedy should not have to come from our legislatures. It should be provided, bascially, by the courts. I support this bill as it is another progressive attempt to allow the courts to deal with private wrongs, so that private wrongs may be redressed by the existing legal system.

A similar principle should apply to the redress of minor wrongs. For example, individual purchasers of automobiles may encounter, individually, a minor amount of difficulty but, in the mass, there may be losses of millions and millions of dollars. I am referring, of course, to class action legislation under which classes of persons in this country would be empowered to go to court, or send a representative to court, in order to redress what is basically a private wrong multiplied thousands and thousands of times. If we would come forward with that kind of legislation we would provide deterrents to some of the sloppy manufacturers in this country who are not faced with the same kind of legal risk as their counterparts in the United States. I suggest that would be a forward move in terms of Canadian legislation.

The same is true in the area where we have environmental laws. However, the amount of damage that any individual may suffer is so slight that, without status in a court for an individual, there is no deterrent to the industry that is doing the polluting. If we provide status to the entire group that has suffered the wrong, then the courts can provide some remedy.

I again congratulate the hon. member for what is really another process of democratization in the courts to see that individual rights are protected. The hon. member emphasized the problem of the power of the state. We in our western societies all have some concern that the power of the state is increasing. However, he did not mention the power of the corporate section of the community which is increasing at an even faster rate than that of the state. None of these things are good.

We all agree that the unlimited power of the state needs control. However, at the moment the power of bigness of corporations and, yes, trade unions has to be looked at in terms of protection against private wrongs that can result out of the idiom personality of these large organizations.

The hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance) indicated that he did not believe the Supreme Court of Canada was a constitutional court although for a long time we have had the Constitutional Questions Determination Act. That court has been ruling on questions of the constitution and it has been doing a good job. I do not think we should have a separate court. The unique make-up of Canada in a federal state makes it imperative that we have a federal court by which all of the component parts, the provinces and otherwise, are bound. Certainly if there is a weakness in that, I would support a change.

In the circumstances I want to make these remarks as brief as I can. I congratulate the hon. member on the bill. It is a progressive step to give an individual the right to determine a constitutional matter affecting him.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, it is significant that this bill is brought on at this time by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) when the Supreme Court of Canada is this year celebrating its one hundredth anniversary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Poulin: We in this land are very blessed to have such a high quality of court. It has been so, and improvingly so since confederation. This court has consistently grown with the needs of our community with the administration of justice. It has continued to be as it should be, an independent branch of our parliamentary and democratic system, separate from the legislative branch and the executive branch. They have been an outstanding court. They continue to be so under the leadership of the most eminent Chief Justice of the Supreme Court who holds that position at the present time.

On the occasion of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the court this fall, there will be very distinguished visitors coming to Canada, including the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, le premier président de la Cour des Sessions de France, and Mr. Justice Byron White of the Supreme Court of the United States. I am sure we who are here join with the members of that court in wishing them a great celebration upon this occasion.

May I say to the hon. member for Central Nova that although at first blush his bill seems to indicate that he is entering upon a new field, in fact this is the type of field in which the Supreme Court has been entertaining applications and granting leave to appeal.

There was one case from the hon. member's province which was decided recently. It was a very important case, the Nova Scotia Board of Censors versus Gerald McNeil. The case had to do with the constitutionality and whether or not it was ultra vires of the province to pass a certain law. This one individual as a taxpayer and citizen was granted the right by the Supreme Court of Canada to have his appeal heard, and it was heard. Therefore, I cannot agree with the bill in its present form for some reasons, one of which was referred to by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

The hon. member said he was concerned about the bill in the first instance but he thought that subclause (2) would eliminate the dockets of the Supreme Court being overly cluttered by frivolous and vexatious matters—those were not his words—but so many matters of a constitutional nature. He said that subclause (2) granted to the court the right to determine what question it would or would not hear. I would point out that although perhaps the Supreme Court does have this right to determine what in their view are matters of importance and what they will hear, it would result in many hundreds of applications for leave to appeal the very items that the hon. member for Central Nova raises in his bill.

The practical part is that the applications for leave to appeal can and very often are an argument on the substance of the matter as well as an application to ask the court if they will hear it. Therefore it would take a tremendous amount of time, in any case involving a substantial issue, for the court just to deal with the applications for leave to appeal.

The proposals contained in this bill are unnecessary and are possessed of possibly very unfortunate consequences. Why this is so may be examined in terms of the two fundamental thrusts of the bill, namely, the standing of persons to launch the proceedings sought to be authorized by the bill and the nature of those proceedings that are to be in the form of a reference.

I will first address myself to standing. The bill assumes that the present laws relating to the standing of persons to bring before the courts "an important question of law or fact concerning the constitution of Canada or any public general law made by or under the authority of the parliament of Canada" are inadequate.

In two recent Supreme Court of Canada decisions, one of which I referred to earlier, the first being Thorson versus Attorney General of Canada, a general member of the taxpaying public was given standing to question the validity of the Official Languages Act, and the Nova Scotia Board of Censors versus McNeil, where a member of the public was permitted to attack the constitutional validity of the provincial Theatres and Amusements Act, the highest court in the land acknowledged that it is not unlikely that the discretion of the court may be exercised in favour of giving standing to the sort of persons contemplated by this bill to question the constitutional validity of federal or provincial enactments.

In the first case, Thorson versus Attorney General of Canada, the former president of the Exchequer Court of Canada appeared personally to argue the case. He is acknowledged by all those who know him to be an exceptional man, an exceptional jurist, and an exceptional member of the bar. He argued this case as an individual without the necessity of Bill C-239 or any such legislation.

As a citizen and taxpayer, he argued as forcibly as he could to the Supreme Court that he had a right to be heard by the Supreme Court because it not only affected him as an individual but many other taxpayers. He argued that he should be permitted to be heard by the highest court in this land. He was heard, and he was given a full hearing. The Supreme Court of Canada recognized that this man, who was appearing not as a former jurist, not as the former president of the Exchequer Court of Canada, but as an individual, had the right on an important constitutional issue to be given a full hearing. I say this to indicate only that where there is such a matter of pressing and obvious concern the Supreme Court of Canada has grown and will continue to grow with the needs of the country as they relate to the administration of justice.

This liberal view of the standing of private citizens to bring into issue the constitutional validity of legislation was based in part, in the Thorson case, on Canadian and English jurisprudence dealing with standing in relation to the exercise of non-legislative powers and, in particular, on the powerful case of Dyson v. Attorney General decided by the English Court of Appeal more than 60 years ago. In terms of the respective legislative powers of parliament and the provincial legislatures, this is not a basis which may be strictly described as constitutional, and therefore it may be too early to say how far Canadian courts will be willing to take the laws of standing in non-constitutional situations. In view of these developments it may well be that the bill is not necessary to accomplish its stated purpose.

Even if the courts were not prepared to grant standing in a particular case, such as the case to which I have referred involving the former Mr. Justice Thorson and the case of the Nova Scotia Board of Censors and Gerald McNeil, the general law of the land already provides that an important question, to use the language of the bill, may in theory at least be litigated in non-reference proceedings by the appropriate Attorney General acting as parens patriae. Of course, it is where an Attorney General has been reluctant to do so that private persons have acted and, as in the two cases decided by the Supreme Court,—the cases to which I have referred—have been permitted to proceed. Moreover, there remains in the governor in council the authority under the Supreme Court Act to have important questions referred to the court for an advisory opinion.

Supreme Court Act

These provisions in the Supreme Court Act to which I have referred are section 55 in particular and section 35. First of all, may I refer to the general jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada as contained in section 35 of the Supreme Court Act:

The Supreme Court shall have, hold and exercise an appellate civil and criminal jurisdiction within and throughout Canada.

Section 36 states:

Subject to sections 40 and 44 an appeal to the Supreme Court lies from a final judgment or a judgment granting a motion for a non-suit or directing a new trial of the highest court of final resort in a province or a judge thereof, pronounced in

(a) a judicial proceeding where the amount or value of the matter in controversy in the appeal exceeds $10,000, or the proceedings upon a writ of habeus corpus.

Or two other matters. Therefore, Madam Speaker, the general power as set out in sections 35 and 36 is that the Supreme Court has the ultimate authority in this nation with respect to all criminal and civil matters subject to a monetary amount.

If the Supreme Court of Canada were to entertain cases of a similar nature involving $500 or $1,000 there would be so many cases before the court that it would have a difficult time directing itself to setting the precedents upon which the country relies so much for the administration of justice.

I, personally, over here on my side, have great respect for and great confidence in the judges of the provincial courts, both the civil and criminal divisions. I also have great respect for and confidence in the County Court and District Court judges who are appointed by the Canadian Governor General in Council, and also for the Supreme Courts of the provinces and the courts of appeal of the provinces which each have within their terms of reference limits within which they exercise final authority.

To say that the Supreme Court of the province of Ontario or the Court of Appeal of the province of Ontario is not able satisfactorily to answer all questions when we have set a monetary limit, for example, of $5,000 is, to my mind, to undermine the authority of those courts which have continued to demonstrate excellence in their judgments, whether they be appointments of provincial governments or whether they are appointed by the federal government.

I have great faith. I think the manner in which we have set out their jurisdiction, through acts of this parliament or acts of provincial legislatures, should not be lightly tampered with; it should be altered only when there is a pressing need to do so, and I do not find such a pressing need, especially in view of what has been demonstrated as being the actions of the Supreme Court of Canada in the two very recent cases I have quoted.

I should like to pay a little special attention to the intervention of one of my learned friends, the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemount (Mr. Lachance). At the beginning of my remarks I drew attention to the one hundredth anniversary of the Supreme Court of Canada. He has just celebrated, I think, the 21st anniversary of his birth, not very long ago. He demonstrated by the content of his speech today that he is a learned man. He arrived in this House with a bachelor's degree in arts, I believe; he also had a bachelor's degree in law. He was also an articled lawyer. Since coming here he has completed his bar examinations, and I believe this is a tremendous accomplishment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Poulin: If I could quickly summarize what I have been saying, it is that to give any person the right to refer such questions to the court might be harmful and unfortunate for the following reasons: (a) the distinction between frivolous or vexatious questions and those which deserve serious considerations might be lost; (b) The court would lose control of its docket which might become so filled with these private references that ordinary, and perhaps much more important appeal, would be subject to lengthy delays; (c) the avowed purpose of the amendments to the Supreme Court Act abolishing appeals as of right in civil matters, to lessen the already heavy case load of the court, would be defeated in part.

Further, even requiring the court first to determine whether a question is an important question would place an onerous burden on the court because (i) it would increase the list of motions for leave to appeal, and (ii) there would not necessarily be any record or other basis present on which the court could make a reasoned decision on this question. This procedure is contrary to the general principle that only the governor in council in the case of the Supreme Court, and the lieutenant governors in council in the case of the provincial courts, should be able to refer hypothetical cases to the court for advisory opinions. Because of the costs involved in the litigation process, this procedure would favour those individuals and corporations in Canada with the necessary means to bear those costs, and allowing other interested persons to be represented fails to deal with this matter of economics and with a procedure that favours issues by those financially capable of paying for such a reference.

I conclude my remarks by saying that I believe the Supreme Court of Canada has amply demonstrated its ability to exercise its discretion in granting the right of appeal on constitutional matters to individuals in this country in a most exemplary manner in both the Thorson case and the McNeil case to which I have referred. Therefore I submit there is no need or necessity for Bill C-239, though I compliment the hon. member for Central Nova for bringing it on for discussion.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Madam Speaker, surely the hon. member's purpose for introducing this bill is highly commendable. He wants all Canadians to be enlightened concerning the constitutional significance of parliamentary legislation. In spite of his commendable purpose, however, I suggest that accepting such an amendment would mean accepting the Supreme Court of Canada as the indisputable authority with regard to the Canadian constitution.

Madam Speaker, if we were to accept such an amendment, there would be a general outcry in the province of Quebec.

Personally, I should be one of the first to denounce it, because a lot of Quebecers do not trust the Supreme Court, and they have a great many reasons not to do so. So I do not think we are ready yet to accept the authority of the Supreme Court in constitutional matters. I am therefore almost in agreement with the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) when he says that only a body which would really represent the constituent elements of our country in a fair and equitable fashion would have this sort of authority which the Supreme Court would need to really render decisions in cases of conflicts. As a matter of fact, we are faced with one of these issues in the area of cablevision, and, Madam Speaker, when I heard the Prime Minister state in reply to my question that the federal government would not budge from its position, I was perfectly aware that a great many jurists could come forward and argue that under our constitution, communications, radio, television and cable television fall indeed under provincial jurisdiction. Then, at a given time, someone will have to decide where other agreements will be necessary, but in any case I am not sure that the opinion of the Supreme Court is undoubtedly the best because the Supreme Court is a creature of the federal government. It is always a little difficult in this very badly made country to make a judgment on these things because a country which, by virtue of its constitution, is a confederation is not a confederation after all. It is not a group of states which are in agreement, which unite for the best and for the worse, but it rather is a federation.

Yet, there is something ambiguous in our country which prevents us from being able to refer to a real constitutional authority, for the simple reason that there is no such authority: the Supreme Court is a creature and an organization of the federal government. Theoretically, it could therefore stand up for Parliament which it is a creature of and responsible to. And to those who claim that there is a host of extremely contentious issues on that matter, I would give as an example the matter of cablevision which is presently under discussion. However, one must admit that in spite of all these remarks that would obviously cause me to oppose such a bill, one must admit nevertheless that it should be good, Madam Speaker, to know just when the legislation passed by the Parliament of Canada is within the terms of the constitution. That would in effect avoid a number of problems which we meet and have met. And, if the Supreme Court were truly the body needed to solve all the problems, one would never have seen Madam Speaker, the frightful injustices that French-Canadians, or Quebecers have suffered which have never been redressed since provinces have made rules to abolish the French language. They have passed rules that could be judged as anticonstitutional. There was no authority to settle this problem, and even the federal Parliament's position on this matter is difficult to admit for some provinces. Then, it remains that the organization needed to make a decision should issue from every provincial authority so that we could refer to it if needed. But it would be very difficult now to refer to an organization that could stand up for one of the parties. This is why, despite the very commendable object of the bill, I would be inclined to reject it as long as the situation remains unchanged. May I say it is five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock.

At 5 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISMISSAL OF MESSRS. CHO, CHEW AND McGUIRE BY CN TELECOMMUNICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provision of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Within one year, three men, Messrs. Cho, Chew and McGuire, employed by CN Telecommunications have been dismissed and their dismissal is in obvious violation of the company and union agreement which states that an employee cannot be discharged until his case has been thoroughly reviewed and he has been advised of the reasons for such a review. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House instruct the Prime Minister to ask the Solicitor General for a full report on the involvement of the RCMP in this matter, request that the Minister of Labour investigate the firing of these men in relation to Section five (5) of the Canada Labour Code, and also that he order the Ministers of Transport and Communications to ascertain what input their respective departments had in these dismissals.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion being moved pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DISASTERS

FIRE AT SPRINGHILL—POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL AID

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who is doubtless well aware of the tragedy which has again struck the town of Springhill over the weekend. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has had any conversations with the premier of Nova Scotia about any joint assistance that the two governments might give with a view to restoring the town of Springhill. In any event, could the Prime Minister give the House some general indication of the attitude of his government toward assistance for Springhill?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government of course is aware of that disaster and has expressed concern. There has been no request from the government of the province as of a short while ago for the federal government to assist in any way. My understanding is that the provincial government is looking into the disaster and is asking itself whether it wishes to inform the federal government of its need for assistance. The House knows that the federal government has a set of rules under which it assists provinces when disasters reach a certain proportion.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the somewhat successful joint effort of the provincial and federal governments years ago in encouraging the economy of Springhill by, for example, locating a minimum security penitentiary there, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, with a view to providing some encouragement to the people in that gallant community, he would discuss with the Solicitor General the possible advisability of a further expansion of that institution and whether he would discuss with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the prospect of any development of a coal mine in Cumberland county.

Mr. Trudeau: I will certainly draw the recommendations of the Leader of the Opposition to the ministers.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO PROVIDE FOR REDUCTION IN UNITED STATES INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Considering that the most recently published Gallup poll indicated that 71 per cent of Canadians believe that there is now sufficient U.S. capital in Canada and 58 per cent of our population want the government to take steps to buy back majority control of major U.S. firms, can the Prime Minister say why the government, in bringing in its regulations to implement the Foreign Investment Review Act, brought in regulations which, to paraphrase what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said on Friday, will not change in all likelihood in absolute terms the amount of U.S. investment in the Canadian economy, and further, why specific measures were not announced by the government to move in the direction in which Canadians clearly want the government to move?

● (1410)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must point out that in paraphrasing the minister, the hon. member has probably inadvertently given an incorrect impression of what the minister said. As to the rest of it, this seems to be argumentation. With respect, I would say that if Your Honour would allow me, I could give a very long resume on the government's position on this, but the occasion on which to make that kind of intervention was on Friday when the minister made his statement.

In brief, this government is more interested in channelling Canadian investments in the future into areas which are growth oriented and which are important in the new industrial age, rather than spending our savings and earnings to buy up any old thing just because it does not happen to be majority Canadian owned. That is a forward looking position which I do not expect the New Democratic Party to share.

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT PROMISE THAT FUTURE RESOURCE UNDERTAKINGS WOULD BE FIFTY PER CENT CANADIAN OWNED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): In one of his more forward looking statements in the middle of an election campaign just over a year ago the Prime Minister indicated that in the future at least 50 per cent of all new undertakings in the resource field in Canada would be Canadian owned, and at that time the government promised it would do something to move in this forward looking direction. I wonder if the Prime Minister can tell us when or if we might expect the government to move in that direction?

Mr. Baldwin: Next election.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In the last election campaign we also indicated that we would be proclaiming phase 2 of the Foreign Investment Review Act, which we did on Friday. We proclaimed it for some time next fall. I made it quite clear before to the House and to the country that we would not do all these things at the snap of a finger. They would be timed to suit the various contingencies of the economy, and that is why we took one step on Friday. We will be taking further steps later on.

REASON FOR DELAYING IMPLEMENTATION OF PHASE II UNTIL OCTOBER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, we wait. I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I would like to ask him why the government thought it necessary to wait until the middle of October for the implementation of phase II, and why it could not give 24 hours notice, once the regulations were drawn up and made known to the civil servants, of the implementation of that act.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is for a very practical reason. We have to hire, and train people for the agency to administer phase II of the act. Those people have not been hired or trained. The second very practical reason is that we did not want to interfere with new business decisions which have been taken in all good faith and which would be cut off if we did this in the very arbitrary way which the hon. member is suggesting.

AIRPORTS

POSSIBILITY OF INSTALLING APPROACH SYSTEM AT VAL-D'OR

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Can he tell us whether there have been any developments with regard to the request of the Department of Transport to the Treasury Board for a subsidy towards the installation of an approach system at the Val-d'Or airport?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is an administrative matter. When a decision has been reached, it will be announced.

UNITED STATES QUOTA ON BEEF—IMPORT QUOTA ON EGGS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH UNITED STATES OFFICIALS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. On July 16 in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stated in the House that there would be a meeting in Washington last Friday, June 18, between Canadian and American officials and I quote, "with a view toward solving the impasse with respect to cattle and beef products moving both ways." I ask the Minister of Agriculture what is the current status of these negotiations, and is there another meeting in the offing?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that meeting did take place in Washington last Friday. I believe it was a constructive meeting. There was an exchange of views, and when we are in a position to provide further information to the House, we will, of course, do so.

Mr. Hargrave: I will ask a supplementary question, I presume to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the press reports indicating American preoccupation with eggs in these negotiations, can the minister indicate whether the subject of our egg quotas was brought up during that meeting last Friday, and if so, can he state at least in general terms what the conclusions were regarding this phase of the negotiations?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the American side did raise this question with the Canadian team, and the Canadian team took note of the representations of the American side.

HOUSING

JUSTIFICATION FOR INCREASES IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES FOR CERTAIN CATEGORIES—EFFECT ON PUBLIC HOUSING SECTOR

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who on April 28 said he was doing everything possible to make sure mortgage rates were kept as low as possible. Given that CMHC has now increased the rate from 9-⅜ to 9-¾ per cent for loans to provinces and municipalities for socially assisted housing and from 10 per cent to 11 per cent for loans under section 58, what justification can the minister give for the increases? Is this what he means by keeping interest rates as low as possible?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member realizes that under section 58 this is money lent to people as the lenders of last resort—people who can well afford as much as any Canadians can afford existing mortgage rates but in areas not served by conventional lenders. We do not think that public funds should be used to subsidize people, thus giving them an advantage they would not have anywhere else when that money can go to people who really need the assistance in the lower income groups. This is where our priority will be. In so far as lending to the provinces is concerned, this is something over which there is no discretion. We lend it to them at a standard rate ⅜ of one per cent over the rate at which we borrow from the Department of Finance and that is something over which there is no discretion.

Miss MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister inform the House what effect he believes this increase in rates will have on socially assisted housing—that is the money available to the provinces will have in this public housing sector? Can he tell the House if any assessment was made prior to the increase as to the effects it would have on the number of starts in the public housing sector?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will materially affect starts. It does make it a little more difficult. What it means is that our subsidies under 44(1)(b) will be in place to assist those who need assistance and that is what these agreements are for.

Miss MacDonald: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has altered his position with regard to mortgage rates for socially assisted housing, will he now give us assurance that this is not the first step in an across the board increase in CMHC interest rates and that other NHA loans will not be similarly affected?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I have not changed my position in relation to socially assisted housing. I can only say that CMHC lends the money at no more than ⅜ per cent above our borrowing rate, the minimum fraction of a percentage needed to administer these loans, which has always taken place over the borrowing rate.

TRADE

POSITION OF CANADA AT FORTHCOMING GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is somewhat supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. It appears that Canada may go into the next round of GATT negotiations with, literally, "egg on its face" because of what happened in the past few months and because of our trade moves. Can the minister tell the House specifically where Canada stands? What will our position be in these talks coming up this fall? Are we going to opt for more protection or are we moving into an area of freer trade?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the government has made it very clear that we are, as a signatory of the Tokyo round, interested in trade liberalization measures. In respect of the specific reference to eggs, I think the Minister of Agriculture, on a previous occasion, has made it very clear that we believe that the egg import quotas are fully consistent with our obligations under the GATT.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PURPOSE OF MINISTER'S VISIT TO UNITED NATIONS—POSSIBLE RELATIONSHIP TO ATTENDANCE OF PLO AT CRIME CONFERENCE IN TORONTO

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister prepared to reveal to the House today the purpose of his visit to the United Nations last Friday and in particular to say whether he discussed with the Secretary General the matter of the PLO and its presence at the upcoming criminology conference?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope to make a statement later in the day on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was of course reluctant to advise the House in the place of the minister of his intention to make that statement. The minister has now done that, and I think any questions about that subject ought to be deferred until such time as the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs makes his statement on motions later this day.

Oral Questions

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED IMMEDIATE ENACTMENT OF AMENDMENT TO PREVENT APPELLATE COURTS SUBSTITUTING VERDICT OF GUILTY FOR JURY ACQUITTAL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Justice has to do with the announcement he made the other day, which is very welcome, of changes that he contemplates in the Criminal Code. Among them is one on which the minister, in the face of public opinion, has reversed himself. I refer, of course, to the objections I and some other members raised over and over again about the danger to our jury system posed by the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Morgentaler case. As there is an appeal pending before the Court of Appeal of Quebec against the second acquittal of Dr. Morgentaler and as this may lead to a parade of further prosecutions, would the minister consider bringing in an amendment to end this course at once—I think there is general agreement for this—instead of waiting until the fall or until the next part of the adjourned session of this House?

● (1420)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the sentiment of the right hon. gentleman. The Criminal Code amendments encompass many important things and we might single out six or one dozen of them for immediate passage, according to his theory. I think the House would like the important nature of those amendments to be studied in committee and the usual processes to be followed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, has there been any communication to the minister or to his deputy from the Attorney General or Minister of Justice of Quebec suggesting that this legislation should be held up pending the present appeal which, in normal circumstances, will not be heard by the Quebec Court of Appeal until October or November?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, there has not. I would also appreciate it if the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert would not discuss the case which is before the courts.

SUGGESTED SEPARATION FROM BILL C-71 OF AMENDMENT PREVENTING APPELLATE COURTS FROM SUBSTITUTING VERDICT OF GUILTY FOR JURY ACQUITTAL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is along the lines of that asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. As Bill C-71 is like a legal omelette, is the minister prepared to separate from the bill that part having to do with the verdicts of juries being upset by appeal courts and the Supreme Court of Canada? Would he separate that part from the legal omelette?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if the purpose of the separation was that referred to by the right hon. gentleman, I have already answered that part of the question. Speaking of the form of the bill, it seems to me that it is appropriate to have a good number of different items in the Criminal Code dealt with in one Criminal Code amendment bill.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSED DENIAL OF BAIL TO THOSE CHARGED WITH KIDNAPPING AND EXTORTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As premeditated and planned kidnapping for the purpose of extortion is a most cowardly crime, and as the minister has not interfered with the minimum penalties, will he work out an agreement with attorneys general to this effect: that those caught before the overt act is completed and therefore charged with attempt to commit the crime will not be allowed to free on bail while their trial is pending, for the sake of the safety and security of society generally and the fears of wives and children of people in public life and in business?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what the hon. member meant by that question, nor what his friends were applauding. I take it he assumes that we should provide different treatment for all persons accused in one particular area, that is, treat them differently when it comes to bail and that sort of thing. I think that kind of broad generalization about the criminal process is not helpful. I think, if we were to come down to the actual examination of the question, that many of the hon. member's colleagues would back away from the idea of trying to deal in an abstract and general way with individuals who can quite properly be handled by the discretion of the courts under the present system.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, am I to take it from the minister's answer that he basically endorses the idea of these people being released so that they can duplicate the same violent crimes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW ACT

STUDIES OF PERFORMANCE OF UNDERTAKINGS TO REVIEW BOARD—POSSIBILITY OF SANCTIONS FOR VIOLATIONS OF UNDERTAKINGS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns the operation of Phase I of the Foreign Investment Review Act and, incidentally, the proposed operation of Phase II. Will the minister advise the House if his department has prepared any studies to do with the follow-up performance of those companies which have given undertakings to the review agency? Has there been any follow-up study in terms of their performance? Have there been any violations of the undertakings given with regard to takeovers during the operation of Phase I of the act?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the agency started to monitor the results of the first set of undertakings which were given approximately a year ago last May. It will, on the anniversary date of each allowance, start the monitoring process to obtain information as to whether the company involved is living up to those undertakings. At the moment, it is too early to be able to provide any kind of definitive statement. All I can say is that the process of monitoring has already started.

Mr. Leggatt: As I read the present act, it does not provide for sanctions to be applied with regard to violations in undertakings. Is the minister considering moving into the sanction area where there is a violation of an undertaking? Clearly, decisions taken after a takeover are economic rather than legal. Until the minister decides that sanctions are going to be applied, the Foreign Investment Review Act is a meaningless piece of paper.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the act provides for those sanctions. If the sanctions are needed, they will be applied.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISMISSAL OF MESSRS. CHO, CHEW AND McGUIRE BY CN TELECOMMUNICATIONS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport of which I have given his office notice. Will the minister tell the House whether he has received reports on the dismissal of Messrs. Cho, Chew and McGuire, employees of CN Telecommunications on the pretext that they may be security risks?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. I immediately got in touch with the president of CN. I am supposed to have another discussion with him later about this matter. I know they have been following this practice for a very long time. However, this practice worries me as much as the hon. member. This is a very serious question and I want to discuss it with the Prime Minister and the cabinet. Possibly the hon. member will agree to wait until we know all the implications of the decision before I answer in the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPLICATION OF PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT OF SOUTH VIETNAM FOR ADMISSION TO UNITED NATIONS—SUGGESTED OPPOSITION BY CANADA UNTIL MISSIONARIES RELEASED

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the PRG has applied for admission to the United Nations, can the minister assure the House that Canada will oppose such admission and will urge our allies to do likewise until the PRG lives up to its fading promises and releases the Canadian missionaries held captive for over four months?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On the second aspect of the question, Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that following his recent representations, I wired the foreign minister of the PRG asking for an up-to-date report on the missionaries in question and suggesting that, in accordance with previous statements made by the PRG, these missionaries be released. I have not as yet received a reply to that representation. On the question of admission of the PRG to the United Nations, the government of Canada will consider that in relation to other applications for admission to that body.

Mr. O'Sullivan: In view of the fact that for over four months the PRG seems to have been ignoring the various representations made to it, will the minister start talking the language these communist forces understand by advising them we will not go along with their request for admission to the United Nations and that that country will not receive any more foreign aid until such time as they return these Canadians to safety and freedom?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member's recommendation is pursuing contradictory objectives simultaneously.

ANGOLA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SITUATION AND MEASURES TO ENSURE SAFETY OF CANADIANS

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of continued fighting among rival left wing factions in Angola amounting to almost total war according to recent reports, can the minister give us any information as to the situation there and tell the House whether any steps have been taken to ensure the safety of Canadian nationals who may be in that country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have been following this situation. It is a matter of concern for Canada. I believe that Canada may have a certain role to play in this issue; but it is not taking the initiative in this situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It seems to be to abstain.

GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE TOWARDS UNITED NATIONS PLAN FOR SOUTHWEST AFRICA

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): In the light of the deteriorating situation in Angola, is the minister taking a less belligerent view toward Canadian involvement in United Nations plans to expose Southwest Africa to the same fate? The minister had some words to say about the fate of that area of Southwest Africa during his recent tour of the African continent.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Apart from the state of belligerency which the hon. member mentioned, we have already stated as a government our attitude with respect to Southwest Africa. We have stated that we regard it as illegally a part of South Africa, we have supported a United Nations commission with respect to Namibia. We have indicated recently our willingness to assist the Commissioner in his efforts to provide training programs for a possible future corps of public servants who might manage a free Namibia.

Mr. Johnston: Has the Canadian government been approached to assist the United Nations relief operations in Angola?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—INQUIRY AS TO ALLEGED SECRET REPORT INDICATING SHORTAGE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but he is not here; perhaps the Prime Minister, who supposedly knows a little bit about everything, might be prepared to reply. Has the government heard of an alleged secret document which came into its possession relating to the amount of natural gas available and apparently indicating there was a great shortage known to the government six or eight months ago?

An hon. Member: Another hidden report.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I cannot respond directly to that question on behalf of the minister but I will take it as notice. He will be here tomorrow, and he will respond.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the parliamentary secretary ask the minister to search diligently and produce this document despite the well known proclivity of the government to act like a group of pack rats, hiding papers in all the cubby holes in its offices?

NATIONAL CAPITAL

COMMUTER SERVICE—REPRESENTATIONS OF NEPEAN AND LUCERNE RATEPAYERS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs with respect to representations made by the Nepean and Lucerne ratepayers' groups for a commuter rail service. In view of the urgent communications sent to the minister by the Lucerne group on June 24 and by the Nepean group on July 4, will the minister use his good offices to initiate a meeting of the agencies involved in order that this proposal, which has met fairly general public support, could be brought forward in an effort to determine whether the difficulties can be resolved and a commuter service established on both sides of the Ottawa River.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I will certainly use my good office, modest as it is, to bring the groups together. I am certainly interested, and I have met with ratepayers' groups on both sides of the river. We are anxious to develop a continuing dialogue with them to make sure we are working toward common objectives to the extent humanly possible.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I want the minister to understand there have been letters sent to him on the dates I have mentioned. Could he review the rather extensive file from both groups and the National Capital Commission, which, by the way, has been most co-operative, and see whether this meeting could be brought on rather quickly in view of the time which has elapsed?

Mr. Danson: I will look into that question immediately. I cannot promise to make a statement on motions because the hon. member might take me to task.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF MINISTER'S ATTITUDE TOWARDS UNION LEADERS—SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF MINISTER FROM OFFICE

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that bargaining between the Post Office and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers is at the conciliation board stage, which is an extremely important stage for discovery of a basis for a peaceful and mutually satisfactory settlement, and in view of the government's often repeated hope that collective bargaining can take place between the employer and employee without resort to strike or lockout, and in view of the minister's well-publicized tirade against the democratically elected leadership of CUPW in calling them dishonest, deceptive and irresponsible, will the minister explain to this House why he has deliberately prejudiced the very sensitive and important deliberatings of the conciliation board by engaging in yet another round of counter-productive and frankly childish name-calling?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): The hon. gentleman should know that no conciliation board has been set up yet. Second, I will admit my words may have sounded harsh. But I owe the hon. member an explanation. Some weeks ago in the House of Commons I was charged by the union with not providing adequate personnel in the department for processing grievances. I rectified that situation, and the grievances concerning the Montreal workers who were suspended have been on the desk of the deputy minister for over three weeks in the hope and anticipation that in case any of these suspensions were too severe, a review would reduce them to a minimum. The unions in question, despite the invitation of my department, have on three occasions postponed these negotiations and have now notified us that they will be unable to appear to plead for these workers until some time in August.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Rodriguez: My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The minister ought to know that that stage that he outlined is really a fourth step and all the arguments have been presented at the prior steps. In view of the paranoid and childish outburst by the Postmaster General which can only have grave consequences, will the Prime Minister consider removing the Postmaster General from the cabinet? Alternatively, will he consider giving him the Munro treatment by checking him into the local army hospital for a rest?

HEALTH

LACK OF DENTISTS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES REQUEST FOR MORE NUTRITIONISTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister cause an investigation to be made into deplorable dental health conditions in the Northwest Territories where I understand there are only 15 dentists to serve a region 1, 500,000 square miles in extent; dentists are saying they are extracting teeth because they do not have time to do any preventive dentistry or filling?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is true that there is a shortage of dentists in the Northwest Territories. The problem has been endemic for several years, and to solve it, we have set up a special school where people are specially trained to give intermediate care in dentistry. The school is now operating at Fort Smith. Every year, a number of graduates will join the labour force, especially in the Northwest Territories, to alleviate the lack of qualified dentists. I trust graduates from this school will soon be numerous enough to meet the needs in the area.

● (1440)

[English]

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With some respect for that answer, I hope it can be hastened along very quickly. Would the minister also do something to increase the number of nutritionists in that area, where people are consuming over three quarters of a cup of sugar a day, people who traditionally have not had sugar in their diets—in view of the fact that a lot of health problems are being caused in that area?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, here again the problem raised by the hon. member is real. Furthermore, the inquiry Nutrition Canada has confirmed certain data in this respect. We are trying to recruit qualified dieticians, but again I must point out to the hon. member that it is difficult to recruit all the trained staff required in the Northwest Territories. If the hon. member has a few suggestions to present regarding persons willing to go there I shall be pleased to heed them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ATTEMPT TO EXPEL ISRAEL FROM UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What is the position of Canada in view of the announced intention of over 50 countries to seek this fall to expel Israel from the United Nations General Assembly?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be dealing with that subject a little later in my statement, but in order that the matter be dealt with immediately, I should like to say that the position of Canada obviously is in favour of the principle of universality and it will resist very vigorously any effort to change the status of Israel at the general assembly.

PROPOSED CLASSIFICATION INSTITUTION AT PORT PERRY—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, last week I gave notice to the Solicitor General that I intended to raise a question about the suggestion of the department that it build a classification penal institution in Port Perry, Ontario. In view of the reaction both pro and con in that small Ontario town to the suggestion, I wonder whether the minister has made up his mind as to what the department is going to do?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the penitentiaries service has decided to look at this proposal once more, and we are also looking at the possibility of placing the reception centre in that part of Ontario but perhaps in a different municipality.

HOUSING

POSSIBILITY OF EXTENDING REHABILITATION PROGRAM AND INCREASING FUNDS AVAILABLE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs responsible for housing. In view of the fact that the minister is having difficulty with housing starts and increased mortgage rates, and in view of the fact that he now has a program available under residential rehabilitation to provide funds for those on low incomes to rehabilitate their homes so as to conserve fuel and ensure safety as well as extend the life of the home, can the minister indicate whether it is his intention to expand the rehabilitation program under neighbourhood improvements or rural native housing in order to relieve the situation now existing in Canada's housing crisis?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, my colleague the Minister of Finance eliminated sales tax on insulation materials in the very recent budget. In addition to that, of great assistance in these programs, not only for all Canadians but especially for the rehabilitation program, the arrangements under NIP are being pursued rather vigorously. As my hon. friend knows, this has taken a while to get going, but thanks to his interest and that of many of my colleagues we are trying to accelerate the rehabilitation aspects. The hon. member has pointed out the difficulty with rural rehabilitation, but I am now in the process of discussing and reviewing this program in the hope that we can accelerate it.

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the allocation for Canada under residential rehabilitation is only $7 million, and Newfoundland, for example, will be provided with only $600,000, which will not put a dent in the need, would the minister consider very seriously expanding the funds, since he has reduced the $100 million urban demonstration program and the funds of other programs, to provide relief to those people in greatest need?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I am in the process of reviewing those allocations at this time to see how the provinces are taking them up as well, and I shall look at this with a considerable amount of sympathy and enthusiasm, not only to put a dent in but to take some of the dents out.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED SUSPENSION OF SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO SOUTH KOREA IN VIEW OF STATEMENTS BY GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of President Park's statement that South Korea would develop its own nuclear weapons if the United States nuclear umbrella were withdrawn and the later statement of the South Korean Minister of Science and Technology, Mr. Choi, that his country has the technical potential to develop its own nuclear weapons, has the government decided to suspend the CANDU reactor sale, since these Korean government statements are completely inconsistent with the stated policy of the Canadian government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a number of events have overtaken the comments attributed to these South Korean leaders, including my own seeking of assurances from the president, who advised me that his country had no intention of seeking and would not seek a nuclear weapons option. The government has not cancelled or altered in any way its undertaking to provide the nuclear reactor in question. Obviously, at the present time we are negotiating, with the Republic of Korea, safeguards agreements, and we are taking that and all other factors into account.

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS—ALLEGED DIFFERENT TREATMENT BETWEEN DEMOCRACIES AND DICTATORSHIPS ON SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has stated on several occasions that since all treaties can be broken the government must assess the credibility of safeguard assurances. In light of the immensity of the risk involved, why is the government requiring signed treaties on this question with full fledged democracies while being satisfied with verbal assurances of affluent dictatorships around the world?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, apart from the comments of the hon. member, the government is seeking from all countries precisely the same bilateral safeguards agreements. We are not accepting verbal assurances from one group and treaties from another; we are seeking exactly the same agreement from each country with which we do business.

AIRPORTS

PROPOSED STUDY OF FACILITIES AT FREDERICTON, SAINT JOHN AND MONCTON TO ASCERTAIN IMPROVEMENTS NECESSARY FOR SAFETY OF PASSENGERS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that last night passengers on Air Canada's flight 635, with destination at Fredericton, were unloaded at Moncton and sent forward to Fredericton by bus because the air strip at Fredericton is not long enough to land a fully loaded plane of the type used in flight 635, would the minister consider an in depth study of the airports at Fredericton, Saint John and Moncton to see what improvements are necessary for the proper safety of passengers in New Brunswick?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if they moved the passengers by bus it was because they were interested in the safety of the passengers; otherwise they would have tried to land. So I do not think the hon. member has proved his case. Secondly, this is not the only place in Canada where some types of planes cannot land. There are other cities as important as Moncton with the same problem. For example, at Quebec City a DC-8 cannot land because the runway is not long enough, but nobody, not even the MP, has asked to have a longer runway.

AIR CANADA

ARRANGEMENTS TO TRANSPORT PASSENGERS BY BUS TO FREDERICTON—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has overlooked the fact that I said planes in service with Air Canada cannot land when fully loaded on these air strips. I have a further supplementary question. Would the minister discuss with Air Canada the arrangements they have made to transport passengers by bus, in view of the fact that passengers have been brought by bus to the Fredericton airport after it had been closed, when no one was available, no transportation was available, no conveniences were available, and without very heavy pressures passengers would have been dumped in a dark airport without the means to get to their destination, which was the city of Fredericton.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON EXTRADITION OF PERSONS CHARGED WITH CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE AS RESULT OF AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. It has been some time since I asked the minister what the intention of the government is with regard to extradition proceedings concerning criminal negligence cases as a result of the use of a motor vehicle. I am sure the minister must have made up his mind by now and I hope he has the answer for us this time.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the essential answer is that the facts which are the basis of that charge will ordinarily, if they involve death, also be grounds for a manslaughter charge which, of course, is covered in the extradiction treaty and that will ordinarily be satisfactory.

CANADIAN LABOUR COUNCIL

DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF OPERATION AND COMPOSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. It follows my questions of Friday concerning the Canadian Labour Council. In his answers on Friday the minister did not give an answer to the question concerning when we may expect the Canadian Labour Council to be initiated and put in place. I am wondering if the minister could also tell us whether he is able to give this House now any indication of exactly who will be represented on that council and by whom.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Well, Mr. Speaker, I can advise the hon. member that the Canadian Labour Council is in its formative stage already. It has already had one meeting and is having another meeting later this week. There are approximately nine members from the labour side. There are nine members from the management or business side and, of course, the government is represented by a nucleus agreeable to both sides.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, could the minister advise the House approximately when he expects the council he has described to become existent officially and to be of assistance to the government, to labour and management?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is already meeting and I think that fact is evidence that it is in existence.

PROPOSED LICENSING OF ITALIAN COMPANY TO MANUFACTURE CANDU REACTORS—PROVISION OF SAFEGUARDS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding reports that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is negotiating an agreement with a private firm in Italy which would licence that firm in respect of the manufacture of the CANDU reactors in Italy and after certain time periods have elapsed would allow it to sell CANDU reactors outside of Italy to other countries. May I ask the minister what safeguards have been prepared by the government to ensure that CANDU reactors manufactured in Italy will not be sold to any country which is likely to use them for other than peaceful purposes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I noticed this morning in Hansard that this question, and I believe a number of others, were asked on Friday of my colleague the President of the Privy Council. I have received a certain amount of information but not enough to justify answering the question. I would like to do that as soon as I have the additional information I have requested.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, when the minister secures this information will he also inform the House wbether or not similar agreements are being negotiated with Argentina and Rumania.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister inform the House whether the Department of Public Works has obtained a building from Air Canada or CAE in Winnipeg to house a computer centre for his department.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I know tenders have been called but I do not know whether they have been closed or awarded because that is the function of the Department of Public Works. I will take notice of the question and find out for the hon. member.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, as the jet aircraft are only a short distance from the buildings the Department of Public Works would be looking at, will the minister check to determine whether landings of the jet aircraft will affect the highly sensitive computer equipment.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that would have been considered by the officials, but I will check.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): An immense number of refunds have already been paid, in fact most of them. HEALTH

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION CONCERNING EFFECT OF BUDGET CUTS—EFFECT OF BUDGET CUTS ON SERVICE IN POOR PROVINCES

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware of the statement made by the CMA that the budgetary policies concerning health announced in the budget will result in the rationing of health services in certain parts of the country? If the minister is aware of that statement would he give the House his unequivocable assurance that such rationing will not take place.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that the CMA has not declared what the hon. member said.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the budgetary measures announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare will not reduce the cost of health services but simply transfer the burden to the shoulders of the provinces, would the minister care to make a statement on motions in this House indicating what action will be taken to ensure that health services will not be reduced particularly in the poorer provinces.

[Mr. Basford.]

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have already clearly indicated, as did the Minister of Finance, that there is no reason why the measures announced should involve any reduction whatever of the quality of health services in Canada; much to the contrary, I feel that together with the provinces, we could even take steps to improve services while controlling cost increases which, especially during recent years, have proven to be very high.

ENERGY

SALE OF CANDU REACTORS BY ITALIAN COMPANY UNDER LICENCE—GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF SALES AND SAFEGUARDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns an answer given to me by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on July 10 with regard to safeguards in connection with any CANDU reactors exported from Italy under licence. In his answer the minister said that the Government of Canada would continue to insist that Canadian safeguard standards apply to any sale by Italy of CANDU reactors to third party countries. Is that a correct statement that was made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on July 10 and what mechanism does Canada intend to employ to enforce those safeguards.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will look at the answer given by my colleague and I will advise the hon. member whether I can agree with him that it is an accurate statement.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton on a point of order.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, on Friday last you gave the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) an opportunity to raise a point of order in which he asked whether I had checked Hansard or was attempting to mislead this House. I want to inform you, Mr. Speaker, that in fact I had read Hansard very carefully and was not intentionally misleading the House, because although the word "often" appears in the minister's answer, the next sentence indicates that he expects people, when they have been found guilty of one charge, to plead guilty to following charges. It was the word "expects" with which I was most concerned. I should point out that if in fact the minister had answered the question I posed to him, he would not have got himself into the bind.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON HOLDING IN TORONTO UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON PREVENTION OF CRIME

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, earlier the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) asked me about my visit to the Secretary General at the United Nations on Friday. I confirm that the visit did take place and my main purpose in seeing the Secretary General was to discuss the UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. In the course of that discussion I advised the Secretary General of the United Nations that Canada does not wish to proceed with the Fifth UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders this year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I have sought the Secretary General's co-operation in obtaining a postponement of the congress, and he has undertaken to study the situation in order to clarify the position. In the government's view, this congress cannot be held successfully anywhere this year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Hon. members will recall that at the fourth congress held in Kyoto in 1970, the Government of Canada, in consultation with the province of Ontario, proposed that the venue of the next congress be Toronto, in September of 1975. This proposal was accepted by delegations and subsequently confirmed by the General Assembly. Since that time, however, there has been a steady deterioration of the atmosphere in which international conferences are held. I need hardly mention the discord which marred the sixth special session and the last regular session of the General Assembly, the recent conferences of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, UNIDO, and of the International Labour Organization, ILO, as well as the International Women's Year conference in Mexico a few weeks ago.

Whereas a minimum of co-operation is essential to any progress in the international field, we have witnessed lately excessive confrontation on issues that were not related to the subject matter of conferences. The ingredients are well known: racialism in Southern Africa, the Middle East conflict, producer-consumer relations and the full range of economic development problems subsumed under calls for a "New World Economic Order". Canada believes that these are very real and difficult problems which must be dealt with urgently, in the appropriate international institutions, before they poison the body politic of the United Nations family; and let there be no doubt that we consider it necessary and desirable that political factors take their proper place even in the most technical of conferences. But they must meet some test of relevance, and in recent United Nations conferences this has clearly not been the case.

Hon. members are well aware that in respect of the Toronto congress on crime prevention, which was to take place next September, one of these issues had already become paramount. It arose from the resolution adopted in November, 1974, by the General Assembly, with Canada dissenting, inviting the Palestinian Liberation Organization, PLO, to attend its sessions as a permanent observer and, in a similar capacity, conferences convened under the auspices of the General Assembly or other organs of the United Nations. Accordingly, the Government of Canada was informed by the United Nations secretariat some time ago that observers from the PLO had been invited to attend the fifth congress on crime prevention and that the Canadian authorities were expected to allow entry, sojourn and exit to these participants.

Needless to say, it is with reluctance that the government has decided to seek postponement of the congress, but we concluded that it would not be possible, in present circumstances, to hold a successful congress on crime prevention in Canada or anywhere else. We are all aware of the public outcry for or against the admission to Canada, for this congress, of observers from the Palestinian Liberation Organization. We have all been worried by its divisive effect upon Canadian public opinion. We could not ignore the risk of public disorders. These factors would have led any government to reconsider a decision to host an international conference. But in the final analysis, two factors dominated in our discussions. The first was the inevitable intrusion of unrelated political considerations into the proceedings of the congress. The second was the re-escalation of violence in the Middle East and the consequent spread of its bitterness into Canada and subsequently into the congress itself.

It is obvious that such intrusion of the Middle East conflict, by adding to the already hopeless confusion between civil crimes and acts of war, would distort and subvert the purposes of what has essentially been up to now, and should remain, a technical meeting of experts from all countries, striving to develop international co-operation in a field of vital importance to the rule of law and to public order everywhere. As host country, we felt that Canada had assumed a major responsibility for the success of this congress, and in such an unfavourable political climate we did not see how we would possibly carry out our responsibility. I should add that we were also concerned about the coincidence of the congress with the seventh special session of the General Assembly on development and international economic co-operation, since the contentious atmosphere of one would in all likelihood seep into the other.

However, after an extensive review of the government's domestic and international obligations, we decided to inform the Secretary General of the United Nations that we did not want to be relieved of the responsibility for holding this congress but, rather, wished to postpone it. We did not want to withdraw our invitation to the United Nations, and we tried to avoid any steps which might have called into question our long-standing commitment to the principles of the United Nations. I emphasize that Canada's willingness to participate in and contribute to the operations of United Nations agencies remains undiminished.

The respite obtained by postponement must be effectively used by all to bring about sufficient improvement in attendant political conditions so that we may have reasonable assurances that technical conferences such as the fifth United Nations congress on crime prevention will be useful and productive. We hope that current negotiations for the reduction of tensions between some of the parties to the Middle East conflict will prove successful in coming months, and we will actively support the continuing efforts of the parties directly involved and of the United States government toward that goal.

Furthermore, the next General Assembly of the United Nations will provide an opportunity to affirm the principle of universality as a fulfilment of what ought to be a basic aim of the United Nations. More specifically, we will resist any attempt to exclude Israel or any other country from the proceedings of the General Assembly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Acceptance of this principle would guarantee the status of Israel within the community of nations and thus remove one cause of instability in the area. So that in requesting the postponement of the congress, Canada is not shirking its responsibilities but actually taking on new ones. Through new initiatives, both bilateral and multilateral, the government will try to improve the political situation in the Middle East and in the United Nations, notably through our participation in the next session of the General Assembly which may be crucial for the future of the organization, given the fundamental character of the issues on which debates are expected to focus. Canada will consult with other interested countries on the ground rules governing technical discussions in United Nations arenas. Either independently or in co-operation with others, we will attempt to formulate and seek support for an effective resolution in the General Assembly on this question.

I also intend to accept, during the autumn, outstanding invitations to visit a number of countries in the Middle East. These visits, which the government already considered most useful for strengthening our relations with this region of the world, have taken a new urgency following the difficulties we encountered in holding the U.N. congress on crime prevention. The House can be assured that I will take this opportunity to solicit the views of my hosts on these difficulties and seek their views on the United Nations as a universal forum and an effective international instrument.

Hon. members should note that our decision to seek the postponement of the congress for the reasons stated is consistent with the policy of the government on the Middle East. We will continue to cultivate, as we have done in the past, friendly and co-operative relations with all states in the region and to attach great importance to the development of these relations. Likewise, Canada has tried in the past to maintain a balanced and objective approach to the Middle East conflict and will continue to do so. We have always supported and defended the right of the state of Israel to exist in peace with its neighbours, behind secure and recognized borders. We have stated our conviction that no peaceful and stable solution to this regional conflict can be found without the participation of the Palestinians and the just settlement of their claims.

We have condemned the use of violence as a political instrument or as a means of retribution. We have participated in all UN peacekeeping and cease-fire supervision missions in the Middle East and contributed to the United Nations relief operations for Palestinian refugees. We have advocated, and continue to advocate, the full implementation of Security Council resolution 242. All of this, therefore, continues to be government policy.

We are confident that the initiatives to be taken by Canada and other countries on the future of the United Nations and the Middle East will lead to a different atmosphere in which the postponed Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders can be held in Canada, at a time to be decided upon, with sufficient assurances of success. It was agreed with the Secretary General of the United Nations that we should consult further on this question, and I expect to be in touch with him later this week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, having heard the lengthy statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), I can only conclude that the minister is becoming more and more adroit in the art of diplomacy, of course with a little help from the opposition. It is obvious that we are here in the presence of what could be called dynamic leadership. Issues are not settled, they are postponed, and they are postponed in such a way as to imply, for instance, that in the future no technical meetings of the United Nations will be able to take place unless this issue has been resolved.

I find it strange to hear the minister say to the House that he does not know if the conference will not be held. He has only approached the Secretary General, and the minister said: "He has undertaken to study the situation in order to clarify his position." That is all we know. What will the Secretary General say? What will be his decision? Nobody knows. How long will this conference be postponed? Nobody knows. Will it take place in six months' time, or a year? Will it take place elsewhere? In another sentence the minister said: "It cannot be a successful congress on crime prevention, in Canada or anywhere else." Must we draw the conclusion that the government is now taking the position that for months and months ahead, unless the Middle East conflict is resolved, there can be no meaningful conferences of the United Nations, whether on crime prevention or anything else, within Canada or elsewhere in the world? That is a question to which we would like to receive an answer.

We are pleased to know that where Mr. Kissinger has failed, the minister would probably succeed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wagner: Now he is going to travel to the Middle East, and whether it is—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): By helicopter?

Mr. Wagner: —by helicopter or otherwise, we certainly wish him good luck. However, in the meantime I find it very strange that the government has come to this decision, not because it is good for the country that this conference should not take place at this time, but because we all know what friction has already been caused. We all know that this decision will be viewed by many Canadians as a postponement, but at least also a guarantee that there will be security for our citizens and there will be no violence in September in Toronto. That is one thing which is sure. On the other hand, this decision should not be viewed by Canadians of Arab descent, for instance, as a slight or any expression of a partisan position. Rather, it should be viewed as an expression by the people of Canada of our concern for the continued rule of law and the continued commitment to a peaceful society in which all Canadians enjoy the freedom to express their own views.

Therefore, on this basis, because the government has been attentive to what has been said by the opposition, by leaders in government, by the provincial government of Ontario, by police chiefs, by the bar association and by the people of Canada, and has reached the decision that for the moment no conference should be held, we are grateful. However, when will the issue be resolved, and in what manner? What will be the impact of that government decision on the future of our participation in the United Nations? For the moment we expect more answers. I doubt whether we will receive them, but we expect something different from the government in the form of leadership and something more substantive than simply hoping that the problem will disappear with time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Too often it has been the habit of this government to say to the people of Canada that, hopefully, the problems will be resolved.

[Translation]

. . . in due course. And considering the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it may be a good thing that the government take a lesson from this situation. The government waited too long. As a result, it allowed frictions to develop within the country, and threats to be heard in certain cities. Discord was apparent everywhere. In the final analysis, after having amused itself, the government issued ambiguous statements and finally adopted a compromise situation, which was not real one—putting off the conference until later.

I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that the government will learn from this problem by paying greater attention to the claims made by the opposition as well as to suggestions it may submit to the House and that, secondly it will try a more dynamic type of leadership than our present one, which smacks of procrastination.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, roughly a week ago the leader of this party, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), issued a statement on the PLO on behalf of our caucus and it is the basis of our present thinking on this matter.

● (1520)

An hon. Member: Not always.

Mr. Brewin: Always. Perhaps some members of the House do not know what was said at that time. It was a short statement but a direct and clear one. We said that once again we expressed our support for the continued existence of the state of Israel within secure boundaries. We added that we support the people of Palestine and believe they are entitled to a firm, an independent and a secure state.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brewin: I am not solving the whole problem right now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Nobody else is, either.

Mr. Brewin: I should like to call the attention of the House to this. We said that the PLO, unfortunately, continues at the present time to include in its covenant or constitution a statement of its basic aims, which includes the liberation of the whole of Palestine as it existed before the surrender of the mandate by Britain, to be secured by a relentless, armed struggle with no compromise. This, I think, constitutes a fundamental commitment to destroy the state of Israel.

In addition to that, it is a fact, whether people like it or not, that the PLO has relied in the past upon terrorist actions directed at innocent people many of whom had no connection whatsoever with Palestine or Israel. We say, if the PLO is willing to indicate that the destruction of Israel, a sovereign independent state recognized by the United Nations, is no longer its objective, and to state it will proceed to seek its aims of an independent Palestine through negotiations, and forgo terrorism, then the situation would change fundamentally and a new approach would be taken.

The government, in these circumstances, has called for the postponement of the United Nations congress on the prevention of crime. Normally we would not applaud the government for postponing it. It is a technique that is too frequently used by this government, and others as well, to push problems under the rug, but in this particular case we believe the decision for postponement was a wise one. We think that to carry on with this congress under the present circumstances in Canada would have done no good to the cause of any of the parties to it, or any of the United Nations, or of world peace. We think we are wise to say "not under these circumstances", but if a new situation develops, say a year from now, we would take a different attitude to the matter.

I note the reference in the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen)—and this is what we are relying on—that the interim period is to be used for a real effort to solve some of the problems that have existed. There has been too much pushing aside of the problems. We do not delude ourselves that there are any easy solutions, but we do say this year must not be allowed to pass without continued efforts to mobilize world opinion to see if difficulties can be solved by negotiation. With the prospect of war in the Middle East and the possible escalation into world war, there are few other greater threats, to my knowledge, than the present situation in the Middle East. Now we hope we are going to have a breathing spell in which to deal with the matter.

I just want to add that in what we say we are in no way undermining the United Nations. The views of the majority of the General Assembly are, of course, entitled to great respect, but in my view the basic principles of the charter are even more important. They call for the respect and integrity of member nations. Until those who participate in international conferences are willing to accept that principle, international conferences cannot hope to succeed. In our view the United Nations is essential, but we think it is human to err and the UN can, and does, err. We think the time has come for people of good will around the world, and in Canada in particular, to rally behind the UN and show in every way that we propose to support it.

Mr. Speaker, this statement is not clear on what the government would do if the postponement cannot be arranged with the authorities in the United Nations. We in this party want to make it clear that whether the UN agrees or not, this conference should be postponed until the conditions we have suggested, the abandonment of terrorism and the willingness of the PLO to give up its objective of the destruction of the state of Israel, are clearly stated. If this is done, a new situation will arise and a new day of peace may dawn.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I regret not receiving a copy of the minister's statement before three o'clock. Indeed, I did not receive it at all, so that I was unable to examine it.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian government was in a way yielding to some pressures coming from a source or another, but especially from one. Postponing that conference will not settle the problem. The minister has clearly indicated that the United Nations were disorganized and increasingly divided.

As a result of the decision to postpone the UN conference on crime prevention which was to take place in Toronto in the near future, there is another problem. What will happen to the conference on human establishments to be held in Vancouver in 1976? We shall be faced again with the same problem. What will happen in the case of the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal? It is always the same thing.

[Mr. Brewin.]

The Canadian government assures us that all security precautions will be taken to guarantee the safety of all 1976 Olympic Games participants. Why not take the same security precautions for the conference which will take place in Toronto two months from now? We wonder why, but the issue has been postponed without being solved in any way.

In my opinion, the real problem between the Arab countries and Israel is that of the Palestinian refugees. That is the bone of contention, and as long as their situation is not settled, we shall have difficulties at every level of the United Nations, whether it be in New York, Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal or anywhere in the world. We shall be faced with the same problems, because I think the Arab countries have made up their minds to act through the PLO and succeed where they have failed since 1949.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask some questions of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) on this matter, but as he is out of the chamber I guess I will have to direct them to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I was just wondering what representations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lawrence: Are we not allowed to ask questions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not have in front of me the Standing Order relating to the proposed agreement, but it is my recollection that questions which are to be allowed during this period after a statement on motions are to be directed only to the minister who made the statement, and to no one else.

● (1530)

Mr. Lawrence: What representations, for instance, has the minister received from the Solicitor General about the cancellation? In effect, the government is cancelling a very worth-while conference. Anyone who has had anything to do with it knows it would have been worth-while. I have had a little to do with it for over five years—

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Lawrence: What representations has the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) received from law enforcement agencies who have desired a conference of this type for over five years? Also, has he received any vigorous objections about the cancellation from his cabinet colleagues?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I discussed the question of the conference with my colleagues, including the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). Obviously, I am not in a position to tell the hon. member the nature of those conversations, but I tell my hon. friend that the government's action is not a cancellation of the conference. Cancellation would have been the easy way out for the government. It could have washed its hands of the problem. We intend to work in the direction set out in the statement, and supported so well by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). We want to hold a successful conference in Canada when the circumstances will justify the holding of that conference. We are seeking the co-operation of the Secretary General for the holding of the conference later in Canada when circumstances will justify its success.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, in respect of this weak-kneed cop-out on the part of the government—

Mr. Sharp: Look who's talking.

Mr. Lawrence: —is the minister telling us that Canada is refusing to host this conference in any circumstances in which a terrorist organization such as the PLO will be admitted? Is that what the minister is telling us? I thought the minister was about to stand up and reply, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEachen: What is the question?

Mr. Lawrence: My question is, will it be a prerequisite of this government that before this country will permit the holding of such a conference, the PLO is not to be admitted to a UN conference in this country on criminology and the rehabilitation of the offender?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I really cannot understand the hon. member's position. It seems to be a total reversal of the line he has been putting forward in the House and certainly contradicts the line adopted by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who spoke for the Conservative Party. The hon. member is obsessed with the PLO. He ought to put this conference into a broader international context and understand that we want to host the conference in a successful and favourable political climate. The hon. member should direct questions concerning the admission of the PLO to Canada to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras).

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I should like the minister to clarify the situation. We are trying to determine what the minister said. We are dealing with the PLO, notwithstanding the minister's rhetoric, and I want to ask—

Mr. Basford: He will shoot you down.

Mr. Alexander: The minister suggests that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) will shoot me down. I will take that chance. Is it the position of the government that the PLO should not be an invited participant to any outside conference sponsored by the United Nations? I think the question is clear and, in view of the minister's statement, deserves an answer.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. When the question of observer status was placed before the General Assembly, the Government of Canada took a position against the granting of observer status. The United Nations voted overwhelmingly to grant the Palestinian Liberation Organization observer status in the United Nations. Canada is not contesting the result of that decision, although it voted against that position.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if, in his discussions with the Secretary General, the question arose as to what effect the postponement of this conference will have on the UN Conference on Human Settlements, scheduled to be held in Vancouver in 1976?

Crime Conference

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, no, that was not discussed directly. Preparations will continue for the UN Conference on Human Settlements which is to be held in Vancouver in 1976. This government will try to create a climate which will also make it possible for the conference on crime prevention to be held in Canada.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and thank him for his kind words? I am always uneasy when I hear kind words from the government front benches. It makes me want to look carefully at the text of what I said. Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs received notification from the United Nations, that is, from the Secretary General or other authorities of the United Nations, that Canada's proposal for postponement will be acceptable?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary General undertook to examine the situation with his legal advisers, and I can understand why. The reason is that the General Assembly, through a resolution, decided to hold the conference in Toronto and named Canada as host. Certainly, in my view, Canada has a role to play in this situation, a role which has to be considered. The Secretary General will communicate to me later in the week the result of his legal studies and we will probably discuss a course of action. We can decide whether to raise the matter before the General Assembly and secure a decision in the General Assembly to postpone the conference until a later date, which is one possibility—or it may be possible to seek a view at the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations which is now in session. It may be possible to secure that view at an early date. It seems to me that pending the clarification of the Secretary General, either of these courses might be justified from the legal point of view.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us if the government has made up its mind to this effect, that no matter what happens in connection with the United Nations, it will not allow this conference to proceed in Canada at present?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I advised the Secretary General that in our opinion, if the conference were held this year in Canada or elsewhere, it would be bound not to succeed in the way it ought to succeed and that Canada would not be prepared to host the conference this year. We would, however, want to hold our position as host and to discharge our international responsibility when circumstances justify the holding of the conference.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) has indicated in his statement that he will travel to the Middle East, to invite the countries of the area, including Israel, to discuss this problem. Could the minister advise the House whether he will take this opportunity to raise the Palestinian refugee issue and try to solve the problem?

● (1540)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my statement, Canada has contributed very substantially through the years to assistance for the Palestinian refugees. We supported resolution 242 which refers directly to the Palestinians, and recently in my address at the United Nations I developed Canadian policy further with regard to the Palestinian people. We believe that the Palestinian people must be consulted about a settlement in the Middle East and they must be involved in that settlement. With regard to the specific question of assistance, if the hon. member is referring to financial assistance, we have been contributing financial assistance to the relief of the refugees.

Mr. Speaker: I propose to conclude the questioning with the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). I am not sure whether the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) also wants to ask a question.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, there have been reports circulating to the effect that the visit last Friday of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) took place in circumstances of great secrecy, in fact to the extent that the Canadian delegation in New York was not kept informed of the discussions that were taking place. Will the minister assure this House and the country that at least the head of the UN delegation in New York was aware of the nature of the visit and the substance of the discussion that took place there? Otherwise, one is led to the conclusion that the minister is adopting a new form of individual diplomacy whereby he is not keeping the representatives of Canada abroad informed of the nature of some of the discussions that are taking place—a most deplorable development, if that were to be the case.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think I can put at ease the hon. member's concerns. The Canadian representative to the United Nations, Mr. Rae, was on leave on the occasion of my visit. The arrangements for the visit were laid on by his immediate subordinate, his second in command, who was not present with me when I spoke to the Secretary General, nor were any other officials present. However, he was fully informed as to the substance of the conversation. So that the mission in New York was fully informed about the visit, set it up and was informed as to the substance of the discussion.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, at the United Nations Law of the Sea Conference in Geneva in March and April, 1975, the PLO did not attend although they had observer status. Did the Canadian government determine whether the PLO would in fact attend the conference in Toronto before this announcement was made?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is my information that the representatives of the PLO at the United Nations had had consultations with the UN secretariat as to the composition of the delegation that would attend the conference in Toronto. It is my information that the PLO intended to exercise its status at the crime prevention conference.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the minister stated that he is looking for a change in conditions or climate for the holding of the conference. Will he specify what he wishes to see changed, in terms of the PLO attitude toward Israel, which would perhaps create that kind of climate? Second, will he indicate whether we can expect a definitive decision with regard to Habitat in Vancouver, in terms of the holding of that conference and where exactly the same conditions will apparently prevail unless there is a change in the so-called climate to which the minister refers?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there are two broad conditions which would indicate an easing of the situation that caused us to seek a postponement of this conference. One is the extreme intrusion of unrelated political discussions into what ought to be technical conferences. Mind you, certain of the developing countries feel that these political matters ought to be discussed. It is our view that they ought not to intrude into what are technical conferences. We had a recent example at the conference in Mexico, which in my opinion was damaged because of unrelated political issues entering the discussion. We hope to make some progress in establishing ground rules against the politicization of these conferences. That is one situation.

The other is the expectation that in the meantime there will be a reduction in tensions in the Middle East and that the present unfavourable climate will, if not disappear, be reduced. For example, successful partial negotiations which Secretary Kissinger is presently working on would be a significant development. However, who can predict the future? It is possible that the Geneva talks will be held, the status of the PLO will finally be resolved and we can look to a generally more favourable situation in the Middle East. That is what Canada will be working to achieve in the intervening period.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) indicated to the Secretary General of the United Nations that Canada is not prepared to be host of this conference for the time being, and sought the co-operation of the Secretary General in obtaining a postponement by the United Nations. Does he intend to give the impression to the House that, provided he finds he has the legal authority, it is the view of the Secretary General that the conference ought to be postponed, and that he will postpone the conference long enough to meet the request of Canada? Also, will the minister indicate whether Canada is prepared to take this question of postponement to the United Nations, in the event that it is considered necessary, following the legal advice which the Secretary General of the United Nations receives?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of the question, the Secretary General undertook to study the situation and to be in touch with me, hopefully this week. He did not commit himself to any particular course of action. I indicated to him that I intended to advise the House that I sought his co-operation in postponing the conference. He agreed to that formulation of words. I am hopeful that a postponement is possible. I did not think the atmosphere was hostile to that possibility but I cannot be sure whether that will be the final outcome or that the Secretary General will want to take a decision on that.

● (1550)

If it is legally open to Canada, as I think it may be, to raise the matter either at the Economic and Social Council or at the General Assembly, I will be prepared to do so in order to hold on to the possibility of the hostmanship of this conference and to indicate that as a country we want to discharge our international responsibilities in circumstances which would permit us to achieve some success. If that course of action were taken, as I think it ought to be, it would be up to member countries to say whether they agreed with us to hold it in more favourable circumstances.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope our friends do not abstain.

Mr. MacEachen: This is a more clearcut issue than most.

PRESENTATION OF PETITION FROM NEWFOUNDLAND REQUESTING GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT MARINE RESOURCES TO EDGE OF CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the province of Newfoundland in which the petitioners request that the government take unilateral action to protect Canadian marine resources out to the edge of the continental shelf.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Carter: I might add that the petition is signed by the Premier of the province, the Hon. Frank D. Moores, by the leader of the official opposition in the Newfoundland legislature, Mr. Ed. Roberts, the leader of the recently formed Liberal Reform Party, the Hon. J. R. Smallwood, and by the president of the Newfoundland Fishermen's and Allied Workers' Union, Mr. Richard Cashin, a former member of this House. I might also say that to get those four gentlemen to agree with each other long enough to put their names on a single piece of paper is in itself quite a feat, and parliament should recognize that fact by their congratulations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House is prepared to congratulate the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) by receiving the petition.

Mr. Carter: Would Your Honour allow me to state the number of people who signed the petition? It is in excess of 100,000.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

FISHERIES

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF GOVERNMENT TO PROTECT MARINE RESOURCES TO EDGE OF CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, under the provisions of Standing Order 26, to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the refusal of the government to take any firm action, including unilateral action, to protect Canadian resources to the edge of our continental shelf against the plundering of foreign nationals operating off our coasts.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of the Standing Order, the hon. member has been good enough to give the Chair notice of his intention to bring forward this emergency motion. He will be aware, as will all hon. members, that the subject which is the content of the motion is one which has been debated a number of times since he and I became colleagues in the House of Commons and, I presume, for many years before that. It has been the subject of considerable debate, difficulty and disagreement. There has been discussion about the acceptability of different limits. The matter has been the subject of controversy at several Law of the Sea conferences. It is one of great importance and concern, but because of its continuing nature, its complexity and the extent to which it has been discussed in this House and by other distinguished bodies, I would have to consider it one which cannot be the subject of a motion at this time under Standing Order 26.

TRIPS BY PRIME MINISTER IN ONTARIO—USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 32—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In regard to the trip by the Prime Minister commencing April 25, 1974 to certain places in Ontario including the Ontario Liberal Party annual meeting in Sudbury (a) what specific government aircraft were used for any aspects of transportation and, in each case, what is the cost per hour of keeping such an aircraft in the air including fuel, salaries and all other factors (b) where did each flight begin and terminate and what are the names and functions of all persons who travelled in the plane carrying the Prime Minister and in any other accompanying government-owned aircraft?

2. Will the Prime Minister discontinue using government-owned aircraft at public expense for purposes of political or personal travel and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence, Transport and the Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices as follows: In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned: 1. (a) Three CH 135 utility helicopters were used at a cost of $415. per flying hour per helicopter including fuel, salaries and all other factors. (b) The schedule to various localities in Ontario was as follows:

	Leave		Arrive
Ottawa	25 Apr.	9.15 a.m.	Toronto	11.20 a.m.
Toronto	25 Apr.	4.23 p.m.	Hamilton	5.20 p.m.
Hamilton	25 Apr.	10.00 p.m.	Toronto	22.40 p.m.
Toronto	26 Apr.	1.15 p.m.	Woodstock	3.35 p.m.
Woodstock	26 Apr.	4.10 p.m.	Sarnia	5.05 p.m.
Sarnia	26 Apr.	5.55 p.m.	Toronto	8.00 p.m.
Toronto	27 Apr.	10.00 a.m.	Ottawa	12.05 p.m.

In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned: 1. (a) Viscount CF-GXK. Cost, $750 per hour.

(b)	Originated	Terminated
	Ottawa	Hamilton
	Hamilton	Toronto
	Toronto	Sarnia
	Sarnia	Sudbury
	Sudbury	Ottawa.

[Mr. Speaker.]

In so far as the Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices are concerned: 1. (b) The Prime Minister, appropriate staff and press.

2. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) The Prime Minister travels in government owned aircraft as a matter of policy in order to minimize inconvenience to the travelling public and for security reasons.

CANADIAN AUTONOMY IN UNION CONTROL

Question No. 1,838—Mr. Herbert:

1. Has the government House Leader discussed recently with the Leader or House Leader from a minority Opposition Party the possibility of introducing legislation to ensure the same degree of Canadian autonomy in union control that has been sought in resource development and, if so, with whom and on what date?

2. Is the government studying the alleged intervention by the US parent in the United Aircraft labour dispute?

3. Is the government studying the alleged intervention by the US controlled international union in the Mount Wright labour dispute?

4. To what extent, if any, has the operation of Canada manpower centres been circumvented by the employers or employees in the disputes?

5. Is a suitably qualified unemployed person disqualified from unemployment insurance benefits for refusing to accept employment opportunities in companies and on sites where there is an existing labour dispute?

6. (a) To what extent does provincial legislation render inoperative, in whole or in part, the federal regulations to unemployed persons (b) is any new federal legislation in this field presently under consideration?

7. Does the government intend to prevent any foreign intervention in the sale of Canadian exports?

8. Does the government intend to prevent any foreign intervention in the construction, organization and administration of Canadian labour unions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Labour, Manpower and Immigration, Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Unemployment Insurance Commission as follows: 1. Discussions between House Leaders have always been considered to be confidential and it is therefore not possible to answer this question.

3. No.

4. It is not possible to say whether either the employers or the employees have circumvented the operations of the Canada Manpower Centres as there is no requirement for them to utilize the services of the department. The policy of the department in industrial disputes is as follows: The Department maintains a neutral position in respect to a labour dispute; the employment services of the department are available to both employer and employees should they wish to use them; the department will accept orders for workers from an employer and will offer a referral to prospective workers informing them, both orally and in writing, of the existence of the dispute; the worker is free to accept or refuse the referral in question.

5. In accordance with Section 40(2)(a) of the Unemployment Insurance Act an employee would not be disqualified from unemployment insurance benefits for refusing to accept employment opportunities in companies and on sites where there is a labour dispute. 40(2)(a)—For the purpose of this section, employment is not suitable employment for a claimant if it is (a) employment arising in consequence of a stoppage of work attributable to a labour dispute.

6. (a) The subject of Unemployment Insurance is expressely within the competence of the federal parliament in accordance with the amended provision 2A of Section 91 of the British North America Act, which amendment was passed in 1940. In consequence, provincial legislation may not render inoperative in whole or in part the federal regulations to unemployed persons. (b) Any new legislation proposed will be announced in the House at the appropriate time.

7. The simple answer to the question is, yes. The government on a continuous basis seeks the removal of impediements to Canadian export trade. Foreign intervention in the sale of Canadian exports may take a variety of forms. For example, foreign-controlled companies in Canada sometimes fall under the influence of foreign legislation restricting international trade or are restricted by parent companies from engaging in certain export trade. To deal with this kind of situation, the government has proposed certain amendments to the Combines Investigation Act to provide a legal basis to direct Canadian companies not to take decisions which would adversely affect Canada's external trade as a result of foreign laws or of directives from persons outside Canada.

8. Policies of trade unions in Canada, including questions relating to their national or international affiliations, are determined by procedures internal to the unions concerned as detailed in their constitutions and/or by-laws.

TOTAL EXPENDITURES BY DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS IN CONSTITUENCY OF TÉMISCAMINGUE

Question No. 2,504—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. In the past ten years, what was the total expenditures of the Department of Public Works in the Constituency of Témiscamingue?

2. What was the nature of the projects and the amounts spent on each?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. Expenditures for past seven years available only:

Fiscal year	Expenditure
1968-69	$ 373,642
1970-71	345,652
1971-72	648,513
1972-73	1,777,178
1973-74	442,302
1974-75	737,196
Total	$ 4,614,983

2. Expenditures on capital projects over the seven-year period were as follows:

Location	Description	Amount
Anglier	Post Office	$ 29,933
	Quinze Dam Renovation	10,000
Noranda	Air Conditioning and Extension to Mail Lobby	24,913
Notre Dame du Nord	Quinze River Bridge	1,190,402
Rouyn	New Federal Building	415,615
	U.I.C.—Building-Alterations and Improvements	125,441
St. Eugene-de-Guiges	Wharf and Launching Ramp	6,206
Témiscamingue	Post Office	90,239
	Dam-Stop Logs	11,478
	Road Widening	300,723
Ville Marie	Post Office	238,155
Total		$ 2,443,105

Expenditures in excess of those detailed above were for the routine operation and maintenance of existing buildings and facilities.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—NUMBER OF PERSONNEL HIRED TO IMPLEMENT PROPOSED OCEAN DUMPING ACT

Question No. 2,520—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. As of May 15, 1975, how many persons were hired (a) through the Public Service Commission (b) under contract by the Department of the Environment for duties relating primarily to the (i) implementation (ii) administration of the proposed Ocean Dumping Act?

2. In each case, what was the date of the original employment or commencement of contract?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. None.

2. Not applicable.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,575—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Department of Public Works for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. The total budget for Language Administration in Public Works is $533,000 of which $252,000 is specifically allocated for internal language training.

2. (a) Figures are not available for salaries of personnel receiving instruction. (b) Salaries of instructional staff are covered under item "c" following. (c) $252,000 for supplementary services purchased from the PSC. (d) No other costs.

GRANTS OR LOANS FOR COMMUNITY-OWNED TV CABLE SYSTEMS

Question No. 2,592—Mr. Brisco:

Is there any department that provides grants or loans for (a) the construction of a community-owned TV cable system (b) the construction of community-owned TV towers for TV signal pickup and, if so, which one?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): No.

Order Paper Questions

PRISON INDUSTRIES PROGRAMME

Question No. 2,595—Mr. Beatty:

1. With reference to the fact sheet of the Department of the Solicitor General dated May 1, 1975 and sent to all Members of Parliament and Senators (a) how many inmates are currently employed in the prison industries programme (b) what is their wage scale at the present time (c) when is it expected to reach the minimum wage level (d) how much are the participating inmates being charged for their lodging?

2. What is the maximum sentence still remaining to be served by each participating inmate?

3. (a) How does an inmate who is still in the prison become unemployed (b) how does he become eligible for collecting benefits from the Unemployment Insurance Programme into which he is making contributions?

4. In times of high unemployment, are area residents who are not inmates given the opportunity to apply for similar jobs at the prison at the same pay scale as the prisoners and, if so, is the hiring priority given to an unemployed person from the surrounding community or to a prisoner?

5. What plans is the government considering for the expansion of this programme?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. (a) (b) (c) (d)—The new prison industries program referred to in the fact sheet of the Ministry of the Solicitor General dated May 1, 1975 is expected to commence operating in April, 1976. The inmates currently employed in the present industries program number approximately 1,650. The new prison industries program will operate at first on an experimental basis at the Joyceville Institution in Ontario and is likely to employ approximately 80 inmates. The daily rate of pay paid to the 1,650 inmates employed in the present program varies from 70 cents per day to $1.000 per day. The new prison industries program will provide for a pay scale commencing at approximately 60 cents per hour and gradually progress up to the federal minimum wage of $2.20 per hour. The increases in hourly rate will be based on the inmate's performance and production at work. A final decision has not been reached as to the percentage of salary earned to be charged to the participating inmates for their lodgings. However it is expected that this percentage will vary from 20 per cent to 25 per cent of the salary earned.

2. The maximum sentence still remaining to be served by each participating inmate will be one of the various factors to be considered by the Work Board of the institution before an inmate is allowed to participate. The total sentence of the participant may vary from two years to life.

3. (a) An inmate still in prison participating in this new Prison Industries Program will become unemployed upon transfer from the Joyceville Institution or for such reasons as insubordination, refusal to work, inability to produce in accordance with quality standards, etc. (b) Such an inmate will only become eligible for collecting benefits from the Unemployment Insurance Program upon legal release from penitentiary and if he meets the requirements set by the Unemployment Insurance Act for drawing such benefits.

4. No. This program is being developed specifically with the aim of resocializing inmates.

5. This new Prison Industries Program pilot project will be operated for a period of two years and be evaluated at that time to establish its rate of success before any expansion program is undertaken. Assuming that success is achieved through this experiment, favourable consideration will then be given to its gradual expansion throughout those Penitentiary Service institutions where industrial programs are in effect.

AMOUNT SPENT FOR SUPPLIES BY NCC AT PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICIAL RESIDENCE, 1973-74

Question No. 2,790—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,666 which stated in part that the National Capital Commission spent $4,646 for "supplies" at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive during 1973-74, what is a complete list of all items making up this total along with the cost in each case?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The National Capital Commission spent $4,646.03 for supplies at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive, during 1973-74 for the following items: Tubing, Pipe, Flat Iron, Welding Rods, $2,024.22; Paint and Paint Brushes, $24.48; Gloves and Goggles, $20.93; Chalk Line and Markers, $5.75; Tools, $66.00; Oxygen and Acetylene, $124.62; Pickets, $17.40; Post Caps, $45.36; Concrete, Crushed Stone, Black Sand, $574.75; Flowers, Shrubs, $1,279.00; Trees, $89.00; Wheelbarrow, $44.01; Gasoline, $29.33; Fertilizer, $281.46; Ice Melting Pellets, $18.72.

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,667 which stated in part that the National Capital Commission spent $5,896 for "supplies" at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive during 1974-75, what is a complete list of all items making up this total along with the cost in each case?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The National Capital Commission spent $5,895.79 for supplies at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive, during 1974-75 for the following items: Fertilizer, $232.40; Janitorial Supplies, $110.24; Gasoline, $66.94; Flowers, $3,428.00; Paint Supplies, $55.89; Building Supplies (wood), $49.15; Electrical Supplies, $24.28; Fire Extinguisher, $34.23; Snow Scrapers, $39.60; Weed Killer, $75.90; File Records (Stationary), $23.70; Shears, $25.58; Peat Moss, $103.50; Granite Sets, $1,598.30; Clay Pots, $28.08.

STUDY OF PROVINCIAL EDUCATIONAL SYSTEMS

Question No. 2,806—Mr. Herbert:

1. Has the government requested a comparison of or is it considering studying the differences and relative merits of the provincial educational systems?

2. Are comparative provincial educational standards necessary for efficient placement service by the Department of Manpower and Immigration?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Secretary of State and the Department of Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. No.

2. No. Although such information might conceivably facilitate the mobility of workers inter-provincially, there is no evidence to suggest that this would be a factor for an efficient placement service by the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

METEOROLOGICAL TRAINING

Question No. 2,865—Mr. Brisco:

Is the level of meteorological training of designated CATA personnel consistent with current AES presentation standards at stations where CATA personnel have replaced AES staff or are working with AES staff?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): CATA personnel are not working with AES presentation staff nor have they replaced AES presentation staff.

AES—AERADIO OPERATIONS

Question No. 2,866—Mr. Brisco:

At how many airports in Canada were AES presentation technicians replaced by Aeradio operators?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): None.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMEN AND FULL-TIME AND PART-TIME MEMBERS OF BOARD

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-70, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Sharp moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Public Service

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, I rise on third reading to indicate the general acceptance of our party for this important measure. It is, however, an interim measure and the agreement of our party is of an interim nature without prejudice to our position on the final report of the committee which is now studying this matter.

● (1600)

During the various weekends that I am able to spend in my constituency I am finding more and more objections to, and reservations about, the manner in which staff relations in the public service are being regulated. People are fed up with strikes, for example. They are fed up with hold-ups in the mail. There is not a great deal of information that reaches the public in this area except when there is a breakdown of negotiations. This is most unfortunate.

Clearly, one reason for disruptions in the service that the public service is paid to provide, particularly when negotiations for a new contract with Treasury Board are under way, is the failure of the Public Service Staff Relations Board as presently constituted to meet in full the various tasks assigned to it. We have heard from the chairman of that board, an eminent lawyer and specialist in the field of labour relations, Mr. Jacob Finkelman, how the board has found it impossible to resolve employer-employee problems given the present structure of the board.

The board has a number of functions, among the most important of which is to provide rulings on matters that come into dispute between negotiating parties, such as matters of designating confidential exclusion, judgments relating to alleged illegal actions by unions or by management in connection with strikes and lock-outs, and also individual cases in the same areas. There is a further function of arranging, though not necessarily providing, for conciliation and arbitration as required. The calls upon the board have been multiple in the course of time since the board was first instituted in 1957. Mr. Finkelman has drawn to the attention of the special committee that was struck to examine the whole matter just how difficult it is, with a board constituted on a part-time basis, to deal with these many problems.

There was lengthy and amicable discussion in committee since all members of the House, I am happy to say, took a deep interest in the matter and are anxious that the service be provided to the Canadian public in the best manner possible. I pay tribute to all members for their participation and their keenness in questioning; it has been, I think, an exciting and profitable exercise.

However, the Public Service Staff Relations Board, operating on a part-time basis and coming together at the call of the chair once every two or three weeks, say, cannot possibly deal with the dockets before it. For this reason, on hearing the submission of Mr. Finkelman, chairman of the board, the committee decided to ask parliament, on an interim basis, to provide the board with a more permanent status so it could meet regularly, discharge the dockets before it and thereby meet the tasks assigned to it.

On many occasions the accusation has been made that Treasury Board refuses to negotiate in good faith. This may or may not be. Sometimes it is possibly true; on other occasions it could not be the case. But if the failure of the Public Service Staff Relations Board contributes to this situation because the board is unable to resolve some of the matters before it, thereby preventing one or other of the negotiating parties from coming to terms, then I think it is up to us in this parliament to repair this defect in the PSSRB by giving it the status of permanence and providing it with the equipment to meet its assigned tasks. But again I underline that this is without prejudice to what the special committee should finally decide to do about the whole problem of collective bargaining in the public service.

During the committee proceedings, I contended—and I devoted some time to this also in the House during the budget debate—that somehow or other the public interest must be more deeply involved or vocalized, more deeply articulated, in the negotiation procedure in the public service. After all, in the final analysis it is the public that is the employer. There is a surrogate employer at the moment in the form of Treasury Board, or Treasury Board specialists, but in the final analysis the public is the employer. It pays for the service, it expects the service, and it becomes very annoyed when it does not get the service.

It is my impression that in the special committee in which I participated, that element has not been, yet, fully dealt with. We have not managed, for one reason or another, to ensure that the public interest is fully represented at the bargaining table, as one might say in shorthand. There are not even any proposals before the committee to deal with this question; we are still dealing with it in terms of the present structure—repairing here, making amendments there.

It is my firm intention to make sure that everything is done so that the public is more deeply represented in the negotiating procedures. Any measures or legislative provisions to accomplish that purpose which might run contrary to the legislation now before us will, of course, have to supersede this legislation. That is why I said at the beginning that this is an interim measure. The party to which I belong approves the measure that is being brought forward as an interim measure, conditionally; subject and without prejudice to any further and different sorts of measures that may have to come forward ultimately to deal with this problem.

There is little more that needs to be said at this time, Mr. Speaker. The chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board has urged the committee, with all the power in his body, to come forward with some interim relief for the heavy burden now facing the PSSRB, and the measure that was agreed upon in the report and which has now come forward in legislative form will certainly provide that. With the reservations I have already made, I wish to indicate the approval of my party for this measure.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in earlier speeches made on the subject of this bill, members of the New Democratic Party have made it clear that we support the purpose of this legislation. The bill would restructure the Public Service Staff Relations Board so that it can cope more adequately with the pile-up of disputes, certifications and adjudication of problems. We support a measure that would tend to ameliorate this build-up.

However, the act being amended by this bill deals with the very important question of the collective bargaining rights of civil servants. Indeed, the Public Service Staff Relations Board itself is inextricably involved in a current and symbolically important dispute which I should like to take a few minutes to discuss this afternoon, namely, the suspension of Mr. Arthur Stewart, president of the 8,000-member Supply and Services union. Mr. Stewart is an elected head of a union representing a significant number of civil servants. I wish to spend a few minutes on this important case because crucial questions of principle have been raised on the matter by the minister who is directly responsible, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) and by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

I hope at the conclusion of my remarks, which deliberately will be kept brief, the minister responsible for this bill will reply and make clear what I consider to be the ambiguous position of the government in respect of the rights of civil servants arising from the Arthur Stewart case. Mr. Stewart, Mr. Speaker and members of the House will recall, was suspended for making certain public criticisms of the department in which he worked, the Department of Supply and Services. While he worked in that department he was also the head of a union.

The public criticism that Mr. Stewart made of his department can be broken into two elements. One is that he was critical of the labour relations which existed within the department and which currently exist within the department. The other is that he criticized the hiring within the department of too many senior management people. In his public criticism which took the form of an article published by the Ottawa Citizen, Mr. Stewart did reach explicit connections between what he regarded as faulty labour relations, on the one hand, and inappropriate hiring of too many management personnel, on the other, and the minister. In other words, there was an explicit connection made by Mr. Stewart between what he considered bad administration by the department and the minister's responsibility.

I wish to make essentially two points on this. First, the kind of public criticisms made by Mr. Stewart of his department were essentially administrative in nature. That seems to me to be of fundamental importance in this case. Second, such criticisms made by Mr. Stewart, as a trade union representative, ought not only to be his right but also his obligation if he is effectively to do his job as a representative of the working people in that department. If that is the case, then what possible justification could there be for his suspension?

He was suspended for three months without pay. That constitutes a reduction of his income by 25 per cent for one year. It is not a trivial matter in terms of his personal subsistence, but quite apart from that an important matter of principle is at stake here. What grounds would justify Mr. Stewart's suspension? One which we must reject outright, of course, is that attributed to the Minister of Supply and Services who was quoted by the press as saying he would be prepared to accept criticism from his peers but not from an employee. That kind of position, I hope, would not be accepted by members of any party on either side of the House. I would hope that upon reflection the Minister of Supply and Services would agree that he overstated his case. Certainly I hope it is an overstatement for a minister of the Crown to say that no form of criticism is to be justified except from his peers.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

A different kind of justification was offered for the suspension of Mr. Stewart by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister prefaced his comment in the House, in reply to the questions put by me last week, by saying that he did not have the details of the case. However, not having the details of the case did not prohibit his reaching what he regards as a profound conclusion. He went on to say that he shared the minister's judgment that Mr. Stewart ought to have been suspended because he was making political criticism. If hon. members would check Hansard, they would find that the Prime Minister took that position. When pursued, in subsequent question periods, by myself about what is the definition of "political criticism", the Prime Minister offered no answer, relying—as he does quite frequently—on rhetorical responses in an effort to deal with the issue by not facing it at all.

I say, in all seriousness, that the issue is of great importance. If the Prime Minister is to say that the kind of criticism made by Mr. Stewart as a trade union official of the department constitutes political criticism, the only conclusion one can draw from that is that any criticism made by an employee or trade union official would constitute political criticism. If a trade unionist criticizes the internal functioning of a department on an administrative basis, as was done by Mr. Stewart—which has been said by the Prime Minister to be political—then I suggest that, surely, criticism about wage levels within a department in the course of bargaining in private or in public would also be political criticism. Questions about the number of hours of work within a department would also constitute political criticism. A member opposite says that is nonsense. I should like to ask him why it is nonsense.

The negotiators for the packinghouse workers, for the steelworkers and for the UAW, to name three unions in Canada, do not hesitate to criticize the internal administrative operations of corporations with whom they are negotiating, because when speaking for the employees they represent—whether in corporations or departments—union members have a legitimate interest in the whole functioning of either the private corporation or the government department. They feel as employees they have a basic obligation to make suggestions about improvements in a firm or department. Surely, since we permit such rights, without anyone seriously questioning them, to exist for trade union people in the private sector, we should permit them as well in the public sector for a representative of the employees to speak on their behalf and to make internal criticisms.

The second reason, apart from trying to improve the functioning of the private corporation or the internal operations of the department, is the more immediate point which is made frequently, that if you administer your department better, as a result you can perhaps get better pay for your employees. It is not an entirely unique situation for trade union negotiators to suggest that by clearing management waste a company will be able to pay employees a little better. That is another purpose for making the kind of criticism that Mr. Stewart made of the Minister of Supply and Services. Again, I would like to know why that should be stopped and why not only Mr. Stewart but now, by implication, any union official in the civil service will be curtailed in making such statements.

I say that if that is the position of the government, then what this case amounts to is a significant intimidation of all civil servants employed by the federal government, because what the federal government is saying is that if you have an effective spokesman representing you and making criticisms of the department, then that spokesman runs the very serious risk of losing his job, or at least of losing it for a good part of the year. How could you develop a more inhibiting kind of procedure than to tell the people who are negotiating with the government that if they get tough with their negotiations, if they are really serious about them, they may lose their jobs? I hope that the Prime Minister simply overstated his case, as he does on occasion in the House in reply to questions, and that in the final analysis he does not regard the kind of criticism made by Mr. Stewart as the kind that warrants a suspension. I would like to hear the minister clarify that situation this afternoon in winding up the debate on this bill which, as I said earlier, we support.

I think it is of basic importance that the people elected by the civil servants of Canada to represent them should be free, in terms of the range of topics they can raise in criticism of the minister heading the department or officials working under that minister. To restrict their freedom of action along the lines stated by the Minister of Supply and Services, and along the even broader lines indicated by the Prime Minister, will seriously inhibit their effectiveness in terms of doing the job for which they were elected by the civil servants, namely, good bargaining with the government.

Before I sit down I want to point out, as I did in the question period, that even if one allows, as I do not, that the kind of criticism made by Mr. Stewart is political, surely the punishment handed out by the government is away out of line in terms of what would be justified by any sense of decency or equity. Just compare the situation of Mr. Stewart with that of Admiral Boyle in the navy on the east coast of Canada when he spoke to the Conservative Party caucus on the defence policy. As an admiral in the navy, he spoke to a political party in explicit criticism of the government's policy. Nothing could be more political than the kind of statement that Admiral Boyle made, and nothing could be more appropriate than the government's response, which was to point out that no admiral or other official of the Department of National Defence should have the right publicly to criticize the defence policy of the Crown.

I agreed with the government's position in that instance and I agree that policy statements constitute political criticism. But compare the punishment handed out to Admiral Boyle with that handed out to Mr. Stewart. Mr. Stewart, a man with considerably less income and considerably less influence in the government, is suspended for three months, with loss of income, while Admiral Boyle—who makes explicit political criticism—is brought to Ottawa for a little chit-chat with the minister. As the minister pointed out, no doubt his actions were wrong. But that is all that was done. He was sent back to the east coast and told not to speak to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and those Conservative fellows again in that way, because it was out of order for an admiral in the Canadian navy to so act. We agree with that, but what we do not agree with is a government that interprets the administrative criticism of another employee as a political act and then takes away that man's income for three months.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because I want to correct what the hon. member said about me with regard to Admiral Boyle. I want to tell the hon. member, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I was not present and that I would never allow an admiral to criticize the government or the Prime Minister.

Mr. Broadbent: I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition and accept his word. I just thought he was present at that harmonious meeting of his caucus colleagues. I accept his point that he was absent on that occasion. However, with regard to the point I was making about the inappropriateness of the admiral's comments at the time, I am sure the Leader of the Opposition shares my point entirely.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief on this matter. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) spoke about the situation with regard to the criticism of the government by a civil servant, a matter which was first raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). I intervened, in the form of a question supplementary to those asked by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. Because this is a subject in which I am quite interested, and because we are wrestling with this sort of thing in a joint committee at present, I want to say that there are, obviously, certain areas where those who are advisers to the government and in close contact with it must have some inhibition with regard to their open criticism, though I do not think we need to define them at this time.

However, I want to say that one of the reasons civil servants of this government are driven, from time to time, to indulge in open criticism, and occasionally to see that documents within the possession of the departments are sometimes provided surreptitiously to the press and to the public, is the inherent penchant of this government for obsessive secrecy.

The test is when a civil servant sees that if the document or the information which is essential to be released for the good of the public, for the welfare of the country and for the good of parliament, is released, he or she would be in a difficult position. True enough, his responsibility as a civil servant may compel him to say to himself that he should not do this, but as a citizen of this country he has a certain responsibility with regard to the decisions which are made in parliament and to information which should come to the public. I think that is the kind of test where at present, unfortunately, civil servants are limited.

I know that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp)—and I give him and members of the committee credit for it—seems to have some knowledge of that. They have not gone as far as I want them to go. It may well be that they may go further. But the document I asked about today, concerning a very important issue, is one which the country and parliament should have had provided for it when we were involved in the debates last winter in connection with energy matters.

According to the press, we now find that there was in the possession of the government six or seven months ago a document with regard to the very critical situation in the supply and the potential supply of natural gas. That information, if it was in the possession of the government—and that has not been denied today—should have been made public and should have been made available to members of this House for the purpose of the debate which was then taking place. If it was as essential as I deem it could have been, it may well be that a civil servant, despite his relationship with the government, might have been justified in releasing it.

My seatmate once had the honour to be premier of the province of Nova Scotia, and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was once premier of the province of Saskatchewan. I imagine they must have had certain rules with regard to information; no government can operate on the basis that everything which comes into the possession of a civil servant must be released. The case of Mr. Stewart has been referred to by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. It forcibly points out the need to engage in the adoption of certain rules which will probably make it unnecessary for that kind of action to be repeated.

Some hon. members may have been observing the very interesting case in the United Kingdom where the diaries of the late Richard Crossman are now the subject of legal action. The late Mr. Crossman, a very distinguished member of the Labour cabinet whom I had the pleasure of meeting both here and in the United Kingdom, who was also Lord Privy Seal, government House leader and quite a scholar, left diaries with regard to his operations within the Labour Party and the Labour government. I think those diaries were vetted, so far as matters of national security were concerned and those parts which were sensitive within the public domain, and about a quarter of the diaries was published in the London Times.

There was then a proposal to publish them in book form, but the prime minister, Mr. Harold Wilson, the leader of the socialist Labour Party in the United Kingdom, issued instructions to his attorney general, Mr. Silkin, to secure an injunction prohibiting the publication of those papers on the ground that they were inimical to the public interest. As a matter of fact, knowledgeable journalists and political scientists who observed the material in those documents have come to the conclusion that they simply showed ordinary, fallible men making grievous errors and operating in darkness or near darkness in connection with the affairs of government.

They also showed that in many respects the affairs of the country were being run by senior civil servants and that the members of the Labour cabinet only gave their consent to proposals brought to them. I am not going to deal with that matter because I hope it will come up in subsequent debates, but I point it out to indicate to this House that, hopefully, this fall we may have an opportunity to discuss the extent to which material within the possession of a government should be kept secret or should be made public. If the House, as I hope it will, comes to the right decision, then we will find that it will not be necessary for people like Mr. Stewart, who obviously felt he was fulfilling a public obligation by making known these facts, to be faced with the very difficult decision which he had to make in this regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) seeking the floor in this debate?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure of my rights. I do not know whether I have the opportunity of speaking. I think it can only be done with general consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The minister is seeking consent to speak at third reading. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by commending the work of the joint committee which considered this bill and which originally made the recommendations upon which it is based. Several hon. members have commended the work of that committee. I had the privilege of appearing before it as a witness, and there I found a spirit of co-operation which I wish prevailed more generally in this House. It has done a commendable piece of work. I hope the committee will continue its work and that in due course we will have a report on the more substantive matters which are before it.

It seems to me that most of the debate on third reading has been a little irrelevant to the bill itself. However, let me make some brief comments on the speeches made by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). If I may begin with my friend the Conservative House leader, he and I have had many discussions about the question of secrecy in government. I do not quite know how it got into this debate, but here it is. I speak now not only as a minister and a member of parliament but as a former civil servant who saw the problem from the other side.

Some hon. members may recall that I was the centre of a controversy about the publication of a government document of which I happened to be the signatory, namely, the famous hidden report which the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) brandished about the country in the general election of 1958.

Mr. Baldwin: That is what got you into politics.

Mr. Sharp: At one time I said that the right hon. member for Prince Albert turned me into a national figure without any effort on my part whatsoever. It seems to me that when we get into this area of the relationship among civil servants, the government and the public, we are into an area which has to be handled with infinite care. There may have been occasions when I was a senior civil servant working for both Liberal and Conservative administrations when I might have been very critical. However, I did not think I had any right to engage in political controversy by criticizing the government of the day. I believe this is the only valid principle. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby seems to question this principle. I have looked at the article signed by Mr. Stewart and I think one would have to take a rather charitable view of what he said to say that he was not making political comments. I know that is a very difficult line to have to draw, but I suggest it would be better if the line were drawn on the side of avoiding political controversy.

I would draw to the attention of the House what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said on July 16, at page 7619 of Hansard:

> But in so far as political statements or criticisms of government policy are concerned, we object to that, and if that was the situation, I approve of the action taken by the minister.

The Prime Minister was making a distinction between criticism which was in pursuit of the interests of the employees of the government, their working conditions, their wages and all the other things about which they might bargain, but I suggest to my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby that Mr. Stewart seemed to me to have overstepped this line.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, July 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 7416).

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, in supporting our amendment that this bill be not now read the second time, I am pleased to do so to emphasize that there are many good reasons for making this very reasonable suggestion. The measures contained in Bill C-66 are, for the most part, poorly advised. They are not going to do the job and have the economic results that the minister anticipated. For the most part, I fail to see the urgency that the government has particularly emphasized lately, because it may very well be that section 17 of the Financial Administration Act would make the part of the legislation relating to the rebate provision irrelevant. The relevant section reads:

The governor in council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, whenever he considers it in the public interest, may remit any tax, fee or penalty.

It may be argued that this only applies to taxes which are in place but I suggest, with deference, that if there is no tax legislation in place, then there is a very good argument to be made that you do not need a bill to authorize the rebate in these circumstances either. Even though the measures contained in Bill C-66 result from the budget, they ought not to be proceeded with too quickly—particularly the ten-cent tax on gasoline—until proper administrative procedures for processing the tax are put in place.

It would have been preferable if the minister had made arrangements—even if there had to be lengthy discussions beforehand to make this more practicable—to withhold the imposition of this tax until parliament had given its sanction. I realize there are some difficulties in this suggestion, but it worries me, as a member, to see another situation where the people of Canada are faced with a very regressive tax being collected without the legislative sanction of the House of Commons. I think this is a very poor precedent. If the principle were extended to the point where the omnibus bill which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) intends to bring in with regard to criminal law were to be enforced now, and we were asked as members to approve it later, there would be a great outcry in the country. I think you can draw a fair analogy between what the Parliament of Canada is being asked to do here and what could be the case in the future if this sort of thing were allowed to continue.

I should like to say a few things with reference to the proposed increase in the air transportation tax and come back to the famous, or infamous ten-cent tax in a few moments. The proposed increase in the air transportation tax is another regressive and counterproductive move. No less a person than the president of the Air Transport Association of Canada recently had this to say:

Members of our association, travel agents and charters are concerned about the application of the increased rate for air transportation tax effective August 1 if it will require adjustment and collections from travellers who have bought air transportation before the first of August.

Such adjustments and collections at airports at time of departure during the heavy travel season would be irritating, disruptive and lead to serious criticism of the agents, carriers and government.

The minister proposed to raise the air transportation tax limits substantially from the levels imposed by the existing legislation, that is clear. I understand this increase is designed to generate another $16 million of revenue in this fiscal year, added to a ticket tax revenue take of $53 million, so that this would amount to a total annual revenue of approximately $69 million.

Far better for the government, in the name of restraint, to have cut back on some of the gigantic sums which have been appropriated for airport expansion, such as Pickering, which the majority of the people affected do not want, and Mirabel which does not, as yet, have the proper supporting infrastructure. It therefore could very easily have some of its budgetary appropriations deferred until such time as the lack of adequate road infrastructure is overcome, particularly since knowledgeable people are well aware that the airport at Dorval has not yet been used to its full potential. The lack of adequate road infrastructure is nothing short of a catastrophe. Quebec has been delaying the road service due to a siphoning of funds to buttress the Olympics. Ottawa did a poor job of future planning and should have anticipated what was likely to happen.

[Mr. MacKay.]

Weekend flights will be the biggest problem, since the Autoroute will be congested with people heading north from Montreal to the Laurentians in the summer for holidays and in the winter for skiing. The trip from Montreal to Mirabel is expected to take two hours, and certainly passengers will have to leave earlier to catch a flight to Mirabel as compared to Dorval under present circumstances.

The Air Transport Association of Canada makes the point that the latest increase appears to further discriminate against those who prefer to travel by air, since similar taxes were not imposed on people using other forms of transportation. It has already been pointed out to the Minister of Transport by knowledgeable people in the Air Transport Association of Canada that people living in cities or towns some distance from the point where charter flights begin sometimes find themselves paying a second airport tax because they have to pay the tax on the connecting flight to the charter flight, as well as another tax on the charter flight.

Certainly, the tax should also apply to foreign travellers using Canadian airports, which is not the case at the moment since the tax applies only to people boarding flights originating in Canada. The whole concept, as usual, has been poorly thought-out. It would do no harm if it and the tax increase were to be delayed until some further thought could be given to the entire matter.

Coming back to the ten-cent gasoline tax, it is particularly damaging to people in my constituency who have to travel long distances to search for and to find employment. It is wrong in still another way for provinces such as Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island which are isolated geographically and in the sense of energy availability. This ten-cent tax, coming upon the $1.50 per barrel increase, imposes what amounts to an unnatural cost and burden on those provinces compared to Ontario, where about 50 per cent of the energy requirements are available from hydro. Prince Edward Island, for example, has to rely on energy obtained from petroleum products for nearly 100 per cent, of its energy requirements at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I think the minister did something that was even more regressive than he intended by imposing the ten-cent tax. He has done an extraordinary thing; he has brought in a two-price system based not on geography but on class distinction. I say this because whether one pays the tax or not will depend upon who one is. If a person can bring himself within an exclusion by pleading his profession or other circumstances, such as business requirements, then he is able to escape. For the most part, those able to escape will be those who can afford to pay the tax, and those who are least able to afford it will have to pay. That in itself is an excellent reason for the minister to take another look at this.

In the measures arising out of the budget, the Minister of Finance was required to make some hard choices. He was restricted in his options because of the economic climate—not the meteorological one upon which he was inclined to call at times—which he and this government helped to create by policies in previous budgets and the implementation of measures in past years. In many respects I feel sympathetic toward the minister, but my sympathy is tempered by recollections of his past behaviour. If the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was too honest and direct for the advancement of his own political cause in telling Canadians the truth a year ago, and offering a realistic assessment of the consequences of unrestrained and undisciplined economic behaviour, the same cannot be said about the conduct of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Can you imagine a measure like this being brought in by the government before the last election? I suggest that no one in his right mind would even consider the possibility. To the credit of the Leader of the Opposition, if he felt that a measure like this was necessary, without doubt he would bring it in at anytime, but he would never bring in an ill-advised measure like this. The Leader of the Opposition offered Canadians the alternative of economic medicine which might have been bitter for a while, as most medicines are. The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister preferred to offer Canadians champagne and optimism, assuring Canadians just over one year ago that all was well with the economy and the nation and that the Tories were preaching gloom and doom without just cause.

The government made promises, many promises: a glowing new transportation policy was to be implemented immediately; there was to be an end to regional wage disparities. Liberal candidates in the Atlantic provinces emphasized this particular election promise and said they were behind it. We now see its results! Frankly, I do not have time in the brief time allocated to me to list all the promises made. Now, after the champagne days of last summer, after the broken promises, comes the inevitable letdown and hangover. No one deserves it more than the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The minister brought in good policies.

Mr. MacKay: No one will bear the brunt of it, as the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) knows, more than the Minister of Finance. The glory days of the Minister of Finance are over and if he is not careful he may fit the description which the immortal Winston Churchill used when referring to Lord Roseberry several decades ago. Sir Winston described him as having outlived his future by ten years and his past by more than 20.

Time passes quickly and these tax measures may mark the beginning of the end of the Minister of Finance's adroit ability to avoid well deserved political flack. Henceforth, he and the government will be in a great deal of trouble. No one has earned this trouble more than the government. True, the budget did pay lip service to restraint, which is good; it also made the gesture of helping people holding Canadian government annuities. That was a humanitarian move, as those people had been most unfairly affected by the government's policies which incurred unrestrained inflation.

With the exception of a few tangible measures like the ones just mentioned, the budget is not innovative nor imaginative. Measures like this one fail to recognize that the different regions of this country are constantly encountering different economic difficulties. A policy that is good for one part of the country, as has been said many times, may be the very worst policy for another. In one region unemployment and stagnation may be the major problem, but in another the economy may be booming and inflation may be the biggest problem. Although economic theory dictates different solutions for each different problem, our political and financial system is such—this has been true no matter what government has been in power—that only one national fiscal policy is arrived at. It is imposed on the nation as a whole, despite our great differences and regional anomalies.

Politics dictates, apparently, that fiscal policy should be aimed at solving the problems of the most heavily populated and financially important regions, which means central Canada. As I said at the outset, this particular tax will make its greatest impact felt on those regions of the country which can least afford to pay it, and on those individuals who can least afford it. The other regions of the country are left to get along as well as possible with a fiscal policy which may not suit their economic situation.

I therefore expected the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) at least to pay lip service to the idea of a flexible fiscal policy. Why not develop a flexible policy which will take into account the regional differences in our country? More specifically, Mr. Speaker, at this moment why could the government not introduce a regional fiscal policy which could make a special effort to stimulate the economy of the maritimes by providing money at low interest to small businesses?

The usual criticisms of such suggested policies are well known. Those who criticize say that capital investment will go to the area where the best return on the money lent can be obtained, that is, it will go to where interest rates are highest. Thus, if interest rates are higher in central Canada but lower in the other regions, the banks will do most of their business in the high interest area. This activity will lead to the opposite of what one would wish to achieve by having different interest rates in different areas.

The government has never been reluctant to interfere with and modify the unrestrained policies of private enterprise. This is not necessarily bad. For the sake of argument, why not make it mandatory for the large financial institutions to lend a certain amount of money at low interest to small businesses in depressed regions? True, this would tamper to some extent with the freedom of our banking system, but the government has willingly tampered with the system in the past. Why not experiment in this regard? Even if interest rates must be subsidized to a certain extent, it would be worth while seeing how such an experimental program works. Depressed regions could well be more quickly developed if we used this method. The program would alleviate, if successful, the constant drain of taxpayers' money going to the depressed regions. This money which is channelled into the areas through DREE, UIC, cost-sharing programs, etc., might not be needed to such an extent if this program were introduced and great savings could be effected in the long run.

As for needing to maintain high interest rates in Canada because world interest rates are high and Canada having to offer a good return to attract sufficient investment to counter our trade deficit, is there not some way of adopting a two-price system of interest rates, one for the domestic Canadian market and another for outside financiers from whom we try to borrow?

Although the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion said before the budget was brought down that he would provide direct input into the budget and put forward recommendations concerning DREE, which has an important role to play in this country, the budget did not deal with DREE. Neither in the budget nor in Bill C-66 is there evidence to show that the minister tried to do anything to counter the impact which the government's unfair measures will have on those regions of the country for which he is responsible. It was disappointing to see that DREE was not given higher priority. We should be thankful for small mercies. No DREE programs were cut back and for this we give the government credit.

I expected the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to say something innovative and different when he spoke in the recent budget debate. His speech disappointed me, not because he did not speak well—he always does—and not because it was not entertaining.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It made sense.

Mr. MacKay: It was a defensive speech. There are ministers on the treasury benches, as the member for St. Boniface no doubt realizes, who are simply incapable of formulating good policy. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is not one of those. If he were allowed to give his talents full rein, I am sure he would produce better policies than some of his colleagues are producing. Being concerned about what might happen to my province, I asked the minister the following question on June 11, as recorded on page 6649 of Hansard

> Because of continuing high unemployment and other economic difficulties, particularly in the Atlantic region, can the minister say whether any specific arrangements will be incorporated into the budget on his recommendations specifically designed to assist DREE to cope better with economic disparities. I am thinking of some measures to single out regions covered by his department for new initiatives in terms of economic assistance to cope with the real difficulties that we have not been able to eradicate. Will the minister be making a statement on this?

The minister declined to make a statement, but said:

> —I am sure the hon. member appreciates that while it is true I will be making recommendations and suggestions with regard to certain budgetary matters, the outcome will only be known on budget night.

The folly of this proposed tax must be apparent to all. Obviously, the minister, despite his well-meaning effort to influence his less sensitive colleagues, was not able to do anything to help the depressed areas of Canada improve the significantly poorer position they will find themselves in as a result of the passage of bills like Bill C-66.

• (1700)

I am sure that in the province represented by the hon. member for St. Boniface there are areas where people are drawing unemployment insurance and there are sometimes cases which come to his attention where the person involved is expected to drive a long distance in order to obtain employment.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Not in my constituency.

Mr. MacKay: Well, if that is not the case with the hon. member for St. Boniface, I want to tell him and the House it is a very common occurrence in my constituency in Nova Scotia, particularly in the area known as the eastern shore where there are very few opportunities for employment. It becomes a case of real economic difficulty and puzzlement in deciding whether a person applying for unemployment insurance has made enough of an effort over a wide enough area, even keeping in mind the limited opportunities available for employment.

When a person is expected to drive 50 or 60 miles from the eastern shore of Nova Scotia to the Halifax-Dartmouth area, or to Truro or New Glasgow where there is a greater population and where there are greater and more varied opportunities for employment, it is a very dicey situation. Does it pay to drive 40 or 50 miles? If such a person has to drive this distance—and it is quite common that they do—the hon. member can appreciate the dilemma in which such a person finds himself. If he has to pay an extra ten cents a gallon, with a very marginal job and no hope whatsoever of any rebate, this inflicts a very real hardship. The government and the Minister of Finance should be aware of this. They ought to take measures that will somehow alleviate this problem.

Even in an energy short era, I fail to see how this tax will promote conservation. Frankly, in most cases there is no alternative to the car for people to get to work. If the only purpose of this tax is to generate revenue, rather than to conserve, I say that it is a very regressive measure and ought not to be proceeded with. If the revenue derived from this tax were to be specifically channelled into the development of coal in Nova Scotia, for example, which would provide an alternate energy source, or some sort of public transportation system to help those who have to travel long distances, there would be a little more sympathy for it; but it does not do anything in this regard.

I do not know on how great an authority it is, but from some publications I have been reading lately I am led to believe there is a good possibility that in the years to come our uranium reserves may be depleted to the point where Canada will be faced with a situation with regard to uranium such as the one we now face with our petroleum. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has assured us that this is not the case. He said that he will be looking into this matter and will take whatever additional measures are necessary to protect the long-term interests of this country. I certainly hope that is the case. It would be ironic if in 20 years, as an official of the Ontario Energy Research Board has stated, Canada were in the position with respect to our uranium reserves that we are now in with regard to petroleum.

I hope the government will take a sober second look at what it is doing. It does not seem right that the people of this country should be subjected to a tax which is obviously inflationary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: As I say, I remain to be convinced that this measure has any merit to encourage conservation. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) is a conservationist. He knows very well that this tax will not do anything productive.

Mr. Alexander: You are right.

Mr. MacKay: It will only exarcerbate the differences between those Canadians able to afford the good life and those who cannot afford to live well. If there is one thing the average person in this automobile-oriented society will do, it will be to hang on to and drive his automobile even to the point, in some cases, of skimping on food for his family. Members opposite know that is the case, particularly where there is no alternate means of transportation. I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) seriously to consider the consequences of going ahead with this bill in its present form, particularly when the government is so poorly organized to administer the effects of the tax.

It is significant that no cabinet ministers have risen to support the Minister of Finance on this. I am waiting to hear the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) state the clear and unequivocal tax policy that will be put into effect with regard to the rebate. I await with interest to hear what the minister's other colleagues have to say. I hope that by their silence they have not committed themselves to going ahead with this measure in its present form. After all, the PLO decision was put off, so this government can change its mind!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That can only be done with the permission of the hon. member. Does the hon. member agree?

Mr. MacKay: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, has the hon. member discussed the program he is speaking of with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson)? Has he done any research with regard to the benefits his province has received through the DREE program? I understand from what he has said that he does not know the benefits his province received through that particular minister and program.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer the hon. member for St. Boniface by saying that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and I have had many discussions about the economic problems that face not only Nova Scotia but the other provinces. I am well aware of the substantial sums which this government has diverted into this part of Canada. However, in relative terms, I remind the hon. member that all the money that has been diverted into Atlantic Canada for regional economic expansion in terms of incentive grants is substantially less than the proposed costs of either of the monster airports at Pickering or Mirabel.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—The Canadian Economy—Minister's estimate of rate of growth this year; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Manpower—Opportunities for Youth and student summer employment programs—Request for expansion; the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—External Affairs—Government position on attempt to expel Israel from United Nations.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 7416).

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to open by saying that I am very much in agreement with a great deal of what has been said by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). I understand that his part of the country, along with other parts, has special difficulties. I want to assure him that this particular bill strikes a grievous blow at many people in the central provinces as well. I refer particularly to constituencies such as my own of Greenwood. I will discuss that in a little more detail later.

I should like to make it clear from the beginning that I do not intend to take up the full 40 minutes allotted to me. I am strongly of the opinion that except in special cases, that is too much time. I think we make much better speeches when we are confined to 20 minutes. This being my view, I should like to be consistent with it and try to keep my own speech short; I do not always succeed, but I hope I shall on this occasion.

In my previous incarnation I was connected with the legal profession, and had I been called upon to give judgment on Bill C-66 I would have dealt with it very quickly;

I would have been content to say I concurred with my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and others who have spoken, especially the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), and that I had nothing to add. However, I am not speaking in a judicial capacity; I am here as a representative of my constituents. I say that this tax has dealt a grievous blow to them, and I believe I owe it to the people I represent to express the strongly held views they hold on this legislation.

To put the matter in a nutshell or, possibly, in one or two nutshells, this tax is, in my view, inflationary, regressive and unjust. I do not intend to expand on the inflationary and regressive aspects since something which is inflationary and regressive is inherently unjust. The reason it is unjust is simple: it imposes a burden on those least able to bear it, factory and office workers for whom a car is a necessity, not a luxury, because they have to travel to work. It is these people who will bear the major burden of the tax, not the well-to-do, not those who use cars for pleasure or as a luxury.

There are many thousands in the riding of Greenwood who use their cars to get to work. We have heard from people in other parts of the country about this problem, and it exists in my area. In a large urban area such as I represent, a great many people do not work near where they live. It is by no means uncommon for people to travel 25 miles to work and back again, sometimes more, sometimes less; I think 25 miles would be a reasonable average. This is the group which has to bear the main burden of the new tax.

The action of the government in this regard illustrates as well as anything could the difference between the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party. The tax system favoured by the Liberals is tilted in favour of the rich. The philosophy of the NDP, on the other hand, is egalitarian. We believe in taxes such as steeply graded income taxes which seek to create a more just society by equalizing incomes.

During the course of the present debate, one of the members who supports the government, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), said it was better to impose the tax on the people who consume the product rather than have it paid by way of general taxation which, however imperfectly, is so set up at the present time that heavier burdens are placed on the well-to-do. It is precisely this which distinguishes our party from that of the government on this matter. He said the middle income groups would prefer this way of doing things, rather than in the form of income tax which, he added, falls particularly heavily on middle income groups.

I do not think the income tax bears so terribly hard on those groups, but it certainly does not bear with undue harshness on the affluent. It is all very well to talk as the Liberal Party does from time to time about the just society, but unless the taxation system is directed to creating the just society by bringing about a more equal share of the national income, the phrase "just society" becomes an example of nothing more than election-time rhetoric.

The bill we are debating is another example of the direction the government's policies are taking. It is designed to bolster up an acquisitive society with all its inequities. There is another area in which the measure would fall hardest on those with modest means. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie has explained how at certain levels of society the automobile is used extensively for vacation travel. The advent of this tax will force many people to revise their summer vacation travel plans. This, of course, will hit hard those who depend on tourism for their income. But there is another group which will be affected. There is one reform which has come about in the lifestyle of Canadians during my lifetime and during my active interest in politics which I most heartily support. It is the tremendous growth of vacations with pay.

[Mr. Brewin.]

In the thirties, when I first took an active interest in politics, visiting the beautiful lakes and rivers with which Canada is so richly endowed was the privilege of the affluent few. Very few industrial workers got a vacation unless, of course, they had one forced upon them by prolonged unemployment. Fortunately, collective bargaining and legislation together have changed all this, and today many workers have been able to acquire or rent summer cottages where they can spend weekends or vacations using, in most cases, their own cars for transport.

I am afraid this bill will make it harder for these people to afford a healthy and enjoyable experience which in my view is the birthright of all Canadians, especially of industrial workers and their families, that of getting out of the cities into the open where they can benefit their health and sustain their spirits by recreation.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has expressed the hope that the excise tax, combined with the expected increase in the price of a barrel of oil, will encourage motorists to save gasoline. In other words, the conservation of gasoline, a highly desirable objective, is called in aid in an effort to justify this tax. But where is the evidence that the effect of the legislation will be to save gasoline? If saving gas is the objective, there are many, far better ways in which it could be accomplished. One would be to negotiate with the provinces to bring about a reduction of the speed limit. Incidentally, this might save a few lives as well. If the government were concerned about the conservation of gasoline, it would move in the field of extending public transit systems which today are only a supplement, not an alternative, to travel by car.

Above all, if the government were to carry out the promises made in the last election, it would transform this situation. Let me put on the record some of the things that were promised in the last election campaign. On June 17, 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced in Toronto a $270 million program to aid public transit. He said:

A liberal government would pay 100 per cent of the cost of Canadian-made commuter vehicles and 50 per cent of the cost of platforms and stations. The government would also pay 25 per cent of the cost of Canadian-manufactured vehicles for public transit within cities. Encouragement and assistance would be given to smaller municipalities in the creation of new transit systems, Canadian industry would be encouraged to develop passenger vehicles, and experimentation with new transit systems would be assisted by federal financing of demonstration projects.

On the next day, June 18, while in Cornwall, the Prime Minister said:

—a Liberal government would take responsibility for rail passenger service out of the hands of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways and entrust the task to a new Crown corporation. The corporation would run high-speed rail services in heavily populated areas such as Windsor-Quebec City corridor, introduce luxurious transcontinental excursion trains and establish a "super-bus" service between medium sized cities.

Incidentally, while I am reciting the promises that were made, may I point out that the Liberals also promised to set up a national urban transportation development corporation to promote improvements and develop policy on urban transportation. This was mentioned in the 1973-74 annual report of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs. But on May 1, 1975, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) admitted that the corporation had not yet been set up. All this talk during the election campaign has turned out to be mere promises designed for election purposes. But its relevancy to this discussion is very real, because if these promises were implemented it would take the pressure off the necessity of travelling by automobile and would in fact conserve gasoline.

The government's actions speak louder than its words. We have already had a reference in the House this afternoon to the Pickering airport. If it were constructed, it would serve roughly 10 per cent of the public, a small section. If it were constructed, it would gobble up high-class agricultural land. If it were constructed, it would multiply the transportation problems of urban areas such as my own riding. No one really wants this new airport. There has never been any demonstrated need for it. Public opinions polls have been taken in the area affected and have shown fairly substantial majorities against it. I do not know which members the government has consulted, but whenever it consulted me I made it very clear that the people of Greenwood do not want the Pickering airport.

If the proposed airport were built as a single runway, minimum airport, it would divert fewer than 10 per cent of aircraft operations from Malton by 1980—and this was supposed to be the purpose of the new airport. It appears that plans have been silently switched again and we are now back to a large Pickering airport. Only the refusal of the Ontario government to provide the highways and infrastructure has caused the government to halt its obstinate course.

Let the government take this ill-conceived scheme and drop it in the lake. Let it use the money to carry out its promise of a rapid transit development system within and between cities. Although the Minister of Finance is not here this afternoon—he usually is, but I assume he will read the debate—I suggest that his budget and taxation policy be used to implement, not to disregard, the promises made in the election campaign which are beneficial to the people.

Can anyone wonder at the apathy and cynicism with which much of our political system is regarded by the public? In my view, this is a bad bill, and in saying that I feel I am expressing the feelings of the vast majority of my constituents. I condemn this particular bill and I make it clear that I, for one—and, indeed, I think all members of my party—will vote against it.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, in rising on Bill C-66 and the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), I have definitely no intention of extending this debate which, in my opinion, has been dragging on for quite enough time. In fact, you know about that from what we did during the week-end. We kept hoping it would be over, but as there seems to be no end to that debate, everyone has to say his word, and I realize government members are doing everything they can to restrict that debate, but I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, we are heading for a marathon type debate on that bill which will make a complete mess of the well deserved vacation of all members.

Considering the number of members who want to speak and who will, it is obvious that Progressive Conservative members definitely want to drag this session throughout summer.

I have once again to criticize the government, because it is always the same thing, the same tactics. They always take advantage of the fact that the session is coming to an end, or that a vacation is getting nearer to introduce controversial bills like this one. Of course, this bill is a logical consequence of the last budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), a budget which we actually turn down.

After wasting so much time in this House with empty speeches throughout the winter months, as soon as the few sunny days of summer are back, the government forces us to do everything in double quick time if we are to get some vacation. Mr. Speaker, it is childish, ridiculous and unfair, not only to members of parliament, but also to their families who are waiting for them to come back and spend a few days in the sun. Let us not forget that in autumn and during the long winter months, once again, we shall have plenty of time to make speeches and talk to the Chair. I therefore urge Progressive Conservative members, even though they are like us convinced that that tax is unfair, to have some pity for all those children who are waiting for us to be back for a few weeks. If this debate was to have a positive outcome, I would be the first one to stay here all summer, but as we all know, the government has an absolute majority, and everything will end up in a vote which will once again ratify the government's proposals. This government was elected by the people, and this is a democracy!

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): We are of course opposed to Bill C-66 which levies a 10 cent excise tax on every gallon of gas used for private purposes. For the information of the public, I must say that this tax does not result from the increase in oil prices. I do not know whether the mass media or the government itself led the people to believe that this 10 cent markup was due to the increase in oil prices, because this was the general impression among the people. I spent the whole weekend trying to explain that it was not as a result of the increase in oil prices. They will experience the result in a few weeks, but this is an excise tax, a 10 cent tax per gallon of gas.

Mr. Speaker, actually the increase in oil prices has nothing to do with the 10 cent tax per gallon. This bill stems from a tax, once again, an excise tax of 10 cents a gallon on gas that could have been imposed on any other produce, for that matter. So, I feel it is most unfortunate that gas should have been singled out to collect budgetary funds after the spiralling increase faced by the people in recent weeks. Why, for example, has the tax on wines not been maintained? They went as far as removing the tax on wines; why did they not tax alcohol, tobacco even more? Let us levy if necessary a tax on luxury items but let us stop taking from those who are in immediate need of a commodity, gas for example, those who must use it to go to work.

Our opposition is still stronger as far as selective and protectionist exemptions in the bill are concerned. Going through these exemptions by the present government, it is apparent that the burden is put on the lower income group to pay for the government's wasteful spending. It has always been my view that the first criterion of a national legislation is universality. If this tax is to close the gap between compensation payments and export tax revenues, this should be another reason for the legislation to be universal, for everyone to pay. A selective measure like this one is always discriminatory, because it once again burdens the workers, who should be the first to be exempted if we are to have exemptions.

I read the bill a number of times to try and find out why the minister introduced such a legislation. What was his purpose? I found some kind of an answer in one of his statements, that the bill will help stimulate—and nothing less—the use of public transit. Such a statement is the end of it. Since I was first elected here we have been fighting for improved passenger transportation, and even now we are fighting to maintain what is left of the remnants of CNR services, and lo and behold! The government says it intends to reorganize and encourage public transportation. That is the best one I have heard so far in this session.

What improvements does the government propose? Will it finally convince CNR's technocrats to stress service before profitability? In those rarefied spheres, they strive for profitability but we say that in public transportation, service should be the first priority. So today, they are proving us right because they wish to promote service. Let them give adequate passenger services, good public transportation, and then let the 10 cent tax stimulate workers to use such public transportation, but there must be public transportation in the first place.

As things now stand the 10 cents per gallon tax is directly affecting workers. In large centres, with measures proposed by the minister to reorganize bus services or public transit, it is going to be easy or at least easier than in our rural areas. I feel sure that if they want to, the ministry can provide adequate service to people in large centres. According to his estimate, this policy will save a good deal of energy and in this manner travels will be restricted or, in cities, the use of private automobiles for workers driving to work will be restricted.

As far as cities are concerned, the idea may be of some value, but in the country it will not work as, at the moment, there is no public transportation system. The man who leaves his community to go to work in the next town absolutely needs a car, which is his main working tool and now it is on this very tool that a tax is imposed while all others are exempted.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

In the bill, as far as exemptions are concerned, those who could afford to pay are exempted. Here are a few examples, I quote:

(a) Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or any agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province,

(b) a person for commercial or business purposes—

This means that all industrialists and businessmen will be able to get a rebate. Yet, there has also been mention of farmers and fishermen, which is quite acceptable. However, there is another matter to be resolved: How will the rebate be made?

Mr. Speaker, thousands of inspectors go around and search the houses of our farmers since this famous tax has been invented. This often gives heart attacks to the farmers. We shall have to distinguish between gasoline used for farming and gasoline used for pleasure. I do not know what regulations will be invented, but I know that it will take an army of inspectors to check on each farmer and to check each bill to determine if it was really used for the purpose indicated. The same will apply to businessmen and those who will benefit from thee rebate.

In my opinion, in addition to being unfair to the small wage earner, this bill discriminates even against the farmers and the fishermen. It will provide an excellent opportunity to create new protected jobs since these taxes, that will be just sufficient to pay all the inspectors and the inspections costs, will have to be collected. I am certain that the money collected will be just sufficient to pay all these people and to get all other small wage earners fed up. This is another measure that is aimed at providing jobs for people in the party. It is favouritism aimed at bleeding those who go for a drive with ten gallons of gas in their car instead of their truck or tractor without reporting it. If the inspector finds out, the farmer will pay a fine, and I imagine that the investigations will multiply. Mr. Speaker, we all know what can happen when there are investigations.

The bill will be passed and this is why we have to talk as though it already had been passed. I would like to ask the minister, who had to leave the House, or his representative—he can read Hansard—the Minister of National Revenue, who said the other day to the press, and I quote:

Not a gift. The Minister of Revenue pointed out, yesterday, that the reimbursement of the 10-cent excise tax on each gallon of gas to users of vehicles to business or commercial ends will be taxable—

● (1740)

Notice that: they take with one hand and grab with the other.

—will be taxable, contrary to what the Minister of Revenue, Mr. Ron Basford, indicated earlier in the week.

Indeed, on Monday, Mr. Basford stated that the tax announced in the June 23 federal budget would not be subject to tax.

It will be taxable. Imagine! After telling the farmers, "You will be exempt; give us your receipts and we will reimburse you the 10 cents a gallon." Right after, one hour later, they are told they will be taxed. What a joke! It is as a result of problems such as those that farmers, fishermen, those who are supposedly going to be exempted, are in fact going to be fooled; once again, they will say: The act seemed to do all right by us, but again it will mean nothing. Once again, it is meaningless.

That is the only kind of bills we study in depth, and then pass here. The big shots are protected, those who could afford to pay the tax. That is why I say we would be better off levying a luxury tax on alcoholic beverages. Those who can afford to drink, let them be taxed: I could not care less. I don't mind alcohol or tobacco being taxed three times more than now. For my part, I do not smoke. That does not make any difference. That would be favourable to the health of our general population.

But they are taxing a sector essential to our family heads, to our workers, and we are going to accept that straight away, Mr. Speaker. It is impossible. A little further, the minister told us that the bill would contribute, they claim the purpose of this bill is to remedy the recession and fight inflation. Just another reason the minister gave us. That ghost of inflation behind which the minister hides is a myth which the population is now used to.

When he wants to be serious, the minister knows perfectly that any new tax causes an increase in the cost of living, thus kindling inflation. Let's stop considering our fellow citizens as stupid, because they suffer in silence all government extravagancies. I hope only one thing: that the awakening of the population be not so violent as to send our parliamentary institution over board, because of the lack of seriousness or, even worse, the lack of responsibility of the present government.

I will conclude by saying that all we can say will certainly not change anything to the situation, but at least people will know we have fought fearlessly against such action. We will vote for the amendment of the opposition, to postpone for six months the discussion of the bill, and we will vote against Bill C-66.

[English]

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I was listening with interest to the debate last Wednesday when the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) said there was nothing good in the budget. Having been caught once remarking that there was something good in one of the minister's budgets and being quoted thereafter, he said this time that there was absolutely nothing of any use in this budget. On that point I almost agree with him but, after a great deal of examination, I did find something useful in it.

Mr. Alexander: On what page?

Mr. McKinnon: On page 28 of the budget speech when the minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the government will be introducing legislation to increase the rate of return on existing Government of Canada annuities,

This is a piece of legislation to which we are looking forward, and I wish it were in front of us instead of the present bill. It would move a lot faster, believe me. That is the last kind word I have to say about the budget.

An hon. Member: The minister does not say what percentage increase it will be.

Mr. McKinnon: This is something about which the elderly citizens in my constituency are left in doubt. I do not see why the minister could not announce what the percentage increase of these annuities will be. I suggest that he could increase them 100 per cent and make a good case for it. I believe the payments are computed on a 4 per cent annual interest rate, but I think that 8 per cent would be a reasonable return in these days of expensive money and inflation, caused by this government. I would think that anything less than a 100 per cent increase in the annuity payments would not be satisfactory.

However, now that I have covered the good point in the budget I would like to make another brief comment about it. At first I thought it was a good point that the minister appeared to have spared us his usual sneaky little trick of dropping taxpayers from the tax roll. I have sat in the House through about three budgets and I have read several more which were brought down before I came here, going back to the Benson budgets when the Liberal minister of finance one year claimed to have dropped one million taxpayers off the tax rolls, and the next year 800,000. One year 400,000 were dropped, and the next year 500,000. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that of those millions of people I have never met one?

At the start of the speech the minister would announce the raising of exemptions and he would say that they dropped off so many taxpayers, and then later in the speech he would announce the raising of the income tax. So these are a kind of recycled taxpayers. This time the minister has done it differently. He claims to have cut the budget by $1 billion. So this year he is recycling billions of dollars instead of taxpayers. I suppose that this might be considered an improvement.

> The government has therefore decided upon a wide ranging set of measures, covering our statutory as well as our non-statutory programs, budgetary as well as non-budgetary spending, our salary as well as our hiring policies. All are directed to bringing outlays under more effective control and to slowing down their rate of growth this year and into the future. Our target of cuts this fiscal year is $1 billion.

That sounds great until you look a little farther along at the tables on page 40 where you see the title "Government of Canada Revenues and Expenditures on a National Accounts Basis". Under the year 1974-75, preliminary actual, total expenditures, you find $30,678,000,000. In the next column under the year 1975-76, forecast, you find $35,845,000,000. So the minister has stopped dropping people off the tax rolls and increasing the number somewhere else, and has chopped $1 billion from the budget. Miraculously it turns out to be a $5 billion increase.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I wish to bring to his attention that we are not debating the budget at this time but rather Bill C-66, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act. The budget debate is over. I am prepared to give the hon. member all the latitude this House will allow, but I hope that he will soon come to his remarks about the Excise Tax Act modifications which are before the House at this time.

● (1750)

Mr. McKinnon: I read with interest several of the debates which have taken place in the last few days and, with respect, it seems that some hon. members managed to get quite a considerable distance away from this bill.

An hon. Member: They were all Tory speeches.

Mr. McKinnon: I had hoped for an opportunity to reply, particularly to the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), and to some of the charges he made about the government of the province of Ontario, which at the time did not seem to me to be particularly relevant to Bill C-66.

I would like to read from Hansard for July 16 where the hon. member for Nickel Belt said:

> For the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton to castigate the Liberals for the kind of mean legislation they are introducing—is to forget, Mr. Speaker, that the province of Ontario takes 19 cents on every gallon of gasoline for the provincial coffers.

That being in order on July 16, I would like to reply to it on July 21, if I might. Such a thesis is advanced by the hon. member for Nickel Belt. I can say quite sincerely that he fulfills all the requirements for a good socialist speaker in that he is able to speak quite irrationally on a subject, but with the utmost conviction. The thesis he advances would prohibit people from speaking about this tax bill if they were of the same political faith as the government in the province in which they live and if that province has a tax which is levied on gasoline.

On should perhaps think of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is present tonight. I presume the hon. member for Nickel Belt is claiming that there is no gasoline tax in Manitoba and none in Saskatchewan, but I happen to know that there is in B.C., and I am informed that there is also a gasoline tax in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Yet I would be the last one to deny the right of the NDP to castigate this defective bill on the excuse that they should not be allowed to because their particular brand of government has a tax on gasoline in their province.

In British Columbia it is interesting that the gasoline tax was recently increased two cents per gallon. God knows most of us know enough about politics in Canada to sympathize with provincial governments because of the very narrow taxation fields left to them. There are few ways for them to raise funds for highways other than a gasoline tax. In B.C. the NDP government decided not to use the tax levied on the poor driver to repair highways or build new highways. Instead it is being put to a most peculiar purpose. In British Columbia for many years there was a pretty healthy automobile insurance business, which paid in taxes on premiums something in the order in 1970 of $2.9 million; in 1972, $3.2 million; and in 1973, $3.7 million to provincial coffers.

This made the NDP government rather envious, and its members thought the companies must be making enormous profits, so they thought they would take over that business, and of course with government expertise in all these things they thought they would do extremely well. They took it over, and the resulting loss in tax revenues to the provincial government by this monopolizing of an industry is $3 million to $4 million per annum. On top of that this government company has managed to lose $35 million. The industry was quite healthy when the government took it over, and to make up for the $35 million it managed to lose, the government imposed a gasoline tax increase. The poor driver in B.C. has to pay for the inefficiency of the Socialist hordes, and it comes pretty hard at times.

I would like to make one small comment on the claim made by the NDP, not in this debate but on this subject, that the main fight which is going on in this House regarding the budgetary measures of the government, including this ten cents excise tax, is coming from the NDP. This was stated by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) on, I believe, the CTV network. Of course I can never hope to reach the audience the hon. member had in order to correct him, but he said that he thought that the main battle against this iniquitous budget was coming from the NDP. I would like to point out that a quick scanning of the pages of Hansard during the six days of the budget debate indicate that on June 25 there were four speakers, one of whom was a New Democrat.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is quality that counts.

Mr. Alexander: Where were the others?

Mr. McKinnon: That I do not know. On June 26 there was one New Democratic speaker of nine members who spoke: on June 27 there was one NDP speaker of nine members who spoke; on July 2 there was one NDP speaker of 13 members who spoke; on July 3 there was one NDP speaker of 13 members who spoke; and on July 4 there were no speakers from the NDP and 12 from other parties. This came to a total of five NDP speakers—out of a total of 60 speeches made—putting up the battle and the real opposition, according to the hon. member for New Westminster, to the budget. This is some fight, the greatest since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) started wrestling inflation to the ground, and it has had about as much result. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, during the dinner recess I had an opportunity to look over the remarks I made earlier today concerning the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) and his allegations about the NDP fight against the budget. It occurred to me that not all Hansard readers would identify him as the TV personality of the convention. It was the hon. member for New Westminster whom the commentators kept saying should have been running instead of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). I am inclined to agree with them.

However, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is to be congratulated on his pre-ordained victory—ordained primarily in the offices of the giant multinational unions. It is one of the ironies of Canadian politics that the party with the word "democratic" as part of its name should conduct such an undemocratic leadership convention where nearly half the delegates were not elected by their neighbours but instead were selected by the giant multinational unions. These organizations thought so little of the convention that they sent only enough delegates to guarantee the election of their choice.

Mr. Chrétien: Out of order.

Mr. McKinnon: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby should be congratulated.

Looking at this budget bill, C-66—

Mr. Chrétien: It's about time.

Mr. McKinnon: —I would like to remark that I am a great admirer of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and his department in the House during the last seven months. During question period we had the experience of the minister for five months saying that he could not answer questions because he was waiting for his budget measures to work their way through the economy. Then came a change and in April he could not answer any questions because he was bringing in a new budget. Maybe he is getting into a seven month cycle where we will have a new budget every seven months, followed by a period in which he will not answer questions on his budget measures, saying he must wait for them to have a salutary effect on the economy. Then there will be a period preceding the next budget which is meant to rectify the miserable failure of the previous one.

I should like to ask the minister if he had considered an exemption, in Bill C-66, for handicapped people from the ten cents per gallon excise tax?

Mr. McKinley: The minister is not here; his parliamentary secretary is not here.

Mr. McKinnon: Many handicapped people are absolutely unable to use public transportation. Some have gone to great expense to have their cars modified and some have built special ramps to enable them to wheel themselves into their cars. It seems to me unreasonable and cruel to charge these people this ten cents per gallon excise tax.

I wrote to the minister some time ago about this matter. After the usual cordial salutation he replied:

> The department has received a number of representations asking that some deduction be allowed in respect of transportation expenses for the handicapped, particularly in respect of their expenses incurred getting to and from work. Therefore, the proposal has previously received considerable study. In general, deductions in computing income are allowed either in respect of amounts incurred to earn income or in recognition of a particular circumstance which necessitates the incurring of abnormal expenses. For tax purposes, disability is recognized as necessitating relief in two forms, namely, through medical expense deductions and in a special exemption for the disabled.

Unfortunately this only applies to people who are bedridden or in wheel chairs. A great number of deserving handicapped Canadians are unable to qualify, not being bedridden or in wheel chairs, so I think it is unfair of the minister to suggest that he is all heart when it comes to every bedridden patient who cannot work. He should also worry about those who with a great deal of effort are able to go to work. He should find it possible to do something for them. The letter continued:

> Transportation expense is an expense highly dictated by personal choice and subject to a number of widely varying conditions.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, this is tommyrot when talking about disabled people who have no choice of transportation.

The letter continues:

> Because of the broad difference in the amount spent for transportation and the range of circumstances which influence the amount spent, nearly all tax systems follow the rule that no general deduction is permitted for personal transportation expenses.

Dismaying as it was to receive such a reply to representations made on behalf of my constituents, I had hoped that the minister might find it possible, in his budget speech at least, where he made several other exemptions, to do something for these people. Such was not the case, however, despite the fact that Bill C-66 makes some exemptions.

On page 2 the bill gives the right to rebate as follows:

> 47.(1) Where gasoline has been purchased by
> (a) Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or any agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province,
> (b) a person for commercial or business purposes,
> (c) a farmer for farming purposes,
> (d) a fisherman, hunter or trapper for commercial fishing, hunting or trapping,
> (e) a person under conditions for which relief from the consumption or sales tax is provided by virtue of any provision of this act other than subsection 27(2), or
> (f) a person within a class of persons exempt from tax under part I of the Income Tax Act.

I think a considerable percentage of the population must be covered by these provisions so I find it strange that the minister could not make an exception for the few handicapped people who depend on transportation to get to work.

● (2010)

I checked on the number of people involved and, although it is difficult to get the figures, I learned that in the province of Ontario there are 3,867 people driving with licences limited to those cars which have an automatic gearshift or an abridged clutch-brake system. Presumably since there are 3,867 such licences in Ontario there are that many handicapped people driving cars. It would be fair to say, surely, that there are about 10,000 such people in Canada, every one of whom is required to drive a special type of car, at additional expense, and every one of whom is making a sincere effort to be part of the work force, despite the handicap. If each person uses, say, two gallons per working day, each person will use 400 gallons a year; at ten cents per gallon, times 10,000, the minister would collect an additional $400,000, or $40 per person.

I know that there is a legend in this House. Mr. C. D. Howe once said, "What's a million?" He said it in the days when $1 million was a lot of money. Surely as the budget contemplates the spending of about $35 billion, the minister could look favourably on the request of the handicapped, who want to deprive him of only $400,000 out of his income exceeding $30 billion. If the minister cannot exclude these people, I ask him to consider giving them the right to rebate.

I note that the minister said on July 9, when participating in debate on the Excise Tax Act, as reported at page 7410 of Hansard:

> Nor was it in the national interest that the excise tax on gasoline be paid by hospitals, or by educational, welfare, and charitable organizations.

I think he can stretch that a little and include the handicapped. Or, in the alternative, the handicapped ought to be allowed to band together as a charitable organization, and therefore come under the provisions relating to charitable organizations. But I point out that these people are independent minded. They do not wish to band themselves together and accept charity. They wish to be as self-sustained as possible and are willing to do everything they can to maintain themselves as independent members of our work force.

I look forward to this debate being carried on in the committee stage, in two or three weeks time or whenever it happens to be, when we shall all have the opportunity to speak as often as we want. I hope to ask the minister some definite questions concerning his intentions with regard to the handicapped. It saddens me to see that, after having received my representations by letter, he should introduce a measure like this which will so clearly hurt those people, and that so far he has refused to do anything to make their lot easier.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express unequivocal support for my leader's amendment to Bill C-66, which would hoist this bill for six months. I find it strange to note that no government members are rising to speak. Not one has risen to speak since last week. Obviously they fear this bill, and run from the House. I suggest that there is complete chaos over on the government side with regard to implementation of this legislation. The implementation provisions were to be explained fully by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford). Is it not strange that he has not spoken on the bill? I hope these matters will be made clear before the debate ends.

There is very little in the latest budget that would lead anyone to believe that it will be of benefit to anyone in the nation, let alone the nation as a whole. The proposed excise tax on retail gasoline is probably the best example of the discrimination that is running rampant in the government's recent thinking. This measure will certainly produce some blatant discrimination against the groups of individuals who are already carrying the greatest tax burden on their shoulders at this time. I refer to the working people who produce the goods and services that keep our country going and prospering, despite the best efforts of the government. The latest mish-mash of tax increases has landed squarely in the laps of the same people; and these are the people who have no legal way to retrieve their tax dollars. They cannot afford to "buy" the loopholes that many affluent members of society can. And they do not have a huge margin of extra income to draw on when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) decides that they should carry an extra load.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

I accept the concept of the two-price system for oil and the benefits of fuel for Canadians at less than the international price. But I cannot ask any working person in any part of this country to carry the load for me by way of an excise tax on gasoline. This is exactly what this budgetary measure calls for. I cannot understand why people living in Stonewall or Headingly, Manitoba, and happening to work 15 or 20 miles away, in Winnipeg, should have to pay an extra ten cents per gallon which they cannot recover, so that we can have a two-price system for oil. There has to a more realistic method to raise the funds required, a method that would have every taxpayer in the nation bear the burden equally, and not single out certain individuals who can least afford this burden.

There is a score of methods by which this job could have been carried out more effectively, and certainly more fairly. This makes one think it very strange that this budget was even produced unless it was simply the result of compromise amid a disagreeing cabinet. If this is the case then it is a splendid example of the old addage, "With compromise, everyone loses."

As has been stated before, we believe this matter could have been handled for the benefit of the Canadian people in a much more sensible and able manner than by the introducing of this very discriminatory tax.

Let us examine some of the alternatives. Foremost is some kind of a coherent transportation policy that will give individuals an alternative to the daily waste of gas they cannot avoid. Surely if the government had a genuine desire to conserve oil it would produce a transportation system which was a viable alternative to the automobile, a system which people would be enticed to use. Without doubt, if we had better passenger train operations in this country and some semblance of rapid transit systems in more cities, we could get more people involved in other modes of transportation.

Canadians are, in many cases, virtually forced to drive their automobiles to work. The result is a vast, unnecessary waste of gasoline. This, coupled with the higher costs occasioned by the new tax, means that working Canadians will have to ask their employers for more money. The individual employer will have to raise his prices to cover his own increased costs, and the circle continues, with a higher inflation rate as the inevitable result.

This proposal for taxing gasoline at ten cents a gallon will result in about $525 million in revenue. The oil subsidy program is estimated to cost about $400 million. Even if one did agree with the government's archaic methods one would have to note that the revenue is excessive by over $100 million. This is over kill.

It will be argued that the full ten cents, while unnecessary, will result in greater conservation of energy. I submit that the effect on conservation will be negligible. The people I mentioned, those who must drive to work, cannot choose not to buy gasoline. Until public transportation systems improve the present situation is a fact of life. For people who can afford to drive for pleasure, ten cents a gallon makes little difference. The effect of the conservation measure of these people will be nil.

Until the government can show an example of restraint and conservation in its own back yard, any of its words on this subject will be treated as the total hogwash they are—and that mild word is being used only out of respect for parliament, for which we still have feeling on this side.

If the government had any real commitment to saving, there are hundreds of things it could do. This has been said before, but it will keep on being said until someone on that side begins to listen. The government could cut out some whole programs. Certainly some LIP and OFY projects are questionable. If the Liberals could do without their publicly funded propaganda arm, easily half the budget of Information Canada could be cut. They could and indeed must cut back on the billion dollars a year that is spent on outside consulting services.

If the government were serious it would exercise a little more common sense before introducing an unnecessary expenditure the size of Petro-Can, a move that had to be the greatest example of inappropriateness until this budget was introduced. It was totally inappropriate to introduce a tax measure that is going to raise inflation by 2 per cent during a time of unprecedented high inflation. It was totally inappropriate to introduce a measure that is supposed to force people to conserve gasoline by using public transport when public transportation is non-existent for 80 per cent of the working people in the country. Also, it was totally inappropriate to introduce a tax that is blatantly discriminatory against the working poor and the working people at a time when these groups are already being taxed to death by all levels of government.

The government has the unmitigated gall to call for conservation when its own shameful, irresponsible waste is the very reason for the bulk of the country's woes. I find that the very lowest form of hypocrisy.

A great deal more can be said about the implementation and administration of this tax. It was the botched up result of the short sighted thinking that we have come to expect from a government that has apparently lost sight of reality of the practical considerations and consequences of its actions.

The tax was levied against the refiners and importers of gasoline, and the date of commencement was set at June 24, 1975. The gasoline in the hands of wholesalers and retailers on which the special excise tax had not been levied should have been available to consumers at the pre-tax price. However, this was often not the case and the retail price immediately jumped at many pumps. A little more thought by the government to alternatives, such as a date of commencement on July 1, might have helped to avoid the problem and a fair number of consumer rip-offs.

Some other major problems with this excise tax have to do with the administration of the refund claims and the very question of who will be exempt. The question has been raised about municipalities not being specifically referred to in the bill. I wonder what other groups have been inadvertently left out of the exempt categories. This was very fully covered this evening by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). Notwithstanding this, the volume of paper work involved in processing the exemption claims will be staggering, probably resulting in a further expansion of the federal bureaucracy to handle it. This runs contrary to the supposed purpose of the budget, to restrict the growth of the public service.

It is pretty obvious that this bill has been very poorly drafted and will result in an administrative nightmare. I can only hope that the government will see fit to swallow whatever pride it has salvaged and co-operate with us in attempting to improve the situation and the legislation.

I have outlined the reasons why I feel this legislation is inappropriate, unrealistic, useless and damaging. It is obvious that it is dangerously inflationary at a precarious time for our economy.

Worst of all, it is doing expressly what the Minister of Finance has vowed not to do, that is, fight the country's economic battles on the backs of the working poor. With the ineffective strategies being employed in this war there will be an awful lot of broken backs before it is all over.

In a recent newsletter the Canadian Chamber of Commerce summed it up very well. They are certainly in tune with the Conservative party in their thinking about this bill. I quote from the newsletter:

"Unless there is an immediate end to the battle between governments for resources industry revenues," said Mr. B. T. Johnson, Chairman of Executive Council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, "the real loser will continue to be the consumer. The ability of the industry to find and develop new sources of supply is hampered by the lack of money."

"The Canadian consumer should not be misled into believing that the recent increases in petroleum prices are providing large profits to the petroleum industry," said Mr. Johnson in a statement released today. "In fact, by taking larger and larger tax bites without regard to their impact, the federal and provincial governments have become the real beneficiaries of recent price increases."

"The latest $1.50 per barrel increase authorized by the federal budget of June 23 is a classic example," he said. "Unless the producing provinces reduce their royalty rates the entire $1.50 will continue to be taken by the federal and provincial governments until December 31, 1975, and thereafter the governments will receive approximately $1.25 or 83 per cent, while the industry will retain about 25 cents or 17 per cent and then only provided there is a very substantial re-investment of funds by the industry in exploration and development. This is equivalent to a wage-earner receiving a $1 per hour increase in wages and taking home only 17 cents."

Mr. Johnson said, "The Chamber is concerned that the actions of some provincial governments have further reduced the revenue that should have been available to the industry, by the temporary freezing of prices and/or the requirement of applying to a provincial board for approval to implement the federally-authorized price increase."

"Such interference in the competitive market system," said Mr. Johnson, "artificially reduces prices for a short period with little benefit to the consumer, causing the industry to lose millions of dollars that would otherwise be available to develop new sources of supply and assist Canada to regain its self-sufficiency in petroleum products in the 1980's."

"The consumer should also know where the money goes when he buys a gallon of gas at the service station," said Mr. Johnson. "Off the top of the retail price in Montreal of 78.9 cents per gallon, the federal and provincial governments take 32.3 cents including the 10 cent-per-gallon excise tax imposed by the recent federal government budget. The service station operator receives about 10 cents per gallon. Of the 36 cents per gallon balance, approximately 12 cents is paid out in royalties and income taxes. A similar breakdown applies across Canada, varying only with the application of provincial taxes and retail margins, leaving 24 cents to pay for exploration, drilling, extracting, storage, refining, transportation, marketing, wages, interest on borrowings and other costs."

In summary, Bill C-66 is highly inflationary. It is in direct conflict with the government's so-called consensus plan which was announced some weeks ago. The consensus plan was to deal with inflation. However, after a few meetings with business and labour we heard no more. The plan apparently died, and inflation continues to run unchecked in Canada. When will the minister and the government bring in proper legislation to deal with inflation?

Has this government no compassion or conscience? I beg them to stop the double-talk and window-dressing consensus plans and act now before they completely destroy this country.

It is the Progressive Conservative party, the official opposition, which has led the fight to oppose Bill C-66. As the Liberal member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), who is the Liberal member for Winnipeg South, will be voting for this huge tax increase, I will be the voice for these two consituencies and vote against this bill on their behalf as well as on behalf of the residents of Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I will try not to cover too much old ground that has been sort of mulled about in the chamber, although I cannot help but comment on a couple of features that other speakers dealt with at some length.

I think it is important that we talk about the bill instead of a number of fairly unrelated matters. This bill is clearly a regressive piece of legislation, the kind one can expect from a Liberal government, a government that is very cautious at election time about the great Canadian population. But between elections we have grown to accept this kind of cynicism, this kind of bill which clearly has the same kind of impact on someone earning $30,000 as on someone who is earning $7,000. Its effects will be least among the elite, among certain people in the business community who can deduct this iniquitous tax; but my constituents, who have to drive to work every day, really do not have any choice. We cannot expect people who have to drive 20 miles every morning through the Fraser Valley into Vancouver to stop driving simply because they feel the tax is too high. We cannot expect them to stop consuming gasoline.

I wish to deal with the spurious argument that somehow this tax contributes to the conservation of gasoline. The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) dealt at some length with the problems of those who occupy themselves with the affairs of their community in a practical way, people who have a socialist regard for the common good and who volunteer their time as necessary.

An hon. Member: That spirit was there long before socialism.

Mr. Leggatt: They are now being told it will cost them more to make their contributions to the community. I would not expect to see this kind of legislation around election day, so I suppose we have a long way to go before we see another federal election.

This tax bears heaviest upon those who can least afford it. It will cause approximately a 2 per cent increase in the cost of gasoline. The man who motors 15,000 miles a year will pay an extra $75 to $90 for his gasoline. Oil for home heating, as a result of the minister's proposal, will cost an extra $60 a year, again a regressive tax.

The principle of the equalization of gasoline prices in the country is one which commands general support, but the manner of achieving it boggles the mind when one thinks of the options available to the government. If they wanted to end the fixed write-off for corporations they could pick up another $500 million. If they wanted to end the investment tax credit they could get another $200 million. That would quickly provide the kind of revenues they are looking for.

An hon. Member: It would cost a few jobs, I suppose, particularly in some areas.

Mr. Leggatt: It might cost the Liberals a few supporters, too.

Mr. Foster: Don't get nasty!

Mr. Leggatt: I suppose we have to weep most about the oil companies. These people I see every Saturday night tell me it costs a lot of money to drill in the Beaufort Sea, and that it is necessary to make big profits if they are to drill in this country. And the government has gone along with this point of view.

Poor old Imperial Oil! In 1971 its profit was $136 million; in 1972 it was $151 million; in 1973, $228 million, and in 1974, $290 million. We are facing a strike in this country and it is the oil companies which are on strike. They won't look for any more oil because $290 million is not enough. They need more! And they know where to look for more.

Take poor Gulf Oil. In 1971 it made a profit of $53 million; in 1972 profits rose to $64 million, and in 1973 the figure was $101 million. That little oil company is growing. It is doing very well. But not well enough to go out and explore for oil. They have to look after the shareholders before they do that.

The government has been put into a panic by the protests of the oil companies that their profits are so low they cannot afford to look for oil. I shall not pursue this aspect of the matter; I believe the topics I have dealt with so far have been pretty well covered by my hon. friends and others.

On July 9 the minister stated, as reported in Hansard at page 7409, that this tax would contribute significantly to energy conservation, an objective which the people of Canada support. I question that statement, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the hon. gentleman is right when he said this was an objective Canadians support, but to say that raising the price of gasoline by ten cents is likely to lead to the conservation of gasoline is meaningless. As long as the automobile ethic is with us, people will continue to use gasoline. No one has challenged that ethic. No one has come forward with a concept capable of leading North American society away from the automobile.

The minister mentioned conservation three times in the course of his speech but nowhere did he tell us how we could promote conservation, save for this suggestion that if the price were high enough it would deter purchasers. In fact the record in the last ten years shows the opposite to be the case. The price of gasoline has been climbing steadily even in the absence of this last ten cents impost. On the other hand, consumption has been increasing at an even faster rate. The record gives the lie to the minister's argument that raising the price of gasoline would deter people from using it. Let us cease making spurious arguments and direct ourselves seriously to the issue of conservation.

The other gesture the minister made toward the conservation of energy was to remove the 5 per cent sales tax from insulation materials. This is a meaningless gesture, for the simple reason that the retailers themselves do not control the price of the product. The companies which produce this material control the price, so the tax relief will be gobbled up by the major companies which control production.

An hon. Member: He is pointing at the Tories.

Mr. Dick: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, an hon. member says he is pointing at the Tories. I notice the hon. member is speaking from a Tory bench. I thought he had joined our party. Are we on second reading, or have we reached the committee stage? Why is he not speaking from his own seat? He is trying to emulate Tom Cossitt.

Mr. Leggatt: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I had permission from the hon. member, who is a great distance from me in philosophy, but his seat is so often vacant I thought it might be more comfortable to occupy it.

An hon. Member: It is against the rules of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order. I wish to ascertain from the hon. member whether in fact he is speaking from a seat which is not his own.

● (2040)

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I normally speak from this position, which is half way between the two seats. Perhaps my voice carries over the seat of the hon. member—I am not sure.

Mr. Buchanan: That is what you call the middle of the road.

Mr. Leggatt: I want to assure Your Honour, with the greatest respect, that I am not intending to violate the rules of the House by speaking from the wrong location, but it is easier for me to stand in the aisle.

If I can return to my train of thought, it is alleged that the removal of the 5 per cent sales tax is contributing to the conservation of home heating oil, but this is meaningless since most heating oil is consumed within the home. What we should have had is a complete reduction from income tax of the cost of insulating one's home, perhaps with some provision being made regarding the building of a home. Gestures like this are not encouraging the Canadian people to go along with meaningful conservation.

British Columbia has had a 55 mile an hour speed limit for I do not know how long, but this is unknown in the east. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) made certain suggestions regarding conservation in 1973, but in our house we were taking those steps five years before that. We are waiting for the rest of the country to catch up with us.

I suggest we should do something about the horsepower rating of cars that are imported into Canada. Some cars gulp gas at the rate of one gallon for every nine miles, some even every five miles. Surely the government has the courage to take a forward step in that regard. I notice my good friend from Oshawa-Whitby indicating skepticism at that remark, but again I think this would be a useful step to take.

We could also stop building these monolithic skyscrapers in the centre of our cities which make enormous demands on our energy resources, and redirect some of our priorities in more meaningful ways. We could do something even more important, and that is to implement a Liberal promise made in the last election regarding rapid transit. However, it looks as though my hon. friends on the other side are following a well known maxim, which is never to spoil a good promise by keeping it. The promise to provide rapid transit was a good one, and let me put it on the record, as reported in the Montreal Gazette. On June 17, 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Toronto announced a $270 million program to aid public transit. He said:

> A Liberal government would pay 100 per cent of the cost of Canadian-made commuter vehicles and 50 per cent of the cost of platforms and stations. The government would also pay 25 per cent of the cost of Canadian-manufactured vehicles for public transit within cities. Encouragement and assistance would be given to smaller municipalities in the creation of new transit systems, Canadian industry would be encouraged to develop passenger vehicles, and experimentation with new transit systems would be assisted by federal financing of demonstration projects.

That would be a good start, and it is something that the Canadian people endorsed by the way they voted last time. I respect the way they voted. We took a shellacking in the last election, and we are perfectly ready to admit it. They wanted to take another chance on my hon. friends opposite because they wanted that kind of leadership, a meaningful approach to conservation and changing the lifestyle of this country with regard to the automobile. But what action does the government take? It puts a ten cents a gallon tax on gasoline. Is this the government's response to the over-consumption of energy in this country? I suggest it is a meaningless gesture.

One of the problems in this country is that consumption of energy is determined by those who advertise to a great extent. I am tired of looking at advertisements placed by hydro-electric companies urging people to buy a toaster or a refrigerator, and then on the next page there is a news report which says the same company requires another dam because it is short of power. We cannot have it both ways. Much of the energy demand in this country results from consumerism on the part of companies, and the oil companies continue to be among the worst offenders. We are letting demand determine supply, which is something we cannot do if we want to change our lifestyle.

This demand is artificially created and maintained to some extent by the oil companies, the electric companies, by people whose interest it is to see that over-consumption of energy continues. The government does not have the courage to interfere; it is still sitting there, living with Adam Smith. What the government must do is to enter the free enterprise system and artificially change the demand formula for the energy products. This requires leadership, something the government has yet to provide. I wait, and hope that at some time in the future—certainly it is not in this bill—a meaningful approach to energy conservation will be taken by changing the concept of supply and demand.

Let me refer to what one of our scions of industry, Mr. Twaits, has to say in an article intitled "Energy for Canadians".

Mr. Cullen: He has retired.

Mr. Leggatt: I thought the hon. member said I had. According to retired Mr. Twaits time is not on our side, and policies must be set now if Canada is to have the energy it needs. He ascribes to the philosophy that demand is limitless but he does not accept the policy of conservation.

In March, 1975, the Science Council of Canada made a statement of which the government has not taken notice but which I recommend be read very carefully. In its report No. 23 it said this:

> Traditionally Canada has allowed projections of energy demands to dictate policies for energy supplies; little thought has been given to the efficiency with which we use our energy resources.

What the Science Council is trying to say is that we should change our demand concept or we will not make any progress at all with energy conservation in Canada.

I suppose one of the tragic things about the whole question of conservation is that Canadians are squandering energy and we still have not got together in a conservation effort partly because of lack of leadership by the government. We are the second highest energy users in the world. We spend eight cents of every dollar on energy, or 18 cents of every dollar on energy using facilities. This waste in the eye of anyone from an energy poor country would be seen as a national scandal. How to we change this situation? We do not do it by playing a game with an excise bill and calling it a conservation bill.

This is purely a revenue producing measure. It is not a popular bill. It would never be introduced at a time when the government would have to stand or fall on its legislation. This brings us back to whether the government has the courage to do some unpopular things. I am not one who would always stand up and condemn a government for doing something that is not entirely popular. I do not think that would be a quality of leadership. The government should show once in a while that it can do that, rather than bring in such an excise tax bill.

The government should have a meaningful program, one in which perhaps there would be the necessity to take a look at rationing. It should be a program for the conservation of energy, in which high users would be charged less. At the present time high electricity consumers are given a reduced rate while the smaller consumers are charged the full rate. I plead with the government to show the kind of courage that is necessary to come forward with legislation which, although it might not be entirely popular, would be legislation which looks beyond the next year, the next month, or the next election.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I should like to say I was concerned a little by the effect the proposals made by the minister in this budget would have on the constituency I represent, as well as on the country as a whole.

As the minister went through the list of proposed expenditure slashes it became evident that there were areas which would definitely effect my constituency. He spoke of defence, the environment, trade and commerce, the farm Credit Corporation, and the Business Development Bank. I was forced to question some of his priorities.

Two days ago when we had the announcement of the scrapping of the urban demonstration project I received a phone call from the reporter of a local radio station who asked whether I did not consider, with hindsight, that the budget had been one that struck particularly hard at the constituency. I reminded him that it did not require any hindsight, and that I had told him exactly that on budget night in my remarks following the presentation of the budget.

We are debating an amendment which would hoist the bill and I believe this is in line with the thinking of a great many Canadians who, at the present time, are wondering why the minister bothered to bring in a budget at this time. We wonder at the thinking which allowed him to be trapped into presenting a budget at a time when it was neither wise nor necessary to do so.

I think the budget that was presented is indeed a strange one. The main purpose of it would seem to be to assist inflation because we find it lacks the courage to hit the issue of inflation. It demonstrates a lack of courage to bring in any effective income policy. The minister has presented proposals which in a time of inflation are inflationary. He brings in a ten cents a gallon tax on gasoline on top of the increase in the price of oil. This is a particular blow to a constituency and a province which depend on the tourist industry, because here we have a proposal guaranteed to reduce travel within the country and to discourage entry into the country by those who would drive across the border and contribute to our revenues in the west, or in any other part of Canada for that matter.

I should like to return to the question of the collapse of the urban demonstration program because it has been touted as one of the great savings in the budget. We are led to understand that close to $100 million is to be saved. That program originally was announced by the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford). At that time the present minister did not hold the portfolio. I have here the brochure that was prepared when the Minister of National Revenue was the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. At that time the program was announced with great fanfare and some very fine words. In the preface to the brochure we find these words:

> The Canadian Urban Demonstration Program is one way of helping to ensure that as change comes, as it must, it will be in the direction we want. The program is designed to identify and highlight the best of the new ideas Canadians have for improving their communities. By encouraging and publicizing successful innovations across the country, a more genuine choice will be open to everyone who will affect our urban future: elected representatives, officials, private interests and individual citizens.

It ends with these brave words:

I wholeheartedly encourage your participation in this exciting new program, through which Canadians can play an active role in the shaping of their future.

The history of the urban demonstration program is such that it certainly will not encourage Canadians, be they elected officials, representatives, or private citizens, to become terribly excited about any future program brought forward by the federal government with this sort of fanfare. Anyone who sees what has happened in respect of this program would be very discouraged about the prospect for the future.

I should also like to quote from the section of this brochure on financing the program, where we see this:

It is expected that the basic cost of demonstration projects will be financed through normal sources of funds: federal, provincial, municipal, private, or any combination of these. Additional support may be provided from a $100 million fund that will be disbursed over five years, beginning April 1, 1975. The fund is intended to be a catalyst and supplement, not a source of prime capital financing.

We know now that the operative words there are the "may be" words.

● (2100)

In spite of the reference to the $100 million fund, Canadians and particularly municipal officials who were lured into applying for money from this fund, found out that no such fund ever existed and that the savings are paper savings—that the financing was not there. There were 14 projects accepted initially. Then the minister sought to cancel the entire urban demonstration project in spite of the size, quality, and great words of the brochure.

The public might have been led to believe that there was a direct connection between the bringing down of the budget and the ending of the program. In fact there might be some Canadians who assume that that was the entire cause of the end of the program. But we know from various press reports that other factors were involved.

The first 14 projects selected for the program were screened by a now defunct advisory committee headed by Dr. Kenneth Hare of the University of Toronto, a former federal adviser on environmental research. In a statement reported in the Ottawa Journal of Monday, July 7, Allan O'Brien, the advisory committee member, is quoted at some length. The article says that the program's suspension did not particularly surprise him. He said he was disappointed because the program did have potential to develop and expand the federal government's role in government affairs, and he criticized the implementation process designed for the program, saying it had not been thought through carefully enough. That, of course, is not the first bit of government business in recent years that has been announced prior to its being thought through carefully. He repeated that the advisory committee had been in limbo for some weeks while federal officials tried to figure out what its function should be in the future.

So when we learn that the entire program has been scrapped we can be a little skeptical on this side of the House in assuming it was scrapped because of anything that came out of the budget. I think the program was in a mess and that the decision, which had been hailed as being a very tough one on the part of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), was perhaps not all that tough.

When we look at the highlights of the budget, on page 5 of that handy little brochure issued along with the budget, we find the section on the control of government expenditures, reductions and postponements, indicating they will be applied to almost all government departments and agencies, and some of these are singled out for special mention. They are Transport, Defence, Public Works, Environment, External Affairs, Industry, Trade and Commerce, Secretary of State and other departments, Petro-Canada, the Federal Business Development Bank, the federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation, the Farm Credit Corporation, and others, but there is no mention of Urban Affairs, and no mention of the urban demonstration program. It seems to me very strange that if at the time it was prepared the people preparing it knew that the entire urban demonstration program was going to be slashed, there was not even a hint in the list of priorities for reducing federal expenditures.

The minister, in announcing the ending of the urban demonstration program, called it a suspension, but I think we can safely assume that it has been ended and will not be resurrected, at least until it serves the government's purposes to resurrect it. I suggest that the time for its resurrection will come during the next federal election campaign—which will undoubtedly be twice as expansionary as the one we had a year ago when all kinds of programs were being announced week by week as we approached July 8. Until then I believe the urban demonstration program is dead.

The total figure of the amount being saved is illusory because some 200 projects have been returned to the people who submitted them. I suggest that the municipalities and organizations which submitted these projects have made considerable expenditures in researching and preparing the applications to the federal government, and I find it utterly reprehensible that a government, which less than a year ago announced a project and urged, demanded, encouraged and incited municipalities across the country to apply for it, when it received the applications, withdrew the project.

An enormous waste is taking place in this country simply because senior levels of government have not seen fit to work out a formula whereby municipalities would share in the total tax cut in relation to the expenditures that are demanded of them. These expenditures are made mandatory by the senior levels of government, and yet the municipalities have to cover the total cost.

I feel very strongly about this, and I believe that in future before the federal government prepares a program of this nature and of this magnitude, and announces a fund of $100 million to finance it, whether it be over one year or over five years, it should have some sort of insurance program or be bonded so that the municipalities which apply in good faith, and submit applications meeting all the criteria of the program, could expect their applications to be taken seriously and be given the attention they deserve.

There is a great waste when the federal government makes a sudden decision through which the entire effort that has gone into preparing applications is wasted and the program is scrapped. In many cases these projects are absolutely vital if we are to find a way toward solving some of the problems that beset the municipalities of this country. The federal government must give leadership and direction, which in this case it has abandoned completely and in haste to the detriment of the municipalities in Canada.

As we look through the bill we find one or two other areas which deserve comment. With regard to the tax on gasoline the government has left itself open to demands for refunds. As one reads the bill one finds considerable attention paid to individuals or corporations using gasoline on a business basis. I suspect it would be too much to expect of the government an extension of the system whereby agricultural gasoline would be coloured purple and farmers could use gasoline of the same grade in their machinery, thus avoiding the whole complicated business of rebates. One has to give the government some credit for its concern that this money be rebated, but one questions the whole proposal.

I notice nothing in the cancellation of the urban demonstration program to suggest that anything would be rebated to municipalities which submitted the 200 proposals. There is no mention of a rebate to mayors, aldermen, city engineers, and planners for the time they put into preparing those proposals that were scrapped so abruptly. I would suggest to the federal government that municipalities are made up of people, and people serve as mayors and aldermen of municipalities. They deserve better treatment than they have had from the government in the budget.

One suspects that we will have a very complicated few years as people submit their applications for rebates. Hon. members know the amount of mail we will receive from people who will be asking what happened to their rebates. They will wonder why they did not deserve a rebate, and we will find ourselves, as the ombudsmen of the people, sorting our way through unlimited numbers of applications for investigation of the whole question of the rebate. I can think of nothing which is more guaranteed to clog the mail, to waste time, to add expense and to save very little, in what is supposed to be a proposal to save gasoline and to push people toward rapid transit. I would suggest that although there has been a move to the cities and a great urbanization of this land, the government and the Minister of Finance should think very carefully before applying blanket taxes clear across the country which can be of no use in areas of the country which are decades away from any kind of rapid transit whatsoever.

It is doubtful whether this measure will accomplish anything in the urban centres in terms of increasing the development of rapid transit. It is strange indeed that as the ten cents per gallon tax is claimed to be for that very purpose, the urban demonstration project, which in many of its proposals was designed to hasten the development of alternate means of transit in the cities, should have been abandoned at the same time as the tax was imposed. Therefore, if ever there was an example of one arm of government destroying the efforts of another arm, it was in the decision to abandon the urban demonstration program at the same time as the Minister of Finance imposed his ten cents tax on the people of this country.

One notices too that it is required of businessmen dealing with the gasoline to, and I quote:

> —keep records and books of account in English or French at his place of business in Canada in such form and containing such information as will enable the amount of taxes or other sums that should have been paid or collected, the amount of stamps that should have been affixed or cancelled, or the amount, if any, that should have been paid or that is payable to him, to be determined.

There is no mention of compensating businessmen for that extra effort on behalf of the federal government. I do not know how many hon. members have been reading the mandate forms for May which have come in from small businessmen across this country, but it has been repeated over and over again, in comments which have been written in on them, that the federal government expects a small businessman not only to pay the taxes but to collect the money, and to do the endless hours of bookwork, without recompense or adequate compensation from the federal government. We will now have one more example of this, and there is a great revolt building in this country among those people who are opposed to being called upon to do the bookwork for the federal government. They are called upon to put in time, and occasionally to hire other people who are necessary because of the decision of the federal government to do this in an awkward and complex way which forces the businessman at the bottom level to keep records and books for the federal government. That is not good enough.

Finally, I would like to refer to one more part of the bill wherein the minister provides, and I quote:

> Thermal insulation materials designed exclusively for insulation of buildings; storm doors and storm windows for buildings; articles and materials for use exclusively in the manufacture or production thereof

Will be exempt from the excise tax which remains from what had been an 11 per cent tax on building materials. On budget night I was not listening to the minister very carefully at this particular point, and I honestly believed that he had said that the 5 per cent tax was being removed from building materials. That is a move we on this side of the House have long advocated, and which is so eminently sensible that I could not believe any other course of action was being proposed. I went on the air back home in a telephone interview and said that the 5 per cent tax had been removed and that at last we had seen the end of that, only to learn to my surprise and horror that it was nothing of the kind.

Goodness knows I should be beyond the stage of expecting anything so sensible, straightforward, simple, so welcome to the lumber industry of British Columbia and so essential to the economy of the constituency I represent, which relies heavily on the lumber industry, as a complete removal of the last shreds of the unhappy and inflationary tax on building materials which has frustrated the economy and the businesses of this country for so long. I should have known that it could not and would not be done by the administration opposite, but I suppose it is the eternal optimism in my nature which leads me to believe that the government would actually do something very sensible.

When I heard 5 per cent and building materials in the same sentence on budget night, I leapt to the conclusion which I hoped the minister would have been worthy of but of which he was not. Instead, we have this tiny little removal which goes along with the window dressing which bedecks the entire budget, a suggestion that basically the government is endeavouring to save our fuel resources when it has not begun to tackle that; a suggestion that it is fighting inflation when it has not begun to tackle that.

The budget failed completely to tackle the problems which beset this country, and because in the Excise Tax Act it fails to do anything sensible it has aroused the people of this country as few measures this government has undertaken for many years have done.

I support the amendment which would hoist this bill for six months, and I hope forever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have been following the debate on Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, with a great deal of interest. Much has been said about the lack of equity in this bill, and while I do not want to repeat many of the arguments I think it would be useful to summarize some of the effects of this bill.

Usually one can see bad effects of a particular piece of legislation, and generally it is easy to see that some segment of society will benefit. In the case of Bill C-66 it is easy to see that the bad effects will be felt by many. The bad effects will be felt by workers who are forced to drive to work because of shift work, because of a lack of public transit, or because they live in the suburbs.

Cities will suffer because there will be increased pressure to locate one's residence close to the work location and close to existing public transit systems. Businesses will also suffer, particularly the small businessman who may be a marginal operator. This small business category also includes farmers, fishermen, travelling salesmen, and neighbourhood servicemen. Although the small businessman will get relief in the form of a rebate of his tax, he will have to bear the additional costs of carrying the amount on his books from the time the tax is paid at the gas pump until his refund comes, months later.

Furthermore, the small businessman will have to bear the added cost of accounting for the tax, completing an additional complex government tax form every time he has to apply for the rebate, and of calculating the additional income tax payable on the rebate after it is received and included in income. I will have more to say about the income tax effects of the bill later.

Also feeling the adverse effects will be senior citizens, the physically handicapped, and people who cannot take advantage of public transit for a variety of reasons.

It may be asked who will benefit from this bill. Will it be big business? I say no. They will incur extra costs in financing the huge extra amounts they must pay at the pumps. They will incur extra staff costs for filing claims and generally overseeing this taxation exercise.

It is interesting to note that the government suddenly woke up to the fact that business would be getting an advantage under the original proposal, so now the rebate will be required to be included in income for tax purposes.

Will the oil companies benefit? No. The president of a major oil company said recently:

> No matter what sort of face the government tries to put on it, the important thing for the public to realize is that none of the funds resulting from the new ten cent per gallon excise tax on gasoline or the $1.50 per barrel crude oil price increase will go to the oil companies which need the money for exploration.

Will the public generally see any benefit from this bill? No again. As usual the public will be paying and the government will be spending. The government's proposal to spend exploration dollars through its new Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, was of course the subject of long debate in this House recently.

Who will benefit then? It is no surprise that it will be the government and the bureaucrats. The government has gained a huge new source of revenue at the expense of the individual working Canadian. The bureaucrats have gained a huge new bureaucracy to collect and administer the tax, much of which will be refunded under the expemption provisions.

I think it may be interesting to note what the minister said in his budget speech in June. He said:

> Gasoline purchasers from the commercial, industrial, resource and government sectors will be able to recover the tax. For example, refunds will be available on gasoline used for commercial trucking, for service vehicles, taxis and buses. Similarly, the tax will be refunded on gasoline used in farm vehicles and fishermen's boats. The tax on gasoline used for construction or industrial purposes, or in oil and gas, mining or forestry industries, will be refundable. Gasoline purchased by governments, including municipal, are also outside the scope of the tax.

Imagine what proportion of gasoline in this country is used by those exempted—the taxi industry, the trucking industry, buses, service vehicles, farm vehicles, the construction industry, general industry, the extractive industries, and governments at all levels. I would guess that the proportion would be as high as 80 per cent, but the government has given us no indication of the percentage of use it expects to be exempted from the tax.

The government claims that the ten cents tax is in part a conservation measure. As with the equity arguments, there seems to be no unanimity on that. In a recent speech in Ottawa the Liberal member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) said:

> As a conservation device, the new excise tax is unrealistic and is also unfair to millions of Canadians. It implies a government view that for essential family purposes like food shopping and visits to physicians, can turn to alternative forms of public transit instead.

In the same speech he said later:

> The only practical way for millions of Canadians to travel to and from work is by car. They either have no adequate rapid transit—or no rapid transit at all—available to them. None will exist for many years in most urban areas. And in some areas, the remote parts of the country and smaller cities and towns, none will likely ever be constructed.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, not all of the opposition is on this side of the House.

Earlier in this debate the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) said that the tax is an unpopular one and that this legislation is not popular legislation. Many members on the government side are silent on this issue and their electors will wonder why.

I was interested to see a letter in the Globe and Mail this morning from a Liberal member of parliament who shall mercifully go unnamed at this moment. He received many letters from constituents complaining about gasoline prices—"not so much about the ten cents tax" he wrote, although that tax was clearly part of the complaints. He had written to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) in part as follows:

What is so irritating to the people of this region is not the current price level or even the ten cents per gallon excise tax but rather the huge differential in prices.

This Liberal M.P. requested that an inquiry be initiated to determine the reasons for these wide variations. Perhaps he thinks the federal government should just set the price of gasoline at the pump instead of just applying the unpopular ten cents tax.

An hon. Member: You should read it all.

Mr. Clarke: I read it all this morning, but I think the important part is adequately covered right now.

Not only are constituents unhappy with this bill, action such as this in Bill C-66 does not promote good will with the provinces. Ontario, for example, has moved to implement a temporary freeze on gasoline prices, and other provinces may follow. Fearing a slump in the demand for automobiles produced in North America and the lay-offs that would result, Ontario removed its 5 per cent sales tax on North American produced automobiles for the rest of 1975.

The federal government seems to have ignored regional differences in other ways too. The amounts being denied the producing provinces by the imposition of a lower than market price on fuel does not help the residents of non-producing provinces because they are being called upon to pay a price per gallon nearly the same as it would be if the world price were paid for crude oil. The difference is that the extra money paid is going to the government coffers and not being used to explore for more oil supplies or to encourage more enterprise in the petroleum industry. Nor is it benefiting the provinces that have the constitutional right to the energy.

I should like to look at the detailed workings of the government proposals now. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in answer to some opposition criticism in the House, has asked the question, "How would you do it?"

If we were to accept that the government needed a huge increase in its tax revenues, it seems to me that the Minister of Finance already had the tools at his disposal to carry out his program without resorting to this ten cents per gallon "refundable-if-you're-lucky" tax. But if its interest was in the conservation of resources, the senior government could have used its persuasive powers to reduce speed limits on a nation-wide basis. Slower speed is a proven saver of gasoline and lives, as shown by the experience in the United States.

The federal government has not been hesitant in passing laws about automobile safety and emission controls. It certainly has the power to take other conservation measures such as limiting engine size or even requiring the installation of mechanical "governors" on automobiles to limit speed.

Before suggesting further government action such as the foregoing I would point out that the government's inappropriate and ineffective attempts at conservation would be unnecessary except for the fact that the government has enormously reduced the capability of the petroleum industry by its interference with such measures as the disallowance of provincial royalties as a legitimate business expense in arriving at taxable income; the artificial setting of wellhead prices below world market levels; the setting up of a national petroleum corporation; and the passing of tax rules favouring foreign investment in petroleum exploration.

Before anyone jumps up to say that I favour Canadians paying higher prices for gasoline, let me remind the House that the government's proposals will have exactly the same impact on taxpayers as would a world market wellhead price. The money all comes from the Canadian taxpayer. If the government pretends otherwise, it is deluding you.

The past few remarks refer only to conservation aspects. The Minister of Finance seems to have forgotten that the government has a rather large collection agency known as the Income Tax Department, which has grown enormously in order to deal with the Trudeau government's principles of simplicity and equity in regular income tax matters. Nobody in authority has any idea what happened to the simplicity or equity. The task of this department will be expanded to include the collecting and refunding of the ten cents per gallon tax. Imagine the addition to the bureaucracy that will be required to handle the processing of all the claims. Don't forget that every exemption will result in a monthly rebate to be processed.

On the other hand, if the government would admit that the sole or main purpose of the tax is to produce revenue, and I am not advocating a tax increase when I say this, just think how simple it would have been to raise this amount of tax revenue by increasing the rate of income tax by a point or a fraction of a point.

Let us look at the result of such a move, and who would be hurt or helped. First, Canadians on very low incomes, including many retired people who are among the hardest hit, would not incur any cost at all since their incomes fall below the taxable level. Second, Canadians not entitled to any rebate, including industrial and office workers, and physically handicapped people, would pay a little more income tax instead of a little more in excise tax, and the net result there would be about the same. And the load would be shared more equitably since the amount would be determined by income level instead of by the number of miles driven to work or to the grocery store. Third, the effect on businesses would be about the same as for wage earners if the government decided to increase income taxes instead of taxing gasoline. That is, business would pay a larger and fairer share of the national revenue. Businessmen, after all, are taxpayers, too, and if Canada needs more revenue they should be required to pay their share.

Under the budget proposals contained in this bill the ten cents per gallon tax is a complete washout for corporations and for businessmen, no matter what their marginal rate of tax is. Because the ten cents per gallon paid at the pump is deductible in computing taxable income, the net cost to the businessmen at a 50 per cent marginal rate is an extra five cents. When the ten cents rebate is finally received it must be included as taxable income, and five cents income tax must be paid, leaving a net refund of five cents. Therefore, we can see a net five cents outlay and a net five cents rebate, bringing a washout effect. But of course the corporate bureaucracy will have grown in order to deal with the filing of claims for rebates and the general recording of and accounting for these additional and completely unnecessary transactions. This increase in corporate staff will, or course, be mirrored by the huge increases in the government bureaucracy which will handle its side of the collections, the administration, and rebates. Truly, the taxpayer will be the loser on all fronts.

My remarks today, Mr. Speaker, have been specifically directed to clauses 5, 6, 7 and 8 of Bill C-66. This is not meant to indicate any agreement on my part with clauses 2 and 3 which will increase the air transportation tax from 5 per cent to 8 per cent on flights to the United States, and will double the air transportation tax to $10 on flights to other countries. I might only point out that this can hardly be construed as an anti-inflationary move by a concerned government. And, as with the oil industry, the airline companies, already hard pressed by rising costs, will not receive any of the increases in the fares created by this tax.

Clause 4 is perhaps a small concession to the taxpayer. We find that, while dipping into the taxpayer's pocket for taxes on gasoline and air transport, the government will make it easier for the taxpayer to drown his sorrows. It will reduce the excise tax on wines by 20 cents or 40 cents per gallon, depending on alcohol content. Perhaps the only good thing about this bill may be that, under clause 4, the stronger the wine is and the more you drink of it, the more taxes you will save.

All the provisions of this bill give credence to the good intentions of the minister and the benevolent Liberal government. Their fault is in the execution of their aims, not in their desire to be big brother to all Canadians.

In order to convince Canadians what good fellows they are, the government has been trying to fool us into believing that the Liberals are a united party, the only truly national party in Canada. But now the official report on the 1974 election results, released last week by the Chief Electoral Officer, shows that the Liberal party led the pools in only four of Canada's 12 provinces and territories, whereas the Progressive Conservative party led in seven of those 12 jurisdictions. Furthermore, whereas the Progressive Conservatives came second in five jurisdictions, compared to the Liberal party's six second places, the government was embarrassed to finish third in one province and one territory. Furthermore, the Liberals can boast of holding the reins in only three of Canada's ten provinces. Without question these statistics show that the Progressive Conservative party is the only national party in Canada.

Excise Tax Act

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the budget was introduced almost a month ago, and the budget has made necessary the introduction of this excise tax bill.

Last June 23 I personally experienced two apparently unrelated events here in Ottawa. For the first time in my life I paid 20 cents to use a pay telephone. Second, I saw the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) introduce a summer budget. These two events are very much related, of course, since both show Canada's extreme situation relating to inflation, the cost of living, and costs of production.

A month after budget day, the real blockbuster of that budget comes in Bill C-66, which of course is the new ten cents a gallon excise tax on gasoline used for personal consumption. I shall talk mainly about that aspect.

In my opinion, this tax is intended to be a straight revenue producer for the government. It remains to be seen how efficient it will be in view of the complex and expensive administration and refunding procedure which will need to be established. It will generate some $350 million in the remainder of the present fiscal year and thereafter will generate over half a billion dollars annually. This figure implies that some five and a quarter billion gallons of gasoline sold in Canada will be taxable under this new provision. Based on 1974 gasoline sales of seven and a third billion gallons, this means more than 70 per cent of gasoline consumed in Canada will be taxable in the personal or pleasure category.

Those entitled to a refund are estimated to be between 750,000 and one million people, but owing to multiple claims for refunds that are expected this year, this could total $170 million. That is approximately $1 refunded for every $3 collected. Surely it is a most inefficient and expensive tax to collect.

The government has already endorsed a single price system for petroleum products on a geographic area basis, whereas this bill establishes a two price system based on consumption. Therefore this will most certainly create additional burdens on certain sectors of the Canadian economy.

As we are now in the middle of our tourist season, this is where the first impact will be. In fact it is already being noticed. Already there are clear indications that Canadians who had planned a truly Canadian vacation by car have had to shorten their trip or re-route them to the United States where there is cheaper gasoline, cheaper lodging, and cheaper food. This is Canada's loss, of course, in more than just the monetary sense. It follows that this ten cents tax will definitely curtail our United States tourist friends from spending their vacations in Canada.

We in western Canada will feel the impact of this tax relatively more because of two main factors; less public transit, and longer distances that are travelled on the prairies, mostly by farmers. These longer distance costs should be allowed for in this bill, but they probably will not be. They will be included in the "personal use" category.

I want to give a personal example. From my home on my cattle ranch it is a 20 mile trip just to get my mail. There are no rural deliveries. It is a 100 mile trip to do business in either Medicine Hat or Maple Creek, such as for groceries, haying supplies, or some emergency welding. There was a time when some of these trips were made with horses, but that is very seldom done now. My point is that under prairie conditions cars are a necessity, not a luxury. This tax could very well perpetuate regional inequities in our more sparsely populated areas.

Whether the tax will result in some energy conservation remains to be seen. I am inclined to agree with the Canadian Automobile Association when they suggest, and I quote:

> Imposing excessive taxation under the guise of energy conservation and forcing motorists to utilize public transportation is unacceptable. With 85 per cent of all passenger trips in all Canada undertaken by automobiles, and the majority of Canadians requiring their car for transportation to work, it is impractical to force Canadians into public transportation by economic sanctions.

I would add, especially on the wide open spaces out west.

There will be some reduced consumption of fuel, I am sure. After all, a ten cents per gallon increase is a record tax bite. It will get some results. However, if we are realistic we must realize that Canada cannot conserve enough to ensure adequate supplies for the future. That can only come from a vigorously stimulated exploration and development policy. The new budget will probably increase some exploration. However, one estimate of a $40 million release to the industry is only enough to drill one offshore well in the high Arctic.

The budget speech points out that Canadian oil export tax revenues have fallen off while oil import subsidies have risen, hence the need for this gasoline excise tax. The two are obviously related, but not to the extent suggested by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) in his letter which appeared in last Saturday's Ottawa Journal. The letter is headlined "Oil firm's ads were misleading." The minister stated, and I quote:

> The ad, headlined "Here's where your money goes for those gasoline price increases", refers first to the 10-cent excise tax on a gallon of gasoline announced in the June 23 budget and proclaims: "100 per cent to the federal government."
> That is 100 per cent wrong. Not a penny of that 10 cents will go to the federal government. The purpose of the tax is to keep home heating costs down by permitting the continuance of the oil import compensation program. The revenue—all the revenue—from this tax will pass to consumers in Eastern Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces in the form of reduced prices for petroleum products, including home heating oil.

I am sorry the minister is not here tonight. I would be tempted to say to him "Come now, Mr. Minister, by the same token I suppose not a penny of my income tax goes to the federal government. It is just some sort of a miracle transfer to pay my share of federal welfare, unemployment insurance costs, pensions, and so on." I suggest a fair percentage of that ten cents will be required to pay the administration costs of this tax, and the government is collecting every cent of it. Who is misleading whom?

In summing up my comments on this ten cents excise tax portion of this bill I want to say it is the abruptness and the magnitude of the tax that stagger and hurt so many Canadians. As crude oil prices move up it is inevitable that gasoline prices must also move up some, but could not the tax have been staged a little more humanely, such as over at least two years? This ten cents blockbuster could very well stampede car buyers away from the bigger models to the compacts and the mini-compacts, and in so doing create undue problems in the auto industry.

If I may, I want to comment very briefly on some other aspects of the bill.

I should like to associate myself with many others in this debate who have commended the Minister of Finance on removing the 5 per cent tax on building insulation materials. At the same time I ask the very logical question: why not from all building materials? There never was a better opportunity to do something to improve the serious housing situation.

● (2150)

In addition I will mention one very specific and relatively small budget item—removing last year's excise tax on domestic wine. It is strange indeed that the minister should have zeroed in on this one item, both in the budget and in the bill before us, and that no mention at all should be made about the serious tariff and quota problems at the U.S. border involving the Canadian cattle industry.

I have a final comment relating to another very specific budget item—it may not be referred to in the bill before us, but I will mention it only briefly. The rate of return on government annuities is to be increased. This is very good news, of course, but it is news which is long overdue. Could the minister or, in his absence, the parliamentary secretary, announce very soon what the new rate will be? Will there be a COLA clause? Will this change be retroactive? I am getting letters concerning these three questions.

In conclusion I wish to say I fully support my leader's amendment to this bill giving it the hoist to you-know-where. I would urge hon. members on both sides of the House to go home to their ridings during the summer recess, whenever it comes, and learn the real grass roots impact of this measure by talking to their constituents about what Bill C-66 will do. I am referring mainly to the ten cents a gallon excise tax.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I consider it a privilege to enter this debate and speak in support of the amendment put forward by my leader some days ago to this bill, Bill C-66, which constitutes an assembly of financial arrangements resulting from the budget. The measures we are asked to approve will be of no benefit to the Canadian economy or to the Canadian people and their future welfare.

I think the budget, and Bill C-66 which emanates from it, are best described by an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail on June 24, the day after the budget was brought down. That paper describes it as a "tinkering budget". The heading reads: "The budget tinkers again". The writer describes it as a failure of leadership in a situation which has rapidly deteriorated. And it has deteriorated since then. Canadian affairs are in a state of decline. Indeed, I would not be at all surprised to see this country faced with a financial crisis before the snow flies in December. I hope this does not happen, but the general condition of our economy as reflected in the various departments and the various services the government is attempting to carry on presents a picture in which I can see nothing but deficits and a very poor outlook. This is why I would not be surprised to see a financial crisis before the fall.

The Globe and Mail continues on a sad note:

—if the upturn ever does come, Canada, with first year new contract wage settlements averaging 19.2 per cent will simply not be in a position to compete.

This places us in a very sad situation. I continue to quote from this leading article:

The Finance Minister says he faced three dilemmas in shaping this budget—inflation, unemployment, energy. About inflation he does virtually nothing. His promise of federal spending cuts of $1 billion this fiscal year must be as suspect as all his other figures. He does not even promise to freeze the growth of an overgrown civil service; only to reduce its rate of growth.

I shall quote no further from this editorial except for the final sentence, which reads as follows:

What this budget says is that Canada is in deep trouble and virtually leaderless.

To my mind this is a sad situation for us to be in after the Canadian people have given the government such a generous mandate. I refer again to the phrase I quoted from the Globe and Mail—that Canada should be virtually leaderless.

We have the spectacle before us of a government which imposes a ten cents a gallon surtax on gasoline and in the same stroke of the pen removes the tax from wine. What could be more ridiculous? That is one for the books. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—MINISTER'S ESTIMATE OF RATE OF GROWTH THIS YEAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed that this is the third time in a row when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has not chosen to appear in the House to defend himself after having misled the House.

Mr. Cullen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say on behalf of the minister that he is attending the wake of the late hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott. That is why he is not in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would draw to the attention of hon. members that such exchanges are not in order during the adjournment debate. The hon. member has seven minutes in which to make his point, and the parliamentary secretary has three minutes in which to reply.

Mr. Stevens: I am sure the minister does have an unavoidable engagement but it would have been quite easy to ask that the debate which is to take place tonight be held over until another occasion when the minister could appear. I say this because I have stated three times in a row that the minister had misled the House. The situation to which I shall refer hon. members is one in which the minister, after being prodded twice, admitted he misled the House. I believe hon. members are entitled to have the minister appear and explain why he has misled them in the way he has.

The Minister of Finance is no longer credible. He has chosen to bring in budgets and make statements in the House without giving members the benefit of the forecasts upon which he is basing his statements and budgets. Let me refer to a question that I put to the minister in the House on July 18, as reported at page 7655 of Hansard:

● (2200)

As the minister has repeatedly stated that he has always been frank with the Canadian people, and in view of the anticipated high inflation rates, would the minister be frank enough to tell the House and the people what he anticipates will be the real rate of growth in Canada in the current year, a figure he gave in each of his four budgets for each year but not in his June 23 effort?

The minister replied:

If the hon. gentleman would read the budget speech carefully he would find that I estimated the rate of growth at somewhere between zero and one per cent.

At three o'clock that day I rose on a point of order to point out that no place in the budget of June 23 is such a statement made by the Minister of Finance, to which he replied that he would send me the reference. Again the following day I rose on a point of order to point out that I had not received the reference to which the minister referred, and suggested that perhaps under pressure the minister had mistaken his answer with a statement he made to the first ministers' conference, at which time he commented on the poor growth in the gross national product in the current year. At my second prodding the minister then admitted, as reported at page 7711 of Hansard for July 18:

Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is perfectly correct. Those numbers were given in the speech I made at the federal-provincial conference which was tabled in the House by my parliamentary secretary, and the budget reflected those figures.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is wrong again. The figure that he gave on Thursday of last week of zero to one per cent real growth in the economy for 1975 was not the figure that he used at the federal-provincial conference to which he has now referred. Perhaps we can understand why it is that the minister has chosen to fail to give us an inflation rate for the country, and has failed to give us the unemployment rate anticipated by his department, and has now failed to give us the real growth rate, when we check the record of his previous forecasts. In short, we find that the minister has muffed every forecast that he has never given in a budget concerning real growth in Canada.

If hon. members review the May 8, 1972, budget they will find that the minister predicted in the 1972 year under review that the growth would be 6 to 6½ per cent; the actual growth was 5.8 per cent. In the February, 1973, budget which predicted that the real growth would be in the order of 7 per cent, it turned out to be 6.8 per cent. On May 6, 1974, he stated that the real rate of growth would be 5 per cent higher in 1974 than 1973; the real growth was 2.8 per cent. In the November 18 budget, on which many members of the House spoke, the Minister of Finance predicted growth this year would be 4 per cent; we now find after the tabling of the budget on June 23 that the minister did not even have the courage to tell us on what real growth figures that budget was based.

The minister did not have the courage to tell us the figures because he knows that the figures are growing worse and worse month by month. According to the recent forcast of the Conference Board of Canada the gross national product in real terms is expected to decline by approximately .6 per cent in 1975 over 1974.

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, here we have a Minister of Finance assuring us on November 18 that the real growth in the economy of Canada in 1975 would be 4 per cent; he does not have the courage to tell us what it is going to be today; yet we find the Conference Board of Canada predicting a negative growth of .6 per cent. Having misled the House on two former occasions the minister has not had the courage to come to the House and explain why he so misled the members of the House.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one is reminded of the saying that none are so blind as those who will not see. Here we have an example of the phrase, much ado about nothing. The minister conceded in the House that when he referred to the fact that the comments he made were contained in the budget speech they were contained in the papers that were tabled by me on his behalf in respect of the federal-provincial conference. There was no suggestion of hiding anything.

The question concerns the prospective real rate of growth in Canada in 1975. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said in this House on July 17 that he estimated the rate of growth at somewhere between zero and one per cent. The main forces in play were set out in the budget, but it may be helpful to the House for me to recall them and bring them up to date. When all the data is in, the rate of output in Canada in the first half of 1975 will almost certainly be recorded as smaller than it was on the average in the last half of 1974. But real growth in output is expected to resume in the second half of this year.

Much of the most important factor in the slowdown in real output in Canada has been the rather large and sharp recession abroad, particularly that in the United States. But now, with every passing day, the prospect of economic recovery in the United States and Japan in the second half of the year appears more likely, along with at least a cessation of the decline in output in western Europe. These are powerful forces working toward increase in the real level of Canada's exports in the second half of 1975.

The indicators of consumer confidence in Canada did not fall to anything like the low levels they reached in the United States in the last year; and they are now strengthening. Automobile sales held up remarkably well in Canada compared with the United States during the last nine months. There is every prospect that real demand for consumer goods and services will grow moderately over the next six months. In most recent months one of the depressing factors on production in Canada has been the correction of what had developed as an excess inventory position. The correction needed in Canada has been much smaller than in the United States, and the process of correction is well advanced. Accordingly, before the end of this calendar year at least moderate inventory rebuilding should be under way. Crop reports are reasonably good to date, though there are some worries about sufficient moisture to produce good harvests.

All these factors add up to a realistic prospect of positive real growth in Canada in the second half of the year, barring very severe work stoppages, and bad weather. With this second half growth to offset the real decline in the first half, we expect the year as a whole to show a rate of growth over 1974 of the order of one half of one per cent.

I do not think it was necessary for the minister to be here to make that statement again for the edification of the hon. member.

Mr. Stevens: It was never made before.

MANPOWER—OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH AND STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR EXPANSION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, on June 18 I directed a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) relating to the fact that the unemployment rate for those citizens of Canada in the age bracket between 14 and 25 had reached serious proportions, particularly among students who were trying to find funds to increase their education.

I asked the minister whether he would take action in the immediate future to expand the programs which were already in existence under the student summer employment program for 1975. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, I appear here tonight in view of the fact that I cannot accept the answer given by the minister wherein he indicated that his government had considerably increased the allocation to the student summer employment program. Even though I must accept his answer to a certain extent, I cannot accept the statement that the government is doing everything possible to deal with the problem, particularly with the means available under the student summer employment program.

I want to refer to only two phases of the 22 programs designed to provide opportunities to Canadian youth. I refer to the cadet training program and the militia or reserve training under the Department of National Defence. Under these two programs some $700,000 will be allocated to cadet training, and $4.2 million to the reserve forces or militia training. I might say that the Government of Canada is prepared to allocate funds amounting to some $5 million, but it is ignorant of the fact that many thousands of our young people are denied the opportunity of taking advantage of the cadet and militia movement under the aegis of the Department of National Defence.

I might say, as an experienced advocate of the Department of National Defence, that I am sorry to see that the Government of Canada in directing the Department of National Defence is not taking advantage of its capability of providing leadership, esprit de corps and comradeship even though the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) and the chief of our armed forces keep repeating year by year that the Department of National Defence will build up the armed forces of our nation in peacetime through the militia and the cadet services. But over the years nothing has been done, only lip service has been paid to the goal. Even though the government has the capability of providing leadership and instilling esprit de corps and comradeship in our youth, I can only say that more consideration should be given to providing greater initiative with the aim of building a better future for Canada. I ask the parliamentary secretary to reply to my question.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, like many other hon. members, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) has been a strong advocate of the role that students could play in the summer program of the Department of National Defence. At the same time I have to say that he threw me a slight curve because his question tonight was initially directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) and I think it is more appropriate that I respond on behalf of that minister. Perhaps he can put another question on another "late show" to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson).

The hon. member will recall that the question of growing youth unemployment and the possibility of increasing funds available to the OFY program in order to combat the problem was dealt with in the House on February 24, 1975. At that time the minister pointed out that a total of $67.1 million had been set aside for the federal government's Student Summer Employment and Activities Program (SSEAP), of which $27.5 million had been allotted to OFY, the largest recipient program.

The allocation to the OFY program, as with the allocation to the other components of SSEAP, was set after applying statistics of past demand and trends to the estimated youth employment situation. After a review of the allocation to the 1975 program in light of increases in the rate of student unemployment, an additional $13.4 million was allotted to SSEAP in an effort to compensate for such increases. Of these additional funds, $8.9 million was used to augment the OFY budget, allowing for the creation of 7,000 extra jobs under that program. With this considerable increase in funds, more than 250,000 student jobs have been created either directly or indirectly within the framework of SSEAP, a total of 27,000 of them within the OFY program.

With the instigation of such measures to deal with the problem of student unemployment, the minister is satisfied that the problem has been significantly alleviated, and no expansion of OFY or SSEAP is foreseen at the present time.

With respect to the comments of the hon. member directed to the Minister of National Defence, perhaps we can get together again some night, and I will have a good answer for the hon. member on that one as well.

Adjournment Debate

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ATTEMPT TO EXPEL ISRAEL FROM UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) what Canada's answer would be to the 50 states, members of the United Nations, who intend to seek to expel Israel from the General Assembly this fall. I wanted a clear statement from him of unwavering support for Israel, whatever the pressures. The minister has given Israel that support. He went on to tie his answer to the policy declaration of the government respecting admission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to Canada this fall to the scheduled UN crime conference which Canada is to host in Toronto. Wisely the conference is to be postponed until Canada is satisfied that a technical conference of the sort which this is intended to be will not be used as a weapon in the war to eliminate Israel.

The minister also committed himself and the government to contribute what he can by reducing tensions in the Middle East. The minister has taken the right course. I was surprised that the Conservative spokesman, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), would try to minimize the role Canada can play in this matter. In effect he was belittling and downgrading the position of our country and the position we can take in resolving the tension in the Middle East. We of course are not the United States, we are Canada, but we are respected in the Middle East by all parties, and for our support in the past for the easing of tensions we deserve to be heard by the parties in the Middle East. As like all Canadians I look forward to an increasingly active role by the minister in that area of the world, and I hope the Conservatives will support him as will Canadians generally.

As one who called for the cancellation of the conference in Toronto this September I must say that I prefer the solution which the government has taken, a postponement until the UN atmosphere, in Canada's opinion, has improved. The government has not washed its hands of the UN or of the conference, in spite of the extent to which international politics and anti-Israel feeling have polluted it. Canada has drawn attention of the member states to a fact of which all Canadians are aware: to be effective, to be useful to its members, and to be worth preserving, the UN must return to its charter principles. These principles are respect for the integrity of member states, rejection of violence as a means of solving international differences, and universality of participation.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as mentioned in the House of Commons today by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), the position of Canada obviously is in favour of the principle of universality, and it will resist very vigorously any effort to change the status of Israel at the General Assembly.

The Next General Assembly of the United Nations will provide an opportunity to affirm the principle of universality as a fulfillment of what ought to be a basic aim of the United Nations. More specifically, we will resist any attempt to exclude Israel, or any other country, from the proceedings of the General Assembly. Acceptance of this principle would guarantee the status of Israel within the community of nations and thus remove one cause of instability in the area.

Through new initiatives, both bilateral and multilateral, the government will try to improve the political situation in the Middle East and in the UN, notably through our participation in the next session of the General Assembly, which may be crucial for the future of the organization, given the fundamental character of the issues on which debates are expected to focus. Canada will consult with other interested countries on the ground rules governing technical discussions in UN arenas. Either independently or in co-operation with others, we will attempt to formulate and seek support for an effective resolution in the General Assembly on this question.

● (2220)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs also intends to accept during the autumn outstanding invitations to visit a number of countries in the Middle East. These visits, which the government already considered most useful for strengthening our relations with this region of the world, have taken a new urgency following the difficulties we encountered in holding the United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention. The House can be assured that the minister will take this opportunity to solicit the views of his hosts on these difficulties and seek their support for the United Nations as a universal forum and an effective international instrument.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

SUGGESTED UNILATERAL DECLARATION OF JURISDICTION OVER MARINE RESOURCES TO 200 MILES OFFSHORE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of increasing evidence that the United States of America is moving steadily toward approving legislation extending its control over ocean fisheries to 200 miles offshore, and despite this nation's other responsibilities and preoccupations in the world scene, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the Minister of State (Fisheries), the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister of Canada pool their respective courage and resolve and, instructed by this House, at least make a decision to follow the United States in their very logical move to protect that nation's marine resources, since it is obvious that by its indecision, which this government has exhibited on the world scene, no one, particularly the nations with fishing rights, will take seriously any longer Canada's empty and platitudinous pronouncements, and it is only by following as usual in the wake of the United States that we can protect our own fishing industry.

Mr. Speaker: Under Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House before presentation. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSAL THAT DEPARTMENT BE GIVEN RESPONSIBILITY FOR DREDGING PUBLIC WATERWAYS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the announcement yesterday by the Department of Public Works that a contract has been awarded to Dillingham Corporation Canada Limited for some $322,000 for dredging in the Lower Fraser River, in view of the fact that the vice-president of this firm is presently under indictment flowing from the investigations of harbour dredging scandals, and in view of the fact that practically all major companies are maintained by government dredging contracts and have been implicated in these investigations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this government immediately proceed to give to the Department of Public Works full responsibility in the dredging of public waterways and that a moratorium be placed on further dredging contracts with private firms.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED APPLICATION OF SOCIAL CREDIT PRINCIPLES TO COMBAT INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an important matter of urgent necessity.

Considering that the cost of living has increased in the main urban centres in Canada between May and June, that since June 1964 the cost of living has gone up by 10.6 per cent in the Montreal area alone in comparison with 9.4 per cent in the Quebec City area, and since that staggering rise of prices has reached disastrous proportions threatening to destroy entirely our economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House enjoin the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to consider without delay the policies advocated by the Social Credit Party of Canada to put an end to the devastation of inflation and further protect the purchasing power of all Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, therefore the motion cannot be put.

REQUEST THAT OLD AGE PENSIONS BE GRANTED AT AGE 60—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move an important motion.

In view of the continuing discrimination against single or widowed people between 60 and 65 years of age, and considering that a great many do not get the necessary minimum income, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the House instruct the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to review his policies in that regard so as to make needy people 60 years old and over eligible for the old age security pension.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, it requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PROPOSED REVIEW OF RESULTS OF LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State for External Affairs having said on July 2 in the House that at some point the government intended to review the results of the Law of the Sea conference with the Canadian participants at that conference, I would like to ask the acting minister if he can tell the House whether this review has been started, whether a date has been set for the meeting with the Canadian participants and whether the review has been completed yet.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is expected in the House momentarily. I think it would be better if the question were directed to him when he appears.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to ask questions of the same minister on a similar matter, so I should like to postpone my questions as well.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISMISSAL OF MESSRS. CHO, CHEW AND McGUIRE BY CN TELECOMMUNICATIONS—REASON FOR FAILURE TO FOLLOW UNION GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning a matter I raised yesterday with regard to Mr. Cho, Mr. McGuire and Mr. Chew, who were fired from Canadian National Telecommunications. Can the minister tell the House why, in firing these three men, Canadian National Telecommunications has chosen to overlook the union's grievance procedure, which states that an employee cannot be discharged until his case has been thoroughly reviewed and he has been advised of the reasons for the review?

● (1410)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I answered yesterday that I was inquiring into that case. At first sight this is a case which is worrying me very much but the hon. member gave me time to get in touch with CN, which I did. They are supposed to give me an answer. In my opinion, this has been done in a very awkward way.

POSSIBILITY OF SECURITY CHECK ON EMPLOYEES OF CN TELECOMMUNICATIONS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Solicitor General on the same subject. Can he confirm whether in fact the RCMP security division is running security checks on Canadian National Telecommunications employees, and if so, why this investigation is necessary?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no information on that. After the hon. member's intervention yesterday under Standing Order 43 I asked for a report but I have not received it yet.

PICKERING AND MIRABEL—CONTINGENCY PLAN FOR CO-ORDINATING ROAD INFRASTRUCTURE—POSSIBILITY OF MORATORIUM UNTIL ACCESS ROAD PROBLEMS SOLVED

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Noting that the minister will meet with his Ontario counterpart in the near future to discuss the timing of the construction of road infrastructure for Pickering airport and noting that, although Mirabel airport is expected to open this October, there is also a lack of viable road infrastructure between the new and old airport and between Mirabel and Montreal, may I ask the minister whether his government has developed a contingency plan with a view to co-ordinating and integrating airport road infrastructure by the federal and provincial governments involved?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister considering a moratorium on Pickering and Mirabel airports until the road infrastructure problems are resolved?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—REQUEST OF CANADIAN MILK COMMISSION TO INCREASE EXPORT PRICE OF POWDERED MILK—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Last week, the Quebec Farm Producers' Association submitted to the minister a brief on the recent decision of the Canadian Dairy Commission to increase by 45 cents a hundredweight the price of powdered milk for export. Considering that this brief is apparently realistic and quite fair, and that it apparently rectifies an injustice of which producers are the victims, can the minister advise the House of his reply to this brief or say whether he has made up his mind about it, and what he intends to do to solve this problem?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we did receive a very good brief from the organization that the hon. member mentions. They made many suggestions and they are being considered.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Considering the problems this is causing to dairy producers, as well as the urgency of the issue, can the minister advise the House whether he will introduce legislation to provide these producers with the revenues which were promised to them on April 1 of this year?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, they know they are living within the agreement. The Canadian Dairy Commission is abiding by the agreement with the provinces. They have made several suggestions concerning measures to overcome this problem forcing them to take the lesser return for their products, which we also have certain reservations about, but because of world conditions and because the European community has dumped its skim milk products on the world market the price of skim milk product in Canada has been depressed. These are all being considered as are other suggestions that they have made. They made several suggestions outside their agreement that we are also considering.

IMMIGRATION

VIETNAMESE REFUGEES—LACK OF SECURITY SCREENING AT FORT CHAFFEE—SOURCE OF SECURITY INFORMATION OBTAINED

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of allegations being made regarding the lack of security control in the screening of Viet Nam refugees at Fort Chaffee, Arkansas, would the minister explain why no RCMP officer was assigned to visa control at Fort Chaffee and in view of the lack of RCMP participation could the minister inform this House who provided Canadian immigration officers with security information that was required?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the very early stages of the movement of Vietnamese refugees, as in characteristic of all refugee movements, certain examination criteria were relaxed in the interests of reuniting families in particular very quickly. Security measures were very shortly introduced, however, at all locations from which we anticipated applications. I would have to have more information from the hon. member on the exact time he is talking about. As of several weeks ago, security checks were being made where that is totally possible. In the meantime, as I indicated to the House on other occasions, in accordance with standard practice we brought in people on ministers' permits. This does not grant them landed status but gives them the opportunity to be re-united with their families. They can move quickly. At the same time, this procedure gives us time to make the necessary background checks and validate or otherwise their desirability or eligibility for landed status.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE VIETNAMESE REFUGEES NOT GRANTED LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS UNTIL SECURITY REPORTS OBTAINED

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of his answer, will the minister confirm that security checks are being done into the background of Vietnamese refugees who have been granted ministers' permits which are valid generally for one year, that the ministers' permits will not be extended and that landed immigrant status will not be granted before Canadian authorities have obtained security reports on those people?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with few exceptions, that is standard procedure.

PROPOSED REVIEW OF RESULTS OF LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the statement he made in the House on July 2, to the effect that at some point the government will review with Canadian participants the results of the Law of the Sea conference. Has this review started, has a date been fixed for the meeting or, in view of its importance, has the review actually been completed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I undertook at the Law of the Sea conference to meet with the delegation upon the conclusion of the conference and to have that meeting in Canada. I have not yet summoned, called or convened such a meeting of the delegation. I intend to do so. However, as part of the over-all consultation on this question, I shall meet tomorrow with at least two of the provincial participants at the Law of the Sea conference, namely, the minister of fisheries for Newfoundland and the minister of fisheries for Nova Scotia. The purpose of that meeting will be to discuss the whole question of fisheries and their relationship to the law of the sea.

FISHERIES

POSSIBILITY OF ACHIEVING FORTY PER CENT REDUCTION IN ICNAF QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs does not think that because delay may have seemed appropriate yesterday, it is necessarily appropriate in this area. Has the minister reason to believe that the government of Canada can achieve the 40 per cent reduction in the ICNAF quotas in the September meeting, which I understand is to be held in Montreal? What specific reason has the minister to believe that Canada can achieve the objective which it failed to achieve in the earlier meetings this summer and spring.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, probably the Minister of State (Fisheries) is in a better position to judge the matter of the ICNAF meeting which will be held in September. I would prefer it if he would deal with that question.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, it was clear in the minds of our negotiating team—I have had a long session this morning, and will again meet this afternoon two of our ICNAF commissioners—that two meetings would probably be required before the 40 per cent reduction is accepted by many nations. We are now having bilateral discussions with some nations of ICNAF, and we hope they will see the necessity and wisdom of our proposals.

EFFECT OF CANADIAN POSITION ON 200-MILE FISHING ZONE ON ICNAF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of State for Fisheries not agree that his bargaining position at the September conference, as was the case at the earlier conference, has been weakened by the indication of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that Canada will not resort to a unilateral declaration with regard to the 200-mile economic zone and that other fishing countries, knowing that Canada has committed itself to proceed through another Law of the Sea conference, are laughing at Canada all the way to the banks, if you will pardon the expression?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition has interpreted our stance as being completely closed on the possibility of unilateral attainment of jurisdiction, he has not read the reports properly.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, I have read it and it is clear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FAILURE OF LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On May 1 in the House the minister said he would consider my suggestion that if the Law of the Sea Conference failed, he would make a statement on motions outlining the position and action Canada would take as a result of the failure. Is the minister now prepared to make that statement on motions? Will he do that after he meets with the two provincial ministers tomorrow? I ask that this be done at the earliest possible date because the fisheries are dying a slow death.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member in his concerns about the state of the east coast fishery. However, I believe that my commitment to make a statement in the House or my undertaking to consider making a statement was fully discharged in the full day debate that we had on that question not so long ago and on which subject the House reached a decision. I would advise the hon. member that in my view the Law of the Sea Conference was not a failure, and that the single negotiating text which was produced at the conference met almost all of the significant objectives which Canada had in the field of fisheries. It would be wrong to describe it as a failure.

In the meantime, however, we as a government are considering as one of our options for future action the question of unilateral action. However, as the Prime Minister pointed out in answer to a question just recently, it would be misleading to the fishermen to hold out the expectation that a unilateral declaration would be an instant solution to the problems of the east coast fishery.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED INCREASED SURVEILLANCE BY DEFENCE FORCES—ACTION AGAINST FOREIGN VESSELS IGNORING ICNAF QUOTAS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). In view of the fact that while these ongoing meetings are taking place the fishing industry is deteriorating to a state of oblivion, has the minister had consultation with the Minister of National Defence with regard to stepping up the surveillance capability? If so, what action is he going to take against foreign draggers that ignore our ICAF quota and continue to fish for our marine resources?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a mood of total pessimism which has to be questioned. A major company on the east coast last week gave its financial statement for the last quarter, indicating that its profit position came from an improvement in landings. I also have information from some members of this House to the effect that landings in some areas of Newfoundland are good and that some fish are being turned away because the plants cannot process them.

Having said that, I continue to recognize that we must obtain jurisdiction off our shores. To this end, we are pursuing bilateral discussions with a good number of countries. We have already had discussions with the Norwegians, Americans and Mexicans. I would agree that also in the surveillance field we should all live within the rules of ICNAF. That does not mean we cannot increase surveillance. In fact, we have already indicated to National Defence that we desire this to be done.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF ELEMENTS OF ARMED FORCES CONDUCTING SURVEILLANCE OF FISHING OPERATION AS PART OF TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my final supplementary to the Minister of National Defence. In light of recommendations made by certain high ranking officers in the Canadian army, will the minister consider, as part of the training formula, that elements of the Canadian forces provide surveillance activity on the east coast of Newfoundland as this is the season when the foreign draggers will be taking advantage of the fisheries off our coast? Further, will he consider increasing the Canadian forces militia in Newfoundland? I would venture to warn the minister that if this is not done, the fishermen will soon be taking action on their own.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of State (Fisheries) indicated, National Defence is providing full support to his department. But I will be glad to take into consideration the representations made by the hon. member.

FISHERIES

EFFECT ON INDUSTRY OF FAILURE TO IMPLEMENT COMPREHENSIVE RESOURCE MANAGEMENT PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Fisheries). In light of the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I ask whether the hon. gentleman shares the view of the Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board that failure to implement a comprehensive resource management program immediately will have dire economic and social consequences for the future viability of both the fishing and the fish processing industries? If so, does the minister believe that continuing negotiations in connection with this important matter is the best way of dealing with the situation?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): I am glad that the Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board has read some of the speeches I have been making. I have been making the very point that extended jurisdiction is a very high priority, and we are pursuing this objective. As for continued conversations, it is obvious that even when we did declare, unilaterally, a 12-mile limit we immediately entered into discussions with the countries involved. What we are now doing is holding some bilateral consultations and we shall increase the level of these consultations with the countries involved in the North Atlantic, mainly, in anticipation of the extended jurisdiction. I consider this to be a very progressive step.

SUGGESTED UNILATERAL JURISDICTION OVER MARINE RESOURCES TO 200 MILES OFFSHORE—EFFECT ON EFFORTS TO CONSERVE FISH STOCKS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Bearing in mind that the government has pursued this matter by negotiation both at the conference which was held at Caracas last year and subsequently at the conference in Geneva this year, and that presumably it plans to continue doing so in New York next year, may I now ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he does not consider it is time to assert our position on this issue in a unilateral way thus enabling the people of Canada to exercise jurisdictional authority for 200 miles off our coast so that we shall be able to deal with this matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is the last part of the question which shows the weakness of the hon. member's position, namely, his assumption that we shall be able to deal with the problem. It is not clear to me and it is not clear to the government that a simple declaration of unilateral action will, in fact, deal with the problem in the way which is expected. I believe that a candid exploration of the situation with fishermen and with Canadian citizens generally would help to disclose some of the risks attendant upon unilateral action. The hon. member might wish to consider this aspect. However, we have consistently stated that one of the options before the Government of Canada was unilateral action. I can tell the hon. member that if I recommend such a course to my colleagues I would want to be certain that taking that course would bring substantial benefit within a reasonable period to the east coast fishery of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister not agree that if the Government of Canada took the legal position that we have jurisdictional authority extending for 200 miles off the coast, the Minister of State (Fisheries) would be in a much stronger legal position to specify the amount of fishing that is to be done off our coast so that we could conserve our stocks of fish and be in a position to restore our seriously deteriorating fishing industry.

● (1430)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must obviously recognize that the current international law is not as he states it to be. The purpose of the negotiations is to change the international law in order to give the coastal states jurisdiction which is not enjoyed by the coastal states at the present time. What the hon. member is saying to me is that we should take the law into our own hands, and at some point it may be necessary to do that. But if it is necessary to do that, I want to be sure that it will bring substantial benefits to Canada and to Canadian fishermen and will not merely lead to simple rhetoric on the day of the announcement.

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF CONDUCTING GEOTHERMIC RESEARCH AT ABANDONED MINE OF NORMETAL

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In the report prepared by the task force on energy research and development recently tabled by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources one reads that the heat within the earth is another source of energy which may offer development possibilities, and that research should be done in such areas of Canada as would lend themselves to it. The minister doubtless is aware of the closing, last April, of the Normetal mine in Abitibi, and that the main shaft of that mine exceeds a depth of 8,000 feet. Would the minister point out that fact to the task force on energy development? It might consider that mine most important and easily accessible for research.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, to answer as detailed a question as that one, I shall have to look into the matter, after which I shall report to the hon. member.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED ADOPTION BY HOUSE OF RESOLUTION UNILATERALLY DECLARING JURISDICTION OVER MARINE RESOURCES TO 200 MILES OFFSHORE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that posed by the Leader of the Opposition to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Congress of the United States has before it legislation that will unilaterally declare a 200 mile limit for that country to protect its fishing industry, and in view of the fact that there is the impression abroad that Canada does not have the resolve or determination to take similar action, is the minister prepared, as one of the representatives of an east coast constituency and who presumably understands the question better than his predecessor, to place before the House a resolution by which the Parliament of Canada can show the world that the people of Canada are resolved to protect the interests of its fishing industry, which would provide the minister with the necessary muscle to put that option into effect?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no, because one of his colleagues tried that approach a few weeks ago and the proposition was turned down flatly by the House of Commons, not by the United States Congress.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is precisely because the House rejected the resolution that we put forward, based on technical arguments advanced by the minister, that I am asking the minister, and through him the government, and especially the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, whether the government would be prepared to lay on the order paper of the House of Commons a resolution by which the Parliament of Canada could express its concern over the depletion of our vital resources off the east coast as a consequence of over-fishing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSING

REQUEST BY TORONTO LIMITED DIVIDEND TENANTS ASSOCIATION FOR RENT REVIEW PROCESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Following representations by the Toronto Limited Dividend Tenants Association, is the minister now prepared to ensure input from the tenants into the rent review process between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the landlord?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the position to make a definitive statement but I have reached a decision with my officials today—

Mr. Nowlan: Hellyer wrote that five years ago.

Mr. Danson: —that there be a rent review process established for assisted housing under the limited dividend program, the details of which I am working out with the corporation, the landlords and the tenants association themselves. So that we will be having a rent review process in force shortly.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION IN VIEW OF ALLEGED MEMORANDUM INDICATING IMMINENT SHORTAGE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding press reports of an internal memorandum from the National Energy Board supply panel indicating that the government has known for the past six months that we would face a natural gas shortage in the 1970s. What action has the minister taken in light of this information; and in particular, did he initiate any discussions with American authorities regarding the possibility of a phase out of gas exports, and did he have any discussions with the provincial governments regarding what measures could be taken to restrain consumer demand in this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the document to which the hon. member refers was an internal memorandum prepared within the Energy Board, in effect summarizing the oral hearings and evidence which had been taken in the hearings that were conducted last fall on the question of gas supply, and that it was preparatory to the board's writing its final report which was tabled last week. I did not see the document in question, and since it was an internal communication within the board it would be subject to the final judgment of the board which was rendered in the board's report, the copy of which I tabled.

NATURAL GAS—EFFECT OF HIGHER PRICES ON SUPPLY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is surprising that a report as important as that was not conveyed to the minister. Since the recent National Energy Board report was prepared before the increase in the price of gas was announced, has the minister's department or the National Energy Board made an estimate of what effect a higher price will have on additional supplies; and because shallow wells may now become economically viable, whether or not this will have any effect on the date at which Canada will face an acute shortage of natural gas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe at this time it would be difficult to make anything in the nature of a reliable estimate about the amount of additional work which will be carried out. It is the government's belief that in general terms both the combination of an increase in price and a net back to the producers and also the adjustment of the taxation regime have created a favourable climate for further supplies in Canada. As to whether this is brought about will depend, of course, on the actual facts as they occur.

NATURAL GAS—REASON FOR FAILURE OF ENERGY BOARD TO ESTIMATE RESERVES IN MACKENZIE DELTA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister why the National Energy Board, in its recent report, gave its own estimate of proven gas reserves in southern areas along with the estimate of the oil and gas industry, while in the matter of proven reserves in the Arctic it gave only the estimates of the oil industry? May I ask the minister whether the National Energy Board or his department has made an estimate of the gas reserves in the Mackenzie valley delta, and, if so, would the minister undertake to secure those estimates and to make them available to the House?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the board has consistently followed the policy of not establishing estimates for gas fields which are not yet accessible for use within Canada. In particular, it will not regard as reserves that which has not yet been connected up and could be used by consumers. Of course, the board report specifically says that.

At such time as the application for construction of the Mackenzie valley pipeline proceeds, this will be one of the principal questions upon which the board will have to take evidence and then arrive at its own judgment. The board, I take it, followed a practice which seems to me quite sensible, namely that it should not make up its mind as to what the reserves are prior to having heard all the facts on the question.

SUGGESTION THAT MINISTERS BE PRESENT AT NATIONAL CONFERENCES RELATED TO THE ATLANTIC FISHERY

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, since in answer to a former question we have been advised that the House shall not be given an opportunity to debate the problem of the Atlantic fishery I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he and his Cabinet members would agree that there should be a ministerial presence at all times at the national conference which will relate to the Atlantic fishery so that those countries negotiating in respect of that fishery will understand the importance the government of Canada places on this question and the matter of protection.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will note the hon. member's representation.

Oral Questions

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

EFFECT OF CUTBACK IN SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS PROGRAM IN ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED AREAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. Notwithstanding the fact that there are 200 odd fishing vessels off Nova Scotia and the Bay of Fundy, and the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs obviously has some difficulty about a unilateral declaration of a 200-mile limit, could the Prime Minister please tell the House and the country if the question of regional disparity is still one of his prerogatives since he was reported as saying, according to a transcript from his own office:

It's going to hurt Canadians in various parts of the country in the sense that they won't have the benefits to grow as fast as they have been growing in the past.

He was referring to cutbacks. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the cutback that has been announced of $10 million of the small craft harbours program is to be added to the difficult problem of the 200-mile limit which obviously affects those people in areas of regional economic disparity. Has the government changed its prerogative?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure to which prerogative the member is referring so I will have to say we have not changed it. But on the 200-mile limit to which the hon. member makes reference, I should like to give an answer which I think will appeal to the sense of fairness of the House and of all Canadians. Perhaps I should acknowledge the leader of the New Democratic Party, whose sense of fairness is not very well recognized.

Mr. Hees: Here comes that boiling point.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not really need that help. I can wait for a moment. I wanted to refer to the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the leader of the New Democratic Party on the 200-mile limit. I just want to remind the House that half a dozen European nations and others have exercised historic rights over what has been known for many hundreds of years as the high seas and a unilateral declaration of law as we see it would withdraw from these nations rights which they have been exercising, I repeat, for hundreds of years. That is the reason, when it comes to the matter of changing an international law, we find it better to get agreement. We think this is the way the laws between nations should be made. I think this is an argument the opposition should keep in mind.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate in part the Prime Minister's response. My question was rather convoluted but no more convoluted than some of the answers from the Secretary of State for External Affairs about this very confusing situation. My point is, admitting the international difficulties—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a supplementary question perhaps he would put it.

Mr. Nowlan: I am certainly going to put it, Mr. Speaker. Even though there might be some irritation on the other side that we are sitting here on July 22 I intend to stand here until I put the question, so if members opposite will shut up I will put the question. I fully appreciate some of the answers of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and/or the Prime Minister's response, but my question to the Prime Minister is this: Because we have only had two main programs since 1968, bilingualism and regional disparity, I would ask the Prime Minister for a moment to forget about the 200-mile limit and explain why he is hitting at the small craft harbour areas of Canada on the east coast and the west coast which are areas of economic disparity.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, you may say "order" but I am going to say "order" too.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With the greatest respect to the hon. member I should say that, because of the importance of the subject, I have recognized almost exclusively questions about the east coast. I allowed a good deal of leeway on that subject. However, I suggest that rather than asking a question the hon. member is making a representation.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is I am asking the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I am trying to help the government. I am admitting that there may be some problems in declaring unilaterally a 200-mile limit and, therefore, I ask the Prime Minister why he does not revise the restraints in respect of the $10 million cut with regard to the small craft harbour areas of Canada on the east and west coast which areas are regionally depressed economically and are within the power of the federal government to help.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have explained that what the government has done in its restraint program has been to restrain the rate of growth of various programs.

Mr. Nowlan: They are not growing. They are dying.

Mr. Trudeau: We are not cutting the programs below zero. What we are saying is that the rate of growth of the various programs which make up our budget will be slowed down. I think in this we are joining the opposition and other people in a desire to restrain government spending. We are trying to do this in every possible area. This should not convey the impression that we are cutting out programs. We are modifying the rate of growth.

HOUSING

LIMITED DIVIDEND PROJECTS—POSSIBILITY OF REVIEWING FIFTEEN YEAR MORTGAGE TERM

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Trinity and is also addressed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is the minister prepared to review the minimum 15-year mortgage term for limited dividend projects in order to end the possibility of owners of these buildings receiving subsidized speculation by refinancing the mortgages after 15 years thereby freeing them of the obligation to provide low cost housing?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not been giving that immediate consideration. The objective now is to see many of the limited dividend houses built and to make certain that the tenants living in them in the 15-year period when there is a limited rental agreement are satisfied that the rentals are fair and encourage the building of more rental accommodation. I believe the hon. member realizes that after the 15-year period the landlord then has the obligation to refinance. The financing no longer applies in that case, but if the government financing continues beyond the 15 years then of course our rental agreement will still remain in force.

GRAIN

ALLEGED FLUCTUATION OF PRICES CAUSED BY TRADING ON WINNIPEG AND CHICAGO COMMODITY EXCHANGES—POSSIBILITY OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the charges by the presidents of the three prairie wheat pools that in spite of the fact that there has been no basic change in the world demand supply picture for grains there are excessive grain price fluctuations being caused by trading on the Winnipeg and Chicago commodity exchanges, I should like to ask the minister whether, in view of those charges, he and his officials or the Canadian Wheat Board have made any investigation into this and whether or not there indeed have been excessive fluctuations as charged by these three presidents?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, so far as the Winnipeg grain exchange is concerned, my colleague the Minister of Agriculture just recently announced the appointment of a supervisor at that exchange so that inquiry certainly can be put to him. Of course, as the Canadian grain exported is not exported in effect through the medium of that exchange to any large extent it is therefore totally under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board. I would, of course, have no knowledge about the way in which the Chicago exchange is operating.

PROPOSAL THAT ALL GRAIN BE MARKETED THROUGH WHEAT BOARD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I direct a supplementary question to the minister in order to put an end to the nonsense that goes on in commodity exchanges? Would he now accede to the unanimous request which has been made for many years by the three prairie pools and NFU, and now most recently repeated by Mr. Sneath, President of the Manitoba wheat pool in which he demands that all grains be marketed through the Canadian Wheat Board rather than through any exchanges?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The decision as to whether or not grain is marketed using the exchange is one that is taken by the people handling the grain, and indeed those same gentlemen from the pools in their operations frequently use the exchange in the marketing of their product, so I find the statement slightly strange. The fact of the matter is that we attempted a year ago and two years ago to solve another problem, that is that there be a fair pricing arrangement in relation to grains throughout the country, and we adopted an open policy giving farmers throughout the country access to grain held by other farmers. That is now possible. If the exchange is used, it is a choice by the buyers, sellers, or their agents.

NAMES OF PROVINCES OPPOSED TO EXCISE TAX ON GASOLINE—POSSIBILITY OF ABANDONING BILL C-66

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Is the minister in a position to tell us which provinces have officially objected to the special excise tax on gasoline?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I shall have to look up the premiers' statements to give the hon. member a specific answer.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Since Bill C-66 has come to a deadlock, would the minister tell us whether he intends to abandon this bill or move closure pursuant to Standing Order 75?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I believe the proposal put forward by the hon. member is somewhat academic.

POSSIBLE RENEWAL OF MANDATE OF UNITED NATIONS EMERGENCY FORCE IN SINAI—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Since Egypt announced more than one week ago its refusal to consent to the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations emergency force in the Sinai, has the minister discussed with other governments concerned, particularly with the Secretary General of the UN, at their meeting last Friday, the future of this emergency force, and does he not see there an opportunity to show initiative?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In reply to the question of the hon. member, may I say that the subject was discussed with the Secretary General last Friday. It is my expectation that following the determination of the Security Council, it may be that a renewed mandate will be possible for the force in the Middle East. At least, that was the atmosphere which prevailed in New York on Friday.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Inasmuch as the hon. member for Leeds is now at home recovering from his recent cardiac attack and the hon. member's physician has recommended swimming as part of his rehabilitation, and inasmuch as no man can live on "43s" alone, would the right hon. gentleman consider letting the hon. member for Leeds use the pool at 24 Sussex Drive to aid his rehabilitation and hasten his return to the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will even let him use some of the sundries, the cost of which he has been seeking to know.

PENITENTIARIES

SPRINGHILL—POSSIBILITY OF ENLARGING EXISTING INSTITUTION OR ESTABLISHING NEW ONE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, further to questions that were posed by my leader to the Prime Minister yesterday regarding the devastation that has just about obliterated the business district in the town of Springhill, I would like to ask a specific question of the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that when the 1958 disaster occurred in Springhill the federal government stepped in and gave stability and viability to the economy of Springhill through the establishment of a penal institution there—two of them, as a matter of fact—could the Solicitor General indicate if he could reorientate his thinking and that of his department to try to enlarge the medium security penal institution there and employ more people or establish a minimum security institution there so as to give the business community some incentive to reestablish the businesses that were destroyed by the fire.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion discussed this with me yesterday. I told him that under the new program of construction in the pentitentiary service we are moving to smaller institutions, so it is not likely that we would increase the size of the present institution in Springhill. But I told him we would look at the possibility of locating one of the newer, smaller institutions there, and the officials are looking at that possibility.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF REGULATIONS ON THOSE TAKING COURSES TO IMPROVE QUALIFICATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister in charge of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In view of the fact that many persons who try to better themselves by taking courses find their UIC claim terminated due to the "four week nil pay" regulations, will the minister look into the possibility of correcting this discrepancy in the act which penalizes those who are honestly seeking to improve their qualifications for a job?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of the relationship of training and improvement to the ability to find jobs, or better jobs, is part of the review we are undertaking in connection with the act and part of our manpower policy.

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR NO FURTHER DELAY IN PICKERING PROJECT IN ORDER TO EASE NOISE PROBLEMS AT MALTON

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Considering the fact that the residents of northwest metro Toronto, involving half a dozen federal constituencies, have waited since 1968 for relief from the ever increasing airport noise problems, and those same residents tolerated a further two year delay in the airport inquiry confirming the need for Pickering, can the minister assure the people in the Malton area that he will not allow the government of Ontario to cause any further unnecessary delays—

An hon. Member: Where are you from?

Mr. Fleming: I represent my constituents and I would appreciate it if the opposition would allow me a chance to speak on their behalf.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: Can I have the assurance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fleming: You see the opportunity which they give to other parts of Canada. Can I assure my constituents that the federal government will not allow the government of Ontario to cause any further unnecessary delay but will force immediate and frank talks about the facts at Malton and Pickering?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that the people from the Malton area have been promised that there would be no extension of runways in Malton. As long as I am Minister of Transport there will be no such extension. However, that does not mean there will be no extension in facilities, but so far as runways are concerned, no more runways will be added.

PICKERING AND MIRABEL—POSSIBILITY OF MORATORIUM UNTIL ACCESS ROAD PROBLEMS ARE SOLVED

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I say that in the second question put by the hon. member for Central Nova I thought he was only referring to Pickering. He later told me in an exchange of notes that he was referring to Pickering and to Mirabel. My answer would have been that there is a moratorium until I meet with Mr. Rhodes, and that is only on Pickering.

POSSIBILITY OF EXTENDING BORDER BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES UP TO 200 MILES OFF WEST COAST

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the west has been recognized because Canada has a west coast as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): My question is supplementary to the series initiated by the Leader of the Opposition and it is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister made any proposals to U.S. authorities relating to the manner in which the boundaries will eventually have to be extended between Canada and the United States up to the 200 mile limit or to the edge of the continental shelf, whichever might be the case, on the east coast and on the west coast? May I just remind the minister that there are two boundaries on the west coast, one in the north and one in the south.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the question as notice.

FISHERIES

EXTENSION OF CANADIAN JURISDICTION TO 200 MILES OFF WEST COAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of State (Fisheries).

I would like to know whether the minister ensured that the conclusions drawn from research made on migration and on the spawning grounds of commercial fish by his department will be fully taken into account when defining the frontiers between the Canadian and American fishing zones, when extending both jurisdictions to 200 nautical miles, and in particular whether the Juan de Fuca Canyon and the bank named La Pérouse, on the west coast, will be under Canadian jurisdiction.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear the hon. member's question, all the more so because when discussing jurisdiction we must not forget there are two oceans, namely the Pacific and the Atlantic. Any oversimplified solution such as "unilateral declaration", which is proposed for demagogical reasons or any other, must take into account the grave implications on salmon which does not recognize jurisdictions be they over 200 miles or elsewhere.

As for the specific question of the hon. member concerning the procedures for the extension of the zones lying between us and the Americans, it goes without saying that this must be considered through bilateral negotiations which are already intricate enough with respect to salmon interception. But I trust that with a friendly country like the United States it will be easy to come to an agreement.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On Friday last I gave notice that I intended to raise a point of order relating to the answers I had been receiving with regard to the policy of the government on nuclear reactors. I deferred pursuing the point until the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) was back in the House, since he is involved in this question along with the government House leader. On June 27 I questioned the government House leader about the contract with Argentina and I said:

Is it the position of the government that the contract for the Cordoba nuclear generating plant—

That is the Argentinian plant.

—made provision for subsequent negotiation of safeguards—

In reply, the government House leader said:

—the answer to the first part of the question is yes, the contract is subject to a bilateral agreement on safeguards.

Later, on the same day, the same minister said the following:

I am informed there is no doubt about the fact that the fulfilment of the contract itself depends upon a bilateral agreement on adequate safeguards.

In the House, some days later, on July 16, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was asked:

Was there any provision in that contract negotiated with Argentina in 1973 requiring subsequent negotiation of safeguards, other than the agreement to be negotiated with IAEA—

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources replied:

No, sir, that contract was just according to the then general safeguard policy of Canada, namely, the international standard ... the additional standards for the completion of the Argentine contract have been, if you like, unilaterally imposed by Canada at a subsequent date.

Indicating that the answer given to me earlier by the government House leader in his capacity as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs was clearly misleading. Then the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was asked on July 16, the same day, the following:

—what safeguards the Canadian government is now seeking in respect of this Argentina project?

Safeguards which were not in the original contract. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said:

At that time—

In 1973.

—the international standards did not provide for restriction on explosions expressed to be for peaceful rather than weapons purposes. Canada decided as a matter of principle, subsequent to the Indian explosion, to put on a higher level of standards which were set out in the statement I made—

Indicating that the additional safeguard being negotiated with Argentina now is the prohibition of the use of any Canadian facility or reactor or materials provided to Argentina and the restriction that these could not be used by Argentina or by any other country even for peaceful explosions. But I find that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) tabled an exchange of letters which together constitute the contract between Canada and Argentina on September 10, 1974, which reads in part as follows:

In view of Canada's obligations under the Non-Proliferation Treaty, it is Canadian export policy that all material, nuclear material, equipment, facilities and technology supplied from or by Canada will be used only for peaceful purposes and will not in particular be used for the development or manufacture of any nuclear explosive device.

It seems as if this exchange of letters which constituted a supplementary contract back in September of 1974 had already covered the point which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources told us was the sole additional safeguard which Canada is now trying to negotiate with Argentina.

With regard to this Italian business, on July 9 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated to me in the House, in response to a question, that Canada was retaining a right of veto on any sale which might be made anywhere in the world by the Italian licensee. The minister found he made a mistake and he quickly corrected that. The next day, in response to a question in the House, he told me that any sale made by that Italian licensee would be subject to the Canadian standard of safeguards. That is what the minister said in the House.

Yesterday, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether that was a correct statement which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had made and he said he did not know, that he would have to verify it. I think there is enough confusion in the nuclear policy of the government already, fundamentally and intrinsically, without more being created by these misleading and evasive answers we have been receiving on this subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the statements as set out by me with regard to the safeguards policy are entirely correct. They are not at all misleading. I suggest that if there has been any misleading attempted here, it has been by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —who was trying to juggle answers and dates in such a way as to pretend that what happened before happened afterwards in that respect. I would point out that as the government House leader, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) acting as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, said, there was a bilateral agreement entered into between the IAEA and Argentina and this was stipulated for by the contract, which is exactly what the hon. gentleman had said and I hope the Leader of the Opposition will not try to distort the record by pretending it is anything else.

With respect to the Italian contract, I indicated in the first place that, as I had said on December 20, 1974, of course Atomic Energy of Canada had been authorized to enter into negotiations with the Italian company, that those negotiations are approaching completion, that the company, Atomic Energy, is required to come back to the government with a draft of the proposed agreement to obtain our approval, but that in any event, as stipulated by the safeguards statement on December 20 of last year, any such contract between AECL and the Italian company will be subject to the Canadian safeguard requirements.

In particular, there will be the treaty between the government of Italy and the government of Canada stipulating the limitations imposed upon any Italian company operating within Italy, and also stipulating that in the event of a sale by the Italian company of the Canadian technology to any other country, Italy will be required to get a safeguards agreement of the same standards, including international inspection, as we as Canadians require of the Italians. In other words, for the Italians to be able to licence technology to anyone else, they will have to secure from the buyer exactly the same standards as we secure from them.

In summary, we set up in quite succinct terms the limitations that we as Canadians are going to impose upon the sale of uranium, upon the sale of equipment, including the CANDU reactor, and upon Canadian technology whether or not accompanied by equipment to other states either for their own use or for resale. The restriction is that whether it be for explosive purposes, whether stated by that country, for peaceful purposes or indeed for non-peaceful purposes, the Canadian equipment, technology and uranium may not be used for that purpose. For this purpose we will seek country to country treaties of the kind tabled by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to protect this requirement.

A final statement I would make with regard to the Argentine contract is that discussions are proceeding. They are related to further safeguards with respect to reprocessing of the spent fuel from a CANDU reactor within Argentina or the transfer of either spent fuel or technology outside of Argentina to any other country. The completion of that particular requirement of the government of Canada will be precedent to the further performance of Canada under this contract: that negotiations now under way to their successful completion to our satisfaction remains, in our view, a prime condition of our performance, and that nuclear transfers will not go through unless those Canadian standards are met.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has raised, of course, a question of debate as to differences and discrepancies in points of view. It is really a non-point of order, and it has been contributed to equally by both sides. I think we should now move on to something else.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order in the interests of the fishing industry which is now in a state of crisis. The Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) inadvertently, I am sure, misled the House when replying to a question—based upon lack of knowledge of the facts—when he referred to fish having to be dumped overboard at the present time because fish processing plants were unable to receive them.

If the minister knew what he was talking about, he would know that this particular phenomenon happens every year. It refers to the trap fishery, which is of very short duration—just a few months—and occurs at a time when the fleet moves close to the shore. It has nothing to do with the decline in fish stocks. We are faced with the paradox that at a time when the fishery resources are declining because of overfishing by foreign fleets, we see thousands of pounds of fish from trap fisheries dumped overboard because of the failure of the minister and his predecessors to provide proper, refrigerated holding units.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, if I misled the House, it was not intentional. It had been reported to me by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) that the plants in his area were not able to handle some of the fish being landed, which were quite plentiful. I would point out to the hon. member that if members of his own party, in this case the government of Newfoundland, had spent as much energy working for the development of holding facilities as all Atlantic provinces should have, we would be in a much better position to handle fish for food instead of fish for meal. I think he should relay that message to Premier Moores, if he has reached Newfoundland after his visit to Ottawa yesterday.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding a question I asked yesterday in the House. The minister said it was a very serious question and he wanted to discuss it with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet. In the morning I telephoned the minister's office and gave him notice. At nine o'clock in the morning I telephoned the offices of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) to make sure we would get some answers, because we were led to believe that matters of national security were at stake and also some very serious unfair labour practices.

I think this House has a right to know when we are going to get an answer. We got the same answer today: they have not had a chance to check into it. What does a private member have to do to get an answer? You cannot be more fair than giving notice ahead of time. The minister is still saying he has not had time to check, however. Three men have been fired and branded as security risks, and the minister is taking it lightly.

Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed by the Chair that I will be on the "late show" tonight. I hope the minister will have a better answer, or I will have to take up more time of the House. This is a serious matter and we are not getting answers.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane) moved that the first report of the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region, presented to the House on Friday, July 18, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,853, 2,249, 2,341, 2,434, 2,545, 2,586, 2,690, 2,691, 2,768, 2,786, 2,830, 2,837, 2,848, 2,849, 2,850, 2,874, 2,879 and 2,907.

Mr. Speaker, if question No. 2,409 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred questions Nos. 2,395 and 2,910?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

RURAL AND NATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM

Question No. 1,853—Mr. Marshall:

1. Since the inception of the Rural and Native Housing Programme (a) what has been the total budget (b) how much was spent for new construction in each province under the (i) rural component (ii) native component?

2. (a) How much has been allocated for the Programme in the 1975 budget (b) how much to each province?

3. What amount was expended in each province in 1974-75 under the residential rehabilitation aspect of the Programme?

4. What amount has been allocated to Newfoundland during the current fiscal year for the residential rehabilitation component of the Programme?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. (a) In 1974, the allocation for Rural and Native Housing in the Capital Budget of CMHC was $62.3 million. (b) See Table 1 following. Data are not available to enable a differentiation to be made between the Rural and the Native component.

2. (a) CMHC, for 1975, initially allocated $49.2 million for loans and $8.9 million for grants for the Rural and Native Housing Program. (b) Funds for programs under the National Housing Act are also allocated provincially, for the purposes of internal guidance and control subject, in certain cases, to formal agreements with provincial agencies. Such allocations are not published, since fluctuations in activity arising from changing demands for funds, among programs and provinces, requires that they be flexible.

3. See Table 2 following for loans approved in total for Residential Rehabilitation. Note: The fiscal year of CMHC is the calendar year.

4. See 2(b) above.

DEFENCE CONSTRUCTION (1951) LTD.—POSSIBLE TRANSFER TO D.P.W.

Question No. 2,249—Mr. Herbert:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,356, for what reason is the Department of Public Works unable to provide a quick response capability?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): The decision respecting the location, organizationally, of Defence Construction (1951) Ltd. was based on the judgement that a quick response capability was required within the Department of National Defence. The decision did not imply that the Department of Public Works was unable to provide a quick response capability, but reflected a considered judgment at the time that the objectives of the Department of National Defence would be more effectively met through organizational integration.

FRENCH CIVILIANS IN CANADA

Question No. 2,341—Mr. Schumacher:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,273, for what reason (a) is information not available on the exact number of military-age French civilians making application to come to Canada rather than complete compulsory two-year military service in France (b) are statistics not available for the Province of Quebec (c) is information not available on the number of applications (i) pending (ii) refused?

2. With reference to the answer to (a) Part 3(a) which states "Nine of the 37 are employed by the Government" and the listing shows 10, what is the correct number and where is each employed (b) Part 2 which states 10 were resident in the Province of New Brunswick, yet the breakdown shows 9, what is the correct number and where are they located (c) Part 2 which states that 22 are resident in the Province of Ontario, yet the breakdown shows 23, what is the correct number and where are they employed?

3. By department, what is the cost for (a) salaries (b) allowances (c) unemployment insurance (d) travelling expenses in respect of French civilians employed by the government under the France-Canada agreement since the inception of the plan to date?

4. Since the inception of the France-Canada agreement, how many French civilians in Canada have drawn or are drawing unemployment insurance benefits and, in each case (a) where are they located (b) what is the period of unemployment?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of External Affairs is concerned: 1. (a) Information is not available because applications from French civilians to participate in this programme are not made to the Canadian Government. Would-be employers contact the appropriate French agency which in turn submits a list of civilians with the necessary qualifications and who wish to come to Canada. (There are approximately 100 participating countries.) (b) The answer to Question 1,273 was submitted on the basis of information provided by the Embassy in France. It is understood that about 50 French civilians will arrive in Quebec in 1975.

2. (a) The correct answer is nine. The Economic Council of Canada (one civilian) was listed twice in error. (b) There are 10 civilians in New Brunswick as listed in the answer to Question 1,273: 3a: 1; 3b: 5; 4a: 2; 4c: 2; for a total of 10. (c) The exact number is 22 (for the same reason as indicated in 2(a) above).

In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: 3. (a) Salaries, $171,901.; (b) Allowances, $41,248.; (c) Unemployment Insurance, nil; (d) Travelling Expenses, $22,200.

In so far as other departments are concerned: 3. (a to d) The information is not available.

In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 4. The Commission does not maintain such statistics.

*LEGAL AID RETAINED IN CONSTITUENCY OF SIMCOE NORTH

Question No. 2,395—Mr. Rynard:

For each year 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974, what amount was paid to members of the legal profession in the Constituency of Simcoe North by the (a) Department of Justice (b) Department of National Health and Welfare (i) Health Protection Programme (ii) Food and Drug Programme (c) Veterans Land Act Administration (d) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (e) Solicitor General and, in each case, what was the name and address of the lawyer?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): This answer is in the form of a series of columns. I wonder if it would be permissible to append it as if it had been read?

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The above answer follows.]

Mr. Reid: I am informed by the Department of Justice and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1971, 1972, 1973, 1974, (a) None; (b), (c), (d) and (e), see list following:

W. Griffith Bingham—Orillia
Norman L. Booth—Orillia

Legal fees in connection with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation direct loans are paid by the borrowers, and CMHC, therefore, has no record of the amounts paid to these lawyers.

The following lawyers were retained to handle legal actions from 1971 to 1974 for loans approved in the Eastern part of Simcoe County.

1971—1974 D. J. Sugg, Barrie

Where actions are settled prior to trial, the costs are paid by the borrower and CMHC has no records of the amounts.

The basic geographical units for the compilation of CMHC data are the municipality and county, and not Federal electoral constituencies. The date are governed by individual loans approved under the various sections of the National Housing Act, and not by the places of business of those who provide professional services.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—BILGE CLEANERS

Question No. 2,434—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the wording of all directives that have been issued by the customer departments or by the Department of Supply and Services in respect of the use of non-toxic or low-level-toxicity bilge cleaners in ships operated by the government?

2. Is there any policy governing the use of non-flammable or low-level-flammability bilge cleaners in ships operated by the government and, if so, what is it?

3. Does the government have any directives, orders or regulations that would have the effect of requiring foreign and Canadian ships operating in Canadian territorial waters to use only low-level or non-toxic bilge cleaners and, if so, what is the policy and what is the date of its promulgation?

4. What is the present availability to commercial vessels of pump-out and/or containment facilities on-shore in the various harbours administered by the government for the containment or holding of bilge waste?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): In so far as the ministry of Transport is concerned: 1. No written directives on the use of bilge cleaners have been issued to Canadian Coast Guard ships other than by memoranda saying that the amount to be used should be limited to the minimum and bilges should normally be cleaned with hot water and high pressure steam.

2. The policy is to consider the use of bilge cleaners as coming under the "Steamship Machinery Construction Regulations" which regulate the quantity and manner of stowage of fuel onboard ships.

3. There are no regulations that specifically refer to toxic bilge cleaners. However, should a cleaner contain a toxic substance which is included in the list of substances in the "Pollutant Substances Regulations", its discharge into the water would be prohibited. The date of proclamation of the "Pollutant Substances Regulations" was February 27, 1973, and notice of this appeared in the Canada Gazette Part II, Volume 107, No. 5.

4. None at the present time, however, an interdepartmental committee has been formed to study the possibilities of installing containment facilities at several ports.

In so far as the Department of the Environment is concerned: 1. The Department has no specific directives at present which deal with the levels of toxicity acceptable in bilge cleaners. However, analyses of selected substances including bilge cleaners are carried out to establish toxicity levels, and recommendations and guidelines based on these analyses and other relevant data are developed.

2, 3 and 4. To be answered elsewhere.

In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned: 1. There are no directives in D.P.W. for non-toxic or low-level-toxicity bilge cleaners.

2. There is no policy, but when required, the practice is to purchase non-flammable or low-level flammability bilge cleaners.

3. D.P.W. has no jurisdiction over vessels not owned by the department.

4. D.P.W. does not administer harbours for pumpout facilities.

In so far as other departments are concerned: 1, 2, 3 and 4. Not applicable.

[Mr. Reid.]

STATISTICS ON INCOME LEVELS

Question No. 2,545—Mr. Stevens:

1. Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare, when speaking in Toronto on April 18, 1975, state "We can all read that the bottom 20 per cent of Canadian families receive less than 6 per cent of family income whereas the highest one-fifth receive 39 per cent" and, if so (a) where were such figures obtained (b) what year do they cover (c) can they be reconciled to Tables B and F of the Department of National Revenue's preliminary taxation statistics for 1973 and, if so, in what way?

2. What is the breakdown of the bottom 20% figures with respect to (a) occupation (b) marital status and what portion of such families have (i) one (ii) two (iii) three (iv) four members and over?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. Yes. (a) The figures were obtained from Statistics Canada Publication "Income Distribution by Size in Canada 1972." Catalogue 13-207 Annual, Table 53, page 79. (b) 1972. (c) The statistics cannot be reconciled with National Revenue's statistics. Taxation statistics show the incomes of separate tax filers. The Statistic Canada figures refers to family incomes. that is, the total income of all family members. In 1973, approximately two-thirds of families had two or more family members in receipt of income.

2. (a) There is no information available on the occupations of family heads in the bottom 20 per cent, but only on the employment status. The employment status of heads of families in the lowest 20 per cent was: Employee, 27.7 per cent. Employer or Own Account Worker, 19.9 per cent. Not in the Labour Force, 52.4 per cent. (b) Information is not available on the marital status of the family head, but data are available on the composition of these families. Some 73.3 per cent of these families were headed by married couples. The remaining 26.7 per cent of families were of other types. The majority of these would be families headed by women who would probably be widowed, divorced, or separated. The size of families was as follows: Two persons, 51.0 per cent; Three persons, 18.4 per cent; Four persons, 13.6 per cent; Five or more persons, 17.0 per cent.

TOTAL COST OF 1976 OLYMPIC GAMES

Question No. 2,586—Mr. Wenman:

1. What is the latest estimate of the total cost of the 1976 Olympic Games?

2. Of the total cost, how much will come directly or indirectly from the government?

3. What is the total federal budget for direct financial assistance to Canada's Olympic athletes?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the President of Treasury Board as follows: 1. The federal government does not have access to all of the information necessary to allow a response to this question. This information should be obtained from the Organizing Committee (C.O.J.O.).

2. The total federal involvement in the staging of the 1976 Olympic Games is currently estimated at approximately $130 millions.

3. The current projection by the Department of National Health and Welfare of direct financial assistance to Canada's Olympic athletes in 1975-76 is $650,000.

RATE INCREASES ON ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND RAIL RATE INCREASES FROM ATLANTIC CANADA

Question No. 2,690—Mr. Forrestall:

1. How many times has the government raised rates on the St. Lawrence Seaway system since 1959?

2. How many times were rail rates from Atlantic Canada inland raised since 1959?

3. What is the policy for increases in rail rates, if any?

4. What is the policy for rate increases for water facilities such as the St. Lawrence Seaway?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: 1. There have been no increases in the Montreal-Lake Ontario Section of the Seaway. Tolls on the Welland Canal were suspended in 1962. A lockage fee, phased in over five years, was introduced on this canal in 1967.

The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 2. During the period January 1, 1959 to June 11, 1975 inclusive, rail rates from Atlantic Canada inland were raised as follows, under categories indicated: (a) Normal class and commodity rates, eight times. (b) Truck and water competitive rates 11 times. (c) Agreed Charges, six times.

3. The railways raised freight rates in relation to increased operating costs and statutory requirements providing that all freight rates must be compensatory for services provided.

4. In so far as the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is concerned, tolls are levied in accordance with an agreement with United States. The Authority and the Government of Canada have endorsed the policy that tolls should be sufficient to maintain and operate the Seaway while amortizing its debt with interest over a period of 50 years. This policy is presently under review.

SWIMMING POOL—PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

Question No. 2,691—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister at any time suggest or propose to anyone whatsoever that a swimming pool be built at public expense by the National Capital Commission at his official residence, 24 Sussex Drive?

2. Did the Prime Minister or anyone acting on his behalf ever discuss the subject of a pool with the Chairman or anyone connected with the National Capital Commission and, if so (a) on what date (b) what are the details of such discussions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Prime Minister's Office and the National Capital Commission as follows: 1. The question of construction of the pool at public expense was raised, but it was considered preferable to accept the offer of anonymous donors.

2. Yes. (a) November 13, 1975. (b) Discussion with the Prime Minister dealt with Commission's responsibility for exterior design of buildings constructed on federal property in the National Capital Region and with the landscaping of the official residence, 24 Sussex Drive.

GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 2,768—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

What total amounts in grants to municipalities in Saskatchewan for sewage and water installations were granted in (a) 1971-72 (b) 1973-74 (c) first six months of 1975?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: The total amounts of grants by DREE to municipalitis in Saskatchewan for sewage and water installations are as follows: (1) under the Agricultural Service Centres Agreement: calendar years 1971-72, $792.09; calendar years 1973-74, $1,293,030.60; first six months of 1975, $941,901.66. (2) in Meadow Lake Special Area: calendar years 1971-72, $28,196.93; calendar years 1973-74, $47,226.61; first six months of 1975, $17,708.80.

INVESTMENT OF CFDC FUNDS IN "SWEET MOVIE"

Question No. 2,786—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the Canadian Film Development Corporation invested funds in the film "Sweet Movie" and, if so (a) is such investment approximately $115,000 in public funds (b) what are the names and job designations of all persons involved in deciding that the Corporation should become involved in this matter?

2. Does this film contain approximately eight on-camera acts of vomiting, five of urination and four of defecation?

3. What are all the reasons that a decision was made to invest public funds in a film of this kind?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: 1. Yes. (a) The Corporation does not reveal the amount of its investments in individual productions. (b) The CFDC Board Members, as follows: Mrs. Doris Anderson, Mr. Jean-Guy Fredette, Mr. Gratien Gélinas, also Chairman of the CFDC, Mrs. Doris Shadbolt, Mr. David Silcox, Mr. Sydney Newman, ex officio member.

2. No, but it contains some such scenes.

3. The Corporation's agreement to invest was based on the project as a whole taking into consideration every element of the application, such as: (i) Reputation of the director, Dusan Makavejev, (ii) The Producers, (iii) Canadian Content, (iv) The Script.

NUMBER OF PERSONNEL HIRED TO IMPLEMENT BILLS C-2 AND C-60

Question No. 2,830—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. As of May 15, 1975, how many persons have been hired (a) by the Public Service Commission (b) under contract by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for duties relating primarily to the implementation and administration of (i) Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code (ii) Bill C-60, An Act respecting bankruptcy and insolvency?

2. In each case, what was the date of the original employment or commencement of contract?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. (a) (i) and (ii) Nil. (b) (i) and (ii) Nil. (i) C-2 Although no persons have been hired with the responsibility for the implementation and administration of Bill C-2, various officers have been involved in the preparation of implementation plans for the introduction of these provisions. In total, approximately one man-year has been devoted to the development of these plans. (ii) C-60 Although public servants and some outside experts hired under contract have worked on the development of the policies reflected in the proposed Bankruptcy Act, 1975 (Bill C-60), there have not been any persons hired by the Public Service Commission or under contract by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to carry out duties related primarily to the implementation and administration of that Bill.

2. Not applicable.

GRANT TO ASSOCIATION CANADIENNE DES ÉDUCATEURS DE LANGUE FRANÇAISE

Question No. 2,837—Mr. Reynolds:

Did the government grant $50,000 to the Association Canadienne des éducateurs de langue française for the printing of material and transportation costs in relation to their annual conference to be held in Chicoutimi, August 10 to 17, 1975 and, if so, for what reason is such material not available in the English language?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes: $30,000 to pay part of the travelling expenses for Francophone delegates from provinces other than Quebec, and $20,000 to cover part of the cost of organizing the project "Biennale de la francophonie canadienne" in Chicoutimi in August. The Association canadienne des éducateurs de langue française (ACELF) is a national organization aimed solely at French-speaking Canadians. All pertinent documentation is therefore printed in French only, unless the organization also wishes to address Anglophones. Texts and documents are then printed in both official languages.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Question No. 2,848—Mr. Forrestall:

How much money has the Food Prices Review Board saved for consumers resident in the Constituency of Dartmouth-Halifax East, if any?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Food Prices Review Board was established under the Inquiries Act to study the causes of food price increases and to make reports to the public on its findings. The F.P.R.B. has not been given authority by Parliament to lower food prices and thus to effect savings to consumers directly. However, in the course of its work, it has assisted consumers indirectly by recommending ways in which consumers could save money when purchasing food: it has also made recommendations to the Government and industry that have resulted in lower prices than would otherwise have occurred. For example, in its report "What Price Nutrition" the Board suggested how Canadian consumers could save up to one-third on their food expenses and at the same time improve their nutritional level.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMPETITIONS OPEN TO MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES

Question No. 2,849—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Can a member of the Canadian Armed Forces transferred with his family out of the Atlantic Region of Canada on a temporary or other basis, be permitted to apply for jobs within the Public Service in closed competitions that are offered in the Atlantic Provinces and, if so, under what circumstances?

2. Is it possible for such persons to apply for such jobs that are closed to residents of the Atlantic Provinces without being forced to resign from the Canadian Armed Forces?

3. Can a member of the Canadian Armed Forces once resigned, compete in closed competitions offered by the Public Service in Atlantic Canada and, if so, under what circumstances?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. Yes. For the purposes of being eligible to enter competitions, members of the Armed Forces are deemed to be employed in the Public Service. However, the Public Service Employment Act requires that, before a closed competition is conducted, the area of competition shall be determined in terms of the part, if any, of the Public Service and the occupational group and level of positions, if any, in which prospective candidates must be employed in order to be eligible for appointment. Therefore a member of the Armed Forces not stationed in the Atlantic Provinces would be eligible to enter closed competitions offered in the Atlantic Provinces, where the competitions have been advertised as open to all employees of the Public Service, employed within geographical limits set, either on a nation-wide basis or so as to include the area in which the member is serving.

2. Eligibility for appointment, in the case of closed competitions, is normally determined by the positions, or part of the Public Service, in which persons in the Public Service are employed, rather than by the area in which they reside. Therefore, a member of the Armed Forces must continue to retain his status as a serving member and be stationed within the geographical limits prescribed in the area of competition in order to be eligible to compete in a closed competition.

3. No. A serving member who resigns from the Canadian Armed Forces is ineligible to compete in any closed competition in the Public Service as of the date on which he ceases to be a member of the Armed Forces.

ASSISTANCE TO REGIONAL LIBRARIES

Question No. 2,850—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What level of assistance is presently available to libraries across Canada such as the Dartmouth Regional Library?

2. What changes are contemplated, if any?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Librarian as follows: 1. The National Library does not provide financial assistance to libraries.

2. Not applicable.

VETERANS HOSPITAL, VICTORIA, B.C.

Question No. 2,874—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. How many beds were there in the Veterans Hospital in Victoria, British Columbia on the day of the transfer of the Hospital to the Province of British Columbia (a) how many were occupied (b) for what type of care, i.e. convalescent, acute or extended?

2. Since that time, by month, how many veterans (a) occupied beds in the building at the beginning of each month and for what type of care (b) were admitted for treatment to the building and for what type of care (c) were occupying beds in the other Jubilee Hospital building and for what type of care (d) were admitted to the Jubilee Hospital building and for what type of care (e) were occupying beds in other hospitals in British Columbia under the "guaranteed beds" part of the federal-provincial agreement (i) for what type of care (ii) at which hospitals (f) were admitted for treatment to other hospitals in British Columbia under the "guaranteed beds" agreement (i) for what type of care (ii) at which hospitals?

3. How many beds guaranteed to veterans under the transfer agreement were not occupied at any given time and for how long (a) in the Jubilee Hospital complex (b) elsewhere in British Columbia?

4. How many veterans are now waiting for admission to hospitals covered by the agreement (a) for what type of care (b) at which hospitals?

5. Of the guaranteed number of beds for veterans in the Memorial Pavilion, how many as of July 1, 1975, are occupied by (a) veterans (b) non-veterans?

6. How many of the guaranteed beds are considered to be elsewhere?

7. What is the charge per day to the veteran when he is obliged to occupy a bed elsewhere than in the Memorial Pavilion and, if it varies from hospital to hospital or nursing home to nursing home, what are the rates of each?

8. When calculating "bed space available" under the federal-provincial agreement covering the Veterans Hospital in Victoria, what hospitals in British Columbia are included aside from the Jubilee?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. 215: (a) 160, (b) Active Care, 55; Chronic Care, 42; Domiciliary Care, 63.

2. (a)	Active Care	Chronic Care	Domiciliary Care	Total

INVESTMENT OF CFDC FUNDS IN "SWEET MOVIE"

Question No. 2,879—Mr. Bawden:

1. Did the Canadian Film Development Corporation fund the film "Sweet Movie" as reported in Macleans magazine?

2. Were similar movies funded by the CFDC?

3. What criteria were used in selecting the films to be supported?

4. Does the government consider that financial support for pornographic movies is a proper use of public money?

5. Will the National Film Board have this movie available to its libraries across Canada and, if not, for what reason?

6. What was the total amount expended by the CFDC on film subsidies?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): In reply to Parts 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6, I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: 1. Yes.

2. No.

3. The members and the staff of the Corporation take into consideration the scenario of the proposed film, the previous experience of the proposed producer and director, the cast, the budget, the distribution arrangements and other financial details before it decides to invest in any project which is proposed to it.

4. No.

5. No. This is a private sector production.

6. The total amount of subsidies expended by the CFDC since its inception up to March 31, 1975 (i.e. over a period of seven years) is $17,144,656.

EFFECT OF REDUCTION IN EXPENDITURES ON PORTS IN EASTERN CANADA

Question No. 2,907—Mr. Forrestall:

What ports in Eastern Canada will suffer and to what extent by the $6 million reduction in non-budgetary expenditures by the National Harbours Board?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: The reduction is being considered within the total requirements for transportation purposes, and no final recommendation has been made to the Minister of Transport at this time.

*APPLICATIONS BEFORE ENTITLEMENT BOARD OF CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION

Question No. 2,910—Mr. McCleave:

1. How many applications were before the Entitlement Board of the Canadian Pension Commission as of June 1, 1974 and June 1, 1975?

2. Has the government considered any remedies to speed up help to these veterans?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. As of July 1, 1974 there were 414 claims awaiting hearing by an Entitlement Board. As of June 1, 1975 the number was 706. In addition, 3,042 claims were in various stages of preparation for a hearing as of July 1, 1974 and 3,730 as of June 1, 1975. This includes claims where the Statement of Case is held by the applicant or his counsel and for which the notice of readiness to proceed with the hearing has not yet been received by the Canadian Pension Commission.

2. Yes.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

NUMBER OF PUBLIC SERVANTS WORKING IN NEWFOUNDLAND, 1968 TO DATE

Question No. 2,409—Mr. Marshall:

In each year 1968 to date, how many public servants did each department have working in the Province of Newfoundland?

Return tabled.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On May 22 I asked question No. 2,535. It is a fairly simple question relating to ministerial conflicts of interest and it would be entirely within the knowledge of a single member of the government to answer, namely, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I am quite sure an answer could be whipped up in 30 seconds. I do not know why it has not been answered, and I draw it to the attention of the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, July 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (P. 7416).

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, last evening before the House rose I had been referring to the social and economic condition of our country, a condition brought on by the misrule of the present government which operates under the guise of liberalism. I referred to certain newspaper articles and suggested that the Canadian people, especially those of us who must bear the cost of this misrule, know that Canada is in deep trouble and virtually leaderless.

What is the cause of this, Mr. Speaker? We could go back almost a decade and point to government arrogance, to government abuse of power, to procrastination, especially to the government's misuse of its present majority, to waste of taxpayers' money, poor judgment and chronic indecision. This morning I heard a radio commentator say that the hand is writing on the wall. That reminds me of an old hymn my grandmother used to sing. It is not in the hymn books any more, but it speaks of a story many centuries old, the story of Belshazzar's feast, during which a hand appeared and wrote on the wall and foretold the doom of his government. It goes like this:

At the feast of Belshazzar,
And a thousand of his Lords,
How they drank of golden vessels,
As the book of truth records.
In the night as they revelled,
In the lordly palace hall,
They were seized with consternation,
By the hand upon the wall.

How true it is today. The government is a perfect example of that to which the hymn refers, the hymn which my Scottish grandmother used to sing almost a century ago. The hand is writing on the wall for the government because, as the Scriptures say, they were weighed in the balance and found wanting. The Medes and the Persians are at the gates. I shall make no more metaphors; this will be the last. But the modern Medes and Persians are inflation and unemployment.

We have the spectacle before us of a government which imposes a ten cents a gallon surtax on gasoline and, in the same stroke of the pen, removes the tax from wine. That is one for the books. The government wants to tax the daylights out of those who need gasoline to make a living, and says to them, "Drink more wine and you won't feel the pain." I really don't know whether the minister was thinking about the true connoisseur when he removed the tax on wine, or if he was trying to ease the lot of the poor who feel the pinch of inflation. I think someone is greasing the skids under the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). He accepted poor advice when he lumped these two measures in one bill. Imagine including wine and gasoline in one bill! One cannot help comparing what has been done to wine with what has been done to gasoline.

I should hate to see the minister ridden out of the House by his colleagues, because that will be the effect of this bill. Personally, I shall hate to see him go. I have come to enjoy looking at his pleasant face across the floor and having the occasional exchange of banter and repartee. The minister is an interesting man and a rather pleasant sort; he is a good Canadian, too. But he was been badly misled. I think someone in his department was putting him on by drafting a bill like C-66 and asking him to put his stamp of approval on it.

Reading this bill we come across another anomaly, proposed section 17 on page 5. The proposed section reads:

> Thermal insulation materials designed exclusively for insulation of buildings; storm doors and storm windows for buildings; articles and materials for use exclusively in the manufacture or production thereof.

I was in the building materials and lumber business for 25 years, and in my opinion this proposed section will invite arbitrary interpretation by bureaucratic bunglers as to what actually constitutes insulating materials. Lumber is an insulating material, as is paper, glass, concrete, brick, stone and scores of other materials. They are, to a varied degree, insulators. To carry this argument further, the whole purpose of a building is to insulate the occupants and appurtenances from the weather. Every single material or substance can, in some instances, be considered as an insulating material. Why did not the drafters of this monstrous document simply say that all building materials are hereafter exempt from federal taxes?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: Every speaker, excepting the two or three government supporters who took part in this debate, made the point I have just made. I can suggest a number of reasons why federal taxes should be taken off building materials completely and immediately. The main reason, of course, is the slump in housing starts in Canada. The slump has come exactly when thousands of new dwelling units are desperately needed. At the same time, the minister of state responsible for housing says that there is no way he can meet his own projections this year for housing starts. His is a sad case. If the federal government is truly concerned about housing starts, it should take the reasonable and logical step of taking the tax off building materials and then appoint a minister of housing who can get the show on the road.

Another reason for removing the tax on building materials is that the United States market for Canadian lumber is thinning because of a decline of housing starts in that country. A number of lumber companies in British Columbia have closed owing to a slump in the market. This would be a good time to put that surplus lumber to work. It could be used for the building of homes for Canadians. We should do everything we can to accomplish that end. Including clauses like proposed section 17 in tax bills is not the way to do it, Mr. Speaker. We do not need any more of that hard to interpret gobbledygook on the statute books. There is too much of it already and it accomplishes no good purpose.

Also, I should have to see the finance minister railroaded out of the House by his colleagues because he has become master of the one-liner since assuming his present cabinet responsibilities. Some of his lines are real gems. Take, for instance, his statement in the budget speech a few days ago. He said the government found it necessary to steer a narrow course between inflation and unemployment. He should get a prize for that one. What he really meant was that the government was threading its way among the multitude of problems facing the country and so far they have managed to avoid making contact with any of the problems.

I have read some startling accounts in the press lately, and again today, about the incredible mismanagement of Air Canada. Although I share the concern of the average Canadian about this appalling state of affairs, I am not surprised. The former Auditor General, Maxwell Henderson, warned us for years that the country was being as badly managed as Air Canada and other Crown corporations. The same crowd is responsible for fiscal and management policies. No wonder the national budget for the present fiscal year is close to $30 billion. It could be much higher before the year is out. No wonder the government is scratching the bottom of the barrel, trying to find new sources of revenue. Thus, of course, the ten-cent gasoline tax. They are invading a provincial field, although there is nothing in Canadian law to prevent their so doing.

A couple of weeks ago some of the spokesmen in the higher echelons of the Liberal Party said that if Ontario does not like the ten-cent additional gasoline tax being levied at the pumps, why do they not take off the provincial tax? What colossal nerve and affrontery! Ontario has a 19-cent a gallon gasoline tax. This revenue is used to build and maintain highways. They have been doing a good job. The federal government has a lot of nerve asking the Ontario government to vacate in part a field which they have historically held, in order to make room for this illegitimate affrontery to raise more revenue for the Trudeau government. We are in that position today.

The present government has got itself boxed in. That is the reason for levying this tax. It cannot restrain itself now because the habit of spending recklessly has become too deeply entrenched. It is far easier to get into a bad habit than to kick one. I do not believe this government is interested in kicking its habit of overspending. Liberal cabinet ministers have had access to the public purse for too long to give up this largesse. In fact, it is obvious they want more money to spend on their personal programs and projects. When they are called upon to solve serious problems, their first thought is to spend their way out of them. When they find themselves short of cash, they send their friendly Minister of Finance on a foraging expedition. In this bill we find him poaching in the traditional domain of the provinces. We find him gouging taxes from the retail sale of gasoline which traditionally have been left to the provinces for the construction and maintenance of roads and highways.

The minister got off another good one-liner when the Premier of Ontario objected to the imposition of the ten-cent a gallon increase in the surtax. The minister suggested that if the premier thought the price of gasoline was too high, he could drop the 19-cent a gallon Ontario tax on gasoline. I can see the premier setting up the province for another federal kill. If Premier Davis were to drop the 19-cent tax, the finance minister and his cronies would jump in like a flock of vultures, saying that if the province did not want the 19 cents, the federal government would take it.

It looks as though there will be another injustice perpetrated on the Canadian taxpayers in connection with this legislation. That is on the question of rebates returned by the government to those who have purchased and burned gasoline in the course of earning their livelihood and in necessary travel to and from their jobs. At first it was reported that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) had stated that the ten cents a gallon rebate would not be taxable. Now that has been contradicted by his department and they say that the rebate will be taxed. If this is so, it is a glaring, rank injustice. I do not believe that ruling would be upheld in a court of law. This would be absolute theft on the part of the government theft from the taxpayers.

First, the money that he or she earned as income in order to buy gasoline is taxed. Then they take some of it to buy a tank of gasoline to go to work and pay the ten-cent per gallon tax, which then is rebated to them at a later date in full. If the government taxes that rebate, it will be double taxation. Moreover, it will be taxation of amounts that have nothing to do with income. How crazy can the government get? This legislation is shaky enough without compounding it with such nonsense. I say to the Minister of Finance and to the Minister of National Revenue, make a non-taxing return of the gasoline tax to the industrial and workaday users. Do that and you will be in the better books of the Canadian taxpayers, which you are not at the present time.

The Minister of Finance has said he is taxing gasoline users ten cents per gallon, plus the wellhead crude oil tax, and is doing this for revenue purposes. I wonder for what specific purposes. The Trudeau record under the guise of liberalism is a sorry mess. The minister says, of course, that the first purpose is to subsidize the extra cost of gasoline and oil in the eastern part of our country, but he also stated in his speech on July 9 that this item will bolster the consolidated revenue fund. That is why I ask the question that this House and all of Canada is asking: For what will the $500 million a year be used?

Some questions immediately arise. Will this be used to finance more give away programs? Will it be used to finance CIDA's colossal expenditures in foreign countries? I am not the red-necked bigot that a Liberal would try to label me. Some of these projects are legitimate for our purpose of being a world nation trying to help our brothers, but a good share of it is nothing but extravagance and wasted money. Will this revenue be used to finance the self-indulgent extravagances of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? No answer there. Will it be used to finance deficits created by bad deals and judgments such as Microsystems, not far from Ottawa, which in the name of liberalism was given a $30 million grant? That was a big one, Mr. Speaker. That is another failure of "Trudeaucracy".

There is an example of a smaller loss in my constituency. Even though it is small, prorated it is as important as the $30 million poured down the drain just outside this city. Just before the 1972 election, one of the candidates for the Liberal nomination announced they had made a grant to a lathe mill in Northbrook of over $6,000, supposedly to train machine operators. A month after the grant was announced, the firm went out of business and no operators were trained or needed. The site is on the outskirts of the village along Highway 41 and is a public nuisance and eyesore, with its huge pile of edgings and dilapidated buildings with junk piled around.

That is all that is left of another Liberal grant. Moreover, it is a regional fire hazard. The government will be hearing more about this from me because the mess has to be cleaned up; it is detrimental to our countryside. We are trying to attract tourists. They do not come here to seek junk, edging piles and fire hazards. Government spending is a bottomless pit to which it consigns the taxpayers' earnings.

As the finance minister steers his narrow course between inflation and unemployment, I hope he will take the trouble to look to the right and to the left, up and down, and forward and backward. If he will just do that, he will see where he is going. We are drifting along in so many directions at this time that I am surprised the finance minister would even suggest that this sort of meandering can be described as steering a narrow course. It is more like the narrow course the legendary bull charted through the china shop. Like the china shop, the country is in a shamble, and it would appear that the worst is yet to come. If the government is getting so short of funds and sources of additional revenue as to transgress into provincial tax preserves, then we must be in serious economic straits indeed; much worse, I would suspect, than the finance minister has told us.

I must also join my hon. friends in protesting the manner in which the Minister of Finance imposed this increase in the excise tax—by an announcement in the middle of a speech in the House. This is taxation by fiat and is further evidence that the government has no ethics about tabling tax legislation before the fact; it has found it is more convenient and expeditious to table legislation after the tax has been imposed and after it has come into force. This is contrary to the rule of law and contrary to the tradition followed by all the governments which preceded the would-be dictators across the floor.

What are some of the exemptions for which the bill provides? Section 2 refers to air travel. All non-Canadians using commercial air travel from points outside our country are excluded. But all Canadians emplaning from points within Canada will pay. The excise tax on wine has been sharply cut. All users of Canadian wine will from now on pay only 2½ cents tax per gallon, instead of 20 cents a gallon as formerly, if the alcoholic content is 7 per cent or less, and only five cents per gallon instead of 40 cents per gallon on wine with an alcohol content of more than 7 per cent.

I note, also, that the tax has been removed from insulation materials, incidentally, this measure should benefit all those people who buy insulating materials as a means of keeping their wine cold. Persons exempted from tax include Her Majesty in right of Canada, an exemption which extends to the Prime Minister and covers his Liberal picnic junkets around the country in armed forces' helicopters. But the working man has no exemptions whatsoever.

I wish to speak briefly as a member with three prisons in his riding, each of which has been a continuing source of trouble to the community and to the country. I ask the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) why it was considered necessary or expedient to cut back the proposed prison construction program touted for so long. If the revenue to be raised by this tax was to be used to build new prisons or to modernize old prisons, I might be inclined to accept it with some grace. However, as has already been pointed out by many of my hon. friends, the money to be collected is to go into general revenues; it will not be used to build roads or prisons or to create jobs or fight inflation. In fact, on the contrary, it will only serve to feed the fires of inflation.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) suggested last week that we in the official opposition would be pleased to lend the services of our esteemed economic critic, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) to help the Minister of Finance. Our economic critic could remind him of what he has said in the past concerning the state of our economic health. He could remind him how wide of the mark he has been with his predictions and projections. He might even be able to advise him how to get out of the mess in which his cabinet colleagues have placed him.

The minister is being roasted by his own colleagues and he will be cast aside as soon as it suits the purposes of those who constitute the real power of liberalism. I extend an invitation to the minister to come over to this side of the House when his colleagues are finished with him. He will have to start at the bottom and learn his craft, but there might be a better future for him in a party which places a higher value on service and honour than on power for the sake of power.

If the government is sincere about reducing expenditures, it could begin by withdrawing the hundreds of millions it is squandering each year on the so-called bilingualism program in the public service. That program has become a scandalous, expensive disaster and instead of promoting bilingualism it is being used to promote racism. Those of us who complain about the way in which the program has deteriorated into a scheme to recruit and promote public servants on the basis of race are called racists, but it is becoming apparent to the majority of Canadians that this is simply a smokescreen thrown up by those who hope they can obscure the truth about what is happening.

I would call attention to a headline in the Ottawa Journal of July 22, "School boards challenge Bill 22"—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, who is a very distinguished, honourable and experienced member of this House. Nevertheless, it has been made clear from the chair that members should direct themselves specifically to the principles of Bill C-66. I think everyone will agree that it is not at all desirable that we should resurrect the budget debate in general. We are dealing now with the second reading of Bill C-66 and I am sure members will agree that we would be better served if we were to direct our attention exclusively to that bill.

Mr. Paproski: I think my hon. friend is coming to the point, Your Honour. As you know, it takes a little time for some of us to get to the point, but I am sure he will do so.

Mr. Stevens: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would draw attention to the speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when this bill was first introduced. It was a rambling speech, in the course of which he referred to many items in the budget in no way directly linked with Bill C-66. This precedent having been set, it is difficult to rule any speech out of order at this point. The hon. member who has the floor certainly has been making some very appropriate remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I thank hon. members for contributing to the discussion of the procedural point. What we are looking at now is not precedent but the Standing Orders. They are quite clear: hon. members shall direct themselves specifically to the terms of the bill which is being debated. I hope all hon. members will adhere to this rule; it is a time-honoured one.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a fellow parliamentarian, I respect your judgment. However, I would draw to your attention the fact that the bill pertains to finance; it pertains to revenue. I mentioned the government's bilingualism program and the inefficiency with which it is being carried out because it has a direct bearing on expenditure, on the nation's financial affairs. This led me to refer to the protest raised by the Association of Protestant School Boards in Quebec which is asking for a ruling on the Quebec official languages act, Bill 22, on the grounds that it will constitute a hardship to some of the citizens of that province.

If hon. members care to look at today's Ottawa Journal, they will find a headline reading "Trudeau rules out Bill 22 challenge". The Prime Minister is reported as saying the federal government will not ask the Supreme Court to rule on the constitutionality of the Quebec law making French the province's official language. Hail, the just society!

An hon. Member: Get back to the bill.

Mr. Alkenbrack: However, as I say, Mr. Speaker, I respect your ruling. On the admission of both the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) and the chairman of the Public Service Commission, the commission intends to ignore the merit system in recruiting for the public service until it is satisfied there is a ratio among employees roughly equivalent to the population ratio of English and French Canadians. This practice is against federal regulations, it is against provincial regulations and it is against all the rules of decent conduct in our society. That is liberalism for you. This is the Trudeau just society.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner).]

At a time when we are trying to wipe out all traces of discrimination on the basis of race, creed, colour, religion or national origin, this government is promoting racism, and in the process is trying to turn the two founding cultures and races of our country into opposing camps. This is a strange method indeed for a government to promote unity in a country where people have been getting along so well for generations.

The finance minister has freely admitted that the ten cents a gallon tax to be levied on motorist and gasoline users at the retail level is to be used by the government for badly needed revenue purposes, and it is estimated this revenue will total $500 million per year. I have referred to their bad habits of the past, and these are coming home to haunt the government. There is an old French saying out of everyday human experience that certainly applies here, and it is this: "Plus qu'hier, moins que demain". In English, it means the more yesterday, the less tomorrow. In other words, the more you spent and dissipated yesterday, the less you have for tomorrow. Is that not true, Mr. Speaker?

The Trudeau government wasted and squandered so much yesterday, in the past, that the outlook for tomorrow is fraught with financial difficulties of their own making; and as I previously stated, they are weighed in the balance and found wanting.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want first to acknowledge your ruling that the remarks of hon. members should be relevant to the bill under consideration. As Your Honour knows, Bill C-66 imposes a gasoline excise tax of ten cents a gallon on gasoline sold by refiners and importers of gasoline. The tax is not imposed on the sale of diesel fuel, aviation fuel and heating fuel. I want to observe your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and to deal with the technical administration of the proposed tax. The policy reasons behind this measure were, I think, eloquently and cogently put by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his budget statement and speech on moving second reading of this bill, and in the exceedingly fine speech of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald).

In following the course of the debate on second reading of this bill, some hon. members have raised questions on the administrative aspects of the proposed gasoline excise tax and I hope they would be interested in some enlightenment on the subject this afternoon. Notwithstanding that this tax is expected to generate some $350 million in the remaining portion of this fiscal year, the cost of collection of this large sum will be minimal since the 20 refiners and 10 gasoline importers affected by payment of the tax already pay sales tax to the Department of National Revenue each month in the regular course of their business. So they will only be required to make minor adjustments in their accounting system to record and remit the gasoline excise tax. This is provided for in the bill, and these 20 refiners and 10 importers will simply add the proposed gasoline tax to that remission.

Furthermore, in terms of the administration of the refund programs, even though it is expected that upwards of one million persons will be entitled to claim refunds of gasoline tax as a relieving measure, the cost of the collection and processing of refund claims will be about 1 per cent. This is in the same range as the present administration costs of the general manufacturers sales tax that is currently in place.

The administration is being geared, on passage of the bill, to refund the tax on gasoline provided for in the bill, gasoline that is used for commercial purposes by delivery trucks, buses, taxis, construction equipment, manufacturing equipment, mining and forestry equipment, by farmers, commercial fishermen and hunters and trappers who use gasoline in the course of farming, commercial fishing, hunting and trapping activities.

Tax relief will also be provided by way of refunds to hospitals, federal and provincial government departments and agencies, as well as to persons who claim a portion of their vehicle expenses as a deduction against income tax in computing their income. Hon. members know that this will include doctors, commercial travellers, salesmen, business people using their cars in the course of their business, self-employed professional persons, manufacturers, retailers, hospitals and day-care centres when the gasoline is used in their vehicles and equipment.

Generally then, Mr. Speaker, with the bill as now proposed and reprinted by order of Your Honour, all persons who use gasoline in the course of their business or commercial activities for the purpose of earning income will be entitled to claim a refund as well as those manufacturers who are exempt from the 12 per cent federal sales tax on gas purchased for further manufacture. Also, the refund of the gasoline tax is not limited to gasoline purchased for cars, trucks and other vehicles; it will also be allowed for use in snowmobiles, tractors, lawn mowers and motor boats if the gasoline was consumed for business or for income-producing purposes.

As the House knows, originally Bill C-66 contained section 47(1)(f) providing for payment of the refund to a large group of persons and organizations not required to pay income tax on their earnings. That list, provided in the Income Tax Act, includes such bodies as municipal authorities or public bodies performing a similar function, school boards, municipal and provincial corporations, charitable organizations, non-profit organizations, charitable trusts, trade unions or labour organizations, housing corporations within the meaning of that expression as defined by the National Housing Act, and others. Without in any way reflecting on Your Honour's ruling in this instance, I would hope that at the committee stage of the bill the House would be amenable to suggestions to be made by the Minister of Finance to bring back into the bill relief from this tax for a group of non-business users of gasoline.

Dealing further with the administration of this proposed tax, employers who pay a mileage allowance to their employees for business travel will be allowed to claim a refund either on the basis of ten cents per gallon for actual gasoline expended in business travel or the employer will be permitted a factor of a fraction of a cent per mile. I propose to recommend to the governor in council on passage of the bill that a factor of five-eighths of a cent per mile be authorized for calculation by an employer who paid his employee mileage. As may be evident, the intent of the proposed legislation is to exempt all users of gasoline other than those who use gasoline for personal transportation or other personal use.

There will also be situations where gasoline is consumed in vehicles that are used partly for business and partly for pleasure. In situations of this kind, only that portion of gasoline which is consumed when the vehicle is being used for business purposes or for income-producing purposes will be subject to the refund.

An hon. Member: How would you measure that?

Mr. Basford: I will come to the point the hon. member has just raised in a few moments. For example, in a situation where an eligible person, say a doctor or salesman, drove an automobile 20,000 miles in a year, where only 12,000 miles or 60 per cent was on commercial business, that person would have paid a total of $125 of gasoline excise tax if he had purchased 1,250 gallons of gasoline, and he would be entitled to a gasoline refund of $75.

The hon. member has asked how we would calculate that, how we would administer it. This type of assessment, this type of judgment or this type of arrangement is already in place and made under the existing Income Tax Act where people are entitled to deduct a certain proportion of their vehicle expense for tax purposes.

● (1600)

I will come to the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in a moment. The hon. member for Peace River raised a question the other day with which I shall deal later. I emphasize that while no claim for refund can be paid before the bill receives royal assent, when and if it does provision will be made for large refund claims to be made on a monthly basis and reimbursement should be made within two or three weeks of receipt of the claim.

Mr. Baldwin: That is wrong.

Mr. Basford: The hon. member for Peace River says that is wrong. I will come back to this again at the conclusion of my speech and show that his submission is not right. Hon. members opposite who have raised all sorts of comments in the course of the debate about administration, obviously are not the least interested in learning what the proposed administration will be. As I was suggesting, large refunds would be made on a monthly basis and reimbursement of the refund should be made within two or three weeks of receipt of the claim. Smaller refunds, it is proposed, will be filed semi-annually and processed within six weeks of receipt at the Revenue Canada data centre.

An hon. Member: How large must they be?

Mr. Basford: My department will accept claims of $200 or more once a month. An amount of $200 represents some 32,000 miles of usage in a car burning gasoline at the rate of 16 miles per gallon. Claims of less than $200 will be accepted twice a year covering the periods January 1 to June 30 and July 1 to December 31. Very small claims will be accepted on or after December 31, 1975.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder whether the minister would permit a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Would the minister allow a question at this time?

Mr. Basford: I would prefer to answer at the end of my speech, if I might, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dick: Fair enough.

Mr. Basford: On the basis of that, Mr. Speaker, as I say—to re-emphasize—refund claims of $200 will be received and paid monthly and those of less than $200 will be accepted twice a year. The smaller claims will be accepted on or after December 31, 1975. To give some indication of the magnitude of the claims involved, we estimate, for example, that a commercial salesman travels between 20,000 and 40,000 business miles per year, and also that a taxicab travels approximately 100,000 to 150,000 business miles per year.

Using that calculation related to a car which travels an average 16 miles to the gallon, we find that the commercial salesman would receive a refund of between $125 and $250 per year, and that the taxi driver would receive between $625 and $937.50 per year. Dealing with the exemption for eastern farmers, the average eastern farmer burns 3,000 gallons of gasoline per year on farming. His refund would be about $300 per year. The average western farmer burns 1,000 gallons of gasoline per year, which is less than his eastern counterpart because western farmers use diesel engines to a greater extent. This represents a rebate of $100. I have asked for statistics relating to fishermen and the amount of the refund anticipated for them, but because of the very diverse nature of the fishing industry it is extremely difficult to draw out what would be a meaningful average.

The method of payment of refunds that we propose to space out monthly, semi-annually and annually will, I want to reassure the hon. member for Peace River who raised this matter, in fact help stabilize the work load in the data centre where these refund claims will be handled. At the present time, the data centre is used to process income tax returns. We have a peak load at tax filing time. The high load then falls off, and the administration throughout the year of the gasoline tax refund program would stabilize employment within the data centre and solve some of our administrative problems.

Some hon. members opposite have raised the question of administration. I wish to draw it to their attention that, for example, the present program of refunds under the Income Tax Act, as an average, on a correct return requires a period of five weeks from the time of receipt of the return until payment by the Department of Supply and Services. Obviously, the processing of a rather simple form relating to the gasoline tax is a far simpler task than the assessment and processing of an income tax return; therefore, the time spent on these refunds should be considerably less than the time spent on income tax returns.

Since no refund of the gasoline excise tax is permitted for personal use, my department will not refund tax for mileage which the employer might pay his employee for travel from his home to his place of work since this is comparable to the personal expenses of a person travelling from his home to his place of employment. Furthermore, a lawyer, medical doctor or business person using his car to drive from his home to his place of business would similarly be unable to claim refund of the gasoline tax for that travel.

It goes without saying that my department will not condone—I think this is a point that was raised by one hon. member—fraudulent claims and will consider prosecution in those instances which are uncovered by auditors during their periodic review of claimants' records. This mechanism is already in place in my department in assessing and auditing present tax returns.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the status of the gasoline excise tax refunds for purposes of the Income Tax Act. It will be recognized, of course, that a person is only entitled to claim his net cost as an expense for tax purposes. If, therefore, he charges as expense the full price of the gasoline, including the ten cents per gallon to be rebated, he must add the rebate into his declared income. If, on the other hand, he charges only his net expense, excluding the rebate, he would need to take no further steps regarding income tax in respect of the rebate when he receives it.

In view of the comments, I might add a little more in explanation of that situation. The Income Tax Act provides for two methods of computing income and expenses—the cash method and the accrual method. In brief, the cash method must be used by taxpayers whose income is derived from office or employment, including commission salesmen. Farmers and fishermen may elect to use this method or the accrual method. The income of all other businesses, including the professions, must be reported on the accrual basis.

Under the cash method, income is reported in the year it is received and expenses are deducted in the year they are paid. Consequently, an individual using this basis will be entitled to deduct the total amount paid during the year for the gasoline purchased for business purposes, and report as income the gasoline tax rebate actually received during the year. As an alternative, he may reduce the gasoline purchases by the amount of the rebate and claim only the net cost of the gasoline as an expense. For example, if his gasoline purchases amounted to $700 and he received a rebate of $100, he could either claim the $700 as an expense and report the $100 rebate as income, or claim the net amount which is $600. The over-all effect for tax purposes is the same.

Under the accrual method, income is reported in the year it is earned, regardless of when the payment is actually received. In turn, expenses are deductible in the year incurred, whether paid or unpaid. Therefore, a taxpayer using this method will claim the net cost of gasoline, that is, the total gasoline purchased reduced by the rebates applicable to those purchases.

I wish to assure the House, particularly the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), that the administration of this tax will not be an administrative nightmare as was suggested by him in the House. My department has made arrangements for refund claims on the basis of the passage of the bill, and contingency planning for forms, for instruction sheets and for self-addressed return envelopes to be available at all excise offices, customs offices and post offices across Canada shortly after Labour Day—on the basis of the passage of the bill in the current month.

These forms, if completed in accordance with the detailed instructions on the back, will be processed by the existing computer taxation data centre in Ottawa, using the special program developed specifically for the processing of gasoline claims, without delay. I have given the times when they will be paid and the schedule in the year. When the bill is passed, I urge each claimant to take care in completing the form, which is to be a simple one, follow the instructions and then his refund will be paid in the time periods I have set up.

Frankly, I am pleased with the organization that my department has put in place for contingency planning in anticipation of the passage of Bill C-66. My officials are ready to proceed with the administration of the gasoline tax refund program. It is not the kind of administrative problem that the Leader of the Opposition suggested it would be.

Mr. Stanfield: It sure is for the public.

Mr. Basford: The form is designed so as to be easy to complete and yet provides my department with the minimal required information for compliance purposes. I emphasize, for those who have said it is difficult for the taxpayers, that we will not normally ask persons to send in their gasoline invoices with their claims, but will accept a declaration that the information given is accurate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Unlike the opposition, we have faith in the Canadian public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: But they don't have faith in you.

Mr. Basford: However, claimants will be required to keep on hand documentary evidence of the purchase for audit by members of the Department of National Revenue in the event that there are a few cheaters, which members of the opposition seem to think there are in Canada.

I would merely recommend, and I do so on the basis that Bill C-66 is like all measures that have preceded it, contrary to what the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) said, that anyone who uses gasoline at this time for commercial purposes maintains a careful record of his gasoline purchases, particularly gasoline used for business, to enable him to file his claim as soon as passage of the bill and distribution of the forms are completed.

I am confident that the present excise organization and the existing data centre in Ottawa will be able to handle the processing of gasoline tax refund claims promptly and efficiently and without undue inconvenience to the general public. It must be obvious to members of the House that, contrary to the comments made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), my department has this matter of the administration of the gasoline tax well in hand and will be proceeding, following the passage of the bill, with the issuance of refunds in an orderly and expeditious manner as outlined in my remarks today.

I want to conclude by referring to the comments made by the hon. member for Peace River when he said we could commence to pay out the refunds without passage of the bill. That is not correct. I presume that what was being referred to when the question was raised in the House is that the claimant could use section 17 of the Financial Administration Act for the purpose of claiming the remittance of the special excise tax on gasoline. That is the section which allows the governor in council to make remissions. Presumably, what was suggested by the hon. member for Peace River is an order in council under that provision, remitting the tax to the purchasers described in new section 47, clause 5 of the bill. I hesitate to disagree with the hon. member for Peace River who is the opposition House leader, a distinguished member and parliamentarian. I am only a humble minister. But I am bound by the advice I receive from the law officers of the Crown.

I am also conscious of the fact that I have to run my department in accordance with the rules of the Financial Administration Act. I have always endeavoured to run the departments which I have headed so as not to receive adverse comments from the Auditor General. Therefore, I must regretfully decline the invitation of the hon. member for Peace River to pay the refunds before the passage of the bill. The fact is that such an arrangement would be illegal and impossible. A remission order under section 17 of the Financial Administration Act cannot be used for the purpose suggested, namely, that of paying the refunds before the passage of the bill. A remission order under that provision may only be made in the case of a tax as defined in section 17(10) of the Financial Administration Act which defines a tax as being, among other things, a tax "payable to Her Majesty imposed or authorized to be imposed by any Act of Parliament". Until such time as Bill C-66 is enacted into law, there is no special excise tax on gasoline authorized by parliament.

Mr. Stanfield: What an absurdity!

Mr. Basford: Let me say to a group of members who always claim to be conscious of the rules of parliament and who insist that the government should observe the rules, that I emphasize that this bill has not been passed. As provided in section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, we could only refund a tax that had been authorized or imposed by an act of parliament. On the other hand, it is in accordance with a well established tradition of this government, and of Conservative governments the few times they have been in office, that the amount can be collected from the time of the tabling of the ways and means motion, because when finally enacted into law, as I mentioned earlier, the bill and the tax will be retroactive to that date.

The second suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River is not workable because, in any event, the Financial Administration Act which provides for a remission order of a tax authorized by parliament only provides for the remission of that tax to the taxpayer, namely, to the person upon whom the tax has been imposed. As I made clear in my opening remarks, the tax under Bill C-66 is imposed on 20 refiners and 10 importers. I do not think the hon. member for Peace River is suggesting that we refund the tax to those 30 taxpayers, and yet those are the only taxpayers entitled to a remission under the Financial Administration Act.

The scheme under Bill C-66 is quite different from what the hon. member for Peace River envisages. It is not a refund of the tax to those 30 taxpayers but, rather, a refund of an amount equal to the tax payable to the purchaser of gasoline on which the tax has already been paid. The scheme of the bill is to provide relief by way of a refund to a group of people who have purchased gasoline. However, under the bill and under the Financial Administration Act that amount is not to be refunded to the taxpayers whom I pointed out, namely, the manufacturer, producer or importer of gasoline.

Much as I would like to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River that we pay out the refunds regardless of what parliament does and whether the bill is passed or not, which seems to be what he is saying, from the best advice I have from the law officers of the Crown and from my desire to run my department in accordance with practice which would not lead to adverse comment from the Auditor General, it is a scheme and an invitation which I cannot accept.

I have endeavoured in my speech to point out that the administrative problems involved with Bill C-66 when it is passed are not administrative nightmares as suggested. It is a workable bill. It is within the capacity of the department to manage and it can be managed without undue difficulty to the public. It will provide relief from the tax to a group of people, which I regard as important. Therefore having satisfied hon. members opposite that the proposals in the bill are administratively feasible, I hope we can pass the bill and show them that in fact it is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) seeks leave to ask the minister a question.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, to begin with, the minister indicated that he had contingency plans about forms, but then he went on and suggested that he had a simple form prepared. So that we may all see it, I wonder whether the minister would be willing to table a copy of that simple form.

An hon. Member: Pass the bill and you'll see it.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think that would not be in accordance with past practice. Under the legislation, I am authorized to prepare forms and make necessary regulations.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The legislation has not been passed.

An hon. Member: Show them to us.

[Mr. Basford.]

Mr. Basford: They will be approved and passed by the governor in council and by the minister responsible, when the legislation is passed.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, could the minister not issue to hon. members a statement which would cover inquiries as to the routine to be followed by constituents pertaining to exemptions under the legislation? I have received a couple of applications already and people in business are asking how they can receive the exemption. If the minister could circulate an official statement to hon. members, we could then tell our constituents.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, one of the principal purposes of my speaking this afternoon was to set out the type of administration we would be conducting, for the guidance of those people in business and others who will be entitled to exemption once passage of this bill is made. I think the best thing the hon. member could do at this point would be to send his constituents a copy of my speech, and I will be happy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Dick: We don't want to confuse them.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister a question. The minister recited quite a list of people who would be entitled to refunds, and he seemed to take some of the responsibility for having them on the list. I wonder if he could assure the House that he will consider adding to that lengthy list those people who are handicapped and who need special cars. It would be quite easy to segregate them. They have a driver's licence which restricts them to cars which are particularly engineered to enable them to drive, and it seems to me that group would be a worthy addition to the minister's lengthy list.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that the tax policy and the decision regarding to whom the tax refunds will be payable is a decision to be made by cabinet on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, rather than myself. I have received representations, as has the Minister of Finance, from the very group of which the hon. member speaks and I know they are being very carefully considered by the Minister of Finance. Obviously, the list of people entitled to the refund cannot be expanded at this stage of the bill.

An hon. Member: Why not?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. There are a number of hon. members seeking to ask the minister questions. Hon. members know that it is not the usual procedure which is followed; however, if there is unanimous consent, the Chair is quite prepared to allow hon. members to put questions to the minister. The minister is still within the time limit of his speech, and that procedure could be followed if all hon. members agreed. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): It is not agreed.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it is required by the rules of the House that we ask for unanimous consent. We are not in committee of the whole House where cross-examination is permitted, but within reasonable limits I am quite happy to answer questions if my speech gave rise to them. Of course, I would be happy to get the bill into a committee of the whole House where my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and I could be subjected to close cross-examination.

Mr. Stanfield: Don't be impatient.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In view of the statement of the minister, the Chair can again ask whether hon. members agree that questions to the minister should be allowed. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): It is not agreed. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Epp: This is open government, a real democracy.

Mr. McKinnon: The Liberals don't trust Basford.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has been recognized for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. Epp: You guys don't trust the minister to answer, do you?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told the people of Canada that he would wrestle inflation to the ground. The budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) of June 23 and the legislation which will proceed from it, including Bill C-66 which we are now discussing and which imposes a ten-cent per gallon excise tax on gasoline, provide the people of this country with an excellent opportunity to see who is going to do the battling in this well orchestrated wrestling match. Whenever a Liberal government, whether in peacetime or wartime, calls upon the Canadian people to make sacrifices, one can always be sure that the sacrifices will be borne by the people least able to carry them. In this fight against inflation the burden will be carried by the victims of inflation and not by the beneficiaries.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): An old Liberal tradition.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It will come as no surprise to anyone that the corporate sector of this country will benefit very materially. It has already benefited by the previous budgets of the present Minister of Finance by means of rapid write-offs and accelerated depreciation which have given the corporate sector in the neighbourhood of $2 billion, and in the present budget it again does very well. It is benefiting to the tune of some $240 million, $200 million in tax credits and an additional $40 million through changes in the resource industry tax legislation. If, in the endeavour to wrestle inflation to the ground, somebody has to tighten their belt, it is apparently not going to be the corporate elite; they are going to be allowed to view the battle from afar.

● (1630)

Under this legislation and the related bills announced in the budget, the battle against inflation will be fought by those who must drive a car to work, by the employees who will have to pay higher unemployment insurance premiums, and by those who are unfortunate enough to be ill or bedridden.

Let me deal, first of all, with the increase in energy costs, particularly oil and natural gas. This budget will add to the energy costs of the Canadian consumer some $2 billion per year. The bill we are now discussing imposes a ten-cent gasoline excise tax at the wholesale level. By the time it reaches the retail level it will probably be in the neighbourhood of 12 cents per gallon. The $1.50 per barrel increase in the price of crude oil is imposed at the wellhead. By the time it reaches the gasoline pump it will probably be an increase of six or eight cents per gallon. Between the excise tax and the increase in the price of oil there has been added to gasoline, in all probability, 18 to 20 cents per gallon by the time the full effect of the present measures comes into operation.

It is true, as the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) pointed out this afternoon, that fishermen, farmers, construction contractors and manufacturers will get refunds. He also pointed out that professional groups such as doctors, lawyers, dentists and self-employed persons such as salesmen, insurance agents, real estate agents and other self-employed businessmen will be able to deduct this additional cost under the Income Tax Act.

The minister's statement this afternoon makes it perfectly clear, however, that the one group that will have no recourse whatsoever is the workers who have to drive a considerable distance to work. As a matter of fact, the minister went out of his way to point out that if an employer pays the expenses of an employee travelling to work, that will not be deductible. Money spent by a salesman or a professional person carrying on his or her legitimate business will be deductible, but there is no way by which a worker who will have this additional burden imposed upon him will be able to deduct it or get a refund.

I suppose one can understand that a government which is mainly associated with people who live in cities and metropolitan areas who think of driving as a luxury or pleasure, fails to recognize that there are thousands of small towns and hundreds of small cities and rural areas in this country where people live a long way from their place of employment.

In my constituency, workers who live in the small cities of Nanaimo and Duncan drive 30 to 50 miles to a sawmill, pulpmill or logging camp. There are longshoremen who live in Ladysmith and Nanaimo who are on call to go to a port anywhere on Vancouver Island. That can involve a trip of 50 to 70 miles return. Yet there is no way in which they can charge off the additional cost of them as a result of this tax. The use of a car is not a luxury for them; it is a necessity. There is no way under the program and the detail which the Minister of Revenue announced this afternoon by which these workers will be able to pass on to anybody the additional cost in the price of gasoline.

If business or professional people have increased costs, they can pass them on as legitimate costs of their operation, but the workers cannot do that. The worker is limited to the normal $150 per year deduction for expenses, which is just as applicable to a bank clerk who does not have to buy tools other than a ballpoint pen and who has only to catch a bus. People whose travelling expenses will amount to hundreds of dollars per year will have to pay the extra cost out of their present income. Therefore, they will either have to lower their standard of living or demand higher wages. If they demand higher wages, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance will hold them up to the public as the main cause of inflation in this country.

The government has put forward three arguments to justify this ten cents per gallon increase for gasoline and the $1.50 per barrel increase in the price of oil which, as I pointed out, will cost the average consumer who drives a car anywhere from 18 to 20 cents per gallon. The first argument they put up is that raising the price will have the effect of reducing consumption. They tell us this was a conservation measure. As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, all the evidence that can be procured indicates that rationing by the pocketbook has never reduced consumption. Take oil as an example. The price of a barrel of oil, from 1971 to 1975, increased from $2.90 to $6.50; that is, more than a 100 per cent increase, and it has been reflected in the increased price of gasoline. Has there been a corresponding reduction in consumption? No. As a matter of fact, consumption of gasoline in that same period rose by over 12 per cent. As a conservation measure, therefore, the increase in the price of gasoline and other fuels is not a remedy.

The second argument is that the government needs the ten cents per gallon in order to net $350 million this year—in a full fiscal year it will net much more—because they want to maintain a uniform price for gasoline across the country, and since there will be a deficit in the oil compensation payments this is the way to meet that deficit. Up until now the export tax has brought the government sufficient revenue to more than pay for the import compensation costs. This year the government thinks it will face a deficit—and it probably will—and therefore it is going to recoup its loss by placing this ten cents per gallon tax on gasoline.

I should like to point out that part of this $350 million could be secured by a much more rigid scrutiny of oil compensation payments to the oil companies. There is growing evidence that the oil companies have been ripping off the oil compensation fund and that they have been switching their deliveries of oil from high-price areas to low-price areas to enable them to collect the compensation payments and use the cheaper oil in other areas.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Remember, we are not dealing with a few Canadian companies; we are dealing with the great multinational corporations which control 90 per cent of oil production in Canada, 99 per cent of oil refining in Canada and which can ship oil around the world to wherever they choose. They have deliberately manipulated oil imports to get the maximum out of the oil compensation fund. The government could save some money in that area.

If it is necessary to raise money in order to meet a deficit in the oil compensation fund, surely it ought to be collected on the basis of ability to pay. I heard some Liberal members argue that they did not want to see this deficit made up by increasing the income tax, since we should be taxing people who do not drive cars. There is a simple answer to that. If the government wants to raise this $350 million a year, it could impose an income surcharge on incomes above a certain level. Certainly, when you deal with the middle and higher income groups you are dealing with people who own cars and operate one, two or even more cars.

Mr. Gilbert: Do not forget corporation taxes.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As my colleague suggests, there is nothing to prevent the government imposing a small surcharge on this country's corporations in order to raise money and meet any deficit in the oil compensation fund. But the government did not choose either of those courses. It is not prepared to tax more heavily the comfortably well-off, nor the corporations. Instead, it puts on a flat tax of ten cents a gallon which everyone who drives a car must pay, including those who must drive in order to hold down a job. To me that is scandalous.

The third argument put forward by the government for imposing this gasoline tax and also for raising the price of oil from $6.50 per barrel to $8 per barrel is this: the government and the oil industry need the money in order to find oil and natural gas supplies for the future. I listened to the Minister of Finance on television on the night of the budget. He was holding a press conference and told the Canadian people that they must pay up today if they want to have oil and gas supplies tomorrow.

That argument is a fraud. There is no guarantee whatsoever that one dollar of the $350 million we are going to collect through the excise tax, or one dollar of the additional $400 million revenue which the oil and gas industry will get, will ever go into exploration for oil or the development of new supplies. Let us look at the experience of the last four years. As I said a few moments ago, the price of oil rose from $2.90 a barrel to $6.50 a barrel and the profits of oil and gas companies in the last four years have broken all previous records. The companies have never done so well.

Mr. Dick: Don't forget inflation.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Inflation has not risen by over 100 per cent in that period, I point out to the hon. member. The profits of the oil and gas companies of this country are the highest in our history. But what has been the net result in increased exploration and development? Did they spend the extra money they got from the Canadian consumer, with the connivance of the government, on increased exploration? No, they did not. Exploration activity has gone down, not up, for the simple reason that the oil and gas industry held this government up for ransom and said, "We are not going to carry on exploration unless you raise the price still further." That is why the price has risen from $6.50 to $8 per barrel, and why it will rise even more. The pressure continues to be applied to the government. When the government tells us that by giving the oil and gas companies more money we shall be assured of future supplies of gas and oil, its argument is entirely spurious.

An hon. Member: We have a shortage now.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As I said just now, 90 per cent of the production in this country is in the hands of foreign companies, which means that 90 per cent of the profits will go out of Canada. What assurance have we that even one dollar of those profits will come back to Canada to be used in the search for oil or to develop new supplies of oil and gas? There is no assurance at all, unless the government keeps giving the companies more incentives and more hand-outs as it has steadily for the last three or four years.

The other beneficiary of the increase in the price of oil and natural gas is to be the federal treasury. The federal government will collect an extra $450 million from taxing the oil industry and natural gas, in addition to the $350 million it will get from the excise tax of ten cents a gallon which it will use to meet the deficit in the oil compensation payments. Is the government to put any of this $450 million into exploration for oil? On the contrary, it has already announced that it will cut back on the money available for Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada this year will be cut back to $10 million. That is mere bagatelle with which to launch an oil company. No part of the $400 million which the oil and gas industry will get, and no part of the $450 million additional revenue which the federal treasury will get, is earmarked for exploration of development. So when the government tries to tell the people of Canada that they must pay through the nose now in order to be assured of supplies in future, it is misleading the public and deliberately seeking to confuse the consumers of this country.

The second group who are to be the main battlers in the Prime Minister's wrestling match in which inflation is to be wrestled to the ground consists of the workers of this country. They will be called on to pay increased unemployment insurance. When unemployment insurance was originally introduced in this country it was a great step forward. The federal government contributed a fixed percentage of the cost. Later, the federal government parsuaded parliament to amend the legislation in such a way that the federal government was not to contribute anything until unemployment went above 4 per cent. Now the minister has announced that the federal government will not contribute anything until unemployment exceeds a floating eight-year average.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please, I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but I am afraid he is straying from the subject matter of Bill C-66, which is an act to amend the Excise Tax Act. I suggest that unemployment insurance is not relevant.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): With great respect, Madam Speaker, may I point out that when the Minister of Finance spoke in the debate on this bill, he spoke about much more than the ten cents a gallon tax, as did other speakers. May I also point out that I am using unemployment insurance payments to illustrate the thesis I am seeking to develop, namely, that the ten cents a gallon tax to be imposed under Bill C-66 is discriminatory and in line with the government's fiscal policy of placing the burden of fighting inflation on those least able to bear it.

I point out, as an illustration, the fact that the government will not be contributing to the unemployment insurance fund until unemployment exceeds a floating eight-year average. This means that this year it would make no payment unless unemployment rose above 5.3 per cent. Next year they would make no payment unless unemployment exceeded 5.8 per cent, and in 1977 no payment unless unemployment exceeded 6 per cent. This would impose, in 1976, on employers and employees in Canada an additional burden of $350 million and, in 1977, an additional burden of $500 million.

The point I am making is that while the employers will be able to pass on this increased cost to the public in the price of the goods they sell, the workers will have to pay this out of their pockets in the same way they will have to pay the ten cents a gallon tax on gasoline out of their pockets. While the business community can pass on this increased tax and increased unemployment insurance payment, this cannot be done by the workers of this country.

I wish to give another illustration. The government intends to use as the shock troops in the fight against inflation the sick, diseased and bedridden of this country. Here the principle is exactly the same. The government calls for sacrifice to cope with inflation, but who is going to suffer? The Minister of Finance announced that the government is giving the required five years' notice to the provinces that they intend to pull out of the hospital insurance plan. He announced that they propose to put a declining ceiling on the increased contribution they will make to medicare. This year medicare costs are anticipated to go up by 16.6 per cent. However, the government says that next year it will only contribute on an increase of up to 13 per cent, the following year up to 10.5 per cent, and the year after that up to 8.5 per cent.

Mr. Lalonde: Talk about the bill.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who is interrupting but not from his own seat, and I can understand that because it must be a pretty hot seat to sit on—

Mr. Lalonde: Why don't you talk about the bill?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I can understand the Minister of National Health and Welfare not wanting me to talk about health insurance and medicare, because in the question period he told the members of this House that the announcement by the Minister of Finance would not cause any person who is sick to suffer any hardship. He ought to know—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member is straying from the bill. I repeat, Bill C-66 is an act to amend the Excise Tax Act. I refer the hon. member to Standing Order 34(2) which reads as follows:

Mr. Speaker or the Chairman, after having called the attention of the House, or of the committee, to the conduct of a member who persists in irrelevance, or repetition, may direct him to discontinue his speech, and if then the member still continues to speak, Mr. Speaker shall name him or, if in committee, the Chairman shall report him to the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I could not imagine any more charming person to name me than yourself. I should like to point out that this debate has ranged over a very wide field. No one sitting in the chair stopped the Minister of Finance or the other speakers who dealt with the implications of the budget, not only with respect to this legislation but the other legislation that will flow from the budget. I recognize, Madam Speaker, that you were not in the chair, but I do not think the conduct of the Chair should alter according to whoever happens to be in the chair at any particular time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I was in the process of concluding by pointing out that when the Minister of National Health and Welfare tells us that no one will suffer, he overlooks the fact that the provincial governments are already carrying programs not shared by the federal government to the tune of $1.5 billion a year, and have already announced plans that will cost another $800 million a year. If the federal government carries out its announced intention of reducing the amount they will pay in the event that the costs exceed certain levels, the provincial governments will have only these alternatives: they will either have to abandon pharmacare, denticare and some of the other programs they are launching, impose sales taxes which are already as heavy as can be borne, impose a per capita tax on every family in the province, or impose deterrent fees. If deterrent fees are imposed, this country will be taking a backward step.

Mr. Lalonde: You are out of order.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Minister of National Health and Welfare knows this better than anyone else, but all he can say is that I am out of order. I am telling him that he is out of step with the people of Canada; he is out of step with the thinking of the Canadian people. He will be the first minister of health in any western industrialized country to go back on a program which until now has been a success. Therefore, Madam Speaker, on the basis of the ten cents a gallon tax on gasoline, the increased price of oil, the higher premiums which workers will have to pay for unemployment insurance, the fact that the people of Canada will have to carry at the provincial and municipal level, and personally, a much higher share of health services, this indicates that this government has no sense of responsibility.

The Prime Minister promised the Canadian people in the general election of 1968 that he was going to build a just society. The Prime Minister likes to quote the poem that the universe is unfolding as it should. I say to this House that what is unfolding in Canada is a society which is neighter fair nor equitable, a society in which the well-to-do take the plums and the common people take the rap.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Immigration—Reason for detention and interrogation of Dr. Fayez Sayegh, an Arabian diplomat; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Availability of Corporation's educational films to schools—Government action; the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds)—Dismissal of Messrs. Cho, Chew and McGuire by CN Telecommunications—Request for report.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 7416).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott). Is the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Francis: No, Madam Speaker. You have recognized another hon. member. I hope I will be recognized next.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I will recognize the hon. member for Ottawa West after the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, I was very interested in listening to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) expound this afternoon on what will turn out to be nothing but a witch hunt. I was very disappointed that after the minister made his speech, he left the chamber. I was also interested in the simplicity of the forms he intends to circulate. I have seen a lot of government forms and not many of them have been simple.

● (1700)

I am disappointed in a government which has no faith in the Canadian people. That is exemplified by this government in Bill C-66. I do not dispute the ability of the members of the minister's department, but I think he is giving them a big job. I was also disappointed when the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) asked the minister to table the forms which apply to people eligible for tax refunds and he refused to do so.

This is a government which runs on subsidies and refunds. This is another subsidy they want to hand out, but first they have to take the money from the people. When I was preparing my remarks on this bill it occurred to me that I put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) concerning the price of gasoline at the retail level. I think it would be interesting to refer to my remarks as reported at page 3664 of Hansard of February 28 of this year. My question was as follows:

In view of the wide discrepancies in the price of gasoline which now varies as much as 14 cents per gallon between service stations for regular gas, will the minister look into this ridiculous situation?

The minister replied:

The government has never attempted to monitor gasoline prices at the retail level. It seems to me that because of the current surplus of products there is extensive competition, at least in some communities, at the retail level. On the whole, I would think that kind of competition would favour the consumer rather than work against him.

Mr. Speaker, I did not ask the minister for a sermon on the merits of competition in the gasoline market. I asked him to look into the situation to see how the industry could sell a product of the same grade at prices which varied as much as 14 cents a gallon, bearing in mind the low margin of profit received by service stations on a gallon of gas. Instead of looking into the matter, what we got from the government was unwarranted interference in the retail sales of gasoline; what we got from the government was taxation by decree instead of by the traditional method of tabling tax bills in the House. To be sure, we are debating the legislation to increase the excise tax, but we are debating it after the fact.

On the night of the budget speech, the operators of gas stations were thrown into a state of chaos. They were not sure whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) could raise the price of gasoline simply by making a statement in the House. They were not sure whether they should raise the price right at that moment. Most service station operators are early risers; they have to open their stations in order to serve other people who need to get an early start. I suppose the average opening time would be about 7 a.m.

The minister said on the night of June 23 that gasoline prices would rise as of that moment by ten cents a gallon. Surely the minister knows there are mechanical and technical problems involved in the changing of the pricing mechanism on gasoline pumps. It is obvious the minister did not take any of these things into account when he made his announcement. It would appear he placed the burden of responsibility for making the change on the individual operators.

The minister has not explained why the government imposed the tax by decree instead of by tabling legislation and allowing retailers and wholesalers at least a few days in which to prepare themselves for the change. An implementation date of July 1, for instance, would have allowed operators time to dispose of oil inventories and then to impose the increase only on gasoline purchased at the new price.

Apart from the way in which it was done, my chief concern over the price increase is that it will impose a further hardship on tourist operators. My riding of Victoria-Haliburton depends to a very large degree on tourism to average out the economic level, and the increase in gasoline prices will not only affect the operating costs of tourist businesses but will also constrict the travel plans of vacationers at a time when we are all trying to encourage Canadians to spend their vacations in their own country; at a time when we are spending millions of dollars on such things as "See Canada First" programs.

Last year, the government imposed a 10 per cent increase in federal taxation on boats and motors, thus posing a threat to the tourist industry and to the power boat and motor industries in this country. After considerable debate, the tax increase on boats was rescinded but the increase in the tax on small motors remained. Now there is a new tax increase on gasoline, with the threat of a further increase next month.

I have to wonder at times whether the government is deliberately trying to scuttle the tourist industry in areas such as I represent. I would be interested to know the amount of real income the government will realize from this tax increase compared with the loss of revenue the tourist operators will suffer. It is no wonder that many people who have spent their working lives in the tourist business are asking whether it is worth the trouble. To a large degree, a tourist operation is a gamble. Just one bad season caused, for instance, by a wet summer, could very well finish off an operation which lacked a strong financial reserve.

There are a number of questions which must be answered with reference to this tax on gasoline. In the first place, it would be interesting to know just how much revenue the government will receive from this tax. According to the latest figures of which I am aware, the amount is likely to be roughly $525 million a year. It should be remembered that merely to collect this amount of extra revenue will cost a good deal of money.

● (1710)

I should also like to mention that the preliminary estimate of the number of those who will be entitled to the gasoline tax refund is between 750,000 and one million. The number of refunds claimed will be considerably greater than the number of eligible refund claimants owing to multiple claims by one claimant during the year. Refunds are expected to total $170 million in this fiscal year, implying a ratio of $1 refunded to every $3 collected.

How is the government going to police this? The Minister of National Revenue made reference to this and said that no bills would be required. We expect Canadians to be honest people, but I think we will have a real witch hunt on our hands here. The Unemployment Insurance Commission is a prime example of what I mean. They have a witch hunt on now, and I am convinced that they are much better equipped to handle it than the Department of National Revenue will be when it comes to collecting this new tax. I think we will have to require bills. I am quite sure in my own mind that bills will be demanded if there is a dispute as to the amount of rebate an individual is claiming. I know this will happen, yet the minister says no bills will be required. I cannot accept that, Madam Speaker.

New section 47 of the act provides for the refund of the gasoline tax to certain types of users of gasoline, such as farmers, commercial fishermen, hunters and federal and provincial agencies. The bill requires those who qualify for the refund to set up accounting procedures, to keep records of gasoline used and the amount of gasoline refund being applied for. This imposes an additional burden upon the users of gasoline. I venture to say the government expects that a great many people will probably not qualify for a large return, and rather than go to the trouble of filling in an application form, simple though the minister says it will be, they will forget about it and file no application. The government is depending on this additional revenue from people who do not trouble to claim a refund. Besides the time and trouble involved, it would also add to the expense of operating a farm or other small business enterprise. The federal bureaucracy is growing so many tentacles that at its present rate of growth it is only a question of time before those tentacles strangle smaller businesses, and only those businesses and industries that are strong enough to absorb this economic punch that is being thrown by the federal government will survive.

As mentioned by previous speakers, I think the government has forgotten the army of commuters travelling to work today. This is a problem, again, due to the lack of adequate housing in areas close to industry. Many of the major arteries into our cities carry large numbers of cars driven by workers commuting back and forth. These people will be penalized, something I do not think the government has taken into consideration. If we had proper accommodation provided for these people in our urban centres, this would relieve our highways of much congestion. But again the government has forgotten about this. Many hundreds of people in the rural riding I represent commute 90 or more miles back and forth to work per day each way.

Returning to my opening statement, the government could have used this opportunity to equalize gasoline prices from one province to another. If the government is so interested in this vital natural resource, why has it not done something to equalize gasoline prices? There must be something wrong. The government has had plenty of time to do this. One gas station in a given area sells gasoline for 14 cents a gallon less than another sells the same grade: does that not warrant an inquiry? As far as I am concerned, Madam Speaker, it does.

The spread between prices in various regions remains the same, so again I say this tax is simply a means for the government to raise additional revenue. Equalization simply was not in the finance minister's planning when he tabled this legislation, so we will continue to have a wide range of prices for the same product from gas station to gas station, from province to province and from region to region. It is almost as though the government is saying that if we want to live in certain parts of Canada we must be prepared to pay a penalty.

In his budget speech the finance minister wandered all over the lot, and when he did manage to touch base now and again it was to tell us some more bad news. The minister could have used this opportunity to tell the country that the government was prepared to take whatever steps were necessary to see that low interest loans would be made easier for small businesses to obtain. Some of my colleagues have already asked whether the government plans to use the revenue from this tax increase to provide low interest loans to small businesses, such as gasoline service stations. The answer has been given that the government has no intention of using the additional revenue for such purpose. The revenue is going into general revenue to satisfy the government's appetite for more money to spend.

I have received letters and calls from many people in my riding telling me that they cannot get loans to improve their businesses, which the government has been offering at 8 per cent interest. The simple reason is that the banks are not interested in lending money at 8 per cent or 9 per cent when they can get 13 per cent on the same money. There is no way the banks can be forced to lend money to small business operators of the kind I have mentioned, or to anybody else, at low interest rates, so these people end up—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Again I repeat the remarks I made a while ago. We are dealing with an amendment to Bill C-66, which is to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. My reference was to the gasoline industry and to the problems encountered by small business operators. I am also getting complaints from people who tell me that old customers are now pulling up to the pumps at their service station and asking for $2 worth of gasoline, whereas previously they bought a tankful.I know this to be the fact because I have witnessed it myself as well as having had complaints about it. These people say they can buy gas cheaper at stations down the road. As a result, many small, established businesses and filling stations are going to be ruined.

Every community in Canada, large or small, has its service stations, and in many of these smaller communities the service station is the backbone of the town or village economy. In addition to selling gasoline and oil, the service stations keep automobiles, commercial vehicles and farm vehicles in working order, keeping this business in the local area and contributing to the economic growth of the community. In areas such as my own riding of Victoria-Haliburton they also serve the tourists who come to visit the area.

It has been suggested that the real reason for the increase in the surtax on gasoline is that the government wants to try to conserve petroleum products and that increasing the price is one way to do this. If that is so, then the government is certainly mixed up. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources told me in this House in February that there was a surplus of petroleum products. Everyone knows that you do not get people to stop drinking, smoking or driving simply by increasing the price of cigarettes, alcohol or gasoline. The people who can afford it will still buy gasoline, just as they continue to buy alcohol and cigarettes. It is the people who can least afford the price increase on gasoline who will be hurt, just as they are the ones who are hurt most by any other tax increases.

What will happen to the people who will be forced to spend more money on gasoline? They will ask for more money from their employers. This will add to the inflation. This tax will represent another means by which this government contributes to inflation. This is the government that told us it intended to wrestle inflation to the gound.

I must say that no explanation on the part of the government will satisfy me that there is a justification for this latest increase in the price of gasoline. When one considers that the government estimates it will spend $30 billion in running the country in the coming fiscal year, it certainly seems odd, to say the least, that it requires the paltry $300 million to $525 million that will be raised by means of this tax. I say "paltry" because it seems this government considers any sum under $1 billion to be paltry.

There is a story that has gone the rounds for years concerning the mountain climber who was asked why he climbed the mountain. He replied that he climbed it because it was there. I am wondering whether the Minister of Finance decided to place a tax on gasoline on June 23 simply because it was there. When the minister has finished clearing up the mess in respect of collecting refunds in relation to this gasoline tax, I think he will wish he had looked elsewhere for additional revenue. Now we have been told by the Minister of National Revenue that the government will tax the refund in respect of commercial users of gasoline. Here we have another example of the government contributing to the costs of individuals.

Now I should like to deal with the record of the government in handling the oil situation. In the winter of 1973-74 the government created what I believe was an artificial crisis in respect of fuel oil. We were told by the minister that there was a huge shortage of fuel oil. There was no shortage, but the price of home heating oil was increased. We see from Hansard for April 2, 1974, that the government paid 99½ cents per gallon for Rumanian oil while the world market price for oil was only 89 cents. Later, in Hansard for April 11, 1974, we note that the quality of the oil was so poor that the government received offers for it of 15 cents a gallon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I fail to see the relevance of the hon. member's comments to the amendment or the bill under discussion. Perhaps the hon. member would limit his remarks to the bill.

Mr. Scott: With all respect, Madam Speaker, may I say we are still dealing with the oil situation. However, I shall move on. The gas tax and increases in the cost of home heating oil will generate revenue of about $2 billion. Once again, however, this amount will not go to the government for the purpose of expanding supply. This $2 billion in national revenue will certainly make up for the elimination of the 5 per cent tax on insulation building materials. I stress "insulation building materials". Back in 1974, as a party we advocated the dropping of the 11 per cent tax on building materials. The government gradually climbed down the ladder; it reduced the tax from 11 per cent to 5 per cent. Now the 5 per cent has been eliminated in respect of insulation materials. I do not know why the government did not go all the way and drop the 5 per cent tax on all building materials.

An hon. Member: That would be too sensible.

Mr. Scott: That is right, it would be too sensible. This blatant tax grab will have severe repercussions in the province of Ontario. It is estimated that the increase in the cost of fuel alone in Ontario will eliminate 15,000 jobs. It will certainly hit very hard the auto industry in Ontario. There is no emergency at present that would justify the undermining of the livelihood of as many citizens as will be the case in respect of this bill.

In closing may I say that because of the representations made by many members of this House, chiefly opposition members and a few members on the government side, in respect of this unwarranted tax and the effect it will have on the Canadian economy, I hope the minister will review the situation and withdraw this bill.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, if there was any question about a silly season in Ottawa, I think it is quite evident it has arrived. The proof of it is clear. Even as I rise now, speaking on the government side as a backbencher, there will be those who will say I am prolonging the debate. Last night the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), speaking on the other side, complained that no Liberals had spoken in the debate on that day. We on this side are damned if we speak to defend the measure before us and we are damned if we do not rise.

I say it is a silly season. All members know that the weather gets warm in Ottawa in July and August. The hotter it gets, the more perverse hon. members become. Each side says publicly it does not mind sitting, while privately it says something else. As a local MP it is easier for me to come here than it is for some others. Some hon. members, however, seem to treat these sittings as a form of penance for having received a salary increase recently.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret interrupting the hon. gentleman but I should remind him that we are dealing with Bill C-66. Would the hon. member confine his remarks to the bill.

Mr. Francis: Madam Speaker, I think my remarks are relevant to the bill. Few hon. members opposite have reached the point of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the House leader for the official opposition, who is quoted in this morning's Globe and Mail as saying that the government has been tampering with the air conditioning system to bring the opposition to its knees. I have a direct quotation from the Globe and Mail of this morning in which it is stated that the hon. member charged that the government has resorted to this measure to try to bring an end to the debate on Bill C-66. I cannot suggest a more direct proof of the silly season.

Every conceivable point that could be made in this debate has been made many times over. From previous experience, I look over to the other side of the House and wonder when the vote will come. It could not have come last night because there were not enough MPs present on the other side. Today it looks better. If a vote does not come soon, then we will see a corporal's guard do duty for each party and nothing will pass the House. I remember the summer of 1964 when we sat all summer on the flag debate. Eventually it was terminated by closure. Hon. members may well ask: Why are we here? Surely at this stage no one will be persuaded by reasonable arguments to change his or her vote.

Why does this charade go on? All hon. members are in favour of a one price system for petroleum products, with allowances for local transportation costs across Canada. In order to find the extra $350 million needed to subsidize foreign crude oil imported into eastern Canada, the government has proposed a tax of ten cents per gallon on gasoline, with rebates for commercial and industrial users.

No one likes a tax, and it is a great thing for the voters back home to fight taxes. Some say that the government should have made savings in other programs, without specifying where, or else that a program such as that carried out by Information Canada be abolished, which would by no means provide the sums of money needed.

Others say the subsidy should be financed out of general revenues. This is a good problem for economic theorists: comparison of the merits of a user tax versus a combination of personal and corporate income taxes. I am by no means satisfied that non-automobile owners, frequently elderly and retired, should be taxed to pay the import subsidy on gasoline. On the other hand, we all recognize that many people who have no choice but to travel to and from work by private automobile are hurt by the ten cents per gallon tax. But, as I said, it is a debate that the academic theorists can go into until the end of time.

Unfortunately, there is no perfect tax. The present measure appears, in my view, to be as good, as practical, and as fair as any that can be proposed in the present circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Francis: I hear interruptions from hon. members opposite in the NDP. They have their own whipping boy. It is all the fault of the multinational oil corporations. I am not prepared to say that these corporations may not have taken advantage of the situation to improve their profits. That is possible. But last night in this House the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) cited the profits of Imperial Oil and said they were on strike, not doing exploration for new oil. When I pointed out that Imperial Oil has the largest exploration budget in the Mackenzie delta in its history, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) shouted "Yes, but they are spending our money". The logic of these arguments escapes me.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

One thing is clear; the NDP has a new leader, or is it the same old one? And they must make a noise. They have taken the old drum, put a new coat of paint on it, and are beating it hard. The new-old leader announced on radio that he would keep the House here all summer on the Unemployment Insurance Act changes. Since the government did not oblige him by calling this measure for debate, his group have since been trying to make all the political capital they can out of opposing gasoline taxes.

The real opposition to the excise tax on gasoline comes from the official opposition, the Conservative Party. As everyone knows, this party really has no policy on the petroleum issue. In western Canada they rally round the Premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed, and demand that the so-and-so easterners pay more for western energy. In eastern Canada they bleat for the consumers, echoing Premier Bill Davis of Ontario. By opposing this special tax they can agree on something, and hide the differences in their ranks.

The real difficulty, Mr. Speaker—and, I suggest, the clue to this debate—is to be found in the fact that an election is to be called in Ontario very soon. After groping for an issue, and finding none, Bill Davis consulted his opinion polls. Last spring they told him that he was not doing so well.

Now Bill Davis has found what he hopes will be his fighting ground. He is going to campaign, it seems, against the federal budget. He will help the North American automobile industry, and will stimulate more housing activity. Finally, he proposes to be a great friend of the gas-buying car driver by a program that will delay still further any increase in gas prices due to raising the price of crude oil.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) had increased the basic price of western Canadian crude oil from $6.50 to $8 per barrel effective July 1, equivalent to five cents per gallon retail. Because of existing stocks many refineries stood to make windfall profits if they had been allowed to increase their prices immediately. They were asked to delay price increases for 45 days; this is until August 15. Premier Bill Davis went one better; he extended the freeze for 90 days—that is until September 30.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Francis: I hear hon. members applauding, including my friend from eastern Ontario. But we in eastern Ontario are most apprehensive about what will happen to us in the period between August 15 and September 30. Our gasoline comes from Montreal refineries using imported crude. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) pointed out, Montreal refineries, on the average, have smaller stocks of refined products than the refineries serving Toronto, based on western Canadian crude. Ninety days may not work as much of a hardship for the large Toronto refineries, but many Montreal refineries will be using $8 per barrel oil long before Bill Davis' 90 days are up.

What will happen then? Will these Montreal refineries refuse to ship refined gasoline to eastern Ontario, including Ottawa? Will there be line-ups at the gas pumps? Or will Dr. Claude Isbister, an economist newly appointed to look into these matters by the government of Ontario, persuade Bill Davis that eastern Ontario gas prices will have to follow the same pattern as prices in Montreal? In that case Ontario will have its own two price system for gasoline for 45 days—a lower price for Toronto, and a higher one for eastern Ontario. But, as they say, Toronto is where the provincial action is. At this stage I confidently predict a provincial election to be called in Ontario, to be held before September 30. Eastern Ontario will not really count when the time comes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us how it will come out.

Mr. Francis: I do not have the capability of predicting the future. I have learned from my own previous experience, and I am a little timid about making predictions. I would simply say that I am confident voters in Ontario will come up with the right choice.

I appeal to hon. members from all opposition parties to put an end to the silly season in the House of Commons. Let Bill C-66 and the amendments come to a vote. There is really no further political capital to be made in prolonging this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1740)

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I am quite pleased to take part in this debate. I know that several members are asking questions, given the length of the debate, but we believe on this side of the House that it is our duty to refute and fight that legislation which will surely sorely try a certain group of people, namely the workers. This is why we cannot accept such a legislation compelling a very special group, that is the low income group, to attain the objective of this budget—essential according to the government—which amounts to $500 million a year.

I heard a few minutes ago the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) coming up with fancy ideas and suggesting that the three parties of the opposition could be blamed for the delayed refunds, because the bill not being passed, the Department of National Revenue is unable to make the necessary refunds. It would perhaps have been advisable to vote that legislation before enforcing it. Then there would have been no delayed refund.

If we really wanted to examine the difficulties that this bill will bring to a very particular class of people that the workers are, it might not be necessary to make refunds because I felt, and I still do, that it might have been possible to recover that money that seems to be necessary to reach the objective of a single price across Canada, perhaps through income tax.

We are wondering seriously. Why those exemptions? Why those exemptions for certain classes of people who can afford a lot more to pay than the working class? I will limit myself once again in this debate to reflecting the sufferings and difficulties caused to that working class that cannot get out of it otherwise. Exemptions are awarded to certain classes that are certainly in better position to meet the objective of the government that seems necessary—the budget—but that lets the workers support this weight.

I heard several members and I read over several speeches. In our ridings, Madam Speaker, all members, government members as well as opposition members, witnessed scores of representations made by voters who plead with the members of every riding to make the government see reason on this legislation that we regard as discriminatory and unfair. We regard it as such and we believe we are right. We know quite well that it is the same thing for government members, Madam Speaker. We know the system. There is no mistake about it. So should we defend the minister even if he is wrong? But in the circumstances we are being accused of delaying this debate. However, I would like it to be said out loud. We think we are discharging a responsability we have in this House of not supporting a legislation when it is bad. Of course, the system often leads us—on both sides of the House—to exaggerate on certain measures. But on Bill C-66 which provides for the increase and the recovery of $500 million a year to be paid by a class of workers who have no chance of getting out of it, we are going to fight that legislation, Madam Speaker, and I think we are right in doing so.

Last week I listened to the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) when she said she was courageous enough to implement an unpopular measure. An income tax increase is always unpopular, but I think it is more fairly distributed than the legislation now before us.

But if we go back to the eve of the election a year ago, it is clear that no one would have dared introduce such a measure, and today, considering the good mood in which the government seemed to be a year ago, such measures are proposed. This afternoon, I pointed out to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) a decision of his department that is hurting a group of dairy producers which had been promised a fair return. But through another measure the left hand takes away what the right hand had given them. Similarly, it is said with haste that taxes were not raised in the new budget. But in an oblique way, workers have their pockets picked of a tax nothing but direct.

And as far as we are concerned, we believe our duty is to fight a legislation that appears to be most unfair. For these reasons, we will go on urging the government to show more concern, more perception, and of course more fairness to all Canadians.

We have no contention with the single price of gasoline throughout Canada, but we cannot accept the way in which the money is to be picked in one group's pockets.

As was stated earlier by one of my colleagues, such a measure goes a long way toward antagonizing both the provinces and the tourist industry already burdened by inflation. Clearly, such a measure is most harmful to tourist operators. It has also been suggested by another member that normally gasoline taxes are imposed by provinces to the extent needed for the construction of highways.

These provinces are antagonized once more. The government might say: Let provinces impose additional taxes. But we know perfectly well that there is a limit to that, and with this very heavy burden the provinces will be reluctant to seek the extra money needed to improve highways. We have there another negative effect of this legislation. We are trying to draw the government's attention to the shortcomings of this bill, the difficulties in implementing it, and it is our responsibility to remind the government of its own responsibilities.

It is not for the fun of it that we have been discussing this legislation for something like 10 days. And if it means discussing it 10 more days, I believe our responsibility is to do so, as recommended by our constituents.

How many of our constituents, as of today, have been asking us not to pass the bill, to make every effort to stop it. Some hon. members apparently think this is amusing. They should first explain it in their constituencies. How is it possible to suggest that people are against it in my constituency, but in the next one people favour such an increase?

Naturally, the minister spoke of that redistribution, of levying that unfair tax, and also of the categories that will be exempted. If he will give us the assurance that all the workers who have to use their cars to get to work will also be exempted, I think we could then make a compromise fairly quickly. Let him make us that proposal. Then, to my mind, we will not have pleaded for a bad cause, but will have won over the government to a far more humane bill, because the bill now strikes us as being unacceptable, and of course most unfair.

Under the circumstances, we must therefore continue to ask the government to lend us an attentive ear.

It is hard to understand, considering all the difficulties we have had in the last few years, the effects of a budget which was intended to be anti-inflationary when in fact it will be anything but. Even now, everyone recognizes that it will result in an increase in the cost of living. Yet, the budget was introduced as a measure to check inflation. This bill will achieve exactly the opposite. We therefore fail to understand the position of the government and its refusal to come back to its senses and redistribute the levy required to achieve its objective, but leaving out of it the poor worker, who has been tortured enough in the last few years, and who will now know greater difficulties because of a bill no one would have dared introduce on the eve of an election, which everyone knows. But the government has a majority, and elections will be held in four years.

They could not care less about the difficulties the bill will create. Of course, we will be blamed for prolonging the debate, because we have enough conscience to want to reply. Because we insist on doing so, we choose to oppose this bill. A few government members rose and tries to justify the actions of their government. We understand this system, but I do not believe, Madam Speaker, anyone can be truly honest in letting the burden of that legislation fall on the shoulders of that group of workers instead of applying it in a much more equitable way.

Madam Speaker, when the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) talked earlier, it was clear to anyone who can read between the lines that he wanted to let the public know that refunds might be delayed because the opposition is objecting to that measure. But we repeat he can keep those refunds, because as far as I am concerned, Madam Speaker, we shall object for quite a long time to that legislation which we consider unfair. And I think it is the duty of the opposition to oppose the government which introduces such an unfair and unacceptable measure which discriminates against a particular group of citizens. I dare hope we will object to that measure until the government will water its wine and consider a more equal distribution. Madam Speaker, we only want that money to be distributed and collected if necessary. And we think it is necessary, there is no doubt about that. We have the same ends as the government, but not the same means. And that is the important point.

As I said earlier, I read again several speeches. How come that after so many speeches have been made, after so many members got information in their constituencies and were made aware of the difficulties their constituents were faced with, we are the only ones on this side of the House who believe this legislation to be a bad one? It is unthinkable! Any honest minded person, Madam Speaker, will agree with the good arguments which were put forward on this side of the House. And there are good, true arguments, and the public is asking for and demanding a very strong stand against such a discriminatory legislation, as I said earlier.

Therefore, it is not by letting the Canadian people believe that we are going to delay the refunds that we will increase our credibility. I repeat that, truly and honestly, this legislation should not have been applied before it was passed and the debate over. This fierce battle that we are waging against this legislation could certainly have been prevented, had the government assumed its responsibilities and applied this legislation only after it was duly adopted. The government wanted to apply it before it was adopted, and it will not be long before it accuses us of delaying payment of refunds. I do not believe that this argument weighs much against ours, Madam Speaker. I feel that we are meeting the wishes of a group of people who had enough difficulties as it was without having to face new ones, and it is in the interest of the workers who need to use their cars daily. Some hon. members have indeed referred to public transportation in a number of larger communities. Maybe adequate public transportation does exist, but we are all perfectly aware that public transportation services are inadequate in thousands of municipalities where workers must cover long distances to get to work.

Therefore, the argument of the Minister of Finance inviting the public to use public transport will not be valid as long as the government has not done more to better organize these services. The public is therefore invited to use a tool which does not exist in several areas. We find these arguments very weak and not applicable to the potential of an area or a society who needs them.

The government should not repeat that it has the courage to apply an unpopular measure. Through the income tax, it could have decreed a certain increase which would not have been popular, but would have been much fairer than making a certain category of people pay the price of this policy. It is with this in mind that we shall continue to ask the government to better understand the difficulties that this will cause for workers and that we shall try to make the government understand that our interventions are motivated by the requests of our constituents. Indeed, I am convinced that constituents of the government members have already shown their concern and asked their representatives in Parliament to urge the minister to propose a better distribution as concerns his objectives. In view of the circumstances, we believe that we are doing our duty even if certain government members are under the impression that we are delaying the proceedings of the House on purpose. I do not believe that we are delaying unduly the debates, but this gives us an opportunity to repeat, as we must, that the government does not seem to understand that this measure is unfair and discriminatory. We cannot repeat this too much.

An hon. Member: Is the hon. member leaving us for the provincial government?

Mr. La Salle: And I want the population to know that the opposition is doing its duty in this debate and that it will do so conscienciously. I also invite Montreal members, and those from other areas, to speak up. If there is agreement about the fact that the worker must be the only one to bear the burden of this legislation, let us say so and let us remember—

An hon. Member: Will the hon. member speak a little louder?

Mr. La Salle: We do not agree—

An hon. Member: You will make the headlines.

Mr. La Salle: —with the fact that the government should apply such a measure.

Maybe hon. members should rise more often. If they are tired of headlines, they will surely not have the best headlines by remaining silent as they now do and by supporting their ministers with a silence that proves to be intellectually dishonest. I, as well as the population, deplore such silence. For us, on this side of the House, this is no pleasurable experience, I am sorry to say, because I regret still being here in this House fighting such a piece of legislation, and all my colleagues would like, as is the case for many members, to end this session on a pleasant note. We have to bear this responsibility, we have commitments, and we would be making a serious mistake if we were to leave the government pass so bad a piece of legislation in such an easy way. And the population would blame us. Nevertheless, the legislation will pass.

An hon. Member: Is the hon. member leaving for his holidays?

Mr. La Salle: We want the population to be witness to this discriminatory measure on the part of a government which casts aside the interests and problems of a part of our working population. That is our goal. I feel that we are thus carrying out our responsibilities as members of Parliament. Members opposite us have also made commitments during the last election campaign, when they promised a just society. We are still a long way from such a society. Simply have a look at our legislation, such as the bill on unemployment insurance which is still more unjust that the one before us now. Rest assured, that one is far from being passed. We have a part to play, we are going to play it, and from now on we are going to play it with regard to measures that prove harmful to our society, and it will be no fun. I wish to reassure my colleagues sitting opposite. We will not let such bad and unjust laws get through Parliament. From now on, we will do our utmost to make the population aware of such a bad piece of legislation and of the government's lack of sincerity.

An hon. Member: Petty politics!

An hon. Member: Is the hon. member leaving tonight? Happy holidays!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I am extremely pleased this evening to discuss Bill C-66 meant to enforce some budgetary proposals which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) presented to the House on June 23 last and especially those concerning amendments to the excise tax.

I remember well, Mr. Speaker, that during his budget speech the Minister of Finance stated concerning the 10c. tax on gas that he wanted in the first place to finance the subsidy which would enable to maintain a flat price for oil throughout Canada and thus promote the conservation of energy. I admit that the government must take some steps to find additional funds to subsidize oil but to compel once again the average wage earner to foot the bill, this is something else! I entirely disagree with the Minister of Finance on that point.

There is no doubt that through this bill, the government is trying, by every possible means, to increase its revenue, but it is extremely deplorable that once again the average wage earner, particularly, is footing the bill. In mentioning that, I think immediately of the person who uses his car to get to work and earn his family's keep. The car is not a luxury to him, but a real necessity. He will have to buy gas, regardless of its cost.

Mr. Speaker, the 10-cent tax a gallon of gas will net the government something like $525 million but, on the other hand, that unjust tax will do much harm to some people, specially those on low income. Once again, the lowwage earner will be hardest hit by that increase in the cost of gas. Indeed, those people realize easily that it is costing ever more to earn enough to give their families a decent living, for the low wage earner lacks purchasing power.

● (2010)

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the tax on gasoline will simply contribute to fan inflation more and more, and I sincerely believe that the government is taxing people who cannot afford this increase, for there is no doubt the federal government will get the $525 million revenue which this tax will bring, out of the pockets of low income people. It could easily have raised the money by taxing the big, multinational corporations, thus redistributing Canadian wealth in a non-discriminatory way among Canadians.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government compels motorists to use public transportation. As my colleague from Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) said yesterday, and I share his view, people would use public transport if they were available to them.

As I have said, when it comes to encouraging people to use public transport, one must bear in mind that many workers such as those in my constituency have to travel 20, 30 and 50 miles to work, and have to use their private cars to drive to specific places.

As a result of this increase, they are particularly penalized. As for the argument that the increase would favour the saving of unrenewable energy, I do not feel it would have that much of an impact because I consider that the government is taxing only one part of energy users instead of truly tackling the energy problem.

I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is hoping that fewer people will be using their cars for leisure. Honestly, I am clearly under the impression that those who use their cars simply for leisure are going to keep on purchasing gas no matter what the price, and any piece of legislation aiming at saving gas, such as this one, will have no effect on those people.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is surely not a step in the right direction, because this increase will not discourage people from using the family car on weekends. One must realize that a person who takes his car to work in the morning does not really have any other means of transportation; it is more economical for him or public means of transportation, as I said earlier, are not flexible enough or have inconvenient schedules.

In reality, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government is simply falling back on small wage earners and is also discriminating against the consumers who are the mainstay of our society. Moreover, those who will not pay the surtax will be able over and above that to deduct from their income their car expenses for business purposes. Whereas the small wage earner who will have to take the urban transit system to go to work during the week and who will want some time during the weekend to drive his wife and children out of the big city to be able to breathe something else than polluted air for some days will have to pay this surtax.

Following this way of thinking, one could suggest that the merchant who decides to go and watch a baseball or football game during his working hours will be able to charge his gas expenses to the advertising account of his company and this way he will abstain from paying this surtax.

[Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve).]

Mr. Speaker, it is very unfortunate but in fact, I cannot see any meaning in this, and I consider that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will certainly never reach his two targets, namely to finance the grants maintaining a single oil price across Canada and to encourage the conservation of energy, as I said at the very beginning of my speech. This increase only aggravates the economic situation which is already unsound. Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is only an inflationary, an unconsidered move, as so many other moves made by this government over the past years. Therefore I am forced to vote against this bill which only aggravates the situation of low income people which is already difficult.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, when considering the budget, the minister should have set a higher tax on alcohol and on tobacco instead of saddling low income earners with a tax on gasoline. Maybe the Minister of Finance does not know that many people need their car to earn a living. But the government preferred to ignore the people. If it had, of course profits would have been considerably smaller than they will be with the excise tax on gasoline. Maybe the minister and the government think that in three years, when the new election will take place, people will have forgotten that budget, but I personally do not believe such a blow below the belt can be easily forgotten.

When I meet people in my constituency, they ask me questions like this one: Does the government ever think of us? And among those people, there are gas station managers who frequently ask me the same question. Big companies increased the price of gasoline. Today, the government is helping them increase it again, and adds to that increase through a tax. Once again, big companies will drive considerable benefits. And we shall pay for it all, since the salaries of pump attendants will have to be increased. Mr. Speaker, in all this, gas station managers have never had the opportunity to increase their profits at the same rate as the salaries they have to pay their employees now.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand how the government could wrestle inflation if they go on increasing prices every year, and I am no economist, but I think it is ridiculous to add fuel to inflation in such a way.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I plead with all my colleagues in this House, since the present government has a majority, to put an end to that discussion, and to all those speeches which all sound alike and are of no avail to the people. Since June 24, people have been paying a 10 cent tax on gasoline, while the bill has not yet been passed; and if my hon. colleagues decide to put an end to that debate, we in this House will all have an opportunity to spend a few days with our families and especially with our children who otherwise will have to go back to school in some time without having taken the full benefit of holidays with their whole family. And I say that again because all those speeches on this bill will bring nothing new to the people of Canada.

I hear my colleagues from the government applauding me. I thank them for it. But if ever speeches do not stop, I shall once again ask those who have just applauded, I shall ask them to urge the Minister of Finance to withdraw the bill so that we can all take holidays.

[English]

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak about a large number of people in my riding on whom the ten cents a gallon excise tax on gasoline places a very great burden. I speak of the many people who work in Fredericton and who must drive to and from their work because there is for them no alternative mode of transportation.

The city of Fredericton has taken over the public bus transportation system which operates only within the city limits. Although many people use this form of transportation, others find that it does not meet their needs. For those who live outside the city there is no form of regular public transportation which can take people to and from their work. The cost of land in the city of Fredericton and the scarcity of it in recent years make it prohibitive for average citizens to buy a building lot and so they must move outside the city to find a building lot they can afford.

What of the farmers in Millville, the workers in the St. Anne-Nackawic Mill, and the folks in Temperancevale who must travel to Fredericton for medical treatment? How else can they get there except by car?

People who live in communities like Stanley, McGivney, Durham, Bloomfield, New Maryland, Keswick and Zealand go to Fredericton to trade. How? There is only one way—by motor vehicle. There is no luxury. It is essential service.

People living in the Fredericton area travel to Oromocto to work, and vice-versa. Some are able to travel by bus; most are not. Civil servants, military personnel, hospital workers, some travel by bus, most cannot. They travel by motor car. There is no other way.

Senior citizens on fixed incomes who get a little pleasure from travelling around the beautiful landscape in central New Brunswick during our lovely maritime summer will find that their little pleasure is also taxed, and it is apparently the government's policy to restrict pleasure driving for senior citizens who have certainly earned the right to avail themselves of this form of recreation. The many wonderful people who on Sunday afternoons take shut-ins out for a drive through the lovely rolling hills in the New Brunswick countryside are also going to be penalized by this tax.

One of New Brunswick's most outstanding industries is the tourist industry and the selection of July 1 as the date when this new tax would be imposed on motor vehicle operators could not have been selected with greater skill if its intention were to hit our tourist industry at the time when it would hurt us most. For our woods workers and farmers, the trip to Fredericton on Friday night or Saturday afternoon to do their shopping, and the trip for a large and growing number of citizens to Saturday morning market in Fredericton are essential for the procurement of food and clothing. For most of these people there is no alternative public transportation system. They must travel in their motor car. Now it is going to cost a lot more and they can ill afford the increase.

These are the Canadians who carry the brunt of the tax. The tax is not a deterrent to them to use less energy because their use is essential to their livelihood. In essence it makes money out of their pockets—money they desperately need to make ends meet in an inflationary economy. This is a tax with a vengeance and without mercy on those least able to pay it.

Fredericton, despite repeated requests on the part of myself and other representatives of the people, as far as I can ascertain is the only provincial capital in Canada which is not served by rail passenger service. Fredericton is connected to other New Brunswick cities by a bus system, but the rural areas in central New Brunswick are not connected to Fredericton by train or by bus. Our airport is now in the process of having its major runway repaired, and while this is welcome news for people in central New Brunswick, on many occasions this summer it will be necessary to impose a load restriction factor on planes flying into and out of Fredericton.

One of my colleagues has indicated in the House some distressing problems encountered in this respect, and I have on several occasions indicated to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), and the Chairman of the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission, my views on the inadequate scheduling of flights. All this can be summed up by indicating that the motor vehicle is the principal means of travel of an essential nature in central New Brunswick, and operators of vehicles for these necessary trips will suffer the most because of this tax.

I submit that a one price system and any subsidy in connection with it should be supported from the general revenues of this country. In my opinion a ten cents a gallon tax on gasoline is the poorest type of tax which could be imposed. Without question, the government must increase its revenues to support a one price system, but to do so by imposing hardship on the people who can least afford to bear it does not appear to me to be an exercise in wisdom.

If my calculations are correct, the increase in the government's revenues as a consequence of the ten cents a gallon increase on gasoline, the increase by $1.50 a barrel in the price of crude oil and the 43 cents per thousand cubic feet increase in the price of natural gas will exceed by at least twice the revenue required to cover the difference between the payment to the eastern provinces and the revenue from the export subsidy levied by the Government of Canada on oil exports.

I hope the minister will reconsider his decision in regard to the ten cents excise tax on gas and consider the discriminatory aspect of it. I suggest that this does virtually nothing for conservation and it is not appropriate for funding the one price policy.

We, in my party, consider the tax to be intolerable because it falls mainly on the working people. In my view the subsidization of the one price system should be a general charge against the national treasury and not against the motorist.

While this tax increase hits hardest at the people in the maritime provinces where public transportation systems are not so much in evidence, it is in the maritime provinces that the Government of Canada can find part of its answer in taking a major step in the direction of conserving power supplies of petroleum and fossil fuel. If the government is serious in its desire to conserve petroleum and reduce our dependence on imported foreign oil for a high percentage of our energy needs, I suggest that we focus our most serious attention on one of the greatest energy potentials in the world which can free millions of barrels of oil every year, and year after year.

At the head of the Bay of Fundy between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia we have one of the most tremendous energy potentials in the world in the form of tidal power. The tides rise and fall some 50 feet twice a day, day in and day out, and this phenomenon will go on forever into the future. The magnitude of this tidal range is higher than anywhere else in the world. The volume of water which regularly and predictably rushes into this unique funnel shaped topography between our two provinces amounts to many times the flow of water in the Saint Lawrence River. The energy which this volume of water could generate when passing through turbines amounts to billions of kilowatt hours when converted into electric energy, and in turn represents millions of barrels of oil available every year, and year after year.

The feasibility of tidal power development in the Bay of Fundy was studied and reported upon in 1969. A review of this study was reported in this House during this session of parliament, and that review recommended five phased studies to move the project forward. These studies are not progressing with the dynamic energy that the current energy crisis requires. It would seem to me that a crash program financed and spearheaded by the Government of Canada is essential if Canada is to meet its energy needs in the immediate future and by the end of the century.

Another area worthy of immediate study by a government seeking to reduce energy consumption is a straight line highway, a direct route from New Brunswick to central Canada through the State of Maine, the Corridor Road, a route that could cut hundreds of miles off the travel distance between central and Atlantic Canada, and for commercial traffic this means hundreds of miles each week and thousand of gallons of gasoline each year.

I would also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has stated, this is an energy conservation measure, the government give full consideration to allowing motorists to deduct from their taxable income—the cost of engine tune ups, carburetor cleanings, air filters, and any other repairs to their vehicles which would increase gasoline mileage and reduce air pollution. This would offer some assistance to the motorists who wish to help the Minister of Finance conserve energy without being punished financially for their good intentions.

My suggestion is that the answer to the problem is not in taxing poor people for whom motor car transportation is essential, but lies in a form of positive leadership in developing alternative sources of energy and supporting the one price system out of the general revenues of our country where the criterion for raising the money should be the ability to pay and not a discriminatory tax like this which hits the hardest those least able to pay.

[Mr. Howie.]

This tax again underlines the failure of the government to give leadership and focus the attention of all departments of government on the matter of regional disparity in the maritimes. DREE invests funds in transportation policies, or the lack of them, and then erodes industrial potential. The Treasury Board pays workers at lower regional rates, and now the Department of Finance exposes workers to severe hardship.

There is no strategy; there is no over-all plan; there is no determination to exterminate regional disparity. But there is a challenge and this government, or more likely the one that succeeds it, must accept the call of the Canadian people to get into the arena and win the day for them. So be it.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in rising in this debate on Bill C-66 I am concerned about a number of things. The bill deals with four topics. If we quickly move from air transportation it strikes me that at first blush this bill is designed to encourage people to stay home, don't drive, but get drunk.

It appears that this bill encourages people to stay home because they will be taxed ten cents a gallon if they get out their cars and drive. Obviously they will remain in their homes because the government has been generous enough to take the tax off insulation materials, which will represent a saving of about $25 per house, and has taken the tax off wine.

I could not help but be somewhat amused by the comments of the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) who spoke in this debate the other night. Since this amendment seeks to delay this bill for a period of six months the hon. member seemed to suggest our attitude was that we should not do anything to solve the problem, that we should just stick our heads in the sand for six months and maybe it would go away. She said this is a terrible thing, that it is an ostrich-like attitude. She said that her government is providing outstanding leadership.

It was very funny when the next day the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) did not try to hoist something for six months but tried to hoist the PLO and the crime conference for an indefinite period. I can only hope that maybe he will stick his head in sand for an indefinite period.

The most obvious function of the excise tax bill is cruelly to put in place an onerous tax of ten cents a gallon on the working poor. I am not sure that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) introduced the measure in the budget on June 23 he really knew what he was doing. On June 23 the minister said this was a conservation measure. On June 25 he said he had not carried out any study to determine how much gasoline would be conserved. He hoped it would be a conservation measure but said that really it was to raise revenue, some $350 million this year, and a larger sum in a full fiscal year.

When asked how the rebates would work and how the people would apply, the Minister of Finance at that time said that they did not have the regulations yet, that he was not too sure but that he hoped the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) would detail these regulations during the budget debate. During the budget debate the Minister of National Revenue had nothing to say, and we can only presume he had nothing to say or to announce because the government had no policy with regard to the regulations. However, it then brought in Bill C-66 to implement the provisions announced in the budget. The bill turned out to be defective and the Speaker ordered it be withdrawn. The Minister of Finance could not even draft the bill properly. It was withdrawn for a day or so, the offending section expunged, the bill returned to the House, and finally the debate continued.

Then the Minister of National Revenue announced that yes, there would be rebates, but the government had just found out that it would have to tax the rebates, and nobody had ever mentioned that before. So I can only conclude that the government went along in an ad hoc manner, with the minister finally stumbling on the fact that he would have to tax the rebates. Certainly this does not indicate good planning or any sort of leadership.

Now on July 22, one month after the budget was introduced on June 23, we have the Minister of National Revenue indicating what the government plans to do. However, in effect he said nothing. He said yes, there would be rebates. As a matter of fact he said the government could implement a rebate system within two to three weeks. Then he added "We don't plan on issuing any rebates until after Labour Day". So it appears that if the bill passes this week, although there would be almost six weeks to Labour Day, he does not intend to implement rebates within two to three weeks, as he said he could; the government is going to wait until after Labour Day. I can only come to the conclusion that his statement about implementing them within two to three weeks is hogwash.

The minister did not throw much light on the regulations. He said people would have to fill out a form and would have to send the form in to claim a rebate. If a person was owed as much as $200 a month rebate, then he could apply monthly. However, if a rebate were anything less than $200, a person would have to apply semi-annually.

If a person, for example, was owed $150 a month, this means that at the end of a six month period he would have $900 owed him by the government. This does not strike me as very equitable and it draws a distinction between large users, which will likely be the big corporations, and the small users of gasoline, say an independent salesman. The government is forgetting the small, independent businessman, the small contractor or industry. They will have to borrow this $900 from the bank. If they are on an overdraft, they might have to pay 11 to 13 per cent interest, and, as I say, the situation does not strike me as at all equitable.

The minister said that the forms people will have to fill in have been drafted, but when we asked him to table one of these forms, he said he could not. I can only conclude that he does not have any forms to table. Indeed, I do not think the government in fact knows what it is doing. If I may use an expression of the Liberals and return it to them, they are asking the people to buy a pig in a poke. We have the pig all right, and would like to find out what the government intends to do with it.

The fact is that this ten cents a gallon excise tax is a very regressive tax. If I may fairly state the matter, when the government is under attack for bringing in an unfair tax it should have the decency, if it intends to represent the people of this country, to reconsider its position. Obviously the Liberals seem to be digging in their heels. The Minister of Finance does not appear here to listen to the debate; he is represented by his parliamentary secretary, who himself is not listening but talking to another member. The government does not really know what is going on. Hon. members opposite have not been out on the hustings to question people up and down the streets of the cities of this country.

I do not mean to be antagonistic to my hon. friends opposite who presently form the government, but let me compare this with another situation where a government imposed a very unpopular and, if I may say so, regressive tax. Some two or three years ago the Honourable John White, then treasurer of the government of Ontario, introduced a 7 per cent tax on heating oil. This was a regressive tax which was attacked by all parties, including his own. The Conservative party, the government of Ontario, and the treasury had enough guts to say, "We have been wrong, it is a regressive measure", and the treasurer withdrew it. We do not find this happening with the arrogant people on the other side who merely want to rip off the Canadian public to line the treasury of the federal government, at the same time trying to hide behind energy conservation.

This regressive tax measure will cost the average working person some $200 to $300 a year out of his or her after tax income, taking into account increased heating fuel costs and unemployment insurance premiums as well. Surely by taking that much out of the taxpayers' after tax income the government is not only fuelling inflation but is encouraging inflation by inviting another round of increased wage demands.

It should be pointed out that price increases exert a direct and measurable upward pressure on costs, and a direct and measurable downward pressure on job creation. They are inflationary, increase unemployment and can erode our industrial competitiveness in many ways. For example, since funds will be taken out of people's pockets they will not be able to buy the goods that manufacturers put on the market.

It strikes me that these negative effects do not bear equally on all Canadians. This is obvious in terms of the worker who finds himself unable to secure a job. According to a recent United States study reported in the energy policy project of the Ford Foundation, families with an annual income of less than $2,500 spent 15.2 per cent of their income to purchase energy, whereas those with an income exceeding $24,500 spent 4.1 per cent. A University of Toronto study indicated exactly the same position in Canada. It is only fair to point out that because of this tax poor people will have to spend a disproportionate amount of their income on energy compared to rich people.

Oil and gas price escalation is a regressive form of taxation that will contribute to inflation and unemployment, as well as to the dislocation of the economy. At such time when inflation is contained and unemployment in Canada is substantially reduced, it may be appropriate to consider higher prices of fuel, but not in the manner of this ten cents a gallon excise tax. I suggest that perhaps this country will have to go to the world price of a barrel of oil over a period, but only after we have overcome the economic difficulties we are facing.

But I suggest we should approach this in the proper way, instead of the federal government in effect making those who drive a motor vehicle pay the world price for fuel.

I believe that the constituents in the constituency of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton as well as those in other parts of Ontario are opposed to this ten cents a gallon tax being imposed until inflation is brought under control, unemployment in the province—in my constituency it presently stands at 15 per cent—is reduced, and people put to productive work.

● (2040)

I believe the federal proposal announced in the budget is an unreasonable one. Along with the increase in home heating costs it will generate some $2 billion in additional revenue. But it will not provide extra money to the companies to enable them to find new oil. The proceeds of the tax go directly to Ottawa. I believe, moreover, that its imposition will have severe repercussions in the province of Ontario. In the next 12 months we shall see the consumer price index rising by 2 per cent because of these increases in fuel prices. Then, because of the loss of purchasing power in the hands of consumers, we shall find there are upward of 15,000 fewer jobs in the province.

To say this tax will damage industry is to put it mildly. Already, throughout Ontario and in other parts of the country as well, resort and tourist operators are suffering. People are not bringing their boats from the United States into the Rideau Canal system or into the Trent and Severn systems because they can use their boats more cheaply at home. The minister brought this tax in just as an important industry was getting off the ground, and it is having an unfortunate effect on employment in this area.

The minister estimates this ten cents tax will generate some $350 million but he does not tell us how much it will cost to administer. I suggest that a healthy proportion of the money will be eaten up by administrative costs. And while the government keeps the money, individuals, companies, and small independent businessmen will have to borrow money at interest rates between 11 and 13 per cent until they get their rebates—another cost factor to add to inflation.

It would be unparliamentary for me to say the Minister of Finance lied or deliberately misled the House by saying these measures would help conserve gasoline consumption, so I will not say that. But I can say that the minister by sleight of hand did deceive the House into making us believe that energy conservation was a high priority in his mind. I see that on page 32 of the minister's nicely bound budget speech the third paragraph commences:

> The increased cost of gasoline resulting from these measures will encourage motorists to make their driving habits more efficient in terms of saving gasoline.

[Mr. Dick.]

Later on, after a lot of mumbo jumbo about the conservation of fuels, he adds: "improved driving practices—can make significant contributions to needed fuel conservation".

In fact in the course of the next question period, on June 25, he admitted he had taken the steps outlined in the budget without making an estimation of any fuel conservation which might result. As reported at page 7043 of Hansard, he admitted, "The primary purpose of the tax is to pay for a single oil price in Canada." In other words, the purpose was to raise revenue, not a cent of which will go to the producing provinces or to the oil companies. None of it will help to find new sources of oil.

Escalating the price of oil and natural gas is frequently advocated as a means of reducing the rate of growth of consumption of these energy sources. In fact the relationship between the price of energy and its consumption is much too complex to be described by the simple assertion that higher prices result in reduced consumption. Gas prices have gone up from about 39 cents a gallon in the Ottawa area in 1973 to about 72 cents for regular gasoline. During this period there has been no noticeable decline in gasoline consumption. The price of regular gasoline could probably go up to $1.25 or $1.35 before people even considered reducing their purchases.

I would draw attention to one other aspect of what the Minister of Finance has said, because it bears repetition. He had the effrontery to say, on June 23, that the increased cost of gasoline would encourage the use of public transportation. Last spring, a little more than a year ago, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) told us that transportation is in a mess.

Mr. Benjamin: So is he.

Mr. Dick: True, but we are just talking about his department tonight. It is still in a mess. During the election campaign the government of the day promised its way to victory to the tune of $3.5 billion worth of promises, almost $1 billion worth of which related to what it planned to do in the field of mass transportation. They offered the electorate high-sounding words. They even issued a paper in the middle of the campaign. But since then we have heard no policy setting out what they propose to do in the area of mass transit. In fact in the very budget we are discussing the Minister of Finance cut back the funds available to the Minister of Transport.

Now, after this failure to produce a policy, the Minister of Finance has the effrontery to say that this tax will encourage the use of public transport. There are two cities in Canada which have good mass transit systems—Montreal and Toronto. But Canada is not just Montreal and Toronto. There is an awful lot more to Canada than those two cities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: In my constituency of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton people from Carleton Place ordinarily travel to and from Renfrew, which is 26 miles away. They travel on a daily basis from Renfrew to Arnprior, a distance of 21 miles; they drive from Renfrew and Arnprior to Ottawa, which is 40 and 50 miles, and return. They drive these distances because they have to do so. If they did not, another government department, the Unemployment Insurance Commission, would step in and say they were disqualified because they have to be available for work and possess transportation to get within 40 miles of where they live. So, when the Commission says people must be able to travel 40 miles, it means they must have cars because I am not aware of any rapid transit systems which cover such an area.

So people are being told by one government department that they must be able to travel to go to work. The Minister of Finance says he will encourage and provide mass transit, when we know it is impossible because the Minister of Transport does not have a policy for mass transit. So people must take their cars. People such as factory workers, janitors, and people who work in the service industry, the lowest paid in the country, must drive in whatever car they have, whether it be a 65 model or, if they are lucky, a 74 or 75 model. It is these people who will be penalized and will have to pay.

I do not believe this measure is reasonable or fair, especially when the minister indicated that doctors will be able to claim a rebate on the ten cents a gallon tax, and so will lawyers, and company officials and executives who drive company cars. But what about the working stiff? This government does not care about the guy who works.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: A member of the NDP joined us last night to give a speech, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). He sounded reasonable for a change, more so than the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

There is one further problem which I want to point out and which the government is perpetuating and encouraging, because one level of government is continually working against another level. I live in a constituency, of which I am very proud, which unfortunately, because of unemployment and loss of opportunities in one portion of it, the Renfrew county area, has been designated by DREE. Fortunately in part of the Arnprior area, because of DREE a number of industries have located there. However, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), that great minister from Toronto—"Blarney" they call him, I think—does not provide any money for building houses, so there is no housing in the Arnprior area, but the industries are there and they have to employ people. Many of those people live in Ottawa and commute to Arnprior. These are the type of people who will be penalized because in this government one department does not work in co-ordination with the other so that the whole area could prosper. On top of that the government brings in a tax which works against these poor people who have to travel because of the inadequate housing policy.

I do not want to prolong my comments on this matter any further. I have tried to make a number of points which I think are important, one of them being that the working person must be considered, not just the rich people. I will give another example, that of a province, Ontario, which withdrew its support for a regressive tax. This government should reconsider its position.

It strikes me that of the five people on the government benches who have stood up to defend this tax, probably the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) said it best when he spoke of the "silly season" because we were all still here. But may I point out that it is the silly season because the government brought in such a silly tax.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: —as a result of the clamorous approbation and demand for me to make a few remarks this evening I am not only willing but anxious to take part in the debate on this bill because, when the budget was brought down, together with the usual bills that accompany it, my reaction and my comments at that time were that they are measures that attack the sick, the old, and the poor. I thought that at a time when the government should be worrying more about the people I mentioned, this kind of legislation would be the last kind it would have introduced.

Even if we gave the Liberal party the benefit of the doubt and even if we called them liberals with a small "l", even if we admitted they might be honest, upright, and sensitive human beings who have some feelings and compassion for their fellow citizens in less fortunate circumstances, one would have thought that they might have done any one of a number of other things rather than what they did in this bill in order to accomplish the same ends, namely, finding $350 million more this year, and $525 million each year thereafter.

I want to suggest some alternatives which should have been in this legislation but are not, and also I want to add to what has been said by many other hon. members—including some members on the government side I was pleased to hear—on the injustice and unfairness of this legislation. If there is anything that the Liberals have raved about since before Confederation, it is how just and fair they are. Yet this legislation could not be more unjust and unfair. Its objective, as the minister stated, is to raise enough money to cover the deficit in the oil compensation fund. Another objective is to provide for the conservation of energy, and still another is to encourage people to use other modes of transportation. All these are laudable objectives. But the government uses the worst kinds of methods to achieve these objectives, and I submit that by using them it will not in fact achieve the objectives.

Let me deal first with the matter of injustice and unfairness. Mention has been made a number of times about who will be eligible for rebates. We know it is those who do not need the rebates. We know it is those with the highest income, the highest wherewithal, and those who enjoy the greatest wellbeing who will receive the rebates.

I know the Liberals are usually backward, but when they go to these lengths they should not be surprised at the length of this debate. In fact I hope the government House leader has noted with some qualms this evening that we have more news for him. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is back in the House in good health and will take part in this debate. I know that all hon. members will welcome him back to this chamber. If there is anybody who is an expert in showing the injustice and unfairness of the Liberal government, he is the one.

He is a past master at it, and I look forward to hearing him in this debate on a number of occasions.

Let us talk about the unfairness and injustice of this legislation. Those who will be eligible for rebates are doctors, among others. Doctors do not make house calls—I have not found one in years who would make a house call—but they will get refunds for driving to work. Where do they drive to? They drive to their offices, all the expenses for which they can deduct from their income tax. When they do not drive to their office, they drive to the hospital, which is totally maintained at the taxpayers' expense. And for that they are entitled to a gasoline tax rebate. Contrast that with a steelworker in the city of Regina who lives in the south end of the city and who must drive to a steel plant north of the city limits. He will put 6,000 miles a year on his automobile driving to work, the same as the doctor about whom I spoke.

● (2100)

Mrs. Holt: Steelworkers make pretty good money.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, back home when we hear noises like the one I just heard from the hon. lady across the way, we say it sounds like a coyote with heartburn.

Mr. Orlikow: You are being unfair to coyotes.

Mr. Benjamin: The steelworker will put 6,000 miles per year on his car driving to work, and using the figure of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) of 16 miles to the gallon, that is 475 gallons. The ten cents per gallon in this bill will cost $47.50. The five cents per gallon for the increase in the price of oil makes another $23.75. As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said this afternoon, you can bet that with those increases the refiners, wholesalers, bulk dealers and retailers will pass on their percentage mark up, and by the time it goes through the hose into automobile gasoline tanks we will be paying an additional five cents per gallon. The increase in total under this legislation and other legislation resulting from the budget will be 18 cents to 22 cents per gallon. That means $95 to $100 per year more for that steelworker.

All I can say is that there goes that $100 per year tax rebate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) so generously handed out prior to the last federal election. He has taken the whole thing back. However, the real point is that the doctor drives to work in exactly the same way as the steelworker, but the doctor gets the refund. His income is $50,000 to $100,000 per year in Saskatchewan. He receives the refund, but the steelworker who earns $9,000 to $11,000 per year and who drives even more miles to work does not receive it. Any self-respecting Liberal I know in Regina-Lake Centre does not call this just or fair.

Mrs. Holt: Check your figures.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I will check my figure, but not that of the hon. member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) is seeking the floor to ask a question of the hon. member. This can only be done with the consent of the hon. member.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Benjamin: Agreed.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, I actually should ask a series of questions. I wonder where the hon. member got his inflated idea of doctors' incomes. I wonder where he got the idea that doctors drive to hospitals when they can walk. Does he mean that they could walk when they are answering an emergency call? If they have to go down three times a night, should they walk, or should they drive their cars? I just wonder where the hon. member gets the $50,000 to $100,000 income figures. I would like him to quote figures from some authority.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I could not care less if the doctor walks, takes the bus or drives his car. That is not the point.

An hon. Member: Let's hope it's your life in doubt.

Mr. Benjamin: In fact the doctor who makes emergency calls down to the emergency ward at the hospital in the middle of the night is no different from a good friend of mine who is a foreman at a steel plant. He can be called back to the plant several times a week on emergencies. Doctors can receive refunds on the gas tax, and the steelworker cannot. That is what we are complaining about, and that is what is unfair and unjust.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have compared the figures of the hon. member with my figures, and I think he suffers from an intellectual astigmatism.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Since I want to use up my 40 minutes, I hope Your Honour is deducting all these entertaining interjections which I am allowing. I would not want the House not to have the full benefit of my entire 40 minutes.

Let us move to the next group of people whom the Liberals say they feel so strongly for, stand up for, and fight for. Let us consider old age pensioners who may or may not be on a guaranteed income supplement. They do some driving, but not very much. They do things like drive to get their groceries, and to the doctor. The doctor will not come to see them. They drive to see their children and their grandchildren. The Minister of Finance, Mr. Scrooge, and the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Midas, are trying to chisel old age pensioners out of another $1 or $2 a month with the gasoline tax.

What has the government accomplished? As with the worker, where they will not take back the $100 tax rebate it granted a year ago. Now with the old age pensioners the government can take back that pittance of an escalator clause in the cost of living index which old age pensioners receive. The last increase was, I believe, $2.33 per month. Now the government can take it back from the pensioners with the gasoline tax for the few paltry miles those people drive, and they cannot receive a rebate, but doctors and commercial enterprises can.

People cannot receive the rebate, and I want to say that I am not implying that doctors are not people. My hon. friend across the way is a real fine example of people, but doctors act like corporations and are treated like corporations by this government.

Let us go another step and consider the handicapped. One of my hon. friends to my right raised this matter this afternoon when questioning the Minister of National Revenue. Mr. Scrooge and Mr. Midas sit on the government benches. Mr. Midas, the Minister of National Revenue, said that there is no way he could or would amend this legislation to allow for rebates for the handicapped.

Mr. Cullen: He didn't say that.

Mr. Benjamin: That is the way I heard it, and that may or may not be something the governor in council will consider. I have a letter which arrived the other day, and incidentally I wrote to the Minister of Finance on July 9. I have not as yet received an answer. The letter I received is from a senior official in a department or branch of the government of Saskatchewan, and he said that one of his senior staff members is a record review officer and a paraplegic. Other than his wheel chair his only means of transportation is his car. It is a specially equipped automobile. It is the only thing in which he can ride. He is earning a living. He has learned to cope with an affliction with which most of us could not cope. He is not eligible for a rebate, but doctors and commercial enterprises are.

Mr. Epp: And they laugh.

Mr. Benjamin: If there is any conscience whatsoever in the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Finance, or any other Liberal over there, they will amend their legislation now. They will add a clause so that there will be a clause 47(f), or (h) or whatever so that the handicapped are automatically eligible for the rebate.

● (2110)

Let us look at some more of these injustices. The minister says this measure is aimed at conservation of energy, and that people will shift to other modes of transportation. If he is correct and if that happens to any degree at all, I hope somebody over there can tell me how the minister is going to raise the $350 million to $550 million that he needs. If the legislation has one of the minister's desired effects then it will not bring in the ten cents per gallon. It is just stupid. I have seen the Liberals do some dumb things, Mr. Speaker, but this is the dumbest. That is why it cannot and will not work; that is why it cannot achieve one of the objectives that the minister claims.

I have listened to members talk about transportation in this House and, Mr. Speaker, that subject has been my main concern since I came here in 1968. I say that the alternatives to automobiles are either inaccessible to the mass of working people who will not be eligible for rebate or are of insufficient frequency or capacity, or both. In addition, fares are not low enough to encourage people to shift to another mode of transportation, whether for work or pleasure.

I heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) castigate his counterpart in Ontario, saying if he is so concerned why does he not reduce the provincial gasoline tax? As usual, Madam Speaker, Saskatchewan is ahead on this, and the NDP is keeping it that way.

Mrs. Campagnolo: That is why everybody is leaving.

Mr. Benjamin: Three thousand people have just come back from Alberta.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Or B.C.

Mr. Benjamin: One is as good as the other. Madam Speaker, Saskatchewan has forgone ten cents per gallon of its gasoline tax. It has forgone seven cents per gallon directed to the consumer, and another three cents per gallon no longer goes to the provincial treasury; it goes into the automobile insurance fund.

An hon. Member: Because they lose money on it.

Mr. Benjamin: No, they do not. In B.C., they are still learning. They still have not got rid of all the reactionary capitalists who are fighting public automobile insurance.

I want to remind the hon. member that one of the principles that guides us in automobile insurance in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba is that we say that anybody who would make a profit off the misfortunes of others is immoral.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: That is why we have an automobile insurance plan in three provinces and, mark my words, it is going to be in another couple pretty soon.

Saskatchewan forgoes nine cents per gallon of the gasoline tax. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said today that if we are so concerned about consumers we should do that, and we did. Now the Minister of Finance takes ten cents per gallon more, and the consumers in Saskatchewan are worse off than before. Saskatchewan has the second lowest gas tax in Canada. Alberta has ten cents per gallon tax and Saskatchewan has 12 cents. In our province we tried to do something to protect consumers from the rising costs of energy, and not only did we get no thanks from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but the Minister of Finance demanded another ten cents per gallon.

I should now like to turn to unemployment insurance cases. I am not going to talk about unemployment insurance premiums which were mentioned several times in this debate as an additional iniquitous and unfair tax. Unemployment insurance regulations say that, when you are unemployed, to be entitled to benefits you must be fully available for and actively seeking employment. This is where the Liberals forget about the hundreds of thousands of people in this country who live in small cities, towns, and villages and farms, and who are unemployed.

To illustrate—a constituent of mine in the village of Semans, Saskatchewan, who was unemployed last year was told by the UIC that seeking employment in his villages and six neighbouring villages was not sufficient; he should seek employment in the city of Regina. It is a good thing he did not find anything there because it is 80 miles away. It would have been a round trip of 160 miles per day, and with the additional ten cents per gallon there is no doubt he would be better off unemployed.

The incongruities and inconsistencies in this legislation show just how dumb the government is. There are alternative ways of raising the same amount of money, and I am not disputing the desire of the government to raise several hundreds of millions of dollars for the oil compensation fund. But it does not need to and should not be raising it through people who can least afford to pay it, and exempt the people who can most afford to pay it.

We have suggested several times that the income tax system should be used in one form or other. Let us look at what a thinking Liberal might do.

An hon. Member: Where?

An hon. Member: There is no such thing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is not here tonight.

Mr. Benjamin: Wait for it! If you found a thinking large "l" Liberal he would at least have the imagination to say, "Let's put it on the personal income tax". That at least would have some relationship to ability to pay.

The projection of the federal government is that in 1975-76 it will raise $11.4 billion in personal income taxes. To raise that additional $525 million that it says it needs for the oil compensation fund in order to have one price across the country would mean an effective tax rate increase of 5 per cent in the higher brackets. That would raise $500 million or $525 million, and would be a marked improvement over the method chosen in Bill C-66.

Let us go beyond what a thinking Liberal might do—that will take in most of the population of Canada. In 1974 industrial corporations paid $5 billion in corporation income tax. That was an effective tax rate of 32.4 per cent, since their net income before taxes totalled $15.5 billion. A 3.3 per cent increase in the effective tax rate for corporations would give the government the $525 million it says it needs in 12 months. That is a second alternative which could be used for raising this money, and I suggest it is even better than anything a thinking Liberal might do. I will give the Conservatives credit; they might think of the idea, but they might not do it.

Let me propose two other alternatives the government might consider. This afternoon the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands mentioned a surcharge on corporate tax, or a combination of a surcharge on corporate taxes and a higher tax on individuals in higher income brackets. You could raise $525 million if you imposed a surcharge of 4.6 per cent on individual taxable income. You could raise $525 million with a 10 per cent surcharge on corporate taxes payable. Or you could use a combination of these methods, but the point is that they are related to ability to pay. You could and should also exempt those in the low and low-middle income categories, and you could still obtain more than the $525 million you need.

Let me suggest a final, good New Democratic Party socialist alternative. It would be simple to implement and, in a way, provide corporations with a benefit not available to others.

Mr. Epp: Yes, the benefit of nationalization.

Mr. Benjamin: As at the end of the first quarter of this year there were outstanding on the books of this country over $7 billion in deferred corporate taxes.

An hon. Member: That's right, tax everyone out of existence.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, the hon. member might learn something if he would listen. Everyone knows that those deferred taxes will never be paid. As I say, there were $7 billion worth of deferred taxes on the books, as of March 31 last. They represent an interest free loan from the people of Canada to those corporations, by virtue of the workings of our tax system. Let me recommend this socialist alternative to Bill C-66. Remembering that our constituents must pay between 10 per cent and 12 per cent for mortgages, and that you cannot obtain an individual loan for anything less than 11 per cent or 12 per cent, we should charge the corporations in Canada which owe $7 billion in deferred taxes the low interest rate of 7.5 per cent on those deferred taxes. That is how you could raise your $525 million for the oil fund.

The rest of the citizens of this country cannot defer their taxes. If they could I am sure the Minister of Finance and the Liberal sheep would think of some way to charge them interest. Why not charge the corporations interest? If the party opposite, the so-called party of the just society which supports free enterprise, supports a system of deferred taxes under our tax system, surely it should not support the idea of these deferred taxes being an interest free loan from the public of Canada. I suggest we should be garnering some modest rate of interest; and, at today's rate I think 7.5 per cent on those $7 billion of deferred tax would be a very modest rate. It would not be excessive.

No self-respecting corporation could complain about paying too high an interest rate. They pay much more when they want to build a shopping centre or high rise office building. They will borrow money at 10 per cent or 12 per cent for those; but the people of Canada would only charge them 7.5 per cent on those deferred taxes. If you did that you would have more than you require for the oil compensation program. I suspect that the 7.5 per cent paid on deferred taxes would do more than meet the requirements of the oil compensation fund. It would provide tens of millions of dollars more, which could go to exploration and development of oil, gas, and other energy sources. It would be applauded and accepted by the people generally, and reputable corporations would say it is fair. The disreputable ones, the friends of the Liberal party, may not think it is fair. That's tough.

At one time Liberals and free enterprisers generally used to get some money from the rich and votes from the poor, and promised to protect them from each other. They refined that. Now they give money to the rich and take it from the poor, and still say they are protecting them from each other.

Why did I suggest either a surcharge on the corporate tax-payer in higher income brackets of 10 per cent, or a 7.5 per cent interest rate on deferred taxes owing as of March 31 last? What has been happening in this country? I made those suggestions because of the imbalance that has occurred since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his regime came to power in 1968. Madam Speaker, in 1968-69 individual taxpayers in Canada paid 34 per cent of the total tax revenues of the government; corporations paid 20 per cent. There was a spread between 34 per cent and 20 per cent.

By 1970-71, under this just society type of government, individual taxpayers were paying 41 per cent of the total tax bill and the corporate share had dropped to 17 per cent.

By 1972-73 the just society boys with their organizational genius had arranged for the individual taxpayer to pay 43 per cent of the total tax load and the corporations to pay only 16 per cent.

This year there has been a slight recovery. In 1975-76 the individual taxpayer will still carry 41 per cent of the load, but the corporations will have to carry 20 per cent.

By collecting that $525 million from the corporations in 12 months, the government will increase the corporate share of the tax load in this country by another two or three percentage points and make the corporations bear a slightly fairer share of the tax burden of this country.

I have suggested three or four alternatives, one of which even a thinking Liberal could buy. Even if you levied extra tax on personal incomes, that measure would be fairer and more justified than what is proposed in Bill C-66. If the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Revenue and all those seals and sheep on the government side want to get home fast, let them follow my suggestion. It would take only two or three days for the Minister of Finance to bring in a new bill which incorporates any one of my suggestions, and everyone will be surprised at how fast it will pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired.

● (2130)

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate this evening in support of the amendment of my leader to give the bill a six months' hoist.

This bill is a rather interesting piece of legislation. It results from a lack of foresight on the part of the government. This lack of foresight is the failure to develop an adequate energy policy and adequate transportation policy.

The bill does four things. First, it takes the excise tax off insulation materials, storm windows and storm doors, something that should have been done a long time ago. While it will only result in a saving of about $25 per home, this portion of the bill is worth while. It is welcomed.

Second, the bill increases the transportation tax, putting a burden on the travelling public. If the money from this transportation tax were used to update landing facilities in the various airports across Canada it would be welcome. If you talk to some of the airline pilots they will tell you that landing facilities at many airports in Canada are inadequate to handle the larger jets, and in some respects are hazardous. No one would object to a tax on transportation if the moneys were used in the interest of safety for the travelling public. However, I suspect that the money will be used on Mirabel and Pickering airports.

The bill further reduces the tax on domestic wines with more than 7 per cent alcohol by 20 cents per gallon. For wines with less than 7 per cent alcohol, the reduction is 40 cents per gallon. The bill increases the tax on gasoline by ten cents a gallon. It seems that the minister has his priorities mixed. He imposes a ten cents excise tax on a gallon of gasoline and reduces the tax on wines by from 20 to 40 cents per gallon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Neil: The minister gave a reason for this in his budget speech.

An hon. Member: To get drunk.

Mr. Neil: I quote from page 26 of the minister's budget speech:

> Second, I have also been persuaded by many representations that the increased excise imposed last fall on wine is seriously affecting the domestic wine and grape growing industry of the country. The excise will therefore be reduced to its previous level effective tonight.

One would have thought the minister would have had the foresight to see that this ten cents a gallon tax on gasoline, on top of the other various programs of this government over the years which have led to high rates of inflation, will affect the citizens of this country. Perhaps they more than the wine industry are entitled to a break. After all we can do without wine, but we cannot do without gas.

What is the purpose of this ten cents a gallon tax on gasoline? The minister made two points in his budget. First, he talked about the gap between the compensation payments on oil imports, saying that these had grown rapidly due to the fact that the volume of our oil exports had fallen while our imports had risen. He said at page 32 of his budget speech, and I quote:

> Although the increase in the domestic oil price and the forthcoming adjustments in the import compensation program will help, the gap will be substantial.
> It is difficult to be precise about the figures because the amount depends upon international prices, export volume and a number of other domestic and international factors. The cost of the subsidy for eastern consumers will be about $1.3 billion this year. The gap between that cost and the export charge revenues is likely to be several hundred million dollars in fiscal 1975-76 and may widen in future.

This tax, according to the minister, will raise approximately $350 million in the balance of this fiscal year. If one relates that to a twelve month period it amounts to almost $420 million. That means the car owners and operators of this country will contribute $420 million in the next year to subsidize the province of Quebec and the maritimes.

As a Canadian I believe in an equalized price for gasoline throughout all of Canada. However, like many in western Canada, I feel that equalization should work both ways. When central Canada was paying much less per gallon for gas at the pumps than we in western Canada, there was no talk of such equalization. However, when it appeared that central Canada was going to pay more than the west, equalization became the order of the day. I suggest that the government should look at some of the other inequities that exist between central Canada, western Canada and the maritimes, and perhaps consider an equalization of freight rates.

I think that statistics will bear me out when I say that the majority of motorists are in the low and middle income group, the group that can least afford to pay the added tax. It is a regressive tax. I am sure that government members, like members of the opposition, are receiving numerous letters from their constituents complaining about the tax. I wish to read into the record part of a letter I received this morning from a senior citizen in the city of Moose Jaw. It was mailed on July 19. That is pretty good considering the post office service. I quote:

Dear Mr. Neil:

Another complaint from me and believe me I am writing the words of many more like myself. It is the gas increase. That is deplorable that it should really be taken out on the little person. For myself, I am a senior citizen. I have a small car, which is my only entertainment. I am a widow. I do not smoke, drink, play bingo nor even go to a hairdresser. I have the one enjoyment, my car, where my little spare bit of money goes. I do not only use it for my own enjoyment. I also pick up other seniors once in a while and take them for a ride, also go to visit older ones in homes. Now I can assure you that I will be cutting down, on seeing gas going up 15 cents.

Most everything the government tries to get working to get money or taxes seems to always hit the little fellow so much more than it should. The ones that need their cars badly for essentials are going to have a rebate. Well I can see that in some places, but what about the farmers that can first of all use the cheaper gas and also use their trucks for many things not including pleasure, and get a rebate.

I am sure you will bring this up in the 'House'. I do hope so anyway and I will appreciate it.

So sorry for the messy letter, but I am so mad, and also in such a hurry, for I am going to write the same thing to Mr. Turner.

● (2140)

I think that letter speaks for itself. There could be many other letters read from students, for example, who commute from the City of Moose Jaw to the University of Saskatchewan in Regina almost daily, a distance of some 80 miles. I think of the employees of potash plants who must commute 40 or 50 miles every day. I think of other wage earners around the province who have to travel countless miles to and from their employment. I would be interested to hear members on the government side read into the record some of the letters they have received.

I was interested in a document I received a day or so ago, a summary of the views of the Canadian Automobile Association, dated July 10, 1975. I would commend this document to the minister for reading. It contains a short paragraph on discrimination, which states:

The excise tax on gasoline is applied with respect to personal use only and thereby singles out the private motorist. But it permits business, commercial, government and municipal exemptions. Taxis and farm motorists are also exempted. The businessman, notably the commercial salesman, and others are high consumers of gasoline, yet they escape the excise tax.

This tax can do nothing but lead to demands for higher wages and to ever increasing inflation. It will require a larger bureaucracy to administer the exemptions and so on, and this will add to the cost of government. From another point of view one can imagine the frustration which is bound to be felt by the various individuals who must keep records in order to comply with the arrangements for refunds. This means one more government form to be filled in by business people and others, and higher costs for bookkeeping. It would be interesting to find out what percentage of a bookkeeper's time is spent completing government forms.

I have one suggestion for the minister which, if adopted, might lessen the cost of administering the tax. It has to do with the farming community in Saskatchewan. The minister may or may not be aware that in Saskatchewan the farm community makes use of purple gas for its farm operations. It would appear to be a simple matter to draw up the bill or the regulations in such a way as to exempt purple gas from this tax, since the purple gas used by farmers is used directly in the business of farming and would be exempt in any event under this legislation.

The minister made two further comments in the course of his budget speech. As recorded at page 32 he said:

The increased cost of gasoline resulting from these measures should encourage motorists to make their driving habits more efficient in terms of saving gasoline—The increased cost of gasoline will also encourage the use of public transportation, thereby helping to relieve the growing congestion in our cities.

If the minister goes to Saskatchewan he will find some public transportation in the form of buses in the cities, but between the various smaller towns in the province, and between those towns and the cities, there is no transportation other than the motor vehicle. As a matter of fact there are only two passenger trains in Saskatchewan and they are both trans-continental, one, the CN train going through Saskatoon, and the other on the CP line going through Regina. I might add that one has to get up in the middle of the night to catch these trains and that they dump you off at two or three in the morning when you return. In brief, there is no effective public transportation system to serve the people of the prairie provinces.

As I said when I began my address, the bill before us is evidence of lack of foresight on the part of the government. It illustrates, first of all, the government's failure to develop an adequate transportation policy and, second, its failure to develop an adequate energy policy. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said that transportation in Canada is a mess. I suggest that energy, and energy policy are also a mess. I was interested last Thursday night in listening to a speech by the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo). I should like to quote one paragraph from her speech, as reported at page 7686 of Hansard of July 17. She had this to say:

The amendment to this bill which seeks to delay its introduction for six months is a most significant one. It tells us a great deal about the policies of those who support it. The most charitable description I can think of is that it represents the ostrich school of political thought—"Don't do anything to solve the problem; just stick your head in the sand for six months and maybe it will go away."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: A darned good speech!

Mrs. Holt: It shows there is some talent over here—a little originality!

Mr. Neil: I think the hon. lady was confused. Either the heat had gotten to her or she spoke in jest, because if she had sat back and thought for a moment she would have realized that her remarks about the ostrich school of politics describe the present government exactly. The Liberal government has for many years stuck its head in the sand.

Mr. Whittaker: Too bad it wasn't quicksand.

Mr. Neil: And if she thinks what she calls the big blue ostrich in Queen's Park will be replaced by what she calls a progressive and forward looking bright red Liberal bird of substance, thought, and good government, that big red Liberal bird will be shot down by the gun of the voter, and the bright red plumage will flutter across the countryside of Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hooray!

Mr. Neil: Over the years Canadians have been led to believe there were unlimited supplies of oil and gas in our country. We were led to believe that all we had to do was to go to western Canada or to the Arctic and punch holes down, and the gas and oil would come spouting forth. Suddenly the situation changed overnight. The OPEC nations increased their prices and the government and the National Energy Board began shouting shortages. Any shortages are and will be the fault of the government.

● (2150)

The policy of the government is such that it is discouraging exploration and development. We see oil and gas rigs leaving the country almost every week, together with the skilled crews required to operate those rigs. The rigs should be in western Canada and the northern Arctic, exploring and developing our future supplies of gas and oil. The government should have had the foresight to anticipate a few years ago that we would be faced with shortages. The government should have anticipated that our future reserves lie primarily in northern Canada and that a pipeline down the Mackenzie valley was a necessity. In addition, a land settlement with the native people is necessary before the pipeline can be built with the least amount of social and economic unrest among our native people.

Over the past number of years the government has anticipated nothing; it has merely proceeded in an ad hoc manner. The result was that no attempt was made to deal with the problems and claims of the native people until an application was made to build the pipe line. The Berger commission should have been set up years ago, instead of under the shadow of an energy crisis in the north.

I was interested to hear the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) speak about multinational corporations. It seems to me that many of these multinational corporations are now being looked upon as corporate welfare bums. I point out that without the oil companies we would never have had an oil supply developed in Canada. We would never have had the resources we have had in the past and which we have today.

The government has not told the public that for every gallon of gas sold in Canada the provincial and federal gasoline and excise tax takes anywhere from a low of 41.5 per cent of the basic price of a gallon of gas in Alberta to a high of 60 per cent in the province of Quebec. Neither has it told the public that out of the $8 wellhead price for gas the federal and provincial governments, through royalties and federal and provincial income taxes, take upwards of 75 per cent. We have developed Petro-Can to solve our problems, but I wonder whether Petro-Can will be able to operate on 25 per cent of the wellhead prices as well as paying its interest on its debt, exploration development and production costs. Looking at the balance sheets of various Crown corporations in Canada today, I doubt it.

I have no hesitation, Madam Speaker, in supporting the amendment of my leader to give this bill a six months' hoist. I feel that if members on the government side of the House have a conscience and have the interests of Canada and their constituents at heart, they should support the amendment. I am looking forward to a summer recess, but I hope that before that time the Minister of Finance will either support the motion of my leader or withdraw the bill. I hope he and members of his cabinet during the summer recess will develop policies in the area of energy, transportation, and economics which will put Canada back on the rails of economic recovery.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Madam Speaker, it certainly gives me great pleasure to be able to speak on the many parts of this devastating bill which will have serious effects on all parts of northern Canada. Most of the people living in communities in my constituency which have roads have anywhere from 500 to 700 miles to drive to reach the main centres in the province. I refer to miners who use their cars to go to work every day. If they want to take their families on a summer vacation they have to travel 700 miles, and will have to pay this ridiculous ten cents a gallon tax to reach a holiday area.

Another problem facing many of the people in the riding of Churchill who live in these remote communities is that there is no public transit system. The people must use their cars if they are to travel at all. Some of these communities comprise as many as 20,000 people. Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has imposed this ridiculous tax and has burdened the people who are the backbone of our country.

I will now call it ten o'clock, Madam Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—REASON FOR DETENTION AND INTERROGATION OF DR. FAYEZ SAYEGH, AN ARABIAN DIPLOMAT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, it is my earnest hope that this will be my last utterance in this august chamber until mid-October. I am also tempted to urge those members who do not stay for this delightful period to follow the advice of Lady Macbeth and to stand not upon the order of their going but to go at once.

Adjournment Debate

On May 26 I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) about the detention and interrogation of Dr. Fayez Sayegh at the Toronto International Airport. This distinguished scholar-statesman who heads the PLO observer delegation to the United Nations was carrying a diplomatic passport from the government of Kuwait. He had been invited to be guest speaker at the annual meeting of the Canadian Arab Federation, a group to which many Canadians of Arab ancestry belong.

The minister, in response, declared that the facts as I had stated them were generally correct. I thought then, and I think now, that we must be extremely careful not to allow our immigration department and its officers be a vehicle of bias in the confrontation in the Middle East.

Members of the Israeli government and other individuals come to Canada frequently to address audiences on their point of view on the current and, alas, continuing conflict in the Middle East. No one ever hears of any spokesman for the Israeli cause having trouble entering Canada, nor should they have. Public discussion on such issues should be welcomed.

But for any Palestinian spokesman to come to Canada to discuss the Palestinian cause and case seems enormously difficult. They are harassed, detained, interrogated, delayed for hours at airports, and embarrassed by immigration officers following them to public meetings and pursuing them with further questions. It is most unfair. It cannot be suggested that to deny Canadians the chance to hear both sides of the issue is the act of a country adopting an even-handed view of the Middle East crisis.

I was also appalled by the suggestion that all members of the PLO are prohibited entry into Canada. Such a view has with it the implication that all PLO and all Palestinians are a threat to the security of Canada.

Dr. Sayegh is a case in point. He is an internationally known scholar, the son of a Presbyterian minister, a man whose knowledge and experience qualified him as one well worth listening to. That such a person with a diplomatic passport should be embarrassed and held up while entering Canada at the invitation of a reputable Canadian organization is an outrage.

We should not be too eager to suppress the right of the long-suffering Palestinians to state their case. The contemplated presence of two or three Palestinian lawyers at the UN crime conference was inflated as a threat to the security of the great city of Toronto and the vast province of Ontario. I found such assertions as incredible as the government's response to the pressures and proclamations against Palestinian attendance at a UN conference to which they had the right to come.

This is not the place to analyze the government's decision on the proposed Toronto conference, but I doubt if world peace of Canadian foreign policy will be enhanced thereby.

It is to be hoped that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will realize some of the delicacy and sensitivity of the problems of the Middle East, the chief of which is the fate of the Palestinian people.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

I was a little disturbed at some replies I received to an order paper question. Contrary to the minister's oral reply, the answers denied that Dr. Sayegh had been detained and interrogated. The same blanket of denial was drawn over inquiries regarding Palestinian and other Arab labour leaders who entered the country through Montreal recently. My information leaves me no doubt about the incidents. These people did not receive a warm welcome or routine entry into this country. The former need not be expected; but all Palestinians ought not to be made special cases and presented with the presumption that their visit is designed to be hurtful to Canada's security.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) raised this matter in the House on May 26, 1975, he was informed that when Dr. Sayegh sought entry he admitted membership in the Palestine Liberation Organization and that this, under Canadian law, made him inadmissible to Canada. The policy of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, in cases where a prohibited person is invited to speak by a reputable Canadian organization, is to allow that person temporary entry under the minister's permit if it is considered that there will be no threat to Canada's national security. This is called the Nicholson policy.

All that can be added, Mr. Speaker, is to assure hon. members that no slur was meant to be cast on a foreign diplomat attached to the UN but that the action taken was required by his admitted membership in the PLO.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—AVAILABILITY OF CORPORATION'S EDUCATIONAL FILMS TO SCHOOLS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is the second parliament in which I have tried to have CBC broadcasting educational films provided to schools and universities across Canada. Actually for four years school boards and universities have been attempting to obtain these films. The stalling by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the CBC in respect of the solution of this problem has now become absolutely ridiculous.

It is disappointing that the minister is not here to answer questions on such an important subject. The question of the CBC providing educational films to school boards and universities throughout Canada is of major importance and is a subject on which I hope the government can throw some light tonight.

There are certain problems in respect of the present Copyright Act. In the last parliament I made the following suggestions for amendments to the present act:

(1) copying and duplicating should be allowed for, subject to suitable safeguards to protect the legitimate interests of the creator and publisher;

(2) In the case of broadcast programs of an educational nature there should be recognition of the need to record them for playback within a limited period. In this situation the tape recording may be used to meet timetabling requirements without royalty payment; (3) transmission of copyright material through closed-circuit television systems should be subject to reasonable royalties and fees in terms of the specific target audience.

School boards and teachers have experienced distress—

in the last four years

—because of current inadequacy in legislation and failure to reach agreement at the federal level. The Canadian Teachers' Federation has presented a number of briefs in this regard and I believe note should be made of some of the comments which have been made public. One is as follows:

"Since there appears to be widespread expectation that the Copyright Act will be substantially revised in the near future, CTF believes that such a revision could not be long delayed and that it is of the utmost importance that all interested parties should have the opportunity to participate in the revision. The brief complains that CBC program materials are being handed over to an American-dominated private company for distribution on a profit making basis".

Here is a quotation from a statement by . . . the CTF president:

"I am pleased to have a strong mandate to secure the full and free use in Canadian schools of educational programs developed with the support of public moneys . . . we will present our views regarding the difficulties being experienced with video taping of school telecasts for viewing at a more convenient time because of the present copyright laws as well as certain contractual arrangements at the CBC".

In the last parliament I presented a bill, an act to amend the Broadcasting Act. The government agreed at that time to allow the bill to go to committee. We finally got it to committee, and one afternoon at 3.30 p.m. seven Conservatives arrived to discuss the bill. The only other people in attendance were a couple of CBC officials and the chairman of the committee, who is a Liberal. We did not have a quorum and therefore we could not discuss this bill in committee. People in the educational field had come to Ottawa to participate in this committee meeting, they came from B.C., Nova Scotia and all across Canada. They were insulted, and they felt they were treated with contempt by the Liberal government and the Liberal members of that committee.

I was hoping that this bill could be sent to committee in this parliament because obviously the Secretary of State, who is responsible for the CBC, is not capable of finding a solution to this problem.

Recently I received a letter from the Canadian School Trustees Association. The executive director wrote:

Your bill has been labelled "simplistic" and that is a great compliment. I am becoming tired and angry with people stating that things are complex, and no simple solution can be found.

It is very strange that the Secretary of State and the CBC cannot find some solution to this problem after four years. There has been an exchange of correspondence such as I have never seen in my life. In the last parliament every member of parliament received letters from school teachers, school children, school trustees, associations and universities giving support to this bill, and all the cabinet members were bombarded with mail. So was the Secretary of State and the CBC. But here we are going through the same exercise in the thirtieth parliament. You can see, Madam Chairman, how ridiculous this is.

A couple of weeks ago I asked the minister what he was doing about the problem. I received the biggest run around that I have ever witnessed in my life on what they are doing to Canada's educational system in regard to this problem in providing CBC educational films in Canadian schools. We are talking about six million school children and about every school and university in Canada. It is absolutely ridiculous that the government has not found a solution to the problem by now. Four years is more than enough time.

I received one letter from the minister back in 1973, and he indicated the following:

CBC is conscious of the desirability of making an early statement on the matter of providing some programs for use in schools. However, the problem is complex and it is not known yet whether release of a significant number of programs will be possible.

As soon as it is able to do so, the corporation will be making a statement. If the study proceeds as at present, this may be by the beginning of the next school year, or shortly thereafter.

This letter is dated July, 1973, and this should have been solved in 1974. Here we are in the middle of 1975, and we are still talking about the problem. Now the Schoolteachers Association and the School Trustees Association and all the schools across Canada are going to start another letter exchange, writing to all their members of parliament, the Secretary of State, and the CBC to see if they can get them off their butts to do something about this problem.

This problem has reached ridiculous proportions. I cannot find the words to explain it, and I hope the parliamentary secretary has some reasonable explanation tonight.

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) it is fairly common knowledge that CBC has been carrying out a detailed study of the problems associated with a plan to release a large number of its television and radio programs for use by non profit organizations and by individuals following broadcast.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has already mentioned that CBC has accepted in principle the responsibility of meeting the heavy demands for its programs from schools, service clubs and church groups, demands which originate in all parts of Canada. On the basis of its studies up to that time CBC included in its estimates last fall an amount sufficient to enable it to get started with its further use project in the current fiscal year. Funds slightly in excess of $1 million were made available by the government.

The Secretary of State has been informed by CBC that two or three important issues are still under consideration. For example, the corporation has been studying the impact of its further use project on the private Canadian non theatrical film industry. It is quite possible that the release of CBC's programs into a limited market may have a detrimental effect on a part of the film industry and that this, in turn, may adversely influence other initiatives of the department to assist the growth of the Canadian film industry generally.

In itself concern for the private companies is not a reason to delay the inauguration of the further use project, but CBC feels that the situation should be carefully explored. The corporation will begin further use project distribution as soon as possible. It is aware of the high expectations held by many, and is determined that the project will be successful.

Adjournment Debate

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—DISMISSAL OF MESSRS. CHO, CHEW AND McGUIRE BY CN TELECOMMUNICATIONS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise tonight to speak on a matter I raised in this House yesterday afternoon regarding the dismissal of three employees from the Canadian National Telecommunications system, Mr. Cho, Mr. Chew and Mr. McGuire.

After arriving back in Ottawa Sunday night I made sure I was in my office early Monday morning. I telephoned the office of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), the office of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), and the office of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), and gave them notice of my question. I spent them a copy of a letter I had received from Mr. Horbulyk, who is the acting chairman of the Canadian Telecommunications division of CB of RT and GW. I sent the ministers a copy of the grievance which had been filed by the union on behalf of Mr. Young Cho. I told them that I wanted to ask this question in the House. I thought it was a very serious matter, and I hoped by giving them this notice we could receive some proper answers and take away a shadow which has been cast over these three men.

The minister in his answer said that he immediately got in touch with the president of CN and he was supposed to have another discussion with him. He also stated:

I know they have been following this practice for a very long time. However, this practice worries me as much as the hon. member.

It certainly worries me, Madam Speaker, and I was quite pleased with the answer. I knew the minister was concerned and viewed this as a very serious question that he wanted to discuss with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and cabinet. I did not ask a supplementary, fully expecting that today in this House we would have an answer from the minister which, if not complete and detailed, would at least give some idea of what had happened. Today in answer to the same question I received the same answer although I have not had a chance to check it over.

I find it unbelievable that the government, which seemed so concerned, and the Minister of Transport who was shaken by the matter, cannot get an answer from the president of Canadian National Railways. Certainly the president should be able to have an answer for the minister by the next day. If he had said today that somebody was on vacation I could understand that at this time of year, but we received no explanation.

The shadow that has fallen on these men scares me. Three people have been dismissed by a large corporation and not told the reason. When asked by the union, the management stated that they are not at liberty to say why Mr. Cho had been dismissed. The union explained that this left Mr. Cho in a very strange position, and management agreed and said had Mr. Cho worked in a non-security area his dismissal would have been unnecessary. One immediately assumes then that this man is a security risk, and this is the shadow cast on the other men. If they are, we should know, and we should know why they were hired in the first place. They must have had to go through some clearance in order to be hired.

Mr. Cho has been offered another job in the company in a non-secure area. He says he sees no reason why he is regarded as a security risk. He was cleared by the United States army when, as a captain in the South Korean army, he was sent to Texas for training.

The thing that frightens me is that three union clauses were violated. Clause 1 states in part:

An employee . . . will not be disciplined or discharged until his case has been thoroughly reviewed.

That did not happen in this case, and this is one of the grievances filed. Clause 2 states in part:

. . . and will be advised of the reasons for such review.

Clause 3 states in part:

. . . an employee will not be held out of service pending rendering of decision except in case of a dismissable offence.

That clause was also broken by the government. When a large company like CN can violate a union agreement, that means any company in this country can do the same. The government should take swift action. I am sure I gave the parliamentary secretary some information tonight. We have not got complete answers yet, but tomorrow this House should have a full explanation from the minister of why the rights of three people in Canada have been violated by a company associated with the government.

The president of CNR, who has been approached by a minister of the Crown, should be fired if he cannot tell the House within 24 or 48 hours why three employees were dismissed in an underhanded way.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has indicated to the House that he is most certainly concerned about the problem raised yesterday by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) and he contacted the president of the CNR immediately upon learning of the situation. I hope my hon. friend opposite will give us until tomorrow. I cannot account for the delays, but I understand they are legitimate and that the minister will have the opportunity for further discussions with the president of the CNR on this matter.

The minister is aware of the serious implications of the practice involved here, and I believe he indicated to the House yesterday that he intends to raise the matter with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet.

I am advised that the three employees involved were offered other positions because they did not meet the requirements of their positions, but if I understand my hon. friend correctly that is not his information. I will check that out myself; I believe it refers to only two of them. I can assure my hon. friend that his concern is shared by the minister.

● (2220)

I am sure the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta knows, from his experience in this chamber, that no member is more deeply concerned for the rights of working men and women of this country than the present Minister of Transport. I hope the hon. member will allow us a little more time to provide an answer that is acceptable.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT'S INITIATIVE TO OBTAIN ICNAF AGREEMENT FOR FORTY PER CENT REDUCTION IN QUOTAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to put a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. May I say, before I put the motion, that there is agreement that if the House sees fit to give unanimous consent to the motion, there will be no debate.

In view of the fact that Canada will play host to the International Commission on the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries in September, when parliament will be in recess, and in view of the importance to Canada's east coast fishing industry of getting agreement from the ICNAF member states to a 40 per cent reduction in quotas, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That this House supports the government's initiative to obtain agreement from ICNAF for a 40 per cent reduction in quotas which is vital to the viability of Canada's east coast fishing industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the unanimous consent of the House is required before this motion can be presented. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, finding unanimous consent, I shall put the motion. It is moved by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That this House supports the government's initiative to obtain agreement from ICNAF for a 40 per cent reduction in quotas which is vital to the viability of Canada's east coast fishing industry.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS PERTAINING TO ALLEGED SECRET WARRANTIES ON CERTAIN AUTOMOBILES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek the unanimous consent of the House. Whereas the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has deliberately and knowingly engaged in a conspiracy to cheat Canadian car owners by refusing to divulge information on, or otherwise notify individuals of the existence of hidden or secret extended warranties on certain automobiles, and whereas these secret warranties were extended because of known defects on certain automobile models, and whereas victims of auto breakdowns which have resulted from those known defects deserve to be reimbursed by the companies involved, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House calls on the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to table forthwith all documents and correspondence pertaining to these secret warranties.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the unanimous consent of the House is required before the motion can be put. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AUDITOR GENERAL OF CANADA

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON INCREASE IN STAFF—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent and important matter.

Since the national budget is increasingly extensive and that it becomes essential to control more thoroughly the expenditures of the various departments as well as those of the Crown corporations, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House suggest without debate that the staff at the Auditor General's office be increased to enable it to do a more thorough auditing which will enable hon. members to see more clearly how the estimates voted by the House are used.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, therefore the motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF POSSIBLE MONITORING OF LONG DISTANCE CALLS PLACED IN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. A few weeks ago the Rockefeller commission studying the activities of the CIA reported that the Russian government, using highly sophisticated technology, was monitoring and recording thousands of private telephone conversations in the United States. The commission also found that telephone calls made by government officials, including those in Congress and the White House, were also being monitored and recorded, and it was concerned about the threat not only of the possible disclosure of information relating to national security but also about the possibility that such monitoring might allow Soviet officials to blackmail private citizens into working for them.

As Canadian Defence Department officials disclosed that the Russians are also monitoring long distance telephone calls placed in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre):

That the possibility of foreign monitoring of long distance telephone calls placed in Canada be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for immediate study and report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL—INCREASE IN PRICE OF POWDERED MILK FOR EXPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

At the beginning of the month the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced a 45-cent additional deduction on milk powder exports. Since that measure means that each producer will suffer an average annual loss of income of $2,500 and that such a decision puts producers in an unacceptable situation contrary to the promises the minister had made last April, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner):

That this House unanimously recommend to the responsible minister the immediate abolition of that deduction particularly unfair to industrial milk producers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion cannot be put.

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STATUS OF PROJECT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister relates to the CANDU sale to Argentina and the statement the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made in the House on July 14. He stated that a bilateral agreement regarding safeguards had not been completed and said, as reported on page 7520 of Hansard:

So, of course, the obligation under the financial agreement and the continuance of the project have been delayed while this is being negotiated.

In view of the minister's statement, what comment has the Prime Minister to make on the fact that, as reported in the press from Buenos Aires, the project is continuing, has been under way for one year, is under the supervision of AECL, and that a spokesman for AECL in Canada has stressed that if work was to have stopped at the site, it was up to the Canadian government, not AECL, to order it stopped? How does the Prime Minister reconcile the minister's statement with the facts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, assuming the facts are as reported in this article, I will have to ask for explanations to see what the answer is. The House will understand that the situation developed because after having entered into those arrangements with Argentina under the international safeguards, we did bring in, in December, very substantially increased safeguards. I believe we had the support of the House, at least, in asking for greater safeguards on CANDU technology and Canadian material. But this meant our returning to our co-contractor and reopening the contract in order to get him to accept higher safeguards.

In the meantime, my understanding is, as is that of the minister, that we had suspended the continuation of the work. If it has not been suspended, I will have to find out the reasons why and either the minister or I will report back to the House.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact we have gradually been finding our way through the policy with regard to this contract, and there seems to be a mixture of piety, humbug and evasion, with the minister claiming that the work was ordered to be stopped, will the Prime Minister ascertain the date on which AECL was ordered by the government to stop this work, and will the Prime Minister be prepared to table in this House the directives to AECL?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I just answered that I will certainly find out what the facts are, and find out particularly whether the facts reported in the press are exact. But I must, with respect, point out that there may be some piety in our attitude but there is no evasion and no humbug. I think it is quite clear that the international safeguards which we had followed and which we had enjoined other countries to follow were considered sufficient until the experience of the explosion of a nuclear device by India last year. As a result of that, Canada unilaterally upgraded its safeguards to prevent the recurrence of such an event. There were, of course, contracts which were in train at that point. It did mean, for us, returning to our co-contractor and unilaterally trying to reopen the contract. This is not evasion; this is clear. This is an indication that the government is as concerned as anyone in this country about ensuring that the use of our technology does not lead to any explosive device.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have one further supplementary with regard to the humbug and the evasion. Will the Prime Minister try to find time to read the statement I made yesterday in the House on a point of order with regard to some of the history of this matter? When the Prime Minister reports back to the House with regard to any instructions given to AECL, will he also report the approximate amount of money that AECL has already committed, on behalf of Canada, to this project?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION IN EVENT AGREEMENT ON SAFEGUARDS NOT REACHED

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I will direct my question to the government House leader. At page 7086 of Hansard I concluded some remarks on this deal by saying:

> We now have contracts and an agreement. We are going to be in extreme difficulty if we try to back out of either the contracts or the agreement, and we will be in double jeopardy if we back out of both.

The government House leader immediately replied:

> Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the negotiations for the completion of bilateral agreement which flows from the agreement mentioned by the hon. member are still under way.

In light of those assurances which we received in the House, will the minister explain this statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources outside the House yesterday, that if it is proved impossible to get new safeguards, the CANDU will not be shipped and in that case the project probably will be a white elephant and open to a law suit?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has said, Canada is prepared not only to apply improved safeguards on new projects but on projects that are under way. I hope the hon. member will recognize that this may be costly.

Mr. McKinnon: In light of that assurance in the House, and in light of yesterday's statement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that if we suspend the sale because of failure to agree on adequate safeguards the country could be open to a damage suit, will the minister explain why ministers have been telling this House day after day that the present negotiations were adequately provided for in the sales agreement?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this point was raised by the Leader of the Opposition and adequately replied to by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Stanfield: No.

Mr. Sharp: I suggest the Leader of the Opposition should read again what the minister said. I listened very closely to his comments and I hope he reads the minister's comments as carefully.

FISHERIES

EFFECT ON ICNAF FISHING RESTRICTIONS OF SOVIET VESSELS BEING BANNED FROM EAST COAST PORTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Fisheries) arising out of his announcement that Soviet fishing vessels have been banned from the east coast of Canada. Given the size of the Soviet fishing vessels, they have the capacity to remain at sea for a long time. Can the minister give the House any reason for believing that the decision to ban Soviet vessels from our ports on the east coast will have the effect of ensuring compliance, on the part of the Soviet Union, with the ICNAF fishing restrictions, given the size of the Soviet vessels and their capacity to remain at sea for long periods?

● (1420)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): I rejoice that the New Democratic Party has discovered the situation in the fisheries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I might also say I appreciate the support of the hon. member for the port closure decision. I think it is support; I do not know whether I understood him correctly. I would say to him that with 400 visits to our east coast ports last year, the Soviet fleet will find it is a very considerable inconvenience to them. However, I have not tried to mislead anyone by saying the Russian fleet cannot manage without the Canadian ports. They could do so, but I am sure they will find it very inconvenient, judging from the level of the purchases they made in Canada last year.

Mr. Broadbent: Is it the minister's understanding that the ban the government has imposed will not in itself be sufficient to deter the Russians from overfishing off the east coast beyond our existing territorial limits—that it will not in itself be sufficient to achieve the ends to which he is committed?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): It is difficult to determine what the reaction of the Soviet government will be, but I would say to the hon. member that the ICNAF meeting in September will bring the 17 nations to the table and on this table will be one factor, that one country felt strongly enough that it closed the ports to one nation and threatened to close them to two others.

Mr. Broadbent: With reference to that September meeting in Montreal, I should like to ask the minister whether, if the government fails to get acceptance of its stated objective at that meeting of a 40 per cent reduction of foreign fishing off our east coast, he would state today in the House that this would automatically entail a decision by the Government of Canada to assume jurisdictional authority up to 200 miles off our east coast?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I am sure the hon. member would not expect me to ask a question which starts with "if". Also, I hope he does not expect me to say exactly what we shall do before we even start negotiating, as we shall in September.

TRANSPORT

DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC ON IMPROVING COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN ÎLES AUX GRUES AND MONTMAGNY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

As the means of communication between Îles aux Grues and the other islands located across from the town of Montmagny and suburban areas are not adequate to meet the needs of agriculture, tourism and industry, can the minister tell the House whether he has been in touch and discussed with the Quebec Minister of Transport the possibility of having communications that would correspond to the needs of that area while, at the same time, allowing the development of its tourist industry?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not had meetings with the Quebec Minister of Transport for that purpose. I believe the problem falls within the province's jurisdiction, that is to say that communications within a province are a provincial matter; of course, we could perhaps be of assistance to the extent where the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would agree with the province of Quebec to develop modes of transport between Île aux Grues and Montmagny. But the Department of Transport, as such, can do nothing about it under the circumstances.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the very worthy reply the Minister of Transport has just made, may I ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether he has had discussions, or whether the province of Quebec has made representations, through its own transport minister, to seek financial assistance from the central government, namely the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, to improve the communication facilities between Île aux Grues and the town of Montmagny, thereby contributing to the economic development of the area?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member probably knows, we have a number of existing agreements with the province of Quebec with regard to highways and we are negotiating a number of others. If the hon. member will permit, I will take the question as notice and find out about the specific one he refers to and whether or not discussions are under way.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY WHETHER BANNING OF SOVIET VESSELS FROM EAST COAST PORTS PRECEDED BY NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fisheries). Now that Canada has shown its willingness to flex its muscles in the announcement today by the minister closing east coast ports to the Soviet fishing fleet, may I ask the minister whether the announcement was preceded by negotiations with the government of France, and was an agreement obtained from that government that it would close the port at St. Pierre to these 400 ships? Otherwise, the minister's announcement would be tantamount to firing an empty shell across the bow of the Soviet fleet.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, remembering what the hon. member said some weeks ago when I talked of port closure, I rejoice that he has seen the light. I must say that this morning when I met with the minister of fisheries from Newfoundland, he supported me fully. I appreciate that. I also had the support of the minister of fisheries of Nova Scotia.

On the question of the St. Pierre and Miquelon utilization, I have said that we have been in contact with the government of France. They have already made a statement, reported in the press some weeks ago, to the effect that in no way could they increase their facilities to provide what is required from Canadian ports by foreign fleets.

CLOSING OF EAST COAST PORTS TO SOVIET FISHING FLEET—EFFECT ON ATLANTIC ECONOMY

Mr. James McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question may I say to the minister that the situation has become very serious and we have all had to revise our thinking because of the lack of action taken by the government on behalf of the fishing industry. I should like to ask the minister whether the government intends to assess the economic impact that this closure will have on east coast ports, especially on the port of St. John's, and has any consideration been given to this bearing in mind that this area of Canada already has the highest rate of unemployment in the country? Let me tell the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

Mr. McGrath: With respect, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of vital concern to the Altantic provinces, especially to my province. I asked the minister a legitimate question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member put a question to the minister which the minister may wish to answer. I interrupted the hon. member because he appeared to be headed toward a representation. If the minister wishes to answer the question, he may.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, we certainly did look at the economic impact that this would have. But we also felt it was time to do things about which we had been talking for weeks and months—

● (1430)

An hon. Member: For years.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): —and for years. If the hon. member cannot accept the wisdom of this decision, then he must make up his own mind. I would say to him that I think he was asking the rest of the nation to support this area—

Mr. McGrath: I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order, the minister has no right to make insulting remarks like that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I am going to be strict with the hon. member posing the question, I ought to ask the minister to keep his answer to the same subject.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I want to say, very quickly, that if I did not express myself properly perhaps I should speak in the other official language.

[Translation]

If the hon. member means to say that we have, in the rest of our country, a responsibility when we make national decisions of this type, I fully agree with him. And that is why I feel the whole nation must come to the assistance of fishermen in both these areas of our country, namely the Pacific and the Atlantic coasts.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: It is not as if the minister had attempted to answer my question. He has imputed motives and misrepresented what I said. May I ask the minister whether the government is now prepared, preliminary to its meeting with ICNAF countries in September, to announce to the world that if we cannot obtain agreement bilaterally, in reference to what the Prime Minister said yesterday, from nations which have historic rights on the east coast, we are prepared to close our east coast ports to all foreign fishing fleets?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, there are many nations in ICNAF supporting the stand we are taking. They have supported us actively, and I believe it would be totally irresponsible to have this sort of threat hanging over their heads.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—UTILIZATION OF SPENT FUEL

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the Prime Minister's assurance that there is no humbug from that side of the House in relation to CANDU safeguards and the Argentinian deal. I ask whether he can clarify for me an apparent contradiction regarding the utilization of spent fuel rods, which I am sure is a matter important enough to be at least within his personal knowledge. On July 16, as recorded at page 7619 of Hansard, in answer to a question of mine, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources states the following with regard to spent fuel rods and the safeguards agreement with Argentina:

> —that the spent fuel to be used in a Canadian reactor or a reactor not constructed in Canada but with Canadian technology at a later date or one using fuel supplied by Canada, may not subsequently be applied for any weapons making purpose. There is no gap in the coverage of safeguards.

I wonder, therefore, if the Prime Minister could explain the words of the same minister, standing in his place in the House yesterday, who clearly stated something entirely different, namely, that Canada is still attempting to negotiate an agreement with Argentina under which Canada would have control over spent fuel from a CANDU nuclear reactor?

Mr. Stanfield: Two statements on two different days, that is all!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the first answer quoted by the hon. member is absolutely correct. It is an expression of the safeguards that we announced in December, this new level of safeguards, to the effect that they would apply to the whole life cycle of fission material or of material which has been processed by Canadian technology. The first answer is perfectly correct. The second answer is also perfectly correct. It applies to the precise case of Argentina which, as I explained earlier to the Leader of the Opposition, had been settled by negotiations before the upgraded safeguards. Now that we have upgraded the safeguards, we are going back to them and applying this new rule to them and asking that it be applied by them. This is the state of negotiations now.

I repeat, I think this should have the support of the House, since the opposition parties are telling the government that it should indeed have much higher safeguards than we have had in previous circumstances. Of course, having higher safeguards means that one has to go back to the people with whom negotiations have already begun and tell them that this is a new set of rules and we would like to negotiate them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham on a supplementary.

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—CONSULTATION BETWEEN DEPARTMENT AND AECL BEFORE COMMERCIAL AGREEMENT SIGNED

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, if you are limiting me to one supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister to go back to those words of July 16 when the minister was speaking specifically about Argentina and specifically saying that the agreement was concluded in regard to the safeguards and the spent fuel.

My supplementary question, then, is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Was the Department of External Affairs even consulted before AECL signed the commercial agreement with Argentina and actually commenced construction 1½ years ago and, if not, why not?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in the normal course there were exchanges between the two departments on this matter. But in order to confirm precisely the fact, I will have to have it checked.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COST OF KEEPING HOUSE IN SESSION

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: In view of the fact that it costs $250,000 to $280,000 daily to keep this House in session, could the President of the Treasury Board say whether it is correct to estimate that the taxpayers of Canada have paid more than $1 million so far for the opposition parties to fight the Ontario election in this House?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize a slight political overtone in that question.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Some hon. Members: No, three o'clock.

Mr. Lawrence: That was a sweetheart question.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC FUNDS BY RICHARD DICERNI AND DANIEL COATES

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the chairman of the public accounts committee. Could he assure the House that the extensive, unusual and questionable expenditures of public funds by Richard Dicerni and Daniel Coates, just a fraction of which were revealed in the delayed answers to my starred questions Nos. 1,738 and 1,739, will be thoroughly investigated when the public accounts committee reconvenes, and a full report given to the House?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That's a sweetheart question.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, the public accounts committee takes its terms of reference from the House of Commons. Generally speaking, those terms of reference require the committee to deal with the Auditor General's report for the preceding year. In answer to the question of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth, let me say that if the item to which he refers is in the Auditor General's report for next year, as chairman of that committee I feel I can give him a reasonable assurance that this item will be investigated by the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: That is the way to answer questions.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I hope the Auditor General takes note of that question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—SUPERVISION OF CONSTRUCTION BY AECL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question follows on the original question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. I will address it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did the government ever authorize AECL, a Canadian government agency, to undertake the task of supervising the building, up to the point of the foundations at least, of the nuclear reactor in Argentina? If it did not authorize this, when did the minister first become aware that AECL was in fact supervising this particular project?

● (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question, obviously, is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. AECL reports to that minister. I will attempt to get the information and I will draw the attention of the minister to the question that has been asked.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, is the minister suggesting that this information might be available to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and was not conveyed to him? I am asking when he, as Secretary of State for External Affairs, first knew that a Canadian government agency was contributing, by supervision, toward the building of an Argentine reactor which apparently had not been approved by his department.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the relevance of the question. What is important, so far as I am concerned, is the nature of the safeguards that are applied to all these Canadian, transferred nuclear facilities. That is the important concern from the policy point of view. If the hon. member wants me to answer questions on that subject, I will be glad to answer them.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary by the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is this. Is the minister saying that the building of the superstructure for the reactor is no business of the Government of Canada, when a Canadian agency owned by the Government of Canada in fact is doing much of the work? It must have made the plans for the reactor available to the contractors.

Mr. MacEachen: Obviously it is of concern to the Government of Canada, but the operation, the whole transaction referred to is under the responsibility of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister of that department, when he is in the House, will answer these questions when asked.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PRACTICE OF RCMP IN INVESTIGATING NARCOTICS SMUGGLING BY MAIL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It has to do with recent reports to the effect that more and more narcotics dealers in various parts of the world have launched a campaign against humanity as a whole. Is it not a fact that the RCMP officers protect Canadians in connection with narcotics and such offences, find themselves unable to do a full and complete job in connection with investigation of narcotics offences because of the fact that, no matter how much they may suspect that letters or other communications which pass through the mail carry within them narcotics, they are unable to make a search thereof?

Has the minister received complaints along this line? In view of the fact that narcotics destroy not only the bodies but the souls of individuals, if such is the case will the minister do something to bring in an amendment to the law, while protecting the privacy of the mail in general, to ensure that such potential interference with the administration of justice in respect of narcotics shall not be continued?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in recent years the RCMP has placed a very high priority on the fight against narcotics trafficking. For the past two years the RCMP has had agents in countries which are the principal sources of narcotics trafficking. With regard to mail, the right hon. member is correct in saying that first-class mail cannot be opened by the police during an investigation. When they suspect that narcotics are contained in first-class mail, they try to follow the mail to its destination and continue the investigation after the delivery of the mail. I cannot say that the RCMP have found this to be an insurmountable deterrent in dealing with this problem, but I will check with them to see if they have any further recommendation to make.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary by the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his explanation. I would remind him of the fact that within the last few days he is reported in the press as having made a statement to the effect that it is against the law of Canada for Canadian government agencies to open the mail. Then he said:

> That has caused us—

I presume that is the RCMP.

> —some problems sometimes because on occasion we have known that narcotics have been coming into the country in the post.

Does the minister not feel there should be an amendment to the effect that, while the privacy of the mail should be protected, this kind of traffic should not in any way be condoned by the failure of parliament to act?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is true that from time to time the RCMP have indicated a concern over this. Sometimes they have felt that narcotics were being brought into the country in the first-class mail and, as I say, in those cases they have dealt with the matter by following the mail to its source. But they have not made a big issue of it, and so far as I know they have not recommended that we change the first-class mail system. However, I will check with the force to find out what their exact recommendations are.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF NET CAPITAL OUTFLOW ON BALANCE OF PAYMENTS DEFICIT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that in 1974 Canada experienced a net capital outflow, the first since these numbers were recorded, can the minister inform the House if this net capital outflow is continuing this year and is contributing to our balance of payments deficit?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. At the moment, of course, the deteriorating current account deficit is due primarily to falling exports.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID PROGRAM TO INDIA—INQUIRY WHETHER CUT-BACK BECAUSE OF INDIA'S NUCLEAR BOMB TEST

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask for clarification of Canada's relationship with India, arising out of two important events, the detonation of a nuclear bomb by the use of Canadian technology, and the breakdown of parliamentary democracy in India. Has our aid program to India, with the exception of food, been suspended or cut back as an expression of Canadian concern and, if not, in what way has the Government of Canada communicated its concern about the escalation of danger brought about by the juxtaposition of nuclear technology and authoritarian rule?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the nuclear explosion, following the explosion our government suspended all its aid programs with India with the exception of food and agriculture. That situation continues at the present time. The nuclear co-operation has been suspended and aid, with the exception of food and agriculture, is also under suspension.

NUCLEAR BOMB TEST BY INDIA—PERIOD WHEN GOVERNMENT REASSESSED AID PROGRAM

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in light of his earlier response to the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that Canada began to tighten its safeguards after the nuclear explosion in India in May of 1974, and began to reassess its nuclear contracts—I believe that is what he said—how he relates that statement to the fact that AECL's involvement in Argentina began in August, 1974, some three months after the Indian explosion? When did the government's reassessment begin; was it before, or after, August?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, immediately after the explosion our reassessment began. I personally raised the matter with the Indian authorities and we sent a special delegation to India to try to clarify the matter and reach a satisfactory agreement. It was discussed again by me with some of the Commonwealth leaders as late as last April at the Commonwealth meeting, and between those two dates I had spoken to the ambassador.

I repeat that some Canadian officials had gone to India for a period of several months when we were trying to get a better understanding with India. Parallel to this we were studying the desirability of having unilateral increased safeguards, assuming we could not obtain agreement with India or with other countries in the IAEA. It was in December that things were brought to a head by this unilateral declaration. It does not mean that we are not continuing to receive multilateral acceptance of these higher safeguards—indeed, for obvious reasons this is very important—but in December we said that we had to act alone. It is a matter of conscience, and we will try to have our purchasers accept these higher safeguards.

Miss MacDonald: Is this information as to the reassessment which was being undertaken by the government conveyed to AECL so that it did not go ahead with its work in Argentina in August of 1974?

Mr. Trudeau: In this regard I would also say that the AECL is not directly under my authority and I would have to obtain the precise answer to that from the minister. But I must point out to the hon. member that we were tied by a contract with Argentina under the previous arrangements, and it is quite possible that AECL had no legal basis under which it could unilaterally break that contract. It was not its job as an agency to do so. It was relying on the government to attempt to do so, and that is where the minister's explanation comes in about us trying to have improved safeguards.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT UNDERTAKE INVESTIGATION OF AUTOMOBILE FIRES

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Due to what appears to be an increase in fatalities in traffic accidents caused when one or both vehicles involved burst into flames, would the minister have his department undertake an investigation as to the causes of this apparent increase in fires in cars following accidents, and take steps to increase the safety factor with regard to fires in automobiles?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we have a motor vehicles branch. Its duty is to check the safety of cars and to see that all cars sold in Canada have all the known safety features. If they do not have those features, of course we ask the manufacturer to recall the cars. But we do not investigate ordinary accidents; this is under provincial jurisdiction.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

EXTENDED WARRANTIES ON AUTOMOBILES—REQUEST CONTENTS THEREOF BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the latest revelation that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, by April of 1975, was well aware of the existence of extended warranties on certain makes of automobiles and specific quality defects, and in view of the refusal of the department to inform the public of the existence of such hidden warranties, can the minister inform the House why his department did not relay the information about these extended warranties to the public? Can he also tell us why Box 99 refused to inform consumers who specifically inquired about such warranties?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the hon. member is totally mistaken in the statements he has just made. Indeed no letters were exchanged between my department and the car manufacturing companies on the subject. On the other hand, officials of my department are trying to obtain extremely important information in favour of the consumer. The moment we get that information, I shall be pleased to make it public.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: I must inform the minister that I did not in any way suggest that he was informed by the automobile industry, but the Automobile Protection Association sent the minister's department information with respect to the extended warranties and therefore my supplementary question is this: Can the minister inform the House whether he intends to end the fine co-operation between his department and the automotive industry by publicizing all the information he presently has concerning the hidden warranties and by bringing in legislation which would make it mandatory for the industry to inform the consumer of extended warranties?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question is based on false premises. That is why I gave a negative reply a while ago.

TRANSPORT

CLOSING OF NORTHERN MANITOBA AIRSTRIPS TO CLASS TWO AND CLASS THREE CARRIERS—GOVERNMENT CONTINGENCY PLANS

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it follows a question asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Churchill, last week. The minister will remember that my colleague asked what caused the minister to take steps to close the northern airstrips of Manitoba to class 2 and class 3 carriers. In view of the fact that these airstrips have been used for the past four years, I know the minister has a contingency plan otherwise he would not have closed them.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Whiteway: I would like to know if the minister would indicate to the House what the contingency plans are to remove the crippling effect which is the result of his action in closing these northern airstrips.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and make inquiries in this regard.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF HELICOPTER IN PROVINCIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which he can answer very easily, and it will enable his blood pressure to return to normal. Is the Prime Minister planning in the next few months to take any more helicopter tours around Ontario? If he is, would he accept an offer made by the Conservative MLAs and the candidates to pay all the expenses of his tour, which would take them off the backs of the taxpayers? The candidates feel they would receive tremendous benefits from a tour in the next election, just as I did when the Prime Minister paid my riding a visit prior to the 1972 election. He visited the Picton fair and gave the country an excellent idea as to why they should vote Conservative.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am a bit shocked at the offer of the hon. member, because when he says that the Conservative Party would pay for that, I know where they would obtain the funds.

An hon. Member: Same place you would.

Mr. Trudeau: I have here a letter addressed to the Ministry of Transport, in one language only, asking the Minister of Transport for funds for the Conservative Party, and I think this is very shameful.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS FROM INDIAN BROTHERHOOD AND METIS ASSOCIATION REGARDING ESTABLISHMENT OF DENE NATION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister received any representations from the Indian Brotherhood and Metis Association of the Northwest Territories regarding the establishment of the Dene nation? Second, has the government established a position in this regard as yet; and third, if so, what is the position?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker. Except in press reports I have not received any official comment on this. I am waiting for a copy of the resolutions. However, my initial reaction is that two nations in the Northwest Territories is no more acceptable than two nations in any other part of Canada.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SITUATION RESPECTING NELSON RIVER PROJECT IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since there may be a halt called to the Nelson River project in Manitoba unless, to use the minister's own words, additional information is supplied by the province of Manitoba, I would like to ask the minister what specific information he is asking for and what, in the minister's own words, have been the stumbling blocks which have led to the breakdown between the province of Manitoba and the federal government over this very important matter?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should indicate that the news reports seem to be emphasizing the negative rather than the positive. I had a good meeting yesterday with the Premier of Manitoba. We agreed that the two things which were essential were a clear definition of what the impact of this flooding would be on the reserves involved, and what compensation the province of Manitoba was prepared or would propose to give. The premier indicated that he felt he did reply to those requirements and outlined what I thought were some fairly positive ideas on how compensation should be handled. Basically, I am in the position of waiting for his reply.

● (1500)

Mr. Murta: I should like to ask if the minister did make a veiled threat to the Premier of Manitoba that an injunction to stop work on the total project would be sought unless information was obtained by August 6.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I indicated during the press conference that after August 6 I would pursue with my colleague, the Attorney General, the matter of the action we should take. These are federal lands held in trust for Indian people, and they are under threat of being flooded. As trustee, I have a definite responsibility to the Indian people to make certain they are protected.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you will realize that I am not a chronic complainer. For that reason I want to draw the attention of the Chair to what I believe are rulings that are treating some members, myself included, as less equal than others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: Today, as has happened at least three times in the past three months, I have been denied permission by the Chair to ask a supplementary question without the Chair even knowing what I intended to ask. Following the refusal of the Chair today to allow me to ask my supplementary question concerning India and Canada's relationship with India—which I consider to be of extreme importance to this government and the whole country—hon. members representing Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), and Lisgar (Mr. Murta) were permitted to ask supplementary questions without the Chair knowing what they wanted to ask either.

If Your Honour wants to uphold the practice of allowing as many members as possible to ask questions—given the exigencies of the clock—I find myself in complete support. Indeed, some of my colleagues in the fifth row were not recognized today and I would have gladly yielded on my supplementary question to one of them. Some of my colleagues who wanted to ask a first question were not able to do so.

My point is that the decisions of the Chair are unclear as to the criteria for permission to ask a supplementary question. In other words, how is the Chair coming to this decision? I feel that unless this situation is clarified we in the fourth and fifth rows, who have a difficult enough time in trying to be heard in this House, will have to keep protesting.

I believe the people of Edmonton-Strathcona sent me here to do a job, and Your Honour's rulings are as much a reflection upon them as upon me. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan):

That the problem of supplementary questions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member realizes, of course, that he is not in a position to introduce a motion on the proceedings of the House. His point of order is one with which I sympathize, but I hope he will recognize that I have tried to keep very careful watch on members like himself who are consistently in the House and stand each day. The reason he was recognized today, with others on the back benches, in preference to some on the front benches and senior members is because they have been here for two or three days in succession trying to be recognized. The reason his supplementary was not granted was because of a simple choice I have to make every day which becomes no simpler with the passage of time.

Some questions have been explored by earlier questions, some have been covered in a general way, and others are new subjects. The hon. member mentioned by comparison the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who raised a brand new subject. It would seem to be most difficult to stop that without permitting a supplementary. In contrast, the hon. member raised a question about nuclear arms sales, and an explosion that has taken place in India, which have been the subject of questions not only by his leader today but also on earlier days. Therefore, if I have to select some questions on which I do not grant a supplementary, obviously it is on matters of a general nature which have been covered in other questions. If I select questions on which to grant supplementaries, it is on ones which are of a specific nature and which raise new subjects.

There is no guideline. It is not an easy matter. There are other hon. members who have a much more serious grievance. I rather suspect that the hon. member for Frontenac-

Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack), who seeks the floor on a point of order, is one of them; the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) is another who has not been able to be recognized; the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) was recognized today after three or four days—much longer than the hon. member in trying to achieve the floor.

It simply is not possible to send every member home happy after the question period. The hon. member has to recognize that, and I think we have to accept collective responsibility for it rather than trying to place individual responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, my point of order also affects the privileges of all members of the House. It arises from derogatory remarks regarding the duties and standing of members of the House made this afternoon by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) who said that it costs over $200,000 per day to operate this House. The inference made by the hon. member is that the members of the official opposition, by being here in our places, are causing additional expense to the Canadian people.

An hon. Member: Where is she?

An hon. Member: She has gone home.

Mr. Alkenbrack: My point of order—in her absence, although she was here a few minutes ago—is that since all members of this House and all employees are paid on an annual basis and all expenses and costs are fixed annually, her statements are without foundation and are misleading to the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the very nature of my job I have to be neutral and, like the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), I have been put under pressure to give money to the PC's who say to me, "We cannot do it alone, we need your help."

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO REVIEW NEED FOR MORTGAGE SUBSIDIES

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-409, to amend the National Housing Act (proof of need).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation the power to demand production of T-4 slips each year from those receiving assistance with private mortgages, to ensure that the recipients of such help continue to need the subsidy first allocated to them.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY

MEASURE TO ENSURE USE OF SEAT BELTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-410, respecting the use of safety belts in motor vehicles under federal jurisdiction.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, this bill will require the wearing of safety belts in all federal highway vehicles, and require that seats for school buses imported into Canada are equipped with approved restraining devices.

A number of countries have already discovered that safety belt usage has increased from about 12 per cent to over 75 per cent with the adoption of a legal requirement. The 1974 federal provincial conference of health ministers approved such legislation in principle. Evidence is overwhelming that safety belts save lives.

NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

OIL AND GAS—AUTHORITY FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL IN CANADA AND ALASKA, U.S.A.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the House approved a study by the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works of oil and gas policies and some other subjects, and gave the committee authority to adjourn from place to place in Canada and in Alaska for a period of not more than 20 days in September, 1975.

I have been asked by members of the committee to move a motion, for which I believe I have the unanimous agreement of the House leaders, which will amend that authority and that instruction by changing the period during which the travel may take place from September, to the period September 1, 1975, to October 13, 1975. Therefore, with the consent of the House, I move:

That, during the study by the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works of the questions of oil and gas pipelines and the supply of oil and natural gas from frontier areas, the members of the said committee and the necessary support staff be authorized to adjourn from place to place in Canada and in Alaska, U.S.A., for a period of not more than twenty days between September 1, 1975 and October 13, 1975.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 2,320, 2,467, 2,487, 2,492, 2,585, 2,616, 2,674, 2,740, 2,825, 2,841, 2,842, 2,884 and 2,895.

Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 2,230 and 2,411 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that questions Nos. 1,453, 1,577, 1,752, 2,082, 2,373 and 2,374 be made orders for return and also ask the consent of the House to table immediately the information which has already been submitted. The balance of the information will follow as soon as it is submitted to me.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

STATISTICS CANADA—HIRING OF PUBLIC RELATIONS FIRM

Question No. 2,320—Mr. Patterson:

1. Has Statistics Canada hired the public relations firm Heal, Shaw and Walden, Toronto, on a six month contract and, if so (a) what is the dollar value of such contract (b) what is the termination date of such contract?

2. (a) What work is the firm expected to perform (b) will it perform work that cannot be done by regular employees of Statistics Canada Information Service?

3. Was the firm hired with the permission and knowledge of the Minister or was it hired by Mr. David Worton on his own initiative?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: 1. Yes. (a) The contract is for a maximum of $50,000. (b) It terminates on June 30, 1975.

2. (a) The firm is assisting Statistics Canada in an evaluation of its procedures for conducting household surveys, including the means by which respondents' understanding of the purposes of such surveys, and their cooperation in supplying information, can be enhanced. (b) The work in question requires not only informational skills, but also those of subject-matter and field collection specialists. The Information Division of Statistics Canada is actively participating in the work, but it was decided to augment their resources by the use of an outside firm because of temporary staff shortages at the senior level.

3. The decision to seek outside assistance was made according to standard government practice with submission to and approval by Treasury Board.

FEDERAL BUILDING, NEWCASTLE, N.B.

Question No. 2,467—Mr. Jones:

1. Are there any plans (a) for the extension of the federal building (b) to build or acquire by lease or otherwise additional space in Newcastle, New Brunswick and, if so, what are such plans?

2. What is the total cost of the space required?

[Mr. Sharp.]

3. What is the breakdown of the space required by purpose and department and, in each case, what is the cost?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) Yes. The Department of Public Works called public tenders on July 2, 1975 for a one-storey addition as well as renovations to the existing ground and second floors of the Government of Canada Building in Newcastle, N.B. (b) The Department of Public Works has leased 4,702 rentable square feet of office space for the Department of Manpower and Immigration for a five-year term effective June 1, 1975. The space is located on Pleasant Street and is being leased from Commercial Real Estates Limited, P.O. Box 100, Newcastle, New Brunswick.

2. With respect to 1 (a), it is not customary to announce estimated costs before a contract has been awarded. The total cost of the leased space referred to in 1 (b) is $35,265 per annum.

3. The additional space in 1 (a) above is required by Canada Post Office. The balance of the ground floor and the second floor of the Newcastle Government of Canada Building will continue to house National Revenue (Customs and Excise), Environment Canada (Fisheries), Ministry of Transport (Marine Service) and Canadian National Telecommunications. The leased space as in 1 (b) above will accommodate the Department of Manpower and Immigration (Canada Manpower Centre and Job Information Centre).

AIR CANADA—MANAGEMENT CONSULTANTS

Question No. 2,487—Mr. MacKay:

1. How many different management consultant and/or personnel placement companies has Air Canada dealt with in the past four years?

2. How many executives have been placed with Air Canada by management consultant and/or personnel placement companies?

3. What commission was paid, in each case, by Air Canada to the personnel placement and/or management consultant companies?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. For recruitment purposes only, a total of four management consultants and/or personnel placement agencies.

2. A total of four executives.

3. Fees paid ranged from a minimum of $2,650 to a maximum of $12,000. Because these fees are directly related to the salaries of the individuals involved and because individual executive salaries are considered to be proprietary information, the actual amount in each case is not publicly available.

AIR CANADA PASSES

Question No. 2,492—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,523, for what reason does Air Canada offer free passes to Post Office officials?

2. Are persons who currently have Air Canada passes able to use their pass after they retire or leave public service?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. The development of the movement of mail by air has been a joint venture of the Post Office and the airlines. This joint venture has benefits for both parties and it has become a practice followed by airlines in Canada and other countries to provide a certain amount of transportation for Post Office officials to attend meetings of the two groups, sometimes at distant locations.

2. Only Air Canada employees, retain certain passes after retirement. Non-company personnel do not.

DERAILMENTS AND MILEAGE

Question No. 2,585—Mr. Wenman:

1. For each of the past ten years, by province, how many train derailments were there on track operated by (a) CN (b) CP?

2. For the years 1965 to 1974 inclusive, what was the increase in (a) passenger-car miles (b) freight-car miles for (i) CN (ii) CP?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. See table at end of answer.

2. (a) The increase in passenger-car miles for the years 1965 to 1974 inclusive were as follows: (i) Canadian National Railways, 1965, 18,617,914; 1966, 2,701,523; 1967, 16,429,982; 1968, No increase, (Decreased 36,964,499); 1969, No increase, (Decreased 25,285,044); 1970, No increase, (Decreased 22,664,465); 1971, No increase, (Decreased 14,984,601); 1972,No increase, (Decreased 10,575,221); 1973, No increase, (Decreased 17,625,787); 1974, 13,305,329; (ii) Canadian Pacific Limited, 1965, 19,282,224; 1966, 31,565,734; 1967, 10,152,881; 1968, No increase, (Decreased 18,338,754); 1969, No increase, (Decreased 1,288,152); 1970, No increase, (Decreased 2,300,748); 1971, No increase, (Decreased 8,079,-586); 1972, No increase, (Decreased 491,605); 1973, No increase, (Decreased 5,354,122); 1974, 4,193,896.

2. (b) The increase in freight-car miles for the years 1965 to 1974 were as follows: (i) Canadian National Railways*, 1965, 29,076,344; 1966, 67,980,743; 1967, No increase, (decreased 53,784,375); 1968, No increase, (decreased 13,350,706); 1969, 80,979,871; 1970, 120,877,731; 1971, 128,971,-874; 1972, 146,230,671; 1973, No increase, (decreased 79,700,-644); 1974, 173,357,014; (ii) Canadian Pacific Limited*, 1965, 5,332,429; 1966, 122,221,441; 1967, No increase, (decreased 112,490,356); 1968, No increase, (decreased 51,976,421); 1969, 29,276,919; 1970, 142,896,963; 1971, 60,666,-447; 1972, 103,828,610; 1973, 14,078,239; 1974, 65,481,920.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—BADGES

Question No. 2,616—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the situation of January 17, 1975, described by the Minister of National Defence as "at present the sailor is able to identify with Maritime Command, and the soldier is able to identify with Mobile Command" changed by the decision to refuse to allow servicemen the right, acknowledged until recently, to wear the badges of their former pre-unification element/service and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No. As stated in response to Question 2403* (Hansard 134, page 5,877 dated 16 May, 1975) dress instructions issued on 3 April, 1970 stated that the cap badges associated with the class of service to which officers and men are assigned, were to be worn when the badge became available. Under the dress instructions issued on April 3, 1970 identification with a command is achieved by a badge worn on the right breast pocket by all members of the command. Also under these regulations identification with the classification or trade to which officers and men are assigned is achieved by a cap badge. It is for this reason that cap badges are not related to commands.

BILINGUALISM

Question No. 2,674—Mr. Cossitt:

Was a document dated March 18, 1975 headed "Open Invitation to D.S.S. Bilingual Anglophones" and "Invitation aux francophones bilingues du MAS" circulated to employees in the Services and Receiver General of Canada Branch of the Department of Supply and Services and, if so (a) was it marked "Personal and Confidential" and for what reason (b) what was the exact purpose of the document (c) did all employees receive a copy and, if not, for what reason (d) was the document mailed or distributed to all employees with (i) English surnames (ii) French surnames?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): A memorandum dated March 18, 1975, headed "Open Invitation to DSS Bilingual Anglophones" and "Invitation aux francophones bilingues du MAS" was circulated to certain employees of the Department of Supply and Services. (a) The memorandum was not marked Personal and Confidential because the content did not warrant this classification. (b) The purpose of the document was to encourage anglophone graduates of French language courses to use their recently acquired knowledge and thereby maintain or improve their communication with others in their second official language, and to encourage their colleagues who are already bilingual including those who have French as their Mother tongue to assist them by using the French language whenever possible and appropriate. (c) All employees did not receive a copy since it is addressed to bilingual Anglophone and Francophone employees only. The invitation was not applicable to unilingual employees by its very nature. (d) The document was mailed to employees whose departmental records indicated that they enjoyed bilingual status, regardless of surname.

FISSIONABLE MATERIAL

Question No. 2,740—Mr. Francis:

To the knowledge of the government, did Dr. Fred Iklé, director of the US Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and others, estimate that within 20 years the fissionable material in foreign transit at any given time will be enough to make 20,000 nuclear bombs and, if so, is the government prepared to make representations to the United Nations and other world councils regarding the necessity of new international institutions to supervise the flow of nuclear materials and prevent the theft of such materials?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Estimates on the amount of fissionable material that will be in transit at any given time 20 years from now are of course entirely speculatve in nature. It is reasonable to assume that certain quantities of fissionable materials will be in transit, and that should such material be stolen it is conceivable that an explosive device could be developed. There are strict regulations set up by the IAEA on the safe transport of radioactive material and extensive recommendations on the physical protection of such material in transit designed to prevent theft. Traditionally, the matter of physical protection has been viewed as the domestic responsibility of the states involved. At the recent NPT Review Conference it was agreed that the establishment of a convention to secure internationally applied physical protection standards was a matter that should receive further study. Through our participation in the IAEA Canada has always made clear its concern for stringent supervision of radioactive materials in transit, and we will continue to press for tighter regulations in this matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE—NUMBER OF PERSONNEL HIRED TO IMPLEMENT BILL C-21, BILL C-28, BILL C-30 AND BILL C-50

Question No. 2,825—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. As of May 15, 1975, how many persons have been hired (a) by the Public Service Commission (b) under contract by the Department of Agriculture for duties relating primarily to the implementation and administration of (i) Bill C-21, An Act to amend the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act (ii) Bill C-28, An Act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act (iii) Bill C-30, An Act to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act (iv) Bill C-50, Act to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act?

2. In each case, what was the date of the original employment or commencement of contract?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) (i) nil, (ii) 27, (iii) nil, (iv) nil; (b) (i) nil, (ii) one, (iii) nil, (iv) nil.

[Mr. Goyer.]

2. Hired by the Public Service Commission with duties related to Bill C-28. 1, August 2, 1973; 2, September 24, 1973; 2, October 1, 1973; 1, October 15, 1973; 2, November 26, 1973; 1, January 1, 1974; 4, March 5, 1974; 1, February 4, 1974; 1, March 25, 1974; 1, April 29, 1974; 1, May 1, 1974; 1, May 6, 1974; 1, May 15, 1974; 1, June 25, 1974; 1, July 8, 1974; 1, July 15, 1974; 1, July 28, 1974; 1, October 1, 1974; 2, November 1, 1974; 1, December 1, 1974; total 27. Hired under contract with duties related to Bill C-28, 1, July 15, 1974.

CMHC—EMPLOYMENT OF JEAN C. PARADIS

Question No. 2,841—Mr. Huntington:

1. Was or is Jean C. Paradis an officer, director or in any way connected in an advisory capacity with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

2. On what date did he attain this position?

3. Did he attain this position by appointment or election?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1, 2 and 3. Mr. Jean C. Paradis was appointed Regional Supervisor, Quebec Region, on January 1, 1954. He resigned on June 11, 1954, to accept employment with Campeau Corporation.

TRANSPORT—FEDERAL COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION COMPANY LIMITED

Question No. 2,842—Mr. Huntington:

1. By what process did the government choose Federal Commerce and Navigation Company Ltd., as its partner in the 35 million dollar bulk carrier icebreaker, announced June 16, 1975?

2. Were other companies given the opportunity to submit tenders for the contract and, if so, who were they?

3. Which Eastern Arctic mines including the destinations to which the ores are to be shipped will be served by this vessel?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Approximately three years ago the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Ministry of Transport engaged in discussions with a number of Canadian shipping companies concerning the design, construction and operation of Arctic Class vessels. The purpose of these discussions was to encourage companies to take the initiative in this new area of shipping technology and operation, and submit ideas and proposals for consideration to Industry, Trade and Commerce and MOT.

2. The companies involved included Federal Commerce and Navigation, Canadian Steamship Lines, Upper Lakes Shipping, Canadian Arctic Consortium, Agence Maritime, Cogemar, Bomar Navigation. Only Federal Commerce continued to show interest, and proceeded at their own expense to design an Arctic vessel and subsequently received from Industry, Trade and Commerce a PAIT grant (Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology). On the basis of Federal Commerce initiative and the PAIT grant, a proposal of joint risk sharing between Government and Industry to construct and operate such a vessel was developed.

3. The Navisivik Mine at Strathcona Sound and the proposed Arvik mine at Little Cornwallis are presently the most likely sources of cargo for the proposed icebreak-ing cargo vessel. Both mine outputs have Europe as their final market destination.

TREE NURSERY AT INDIAN HEAD, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 2,884—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. In regard to the tree nursery at Indian Head, Saskatchewan, what was the cost of this operation for the years (a) 1972 (b) 1973 (c) 1974 (d) first six months of 1975?

2. What was the income of this operation for the same years?

3. What was the source of such income?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): This venture is owned and operated by the Province of Saskatchewan and accordingly the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development submits a nil reply.

CONSUMER HELP OFFICES

Question No. 2,895—Mr. Herbert:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,286, for what reason were no consumer help offices located in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): In the answer to Question 2,286, part 2, it was indicated that there were seven Consumer Help Offices at varying stages of development. Two of these are in the Province of Quebec. Arrangements have since been concluded with Le Centre Communautaire et Dépannage and with Le Centre Communautaire St. Urbain Community Centre (University Settlement of Montreal) for the operation of Consumer Help Offices in Montreal.

Order Paper Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,373—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 456 of the Second Session of the 29th Parliament which stated in part that 526 Public Service employees had taken French lessons and 21 had taken English lessons at a cost of $793,994 at the Berlitz School of Languages in Ottawa during the past three years, what are the names, job designations and government departments of all such persons?

Return tabled.

PUBLIC SERVICE—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,374—Mr. Cossitt:

Since the answer was prepared to Question No. 456 of the Second Session of the 29th Parliament (a) how many additional public servants have taken or are taking at public expense (i) French-language courses (ii) English-language courses at the Berlitz School of Languages in Ottawa (b) what is the total expenditure in this regard from public funds (c) what are the names, job designations and government departments involved?

POST OFFICE—BATTERTON MAIL SERVICES LTD.

Question No. 2,411—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Is government mail being delivered and/or picked up daily by trucks of Batterton Mail Services Ltd. in the Ottawa area and, if so (a) at what points (b) what type of mail is handled (c) under what contracts?

2. Is the material of any department or agency being distributed by this company and, if so, what is the annual cost to each department or agency?

Return tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, for the second time I must raise this matter. I dislike doing this, but when the government fully intends to refrain from giving information which must be available to it, one can only conclude that it is contempt of the House. On May 23 I placed on the order paper question No. 2,542, a simple question which reads:

Are Canadians employed by the United Nations or any of its agencies or any organizations under its aegis subject to income tax on their earnings?

That question remains unanswered two months later. Why? Is the reason this, that it would be embarrassing if it were ascertained that some of those employed by the United Nations pay income tax, but others do not?

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a point of order with regard to an unanswered question on the order paper. I put starred question 2,527 on the order paper on May 20. It remains unanswered. I fail to see why it should not have been answered immediately. To be fair, I did receive today an answer to one question standing in my name. I should like to be assured that the question will be answered in due course, no matter whether the principal secretary of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) remains in his present position.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, may I deal with the matter raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I presume the question placed on the order paper has been referred to my department and, although it has not come to my personal attention, I will examine the matter immediately.

[Mr. Herbert.]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion for the production of papers No. 40?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

COPY OF THE EXTRACT FROM THE BOARD MINUTES OF THE NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD PASSED JANUARY 30, 1975

Motion No. 40—Mr. Forrestall:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the extract from the Board Minutes of the National Harbours Board, passed January 30, 1975, described in the answer to Question No. 1,899 relating to the delegation by the Board of some authority at the Port of Montreal to an Executive Committee with respect to day-to-day operations of the Port.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I move the motion on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the National Harbours Board does not make public extracts of board minutes. However, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has the discretion to make public board policy matters regarding the delegation of authority to port authorities, executive committees, and port managers for the ports of Montreal and Vancouver, I wish to table in both official languages the policy adopted by the board on January 29, 1975. I therefore ask that this motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary indicated his intention to make this request. In the absence of the hon. member, and considering how unusual it is to see the government provide information of any kind, may I, on the hon. member's behalf, accept the parliamentary secretary's suggestion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CANADIAN INVOLVEMENT IN CONSTRUCTION OF NUCLEAR REACTOR IN ARGENTINA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, Canadian involvement in the construction of the nuclear reactor near Cordoba, Argentina, an involvement which has been in progress despite an absence of adequate safeguards.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was good enough to give the Chair notice of his intention to request an emergency debate pursuant to Standing Order 26. The Chair does not intend to deal at length with the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition. The motion, of course, concerns a matter of great importance, as is made clear by the frequency with which the House's attention is directed to that subject during the question period and through the use of motions proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43.

The Chair must repeat the same basic reasons that it gave a week ago to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) when the general subject of nuclear arms sales and safeguards policies was raised in the same way by that hon. member. Whether it was exactly a week ago is not material. It was actually nine days ago.

It was then the position of the Chair, as reported at page 7531 of the Hansard of the current session, was outlined showing that the subject had been a matter of continuing concern. That was also evident in today's question period, as perhaps half the question period was taken up by hon. members asking the questions about safeguards and about the general arms policy.

This shows two things. First, it is an extremely important subject, of great concern to Canadians, and therefore it is understandable why both hon. members sought the intervention of the Chair in setting aside time for an emergency debate. On the other hand, it has been a subject of concern for some time and, undoubtedly, whether there is a debate this evening or any other evening in the near future, it will continue to be a subject of concern, and hon. members will continue to direct questions to the government on its policies. Therefore, it seems to me as not being directly suitable for the treatment that is envisaged by Standing Order 26.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will you forgive me if I raise a point of order? In doing so, I do not argue with your decision. I wonder, if there are future efforts to move motions under Standing Order 26 with respect to this matter, whether Your Honour will take into consideration the fact that the repeated raising of this question in this House means that it is a serious one. Will Your Honour also take into consideration that new developments can take place that make it more serious than it was earlier? As I say, Your Honour has made your ruling for today. I hope that any further attempts to move this motion will receive the kind of consideration I have now suggested.

● (1520)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raises a valid point of order. Hon. members will understand from the previous treatment of motions concerning labour unrest throughout Canada that there have been situations in which the Chair has simply said "At the moment the matter is one of continuing concern." However, that does not in any way preclude developments that may take place in the next few days which will aggravate the situation to the point persuading the Chair on another day as, for example, the instance put forward today. Rather than being part of a general policy, it concerned a particular sale. Events might transpire over a matter of hours or days that would bring it to a crisis or critical situation. While the Chair is of the opinion that at the moment the circumstances do not warrant setting aside special hours for an emergency debate in this House, it is a situation that can change on a daily basis.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, July 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 7416).

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks that I started last evening there are several important points to add to what I said during the first two minutes of my speech. I spoke of people who had to travel 500 to 700 miles to reach the main arteries of Manitoba in order to take part in recreation and so on. I failed to mention that there are others besides miners who have to do this. Although the mining industry is certainly the most important group that is hit, there are many forest workers, and workers in several other industries. These are the steelworkers from many of the northern communities in Manitoba who, as I said last night, are the backbone of this country. They are the ones who keep northern Manitoba going.

With regard to the ten cents a gallon excise tax, there are some in this House, including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), who fail to realize what a gallon of gas costs in some parts of northern Canada. I stated at one time that in many northern communities a gallon of gas costs in excess of $2 a gallon. I now have the proof. In Shamattawa at the present time the price of gas is $2.25 a gallon. This community is made up mostly of trappers, fishermen, and hunters who harvest the resources for their livelihood. It is little comfort for me to know that the ten cents a gallon increase is going to affect people such as this. But as we read further into the bill, we see that they will be exempt. These people will be able to apply for a refund on the very, very simple form the government will issue. If it is a simple form, it will certainly meet their character.

Many isolated northern communities do not have a regular mail service, television or telephones. They do not receive newspapers on a regular basis. They must depend on Information Canada. That is like trying to depend on the weather because Information Canada certainly does not cover all parts of Canada. It may be unpopular in this area, but it certainly is not in the isolated parts of Canada.

I can see the trappers, fishermen and hunters in these isolated communities not making an application because they will not understand the form. I understand that it will be printed in French and English. Most of those who live in these remote communities speak, write, and understand Cree. I am sure they do not understand French. Presumably they will be able to find someone who will read the English portion to them.

Certain communities should be exempt from this ten cents a gallon excise tax for the simple reason they will receive a refund of every cent they spend on gasoline.

The refund will become part of the taxable income. The same problem was encountered with family allowances. The people in these remote communities had no knowledge of the fact that family allowances were to be a part of their income. The refunds of this gas tax will also form a part of their income. These people just cannot believe what has happened. They ask why the government gives them something, does not tell them about it, and then at the end of the year asks for some of the money back. Many of those who live in these isolated communities live almost below the poverty line. They do not have the money to make the payments back to the taxation department.

I question whether the government has the authority to collect this excise tax on Indian reserves. At the present time treaty Indians working on reserves do not pay income tax. Does the Excise Tax Act supersede the Income Tax Act? I tried to get this point clarified through the department in the last couple of days, but I was not successful. No one could tell me whether these people would have to pay or be exempt from this ridiculous gasoline tax.

This figure of $2.25 a gallon is the price for gas that was received last winter delivered over winter roads. When the new supplies of gas are received, the price will be $2.35 or $2.40 a gallon. I suppose once you start paying over $2 a gallon for gas it really does not matter if you add a nickel here or there. The people who are going to suffer are the consumers in northern Canada.

I now wish to deal with the additional tax that has been imposed on air travel. There are at least 25 communities in the Churchill constituency which have no other means of communication or transportation than by air. There are no roads or railways. Here again an additional tax is being imposed on these people even though they have no alternative but to travel by aircraft.

In addition, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) saw fit to close many northern airstrips. This has also imposed an additional burden on these people. The province of Manitoba agreed to cost share on a 50/50 basis an arrangement with the federal government in order to bring airstrips in northern Manitoba up to the national standard. I have asked the minister when action will be taken, or if in fact he will meet this cost sharing arrangement with the provinces. I have asked him to show some leadership by bringing remote airstrips back into operation so these people can use a facility that is there.

I hope the money that is being collected through this additional air transportation tax will be used as the federal government's share to bring the airstrips up to the standard that is required by the Department of Transport.

[Mr. Smith (Churchill).]

This government is not considering the people of this country. In our part of the country the burden the minister has placed on the public shows he does not believe that people come first. I know this is an old line which the NDP coined during the election campaign when they said people came first. In the Conservative Party we had no need to publicize that belief because the people always come first with the Conservative Party.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Smith (Churchill): On July 18 there was a press release from the Prime Minister's office to the effect that Canada and Manitoba were joining hands in an agreement to co-operate closely in informing citizens about programs which involve both levels of government. That was tremendous. That was really a step forward. However, on July 23 we read in the Globe and Mail that as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was standing talking to the premier face to face, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) was standing at his back with a knife saying, "Now that you have not supplied us with the information we are practically going to take action to put you in jail, or serve an injunction against the provincial government".

I was glad to see the Minister of Indian Affairs take this action. It is about time he stood up on behalf of the people he represents because I do not think he has represented the people who will be affected by the diversion of the Churchill River and by other hydro schemes in Manitoba.

As I look through Bill C-66 I am dismayed at its total irrelevancy to anything in northern Manitoba. All the bill does is impose a further burden on the people of the north. They cannot even travel by aircraft now because of the additional cost. They cannot afford to go on holiday.

We try to encourage people to come to the north to work in our mines and foster development, but as things are now we cannot even encourage them to come up there because the cost of living is becoming prohibitive. Yet if it were not for the northern part of Canada the rest of the country would be starving right now because 70 per cent of our product goes to the eastern part of the country so it can survive. For these reasons I think many of the clauses we are considering, especially the ten cents a gallon tax, should be struck from the bill. I certainly support the amendment moved by my leader to hoist the measure for six months. In fact, I should like to see it hoisted for ever.

I would mention one other thing. When it comes to the cost of heating homes may I say that we are heating them for nine or ten months of the year. When the effect of the increase in the price of heating fuel is felt people will be leaving the north in hordes. If members think the rate of unemployment is high now, wait until this bill becomes a reality, and people are not receiving their rebates. The unemployment rate in Manitoba will be a lot higher than it is at the present time, I can tell you.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have followed very closely and with great interest the current debate on Bill C-66 whose main purpose is to raise the excise tax on gasoline by ten cents. However, Mr. Speaker, you can rest assured that the House is not the only one to witness the sometimes heated discussions on the subject, because the criticisms of the people are really harsh and comments are getting violent.

It can be said that because of the bill the Liberals' star is setting fast. As a matter of fact, I had warned the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when he presented his last budget that the gas price increase would be a bad measure in every respect. It is the most negative measure in his budget and it leads one to conclude, and everyone is saying so, that there will be no election this year. Anyone who cares to examine the bill and the consequences its implementation will have must really look hard to find out who might benefit from it.

No one, or almost no one, will benefit from the positive windfalls resulting from this bill, while on the other hand the most favoured will be inflation which will continue to increase. In my remarks on the budget speech I deplored and I still deplore today the fact that those who are hardest hit by this impossible legislation are once more the workers, the labourers and the farmers. Besides, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has also expressed the opinion that the great loser in this matter will be the average citizen who has very little means to try to reconquer his self-sufficiency. This means that is purchasing power is directly affected once more, without his being able to salvage anything from this important financial loss that he cannot avoid.

But an inevitable fact will happen if the government so continues to strangle the Canadian workers who are the basis of the economic pyramid of our present financial system. Indeed, if they are not allowed to adjust themselves and face the difficulties we encounter, the situation could crack on all sides and further worsen the economic problems Canada is now faced with.

Last week, here in Ottawa, the Food Prices Review Board published the report of a study made from January 1973 to April 1975, and the results make us think a lot since they directly affect the average citizen, and especially low income families. For that period, the price of bread increased by 51 per cent and the price of fresh milk by 54 per cent, while the consumer's price index for general food consumed at home went up by 35 per cent.

These facts are really meaningful, and if the 10 cents increase on gasoline is added, it becomes in every aspects a practical nonsense.

Last Wednesday, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) gave us a very good account of the painful situation of workers in his area who must drive several miles every day to go to work. Here is what he said:

> The minister now comes along and slaps these people down with this ten cent per gallon tax. Even if they form pools, and they do, they cannot claim the fuel expense including this excise tax. They must use their cars or vehicles to get to and from their work, in much the same way as a doctor uses his car in the pursuit of his profession. There is no difference in the use of the vehicle, but the doctor is able to write off this tax.

He can have a rebate for this tax, whereas the worker cannot.

I want indeed to point out that this situation where workers absolutely have to drive to work is the same almost everywhere in Canada. In reality, only the cities of some importance can provide a choice in means of transportation to go to work. In my area, in the constituency of Richmond, we have the same situation. Many workers have to drive to work in the plants of Richmond, Windsor, Brampton, Sherbrooke, Valcourt, Disraeli, Weedon and other places. There as elsewhere our workers are affected by this tax.

There is also another class of loosers, and these are the farmers. Indeed, the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture strongly criticized the last federal budget and pointed out the adverse effects of the increase in the price of gas. He clearly indicated that, on the one hand, although the budget provides an exemption for farmers, they will feel the increase in prices this coming August and, on the other hand, the prices of many oil by-products necessary in agriculture will automatically jump once again. This means that they too will feel the pinch of that increase and that will inevitably lead to a rise in the costs of food products. It is a vicious circle, and the government is currently maintaining the inflationary thrust by measures as irrational and detrimental as those contained in Bill C-66.

However, the government would like very much to let someone else carry the odiousness of such an unpopular measure but it might be a lot more difficult to do this time. Indeed, oil companies also reacted. Everybody is stepping in to lay their cards on the table, which might upset the strategy of the government and actually clarify the situation. For example, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce stepped in to say that those price increases for petroleum products benefit federal and provincial governments but not oil companies. Mr. B. T. Johnson, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Chamber, stated the following:

> Unless producing provinces reduce their royalty rates the amount of $1.50 will continue to be taken entirely by the federal and provincial governments till December 31, 1975, and afterwards the government will receive about $1.25 or 83 cents."

● (1540)

Those statements are quite interesting and help in understanding the entire problem. Moreover, Gulf Oil Canada Ltd. President Jerry McAfee has stated that the federal budget does not take into account the real causes of the difficulties now experienced by the oil industry and that the governments will pocket almost all those price increases. Mr. McAfee went on to say and I quote:

> Whatever explanation is given by the government, the main thing is that the public must understand that oil companies which need funds for exploration will not have any of those funds collected through the levy of a new excise tax of 10 cents per gallon of gas and the increase of $1.50 per barrel of oil.
> They have taken everything! Two thirds of the increase in the price of crude oil will go to the producing provinces and the other third will go to Ottawa; the federal government will of course keep all the revenue from the excise tax, probably to maintain throughout Canada a uniform price for crude petroleum, even in the areas which import oil at the highest cost.
>
> The excise tax may contribute to reduce consumption, but the sad fact is that Canada cannot conserve enough to ensure sufficient supplies for the future. This objective can only be met through an energetic prospection program. It is unfortunate that the government is trying to create the illusion that this budget will promote prospection when, in fact, only about $40 million will go to the industry. At current price levels, this sum is barely sufficient for sinking a well in the Beaufort Sea.

It is also unfortunate that the government is attempting to mislead the public by suggesting that the industry is to blame for these increases, but I do not believe that this will work this time.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, these statements are very clear and put the problem in its true context. There is also a very important point that I would like to emphasize in the comment of Mr. McAfee and it concerns our need to establish an energetic prospection program. This goes along with the motion proposed recently in the House by my colleague, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte). His motion, proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43, asked that a complete inventory report of all our resources in this field be given to the House so that we may truly know what are our supplies, our potential and our capacities for producing oil.

In passing, I congratulate my colleague for his motion as it contains a truly serious element to solve our present and future problems as concerns oil. This was a very appropriate and positive proposal, but the government preferred to ignore it and to put forward measures which, instead, are going to boost inflation. That increase in gas price will immediately result in a 2 per cent rise in the cost of living. That is an economic blunder. Further, the Shah of Iran, in a press conference in Mexico recently, indicated that the oil producing nations were firmly decided to hike their prices by 35 per cent, which will play a decisive role against consumers and will result in yet another increase in the cost of living index.

The least we can say in view of such a situation and given the blunders of the government is that the many people who are expressing concern are not altogether wrong. The government's administration goes against common sense. On the one hand, they have no qualms about considerably reducing the margin of movement of business, on the other hand, they attack the worker by limiting his purchasing power seriously.

Just as we have unleaded gas, so have we unleaded officials and governments. If private enterprises acted the way the government is now doing, it would not take long for them to go bankrupt. If the Liberal party does not change its attitude, it will soon lead the country to state socialism, for the worker will get tired of working for nothing because the cost he will have to pay to go to work will be higher than what he will bring back home to feed his children. It is obvious that I cannot support Bill C-66 and that I must vote against this increase in gas prices, because that measure is simply unacceptable and will have no other effect than to fuel inflation and affect the Canadian worker.

[English]

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, of all the bills presented to parliament by any government for many years, this bill, Bill C-66 to amend the Excise Tax Act, as reprinted, has generated more heat, caused the loss of more energy, and more hate and distrust of government, than any other bill ever presented. The people of this nation are mad, their mood ugly. They are bitter.

Mr. Béchard: I did not receive one letter or beef.

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

Mr. Jones: Then you should use the Canada post. If one studies the bill and thinks about the alleged reasons or excuses for it, one will readily find that the bill is inconsistent per se. It is plain ridiculous and senseless. It is the type of legislation, however, that one could expect from a government which has full, arbitrary control, a so-called majority government, but a regime that is lacking in foresight and leadership and the common sense to take steps now which would alleviate the problems and issues which it has permitted to multiply, such as unemployment, inflation, housing, and all the other crises in our nation.

Some hon. members who have spoken on this bill have implied that this may be the last budget of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). I could not care less about the future political career of the Minister of Finance, but I do care about the future of this nation and our citizens. I could not care less whether we call this bill the "Turner Cop-out", the "Turner Turn-out", or the "Turner Turnover". To me it is like a plain tart without any filling. It is dry, tasteless, hard to swallow, too flaky, and it is sickening and stifling.

An hon. Member: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Jones: The hon. member can ask a question at the end of my remarks; in the meantime I would ask him to keep quiet since under the rules I have the floor.

This bill purports to do four things. First, it purports to remove the excise tax on certain items, such as insulation materials, which should have been done years ago. Second, it increases the air transportation tax. There is no indication as to how this money will be spent. Will it be used to benefit the users of airport facilities across the country, or only the major facilities? Third, it purports to reduce the excise tax on certain wines, and fourth, it imposes an excise tax of ten cents per gallon on gasoline.

● (1550)

The Minister of Finance says that the purposes of this excessive and exorbitant inflationary gasoline tax are to conserve gasoline, to provide added revenue, and there is some indication that it is to enable the country to stay on a one price system. All these alleged excuses or reasons for the introduction of this ten cents excise tax are invalid and inconsistent. If it were a conservation method, it would not have that much effect. The large users are the commercial users, and they will receive a rebate.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) yesterday went on and on with a long list of persons and corporations which would be exempt. He told us it is estimated that the annual take on this tax by the government—and I presume that is the estimated gross take—is to be about $350 million in 1975 and half a billion dollars in 1976, but neither the Minister of National Revenue nor the Minister of Finance, nor anyone else, told us just how much will be refunded. We are entitled to know just how much is the net tax to be collected after the administration and collection costs, and after the refunds. It occurred to me, as I listened to the debate and heard some of the ministers, that with typical government and bureaucratic red tape and bungling, and continual empire building, the final result might be that more money will be refunded than collected. Yes, it could happen very well with our present government and its administration.

The alleged reasons or excuses for this bill do not add up. They are inconsistent and illogical. This has been said several times before, and it is true. The fact that the bill was imperfect and had to be reprinted at the beginning should have been a warning and an omen to the Minister of Finance that this "10 center" on gasoline was wrong and imperfect ab initio. It was imperfect from the beginning, and it is still imperfect. It just will not work. It will be a hard and unethical method by which to collect taxes.

Who in reality will pay the tax, and who in reality will get the refund? For the most part the taxpayer will be the ordinary Canadian, the fellow who just cannot afford it, the ordinary worker, the pensioner, the agent, the senior citizen, and all those who do not have the money and who do not put a great number of miles on their cars but who, for one reason or another, absolutely require a motor vehicle for various purposes, such as to go to their place of work, to go to the doctor, to go to the hospital, to pick up groceries, and so on.

I suggest that if the government were in need of $350 million added revenue it should have directed its attention to saving money directly and forthwith, as I suggested a few weeks ago and as reported in Hansard. I will repeat what I said then:

> One, eliminate the existing system and policy of implementing bilingualism in the public service, halt language training, close down the office of the Commissioner of Official Languages and cut down all allied programs and projects—
> Two, eliminate Information Canada. Three, eliminate CIDA management, some of its programs and globe-trotting. Four, reduce payments to the CBC, the National Film Board and other such groups. Five, reduce the Prime Minister's staff and expenses by at least 60 per cent. Six, reduce and/or cut out duplication, waste, overspending and inefficiencies in departments and agencies of the federal government in Ottawa which hold up capital projects across the nation. The empire building in Ottawa begins in the Prime Minister's own bureaucracy and goes right through the entire bureaucratic system.
> Seven, reduce expensive and costly studies, studies of studies, consultants' fees and the substantial number of professionals and economists in various government departments. Eight, halt conversion to the metric system. Nine, eliminate the costly, expensive and luxurious lounge for MPs and senators in Ottawa and make more productive use of this space. Ten, repeal legislation requiring bilingual labelling, particularly for imports and exports . . . Eleven, eliminate federal sales tax on Canadian goods, which causes our goods to be non-competitive nationally and internationally. Twelve, reduce the tentacles of that octopus, government bureaucracy and red tape, occupying so much office space. It is disturbing to see how much money is spent on this in the Ottawa area. I just hate to see Ottawa going to Hull.

I regret that move very much.

The minister and his colleagues have heard all the speeches and arguments against this excise tax, this "10 center". Surely the minister must now realize that the members of the opposition cannot in all good conscience afford a measure of this kind. Surely the minister must realize that even members on his own side in all good conscience cannot go back to their constituencies and say to their constituents that they supported this bill conscientiously. This "10 center" is unfair, unreasonable, and iniquitous. It will create untold hardships for all Canadians.

I would have thought that the Minister of Finance would have made some reference to assistance for mass transit. Of course that was another Liberal gimmick and window dressing during the 1974 election campaign. In all honesty and sincerity I would like to appeal to the Prime Minister's sense of fair play and to the sense of fair play of the Minister of Finance and his colleagues, that having heard the pros and cons of the bill they take action immediately to withdraw the ten cents provision from this bill, or at least to support the amendment, and in the intervening six months give further consideration and review to the entire financial picture.

I want to be fair to the minister but I must say that if this piece of legislation is enacted it will go down in history as a terrible blot on the image of this parliament.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Jones: You may ask a question but you might not get an answer.

Mr. Anderson: I agree that I might not get an answer; however, the hon. member did say during his speech that he would allow a question. Does the hon. member not realize that the ten cents excise tax is to subsidize the gas consumed by constituents and consumers east of the Ottawa Valley? I approve of the Turner budget—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Anderson: —because he did make Canada into one nation in dealing with the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: What kind of nonsense is this?

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question. The allegation of the questioner was just an argument for the presentation of the "10 center". It was not really a proof. The government is taking too much from the taxpayers now. That is what I alleged in my talk today. There are other ways in which the government could have saved money, but it is too bullheaded to do it.

Mr. Roger Young (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to be recognized and to participate in this debate today. For the past year I have been very proud to be a member of the House, and I am happy to say that I am a firm supporter of the government as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: Perhaps some of the yahoos could give a few minutes to someone speaking from this side.

May I diverge for a brief second, Mr. Speaker, to say that one of the things that makes me very proud of this institution and of the fact that I am a small part of it is the ceremony which takes place on the front lawns of parliament and the streets of Ottawa leading up to Parliament Hill every morning. I am referring to the changing of the guard. As I happened to be coming here a little later than usual this morning, I watched some of the ceremony and I felt justly proud of this place, of this institution, and of the fine work that is done by the young men who participate.

Mr. Baldwin: You should have stayed there and not gone to caucus.

Mr. Young: I am happy to speak in support of Bill C-66. I have not spoken many times this year, perhaps four or five times only, and the record will show that I have participated much more in the work of committees than in the work of the House.

● (1600)

There are those who work to seek headlines, and those who work to get a job done. There are some members opposite who often speak in public. If one looks rather closely at what they have to say I think one would find that in all the huffing and puffing that comes out there is more puff than huff. In the past three weeks there has been much blowing of hot gaseous vapours but not a great deal of substance.

Members opposite have been quite fond of pointing to the lack of speakers from the government side. They are fond of making extravagant claims concerning the changes they have forced the government to make. They are fond of criticizing, but are not very able when it comes to suggesting what they would do. Their criticisms have been mostly destructive and far from constructive. They have suggested that spending should be cut but they have been unable to suggest where, how, and in what programs. They have been critical of the excise tax on gasoline, but they have been unwilling to admit that their measures would force the equivalent revenue to be raised through general taxation.

Under the system we have proposed the user would pay, while under general taxation the non-user would also pay. Why should we penalize the Canadian who does not own a car? Why should we penalize the senior citizen who does not use a car to get around, and whose budget already is too tight?

Miss MacDonald: Tell that to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Young: There are those who talk a pretty good game from the opposition benches but whose action is different. We have heard a lot of hollow and empty rhetoric from members opposite. Their rhetoric has been hollow and shallow even to the point of braggadocio. We have heard pretty extravagant claims from members opposite. We have heard Tory members claim that they put forward a united stand in opposition to the budget bills, filibustering and dragging things out day after day. What they are trying to do is nothing more than establish an election issue for Bill Davis on which to go to the people of this province this fall. They will not succeed because the people of Ontario will not be fooled when they realize who is to blame when they cannot get their rebate cheques.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Who put on the tax in the first place?

Mr. Young: It is hurting, is it, fellows?

[Mr. Young.]

An hon. Member: Not at all.

Mr. Young: The budget bills will be passed and the people of this province will know just who caused them to wait, however long it is. There will be many farmers, fishermen, and commercial people who will not look too favourably on the big blue Davis machine when they find out that the cohorts of the premier in Ottawa caused the delay in respect of the rebate cheques. There will be many people in eastern Ontario who will be pretty upset at Mr. Davis when they find just how his bally-hoo and phoofe-raw about a freeze means that there may be no gas at the pumps in this area of the country come another month or so.

Many auto workers will not be too happy when they find that the dropping of the sales tax on domestic cars really only results in the export of work to the United States. They will remember. There will be many others who will see through the rhetoric and the bombast, because when the inanities and platitudes have faded away they will find that, behind those clouds of hot gases we have suffered through for the past few weeks, there is no substance.

There have been great claims in respect of unification of the opposition in its stand on these budget bills. I suggest there is no unity and that there is not much of a stand. We had an example last Thursday when the hon. member for Okanagan-Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) commended the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for removing the excise tax on wines which had been imposed last November. Those of us here who come from the Niagara Peninsula and who have a fairly intimate knowledge of the domestic grape and wine industry, support the hon. member for Okanagan-Boundary in his commendation of the minister. However, yesterday we heard the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) take issue with and castigate the minister for this.

Yesterday we also heard the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) ridicule this change in respect of assistance to the grape and wine industry. We witnessed the same division of opinion in respect of other members of the opposition party. Some members commended the minister and others criticized him.

Last Thursday the hon. member for Okanagan-Boundary, in commending the minister, made the rather exaggerated claim that he almost single-handedly brought about the change in the excise tax provisions in respect of the wine industry. He suggested that at the very least it was as a result of the work done by his party. I should like to quote the hon. member as recorded at page 7670 of Hansard for July 17:

> I would first like to commend the minister for taking the excise tax off wine which he put on just a few months earlier in his previous budget. At that time we in the opposition pleaded with him and tried to obtain help from the government side of the House, but none was forthcoming.

It would seem to me that the hon. member does not have too much support from within his party—if one looks at the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Jaw or the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton. It seems to me that, for all that pleading which his party is supposed to have done, there are quite a few yahoos surrounding him who would rather not have that change. One wonders for what purpose an hon. member would make such a speech. Perhaps he would do so to create his own limelight so that he might step forward and take a bow. One who has to heap the kudos upon his own shoulders becomes suspect. One begins to suspect all that has been claimed might not in fact have been done.

While such grand eloquence and posturing might look good in the eyes of one's constituents back home, and while such statements might find some use in outlining the heroic gesture in the gallant struggle on behalf of one's constituents, I think a reasonable man would be put on guard that it might be worthwhile to check the facts. If the hon. member is thinking of sending word of his actions back home, I wonder if he will also have the courage to forward a few copies of the remarks of his colleagues, the hon. member for Moose Jaw and the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, who in their remarks have castigated the changes he says he fought so hard to obtain.

I am sure the grape growers and winemakers of his region will be pleased to learn of the non-support of their cause as demonstrated by other members of his party. I might just remind all hon. members who would make light of these changes of the far-reaching effects they have for the grape and wine industry. The grape and wine industry in Canada represents a capital investment of roughly $130 million in our economy. In the producing part of the season employment amounts to 4,000 jobs across the country. Grape crops amount to a cash flow of some $15 million into the incomes of some 1,200 growers. Additionally the wineries spend some $36 million on grapes, glass, hardware, paper, sugar, and other commodities which are used in the making of wines.

● (1610)

Hon. members opposite who are so glib about criticizing and ridiculing the efforts of the domestic grape and wine industry, and knocking the measures granted by the Minister of Finance in support of them, might do well to look around at the economies of their own ridings.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What did he do in November?

Mr. Young: I will get to that. Those hon. members might just take a look and see whether they have some of these supportive industries in their own ridings, because it might make a big difference to some of their comments.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Did you ever ask Air Canada to sell Canadian wines?

Mr. Young: I can assure hon. members opposite that the 1,200 grape growers in Ontario will not be too happy when they hear of the comments of hon. members opposite in relation to the reduction of the tax.

Likewise I can assure hon. members in the NDP that while it is rather strange that many of them can profess so much support for Caesar Chavez and the grapegrowers of California, they have trouble supporting the members of the industry back home, 4,000 employees in the domestic wine industry. They cannot find too many votes in Canada to count on, but they can have every one they can get from the San Fernando Valley.

I said that I was astounded, and hon. members opposite asked "what about last November?" I said I was astounded at the rather extravagant claims of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. I will not quote him completely, but he said that they looked for support from the government side of the House and none was forthcoming. I think the hon. member is a little mistaken. It might be more true if I or one of my colleagues from the Niagara Peninsula made the same comment in reverse. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary spoke a couple of times on the budget and on the excise bills last year. There are two references in Hansard to his speaking on the wine industry. One takes half a page in three pages of other content on firefighting equipment, municipalities, and boats.

I do not knock the comments and contributions of the hon. member. I invite them. I have an interest in doing what I can to help the grape and wine industry too, but when the hon. member starts taking credit for his party and for himself for their singlehanded accomplishment in again having this tax reduced, I think that is going just a bit too far.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You voted for it. We voted against it.

Mr. Young: There is another reference by the hon. member on page 2673 and 2674 of Hansard to an article in the "Ontario Grape Grower," suggesting that hon. members on this side of the House ought to have read it more closely. If the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary had himself read the article more closely he would have seen that it says that the local grape and wine industry went first to the Niagara Peninsula members of parliament to explain their problems. I might suggest to him that if he thinks we should look closely at that, he might look more closely at a followup article in the issue of June/July 1975 of the "Ontario Grape Grower."

In an article on the fourth page entitled "Government Rescinds Excise Tax Increase" the actions taken by the Minister of Finance are discussed. I wish to quote part of that article as follows:

> Mr. Turner's change of mind was the second concern toward the Canadian grape and wine industry. Earlier, Consumer Affairs Minister André Ouellet announced that his department would not go ahead with proposed labelling legislation which would have adversely affected the industry.
>
> In both cases, the federal decisions followed strong representation by both the Ontario Grape Growers' Marketing Board and by the Canadian Wine Institute. Also lending valuable support to the industry's cause were Niagara Members of Parliament Bill Andres of Lincoln, Roger Young of Niagara Falls, Gilbert Parent of St. Catharines and Dr. Victor Railton of Welland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: I will quote from another article in the St. Catharines Standard with regard to the actions of the Niagara members of parliament in support of the Canadian grape and wine industry as follows:

> In Ottawa, the side of the wineries has been taken up by Niagara's three rookie MPs, Roger Young of Niagara Falls, Gilbert Parent of St. Catharines and William Andres of Lincoln.

I should read into the record a letter from the secretary manager of the Ontario Grape Growers' Marketing Board. This is a letter addressed to my colleague, the hon.

member for Lincoln (Mr. Andres). If there is one man in this House who can take credit for having the excise tax provisions changed in favour of the domestic grape and wine industry, it is the hon. member for Lincoln and really no one else, because he is the one who did all the work, and he is far too modest to go out and grab headlines.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Where was he in October?

Mr. Young: I think I should just read this for hon. members opposite. It says:

> Dear Bill: I have been reading over our April issue of the "Ontario Grape Grower", and I can see that we owe you and our other Niagara Peninsula members of parliament a big apology—not for something we said, but for something we sadly neglected to say.
>
> In a front-page item "Government lifts threat on labelling", we reported on the decision of the Consumer Affairs Minister not to proceed with the proposed appellations of origin regulations. In the article, we quickly pointed out that the Marketing Board opposed the regulations from the beginning, and that support was lent to this stand by the Canadian Wine Institute, several Niagara Regional municipalities, chambers of commerce and other organizations.
> What we did not say—and I would like to assure you, Bill, that it was an oversight and not a deliberate omission—was that our local members, yourself included, played a major part in the successful opposition to the regulations by lending your strong support to our cause. I do want you to know that we do appreciate the important work you have done for us in this and other areas of concern.
> I would like to express my personal apologies for the fact that we neglected to mention your work in the "Grape Grower" article. We will be carrying a follow-up article in the upcoming issue, giving credit where credit is due.

The letter is signed by Keith Matthie, secretary manager, Ontario Grape Growers' Marketing Board.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Send him a copy of your speech.

Mr. Young: I have on my desk and in my office files which are now about twelve inches thick on the grape and wine industry, with some similar letters in them. I do not intend to read all of them into the record, but I think that for the purposes of putting the record straight some of the comments which were made should be included. I just might mention some of them without trying to be too immodest. I have a letter from Andrés Wines Ltd., which has no connection with the hon. member for Lincoln, even though the name is spelled the same. It reads:

> We at Andrés Wines and the other members of the Canadian grape and wine industry greatly appreciate your continued fine efforts on our behalf. As your constituents in Lincoln, we are especially pleased with the concern and leadership which you have shown in this issue.

There are several letters addressed to myself one from Andrés Wines, one from the president of Brights Wines, one from the president of Chateau-Gai, one from the president of the Canadian Wine Institute, and one from the secretary of the Ontario Grape Growers' Marketing Board. All of these say the same thing. They all say that they thank us and appreciate the concern and leadership which has been shown by us. They do not just come to myself or to my colleague, the hon. member for Lincoln individually. They come to many hon. members from the Niagara Peninsula and others throughout the caucus on this side of the House who have shown such great support.

The industry is thankful that some of this work is being done on its behalf in this country.

Mr. Symes: How did you vote in the November budget?

Mr. Young: I will make some closing remarks. I hope for the benefit of some of the members that I have put the record straight. There are those who ask what I did in November. I know what I did in November. What did hon. members opposite do? I will tell them what they did not do in October and November.

In October and November when the industry wanted to get in touch with the government, they came here looking for members of parliament to talk to at that time. We were asking for, looking for, and welcoming any help there might have been from the other side of the House, but when the members who were concerned showed up in my office I did not see any of the hon. members opposite. When we went to see the officials of the Department of Finance I did not see any of the hon. members opposite.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Who did you invite?

Mr. Peters: Only Liberals.

Mr. Young: When we had meetings when we asked for support from over there, and when we asked who in the opposition parties had wineries and graperies in their constituencies and who would be interested in helping us fight the cause, there was nothing forthcoming. We got a little bit of a play and some headline grabbing in the House, but I repeat that there are those who come to do some work and those who come to get headlines.

● (1620)

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I might say on behalf of those of us who have attempted to do some work for the grape and wine industry, especially my colleagues in the Niagara Peninsula, that having been here for just one year and accomplishing a couple of things like having the government change its policy, we feel rather proud of what has been done by three rookie members of parliament.

Mr. Baldwin: All modest.

Mr. Young: Perhaps it seems a little bit immodest to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), but when one has the letters that I read into the record it is not necessary to go back and tell one's constituents and members of the industry what has been done. They know, Mr. Speaker. The only reason I read the letters was because the issue was raised in a braggadocio manner with the hon. member on the other side claiming all the credit. I have done no more than set the record straight.

Hon. members from the Niagara region have had some feeling of accomplishment, rather like an artist, a labourer or a writer who having put something together, feels some pride. They want to look at what has been done and perhaps ask themselves if they could have done more or if they have done all they can. It may be that having closed our eyes for a moment we looked up again to find that before the cement has dried, before the paint has set or the ink has dried on the page, a plagiarist had come in and signed his name on the bottom corner. Not only do we feel a little plagiarized collectively, we feel somewhat that we have been burgled.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, for some time I have read a column on wine in the Ottawa Journal, by Dillon O'Leary, so I was interested that in the budget the price of some wines—which had been raised in the November budget—was now reduced. In the budget brought in by Darcy McKeough in the province of Ontario it was indicated that the federal excise tax would be reduced. The increase in November was about 20 cents per bottle and Ontario is going to reduce it by 15 cents, leaving a net profit of five cents. I am surprised that Dillon O'Leary, and now the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), and the provincial treasurer find themselves enthralled with the subject of wine. Some members have become interested in it too, from a partisan position.

I would warn the hon. member who resumed his seat not to be too modest the next time he wants some assistance in the Niagara Peninsula. I have made a number of speeches in this House on grapes and cherries and other products grown in his area, when nobody else seemed to be interested. Although we do not grow grape crops in northern Ontario I have two or three vines that I have been nursing for seven or eight years—I think they lose ground every year. Certainly they are not going to be any competition for the Niagara Peninsula for many years to come.

There is a widespread interest in wine throughout the country, and the hon. member might find support if he asks for it. He has the misfortune to belong to a majority party, and even though it hurt his area he had to vote for that increase last year.

Along with a number of other people, including a strong winegrowers' association in Ontario, he has been able to convince the minister that to cut down the consumption does not necessarily mean more revenue by increasing the tax. I am sure if the hon. member seeks support he will get it from people not directly involved in the industry to any large degree—the consumption and/or the production. Through improved methods grapes have been developed that now produce a good type of wine.

As one hon. member suggested, perhaps we should persuade the Canadian airlines to serve Canadian wine. I think they compare favourably with many other table wines of the world.

The fact that some people do not grow grapes cannot be construed as a sign that they are not interested in the industry. Unfortunately the only place in Canada where we can grow grapes successfully is the Niagara Peninsula.

Bill C-66 introduced a ten cents per gallon excise tax on gasoline for the individual automobile user. Your Honour knows as well as I, because we both come from northern Ontario where distances are great, that we have had a great deal of difficulty convincing people that cars are no longer a luxury there, and that even those on welfare should be allowed a few dollars for gasoline because there is absolutely no other means of transport in those vast areas that we represent. Torontonians particularly always seemed to have the idea that people who draw welfare should not spend money on gasoline.

Mr. Brewin: Who said this?

Mr. Peters: For many years this was an accepted view. Recipients of Ontario welfare had to put the car on jacks, had to remove the licence plates and turn them in as long as they received benefits. As the years went by it was conceded that one out of five persons on welfare in a community should have a car so that they could get together to go for groceries. It was a very Torontonian attitude toward the difficulties experienced in other parts of Canada. The automobile is not a luxury in my area.

● (1630)

Most of us drive automobiles which are too large. Twenty years ago engines ranged between 65 and 80 horsepower. I am sure that if you restored a six-cylinder, 65 horsepower Chev, it could take you adequately up any hill in eastern Canada and serve quite well on our modern highways.

The Ontario government has embarked on a course which will bring it into collision with the federal government. Unfortunately this collision course will not help to solve any of the province's problems. Darcy McKeough, tongue in cheek, brought in a mini budget which removed the 5 per cent sales tax on North American cars. I point out there are few small North American cars. Most small cars come from Japan, Italy, France, Sweden, England or Germany. The Mercedes, the large Citroen, and one or two other large cars are exceptions; otherwise, those countries manufacture only small cars. There are few American cars of comparable size.

As the most efficient engines burn 14.7 parts of air to one part of gasoline, it is clear that the large the engine is the more gasoline it will burn. For the next ten years this country will face gasoline shortages. Obviously we should be demanding small automobile engines, not the sort of large engines which come with United States imports. Even the Chevrolet, one of the smaller American cars, comes with an engine of 450 horsepower. The Cadillac's engine develops 450 horsepower or over. If you want to save energy you should encourage the importation of cars with smaller engines. Otherwise the ten cents tax on gasoline is really nothing but a revenue raiser for the federal government. We shall not save oil if we encourage the importation of large cars which burn a great deal of gasoline.

Considering the prospect of future shortages of gasoline, we should adopt measures which will force people to consume less energy. Such policies have been quite successful in other countries. Personally I am offended by what Darcy McKeough did. Clearly, if speed limits were reduced to 55 miles an hour, cars would travel farther on a gallon of gasoline and we should conserve some of our precious gasoline stocks. Instead of encouraging people to buy North American gas burners which do 13 miles to the gallon, we should encourage them to buy European cars, or similar, small cars which travel 35 miles or more to the gallon. If any cars should be subsidized it should be those which consume least gasoline.

As I said, the automobile is not a luxury in northern Ontario, on the prairies, or in other areas lacking adequate public transportation. Perhaps the answer is public transportation. Although I have never studied the Toronto subway system and compared how much it costs to move people by subway and by highway, I imagine that the subway moves more people more cheaply than the highway system does.

Some countries, particularly Russia, have never shown interest in developing an automobile industry. They have taken the other route, that of developing public transport. Countries like that move an immense number of people by public transport facilities. Examples which come to mind are Japan, Great Britain, and other countries which use modern rapid transport facilities.

Ottawa is unusual. Except for federal parking facilities, parking space is limited. The public transport system is reasonably good and some interesting but expensive innovations were tried in the suburbs. I suggest that if we are interested in establishing adequate public transport in other centres, federal and provincial cabinets should cooperate in providing subsidies for public transport wherever it is feasible. To some extent such co-operation has taken place in connection with the rapid transit Go trains of the Toronto area. The government implemented a similar policy in the Ottawa area, ass backwards.

Instead of providing STOL service between Ottawa and Montreal, the government could have provided a better service by rail which could have served more people. The STOL service is experimental but uneconomic, as few will use it, compared with the numbers who would have used surface rapid transport facilities. The government has tries various innovations in this city, because it is the largest employer in the area and very generous with tax dollars. Ottawa has not done too badly by its major employer. The government has provided, free, many major roads in the area, particularly the better ones. It has given grants in lieu of taxes, and has helped the city to develop.

What is true of Ottawa is not true of other parts of the country. I imagine that in your community, Madam Speaker, few people have access to subsidized public transportation and must drive their automobile to work. They drive because their car takes them where they want to go when they want to go, whereas public transport does not, and the same is true of 80 per cent or 90 per cent of all our areas.

If a ten cents charge is imposed on gasoline before it reaches the retail level, the price will be increased by more than ten cents. It will go up by 11, 12, or 13 cents, or by whatever mark-up the distributor normally adds to the tax. The mark-up of the distributor and the retailer will be added to the tax. When the motorist gets to the pumps, the tax will no longer be ten cents a gallon. An hon. member opposite represents an area where there is a refinery. I am sure he will agree that gasoline prices differ considerably from one community to another in his area.

● (1640)

North Bay is 100 miles south of New Liskeard, where I live, and Timmins is 135 miles north. The people in both these communities pay a lower price for gasoline than those who live in New Liskeard. In my community gasoline costs over 80 cents a gallon. In some communities it sells for up to 20 cents a gallon less.

If the minister wants to be fair he will use the newly established Petro-Canada to ensure that the price at the pump is fair to everyone. If someone must pay ten cents a gallon tax and someone further down the line must pay 20 cents, the tax will be unfair. That is what usually happens in those areas where jobs are scarce, the automobile is an absolute necessity, and long distances are travelled either for utility purposes or for transportation to and from a job.

Many people in my area travel 150 miles a day. Many people who work in the city of Toronto have to travel 80 or 90 miles per day because they cannot afford housing in Toronto. I have a son who lives in Alliston and works in Toronto. It is a 50 mile trip one way. Therefore he must travel 100 miles a day to and from his place of employment. How much must now be added to his cost of maintaining a job?

I presume the Minister of Finance will say that the reason he is putting on this tax is not for the money but to assist in conservation and to equalize the price of gasoline across Canada. However, it will not meet that purpose. It will provide money, but not equality. It is a very unfair tax. It causes more disparity and greater inequality.

Most members are very interested in the distribution and conservation of energy. They would be much happier if the recommendations made at the first minister's conference a few months ago were adopted, especially that of the premier of Saskatchewan. He recommended that there be an increase, and that the revenue be earmarked for the development of additional resources and increased productivity in the industry. He recommended that the government participate and ensure that the moneys are so invested.

Yesterday the argument was made that if the reserve dividends, taxable moneys which are held back by the companies for various reasons, were put into development, it would not be necessary to talk about socialism and the need for government to participate. For years this was true. Whenever the companies drilled four or five wells, they had a big producer and made a lot of money. They were able to write off their losses. Business was good. However, there has not been any development of any size in this country for years, with the exception of the tar sands. There has been drilling in the Arctic where there is a lot of gas. However, commercial oil production in the Arctic has been very limited. It certainly does not warrant a refinery in that area in the foreseeable future. It is doubtful whether the quantity of Arctic oil will be sufficient to play much of a role in the next 20 or 30 years.

Every tax that is applied across the board lends itself to abuses. However, when rebates are given to the self-employed, commercial enterprises, and others who consume gas in a business sense, this creates a very great inequality for those who must use their automobile, not as a luxury but as a necessity.

In many parts of northern Ontario the mines were closed. The people who lived in those communities wanted to stay there. Their families had grown up, community life was highly satisfactory, and the social capital had been paid for long ago. These people were forced to get jobs outside their communities. This involved driving long distances. In fact in Ontario laws were passed to the effect that you could not build around new mining developments, but had to live in existing communities.

In the case of the iron mine at Dane, about 20 miles from Kirkland Lake, 70 townships were frozen. No building could take place except in the city of Kirkland Lake. I have no objection to that. However, if a person has to travel 20 miles to work, and that is close, they should be allowed a rebate, not of all their expenses, but on a portion of that gasoline which can be directly attributed to transportation to and from work.

Many people in the tri-town area work in Temagami, a 60-mile trip one way, a 120 miles round trip. This involves a sizeable expenditure for these people. Why shouldn't they be allowed to write it off? If they do not own a car and if they cannot get to their jobs, they are unemployed. There is no public transport. There is no reason why part of their motoring expenses should not be written off in the same way that tax concessions are given to a businessman. These people use their cars exactly as a salesman does, that is, to get to their place of business. Surely we can devise a system whereby they can write off at least some portion of their travel expenses.

● (1650)

Since we have got into the field of subsidies, may I say that the general public across Canada does not realize we are subsidizing Quebec and the maritimes. They are not aware that a line is supposed to exist through the Ottawa Valley. They are not aware of this because it is only recently we have been subsidizing Quebec and the maritimes. Before that it was they who were getting cheap oil products—they were buying oil products offshore cheaper than we could buy them in our western areas. Today the situation is different and gasoline in Quebec and the maritimes has to be subsidized. I can recall, though, when it was cheap—and if it was not cheap then someone was hosing the people of those provinces.

The Golden Eagle Company was one of the first companies to ship in offshore oil and, incidentally, every obstacle was placed in the way of Golden Eagle putting its products on sale across the Ottawa Valley line—the Diefenbaker line. Now the shoe is on the other foot and it is the people east of the line who have to be subsidized. Sure, we want to provide eastern Canada with some kind of equality, but any method used ought to be fair to all the people. It is they who are making the payments and it seems to me the ten cents which is being charged constitutes, in the main, a retrograde step. It is a retrograde step in all cases except where pleasure is involved. And in a nation which values recreation and leisure as highly as any people in the world, even in those areas where we are using automobiles for pleasure, I believe some equality should exist, and I suggest that this ten cents tax is not fair to all our people and is not being applied equally across the board.

I would strongly recommend to all dealers in gasoline that they put a sign on their gas pumps showing how much the federal tax is, how much the provincial tax is, and how much the actual gasoline costs. I should like to see such a sign placed on the tanks because in many areas the taxes amount to more than the product.

Any government which decides to put on a tax only to get money out of the misery of the people who are totally dependent on this product, a product which in many ways is a basic necessity, like bread, or milk, or medical attention, must bear the responsibility. It is a tax which is unfairly applied if its only purpose is to bring in money. This holds true at least until the day comes when there is an alternative form of transportation—economic public transportation universally available.

It is strange how many people in Ottawa think that public transportation is available everywhere. I would say that thousands of people have been disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance benefits in my area during the past 15 years because they answered the question which reads "Is transportation available?" in the negative because there was no transportation which would get them to a job and back again.

There is a definite need for conservation, of course. It would have been much better if Ontario, rather than getting into a fight with the Minister of Finance had sat down with the minister and discussed how gasoline supplies might best be conserved. We are not only talking about gasoline. We are talking about heating fuel for the coming winter and for years to come. We are talking about long term agreements with the United States which we shall probably have to honour to our own discomfort.

If the provincial government and the federal government had wished to be fair to the people, conservation would have begun with a subsidy of sizeable magnitude to those automobiles which consume least gasoline, cars that can get 20 or 25 miles to the gallon. Other cars should be subject to a penalty. People who drive cars which are capable of getting reasonable mileage should be given a break, not the North American automobile industry which is dependent upon salesmanship to sell a product which has been detrimental to this nation and to the future of our energy supplies. I was shocked to hear the Ontario government say that for an election period it would reduce the price of those large American cars just for the sake of political advantage.

This place is becoming redundant, Madam Speaker. People are no longer looking to Ottawa or to Toronto or the other provincial capitals for an answer to their problems. I do not think the Minister of Finance really faced the problem he said he was trying to face in relation to gasoline taxes. If he did, he spent no time whatsoever trying to convince people across Canada that equality of price, and equality of access to supply throughout the nation were a valuable contribution to the spirit of confederation itself. His failure to do so is one of the reasons this place is becoming redundant. I can certainly say that the Ontario mini-budget, as a direct reaction to the federal budget, did nothing along those lines either.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, I know most hon. members would like the House to adjourn so that all members of the House could take advantage of the few fine summer days left. My remarks will therefore be very brief.

I thought however that it was my duty, considering the number of letters I got from workers who need their cars to go to work in the forest, to ask the government on their behalf to consider alternative sources of revenue to get the funds required for the administration of our country.

I know on the one hand that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has a very great responsibility to shoulder, in other words that he has to secure the sums of money which are necessary to allow various departments to operate in a normal way. However, I believe that in 1975, such an intelligent Minister of Finance as we have now should and could find other sources of revenue than the ones provided for in Bill C-66, especially with respect to the 10 cents a gallon excise tax on gasoline, which in my opinion will more directly affect the workers of our nation.

We might find a formula to impose that tax only on pleasure journeys. If people do not want to travel for their own pleasure, they won't, and they will not pay that tax. However, to earn a living, to go to work, people cannot do without their car. And I think individual citizens already pay enough taxes.

In his budget speech of June 23, 1975, the Minister of Finance said: government budget revenues for 1974-75; personal income tax $10,069 million; forecast for 1975-76, $11,145 million, in other words $1,136 million more than for 1974-75. This is personal income tax. On the other hand, corporate taxes in 1974-75, were $4,258 million and in 1975-76, $4,035 million, that is $250 million less. What intrigues me, Madam Speaker, is that from year to year, when we look at the statistics, we find that the total personal income declines while that of the big companies increases. I wish that were taken into account when imposing taxes, that there might be better balance and more justice in our society. The same people should not always get the bigger share of the pie. Taxes should be shared more equitably. That is why I would suggest that this bill be amended to do away with this 10 cent tax which will affect above all the working class.

I need not repeat what has been said in the House in this regard. To my mind, the matter has been sufficiently explained and I shall dispense with repeating those arguments. Still, I fear that the individual will have to bear the brunt of that increase, in many cases, because the companies will increase their prices as a result of their having to pay tax on gas. They will feel justified in increasing their prices. Then the individual will pay the tax on the gasoline he uses, before being called upon to pay the tax for the corporations, so that he will end up paying the tax twice. It is the individual who will again be penalized.

At the end of the year, these same corporations will be authorized, under this legislation, to claim a refund for part of the tax they have paid for the gasoline they have had to buy. The larger corporations will again take the advantage over the individual. While individuals will not be authorized to claim any refund, corporations will be allowed to ask for the refund of the tax they will have paid. They receive a double benefit, while individuals receive a double penalty.

If I am against this bill, it is because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) could work with his officials at adjusting the tax base, which would permit individuals to keep a larger share of their incomes to support their families. I know that the government takes very lightly the fact that individuals must pay in advance. The purpose of this tax is therefore to provide more revenues. I am against that, because surely other means must exist in 1975 to provide the government with the money it needs to administer our country.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Finally, the bill states:

> For the purposes of subsection (1), the expression "commercial or business purposes" shall have such meaning as the Governor in Council may determine by regulation.

Expression such as this are difficult to accept. They are too vague. It is the legislator who levies this tax. Bureaucrats will decide who is going to pay it and who will not. I feel we should be a lot more careful when the time comes to adopt legislation of such extensive bearing.

I suggest that once the legislation is passed, it be referred to the committee, sent back here and again referred to the committee so that both legislators and officials will get acquainted with it and agree what are commercial or business purposes. What does that mean? What groups of individuals or undertakings will be considered for commercial or business purposes?

Then afterwards, when our constituents will be asking information, we will not look stupid and be unable to answer. We will be able to provide information. I think that we should follow that procedure for the passage of all legislation.

I remember various conditions which were entirely unacceptable. Madam Speaker, I will be told that Parliament has always operated this way and never failed to govern. Yes, we have always acted this way but many of our laws have been referred to courts and given rise to many differences entailing considerable expenditures precisely because it had not been specified what regulations would be enforced following the passage of such and such a bill.

So I think that in 1975, if we want to do something different, if we want to be a modern, a progressive Parliament, we should proceed in a different manner, more clearly and more precisely. This is what the population expects from the legislators of this Parliament. The Canadian people do not want to be bothered but they want to have measures which are clear and understandable for the average Canadian who must use these laws.

Madam Speaker, I said a few minutes ago that the Minister of Finance can find other financing sources which would enable the government to administer without putting too heavy a load on private people. We can hear comments here and there—you simply have to be among the people to hear and understand their comments.

Yesterday, I listened to a two-hour radio program in which the capitalist system was blamed because there are exaggerations; the system in itself is not bad, but abuse is. If we want to save the capitalist system in which we live, we have to initiate reforms, we must do something and who can do this? Parliament. Parliament has the authority to initiate the necessary reforms and to try and adapt the capitalist system to modern needs. For the capitalist system to survive, it must be amended, otherwise it will perish and everyone will wonder why. Suddenly we shall awaken in a country administered by ideologies that we reject but that we shall have to accept for having lacked vigilance.

I feel the time has come for us, if we are urged to act in a correct and different way, to find new solutions. As for us, Madam Speaker, we have often suggested financing formulas that would solve the problem. But the government refuses to try them out, while having a good time preserving outdated solutions and unusable systems. As a result people are slipping further and further into debt and even find that funny. From 1967 to 1974, Canada's debt has increased by $25 billion, and everyone finds that funny. The government takes an ever larger slice, especially in personal income tax, and we think that these people are going to bless us for it. Come on! This is no way to obtain the support of the population to maintain a system that should deserve to be maintained. I sincerely wish to be understood, but provided the system be one that serves the population, not a system to which the population has to be subservient. Therein lies all the difference!

These are the few comments I wished to make in this debate. I restrict myself to such comments, because I should very much like that, according to the wishes of the government, this bill crosses the stages it must cross at the present time, and that the stage I suggested be added. This way the legislation will be as clear as possible and no one will feel he has failed to do his duty. 612

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I wonder whether you could ask for unanimous consent of the House to allow me to revert to motions for the purpose of moving the motion regarding the membership of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there agreement that we revert to motions at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MANAGEMENT AND MEMBERS' SERVICES

MEMBERSHIP OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, the motion I move reads:

That the members to serve on the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services be the following: Messrs. Baker (Grenville-Carleton), Baldwin, Comtois, Goodale, Lambert (Edmonton West), Lefebvre, MacGuigan, MacLean, Matte, Kaplan, Reid and Symes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there agreement to the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 7416).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise to say again that we in this party are completely opposed to Bill C-66. We believe very strongly that the government should withdraw the bill. If it is not willing to do so, we shall, of course, vote for the six months' hoist proposed in the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). If that is defeated, we shall vote against the motion for the second reading of the bill, whenever the vote on that motion might be called.

May I remind hon. members opposite of a point that was made a few days ago by someone on this side of the House to the effect that we who sit on this side represent some 55 per cent of the voters of Canada. I suspect that on this issue the percentage of the people of Canada whom we represent is much higher.

Mr. Baldwin: It is 56.5 per cent officially now, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My statistical assistant tells me that the exact percentage is 56.5 per cent, that is in terms of the vote on July 8, 1974. I suggest that on this issue today the percentage is a lot higher.

I believe we are all interested—and perhaps some of us have some sympathy for him—in the suit that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is bringing against the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for remarks which he claims have damaged his reputation. The minister feels that the damage done to his reputation by certain things said over the CBC should be worth $100,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It so happens that some 18 or 20 years ago I took a publication to court, and although I won the case all I got was $1. So I wish the Minister of Finance well.

Mr. Jamieson: It does not say much for your capacity to be damaged.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is exactly the point that the judge made, that it was libel but that I had not been hurt.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance that if he wants to find out whether his reputation has really been damaged he should consider what the people of Canada think about his Bill C-66. If that other damage is worth $100,000 to him, this of course should be worth several million dollars, although I do not know where he could collect it.

I want to say a few words on Bill C-66, but I think that I might be permitted for a couple of minutes to say a word about a fact that disturbs many of us, namely, that we are still here, almost at the end of July, debating this bill, and who knows how much longer we may be here. A serious effort was made in parliament some years ago to structure our work. I think we even coined a word and said we were trying to "calendarize" the session so that we would be out of here in the months of July and August.

When we dealt with this matter in the fall of 1968 we faced the fact that what had spoiled most summers was the problem of getting estimates passed. The fact that there was no time limit on them meant that members of the opposition could keep the government here all summer. We solved that problem, and I think it is fair for me to say that the opposition gave up something in doing it. We agreed to an arrangement under which the main estimates for the year are passed during the fourth week in June, and the purpose of that, among other things, was so that parliament would not drag on into the summer months.

This is the seventh summer since that change in our rules was made. In one of those summers, in 1974, there was an election, so we were not here and we could not be kept here that July. But with respect to the other six summers since we passed that rule, three of them have been messed up, not because the opposition kept the House here on estimates but because the government brought in contentious matters at the last moment.

I submit that when talk occurs—and much of it comes from the government side of the House—about the "silly season" and about the fact that we should not be here, this is what should be studied, namely, the unfairness of the government, after everybody had assumed that we would recess at the end of June, bringing down on June 23 a budget with contentious issues, so that we are left with no option but to stay here and oppose some of these measures.

The other summers that were messed up were spoiled in the same way by the government making a decision late in June concerning matters which it felt we must debate; and debate them we did through July in three summers. I am not counting occasions when we had to come back because of work stoppages. I am talking about the scheduling of government business, and if there is any blame for our being here throughout July, 1975, it rests squarely on the government for having brought in a budget with its contentious measures on June 23.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1720)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One of these measures of course is Bill C-66 which we are now debating. It does several things, but the main and most offensive feature is the proposal to introduce a ten cents a gallon tax on gasoline at the manufacturers' or importers' level. As has been pointed out, by the time the gasoline gets to the cars of the automobile users, that addition may be not just ten cents but rather 12 cents or 13 cents, and in some cases perhaps more. At the risk of saying what has been said a good many times—there are occasions when a point must be repeated—I want to emphasize how unfair a tax such as this is.

Studies in taxation across the years have established the fact that the best kind of tax is the tax that is applied according to ability to pay. Therefore the best taxes are personal income tax with high exemption levels, and high percentage rates up into the upper levels, along with corporation taxes. However, when one imposes any kind of a commodity tax this has the effect of putting that tax on people without regard to their ability to pay, their need, or any other individual factors.

Generally speaking citizens do not like to pay taxes. It is par for the course for them to complain. But those same citizens know that civilization must be paid for and that taxes are part of that price. What really bothers people, however, is when one person feels he is having to pay a tax that somebody else does not have to pay. When we have these feelings of discrimination we find we really are in a mess. I suggest, as other speakers have, that that is particularly true of this tax of ten cents per gallon on gasoline. Some doctors will have to pay it and others will not. The exemption is not because one is a doctor. What counts is whether one is a self-employed doctor or a doctor on salary. Some lawyers will have to pay it and some will not, again depending not on the nature of the work and not on the amount of income but on the question of whether the lawyer is self-employed or is on a salary paid to him by someone else.

We might take the farm situation again. Generally farmers will get an exemption, but what about the farm workers? There are a growing number of farm workers in this country today, individuals who live in cities and who have to drive in order to get to their work out on the farms. These are not self-employed persons. They are on wages. They will not qualify for the exemption. So there will be people working side by side on a farm, some of whom will be receiving an exemption and some who will not.

Then there is the whole question of the unfairness to people generally because a law cannot be devised that will take into account what is a necessity and what is a luxury in terms of automobile travel. For the most part workers—and perhaps they are the largest number—who have to use automobiles to get to work will not have any exemption. So, if we look across the board the fact of the matter is that there will be discrimination. There will be Canadians complaining about each other. There will be individuals who say they do not receive the exemption while others do.

Then, as was pointed out with great effect last evening by my colleague, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), there is the question of the paraplegics and others who have to use their cars. A member to my right also brought up the fact that these people require special licences because of the type of cars they drive. However, their special condition does not entitle them to an exemption. Some of these people who may be self-employed doctors or self-employed lawyers will be entitled to the exemption but those who are working for wages will not.

So I say that throughout the whole gamut of this arrangement we have unfairness and inequality that will have Canadians complaining about each other by saying that they do not get it while the other fellow does. That is built into this whole system.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) tried to give us an account yesterday of how the refunds would be made. He made much of the fact that the machinery is set up to do it, but he spoke of the refund in terms of ten cents a gallon. There will be complaints because people will have to pay 12 cents of 13 cents extra for gasoline because of the tax but will receive a refund of only ten cents, and that only on the basis of the formula stated in the document they will have to file. So as I say the whole thing is shot through with inequalities and unfairness, and is so far removed from the simple, fair and just arrangement for taxation based upon ability to pay that it seems to me that only someone who wanted to do damage to the Canadian society could have thought of this arrangement.

I urge most strongly that the government withdraw this bill. If it is not prepared to do so before we have the vote on the six months' hoist I hope that in the time we shall have after that it may still be persuaded that we speak not only for the Canadian people in terms of their desires but in terms of their rights in respect of this matter.

I want to say a word about the whole question of rebates and the argument that has gone on between my friend from Peace River and the Minister of National Revenue. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) insists that rebates could be made under an appropriate provision in the Financial Administration Act, and the Minister of National Revenue comes back with a legalistic answer supporting his contention that the rebates could not be paid until this bill is passed. This bill does two things. It provides for the collection of the tax and it provides for rebates. The government says that there cannot be any rebates until the bill is passed, and yet the government is collecting the tax.

When we ask the Minister of National Revenue on what basis the government is collecting the tax the answer is that it is an old tradition. I think this not only makes the law an ass but makes it preposterous. Surely if there is a tradition that the government has the right to collect a tax that has not been passed by parliament, then there can also be a tradition that the government ought to have the right, and the duty to pay back something that it should not have collected in the first place. This is the kind of legalistic argument we have heard, that is, that the government has the right to collect the tax by tradition but does not have the right to make the payment back. I submit that this really is an attempt to kid the troops. I submit that the same kind of ingenuity the government uses to collect this tax, or that it drew on in May, 1974, when it took off a tax and put it back on, could be used to make these rebates now without having to wait until this bill is passed which, who knows, might be down the road a piece yet.

The theory behind the collecting of taxes is of course not only that great word "tradition", but it is also that the government, being in a majority, can count on the fact that sooner or later what it proposes will be passed, retroactive to the date proposed by the government. Why not apply that both ways? If the government can collect the tax—because sooner or later its will will become law—why can the government not pay the refunds, because sooner or later the right to do so will become law? The fact is that the government is just using this in an attempt to blackmail the opposition in order to let the government have this bill.

I submit that if the government wants a summer recess and that if that view is shared generally, just as on other occasions we have reached agreements and put things over until the session was resumed, that could be done with respect to this bill, and the government could then have the summer weeks, those which are left, to consider this whole matter.

If that cannot be done and if the government cannot see common sense in that respect, then I urge that the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition be supported and that this bill be given a six months' hoist.

In a very brief reference I should like to say a word about something some of my hon. colleagues have discussed, although when they tried to speak at length Your Honour felt they were getting a bit out of order. I will not speak long enough to be out of order, but I do want to underline the fact that this unfair ten cents tax, which has no regard to ability to pay, is part of a total package which is taking this country the wrong way both socially, and in terms of taxation. When I speak of the total package, I think of the government's plans for collecting more money for unemployment insurance by that new threshhold system which will be introduced, and by making workers pay more for unemployment insurance for those who are not working. I am thinking also of the provisions regarding hospitalization and medical care, which the government has in mind.

All of these measures taken together are a departure from the sound principle of taxation according to ability to pay, and when the other measures in the budget which relieve things for corporations and put more burdens on the ordinary people of this country are added to that, I say that my point is well taken that the government is taking the country the wrong way. Therefore, when we oppose Bill C-66, we are opposing it not only on account of its own demerits, but we are opposing it because it is part of a total tax package which really surprises me coming from a government which calls itself Liberal. Of course that "Liberal" has long since been spelled only with a big "L." There is just no little "l" liberalism over on the other side any more.

When hon. members from all parties on this side of the House have opposed this bill there have been some voices from the other side asking us what methods we would use to raise the necessary money to have a one price system regarding petroleum products. We have made it quite clear that we still think the taxation system, namely, income tax according to ability to pay, and corporation taxes and surtaxes in both cases on the upper levels, is the fair way.

During the weeks before the budget was brought in by the Minister of Finance at least two of us put a question to the minister in this area. One was the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard), who sits on the government side, and I was the other one. Our questions might even have been on the same day, but certainly they were very close to each other. We both asked the minister whether in his then forthcoming budget he would consider imposing special taxes on income increases in excess of 12 per cent. That was a figure the minister had been bandying about, and the minister said, both to the hon. member for Lac-

Saint-Jean and to me, that he would receive this representation, and I certainly had the impression that he might consider it and that he might do something by way of meeting revenue needs by taxation on increases in the higher brackets and on personal incomes and corporation incomes generally. But no, there is none of that in this budget at all. The only income tax change in this budget is the $250 per year increase in the case of very wealthy people, those who have incomes of $26,000, $28,000 or more.

I submit that an area where the minister could have used proper and fair taxation methods was passed over for these unfair methods of higher costs to workers for unemployment insurance, higher costs to the sick and to people who need to go to hospital, and for this tax on gasoline. The whole thing is so grossly unfair in itself and is so contrary to the kind of social progress we have fought for in this country that many of us feel very strongly about this measure, and that is why we have kept this debate going.

If I may say so in just a sentence or two, on the other side of the coin there was nothing in this budget, and there has been nothing in this session, for pensioners or for persons in real need. We hear talk about the guaranteed annual income. We are told that it is coming, but in the meantime people in need, whether they are pensioners or those on low incomes in other age brackets, are being told they have to wait. While they are waiting they will have more to pay and they will suffer a decline in their living standards, because of these unfair taxes brought in by the Minister of Finance, one of which we are dealing with in the bill now before us, Bill C-66. We state again our strong and absolute opposition to this bill. We think it should be withdrawn. Failing that, we shall vote for the amendment to give it a six months' hoist.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Stanfield) which was negatived on the following division:

PROPOSED CONSULTATION WITH MANITOBA ON HYDRO DEVELOPMENT IN NORTHERN PART OF PROVINCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Because of the present dispute between the government of Canada and the province of Manitoba which threatens hydro development in northern Manitoba, and the announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in this House on Friday, July 18, 1975, pursuant to which he tabled correspondence whereby all agreements between the government of Canada and the province of Manitoba were to be announced jointly in a spirit of co-operation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith):

That the government immediately undertake to meet with officials of the province of Manitoba with a view to bringing this dispute to a conclusion for the benefit of all Manitobans and northern Manitobans in particular.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTED RESIGNATION OF MINISTER BECAUSE OF ALLEGED BUDGET LEAK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

Considering the revelations made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) and reported in the July 24 edition of the Montreal Gazette concerning undue influence and lack of secrecy about the budget submitted in November by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), and considering that such circumstances destroy the confidence that our population has placed in its government, and especially in its Minister of Finance, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the Minister of Finance resign immediately to help preserve the integrity of the government.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED AUTHORIZATION OF COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO PENSION PLAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion, to which I hope the House will agree. The broadcasting division of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, NABET, and other CBC unions are experiencing difficulty obtaining from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation details of their pension plan, to which I am sure we all agree they are entitled. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

● (1410)

That the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts be authorized to inquire into the pension plan of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, with a view to the obtaining of information about the pension plan to which the employees of the corporation are entitled.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 41 require the unanimous consent of the House before this motion can be presented. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling oral questions I might ask the indulgence of the House in order to refer to a matter which I am sure will come as no surprise to hon. members. I have received notification of an application under Standing Order 26, and several notices of questions of privilege and others relating to the subject matter of a proposed motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte). The circumstances will give rise, I am sure, to questions during the question period which could be beginning at this moment. It will also give rise to technical problems about whether the House is entitled to ask questions of a parliamentary secretary when the minister to whom he or she is the parliamentary secretary is present in the House.

I am sure it will be no surprise to hon. members to learn that I have also received notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). It might solve some of the procedural and substantive problems associated with this most interesting matter if the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River were to be given the consent of the House to proceed with his question of privilege at this moment as opposed to three o'clock. Perhaps it can be understood that in so doing, whatever time is absorbed in participation in that discussion by members on both sides of the House, it will be my obligation to safeguard 45 minutes of questioning for members of the House after the question of privilege has been resolved in one way or another. Is there unanimous consent that we proceed in this manner?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Just to make it quite plain with regard to the right of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) to deal with this problem and answer questions, this will in no way derogate from the right of members of the opposition to question ministers who are here on this issue.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: There can be nothing to prejudice that during the question period. If 45 minutes is safeguarded, there is nothing to limit or restrict the right of members on all sides of the House to pose questions to the ministry in general, or particular ministers on this or any subject, provided it is within the minister's competence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we wish to indicate our agreement to the procedure just proposed. However, can Your Honour make it clear how many will be able to speak on the question of privilege after the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) has spoken?

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I have no way of knowing that at the moment. I will have to exercise some judgment as to the extent to which that will go on. However, there are other hon. members who have given me notice of questions of privilege and motions under various Standing Orders. They certainly ought to be recognized in order to comment. Beyond that, I will have to make some judgment as to how far we ought to go before we commence the question period.

PRIVILEGE

MR. REID—NEWSPAPER ARTICLE ALLEGING NOVEMBER BUDGET LEAK

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege as a result of an article in this morning's Montreal Gazette which claims that I was leaked information on the November 18 budget and that I passed this information to businessmen.

Mr. Speaker, I categorically deny this. It is totally false. The story in the Gazette asserts that I said I had six weeks' advance knowledge from the office of the Minister of Finance that there would be a removal of the excise tax on boats in the November 18 budget. I had no such knowledge. I never had communication with the minister's office on the substance of the budget either before, on or after November 18 and, as the records of this House reveal, the November 18 budget did not propose to remove such a tax; it proposed to implement this tax.

As a result of the budget, Bill C-40 was introduced on December 2. It included a clause which would enact this tax. Like several members on all sides of the House, I made strong representations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), to other ministers and to some of their officials that the new tax on boats be reduced. From their response, I, like other members, came to the conclusion that the government would agree to a relieving amendment. On January 28 the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) proposed an amendment to Bill C-40 that went even further than I had expected: it removed the tax altogether.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the story in the Gazette is incorrect in its description of the stages of our budgetary procedures, of my particular knowledge—or lack thereof—of the contents of the November budget and, indeed, of the very substance of the budget. This article is either the result of gross incompetence by the reporter or of malicious intent of the worst order.

In anticipation of the likelihood that it was merely incompetence, I have asked the Gazette to publish a retraction and apology. If they fail to do so, I can only conclude that it was malicious. If there was malicious intent, then there are serious implications for all members of this House, for this House cannot permit false, unfair, unbalanced or defamatory accounts of its proceedings; and I repeat once more that one of the most important errors in the offending story is its miscomprehension of the stages of our budget procedure. This House cannot permit such accounts to be published without taking measures to protect itself. If such offending material is allowed to be disseminated, the institution as a whole will be brought unjustly into disrepute and we will be prevented from performing our constitutional duties.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to pursue a newspaper if it has merely been the victim of an incompetent employee, and I would suggest that Your Honour defer your ruling until tomorrow. However, if the Gazette refuses to make a retraction tomorrow, and thereby makes it clear that this false and misleading story was published as a result of conscious and malicious intent, and if you find there has been a prima facie breach of privilege, I would propose then to move:

That the article in the Montreal Gazette concerning the member for Kenora-Rainy River, published July 24, 1975, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has also given the Chair notice of his intention to raise a question of privilege concerning statements or alleged statements made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid).

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, before commenting specifically on the remarks of the parliamentary secretary, may I ask, on a procedural point, whether it is clear that I am able to respond as we do ordinarily to statements on motions?

An hon. Member: No way!

Mr. Speaker: I think I made it clear that the hon. member was given consent to raise his question of privilege at an extraordinary time. I indicated that if there were other members who wished to contribute to the discussion of this question of privilege, I would hear them at this time. If the hon. member has some contribution to make to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, I will hear him now.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To deal with the hon. member's statement, may I say I was a little disappointed that he did not refer to the proceedings which had taken place in a standing committee of this House, specifically on March 6, 1975, before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. The hon. member was the chief witness appearing on behalf of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) and at one point he stated:

Let us take a specific example of a change that was made in the budget, which was a change in the taxation on boats. There was to be an excise tax on boats. It was removed.

The hon. member then went on to refer to a great lobby which had been mounted and said that various people had spoken to the minister. He then said:

● (1420)

It seems to me that when a member of parliament has access to that kind of information—

Namely, that the tax was to be removed.

—which allows him with greater certainty to arrange his affairs to possibly take advantage of a change, it is the kind of conflict of interest that we must seriously consider in the green paper.

In giving testimony before that committee, the hon. member, for example at page 12:12 of the proceedings, made it very clear when he said:

I know that in my activities as member of parliament for Kenora-Rainy River I come into a great deal of information which is confidential.

At another point he stated:

I know from my own experience that kind of conflict of interest has happened to me in my role as a backbencher simply because I paid a great deal of attention to a department at a particular point in my parliamentary career. As a result of doing that, I was able to obtain a great deal of confidential information, both from the government and from outside people who were affected by the decisions of that department.

I read that into the record because I feel it is very pertinent to our discussion today which has been brought on by the account in the Montreal Gazette. I suggest that in previous evidence the parliamentary secretary made it very clear that he was privy to confidential information. I think it is important that this House be made aware whether the parliamentary secretary was in fact made aware that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) was going to amend the excise tax legislation by removing the boat provision that had been proposed in both the May 6 budget and the November 18 budget. I believe the House should be made aware whether the parliamentary secretary was given forewarning of that amendment to the budgetary legislation and, if so, at what time. The Montreal Gazette report states that it was made some six weeks in advance.

I believe that the House should be made aware whether the parliamentary secretary misused that information. Did he in fact convey that information, as the Montreal Gazette story indicates, to those who could benefit from the information? I ask this because it has long been a principle of parliamentary government that members participating in the House of Commons, certainly at budget presentation time and when dealing with budgetary legislation arising from the budget, must keep any suggestion of conflict of interest to a minimum. This ensures that persons in the civil service, the House of Commons or the private sector do not have the opportunity to profit, directly or indirectly, from knowledge of changes in the incidence of taxation. Clearly, this was a significant change made to the excise tax bill by amendment.

Ministers deliver their budget speeches, and any amendments that the minister may think fit thereafter, in a spirit of confidentiality. For example, budget speeches themselves are usually delivered in the evening to avoid any possible effect on the stock market. The tradition of secrecy ensures that all Canadians will be kept at the same advantage or disadvantage with respect to any budgetary matter, and that any announcement will be made first in this House and not privately to those who rightfully have no access and should have no access to that information. I suggest that budgetary secrecy is essential to guarantee to all taxpayers that no group can escape its share of taxation, and that in particular those whom they have elected to represent them in the House of Commons cannot escape laws approved for everybody.

I refer Your Honour to a statement of this principle and its consequence in Dawson's "The Government of Canada". He writes:

The necessary practice of keeping all budget provisions a close secret—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I do not think he need argue the sanctity of budget secrecy. That seems to me a matter that is generally agreed to by all members of the House; there is no disagreement there. The point raised by way of a question of privilege is that no budget secrecy was involved but, rather, in respect of legislation which took place after the budget. That may or may not be the case. I have been asked to reserve judgment until tomorrow. I wonder if the hon. member would direct himself to that point.

Mr. Stevens: The point is not only a question of budget secrecy but also the importance of keeping any tax change secret, and I would suggest that the two are one and the same.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: The parliamentary secretary has referred to what he regards as untrue allegations in the Montreal Gazette. I believe this goes much further than the statement made by the parliamentary secretary. Certainly, the testimony he put before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and in an indirect way also put before the Montreal Gazette reporter, as reported, is an unfair reflection on members of this House. I refer to the report in the newspaper and I quote from it as follows:

We put on a lobby, and we knew about six weeks or so before it was announced that it (the tax) was coming off the boats but not the motors.

Later, the parliamentary secretary is reported to have said that inside information on confidential material is widespread, and "This happens all the time with members". As a final touch, he declared that he informed those concerned in his constituency of the budget details which concerned them.

I believe three aspects of this situation relate to the privileges of all hon. members and bear closer examination. First, the House cannot let go unchallenged the charge that all hon. members have access to information which they may not legally or constitutionally possess. This statement is untrue and defamatory and the parliamentary secretary should have the opportunity, before a committee, to explain or withdraw his statement.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Second, did the Minister of Finance in fact break his oath of secrecy and violate his constitutional obligation to maintain silence until budget night, and did this breach of secrecy then lead the parliamentary secretary to repeat and magnify the offence by reporting the information to those in his constituency who were in a position to profit directly? Third, does the Minister of Finance make a habit of revealing secret budget information to government backbenchers?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: If so, to what extent is the budget confidential, and how is that confidentiality protected? Mr. Speaker, I will wait upon your instructions, but because of this background, at the appropriate moment I would like to move that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for further study; and if now is the appropriate time for my motion, I would be pleased to move it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, as Your Honour knows, I gave notice of my intention to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 26, but following what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) had to say—and I listened with interest and care—I would inform Your Honour and the House that today I have no intention of moving that motion. I will reserve judgment. Depending on what is published in the Montreal Gazette tomorrow, I will decide whether that course of action will be required at that time.

On behalf of my colleagues, I would like to say that I welcome what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River had to say on this very important question. In substance, I agree completely with the procedural steps he has recommended to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. member has categorically denied what I think are the essential points at issue in this matter, namely, on the one hand that he had any access to the details of the budget before it appeared, and on the other hand that he not only did not have that information but he did not convey it in any way to anyone. The hon. member has stated that he expects an unequivocal apology or withdrawal of the charges which were made in today's Montreal Gazette, in that newspaper tomorrow and upon failure to do that, if I understood the hon. member correctly, he intends to move that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. As I say, we agree with that as being the entirely honourable course of action under the circumstances.

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The only point I would add at this time is, depending on what is contained in the newspaper tomorrow, and depending on whether or not certain other matters remain unclarified before the House rises tomorrow, if we still believe there are a number of other issues that require at least clarification, specifically the reference made to a letter that was alleged to have been sent by the hon. member to certain businessmen—we may want to know whether that was done, the date of the letter, for example, and its contents. The House has a right, certainly, in terms of the knowledge we have up to this point, to expect such information to be made available.

As I say, we accept the procedural steps the hon. member has recommended and suggested that he will be taking, and depending on the release and disclosure of information we think is important, we may or may not decide to refer other questions to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections tomorrow, and may or may not decide to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is evident that the prudent course to follow is to reserve judgment on this matter until tomorrow morning. I might say that hon. members should give some consideration, in the interim, to the fact that if it were to be suggested to the House, or if the Chair is to be asked to leave it to the House to decide whether or not a matter should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, the substance of that matter should be fairly clearly defined. A motion which includes a hypothesis and the words "that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections", obviously is no guidance to the Chair. It must be clear whether one is talking about the conduct of the newspaper or the conduct of the hon. member, among other difficulties. Members ought to be forewarned that whatever conduct, practice or experience they wish referred to the standing committee should be clearly defined in any motion.

In the meantime, I would think it only fair that the notice of motion I have received from the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on questions of privilege, and the notice of motion, pursuant to Standing Order 26, received from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) should stand until tomorrow morning. We would reserve to those members the rights they ordinarily would enjoy pursuant to those notices.

There is, of course, nothing to prevent other hon. members, if they so desire, in the interim providing the Chair with notice of motion of questions of privilege which I would hope would be in specific terms in respect of the circumstances of this particular matter. There is, of course, always the other matter that hon. members ought to consider, which is that the door is open at any time for any member of the House to make specific allegations or charges against another member of the House for his misconduct, if it seems advisable to that hon. member to support it with his own allegations, with the usual consequences. Those are areas which hon. members ought to consider. In the meantime, all outstanding notices of motions on the subject to which I have referred will stand over for further consideration tomorrow.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since Your Honour referred to the fact that any motions should be in specific terms, I should mention that I would be quite prepared to move my motion in specific terms at the present time, if that would be in order.

Mr. Speaker: I only issued that as a bit of warning. I think it is advisable that the matter stand over until tomorrow, at which time if there is a motion, depending upon the events of tomorrow, and the hon. member wants to move it, if he would be at liberty to do so at that time.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether there would be the right to ask questions. The things that I thought were unsaid today are, what did the hon. member say in his conversation with Mr. Hamilton of the Gazette? Was that conversation taped? Where is the tape, if there is one, and will it be procured? Those things were left unsaid. Will we be permitted to ask questions when the question period is called?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Having adopted an extraordinary procedure with the consent of the House, the procedure is that the House has until 3.25 for questions. There are other proceedings and questions of privilege which could be taken up in the ordinary course after the question period expires. The difficulty we face, on the point of order raised by hon. members, is that there is no procedure, in any of the precedents of which I am aware, whereby questions can be directed to a parliamentary secretary to a minister while the minister is present in the House. I have not been able to find any such precedent.

There is, of course, nothing to restrict hon. members asking questions of the ministry, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), members of the cabinet, or perhaps the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) in respect of alleged practices by the parliamentary secretary. But I would have to hear the question in order to determine whether it is in order. However, it might raise a curious problem if questions directed to any other ministers could be referred by those ministers to the parliamentary secretary himself; I don't know. That has not occurred; it is something for speculation at the moment.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. REID—DATE OF KNOWLEDGE OF CHANGE IN TAX ON BOATS—POSSIBLE COMMUNICATION OF INFORMATION TO CONSTITUENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker might I be quite direct and ask whether I have permission to direct a question or two to the parliamentary secretary, in order to save the time of the House. If I have permission to do that I might even ask the Government House Leader to leave for a moment in order to make it legal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: On the assumption that I have such permission—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, I am afraid that is a wrong assumption. I would think a question would have to be directed to the President of the Privy Council and it would be for him to decide whether the question ought to be directed to him while he was in the House.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Government House Leader whether his parliamentary secretary learned from the office of the Minister of Finance that the tax legislation which followed the budget would be changed and that he learned this between the date of the budget in November and the date on which the tax change was announced in the House on January 28, and whether the parliamentary secretary communicated this information that the tax change would be made to his constituents in their respective positions.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, since I have no personal knowledge of this I would ask that the question be referred to my parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The answer to the first part of the question, as to whether I received any information from the office of the Minister of Finance, is no. I obtained my information—I do not really consider I should call it hard information but rather an impression—after about two weeks of talking to officers in the various departments while lobbying the case I was trying to make. I came away with the impression that there would be a decision to do something about the tax on boats. Having obtained that impression—and I must say nobody came to me and told me at any time that this matter was in hand or was going to be done; it was simply an impression I had—I communicated to those people who had been in touch with me on dealing with budget Bill C-40 that indeed I had as my opinion, after lobbying the various departments and various ministers involved that there was a chance or a possibility that the tax would be dealt with and that probably it would be changed in some way. I was not able to define precisely and exactly what would happen.

● (1440)

MR. REID—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH CONSTITUENTS ON TAX CHANGES ON BOATS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Privy Council in order to keep the procedure straight. Did the parliamentary secretary communicate this information to firms in his constituency in writing, and will the President of the Privy Council table that correspondence in the House?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I call upon my parliamentary secretary to continue this conversation?

Mr. Speaker: I think it might be appropriate to assume that questions on this subject directed to the President of the Privy Council are going to be answered by the parliamentary secretary.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the representations that I received from my constituents were in two categories. There were those that were given to me personally when I was in my constituency, those that were telephoned to me, and there was one representation made to me in writing as of December 3, 1974. I replied to that on December 19, 1974. If Your Honour would wish it, I would be happy to table this correspondence at the present moment.

For the edification of hon. members, perhaps I might read from the last paragraph of my letter which deals with the opinion which I expressed. It reads as follows:

I have spoken to the Department of Finance officials as well as the minister, and I understand they are likely to relieve the excise tax against boats, although not on motors. When the situation becomes clearer, I'll be in touch with you again.

The next correspondence I had was on January 30, when I reported to them what had happened on January 28 when the Minister of Supply and Services moved appropriate amendments that had been accepted by the House. If you wish, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to table the correspondence immediately.

Mr. Speaker: It would be my pleasure to extend that privilege to the hon. member. However, I can only extend it to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I table this correspondence on behalf of my parliamentary secretary.

FINANCE

PERSONS WITHIN DEPARTMENT WHO HAD PRIOR KNOWLEDGE OF TAX CHANGE ON BOATS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. Who in his department knew that this tax change was going to be proposed before it was announced in the House on January 28, who besides him had that knowledge?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as a result of representations and speeches from both sides of the House, both during the budget debate following the budget of November 18, as well as during the debate on amendments to the excise bill—I think hon. members can check those debates to see that the representations were made from both sides of the House and they were numerous—I asked my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, to present on my behalf an amendment on January 28 which relieved the tax from being imposed on boats as opposed to motors. I can say that to the best of my knowledge no advance notice of that amendment was given to any member of parliament, apart from those members who hold office in the Cabinet, who, of course, had to approve that amendment before my colleague submitted it on my behalf to the House.

As to who in the Department of Finance would have known of my intention to present that amendment, it would have been limited to officers in the taxation division of the department. I am not in a position to advise the Leader of the Opposition as to who actually would have had knowledge of that.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question of real relevance to the matter. The parliamentary secretary referred to information he received from officials of the Department of Finance. Does the Minister of Finance not consider it appropriate that he should have inquired, or at least should certainly now inquire, as to who were the officials in his department from whom the parliamentary secretary obtained the impression that these changes would probably be made, an impression that gave him sufficient certainty to write to firms engaged in this business in his constituency, a certainty as to the changes of policy to be made, thereby perhaps giving them an enormous advantage over their competitors?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River may or may not have received an impression from officials of the Department of Finance. That I do not know.

An hon. Member: He said he did.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What I want to say to the hon. member is that no public servant in the Department of Finance would have known with assurance that any amendment would be proposed in the House until I, as Minister of Finance had approved it, and, even more important, until my colleagues in the Cabinet had approved it. It is only after that that it became a governmental decision on my recommendation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: When was the amendment drafted?

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN MINISTER AND PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO PRESIDENT OF PRIVY COUNCIL CONCERNING TAX CHANGE ON BOATS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Finance indicate whether at any time he discussed with the parliamentary secretary the possibility of making the amendment which appeared on January 28?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I discussed that amendment in response to representations from at least 50 members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I did not ask about the 50 members. Was one of the 50 members the parliamentary secretary?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I cannot distinctly recall that.

DATE OF DRAFTING AMENDMENT CONCERNING TAX ON BOATS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Would the Minister of Finance indicate when the amendment was drafted, how many days prior to January 28?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I will find out. If the matter goes to the standing committee, of course that information will be provided. I do not have the information at my fingertips.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. REID—DEGREE OF CERTAINTY ABOUT TAX CHANGE ON BOATS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. On grounds that the disclosure of amendments to a budget in principle is not at all different from disclosure of budget details, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary what degree of certitude he had that the knowledge he possessed was concerning a change in the budget? He wrote about it in December although it did not come until January. Was he totally convinced that the change was coming and, if so, with what sense of certitude did he disclose that conviction?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, after lobbying ministers for changes in legislation and talking to officials, it has always been my impression that I can tell pretty well whether or not a government is going to move on something. If I were not able to operate on that basis, I would be a pretty ineffective member of parliament. I would say to the hon. member who posed the question that my certitude was to the extent that I was prepared to bet two bottles of scotch that I was right and he was wrong. So I would say that as a result of the lobbying which I had done among members on all sides and officials of the department, I was reasonably certain of it because of the pressure that was being put on.

I might say, in answer to that kind of question, that there was a discussion of this very operation in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, as recorded at page 15 of the issue from which the hon. member for York-Simcoe quoted. I want to read a brief quotation to make my point. It reads:

> I for one on that very precise example said to various people, the Minister is going to withdraw this excise tax provision. And I had no confidential information whatsoever. It was just a good guess on my part, an intuition.

That was said by an hon. member who sits on the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reid: So I think that those of us who represent similar constituencies, and who had lobbied hon. members and talked to the departmental officials, had a very good idea of what was going to happen.

Oral Questions

MR. REID—POSSIBILITY OF CONVERSATION WITH DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE OFFICIAL CONCERNING TAX CHANGE ON BOATS—REQUEST FOR NAME

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a supplementary question for the parliamentary secretary. May I say, with respect, that I think the difference is pretty fundamental.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The parliamentary secretary is quoted in the press—and he may want to deny that, and part of what was said also—that he had "insider knowledge" which quite conceivably could be obtained only by a parliamentary secretary or a cabinet minister who had more direct access certainly than the rest of us have to Department of Finance officials. It seems to me that that is an important difference between people who sit in the House either as ministers or parliamentary secretaries, and people on this side of the House or backbenchers on the other side of the House. I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary if he had a direct conversation with what he would regard as a knowledgeable official in the Department of Finance on the subject under discussion. If so, would he give us the name of that official and the precise information that was given to him?

● (1450)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I had no direct information at all and I think that should be perfectly clear. I also would mention that backbenchers on this side of the House often feel that backbenchers on the other side have more information on what the government is going to do than we on this side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: The other point that should be made perfectly clear is that in the discussions in the standing committee when we were talking about conflict of interest I referred to my actions as member of parliament for Kenora-Rainy River, making representations on behalf of constituents who elected me; it has been my experience that a parliamentary secretary carries no weight at all with the ministry in many cases, and no weight at all with a department in obtaining information. Indeed, the correspondence I have had with everybody on it—which is certainly going to be open—has been done on my personal stationery as a member of parliament and conversations, phone calls and whatnot were made as a member of parliament. I was not introduced and have never introduced myself in my discussions with officials at any time with the temporary title which I bear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: The Prime Minister informs me that the axe falls on September 15 when my appointment runs out! I want to emphasize again to the hon. member that nobody gave my any direct information. What I did have was the result of a series of conversations with officials in three departments who were all affected by this—Transport, National Revenue and Finance. All I was able to find out with certainty, was what I was listening to in the House of Commons, that the pressure was such that the government would have to move on this particular thing because it was so obviously unjust and did not apply.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary. If I understand the hon. member correctly he is saying that his insider information—that phrase has been used—and his concern about conflict of interest—a phrase he also used—is absolutely no different for him or any particular subject matter under discussion in his judgment than it is for any other member on this side of the House. If that is the point he is making, there are at least a number of us who might be skeptical about it. Would the hon. member provide to members of the House the names of the three departmental officials in the three different departments with whom he had conversations on this subject?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on the subject of insider information, I think if members go back and read the testimony of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of March 6, 1975, the point I was making was that members of parliament, by their very nature, have inside information that is not available to the general public. I meant insider information only in that sense. Those of us involved in the governing process do have information which is not available to everybody in the community.

Concerning the names of officials, according to my files I have the name of only one official who was called, not by me, but by an officer in my employ and I am prepared to table in the House—if the House should wish it—a copy of the memorandum prepared for me by my staff which might be of some assistance. It is dated November 21, 1974.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree that the President of the Privy Council shall be in a position to table that memorandum?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF MINISTER TO GIVE RECEIPT FOR DONATION TO POLITICAL PARTY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue but since he is behind the curtains, I will ask the parliamentary secretary, unless the Minister of National Revenue is willing to resume his seat. He is back.

Now, I would like to know pursuant to which act the minister may deny a taxpayer the amount of an official receipt which has been issued by an officer registered in a political party according to the law, and thus prejudice his right by refusing the immediate and total tax refund to which he is entitled?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this is really in the nature of a legal question under the provisions of the Income Tax Act and the Elections Expenses Act.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. REID—INQUIRY AS TO INTERVIEW WITH MR. JACQUES HAMILTON OF MONTREAL "GAZETTE"

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, through the intervention of the President of the Privy Council could I ask one question of the parliamentary secretary? I should like to know if the parliamentary secretary had an interview with Mr. Jacques Hamilton of the Montreal Gazette subsequent to an appearance before the standing committee and did he say to Mr. Jacques Hamilton the words which appear in the Montreal Gazette of today's date in quotations, the following:

"We put on a lobby." he said, "and we knew about six weeks or so before it was announced that it (the tax) was coming off the boats but not the motors."

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that quotation is, I believe, taken from the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. If it is not, then I may well have said it. The discussion I had with Mr. Hamilton of the Gazette had to do with the work of the standing committee. We were discussing at that time the problems of confidentiality and information that comes to members of parliament by virtue of their being members of parliament. On that basis, I gave one of the examples where members might have information that was available to them before others simply by dint of being there at that time and representing their constituency.

MR. FAULKNER—INQUIRY AS TO TELEPHONE CALL FROM PRESIDENT OF OUTBOARD MOTOR COMPANY IN PETERBOROUGH CONCERNING TAX CHANGE ON BOATS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State and ask if he received a telephone call from the president of an outboard motor company in the city of Peterborough within two weeks prior to the reading of the November budget in which the Secretary of State was informed that knowledge concerning the tax exemptions contained in Bill C-40 would be forthcoming and that the source of the information was revealed to the minister at that time. Can he confirm if he received such a telephone call and such information?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to check that out and get back to the hon. member. I did have representations from the Outboard Marine Corporation on the tax measure itself but that is not what the hon. member is asking. I will have to check it out.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister if he recalls a conversation with the Outboard Marine Corporation and if, during the course of that conversation, the minister was informed that this company had been informed that the tax exemptions were coming and that the source of the information was also revealed to the minister at the time?

Mr. Faulkner: I do not remember that, Mr. Speaker. The thrust of the representation to me was to try and lobby the Minister of Finance to change the tax measure in my capacity as member of parliament for Peterborough. I do not remember the other dimension that the hon. member is talking about but it may have taken place. I will check that. I will telephone the individuals in question.

MR. REID—INQUIRY WHETHER INTERVIEW WITH MR. HAMILTON TAPED—POSSIBILITY OF PRODUCING TAPE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to tell the House now when he had an interview or when Mr. Hamilton interviewed him and was that interview or discussion between him and the newspaper reporter, taped? Has he asked for the production of that tape since this article appeared this morning in the Montreal Gazette?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe there were two telephone conversations with Mr. Hamilton; whether he taped them or not I am not aware. If he did so, he did it without my permission. I have not asked for a transcript of what notes he used.

MR. REID—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS WITH WHOM TAX CHANGE ON BOATS DISCUSSED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question to the parliamentary secretary. He may not have that information today. Would he be prepared tomorrow to give us the full names of all people with whom he had discussions in departments prior to that change in the tax measure? I agree with the Leader of the New Democratic Party that if there is a leak from a tax measure prior to the measure being brought to the House and the knowledge of the people, the same principle applies to that as to a leak of the budget. Would he give us the full names and be prepared to answer, with a statement on motions, these questions: what conversations did he have with those people; what did those officials say to him at that time; and, what disclosures did he make as a result of those conversations?

● (1500)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have already tabled the correspondence, the only piece of correspondence with the person who made representation to me about this. I cannot go beyond that. In addition, I have also tabled the document that was referred to concerning the telephone call made by a member of my staff on my behalf. I will look into my files, to see if, indeed, there are any records of representations that I made to other ministers, or to other departmental officials. And if I have such record I will be happy to make it available to the House. I do not know, from glancing at my files this morning, whether that information was kept.

MR. REID—DATE OF DISCUSSION WITH DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIAL CONCERNING TAX CHANGE ON BOATS REFERRED TO IN LETTER OF DECEMBER 19

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I raised that question because, in the letter the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, wrote on December 19, 1974, appears this paragraph:

> I quite agree with you that the provision ought to have applied to snowmachines. I have spoken to the Department of Finance officials as well as the minister, and I understand they are likely to relieve the excise tax against boats, although not on motors . . .

That letter was addressed to Mr. Garth N. Nelson, president of Nelson's Leisureland. I ask the parliamentary secretary these questions: when did you have this discussion, and what was said in that discussion which led you to write that letter and make that clear prediction?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wrote the letter on December 19. That is the date on the letter. It was the result of fairly intensive work I had done in a short time, and I made a judgment as to what I thought would happen. My constituent had come to me and asked me what I thought was going to happen. I gave him the benefit of my opinion. It was strictly my opinion. He did not, incidentally, believe me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: He did not believe me. I think I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that I had spoken to the minister in the House, to tell him how unfair I thought this tax was on the small boat manufacturers of my constituency and on the retailers and marine operators in my county, and I did so in company with a large number of hon. members from both sides of the House.

It seems to me, if any constituent asks me to give my impression of what is likely to happen in the House of Commons, that I am not doing my duty as a member of parliament if I deny him the benefit of that opinion.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST SPRINGHILL

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister provide the House with information about his activities relating to the disastrous fire which struck Springhill; what actions will he take, or what will his department do, in co-operation with other departments, to assist in the revitalizing of the business community of Springhill? May I thank the minister for the aggressive role he has taken in helping the people of the stricken community.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer with as much detail as I can within the limits of the question period, and follow up with a more detailed answer later.

Reference has already been made to consultations with the Solicitor General, with a possible view to obtaining a small and medium security addition or part of the penitentiary service for the area. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration and I have discussed the early start of local initiative programs, ahead of normal starting dates, so that people can be employed immediately. Last night I met Mr. Kent of Devco, not in any official capacity, but because of his knowledge of these matters. The minerals exploration agreement which we have with Nova Scotia permits sums to be assigned, to determine whether new mining ventures can be undertaken in communities like Springhill. In addition, I have one incentive case before me at present, of which I think the hon. member is aware. I will ask its consideration to be speeded. I have been waiting for word from the government of Nova Scotia following their cabinet meeting on Tuesday, to see what specific requests, if any, they will make, and I will keep the hon. member advised.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. REID—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF LETTER OF DECEMBER 19 CONCERNING TAX CHANGES ON BOATS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council and, through him, to the parliamentary secretary. What did the parliamentary secretary mean by these words in the letter which he wrote on December 19 to Mr. Garth N. Nelson, one of his constituents:

> I have spoken to the Department of Finance officials as well as the minister—

What did he mean? Did he mean that he spoke for a deputation, in parliament? Does he mean something like that, or does he mean that he interviewed officials and the minister on this subject?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With due respect, it seems to me that the parliamentary secretary just answered a similar question asked by the hon. member for Calgary North.

MR. REID—SUGGESTED CONSULTATION ON TERMS OF REFERENCE OF QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question, to the President of the Privy Council. As the parliamentary secretary suggested, very properly, that in certain circumstances the general terms of this matter ought to be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, may I ask the President of the Privy Council, because of the importance of the terms of reference, to consult others on this side of the House as to the proper terms of reference?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the question raised by my parliamentary secretary, he was referring to an article in the Montreal Gazette, which made certain allegations, namely, that my parliamentary secretary had access to budget secrets before the budget was brought down. He properly raised a question of privilege in that connection. It is not the parliamentary secretary who is under investigation; it is the Gazette.

Mr. Stanfield: You are wrong.

BILINGUALISM

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO PURCHASE TEXT BOOKS FOR TEACHING FRENCH IN ONTARIO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State of Canada.

The province of Ontario has recently announced a $750,000 grant for the promotion and design of learning material made in Canada. I shall quote an article, by Mr. Pascal Barette, which appeared in Le Droit on last July 22:

> Out of this amount $250,000 will be specifically earmarked to meet the requirements of French schools in learning aids.

Will the minister tell this House whether or not, within the framework of the official languages program, he has had discussions with his provincial counterpart regarding federal participation in this program, the amount of federal contribution and the terms of the agreement?

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have had discussions. I am anxious, on behalf of the federal government, to participate. The federal contribution will match the provincial contribution, which will mean a contribution of $250,000 in the 1975-76 fiscal year. I have been anxious to ensure that the contribution should be earmarked for Canadian-owned publishing firms. We want them to be given preference and we are still negotiating this with the province of Ontario.

FINANCE

ALLEGATION BANKS NOT GRANTING FARM IMPROVEMENT, SMALL BUSINESS OR FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS IN ACCORDANCE WITH ACT—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On July 4 I asked the minister to look into the matter of banks granting farm improvement loans, small business loans and fisheries improvement loans, in accordance with the act. Since that date I have learned that the situation is much worse than I thought. Has the minister made inquiries and given any instructions to the banks?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that I signed a letter which is to be sent to the hon. member a day or so ago. I hope he gets it.

Mr. McKinley: I have not yet received it, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ALLEGED DUMPING OF FOREIGN STEEL IN NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue, and follows the written memo I sent him on Friday, a copy of which went to the Minister of Labour, to do with press reports concerning the dumping of foreign steel in Nova Scotia. Has the minister any further information on the subject, as the steel industry in Nova Scotia faces difficult times, particularly as the Sydney steel plant has laid off many workers? Can he enlighten us and ascertain if steel is coming in at cut rates?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I received the hon. member's representation, another from his colleagues, and also one from my colleague who is responsible for the Department of Labour, to do with this matter. So far, no formal complaint has been lodged under the anti-dumping legislation. My officials are in touch with companies or in the course of getting in touch with them, to see whether they wish to institute proceedings under the anti-dumping act. I asked my officials to treat this as a matter of urgency, and to expedite it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSITION GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND SELF-DETERMINATION AT FORTHCOMING CONFERENCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Next week there will be a meeting of 35 nations in Helsinki. We in this House have no idea whatsoever as to the stand that the Prime Minister will take on behalf of Canada, there having been no day set aside for the purpose of discussion and ascertaining the feelings of members of this House with regard to the tremendous problems affecting the peace of not only Europe, but of the world, which will come up. I therefore ask him whether he has received representations from organizations such as the Ukrainian Canadian Committee asking what stand Canada will take. I specifically ask the Prime Minister these questions, whether any treaty signed by Canada should include a definite commitment by all signatories, including the U.S.S.R., to implement within their jurisdictions the principles embodied in the universal declaration of human rights and, second, that in the establishment of boundaries in eastern Europe which are the result of conquest, that such establishment should be conditional on the principle of self-determination being accepted by the U.S.S.R. and the other nations. I ask what stand Canada is going to take on this matter. I speak on behalf of representations made to me for hundreds of thousands of Canadians of Ukrainian origin and also Latvian, Estonian and Lithuanian origin. They are very concerned that no one knows whether Canada is going to stand up and insist on self-determination as provided for in the United Nations charter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member should put his question. I think he ought to limit representation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is something that should have been discussed in this parliament before the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Every time the cacklers cackle, I know I have touched something. I ask the Prime Minister what stand Canada will take in this regard.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as to the matter of representations, I do not believe I have received any specific representations about this conference I am attending next week. Of course, I have heard from Canadian groups of various origins about the subject many times. I have always responded to them and given them my views on it. They are well known.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What are they?

Mr. Trudeau: As to the conference itself, it has been in preparation for about two years. It has been discussed many times. I have answered many questions and I have had a press conference on it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are talking about parliament, not press conferences.

Mr. Trudeau: Parliament never deigned to ask me any questions on this.

Mr. Stanfield: I deigned to ask you a question.

Mr. Trudeau: Every time I have been asked questions on foreign affairs, I have attempted to deal with them as best I could. I have no recollection of having been asked specific details about this particular conference. However, I have said in various places that Canada's role in this conference has been a very constructive one indeed. We are the ones who insisted on doing the most on what is known as the third basket, the principle of free movement of people's ideas and exchange of information between various parts of the world and between various groups. We have been successful in getting this and other principles accepted. I intend to sign the document next week. It is not a negotiating conference. There has been agreement reached by the various governments on the document which will be proposed in Helsinki next week. I will, of course, be pleased to table that document in the House when I return.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the kind of evasion we get when the Prime Minister deals with External Affairs. This is a matter affecting every Canadian. The answer is as uncertain as it is meaningless. What stand will Canada take before signing a treaty with regard to the right of self-determination being assured, as provided for in the United Nations charter, for Ukrainian people, those of the Baltic states and others who are kept in captive nations behind the Iron Curtain?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have not evaded that question. I have told the right hon. member and the House the government's views on these subjects. I can tell the right hon. member that it is not the intention of the conference in Helsinki to change the frontiers of any countries which are now members of the United Nations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Only five minutes remain in the question period. There are several hon. members seeking the floor. The right hon. member for Prince Albert and the Prime Minister have now absorbed close to 10 minutes on this subject. I feel we should go on to another matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We may have taken up 10 minutes, but we did not get any information.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to be yelled down by a bunch of baboons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the right hon. member has a point of order, he can raise it at 3:25.

FISHERIES

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO STOP DEPLETION OF FISH STOCKS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State (Fisheries). Since his announcement yesterday that our eastern ports will be closed to Russian ships, general public reaction seems to be that while this will cause the Russians some inconvenience, it will have little effect on reducing overfishing on the east coast and no effect whatsoever in dealing with the rapid depletion of our stocks of herring, salmon and halibut on the west coast, what further steps do the minister and the government intend to take in order to stop this steady decline of fish stocks, both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member read the statement that I made on this matter, it was obvious that our decision to close the port was very much related to violation and over-run of quotas. If quotas are respected, at least the resources will be protected. We do not think that this will be enough. At the next ICNAF meeting in September, we will insist on a 40 per cent reduction of effort. As for the other measures which the hon. member is proposing, I do not know if he is referring to possible unilateral action. I am surprised that he, as a representative of a west coast constituency, would be advocating this before we have absolute guarantees that we can protect the salmon.

PROPOSED UNILATERAL DECLARATION OF JURISDICTION OVER MARINE RESOURCES TO 200 MILES OFFSHORE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that Mr. L. R. Day, Executive Secretary of the International Commission for Northwest Atlantic Fisheries, has pointed out that they have no evidence of the Russians over-fishing and he says it is not surprising because those countries which follow the ICNAF regulations do not, of course, report them, and since this matter is left entirely to the discretion of nations involved, I ask the minister whether it is not now time to do what Canada did with regard to the outmoded three mile limit and take unilateral action or join with the United States in taking bilateral action in order to extend our jurisdiction to the 200 mile limit or to the continental shelf in order that we may be able to police the situation which ICNAF has shown it cannot police?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Before the hon. member and the hon. lady across from me applaud, they might question whether Mr. Day has been properly quoted. I cannot believe that a person who is the secretary of ICNAF would not know that the charges of violation made by Canada followed many hundreds of boardings over the past months with our inspectors having access to foreign ships fishing off our coasts in the ICNAF area.

● (1520)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Minister speaks of impatience. I should like to remind him of a speech he himself made to ICNAF in Edinburgh on June 6, 1975 in which the minister began by saying: "We have had enough"? I remind him also of his words to the delegates at that conference:

> Either the distant water fishing nations will co-operate with Canada or other coastal states in the orderly development of new coastal management regimes . . . or else Canada and the other states . . . will be obliged to consider other means of protecting their legitimate interests.

I am asking the minister what other measures he proposes to take to protect the legitimate interests of Canadian fishermen.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I rejoice that the hon. member has been reading my speeches, too. I said then that we were impatient, and we still are. I also said we would take certain measures, and six weeks ago—it was not because of Mr. Moores' visit to Ottawa two days ago—I indicated that we would be closing ports if violations continued. In one case, violations were flagrant and continued, and we closed the ports. As for the other measures comptemplated, I indicated earlier that we are talking to those nations which share our concern; we are examining our options, and one lively option is that of a unilateral declaration.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY

REASON FOR CHANGE OF CONTRACTORS FOR DEMOLITION OF BRIDGE AT PORT ROBINSON—POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct two questions to the Minister of Transport of which I have given him notice. They have to do with the circumstances surrounding the awarding of contracts by the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority calling for the demolition of bridge 12 at Port Robinson after a boat had hit the bridge—the peculiar circumstances surrounding the awarding of contracts. In the first instance, Bridge and Tank Company of Canada was awarded a contract to do the job but this was subsequently cancelled in favour of a contract awarded to McAllister Marine subject to some compensation for Bridge and Tank by way of salvage and scrap. What was the reason for the change in contractors and what form of compensation, if any, was paid to Bridge and Tank, of Hamilton, for loss of the contract and on what basis?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): As far as the figures are concerned, I would have to check them because I do not have them with me. The reason no tenders were called was that the canal had to be cleared as quickly as possible. Under the arrangements which were made it took about 14 days before the canal was open. Otherwise, it would have taken two months or so. The Authority awarded the contract to a local firm to destroy the two towers and the span in the middle. The company could not do it, so they had to give the work to another firm. The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority even sent its own crane from Montreal to help in getting the span out of the way. After 14 days it was possible to open the canal. But for these measures it would have been necessary to wait for a couple of months.

Mr. Alexander: I want to thank the minister for his answer, subject to information which may be revealed to me subsequently. May I ask him, now, why it was necessary for the Seaway Authority to seek any contract for the demolition of the bridge when it is alleged it had the equipment, the personnel and the capability to do the job itself by means of the Hercules floating crane?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They came with the crane only to help the contractor. I am not sure that the Authority does have all the equipment necessary to do this job. The reason given me by the Seaway management is that they wanted to proceed as quickly as possible in order to free the canal for navigation. This is why they asked a firm which was already there to try to clean up the destroyed bridge. I will reply to any parts of the question which have been left unanswered after I get in touch with the Seaway Authority.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION TO TRUCKING INDUSTRY AS A RESULT OF FREIGHT RATE FREEZE—DATE OF DECISION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the House whether the government has reached a decision with respect to the payment of compensation to the trucking industry arising out of the rail freight rate freeze? On May 23, I asked the minister a question about this matter and he indicated then that the matter was going before cabinet. On June 4, he told the House the matter was on its way to the appropriate committee. Can he now tell us whether a decision has yet been reached with respect to this matter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Things are going exactly as I expected at that time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the minister assure the House that this matter will be resolved before his departure from the portfolio of Transport which, I understand, is imminent—before the end of the summer?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Personally, I hope so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: What is it you hope?

AGRICULTURE

LEVY CHARGED ON MANUFACTURING MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture or to his parliamentary secretary? It pertains to the additional levy to be charged against all manufacturing milk deliveries from Canadian dairy farmers on or after July 1. Does the government intend that dairy farmers should bear the cost of deficits created as a result of the government's inefficient marketing methods when dealing with powdered milk?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Acting Minister of Agriculture): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the government House leader what he has in mind for the business during this part of the session, and when does he propose to move the interesting motion standing in his name on the order paper?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Sharp: The government is ready to continue sitting until Bill C-66 is completed. I believe that on all sides there is general agreement that it would be desirable to give us the authority to pay the refunds before the recess.

Mr. Baldwin: You have got it.

Mr. Sharp: The other piece of business with which we should like to make progress is Bill C-2. However, the government would be prepared to dispense with any further debate if we could get some sort of agreement as to the progress of that bill after we come back on October 14.

An hon. Member: No way!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is precisely what you will not get.

Mr. Baldwin: May I, in my usual capacity as peacemaker, endeavour to direct a question to the government House leader in this regard, bearing in mind that there are still 18 amendments at the report stage to Bill C-2 and these amendments are the property of the House in general, not only of the hon. members who move them, and that there may be some time taken up by this debate. There is discussion going on at the present time which might involve some movement on the part of the government as well as on the part of the opposition, but I should like to be quite plain and I put this question bluntly to the government House leader: does he not realize that Bill C-66 is now in the delicate position where several acts of consent and unanimous approval will be required if discussion of it is to be completed by tomorrow, which seems to some of us to be not unreasonable—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Baldwin: —provided the NDP, which fairly recently discovered this measure, agrees.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Without in any sense reducing our capacity for a strong and sustained attack upon this iniquitous measure, it is physically possible for it to be completed by some time tomorrow night. But I think we would have to have some understanding that we are not going to come back to debate Bill C-2 at the beginning of next week. That is the situation, and I put it to the government House leader quite categorically, accompanying the statement that we are prepared to work together to preserve our right to secure certain modifications to Bill C-2 and that we will work with the government in that regard.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order regarding the business of the House, I wonder whether I might put two questions to the government House leader. My first question relates to Bill C-66. In view of the statement made today by the minister's parliamentary secretary, that he knew a certain tax was going to come off because there was considerable opposition to it, does it not therefore follow, in view of the massive opposition to Bill C-66, that the minister is going to withdraw it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If not, we shall have to continue our opposition.

Mr. Broadbent: We have no inside information on that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The other question relates to a matter that I raised with the government House leader on July 2, as noted at page 7170 of Hansard, having to do with the announcement in the budget speech that there would be legislation to increase the rate of return on existing Government of Canada annuities. On that occasion the minister indicated, in replying to my question, that there would be an explanation with respect to this matter before we rise for the summer recess. Since we might rise within a week or so, can the minister tell us what the precise plans are respecting these proposed improvements in government annuities?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on the first point, which I think was not meant to be taken very seriously, I hope that no member on the other side is sending out any letters suggesting that the excise tax is going to be lifted. However, while the Minister of Finance, if I may say, on a previous occasion said he would consider the representations that were made, he has made it quite clear, and so has the government, that this legislation must be approved.

On the second point, since giving the reply to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre I have talked with my colleagues and I am informed that legislation is required. It is now being prepared on an urgent basis and will be introduced after the recess, not before.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order, before things get out of control I would like to get things straight about the proposal made recently by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that the House sit on Saturday to end up consideration of Bill C-66 before the summer recess.

I want to point out to the hon. member for Peace River that there is no indication that the sun will not shine next week and that we can come back, if necessary, to finish consideration of this bill. We have been expecting for at least two years legislation to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. The minister promised it would be taken into consideration, and he does not talk about it any more now. I would like to know what he intends to do with the bill, or at least with some of the amendments that the public is expecting.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understood—or perhaps I misunderstood—from questions and conversations that some of us had had with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) that he was going to table the multilateral agreement between the IAEA and the government of Argentina respecting safeguards for the CANDU nuclear reactor. I was hoping that he would do this today.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of that particular agreement in the English language only and I should like to get a French translation. But I will either hand it to my hon. friend this afternoon or table it tomorrow.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, concerning the Standing Order 43 motion I proposed today, my colleagues and I in this particular corner of the House did not hear any nays. If there were negative votes, I cannot understand why they would not be voiced loudly. My motion was only sending congratulations to the first people of this country on the celebration of their centennial.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith (Churchill): As I say, I did not hear any nays.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think Your Honour said that at 3.25 I would be permitted to raise a point of order. My point of order has to do with an answer given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the effect that he had not had any correspondence with the Ukrainian-Canadian committee, and naturally, except on anything concerning a personal allegation, I believe him. But I would point out that the telegram sent to the Prime Minister and the copies sent to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) were dispatched from Winnipeg on July 22.

Your Honour said ten minutes had been devoted to this matter. All across this country, sir, and among 100 million captive peoples, there is deep concern over this conference, of which parliament knows nothing except, as the Prime Minister said, what he deigned to let the people know through press conferences. Press conferences do not take the place of parliament in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked him two questions; he is entitled not to answer. The first was with reference to boundaries being determined that were the consequence of conquest, where 100 million people who love freedom as you and I love freedom are denied the opportunity of self-determination. They are afraid another Munich is in the offing and they want parliament to place their views before the people. We have had no opportunity to do so.

This is the first time in all the years since Mr. Mackenzie King was prime minister that this House has not regularly had debates on external affairs. The Prime Minister answered me by speaking about something else. I have done my duty. I endeavoured to do something for those people who today are denied freedom and for those in Canada of various racial origin who have asked for action. All we have received in return is the contemptuous brush-off of a group of Liberal members who endeavoured to howl me down when I tried to place before the House something that touches the heart not only of those of various racial origin but of all Canadians who love freedom.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the point of order raised by the right hon. gentleman gives me an opportunity to say that I have had similar representations from various groups in the country with respect to their concerns about the results of the security conference. Of course, a principal concern has been the possibility that boundaries which came into effect after the Second World War would somehow be rendered immutable or sanctioned in some way by this conference.

● (1540)

That objective has not been attained by those who sought it. The text indicates quite clearly that these boundaries are not immutable and that they are subject to peaceful change under the rules of international law. I have been able to assure my correspondents that their concerns will be met in the texts which will be proposed at the summit meeting. I understand the concerns, and they have been met very fully. The efforts have been resisted.

Because of the words uttered by the right hon. gentleman, I think it is worth saying that in the field of human contacts and the desire that there be a free movement of ideas and peoples as a basis of future détente, this concept has been recognized in the texts, so that in the future they can be used as a basis for further development in the movement of ideas and the movement of peoples. This is a further objective which has been sought by the groups to which the right hon. gentleman has referred.

Mr. Baldwin: All you need now is an umbrella.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, for the record I think it is worth pointing out to the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) that there was, indeed, some parliamentary debate on this subject when his seatmate, the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), the late, lamented member for Scarborough West, and myself were members of a delegation to the Interparliamentary Union specifically on this conference in Helsinki. I think it was in January or February of 1973. It was a unique occasion, when parliamentarians did have an opportunity to report on such a conference and issues involved, and to debate them at that time. So it was the subject of debate.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) seeks the floor on a question of privilege. He will be heard just after questions on the order paper.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS AND STANDING ORDERS

Fifth report of Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, in both official languages.—Mr. Loiselle (Saint-Henri).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[Mr. MacEachen.]

[English]

PARLIAMENTARY SEMESTERS ACT

MEASURE TO DIVIDE CALENDAR YEAR INTO THREE PARLIAMENTARY SEMESTERS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-411, to divide the calendar year into three parliamentary semesters.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for three fixed semesters of parliament in each calendar year, so that members of the House of Commons will know when parliament will be sitting and thus can better organize their time to perform the related duties of members of parliament, particularly with respect to their constituencies. It is also designed to put a heavy onus on the government to organize the work of the House so that adequate time can be given for debate and to ensure that end of session game playing with important legislation will cease.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 2,277, 2,330, 2,429, 2,436, 2,521, 2,765, 2,766, 2,778, 2,783, 2,819, 2,847, 2,851, 2,939 and 2,941.

Mr. Speaker, if question No. 716 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—PORT OF MONTREAL

Question No. 2,277—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Did the President of the Privy Council approve the decision made by the National Harbours Board as stated in the answer to Question No. 1,899 that Board Minutes respecting the delegation of some authority regarding day-to-day operations of the Port of Montreal to an Executive Committee is an "internal and not a public document" and, if so, on what date?

2. Will the President of the Privy Council consider giving an opinion as to whether or not the National Harbours Board decision complies with the guidelines announced in 1973 by the government respecting the release of documents to Parliament?

3. Have any extracts, excerpts, quotations, portions, citations, passages or any other selection of Board Minutes of either the National Harbours Board or the National Capital Commission been made public in any form whatsoever since January 1, 1972 and, if so (a) by what agency (b) on what topic (c) in what format (d) on what date?

4. Does the decision by the Minister of Transport to approve the decision of the National Harbours Board to keep such information respecting policy of the National Harbours Board, and involving public funds and publicly funded facilities secret, advance the government's stated objective of governing Canadians openly and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The answer by the President of the Privy Council and the National Harbours Board is as follows: 1. No.

2. The National Harbours Board decision does comply with the guidelines announced in 1973.

3. Extracts of minutes of meetings of the board are made available to the courts for such action as the swearing in or dismissal of police constables or for the transfer of property but are not made public by way of any further distribution. All minutes of the meetings are available to the Minister of Transport.

4. The National Harbours Board is responsible to parliament through the Minister of Transport. The board advises the minister on all policy matters which are felt to be in the public interest in fulfillment of its responsibility to parliament and the people of Canada, recognizing its role as a Crown corporation in competition for business with comparable organizations both within and outside Canada. The Minister of Transport determines the extent to which such policy matters should be made public and at what time in their development.

NATIVE ART

Question No. 2,330—Mr. Firth:

1. What was the dollar value of copies of Native art imported into the country last year?

2. Is there legislation or is the government contemplating legislation that would protect Native artists and the general public from the importation and sale of authentic looking, but bogus Native art?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Consumer and Corporate Affairs as follows: 1. According to Statistics Canada there is no such classification of imported goods as "bogus Native art". The classification of product information is received from the customs slips, the products being classified under such general headings as art and decorative ware, paintings and pastels made by hand, miscellaneous novelties, glassware, etc. To our knowledge, however, no copies of Eskimo art were imported into the country last year.

2. There is no specific legislation either existing or contemplated governing the importation and sale of goods that imitate the style of Canadian native art. The present Intellectual Property Laws (Copyright Act, Industrial Design Act, Trade Marks Act, Patent Act) do not deal with this specific matter. However, any prepackaged products including authentic looking art bearing false origin statements would be considered as violating the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act. In addition, any misleading representations as to the authenticity of such products would fall under the purview of the misleading advertising provisions of the Combines Investigation Act.

Order Paper Questions

MINISTRY OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS—EMPLOYEES' SALARIES

Question No. 2,429—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

In the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs estimates, how many of the listed (a) 301 departmental employees (b) 3,322 Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation employees (c) 994 National Capital Commission employees earn between (i) $15,000 and $20,000 (ii) $20,000 and $25,000 (iii) $25,000 and $30,000 (iv) $30,000 and $35,000 (v) $35,000 and $40,000 (vi) $40,000 and $45,000 (vii) $45,000 and $50,000 (viii) $50,000 and more?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the National Capital Commission as follows: (a) The "301" in the Urban Affairs estimates represents man-years, not positions, and therefore cannot be broken down into salary ranges. As of March 31, 1975, there were 305 employees on strength in the ministry. A breakdown by salary range is as follows: (i), 41; (ii), 23; (iii), 23; (iv), 21; (v), 4; (vi), 1; (vii), 0; (viii), 0; (b) For positions filled by appointment by the Governor in Council, the following was their salary distribution at December 31, 1974: (i), $15,000-$20,000, None; (ii), $20,000-$25,000, None; (iii), $25,000-$30,000, None; (iv), $30,000-$35,000, None; (v), $35,000-$40,000, 3; (vi), $40,000-$45,000, None; (vii), $45,000-$50,000, 1; (viii), $50,000 and more. It is not the policy of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to disclose salaries in detail greater than that given above, since these are matters of internal administration and the responsibility of the president and the board of directors. (c) (i), 62; (ii), 33; (iii), 19; (iv), 9; (v), 1; (vi), 1; (vii), None; (viii), None.

EXPORT OF ARMS TO GREECE

Question No. 2,436—Mr. Francis:

1. Were licences for the export of arms or any sort of war material to Greece granted since July 20, 1974 and, if so (a) to whom (b) for what amounts (c) on what dates?

2. Were any of the contracts negotiated through the Canadian Commercial Corporation?

3. Was the supply of materials to go directly to Greece and, if not, to whom were such arms assigned?

4. Were conditions attached to the licences as to what theatre the materials could be used in and, in particular, were there restrictions made as to the use of such materials on the Island of Cyprus?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Four export permits have been issued for the export of non-offensive military equipment to Greece since July 20, 1974. (a) Since every application for an export permit under the authority of the Export and Import Permits Act is treated on a commercially confidential basis, it is not the practice to reveal to whom such permits were issued. (b) The four permits issued were for a total value of $20,076.00. (c) One export permit was issued in November, 1974, two in January, 1975 and the fourth one in April, 1975.

2. In one case, yes.

3. These shipments were to go directly to Greece. However, out of four permits issued, two were used for the full amount authorized, one was partially used and the fourth one has not yet been used. The total value of non-offensive military equipment shipped to Greece since July 20, 1974 amounts to $5,253.00.

4. No.

MR. ROOSEVELT DOUGLAS

Question No. 2,521—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. What were the criminal charges against Mr. Roosevelt Douglas, a landed immigrant from Dominica?

2. Was he convicted and, if so (a) on what date (b) what were the charges (c) what was the sentence?

3. What is his present status in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1 and 2. Mr. Roosevelt Douglas was convicted under section 372 of the Criminal Code, for which he was sentenced on April 30, 1971, to an aggregate sentence of 913 days. He was released on bail on May 14, 1971, and resumed his servitude on June 21, 1973. Mr. Douglas is a landed immigrant, on parole until the date of expiration of his committal warrant, i.e., December 13, 1975. A deportation order was issued against Mr. Douglas and the Immigration Appeal Board has upheld that order.

3. The status of Mr. Roosevelt Douglas in Canada is that he is a person under an order of deportation who is to be removed from Canada as soon as practicable in accordance with the direction of the Immigration Appeal Board. Because he is on parole from prison he remains within the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General and cannot be removed from Canada until his parole expires in December, 1975.

AIR CANADA—PASSENGER LOAD FACTOR

Question No. 2,765—Mr. Mazankowski:

What was the passenger load factor on the (a) Boeing 747 (b) Lockheed L-1011 (c) Douglas DC 8 (d) Douglas DC 9 (e) Boeing 727 operated by Air Canada on regularly scheduled services in the years 1974, 1973, 1972, 1971 and 1970?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: Air Canada does not maintain records of passenger load factors by individual aircraft type. To provide this information would require an inordinate amount of clerical time with resulting costs.

ECONAIR

Question No. 2,766—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. For what reason was Econair formed?

2. How large is its staff?

3. (a) Who are the Directors of Econair and are they also employees of Air Canada (b) do they receive a salary from Econair in addition to their Air Canada salaries?

4. What has been the size of the profits or losses of Econair since its inception?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. To operate travel services on behalf of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada. The initial objective was to participate in the business of selling advanced booking charters.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

2. Venturex Ltd., as Econair is now known, has a total of 18 employees.

3. (a) R. T. Vaughan, M. H. Cochrane, J. R. Drummond, R. H. Lindsay, J. H. Richer. All except Richer of CNR are employees of Air Canada. Also, Mr. Lindsay, was seconded from Air Canada and is a full time employee of Venturex. (b) No. They receive salaries only from their respective employers.

4. For year end 1973, a loss of $521,710.

MONTMAGNY PIER BASIN—DREDGING

Question No. 2,778—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Has the Montmagny pier basin channel ever been dredged and, if so, (a) in what year (b) at what cost?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Yes (a) 1959, 1965; (b) $600 in 1959; $75 in 1965.

REMOVAL OF JUNK AUTOMOBILES

Question No. 2,783—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is it the intention of the government to bring in legislation or take any initiative in regard to the removal of junk automobiles which pollute our environment?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): The disposal of automobiles is a provincial responsibility. Nearly all provinces have introduced measures for assisting in the collection of derelict vehicles. Canada has at the present time, either proposed or operating, some 13 car shredding operations which are capable of handling the economically accessible obsolete vehicles and redirecting the recovered metal back into the industrial stream. The solid waste management branch of the Environmental Conservation Directorate of the department is presently assessing, on a national basis, the effectiveness of the present facilities and potential areas for additional conservation.

CONTRACT—MR. R. K. ROSS

Question No. 2,819—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the purpose of the Department of Supply and Services contract number SZ05 KL 108-5-0031 (OSZ5-0111) for "Preliminary analyses of songbird data from Nova Scotia and design of an efficient statistically valid method based on the results of the analyses for further surveys."?

2. On what date and how was this project advertised prior to the awarding of the contract to Mr. R. K. Ross?

3. What other bids were submitted and by whom?

4. On what date is the final work to be submitted and to whom?

5. What are Mr. Ross's qualifications for the work he will be performing?

6. What other work has he done for the government and what was the cost to the taxpayer, if any?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. Contract SZ05 KL 108-5-0031 (OSZ5-0111) D.S.S. was issued on behalf of the Canadian Wildlife Service, Department of the Environment. The contract study was to assist in the improvement of design and analysis of the National Cooperative Breeding Bird Survey which has been carried out in Canada by unpaid volunteers since 1967. Results of those surveys have been published annually in Canadian Wildlife Service progress notes 15, 21, 26, 32, 38, and 45. These surveys are a useful contribution to monitoring environmental quality across the country.

2. The project was not advertised because a man of the required background and experience to undertake the work was available.

3. Not applicable.

4. The final report was received June 11, 1975 by both the scientific procurement officer D.S.S. and the scientific authority—Canadian Wildlife Service.

5. Bachelor of Science in Biology, Queen's University; Master of Science, Dalhousie University, specializing in avian ecology, plus required background in statistics.

6. Since June 1973—$19,100 in contracts and term employment to undertake various studies including design of an efficient aerial survey method for estimating numbers of geese; a study of invertebrates utilized by shorebirds in the Minas Basin; a survey of shorebird migration patterns in the Maritime provinces; analysis of beaver population data; and collection of field data on bird populations in Nova Scotia. The contract referred to in parts 1 to 4 was to analyse the data gathered in the summer of 1974.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER PORTS—ICEBREAKING COSTS

Question No. 2,847—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,449, can the $8,600,000 best Department of Transport estimate of the cost of icebreaking services for the ports of the St. Lawrence River be broken into annual costs and, if so, what are they for the period given?

2. Does such estimate include capital costs of icebreaker acquisition and, if not, for what reason?

3. (a) What is the government's total capital expenditure to date since 1965 for icebreakers (b) how much of this, if any, can be attributed to the provision of services outside the St. Lawrence River?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The breakdown on an annual basis of the cost of icebreaking services for the ports of the St. Lawrence River is as follows: 69-70, $1,021,550; 70-71, $1,169,750; 71-72, $1,314,900; 72-73, $1,415,050; 73-74, $1,734,950; 74-75, $1,948,750; Total: $8,604,950.

2. This estimate does not include the capital cost of icebreakers used in performing the icebreaking function because in government accounting, capital costs are written off in the year in which funds are appropriated.

3. (a) The capital cost of icebreakers commissioned since 1965 is $48,844,000, (4 ships). (b) These vessels are used in the St. Lawrence River, Great Lakes, Gulf of St. Lawrence, around Newfoundland and in the Arctic and it would be difficult to pro-rate capital costs on such a diverse spread.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA JUDGES' SECRETARIES

Question No. 2,851—Mr. Forrestall:

1. For each year since 1969, what classification of secretary was provided to a Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada?

2. What was the pay range for such classifications?

3. Since 1969, what was (a) the increase in pay one year over the other, in percentage (b) the total increase in pay for such secretaries?

4. What was the total increase in pay of Judges of the Supreme Court of Canada since 1969?

5. Is the government aware of the salaries paid to secretaries to Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and (a) if so, what is the present rate of pay (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1. ST-SEC 5 (formerly ST-8).

2.	Actual Period Involved	Pay Range
1969	October 1/68—October 1/69	$ 7,807—$ 8,579
1970	October 1/69—October 1/70	8,236— 9,051
1971	October 1/70—September 27/71	8,771— 9,639
1972	September 27/71—September 25/72	9,297— 10,217
1973	September 25/72—September 24/73	9,762— 10,728
1974	September 24/73—April 1/74	10,543 – 11,586
	April 1/74—December 2/74	11,043 – 12,086
1975	December 2/74 to date	11,871 – 12,992

3. Based on maximum of the range: (a)

Year	per cent Increase
1970	5.5
1971	6.5
1972	6.0
1973	5.0
1974	12.6
1975	7.5

(b) From October 1, 1969 to date—$4,413.

4. $26,000.

5. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Salaries of secretaries to the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, in common with those of all other secretaries in the Federal Public Service of Canada, are set in accordance with established government policy, which takes into account pay relativities outside the Public Service but within Canada only.

NATIVE HOUSING

Question No. 2,939—Mr. Brisco:

1. How many houses for Natives were built at Pine Point, NWT, in 1974?

2. How many houses (a) have been built (b) are being built (c) will be built in 1975?

3. In each case, what is the relevant cost per house?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. None.

2. (a) 20 houses were built in 1970. (b) None. (c) None.

3. The houses constructed in 1970 cost $26,000 each.

LANGUAGE OF CERTIFICATES OF CITIZENSHIP

Question No. 2,941—Mr. Herbert:

1. With reference to the answer to Question Nos. 907, 1,571, 2,326 and 2,493, does the Department of the Secretary of State record on its monthly listings of new citizens the language in which the applicant requested the certificate to be prepared?

2. Since January 1975, have the lists of new citizens with addresses in the Constituency of Vaudreuil indicated that those requesting certificates in English outnumbered those requesting certificates in French by more than six to one?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RODRIGUEZ—EXTENDED WARRANTIES ON CERTAIN AUTOMOBILES

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given the proper notice. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) a straightforward and uncomplicated question. Since the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had been aware of the existence of extended warranties on certain makes of automobiles and specific quality defects, and since the department had refused to inform the public of such hidden warranties, I asked the minister the following:

—can the minister inform the House why his department did not relay the information about these extended warranties to the public? Can he also tell us why Box 99 refused to inform consumers who specifically inquired about such warranties?

The minister proceeded to evade and obfuscate the issue by replying that I was mistaken in my statements, in that no letters were exchanged between his department and the car manufacturing companies on the matter. At no time in my question did I imply or otherwise state that correspondence between the car companies and his department were relative to my question.

The minister went on to say that officials of his department were trying to obtain extremely important information in favour of the consumer and that the moment the information was obtained he would be pleased to make it public. I countered that the information had already been provided to his department by the Automobile Protection Association. The minister refused again to answer my question because, according to him, it was, and I quote, "based on false premises".

My point of privilege arises out of the fact that proof exists that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Box 99 were aware of existing hidden warranties. In fact, when the Automobile Protection Association—which, by the way, in a consumer protection group which operates with some assistance from the federal government—became aware of the existence of hidden warranties, Mr. Phil Edmonston of that association sent the material to Box 99 with a request that Box 99 provide the information to consumers asking for it. He released the information at the same time to the news media. This was back in mid-April; I think it was around April 15.

He then began to receive letters from consumers informing him that Box 99 was refusing to provide the necessary information on these warranties in order that the consumers might take action themselves in the small claims courts. At the same time, Mr. Edmonston was in constant contact with a Miss Mahoney and a Mr. Bourque, who staff the regional office of the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Montreal. On May 12, Mr. Edmonston drafted a letter to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs outlining the entire situation. Mr. Edmonston read that letter on the telephone to Miss Mahoney, who asked him not to send the letter but, rather, to give the department a few weeks in order not to endanger the goodwill basis under which these warranties were being extended, and also because there was some question of the legal position of the government with respect to releasing documents considered confidential by the automobile companies involved. Mr. Edmonston agreed to hold the letter.

After receiving no response from the department, Mr. Edmonston forwarded his letter to the minister. Mr. Edmonston later telephoned Mr. Lalancette, the minister's press attaché, who indicated that the letter had been received about mid-June. Indeed, Mr. Edmonston received and holds a letter signed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs dated June 16 and received June 18 by the APA wherein the minister states that he received the APA letter on hidden warranties, that he was presently studying the problem with his department personnel and that he would communicate with Mr. Edmonston in the future. Furthermore, Mr. Edmonston telephoned the minister's executive assistant, Mr. Murray McBride, on July 22, 1975.

Mr. Broadbent: That explains it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. McBride indicated he would return the call, but he has not yet done so. In my resumé I have not mentioned the various news stories which have appeared on this matter. The minister said yesterday:

—the hon. member's question is based on false premises. That is why I have a negative reply a while ago.

This is either indicative of his ignorance of what is occurring in his department on this matter, or he is deliberately or inadvertently covering up the situation and misleading the House and the Canadian public. If Your Honour finds that I have a prima facie question of privilege, I would be prepared to move that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think what I said yesterday is still valid. In his first question yesterday, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) referred to information the department already knew in April 1975 and to the fact that the department refused to inform the public. Those are two assertions I find wrong, and that is why, in my answer, I told the hon. member that his questions were based on false premises.

Concerning the substance of the question, my department is certainly following up on that matter intensively, and it is absolutely not in the consumers' interest that I make a statement at this stage. That would rather be likely to prejudice their ultimate interests and, finally, I find it inappropriate and unacceptable for Mr. Edmonston instead of coming directly to me to seek information, to go through a member of the opposition to try build up a tempest in a teacup.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is evident that the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the minister disagree on facts or interpretation. This would seem to be a matter of debate rather than a question of privilege. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—REQUEST FOR DEBATE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), I ask leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the fact that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, an agency owned by the Government of Canada, has been supervising for more than a year the building of a nuclear reactor in Argentina even though the government has not yet finally negotiated safeguards intended to ensure that Argentina will not use the plutonium produced by the nuclear reactor for a nuclear explosion. There is an urgent need for this matter to be discussed in the House of Commons before parliament recesses and before any nuclear safeguard treaties are consummated.

Mr. Speaker: This is the third time this week that the same urgent matter has been proposed pursuant to Standing Order 26. I indicated yesterday that the door was open for further questions on the matter if events transpired which changed the nature of the matter for discussion, or proposed discussion, so that critical questions were involved. Nothing has changed the general nature of this matter since yesterday.

The suggestion of the hon. member which, it seems to me, is self-defeating in respect of this notice of motion, is that the project has been under supervision by the federal government for over a year. If it has been under supervision by the government for that length of time, certainly on the face of it it is a matter which fails to have such critical proportions as to require the immediate attention of the House or the setting aside of our normal hours for debate.

Finally, I must also note that the hon. member suggested that a factor involved is the impending adjournment or recess of the House, if that is in fact a reality, and therefore this is a matter which places before the House some problems of critical proportions. Surely the hon. member realizes that if I were to apply that standard to every matter of national importance put forward under that condition as a subject for debate under Standing Order 26, it would be a rather anomalous and difficult situation for the House to deal with. For those reasons, I feel that special time ought not to be set aside for this subject matter.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, July 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is very important, as we move on in this debate, to summarize exactly the position of the opposition on this excise bill.

An hon. Member: Be brief.

Mr. Rodriguez: This has nothing to do with being brief. Mr. Speaker, we have said this excise tax is a regressive tax. We have said this time and time again, and I do not mind repeating it because having been involved in education for some time I know how necessary it is to repeat something time and time again to children. It all depends on the level of the sensitivity they possess in listening, in participating and in decision-making.

Why have we said that this tax is a regressive tax? We have said it is a regressive tax because it hits hardest a particular segment of the population. It hits hardest the segment of the population for which this government does not provide an opportunity to handle the regressive nature of this tax. For example, it hits very hard those Canadians who work. They do not all work in urban centres; many work in rural areas. Many members of the House are aware of this type of constituent. These people are hit hardest because they must use their vehicles to get to work. It seems to me there is no provision in this bill for these individuals to claim a rebate of the money they spend on this excise tax.

The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) said the other day that one of the government's reasons for bringing in this excise tax was that when they were considering how best to compensate persons who live on the east coast of Canada, in terms of the price of petroleum, they considered that if they placed a tax on all citizens of Canada it would be discriminatory to those who live in urban centres and do not own a car; the people who fall into that category are mostly poor Canadians and they would be subsidizing those who own and drive automobiles. Surely that is not a very good argument for the purpose of this bill, because the government, through the income tax system, has a way to compensate poorer Canadians who do not own cars and who may have to subsidize other Canadians. Surely a system could be designed, through an income tax measure, to ensure that such Canadians would not, in effect, subsidize other Canadians who own cars.

For whom, in fact, does the government provide a rebate in respect of this tax? It provides it to doctors and lawyers when in the pursuit of their work. I suggest that the miners in my area are just as important to the nation as are doctors and lawyers. I have often heard it said that if we had fewer lawyers we would be further ahead. I hear a comment from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Cullen) who is a lawyer. When I look around and see all the lawyers here, it seems to me there is a fraternity involved in preparing the laws of this country and therefore there might be a conflict of interest.

People in this country who live and work in areas such as mine, who must heat their homes for longer periods in the year, who must drive long distances to work, will be seriously hurt by this tax. I say it is an iniquitous tax. It is very unfair. That is the reason this party is fighting so vigorously against this juggernaut of a government that is trying to push through this measure. It seems to me that the income tax system ought to be used by a government to create equality of income in the society. The income tax system is a means by which we can try to remove some of the disparities that exist among Canadians. This kind of tax is regressive because in effect it does not do that; it makes the gap wider between those who have money, those who earn high salaries, and those who because of lack of ability or lack of opportunity earn less. It seems to me that in effect that is a good argument with which to condemn this bill as being iniquitous.

● (1600)

There is one other point I want to make. We have a country whose development was either deliberately planned around the automobile or it was allowed to develop in that way. This country is very large and we have developed, as a society, around the automobile. We are a very mobile society and we have let the automobile industry make us more and more dependent on the automobile as a mode of transportation. The people are hooked, they are wedded to that means of transportation. To realize this one only has to look at the various social outlets in our society. We have the drive-in theatre, the drive-in restaurant, the drive-in bank and even the drive-in church. We notice the developments on the outskirts of cities where large shopping plazas are built, and in those shopping plazas one finds miles and miles of parking space provided for the benefit of those who use their cars to get out of the city to do their shopping. It seems to me that I have never seen a shopping plaza which would provide the opportunity for a public transit system, for buses to come right to the doorstep of the plaza. These plazas are self-contained and surrounded by huge parking lots, all in the process of encouraging the use of automobiles by the Canadian public.

Once having wedded the Canadian people to the automobile, the government moves in with taxes such as this one to suddenly try to persuade Canadians that they should not use automobiles for travel but, rather, should use the public transit system. We have pointed out time and time again that it seems the horse is being put before the cart. The government does not provide many of our small and medium-sized cities with funds with which to build fast, efficient and economic transit systems. I have pointed out that, in effect, by not doing so the government is deliberately creating a problem for many working Canadians without giving them the opportunity to solve the problem in a way in which the government finds acceptable, namely, public transit which is fast, efficient and economical. I believe the government should be condemned for that.

I sat around last summer listening to all the great speeches made during the election campaign when the government promised funds for municipal governments to provide public transit systems. The government has put on this excise tax without having first provided communities with the opportunity of establishing a transit system. This is the case in Sudbury and the surrounding areas.

It seems to me that this bill stinks, and I say that for very good reason. Indeed, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has said transportation is in a mess. When we start talking about public transit systems, it is rather interesting to note that we have embarked upon this kind of regressive taxation. For example, at present there is no passenger car on order by either the CNR or the CPR. The cars run by these two companies are decrepit and inadequate for a passenger service, yet not one passenger car is on order with any manufacturing company in North America.

It seems to me that the CNR is the only state-owned and operated railroad company in the world that has no railway cars ordered for the coming year. As I understand it, it will shortly be drawing up its winter schedule and more than likely will be cutting back its passenger service. Indeed, the passenger service between Sudbury and Toronto, for example, will be cut down to three days a week from seven days a week.

This kind of measure is regressive and cuts down whatever little public transit service we have at the moment. As a matter of fact, the railway companies submitted a report last December but they have received no acknowledgement from the Department of Transport. In that report the companies outlined the financial straits in which they find themselves with regard to their passenger services. The CNR says to the public—they have said it to people who have telephoned me about it—that when the public complains about lack of service, they should phone their MPs or write to the Department of Transport. But the Department of Transport keeps telling the railways to maintain the status quo. The railway companies cannot even do that.

The government says that this tax is a method of energy conservation. It does not even come close to that. I think it is absolutely phony for anyone in the government to say that this kind of excise tax is a conservation method. We have only to look at the actions of the government in the last few months: recently we noted that the government was prepared to go ahead with the Pickering airport. Why are we pushing people toward using airplanes when we sadly need rail transportation to move people between cities and within cities?

My own city of Sudbury is in the centre of a number of communities with populations of 5,000, 16,000, 10,000 and 3,000. The major railway companies have their rail lines running through the small towns and into the city. Almost everybody in Falconbridge walks; they are not using those rail lines. No funds are being made available for setting up a transit system allowing people from the outlying communities to travel to the city. This government says it is prepared now to spend $180 million on parking facilities for terminal 2 in Toronto. Is that the new emphasis? Will that conserve energy? As a matter of fact, it has been proved that airlines operating within a distance of 500 miles cannot make money on those routes, that the distance is too short in terms of the fuel required for the plane to take off and land.

We have the example of STOL between Ottawa and Montreal. How does that service conserve energy? The CNR introduced the Turbo last January to run between Montreal and Ottawa. What have the STOL people been doing? They have asked CN not to advertise their service between Ottawa and Montreal. What has the government done? It has forced all its bureaucrats, its aparatchiks, to travel from Ottawa to Montreal on STOL aircraft. I do not see how that could be part of the total strategy about which the government was talking last July when they were campaigning about providing an efficient interurban transportation system at reasonable cost. The minister said in his latest report on transportation that they would prefer to give everybody free bus tickets if they would fly; they could ride the buses free. Of course, he would like that.

Who pays for the roads, the expressways and the bus terminals? Certainly the federal government does not have to spend its funds on that kind of transportation. As a matter of fact, railway companies receive no indirect subsidies for inspection and maintenance of the rails, no indirect subsidies for building and maintaining terminals. This government does not want people riding the rails; they want them on airplanes, which is one of the most inefficient ways of moving people over short distances.

I do not know what the government has in mind when it talks about transportation, other than the iniquitous kind of excise tax proposed in this bill. Governments in Europe and the United States are not putting money into the development of air travel. That is a thing of the past. It is far too costly and certainly does not conserve energy. They are putting money into rail transportation and are moving away from airlines. We are pushing people on to airlines. We know that Air Canada lost $19 million last year on its Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal service. It has been proven that to transport people by air for less than 500 miles is uneconomical, and any government which follows that pattern is following madness.

The government says it is interested in the conservation of energy. This excise tax bill will not achieve conservation. There is no strategy, no opportunity for medium-sized communities to obtain funds with which to build rapid transit systems. The Pickering airport proposal is absolute madness and will only encourage greater density of population in an already rapidly expanding area. To put it in an area of fertile farmland is also madness. If the government is talking about conservation, then their decisions should follow some sort of conservation pattern. It seems to me there is a move afoot to force railway companies to raise their fares just so the airlines can increase theirs. I expect that the airlines will shortly announce an increase.

This excise tax bill is also iniquitous because it creates hardships for working Canadians in Nickel Belt and areas like it. Right across the country we have strikes and contracts presently being negotiated through the collective bargaining process. This government uses the working class people of this country for their own purposes. They run around seeking consensus from employers and employees. Does this ten cents per gallon excise tax reassure the working class that they ought to reconsider their demands? The government has promoted the idea, which has been carried by the press, that the Canadian Union of Postal Workers' request for a 71 per cent increase is exorbitant. But 71 per cent of what, Mr. Speaker? We have to think what such percentages are based on.

In my constituency, the United Steelworkers of America have just signed a new contract. When they started negotiating six or eight months ago there was no thought of a ten-cent excise tax, so they negotiated in good faith for what they felt was an increase in the cost of living and something more for their productivity. They had no sooner signed the contract than the ten cents per gallon excise tax on gasoline was announced.

I cannot understand why the government does not realize the effects of this tax. Several members from my part of the country on that side and many from areas like mine are experiencing great difficulty with this excise tax. In northern Ontario we experience differentials in cost between other parts of Ontario on just about everything. Living so far north, we have to pay a great deal more for food, homes and buildings. This excise tax hits us in a very discriminatory fashion. We not only have to pay for the discrepancy in prices between our part of the province and others, but we have to put up with other actions by this government which can only be described as iniquitous.

We can think of the people in Elliot Lake, for instance, who risk their lives in the mines. I do not think any member of parliament would like that experience; there is nothing enjoyable about it. These people, who do so much for the productivity of the country, are the first to feel the brunt of this kind of tax. If this government were worth its salt, it would remove this iniquitous tax and go home for a holiday. We are quite prepared to stay here, however. The moose season in Nickel Belt opens on October 15.

An hon. Member: When is the bull season?

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Parent) is worried about going fishing in the Welland Canal, but he might as well forget about it; he is going to be here for a while. The moose season and December 25 will come along, but if this government had any courage at all surely its backbenchers would be putting pressure on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to withdraw this bill. He is holding up the holidays and creating hardship for many constituents.

My party was opposed to the measure when it was announced on the night of the budget, and we stand opposed to it now. As the representative of the people of Nickel Belt, it would not inconvenience me if this House continues to sit. The inconvenience caused by this ten cents excise tax is greater for my constituents than for me to stay here through the summer and give up two months of sunshine. I am prepared to stand in this House and continue with this bill until the government withdraws it.

If the backbenchers on the Liberal side would show some courage, we might get some action. They do not have to feel they are parting company with their minister; they would be acting in the best interests of their constituents, and it is important they remember that. People sometimes believe they can do these things between elections and the people will forget about them. I hope to be around when the next election is called, to remind the people that the Liberal Party instituted this excise tax. I repeat, I am prepared to stay here all summer, all fall and all winter until this government—

An hon. Member: The hon. member is holding up the bill.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, I know the hon. member wants to go away on holidays. He made a down payment on a trailer and wants to go on a trip. But I am prepared to stay here all fall and all winter. I want to keep the government's frontbenchers sitting in this House. The hon. lady opposite can forget her fishing trip. As I said, my constituents will be inconvenienced far more by this tax than I shall by staying here, if I must, through the heat of the summer. I tell you, I am prepared to stay here.

An hon. Member: Yes, and holiday in the winter.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member can speak on the bill. If the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) opposes the bill, let her stand up and tell her constituents she opposes this excise tax. My party will stay here and fight this excise tax bill right down to the wire. I hear hon. members commenting. I know that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is prepared to stay here. If she opposes this bill, why does she not rise and say so—put her remarks on the record? As I say, I am prepared to stay here all summer debating this bill or until such time as the government is prepared either to withdraw it or hoist it—put it off until 1999. That is the only fair way to deal with this kind of measure.

In closing, I urge hon. members to consider seriously putting pressure on the Minister of Finance to withdraw this bill.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the other night I said I wanted to say something more on this bill. As the House did not see fit to extend my time, I am pleased to take the opportunity today of adding to what I have said.

Mr. Boulanger: Don't say what you said the other day.

Mr. Benjamin: I have news for the hon. member. I hope he will listen as carefully as he listened the other evening; I hope my remarks will influence his views on this legislation. Surely the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) by now is totally convinced that this is the wrong way to raise the revenue which we agree he needs to meet the cost of the oil compensation fund. Surely speeches from all sides of the House have convinced him that he should use some other method to raise the $350 million for this year and the $525 million he will need next year and years thereafter. He should use some other way which is fairer to Canadians in all walks of life.

The other night I made four alternate proposals. I suggested that the minister could levy more income tax from individuals, more from corporations, combine greater individual with greater corporation taxes, or he could impose a surcharge on individual income tax, a surcharge on corporate taxes, or a combination of both taxes. My final alternative was one which nobody else mentioned, a modestly low interest rate on deferred taxes. As of March 31 last, there was owing on the books of this country over $7 billion in deferred taxes. If the minister were to access 7.5 per cent on those deferred taxes, he could collect more than the $525 million he needs. That is a lower rate of interest than you can obtain for a house mortgage, an automobile loan or a consumer loan. In that way he could raise the revenue which the House agrees he needs.

The government is to impose a ten-cent tax per gallon on gasoline and the oil companies will charge another five cents a gallon, or more, when they increase prices. After the gasoline has gone through the hands of the wholesalers, bulk retailers and others it will cost between 18 and 22 cents per gallon more. That price is unfair and will impose a burden on people who can least afford it. Further, those who can afford the tax will be entitled to rebates. I appeal to hon. members opposite, in the name of fairmindedness, not to allow the bill to pass. It is intrinsi-cally unfair because it provides rebates for those most able to pay the tax, but none for those least able to pay.

The minister wants to induce people not to use the car, and to use other modes of transportation. Our society is wedded to the automobile as its primary mode of transportation. Other countries which tried to discourage automobile travel with high gasoline prices did not succeed. Such policies are not effective. True, there may be a modest diversion away from the automobile in favour of the bus or train. But our intercity and urban transit systems are totally inadequate. To compound the felony, although the minister says he wants more people to use other modes of transportation, and thereby tries to justify this excise tax, the budget cut the funds available to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). That shows how absurd the budget is and how absurd this bill is.

If the minister really wants people to use modes of transportation other than the car, and really wants us to conserve energy, he should bring in a budget which provides for massive funding, through the Department of Transport, of intercity and urban transport facilities. There should be massive funding in the next five years, involving the Ministry of Transport and aid to provinces, cities and municipalities. But the budget did no such thing.

The Minister of Transport's policy proposal announcement referred specifically, I think, to the Windsor-Quebec City corridor. If the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Finance were serious, they would introduce a budget and subsequent legislation providing for hundreds of millions of dollars to be spent on light, rapid and comfortable—LRC—rail service linking the Detroit River, Quebec City and other heavily populated areas of the country. But the budget does not provide for this. How can the minister expect the people to respond voluntarily, or feel it is worth while using other modes of transportation, when those other modes charge fares which in most cases are unreasonably high?

Really, what has the minister done to persuade people not to use their automobiles, or to get rid of their second or third car and not use a car for so many pleasure trips or so many trips downtown? I thought there would have been proposals in the budget or in subsequent statements or legislation for not only massive aid for urban or interurban transportation, but a system of fares and rates as well as the integration of various modes of transportation, such as rail, subway and bus. I thought there would be a fare structure that would encourage people to use other modes of transportation.

In last year's election campaign and in statements prior to that, Liberal Party spokesmen pledged that if re-elected they would establish a passenger corporation. That has been quietly shelved and forgotten since July 8, 1974. There was nothing in the budget and we have not heard anything from the Minister of Transport about a national passenger corporation. During the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Transport and others said they would either take over or require Canadian National, Canadian Pacific and other passenger carrying operations to provide much better passenger service to the public of this country. That has been forgotten.

There was a pledge for massive aid for intercity and urban transit. We have not seen a nickel. The Minister of Finance says that if we increase the price of gasoline by another 20 cents a gallon, the Canadian people will be encouraged to use other modes of transportation. However, those other modes are not there in sufficient quantity or quality. I do not think this parliament should stand for the kinds of anomalies and absurdities arising out of the budget.

Speakers on both sides have pointed out how the Minister of Finance can raise the required revenue in a much fairer manner that would not hurt those who can least afford it. Surely that is an objective of members of all parties. It would not be the first time in the history of this or other parliaments that a minister of finance has accepted the views of members of all parties and has either changed or substituted legislation. We had an example of this today. Although it was a matter of privilege, as a result of the representations of members on both sides of this House last winter, the minister made a significant change in his tax proposals.

It would be no disgrace to the minister, his advisers or the government if they accepted the views expressed not only by members of parliament, but by the public at large. In fact, it would be to their credit; it would show they are big enough to change their minds and bring in a measure to raise the required money in a manner different from that proposed in Bill C-66.

The Canadian Automobile Association recognizes the need for energy conservation. It recognizes that more will have to be done about the quality and quantity of other modes of transportation. This should be readily accessible, with reasonable fares, for a much larger number of people in this country. In fact, this was pointed out in a submission which was mailed to all members. Coming from a source like that, it should be sufficient to convince the Minister of Finance and the government that the method proposed in Bill C-66 is not the one to follow to raise the revenue required for the oil compensation fund. I have been very saddened since yesterday to note that friends to my right have caved in again.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That statement is entirely incorrect. This party put up some 30 speakers who in short, sharp, concise speeches challenged the right of the government in connection with this tax, while the NDP was sitting on its collective seat. We are now waiting for committee of the whole stage where we can challenge individual clauses, as is our parliamentary right.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) was good enough to help me use up some more time. I will consider that as another contribution to try to persuade the government not to proceed with this legislation. He told us that some 30 Conservative members participated. What happened to the other 67? Why have there not been 97 speeches from the official opposition on this bill? Where are the others? Are they more interested in fishing trips and laying around the backyard than in the public of this country? We have managed to marshall 15 or 16 speeches out of 16 NDP members, and I can assure the House and the hon. member for Peace River that we will be able to marshall more. However, over 60 Tories have not yet said a word.

Mr. Baldwin: Our members do not have to be marshalled; they do it voluntarily.

Mr. Benjamin: It is bad enough when some Liberal members get up and object and then vote for a bill.

An hon. Member: Be quiet; I want to read my newspaper.

Mr. Benjamin: The official opposition objected, and now they have chickened out. They sit around the lobby wondering when we will get home for a holiday, when we will get out of here.

Mr. Mazankowski: What a hypocrite. You cannot say that with a straight face.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I must ask that he direct his remarks to the bill. The hon. member should follow the rule of relevancy and speak to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It may have only been a delusion, but I thought that my reference to the performance of the official opposition in the past 30 hours, and what it is likely to be in the next 30, might have encouraged them to take another look at their position and, if necessary, stay here for the rest of the summer in an effort to persuade this government to change its mind on the method of raising the $525 million. I may have been out of order in expressing those remarks, but I thought they were germane to the matter of an iniquitous gasoline tax. I will leave it at that and try not to get into any more arguments with friends to my right. They can explain to their constituents why they allowed this legislation to pass so readily.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We have fought it every bit as hard as you.

Mr. Benjamin: I will apologize to hon. members to my right if in committee of the whole they all get up and speak on every clause of this bill. If another 60 speak on third reading, I assure them we will make all the speeches we can.

Mr. Stanfield: You run your show and we will run ours.

● (1640)

Mr. Benjamin: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) says they will run their show and we can run ours. I wish they would run a show. I wish they would put on a show, a serious effort.

Mrs. Holt: You would be a lousy actor.

Mr. Broadbent: Back to the curtains, Simma.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Benjamin: This excise tax on gasoline applies to personal use only. What the minister forgets is that much of this personal use is from necessity. People have no other choice than to use their cars, whether it is an old age pensioner going to buy groceries, or a worker who has no alternative—

Mrs. Holt: Same old NDP line.

Mr. Benjamin: —but to use his car to drive to work. The minister counts this as personal use. This is unfair, because people in other segments of our society are entitled to rebates with respect to the use of their cars to drive to work. I do not know of any doctor or lawyer who takes a bus. They drive their cars and they are entitled to rebates. But the worker is not so entitled. Is this reasonable? Is it just?

This ten cents a gallon increase—it will eventually amount to 20 cents—will take away all the tax credit which taxpayers have been allowed over the past year or year and a half. It might take more. It will negate any future rebates to which they are entitled—$150 or $175, whatever it might be for 1976. Is this a proper manner in which to raise half a billion dollars, especially when there are nine or ten other ways in which it might be more fittingly done, ways which would be more readily accepted not only by this House but by the public generally? Surely the government will agree to scrap this legislation—

An hon. Member: Never!

Mr. Benjamin: —and devise a new way of raising the money. If they liked, they could call us back in a couple of weeks and we could pass the legislation in a few days. Or it could be the first item of business when the House returns. We could deal with it and pass it quickly. I, for one, would give a personal commitment not to delay it—not even to speak on it except perhaps to say a word or two of congratulation.

An hon. Member: You told us that when the pay raise came forward, too.

Mr. Benjamin: Why use this method when there are so many others available? What idiot convinced the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) that this was the best way to raise the money? Whoever accepted it must realize by now that he accepted bad advice and that the government is using a bad method. Surely ministers opposite can come back to the House with alternative legislation to accomplish the same end, a bill which would have the support of the House and of the people across the country.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, while waiting to speak in this debate, a debate we should not be dealing with at the present time, I could not help but listen for a few moments to the severe case of verbal diarrhoea with which the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) appears to have become involved. It would also appear that after you have run a substance through a manure spreader so many times, it does not have that much relevancy.

Mr. Benjamin: Just leave your policy out of it.

Mr. Towers: Nevertheless, I should inform the hon. member that any speech from the Tory Party is always worth three or four from the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: So when he takes that into consideration we are very far ahead of them in this debate. I have been quite interested in listening to the debate. For instance, the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) took an active part in it the other night. In referring to the hon. member for Skeena who came to the aid of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) as the sky was falling in on him and his empire was collapsing, we on this side were immediately aware of a romantic atmosphere created by that speech. It was noticeable that this romanticism gave an automatic lift to the Minister of Finance on to what is often referred to as cloud nine. While witnessing this I was reminded of a poem by Walter Scott:

O young Lochinvar is come out of the west
Through all the wide border his steed was the best
So faithful in love, so dauntless in war

To put it in other words:

From the west the member for Skeena did barge
Saying ten cents a gallon is an acceptable charge
She supported the minister, regardless of cost
The voters in Skeena now really are lost
Her romantic performance was all on her own

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is worthy of Mark Rose.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of the poem about Julius Caesar when Anthony was speaking and he said: "I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him". I would suggest that I have come here to do neither one, certainly not to praise him for bringing in this legislation, and I would hope not to bury him because I have a tremendous fear that he is probably the best Minister of Finance the government has to offer. If we lost him it is hard to say exactly whom we would get. The others would be worse.

When I listened to his speech on the budget I was reminded of a comic I had read. It is Blondie and Dagwood. Dagwood said, "Blondie, we've got to start making sacrifices to save money." Blondie said, "You're right. From now on I'll give up my helicopter flying lessons". Dagwood says, "You never took helicopter flying lessons." But Blondie says, "See, I am saving us money already". This is what the Minister of Finance is doing when he is cutting back a billion dollars from his budget. This is a billion dollars he did not really know where he was cutting it back from, but he was cutting it back. One of the ironical parts of it all is the fact that if the time does come when that minister is no longer the Minister of Finance, he will no doubt be able to write a comic strip, and if members opposite find themselves without a minister of finance they can always get a comic writer to write them a budget.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So what's new?

Mr. Towers: This legislation is far too serious to joke about. It is really a serious matter when you consider what it is going to cost the Canadian consumer to finance this tax. We on this side intend to propose an amendment at the proper time and place, and I hope the Minister of Finance, along with his parliamentary secretary, will give it due consideration.

There were 326,804,000 gallons of dyed gasoline sold in Canada in 1973. To be processed through the system, the consumers will have to pay the tax and then file for reimbursement if eligible. This means that a tremendous cost burden will be placed on the economy of this country. I asked a question in the House of Commons of the Minister of Finance having to do with whether the financial system could bear this extra load. As reported at page 7164 of Hansard for July 2, I asked the minister:

● (1650)

Has provision been made in the money supply for the extra cash flow requirements of dealers and consumers for the ten cents a gallon gasoline tax or will there be a resulting shortfall in the cash requirements of other sectors of our economy?

The Minister of Finance replied:

Mr. Speaker, it is hard to be precise and brief in the question period on that particular question.

Then I asked this supplementary question:

Can the minister tell this House what the inflationary factor would amount to as a result of the ten cents per gallon tax on gasoline, not only of the tax itself, but also its administration and the extra costing of cash flow requirements to the distributing and consuming public?

It seems to me a senseless exercise for the manufacturers to collect this tax from the bulk dealers and for the bulk dealers in turn to collect it from the consumers. Some $32,680,000 will be required per year to finance this tax in one way or another. If this cash flow turns over more quickly, say three months or so, I suggest it could be cut down, but it will certainly put a heavy strain on the economy of this country. This turnover of cash does not mean that the government will have extra money, in fact, it is going to cost the government money to handle collection of the tax and to rebate the same.

I hope that when the time comes to make an amendment, the Minister of Finance or his parliamentary secretary will give this matter serious consideration. The four western provinces and Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island have dyed gas, and if this question receives due consideration it will alleviate much of the problem of rebates in the rural parts of the country.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I found the point made by the Conservative member who has just resumed his seat a very good one, but I am amazed that he only spent about five minutes on it. If he is so concerned about the unfairness of this tax, he should have carried on for his allotted 40 minutes. But as my hon. friend from Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) said earlier, the Conservatives are really not serious about fighting this most unfair and discriminatory ten cents a gallon gasoline tax on behalf of the consumers of this country.

Members of parliament have received many letters and complaints from their constituents about this ten cents tax on gasoline, provision for which is made in the current budget bill now before the House. The reasons the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and his cohorts in the Liberal Party put forward to explain and to justify this tax are just incredible.

Yesterday I was interested to hear the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) during the question period whether, since it was costing some $200,000 a day to keep the House in operation, it would be advisable to show the Canadian people what was happening to their tax dollars, the implication quite clearly being that the hon. member would prefer some kind of closure or, to take her logic to its ultimate conclusion, some kind of dictatorship which would mean that no resistance of any sort would be offered by the opposition in this House.

We are elected by our constituents to stand in this chamber and voice their opinions and criticisms of the government, and that is what we intend to do. Certainly those of us in the New Democratic Party will continue to do this even if we have to sit here through the long, hot summer until we pound some sense into this government. I hear a plaintive voice from the backbenches of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Benjamin: Sounds more like a whine to me.

Mr. Symes: It is the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I wish she would rise in her place after I have spoken and give us a rational defence, if that is possible, of this unjust and unfair tax. I should like to hear some sound arguments from that side of the House, but I have not heard any today. The argument that the Minister of Finance uses, when you get right down to it, is ludicrous. He says there are two reasons for this bill. One is that the government is running short of money with which to make the oil compensation payments to the multinational oil companies who got us into this mess in the first place. Secondly, he said this tax will discourage the use of gasoline and hence bring about conservation.

May I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack); Criminal Code—Proposed increase in penalties for extortion—Government position; the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert); Public Works—Request for change in regulations to permit people in northern areas to rent premises owned by department; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen); Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Alleged reduction in expenditures for force—Minister's position.

[Mr. Symes.]

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILLS REMOVED FROM ORDER PAPER AND SUBJECT MATTERS THEREOF REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with unanimous consent I move:

That Bills C-213, C-222, C-232, C-279, C-287, C-290, C-292, C-304, C-307, C-336, C-362, C-389 and C-405 be withdrawn, their orders be discharged from the order paper and that the subject matter of these bills be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

● (1700)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We will agree to this proposal. I was hoping that the hon. member who moved it might tell us whether he has any inside information as to what will happen when we get to committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion. Is it agreed that such an order be made and that the subject matter of such bills be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West) moved that Bill S-28, respecting the Royal Canadian Legion, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I propose that the bill be read a second time, be referred to a committee of the whole and that we agree to expedite its passage. It is a very simple bill. The committee cannot meet and report back until some time late in the fall, and I thought it would expedite the passage of the bill and meet the wishes of the House if I moved the following:

That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom all the words after the word "referred" and substituting therefor the following words:

"to a committee of the whole House."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Lambert, Edmonton West) agreed to.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of introducing Bill S-28 respecting the Royal Canadian Legion. It was introduced in the other place by Senator Carter and has been studied by the standing committee of the Senate on health, welfare and science. Hon. members who are interested in the proceedings may wish to look at the minutes of that committee of July 17, a copy of which I have in my hand.

This year is the fiftieth anniversary of the Legion in Canada. Following World War I it came into existence to serve the needs of those veterans who felt that such a fraternal and benevolent organization was absolutely essential. It received a very substantial infusion of new members following World War II. However, at this stage the Legion is operating with an antiquated charter which is something like 50 years old. This bill updates a number of its provisions.

Today the Legion continues to expand its membership, but its members know that its base of those who actually served in the armed forces of Canada throughout the country is a diminishing base in numbers. The Legion has amended its provisions. It admits to membership the sons and daughters of those who served. It has to think of the future; it has to look at the changes which can reasonably be anticipated in the period ahead.

The purpose of this bill is to make changes which will have the effect of clarifying and updating the provisions governing the revocation of branch charters, the dissolution of Legion branches and the disposition of the property of branches. It is intended to bring about modern procedures of property management and review to make sure that both the old members and the new members are served, and that there are no circumstances in which contracts could be entered into which were not the most wise in the circumstances, or dispositions of property which may not be in the interests of the Legion.

I am confident that hon. members who have any questions on this matter will find that the examination of witnesses before the committee of the other place was exhaustive and that any questions in the minds of hon. members would be answered. I hope that by unanimous consent it will be possible to proceed today in committee of the whole, as was indicated by the motion moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and to third reading in anticipation that perhaps this House might be adjourning in the not too distant future.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

● (1710)

Mr. Francis moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as a member who has been interested in the affairs of the Legion for a considerable period of time, I am pleased and gratified that the House has taken what I consider to be a very unusual step. First, the bill was late and received consideration by the other place almost by leave. Then it received special consideration by this House, which is not now as dominated by veterans as previously was the case.

I should like to compliment the Legion on the effort it has made to deal with some of the problems that have developed in respect of ownership and management of property. As the members of the Legion have changed, the whole idea of the Legion has changed. Members will agree that veterans who served in World War I are now beyond the age where in the main they take an active part in the operations of the Legion. Veterans who served in World War II are now in their fifties.

An effort has been made to build up this very bona fide organization not only so that it might serve the veterans themselves but also to serve the communities throughout Canada in which Legion branches are situated. It has been recognized that there could develop a very serious situation unless the Legion could be operated as a service organization in which not only veterans participate but also the sons and daughters of veterans and interested citizens in the community.

I am sure the fact that a new structure has been arrived at has caused a great deal of soul-searching. However, it is my pleasure that the members of this House have made extraordinary concessions in order to allow this bill to pass and to allow the Legion in a new form to continue its function in various communities. I think the Legion deserves the support of all the Canadian people. The program outlined at the last Dominion convention is an extensive one which involves many changes. This bill relates only to some of the changes. Members of parliament are to be congratulated for their understanding of the problems that have developed and for the support they are now giving for the new direction the Royal Canadian Legion is following in Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At 5.20 p.m. the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, shortly before five o'clock I began to speak on Bill C-66, the iniquitous bill proposed by the Liberal government to impose a ten cents a gallon gasoline tax on consumers. We in the NDP oppose this legislation on the grounds that we find it unjust and discriminatory.

I should like to examine the arguments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) whereby he attempts to justify this piece of legislation, and to show that many of the arguments that he puts forward rest on a false premise and, for these reasons the bill should be rejected.

The government has found itself in the position of having to raise some $500 million over the next year to make up for a deficit in the compensation payments paid to the oil companies in eastern Canada in order to keep the price of oil in Canada below the international world price. At present the price of oil in this country is $6.50 a barrel. On August 15 it will rise to $8.50 a barrel. That is still below the international price, which ranges between $11 and $12 a barrel.

Because of the government's lack of a national energy policy, because the government has allowed multinational oil companies to move into Canada and develop this vital resource, we find that the companies' designed oil exploration and oil supply system will benefit them, not only in the short run but in the long run. These companies moved into western Canada once they found oil in the early 1950's, and then argued that because there was so much oil on hand they had to export it in order to raise enough revenue to continue exploring for more oil in the prairie region.

They could have exported this oil out of Alberta into eastern Canada if they had built a pipeline, but it was far easier and more to the advantage of these oil companies, which were subsidaries of American parent companies, to export the oil to the United States. Because we did not have a pipe line built from western to eastern Canada, when the day came that international oil prices rose we found that eastern Canada, which depended on oil from Venezuela and the Middle East, was going to be forced to pay the high world price.

In the minority parliament, the twenty-ninth parliament, we in this party argued that it was completely unfair that consumers in eastern Canada should be paying a higher price than consumers in western Canada. We said that what the government should do, because the United States was paying the world price for oil, was to impose an export tax on western Canadian oil being shipped to the United States. It was this export tax that gave the government enough surplus revenue to compensate the oil companies in eastern Canada and keep the price of oil across this nation below the world price. That worked quite well.

We were able to keep the price of oil in Canada at $6.50 a barrel for over a year and a half. But at the same time the government, at the urging of the NDP, began to undertake through the National Energy Board an independent analysis of the supply of oil on hand in this country, and the National Energy Board came out with a report last year which showed that we would be running short of oil by the early 1980's. Hence the government had to cut back on its oil exports to the United States, and as a result the money from the export tax declined. Therefore the government has to raise money to continue the compensation payments to eastern Canada. By this method it is hoped to keep the price across the nation as of August 15 at $8 a barrel. So we have a problem.

The government needs about $500 million in the current year to continue the compensation payments. So why then does the government choose the option of a ten cents a gallon gasoline tax? I think it is indicative of the predicament in which the Liberal government finds itself because it relies so heavily on the multinational oil companies to find new oil for this nation.

I have just pointed out that we will be running short by 1980. Because we do not have an industry that is controlled in Canada and, more important, a publicly owned industry owned by the people of Canada through their government, the Liberal government must rely on the oil industry, which is 90 per cent foreign controlled, to do the exploration to develop the oil resources in this country. As a result it has been boxed into a corner from which it does not dare tax the oil companies or amend the taxation laws that give so many concessions to these oil companies. Faced with the problem of raising revenue it can only turn to the individual consumer and make him pay for its misguided policies over the past decade.

The oil companies in fact are threatening to go on strike against the Canadian people. They are saying that if the government through its budgets does not give them further concessions—and the minister did eventually bow to their demands to give them 100 per cent oil exploration write-offs and other kinds of tax concessions—they would not continue to look for oil in this country.

If there is ever an example of corporate irresponsibility and an example to justify public ownership in resource industries, this is it, because if we bow to the demands of the oil companies in this country we will be continually at their mercy as seen by the kind of policy that they develop which divides the country in half, makes one half dependent on high price oil imports, and hence puts us in the position of seeing our price for oil in Canada rise to international levels. It is ridiculous when we consider the amount of oil reserves in this country. We should not be in the position of France, and some of the other European countries, of having to pay high international prices.

● (2010)

The Liberals have nowhere to go because they do not dare challenge their corporate friends in the oil industry, and because they are not serious about setting up a viable national petroleum company. Of course one is on the books. It had a modest capitalization of $500 million, but in the last budget the Minister of Finance reduced that to $100 million. That company is turning out to be a joke, a public relations gimmick to make the Canadian people think the government is doing something to buy back the oil industry, or even to find oil.

Faced with the option of telling the oil companies they have made so much profit from the Canadian consumer in the past that they are going to be asked to absorb some of the price increase, the government chooses instead to levy a ten cents per gallon excise tax.

Where is this half billion dollars going, Madam Speaker? It is going to the oil companies that got us into this predicament to begin with, and which have made incredible profits in the past few years because of the escalation in price.

I should like to cite two companies as examples. In 1973, Imperial Oil made a profit after taxes of $227 million; in 1974, it was $290 million. In 1973 Gulf Oil profit after taxes and expenditures was $100 million; in 1974 it was $161 million. These poor oil companies will receive this ten cents a gallon tax that the government is imposing. Is that justified in light of some of the practices of the oil companies based in Canada?

A court case in Nova Scotia revealed some very interesting things. The government of Nova Scotia took Imperial Oil to court over the price it was charging the Nova Scotia Power Corporation. Testimony showed that Imperial Oil, and most likely many of the other oil companies operating in eastern Canada, found loopholes in the government's conservation program and were able to get money through compensation payments that they should not have had in the first place.

These oil companies have ripped off the consumers in the past and, as evidenced by the Nova Scotia court case, have had questionable import arrangements. The minister himself said in the House that it was a technicality—they found a loophole and were able to get millions of dollars through compensation payments that they should not have had.

There was an interesting analysis of the situation in the May 30 issue of the Montreal Gazette. That newspaper summarized the case and showed that Imperial Oil got around a law designed by this inept government, by using a token Bermuda company to skim off $35 million in profits of crude oil for five years, and then transferred the profits to Canada tax free.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I am afraid he is straying from the subject, which is a bill to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Symes: Madam Speaker, I am just trying to follow the example set by the Minister of Finance in his address on the budget. The point I am trying to develop is that Canadian consumers are paying a ten cents a gallon excise tax to these major oil companies who, through questionable economic practices, have already bilked the Canadian government and the Canadian taxpayer of millions of dollars in revenue. As a result I say this kind of compensation payment is unwarranted and unjust.

I should like to give further evidence in support of my objection to the government paying these companies the revenue from the excise tax. The court case in Nova Scotia shows that Exxon of the United States, which is the parent company of Imperial Oil of Canada, exercises very tight control over Imperial Oil's supplies, and Imperial's executives in Canada have little to say in regard to what price will be paid for oil. In other words, decisions on the price of oil in eastern Canada are not being made by directors of the Canadian corporation, Imperial Oil; they are being made by the parent company directors of Exxon in the United States. There is a pricing policy beyond the jurisdiction of the government. The government, because it has allowed the oil industry to be foreign owned, is helpless and goes along with policies made in a foreign country. What an example that is of loss of economic sovereignty.

The government is going to make consumers pay ten cents per gallon more for gasoline, and is going to turn that revenue over to those oil companies who carry out very questionable practices in this country.

Many Liberal backbenchers have been silent through this debate. They have received complaints from their constituents but have been afraid to stand up on their behalf. They have accepted the argument of the Minister of Finance that somehow this ten cents per gallon tax is just and that the poor oil companies deserve the revenue.

I have heard one or two Liberal members speak, and I think that is a record. They are usually quiet when the minister presents this type of legislation. One of their arguments to try to justify the tax was that if it were not done by direct taxation then it would have to be done through income tax; that it would be unfair to anyone who does not use a car to pay income tax to raise revenue, and that people at the lower end of the economic scale would be paying income tax to compensate eastern Canadian consumers. I reject that argument, Madam Speaker. If there is anything that is discriminatory it is this kind of sales tax that applies across the board, no matter whether you make $5,000, $10,000, or $50,000 per year. It is discriminatory to hit the low income earner with the same tax as the high income earner.

If there is any principle that I thought was accepted by Canadian taxpayers and the Canadian government it is that income tax is the fairest way to raise revenue. It is based on ability to pay, so those in the high income brackets can afford higher taxes and those in the lower brackets pay less.

This kind of proposed tax hits the old age pensioner just the same as someone in a high income bracket. It hits the disabled person, it hits the worker who has to drive to work—not the same as a doctor at the upper income level or a salesman or anyone else who has a car. The Liberals always have to look after their friends in the upper income brackets and so have provided exemptions for them.

I point out that doctors, salesmen, and others who use their cars for business will not pay the ten cents a gallon tax. It will be refunded to them. Workers will pay. Steelworkers of my constituency, and others in rural Canada who must drive 10 or 20 miles to work, must pay the tax; doctors, salesmen, and others will not. That is why I say this tax is so unfair. Both low income and high income people must pay the same rate of tax. If any Liberal backbencher can explain why that system of taxing is fair, I should like to hear him—or her. I submit that this kind of tax discriminates against low income people, and against those in certain job categories. That is why it is unfair.

If people could take public transport, if they were not forced to drive a car, it would be different. In the 1974 election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised that hundreds of millions of dollars would be spent on improving the country's public transport. What happened to that promise? It is as hollow as other Liberal promises. Most people cannot choose to take the subway, bus, or fast train from the suburbs or rural communities to their work place. They must drive their automobiles. Why should they not be given the right to the rebate?

But the government will not exempt the mass of consumers, those who drive to work or use their cars for recreation. The government will not exempt them, but will exempt its friends. That is unfair. The government has put this ten cents a gallon tax on the backs of the working people of the country.

The government could use other methods for raising $500 million. It need not increase personal taxes. It could make the corporations shoulder a fairer share of the tax burden. Actually this would not entail increasing corporate taxes. Theoretically, corporations pay a rate of about 46 per cent, but their many deductions reduce corporate taxes to 20 per cent in some cases. Some oil companies pay as little as 11 per cent. However, the government need not interfere with the corporate tax system. It could raise the money by charging interest on money which has been made available over the years to corporations. What am I talking about, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wish I knew.

Mr. Symes: Corporations owe $7 billion in deferred taxes, which is nothing but an interest free loan. If the government charged them 10 per cent, it could raise $700 million a year in extra revenue. But the government has not charged the corporations interest. Madam Speaker, my constituents cannot borrow money from the bank at much less than 10 per cent or 11 per cent. But the government gives the corporations an interest free gift in the form of deferred taxes. It need not increase corporate taxes. Let it charge interest on deferred taxes. Surely even the backward looking Liberals will accept the fairness of this proposition.

If the government lends the corporations $7 billion it ought to charge them at least 10 per cent interest and thereby raise money for the oil compensation plan. That way it would not need to charge the consumers of gasoline a ten cents a gallon tax. Perhaps that approach is too sane, too logical for the Liberals. When they do not want to do something, when they do not want to initiate a new health plan or pay a higher old age pension, they argue, "But we do not have the money and can only raise it by increasing your taxes." They never mean corporate taxes; they always mean taxes paid by individuals. The proposed excise tax is another example of that very policy which is so discriminatory.

Besides the ten cents a gallon tax the consumer must pay other taxes. The province of Ontario charges a tax of 19 cents per gallon. Even before the budget gasoline prices in Ontario averaged 65 cents per gallon, and prices in northern Ontario were substantially higher. Prices will rise, and fully 29 cents of the new price will go to paying federal and provincial gasoline taxes. Putting it another way, 60 per cent of the cost of every gallon of gasoline in Ontario will go to meeting federal and provincial excise and sales taxes. These taxes are discriminatory. Both high and low income people pay the same rate of tax under this system, whereas the graduated income tax does not work this way. Better still, why not charge the corporations interest on their $7 billion of deferred taxes?

This legislation will hit hard those who must drive their car to work, those who are disabled and depend on their cars, and the low income people—this includes the majority of Canadians—who depend on their cars for the family vacation. It will ruin the tourist industry in my part of northern Ontario. People will not drive their cars to our cities and recreational areas. They will not use hotel and motel accommodation in the north.

The other day the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) tried to explain to the House how the rebate system will work. I fail to see how we can avoid the sort of bureaucratic bungling which has characterized the Liberal administration. There are too many loopholes. How will the law be enforced? How will you tell if the salesman or doctor is using his car for work, for pleasure, or for a vacation? These people will claim that they drive a certain number of miles in the course of their work; how can you tell? My constituents complain about cars used for business being used for recreation. They know that the people using their cars this way are abusing the tax system. There is bound to be much cheating under the new rules. People will claim a rebate when they are not entitled to one.

To be fair, we ought to rescind the ten cents a gallon provision and raise the necessary revenue by using some of the other methods I suggested. If corporations paid interest on their deferred taxes, the problem would be solved right away.

Before concluding I cannot help noting that the bill rescinds the excise tax on wine imposed in the November budget. In other words the Minister of Finance favours consumers of wine over consumers of gasoline. I was interested the other day in hearing the Liberal member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Young) say how he and his colleagues from the Niagara Peninsula had lobbied for this tax on wine to be rescinded. It is hypocritical that those same Liberal members voted for the November 18 budget that put the excise tax on wine. It is typical of the two-faced attitude of Liberals and their contempt for consumers. They make promises to the sky at election time, but if they get back with a majority they are the same old arrogant bunch who want to fight inflation on the backs of the working poor. I wish Canadians could see the faults and weak arguments put up to justify legislation such as this. It just does not make sense.

● (2030)

I am also disappointed in the members of the Conservative party who, only a few days ago, said that they were going to fight this piece of legislation tooth and nail. They said they would stand up for the Canadian consumer and stay here to force the government to back down. Where are all their speakers? Suddenly there is silence from the Conservative party. They could have had 60 more speakers on this unfair piece of legislation. However, now they want to get home for their vacations at their cottages and swimming holes. I am disappointed that they are not going to stand up and fight this arrogant majority.

We cannot get Liberals to defend this horrendous legislation. Now the Conservatives have also given up. That indicates that if the Conservative party were sitting on the opposite side instead of the government there would not be much change. They would bring in the same kind of discriminatory legislation.

We are prepared to argue against this unfair piece of legislation. If we have to sit here for the next few days, or for another week or two, we are prepared to do it. We believe that when our constituents sent us to Ottawa they did so in order for us to defend their rights as consumers. That is what we intend to do by opposing this piece of legislation.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I was interested today to hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) explain to members of parliament, and through the story in the Gazette explain to people across this country that the only way that members of parliament have any input into changes is to do it loudly, in great, numbers, and on successive occasions.

In the discussion the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) indicated that he felt boats, snowmobiles and outboard motors should be taxed. After listening to 57 members of parliament and many other representations, the minister received a push from the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, who has a great interest in small boats because he represents a tourist area where there is also a manufacturer of boats. He used some extraordinary methods which many of us in the opposition have not taken advantage of, putting pressure on the government in the House of Commons and putting pressure on senior civil servants in private. In that way you are able to have some changes brought about. This was indicated as the only way to change the mind of the Minister of Finance.

As a member from northern Ontario, and like the two previous speakers from northern Ontario, I support a change being made to Bill C-66 with regard to the ten cent excise tax on gasoline. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was quite right in putting undue, and maybe excessive and even unethical pressure on certain segments of the government to have a tax that was highly detrimental to industry in this area removed. There are not very many industries in our northern constituencies. You have to husband each industry very carefully. If you lose one through an unfair disadvantage such as a tax, you may not get another.

Mr. Baldwin: How do you husband an industry?

Mr. Peters: This also applies to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). He does not have much industry in his constituency. There is not much industry in northern Canada.

The other two members from northern Ontario who spoke joined the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River in stressing the fact that we must impress on the minister that there must be special concessions for our people or they will be put out of business.

When the minister dropped the tax on wine he was again reacting to pressure that had been applied by some members on the government side. Some members on this side of the House were interested in this as well. One member is shaking his head. It is not quite as simple as saying that only some members were interested in this. Wine sales in Ontario and Quebec dropped off drastically. Because of this the government found that it cannot tax to the extent of having no return. Hopefully we can arrive at that stage with regard to gasoline.

The wine industry in Ontario is very important. The federal government has been very interested in helping its development. We have developed a hybrid grape stock which produces a very palatable wine. We no longer have to drink Cawtaba after which you will tackle anything or want to climb a pole. I think all hon. members are sympathetic to the reduction in that tax, again allowing good wine to be the basis for a satisfactory repast. It has been said much better by poets, but I want to say it is a requirement for a good meal.

● (2040)

For many people in my area it is a requirement that they have gasoline for their automobiles. The amount of driving could be reduced with something that has been kicked around in this debate, namely, public transportation. Maybe the price of gasoline should be two dollars a gallon. Maybe we should not be using gasoline at all. Maybe we should be using our diminishing reserves of petroleum for purposes other than motoring. But this fits into a different category from the ten cents increase which the minister tells us will be used as an equalization payment. That argument sounds good; he says the payment will help provide equalization as between east and west. But there is no equalization within the various areas.

Take the area in which I live. Gasoline is ten cents cheaper 100 miles south of me and ten cents cheaper 100 miles to the north.

Mr. Lawrence: Beer is the same price, though.

Mr. Peters: I hear one hon. member asking why.

Mr. Lawrence: No. I said beer was the same price.

Mr. Peters: The reason is that there has not been a price war in the middle. There has been a price war at both ends but none in the middle, so the oil companies are able to take full advantage of their position by maintaining a fairly high price.

I note that funds have been provided to Petro-Can, a corporation which conceivably could play an important role in the equalization of gasoline prices. This agency could buy an interest in the seven major oil companies or, better, it could buy one of them and set the price by competition in the distribution of gasoline. If the minister wanted to take this course he would have to provide a suitable amount of money to enable Petro-Can to go into business. But he did not. I understand the agency has been financed with a sum of $100 million and I do not think it would be possible to buy many retail distribution centres for that. A much larger amount would be required.

Some hon. members, particularly those who support the government, are not really interested in all this. These are days of majority government. When we have a majority Liberal government, the cabinet is always right. On the other hand, when there is a minority government, the cabinet has to look seriously at all these things and consider all the implications.

In a minority situation the Liberal Party caucus has a great deal of influence, but when the government has an over-all majority one does not find many backbenchers disagreeing. I was surprised when the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) got up the other day and made a speech. That speech made it almost a certainty that he will never become a parliamentary secretary—almost a certainty that he will never get any promotion. He has to weigh a consideration of that kind against whether or not he will be elected in his own riding on the strength of the representations he makes. I give him full marks for standing up and discussing a subject in which he is interested, one in which he has played a considerable role. I think he had an obligation to do so. Then there is the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. We shall probably find out more about that situation.

An hon. Member: Tomorrow.

Mr. Peters: I don't think we shall find out much tomorrow; I believe it will be some time before we get any more information.

I make the assertion that backbenchers in the government party are not really exercising the determination they say they are, that they are not really making any representations on behalf of their constituents on this important subject—the imposition of an excise tax on gasoline. They are doing it exactly as they always do under a majority government. Frankly I believe the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is an exception because he comes from Northern Ontario and has a specific interest. But the rest are sitting on their hands and going along with whatever the cabinet decides. It is a little like General Bullmoose and General Motors—whatever is good for General Motors is good for the country.

It seems to me the minister has a point in his favour if he can extend these concessions he says he intends to make to self-employed people, doctors, farmers, owners of commercial enterprises, fishermen and others, though we are talking here about a sizeable number of people in a diversity of occupations. If we, federally, can make this kind of exemption, why cannot we at least extend it to working people who use their automobiles to drive to their places of employment?

Mr. Béchard: Are you implying that farmers and fishermen don't work?

Mr. Peters: I am not saying that farmers or fishermen don't work. But I am saying that there has always been a hassle when it came to commercial fishermen and farmers getting provincial rebates on the gasoline they used. I do not think farmers, for example, have ever got a rebate from the federal government before. If the minister intends to set up a bureaucracy to deal with this sort of thing then at least he should be willing to extend its activities so as to cover the case of ordinary working people. Frankly, I do not know how this could be done easily. I do not know how he will deal with all these applications from private individuals—farmers, fishermen, self-employed. It has always been very difficult in the case of the province of Ontario, and the provinces are considerably closer to the people than is the federal government.

All of us in Ontario remember purple gas—the gas was coloured because it carried an exemption, and it was not supposed to be used in the wrong vehicle. But we are setting up a huge bureaucracy to cover this ten cents tax rebate, and while I think this is the wrong way of doing things I suppose we might as well go as far as to exempt those who need gasoline to go to work. It would not be hard to get verification, but this would not be possible with a large number of other categories.

What verification would a doctor be able to provide that he used a car for a certain number of miles and was entitled to exemption on a certain amount of gasoline? The same can be said of a salesman, lawyer, or any grocery store. Most of the small restaurants in Ottawa run a Cadillac or other large car with a little sign in the window advertising take-out orders. Although take-out orders are not supplied by using the Cadillac, the Cadillac is written off for income tax purposes.

It is bad enough that the government is cheated right there, but how is the minister going to verify that such a businessman does use an automobile legitimately and that he can claim a rebate? When it comes to the farmer, or fisherman, or worker who drives 75 or 100 miles to work, it will be fairly easy to verify the amount of gasoline used. Driving from one community to another in the course of one's job presents no difficulties of verification for the employer, since he would know the licence number and so on, and the mileage could be calculated. You could even go one step further and calculate so many miles to the gallon regardless of the kind of car driven. In that event there would be no cheating.

An hon. Member: You want to establish a bureaucracy.

Mr. Peters: Someone says I am establishing a bureaucracy. Let me tell the House I was very impressed last week by the bureaucracy that the government has established, because National Revenue sent me a bill for $1,100 for income tax owing. I sent them off a cheque for $1,100 and what did they do with it? They applied it against 1975 and sent me another bill indicating I still owed them the money. If we are having trouble of that sort I do not know what trouble we are going to have with John Smith's rebate when trying to decide how much he is entitled to under this legislation.

I am sure the minister would agree that it is not hard to say that a man driving 50 or 100 miles to work every day will get 20 miles to the gallon. Workers do not like to be cheated, and they do not like to cheat themselves, and if a worker's car only gets 15 miles to the gallon then he will quickly change it for one that gets 20.

Many members have intervened in this debate on behalf of the working class of the nation and have spoken about the exemptions or asked the minister to remove the tax, which would certainly by far be the least costly. I think the minister will agree with me that his half a billion dollars will not even exist once it has gone through the bureaucracy. I am reminded very much of the Ontario government which at one time imposed a 3 per cent sales tax, and then after it had been in operation for a short time found it cost three cents to collect the tax, and so raised it to five cents. Although they still had the three cents expense they did get two cents out of it. Then they wanted to get three cents and so they raised the tax to 7 per cent. Now they have removed it until after the next provincial election.

The minister talked of equalization between east and west. He agrees that the former Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), was right in establishing the Ottawa valley line.

Mr. Boulanger: You mean the Borden line.

Mr. Peters: Well, whatever you call it. I am talking about the line that comes through Ottawa to Montreal. Everything east of that belongs to the east, and everything west of it belongs to Alberta.

Either the minister did not give much consideration to the real problem of equalization or he decided to follow Eaton's and Simpson's and their approach to east and west. If he were to deal with equalization properly, the man who goes to work at Glace Bay should pay the same for his gasoline as the man who works at Leduc, or for that matter in Toronto. The price of gasoline in Toronto should be the same as that in northern Ontario. I can assure the minister he would get much more flak if people in Toronto were paying 86 cents a gallon for gasoline. I suggest there is no equalization. The minister knows full well the ten cents tax will not equalize the price.

The minister put an export tax on a fairly large volume of oil that was being shipped south of the border, and that did provide some equalization. But this tax revenue has now shrunk to the point where we are paying almost $1 million a day compensation payments to keep the price at the refinery the same in eastern Canada as in western Canada. The federal government even so will only get about 90 cents out of the new price, whereas the oil companies will get considerably more.

The minister does not seem to be able to communicate very well with the provinces. Two elections in the last few months have been fought on his back, those in Alberta and Saskatchewan. Now the Ontario election is going to be fought on his back as well. As a federalist I am not happy about this. I do not think it is good for confederation, and it is certainly not good vis-à-vis the extent to which the federal government has to depend on the provinces for co-operation. The minister has applied the ten cents at the wholesale level, but by the time it gets to the pump it will be more like 12, 13 or 14 cents.

If the normal markup takes place in northern Ontario, the increase will be considerable. With this ten cents tax in Ontario we are now paying 19 cents provincially and 20 cents federally. This means that we are actually paying 39 cents without buying any gasoline. The last time I was involved in negotiations with major oil companies on the price of gasoline, the price was 39 cents. It has gone up considerably since then, but we are imposing a 60 per cent increase on the price, and it seems to me that this is not the way to accomplish a number of things which the minister should be trying to accomplish. One of those things is equality. The minister should be able to provide that equality in pricing all across the nation so that people will pay the same amount for the product no matter where they live.

In their speeches one or two of the minister's colleagues indicated that they live in more remote areas and that gasoline is a necessity in those areas. I am sure the minister agrees that, whether we use the budget method of accomplishing it or not, we should be trying to accomplish a reduction in the size of engines on our highways.

No matter how much we may desire it, it is not possible to substitute public transportation for private transportation in many areas of Canada. In an area running from Montreal to Sault Ste. Marie live 50 per cent of the total Canadian population. There are many unsettled areas in that area as well, but there are great inequalities being worked on those who drive automobiles, and it seems to me that if in that large area one of our desires is to reduce the consumption of gasoline, we should be doing it by the reduction of engine sizes and certainly not providing a rebate on the large American automobiles imported into this country, as did the Ontario government. That is not the way to conserve energy. It would have been much better if this had not been done for American automobiles but for automobiles from other countries under a certain engine size. We would have conserved gasoline by this means, and also given some direction to the automobile industry in North America that it had better get into the swim and start producing smaller cars.

I am participating in this debate because the minister has indicated that the tax was taken off boats because of the influence of 57 hon. members and the extraordinary methods used by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. The minister indicated that this is why that tax was removed. I am sure the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River just bent his ear because he comes from an area where there are new mining communities like Ignace, where there are only trailer camps, where the town has not been able to grow to the extent of the mining community, and where people have to drive great distances. And knowing the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River I am sure that he has used those extraordinary methods in this instance to obtain a rebate on behalf of the workers in that area. I am sure the people from Ignace have told him that the cost of driving from a built up community to a mining community is excessive.

He is like the rest of us who do not receive too many requests from commercial enterprises. He may not have received too many requests from private enterprises, but he has probably received many requests for equality—not for any special concessions—for the working class who have to drive for business purposes. That is the only way of getting to work when public transportation is not available.

I am sure the minister has heard 57 requests. I hope that is the magic number, and I hope that he will give them some consideration if he cannot remove the ten cents tax. I imagine he cannot. I imagine the Cabinet has decided to stand firm, but if he cannot remove the ten cents increase, I hope he will at least make a concession for working people who are able to prove that they use their automobiles for travelling to their employment and returning home. I think this would assist many people in the areas beyond the golden horseshoe and the metropolitan areas of southern Canada.

I hope the minister will giver some consideration to this forgotten group. It is always forgotten. I have been here 18 years, and requests were made before I came here—the request has been made perpetually—that some advantage be given to the working class in exemptions for tools and other concessions through the income tax structure and it was only very recently that this was done. I suggest that the minister will eventually provide this kind of gasoline tax exemption for the working class. They do not want this exemption for driving to church on Sunday. They do not want it for any frivolous reason.

In all those remote areas of northern Ontario, and particularly in my area, the automobile is not a luxury but a need. It is not something which is used like a boat with an outboard motor, or a ski-doo. It is not something used for recreational purposes or for pleasure. It is used in the course of work, and it is part of the worker's expense.

I hope when we go into committee the minister will take the very extraordinary step of providing, in addition to the exemptions which are now in effect, this exemption for the working class who are willing to provide vouchers endorsed by employers that in fact automobiles were used for transportation purposes in the course of work. Surely the minister will give consideration to granting that small concession for the working people of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Madam Speaker—

Mrs. Holt: Rosemary, where art thou?

Mr. Broadbent: —there is no other instrument of government policy which so adequately reveals the soul of a political party as does a budget, and there is really nothing like a Liberal budget in a majority government to reveal the health of the soul of the Liberal party. The budget brought in by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) shows, as nothing else could, in whose interests this government runs Canada, and against whose interests it runs the country.

There are three major parts of the budget, and I will come to the specific one we are dealing with tonight in just a moment. There is one profound change in the unemployment insurance regulations. One might say that some changes are needed in the unemployment insurance regulations, in the benefit provisions and the financing provisions. On that one might find certain points of agreement.

Mrs. Holt: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I invite the hon. member, who talks so much sitting down, to take part in this debate later on.

There was a time when there was an hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway—

Mrs. Holt: The opposition has only one woman over there.

Mr. Broadbent: —who provided not only sound but light, and I look forward to the day when that occurs again.

● (2110)

I was about to say that the unemployment insurance changes are entirely in the direction of placing an increased burden on the average and low income people, as is the case in respect of the excise tax we are debating tonight. The changes in the financing of the medical care and hospitalization programs, which among the budgetary items are perhaps the most crucial in their long run implications for Canada, also will profoundly affect the average and low income people out of proportion as compared to the upper income people. They will affect the poorer provinces of Canada out of all proportion to the richer provinces, just as is the case with regard to the excise tax. All of this has been brought about by this great Liberal party which has governed Canada for so long.

This budget indicates, as nothing else could, that we are now back to the days of 1968-72 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who came in with a great majority at that time, was seen as a great progressive. Back in 1967 when I was teaching at York University in Toronto many people in Toronto were saying that the country needed a progressive man like Trudeau leading the Liberal Party. In terms of his progressivity, a Liberal told me, off in a quiet corner, that the President of the Privy Council offered his private assurance that, in the crunch, he would offer his support to the present Prime Minister for the leadership. Once I learned that, I knew that the present Prime Minister would be at home in the Liberal Party, and at home as Prime Minister in the Liberal Party, following that other great revolutionary, the late William Lyon Mackenzie King. The Prime Minister, on the occasion of the latter's centenary in December, described the former head of the Liberal Party as "our greatest revolutionary." That is the present Prime Minister's description of a former head of the Liberal Party, the man who governed Canada for so long.

I can understand now why the present Prime Minister would have regarded Mackenzie King as a great revolutionary. After all, a Prime Minister who could support this Minister of Finance with regard to this budget could regard Genghis Khan as a great revolutionary. So it does not surprise me.

I should like to point out before I get specifically to the tax measure that Mackenzie King—and there were some Liberals in this debate who referred to him as a great progressive man—was also a man who, just after the First World War when he had an opportunity—and the Prime Minister is aware of this—went to Great Britain where he met some socialists, and ran into George Bernard Shaw. This was revealed in implicit detail in the Mackenzie King diaries. Many people in England and elsewhere regarded George Bernard Shaw not only as a great playwright but also as a great socialist.

Young Willie King wrote in his diary that he really did not like George Bernard Shaw and all those other socialists because they drank beer. King said that the line must be drawn somewhere in respect of political ideals, and one really ought not to associate with people who drank beer.

Later on of course the same Willie King, the man this Prime Minister describes as the greatest revolutionary of our age, was all set to marry a nurse from Chicago until his mother found out, rapidly got some writing paper, and sent a letter off to Willie King in the United States where he was visiting the Carnegies, indeed a poor American family.

An hon. Member: Get back to the subject.

Mr. Broadbent: I think it is worthwhile to get a little of this on the record. Willie King's mother wrote to him saying that he had better not marry that nurse because, after all, a nurse was not quite good enough for him. I say it is not surprising that the Prime Minister could regard that man as a revolutionary. Their ideas do not differ at all in terms of their social attitude. They are very similar individuals, just as the government which governs this country now is similar to the government of Mackenzie King's day. It was a little different during the days of the minority government when the four or five progressives in the backbenches could say they got something done.

I just wanted to provide a little historical background for the Liberals who do not know much about their own party. Now let me come to the question before the House. Why is it this tax measure is before us? We have this tax measure because the government needs additional revenue to pay for the oil we import. The government has to make up the difference between what we receive in the form of export taxes for the oil we export and what we have to pay for the oil we import off our east coast.

There is no doubt that some additional revenue is necessary. No one questions that. We in our party question whether the amount should be $350 million this year, and some $500 million which is estimated for the following year. We have many suspicions arising from the court cases in Nova Scotia and in the United States that the oil companies in Canada, that is, the branches of the multinational corporations, indulge in immoral and illegal price fixing. We have our very great suspicions about that, but the government of course is not interested in pursuing any systematic investigation of that nature in the way Senator Church and his committee in the United States Senate are doing in that country.

It is my hope that Senator Church's investigators will come to Canada, and I intend to get in touch with that committee and point out that our government is not interested in investigating the internal practices of the oil companies. Since Senator Church's officials have gone to Italy to investigate the practices of the oil companies there, I see no reason why they should not come to Canada. I have a feeling that what would be discovered in Canada would be just as revealing as what is discovered in Italy.

We do not believe, if all the facts were known, that the government really needs all the additional revenue it says it requires to pay for the additional price of imported oil. If all the facts were known about the price setting devices of the oil companies, I think the amount of revenue needed would be substantially less than is claimed. We agree that some additional revenue is necessary, but we certainly do not believe that the revenue which is to be collected in the amount of $350 million this year and $500 million next year should be collected from the average and low income Canadians who drive automobiles.

I suggest that 90 per cent of the people driving automobiles today use their automobiles to drive to work and drive home again. Therefore the automobile is not a luxury at all. The government is placing a burden of $350 million this year, and $500 million next year, on the average and low income people, and this the New Democratic Party finds totally unacceptable. But the snickering backbenchers in the Liberal party can say, "Oh well, we over here are dragging this out," and that is really acceptable to them. They will go on saying that for the next three or four years, and then they will trot out some cliche ridden progressive platform just before the next election and try to suck in the people of Canada. I hope that will not happen in 1978.

What could they have done? The Minister of Finance knows that only about six Liberals have dared to speak on this measure, and some of them have asked how else revenue could be raised. Well, we will tell them how to raise revenue: you put a special tax on upper income Canadians. For example, take all Canadians who earn $20,000 or more a year and put a tax on them to get the money that we need to get the additional revenue. That might be a progressive measure, but it would not please all the upper income Canadians who not only vote for the Liberal party but who contribute financially to it. That party does not believe that we should try to redistribute income in this country, redistribute wealth. They like to bring in measures such as this measure and say it is all right for a $6,000 a year income family to pay the same tax—which it will have to with this measure—as a family earning $20,000, $30,000 or $50,000 a year. I repeat that the NDP rejects that approach to taxation.

If the government simply did not want to levy a special tax on upper income Canadians it could have taken it out of general revenue under the existing tax structure to which corporations contribute, and to which all of us contribute on a relatively progressive basis. That is another means it could have used. But no, it chose to levy a flat ten cents a gallon levy which hits disproportionately the average income Canadian.

We in this party have tried to prolong the debate in the House; there is no doubt about that and we make no apology for it. We believe that when an opposition party sees a piece of legislation which it believes to be rotten—as we do in this case—it has an obligation to dig in and fight. I say to you that 80 per cent of the members of our party have spoken in this debate. Of those who have not spoken, some are absent on other important business, and one or two are ill. So we have fulfilled what we regard as our serious political obligation in bringing to the people of Canada the fact, as we see it, that we have a totally unjust tax measure before us introduced by a totally unjust government.

We would like to continue this debate, if we had the support of the official opposition—as we had for a few days, and they vastly out number us—and if they had decided to stay in and fight then all of us together could have prolonged the debate and perhaps we could have got some changes from the government. Perhaps it would have backed down. But we have now concluded that, 80 per cent of our members having spoken, it would be pointless to extend further the second reading debate. Therefore we will let this measure proceed to the committee stage. At that stage we will propose some amendments that go to the heart of this measure, and we hope we will get the support of the official opposition.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

We have our doubts about the Minister of Finance, to understate the case by about 1,000 per cent, but we may get the support of the official opposition, and we will try to get some important changes made to the legislation at the committee stage.

I want to conclude by making a special appeal to the Minister of Finance. I want him to pretend that he is back in the days of the minority government. At that time he and some of his colleagues could move, if not an inch, at least two or three millimetres in a progressive direction. Let him pretend that his political life depends on moving incrementally toward a more just society in terms of the distribution of the economic burden in Canada. If he becomes so bound up in such a hallucination, he might agree during the committee stage to have all that voting fodder in the backbenches of the Liberal party agree to some sensible amendments, and if we get some sensible amendments to this measure, we may get a degree of economic justice for the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The question is on the motion in the name of the Minister of Finance. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton), which was agreed to on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CRIMINAL CODE—PROPOSED INCREASE IN PENALTIES FOR EXTORTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the privilege this evening on the adjournment motion of bringing forward my representations on a very grave crime that is all too prevalent in our nation today, that of extortion. My representations are made pursuant to the question I put to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) on May 13, as reported at page 5727 of Hansard, when I asked the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I am sure I voice the concern of all members about the alarming increase in the crime of extortion which is now prevalent in our country . . . As a result of the prevalence of the crime of extortion in this country, preying mainly on the banking and financial professions, will the government and the judiciary immediately review this very serious situation and legislate to increase the penalties for such crimes in order to more severely punish and deter those who would commit them?

The minister replied in part:

> . . . I think the question is more one of an enforcement problem and the facilities in that regard. I will be glad to receive any suggestions the hon. member has.

I do have some suggestions to make, Mr. Speaker. I think that short of capital murder, and premeditated murder in all its facets, the most serious problem that besets us today in the line of criminal offences is that of extortion. Rarely do you pick up a daily paper from the metropolitan areas, and from smaller areas also, that you do not read of cases of extortion, most of them carried out successfully by the criminals. They prey mostly on people in the financial sectors of our society and also, from time to time, on those in politics and diplomacy.

I remember many years ago that one of my predecessors in this House of Commons was the target of a local extortion attempt but it was foiled by the law authorities and no physical or financial harm resulted. Today it is all too common to read or hear in the media about a mysterious voice calling a bank manager and saying, "We have your wife and child as prisoners. Put half a million dollars in a certain place. Do not inform the police and no harm will befall your dear ones". In my estimation this is one of the most despicable of all crimes, and as one who in political life has always stood for law and order and the protection of persons and property I intend to see that punishment for such a crime is severe and swift. That is why I asked on May 13 that the minister and his government and the judiciary immediately review this situation, and that with the increase in the frequency of these offences there also be a pro-rata increase in the penalties for such crimes.

If in the past criminals were getting an average of five years for extortion, now give them ten years with hard labour; and if any deaths result from such premeditated action, try them for capital murder. If the jury does not recommend mercy, let them pay with their lives. The same thing applies to the hostage racket in the prisons.

I bring to your attention an article supporting my opinions in today's Ottawa Citizen, written by William Gold, associate editor of the Calgary Herald. In an article headed "A little hanging might be a useful exercise", Mr. Gold has this to say:

> Contemporary society is producing a singularly savage type of animal, entirely lacking in comprehension of, or respect for, the lives of other people. These psychopaths know perfectly well what they are doing is wrong legally and morally, but the act of murder causes them absolutely no sense of personal revulsion.

I agree here with Mr. Gold. Your Honour and I in this House are reminded that primarily the chief reason for government is the need for protection to persons and property. When we cease to support those principles we should no longer be representing the people. I had that drilled into me by my ancestors, and by predecessors and colleagues in municipal government, yes and in every day life in the region, the county, and community from which I come. I will never desert those principles.

No corporate state should ever relinquish the right to demand the life of any of its citizens convicted of capital crime. The Trudeau government with its permissiveness and laxity is finding this out, but is still refusing to act on it. The government has been operating on the false elitist principles that there are no deterrents to crime. This is not so. The government has not been employing deterrents in their proper severity and force. That is why I ask for an increase in the deterrents to those convicted of extortion. Let the judiciary increase the deterrents. As soon as it is known through extortion circles that the penalties are greater, the frequency of incidents will recede. It will work. It worked many years ago in the 1930's in Ontario.

During the depression chicken thievery became so prevalent that there was hardly a farmer in Ontario who did not not suffer from raids on his chicken house. Up to that time chicken stealing was regarded on the same plane as Hallowe'en pranks. It was rather lightly regarded. The demand was raised for stiffer penalties for chicken stealing. The government of Ontario through its magistrates responded to that demand and imposed stiffer penalties commensurate with the crime. Chicken stealing very soon became a rare occurrence, and we hardly ever hear of it any more. Increase the penalty—decrease crime.

I have further information and statistics, but we do not have the time for them tonight. We have been informed that extortion has been so prevalent, especially in Montreal and vicinity, that since November last well over $1 million has been successfully extorted by the underworld from citizens in that area in 13 different cases. This occurs not only in Montreal; it is prevalent in Ontario and the western part of the country as well.

In closing I ask the Minister of Justice to use all his influence to see that those convicted of extortion are more severely punished in a manner commensurate with the enormity of their crimes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Criminal Code creates various crimes of extortion. The most notable of these comes under section 305 which provides a penalty of 14 years' imprisonment for inducement or attempted inducement. Subsection (1) reads as follows:

Everyone who, without reasonable excuse and with intent to extort or gain anything, by threats, accusations, menaces or violence induces or attempts to induce any person, whether or not he is the person threatened, accused, menaced or to whom violence is shown, to do anything or cause anything to be done, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for fourteen years.

Section 266(1) of the Code stipulates:

Everyone commits an offence who, with intent

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

(a) to extort money from any person, or

(b) to induce a person to confer upon or procure for another person an appointment or office of profit or trust, publishes or theatens to publish—

And so forth. I will spare you the rest.

In addition, section 266(2) creates an offence punishable by five years' imprisonment for publishing a defamatory libel. The Criminal Code also makes it an offence to threaten or intimidate people whether or not the threat or intimidation was done with the intent to extort anything of value. Numerous other provisions of the Criminal Code overlap with the extortion provisions and some of these have penalties up to life imprisonment.

In recent times the entire trend has been away from prescribing minimum penalties for offences under the Criminal Code. The rationale is that those directly involved in the administration of justice generally hold the view that the courts should be left with a discretion to impose whatever sentence they consider fit having regard to the circumstances of the particular case. The Attorney General of a province, or his agent, can always appeal the sentence.

The maximum terms of imprisonment under section 305 is fourteen years and this appears to provide sufficient flexibility to the judiciary in imposing sentence. The present maximum does, I think, reflect the public's general disapprobation towards this kind of conduct.

While I agree with my hon. friend that the problem is serious, I refer here, naturally, to the administration of justice, I do allow myself to disagree with him on capital punishment. I do not believe in the law of the underworld, the law of settling of accounts, the law of mutual assassinations as a solution to our problems. And I feel that we should now have, naturally, more severe penalties. I shall therefore convey the recommendations of my hon. friend to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), for I do agree that extortion is a serious crime which calls for appropriate sanctions, but I disagree with him on capital punishment, which he recommends, yet I respect his opinion.

PUBLIC WORKS—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN REGULATIONS TO PERMIT PEOPLE IN NORTHERN AREAS TO RENT PREMISES OWNED BY DEPARTMENT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday in the absence of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) I directed a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), which had been referred to me by my colleague, the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth). If he had been here he would have asked the question, but he was attending meetings in the Northwest Territories, and he called upon me, because of the crisis proportions of this problem, and asked me to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

So that you may be aware of the question, Mr. Speaker, I said:

In view of the housing crisis in the Northwest Territories and the fact that in the Yukon—

At that time I should have said Yellowknife.

—small apartments are renting for as much as $400 a month, and in view of the fact the Department of Public Works have vacant in the Yukon 130 homes, 200 detached homes and some apartments, and some of the homes have been vacant for as long as five years, and in view of the fact there is a regulation . . . of the Department of Public Works not to rent to employees who are local people who reside in the area, will the Prime Minister change the restrictive and discriminatory rule and permit local people to rent these vacant homes and apartments to ease the critical housing shortage . . .

In a supplementary I also said:

Is the Prime Minister aware that the same problem pertains in Fort Smith, Hay River and Inuvik and that the local people feel that if persons are from the south they can get accommodation whereas if they are from the local area they are denied accommodation? Will the Prime Minister also direct his attention to this and have this very serious problem cleared up?

You, Mr. Speaker, can appreciate the critical housing situation in the Northwest Territories, and in particular in Yellowknife, Hay River, Inuvik and Fort Smith where housing has reached a crisis stage. People are paying exorbitant rents for apartments while there are vacant apartments, homes, and detached houses which are owned by the Department of Public Works, in respect of which there is a rule which states that they can be rented only to people who come from the south to work in the Northwest Territories. If this is the case, and it must be the case because my colleague from the Northwest Territories is greatly concerned and exercised about it, then it is high time the Minister of Public Works set in motion changes in the regulations concerning these homes.

Many times I have heard the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) say that housing should be a basic right for all Canadians and that it should be available at affordable prices. If that is the case and if it is the philosophy of the government, and we have a crisis situation in certain areas of the Northwest Territories, then it is incumbent upon the minister to change those regulations so that those vacant properties may be rented to the people in the area.

If there is anything worse than discrimination it is the feeling people in the Northwest Territories have that the people from the south get better privileges than the people from the north and the local area. This has been the thrust of the rule which applies at the moment. I would hope that the parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Turner) would get up and say there are vacancies in respect of homes, apartments, and so on in the north, that there is this restriction which has been working against the people in the local area, and that he will see that changes are made to ease the housing problem and also ease the feeling of discrimination the people in the north have. I look forward to the answer by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Public Works is responsible for the administration of pool housing in the north and can only answer for units which are connected with this program. Other northern housing programs are administered by the individual departments involved.

In the Northwest Territories there is a total of 782 pool housing units available. At the present time there are 51 units vacant and awaiting the arrival of known occupants. An additional 37 units are vacant, with no known requirements. This represents a vacancy factor of less than 5 per cent, which is considered reasonable in this program when consideration is given to seasonal work and other fluctuations.

● (2220)

In Whitehorse there are 84 houses available of which three are vacant at the present time. The figures change from month to month, but three to five vacant at any one time is the average.

The regulation to which the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) referred is T.B. No. 552212 pool housing policy and procedures. This regulation, we understand, is being considered for review by Treasury Board officials.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—ALLEGED REDUCTION IN EXPENDITURES FOR FORCE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to speak on behalf of a beleaguered group which, more than any other institution in Canada, represents the qualities of dignity, fairness, perseverance and responsibility to the people of the world. I speak of course of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Whereas in other countries the police are easily passed off as "cops" and "pigs", in Canada we still speak proudly of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Whereas in bygone days the force could devote all of their attention to getting their man, today they have to be on their guard lest some man gets them. I speak not of the criminal who, by commitment, has devoted his life and energies to fight against the forces of law and order; I speak rather of the governments and their bureaucrats who make it more and more difficult for the police to do their work, who make the police officers the victims of an unnecessary power struggle. I speak on behalf of the people of Canada who are the victims, the innocent bystanders who become the victims of this power struggle. Let me illustrate.

There is a well known understanding among the police forces across Canada that there is a 6 per cent guideline limiting the expansion of RCMP facilities province by province. Hon. members must understand of course that this is not related in any way to the crime rate in any given province, it is not related to the present understaffing of the police forces in any specific area, and it is not related to the requests of the forces in these local areas, but rather it is an arbitrary decision agreed upon by the cabinet which ignores the crime needs of communities faced by mounting lawlessness and mounting juvenile delinquency, and that in itself becomes a crime in its own right.

It is not enough that the police force has to fight crime; it now must also fight for its own existence. Then there is the trade off power brokerage between the federal government and the provincial governments.

Right now the federal government pays 50 per cent of the expense of maintaining the first four officers in any given community, and 25 per cent of the expense of maintaining all the other officers beyond the first four. But the contract for the RCMP, especially in British Columbia, expires on December 31, 1975. Now the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) wants to renegotiate that contract. He wants to make municipalities pay 85 per cent of the entire cost of maintaining the RCMP forces in any given municipality in British Columbia.

Think what that means for a municipality like Surrey-White Rock. Here is a municipality which has inherited all of the problems of racial tension as a result of federal immigration policies. It has inherited the problems of congested housing, again the result of inadequate federal housing policies. It is inheriting drug trafficking problems because of the shortcomings within the judicial system, and because of the half-hearted support given the police forces by the federal government. In total, the local governments have a gun held to their heads. On the one hand they have the problems that face them for which there is no immediate solution, and on the other hand they are not being given the tools to do the job. And in the future the government wants to restrict their efforts even further. The local governments have no bargaining power but are faced with mounting problems issuing from the policies or non-policies of the federal government.

I would be the first to admit there is a need for fiscal restraint by the government. There are many places where we can be critical of federal government spending; there are many "give away" programs that are ought to be eliminated; there are many people who have destroyed their own sense of the work ethic and who are being given handouts by the federal government. There are hundreds of ways in which we can exercise fiscal restraint.

As long as I have letters from my constituents telling me that they are afraid to go out at night I will do my best to press the government not to exercise fiscal restraint in this area. I believe that members of the RCMP are doing yeoman's duty working against all odds, and ought not to be the victims of this kind of disservice. I beg the Solicitor General to reconsider his plan to be tight fisted in his forthcoming policy, and to give the RCMP forces in British Columbia the kind of support they deserve and sorely need.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on July 9 the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) asked me how I could justify supporting a cabinet guideline to hold expenditures for law enforcement establishments at 6 percent. I answered that I was not sure that there was such a guideline for our department, but I did say that there would be certain cuts with respect to the RCMP and the penitentiary service but that they would be kept to a minimum in the province of British Columbia.

I should now like to give further answer to the hon. member.

In 1975-76 the RCMP was granted 1,009 additional man-years, for an increase of approximately 6 per cent over the previous year. The province of British Columbia was granted 244 of those additional man-years for 1975-76, for an increase of 7.2 per cent, which was a greater increase than that for the RCMP nationally during that year.

The recent cutback of 1 per cent on the man-years establishment will affect the RCMP nationally with a cut of 178 man-years to be implemented over a period of 1½ years. This will mean that the planned increase for 1975-76 for the RCMP will be reduced to approximately 5 per cent.

I want to emphasize to the hon. member, however, that any such reductions will be applied to low priority tasks for the RCMP and low priority regions. In this respect the RCMP consider British Columbia a very high priority region. As I mentioned, the increase in man-years originally allocated for British Columbia in 1975-76 was higher than the national average. I should point out that the shortage of police in British Columbia in 1975 is in a great measure due to the attitude of the former Socred government which, year after year, cut back on the suggested manpower for the RCMP in British Columbia for provincial policing. As a result, the new provincial government and the federal government are attempting to do a lot of catching up.

In conclusion let me say that some of these matters are now being reviewed as part of our work to provide a more effective crime prevention program for the autumn. I want to assure the House that we will do everything possible to provide additional protection for the public against crime, while respecting the government's general program for restraint in lower priority tasks and areas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands ajourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.33 p.m.

DAMAGES TO SAINT-BONAVENTURE BY TORNADO—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to discuss an important and urgent matter.

In view of the tragedy that occurred yesterday at Saint-Bonaventure, in the riding of Drummond, when a tornado caused the death of at least three persons, some fifteen others being still unaccounted for, and over a million dollars' worth of damages by destroying a large number of houses, businesses and various municipal buildings, and as the provincial authorities are said to have been asked to declare the area a disaster area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner):

That the federal government immediately offer all available assistance to the victims of Saint-Bonaventure and assure them of the co-operation of all departments concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: As the House is unanimous, I shall put the motion. Seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) moves:

That the federal government immediately offer all available assistance to the victims of Saint-Bonaventure and assure them of the co-operation of all departments concerned.

Does the House adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF SAFETY AND LABOUR PRACTICES OF COMPANY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that Canadian Pacific Railway is arbitrarily reducing main line railway and yard crews by one brakeman thereby jeopardizing railway safety and having no regard for employee tenure, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to conduct a full scale investigation into the safety and labour practices of the CPR.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MESSAGE OF CONGRATULATION TO NATIVES ON ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF SIGNING OF LAKE WINNIPEG TREATY No. 5—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing importance. This is the same motion I proposed yesterday and I again seek Your Honour's permission to present it. Inasmuch as articles of a treaty, known as The Lake Winnipeg Treaty No. 5, were made and concluded at Berens River and Norway House in 1875 on September 20 and 24 respectively between Her Majesty the Queen and the Saulteaux and Swampy Cree Tribes of Indians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That congratulatory messages be sent from this House to those bands of Treaty Indians adhering to the provisions of the said treaty and who, early in August, will be celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of The Lake Winnipeg Treaty No. 5.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. It cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) moves:

That congratulatory messages be sent from this House to those bands of Treaty Indians adhering to the provisions of the said treaty and who, early in August, will be celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of The Lake Winnipeg Treaty No. 5.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday I indicated that by virtue of the rather extraordinary importance and implication during the question period of certain questions of privilege that were outstanding, the House might agree to deal with those prior to the question period. We did that once in order to clarify what might be done in the question period. I do not think we ought to do that on a daily basis. There are still outstanding questions of privilege, but I think we should take them in the ordinary course of procedure at the end of the question period.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. FAULKNER—REPORT ON TELEPHONE CONVERSATION FROM PRESIDENT OF OUTBOARD MOTOR COMPANY IN PETERBOROUGH CONCERNING TAX CHANGE ON BOATS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has he now had an opportunity to check his memory with respect to my question yesterday with regard to a telephone conversation between himself and the President of the Outboard Marine Corporation of Peterborough, Ontario in which the president of the company, Mr. McMillan, informed the minister that he had been told there was to be a 10 per cent excise tax coming up in the budget two weeks hence?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I had a chance to talk to Mr. McMillan yesterday on the phone. He confirmed that he had talked to me and I apparently replied to him in the vein that I was not in a position, as a member of cabinet, to discuss that issue with him, and that is where it ended. I think he elaborated on that in the news yesterday.

Mr. McGrath: Did Mr. McMillan, in the course of his conversation with the minister, identify the source of the information and what did the minister do with the information he received with Mr. McMillan?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. McMillan yesterday contended that he had received some information from his dealer—he could not remember, or he did not specify, which dealer it was in Kenora. What was the second part of the question?

Mr. McGrath: The second part of the question was: Did Mr. McMillan identify the source of the information and what did the minister do with this information?

Mr. Faulkner: I did not do anything with the information of a particular kind. I simply told Mr. McMillan that as a member of the cabinet I could not discuss this issue with him.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the public statements which have already been issued by Mr. McMillan in which he identifies the precise terms of the conversation and in view of the fact that Mr. McMillan has sworn to an affidavit in which he recounts his version of the conversation, may I now ask the minister once again whether he recalls the precise terms of the conversation, which took place two weeks prior to the budget? Further, did the minister, when he received that information discuss it with the Minister of Finance, and if not, why not?

Mr. Faulkner: I don't remember discussing it with the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Faulkner: Well, it seemed to me at the time to be a piece of speculation on the part of Mr. McMillan based on a contact he had with a dealer in Kenora and I told him I was not prepared to discuss it.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MINISTER AND MEMBER FOR KENORA-RAINY RIVER CONCERNING EXCISE TAX ON BOATS—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question would be for the Minister of Finance. Can the Minister of Finance tell the House whether during the period between his May and November budgets of last year he had any written communication with the member for Kenora-Rainy River on the subject of specific excise tax proposals and would he be prepared to table any and all such correspondence in the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I would have to ascertain whether there was any such correspondence. As I said yesterday, I had representations from all over the country after the May 6 budget, particularly after the government was returned on July 8, as to the excise tax on boats and motors. I also received representations from all quarters of the House on the same issue. But I will have to look into the question of whether there was any correspondence.

INQUIRY AS TO CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN MINISTER AND MEMBER FOR KENORA-RAINY RIVER CONCERNING EXCISE TAX ON BOATS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): In view of the minister's answer today and also of his answer as reported in Hansard yesterday when I asked him whether he had had any personal conversations with the hon. parliamentary secretary concerning the proposed amendment to the Excise Tax Act, which appeared in the House on January 28, I should like again to ask the hon. gentleman, who yesterday stated he could not distinctly recall that, whether he had any conversation with the hon. parliamentary secretary with respect to the proposed amendment to the Excise Tax Act referred to yesterday and, second, whether he had any personal conversations with the parliamentary secretary prior to the introduction of the budget itself with respect to excise tax matters?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall specific instances in either case, but I repeat what I said yesterday. Neither before the budget, which is not in issue because the tax was reimposed at an accelerated rate in the November 18 budget—

Mr. McGrath: An accelerated rate? It was the same tax.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, it was 3 per cent in the May 6 budget and 10 per cent in the November 18 budget. The allegation, I understand, was that the tax was going to be removed on boats, and of course it was not removed on boats. I said quite categorically yesterday that neither before the budget nor between the budget and the introduction of the amendment which relieved the tax on boats, did I give any indication to any member of this House, other than cabinet colleagues when the matter came before cabinet, of the introduction of the amendment. That procedure I have used in five budgets and five sets of budget bills.

POSSIBILITY OF LEAK BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS CONCERNING EXCISE TAX ON BOATS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the affidavit referred to by my colleague the hon. member for St. John's East specifically states that the 10 per cent excise tax in the November 18 budget, as compared to the 3 per cent tax in the May 6 budget, was known or communicated to the deponent of the affidavit two weeks before the budget was introduced on May 18, and alleges that the information arose from the hon. member, the parliamentary secretary, would the minister indicate whether he has checked if there was any leak within his department with respect to this information?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have checked with senior officials of the department and I have had it confirmed to me that in no event was any information given either to the parliamentary secretary or to any other member of parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. REID—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT CONCERNING FOREKNOWLEDGE OF CHANGE IN EXCISE TAX ON BOATS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question through the President of the Privy Council to his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, which follows directly from what the Minister of Finance has just said. I should like to have the hon. member clarify for the House the accuracy of the quote attributed to him, in terms of his knowledge as a parliamentary secretary, of forthcoming changes in the November budget which came about in January. He is quoted as having foreknowledge of the changes before they were introduced in January. The quotation is:

> We put on a lobby and we knew about six weeks before it was announced that it was coming off the boats but not the motors.

I ask the hon. member whether that is an accurate quotation, and if he knew precisely, how did he come to know precisely?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that I did not know precisely that the tax was going to come off the boats. I did know, and I think a great many members of the House knew at the time, that there were going to be changes in that particular tax. Hon. members who have read Hansard yesterday, though not the edited transcript that appears in the Gazette this morning, will realize that I quoted the evidence of a member from the other side who also confirmed that he had knowledge, based on his being a member of parliament and paying attention to the debates in the House, that the tax would be coming off. For those members who would like to look it up, I would suggest they read Hansard of yesterday and then go back to the evidence given in the privileges and elections committee, I believe on page 12 or page 15 of the report for March 6, 1975, where they will see the evidence quoted. I do not want to give the hon. member's name.

Mr. Broadbent: Why not?

Mr. Reid: The other question was whether I had any information that the tax would be changed as a result of my being Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. The answer is no. The only inside information that I have as Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council concerns what the House leaders say among themselves at different times.

● (1120)

MR. REID—POSSIBILITY OF CONVERSATIONS WITH CONSTITUENTS CONCERNING EXCISE TAX ON BOATS PRIOR TO INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the related fact that members of the New Democratic Party, who have checked their correspondence and their memories concerning conversations they have had with the minister and officials when some of them were making the same kind of appeals the hon. member was making, found that their correspondence in fact indicated no knowledge whatsoever of the certitude of the tax change coming—in fact they got quite clear answers from the Minister of Finance to the effect that such matters were confidential and they in turn conveyed to their constituents that uncertainty and did not indicate they had any knowledge, and in fact none of our members had any knowledge of the kind the hon. member refers to—I should like to ask a question related to the letter he sent on December 19 to Mr. Nelson which reads in part:

> —I understand they are likely to relieve the excise tax against boats, although not on motors.

In addition to this letter to Mr. Nelson, prior to the date of this letter or after but prior to the introduction in the House of the budgetary changes, did the hon. member have a telephone conversation either with Mr. Nelson or with any private individual concerning the forthcoming budgetary changes, and did he indicate a knowledge of those present or forthcoming changes in such conversations.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Well, Mr. Speaker, so far as the matter of the members of the New Democratic Party not seeming to have any indication that the change was possible or likely to come is concerned, that is a question for them to decide with regard to how effective they are in the House of Commons and how knowledgeable they are. The point I want to make is that if the hon. member will look at Hansard at page 7891, he will note that a member on the other side made the same judgment I had and had come to it independently because we had not talked about it beforehand.

Insofar as the question about Mr. Nelson is concerned, I believe, after I received his letter dated December 3, which I think is the first indication I had he was concerned about it, I phoned him to find out his concerns and have him elucidate more fully the effect this tax would have on his business and then I proceeded to make my inquiries and judgments. There was, to my recollection another company in my constituency, the Naden Boat Company Limited of Vermilion Bay, from which I received a phone call in about three or four days of the budget delivery putting the argument to me that the way the excise tax was imposed could do irreparable harm to their manufacturing operation since they had been in business for only six or eight months and did not have the cash flow and marketing situation to be able to sustain that kind of a blow. There were also from my constituency a number of other retailers who got in touch with me, either personally or in writing, and I added these to my files and made representations on behalf of all of them.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out, first, that the people whose judgment is being questioned are not members of the New Democratic Party. I responded with care yesterday I thought to the hon. member opposite and would like him to exercise the same care in some of his responses in the House today.

I would ask him now if he would answer the question more precisely. In his telephone conversations with people in his constituency or elsewhere, did he convey with any greater degree of certitude than he expressed in his letter of December 19 his knowledge of forthcoming budgetary changes?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to members of the New Democratic Party. I merely wanted to point out that the certitude of the knowledge I had that there was a possibility of a change was shared by me on this side at least with a member on the other side. So there were two of us who had some certitude, some insight, into the proceedings.

To answer the hon. member's question, I could say that from the reaction of Mr. Nelson when I phoned him and when I wrote him I judged that he had no confidence at all in the judgment which I had expressed that I thought that there would be changes. He tended to be very dubious about it and he told me that he simply did not believe me. I simply reiterated to him at the time, as I did in my letter, that the chances were good, the likelihood was there that there would be a change because of the nature of what the minister was attempting to do in the tax. I made a judgment on my own. I had made this judgment on bills of all nature and I make that judgment continually in my work as Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council as to how the House will behave and how we will move business along.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY—SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF LEVY ON INDUSTRIAL MILK FOR EXPORT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question.

Since the Department of Agriculture has authorized the Egg Marketing Agency to increase from 8 to 10 cents the price of grade A eggs, which will enable the producer to make a reasonable profit of 6 per cent, I wish to congratulate him. My question is as follows: does the minister believe that the 45 cent export levy for the industrial milk producer will be revised during the summer holidays?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, any policies for which I am responsible will be fair policies. We are reviewing the policy that is in accordance with the agreement with the dairy farmers of Canada for industrial milk. They understand that policy and they also understand the reason for the 45 cents per hundred pounds cost because the European Economic Community dumped so many thousands of tons of skimmed milk powder on the world market at no cost to their producers. So we are reviewing it and hoping to come up with a program that will not force industrial milk producers in Canada to take a cut in income.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary.

Can the minister tell the House whether he knows anything about the subsidies received by the producers of nine European countries, which were to be 28 cents a hundredweight? These subsidies represent dishonest competition for Canadian producers. Is the minister contemplating action to change that situation?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we reviewed the subsidies paid by the European Economic Community to their dairy producers and we reviewed our subsidies, then we explained to Canadian dairy farmers that the discrepancy is not as great as some people think it is.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. FAULKNER—INQUIRY WHETHER MR. McMILLAN MENTIONED MEMBER FOR KENORA-RAINY RIVER AS SOURCE OF INFORMATION CONCERNING EXCISE TAX ON BOATS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and it is in order perhaps to clear up something relating to the conversation with Mr. McMillan approximately two weeks before the November budget. I am sure that the Secretary will recall if Mr. McMillan had mentioned the name of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River in the conversation. Is the Secretary of State prepared to assert flatly or deny that Mr. McMillan during that conversation, in referring to the source of his information that the tax on motors and boats of more than 20 horsepower would be increased to 10 per cent, mentioned the proprietor of Leisureland Marine of Kenora, a firm in Kenora, and that Nelson in turn had received this information from the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River? Is the Secretary of State prepared to deny that?

● (1130)

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, that was the tenor of the conversation yesterday with Mr. McMillan. He recalled the conversation, but as I remember conversations like this—I received many inquiries about the potential change in the tax—since I have been in cabinet I have always taken the view—and this is shared by all my colleagues—that those issues are not discussed, so I tended to give that element of the conversation rather short shrift.

Mr. Stanfield: It would be helpful if the minister were prepared to assert categorically that this information about the alleged increase in the tax to 10 per cent was not attributed to a John Reid, the federal Liberal member for Kenora-Rainy River. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I do not enjoy this very much, but I would like to get to the bottom of it. I would like to ask the Secretary of State whether he is prepared—whichever way he wants to put it—to assert categorically that this information was not attributed to a John Reid, the federal Liberal member, in this conversation two weeks before the budget.

Mr. Faulkner: As I pointed out to the House yesterday, I do not remember the conversation. I promised the hon. member for St. John's East that I would go back to Mr. McMillan, which I did, and I asked if he did telephone me. He said he did, and I asked him what the conversation was and what my reply was. He said that he had heard it from a dealer in his area, and I cannot precisely remember whether he introduced Mr. Reid's name. I take it that in the affidavit he contends he did. That is something the Leader of the Opposition should take up with Mr. McMillan. I do not remember the conversation. I told him that I was not prepared to discuss budgetary matters.

MR. REID—SUGGESTION BY MR. McMILLAN MEMBER FOR KENORA-RAINY RIVER SOURCE OF INFORMATION CONCERNING EXCISE TAX ON BOATS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In my pursuit to get to the bottom of this and perhaps have the matter cleared up, I will ask through the government House leader whether there are any comments his parliamentary secretary would care to make about the charge made by one Thomas McMillan, the proprietor of an outboard firm in Peterborough, that he was informed by the proprietor of Leisureland Marine of Kenora, Ontario, that the tax was going to go up in the budget and that the source of this information was the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I spoke to Mr. Nelson yesterday after the question period. He confirmed that he had not discussed this matter with me until after the budget had come down. He confirmed that the only information he had concerning this came from me after the budget was brought down, and it was contained in my letter to him of December 19, 1974. He then confirmed that he had reported this information to a representative of Outboard Marine, for which company he is a dealer, after he had received this information in writing from me.

I have not seen the document, but from what the Leader of the Opposition has read, it seems to me that there is some confusion because, as I understand it, the tax was coming off, not going on, and I do not want to comment any further because I have not seen the document. I do think from what was said that there is a contradiction in terms of what was actually proposed in the budget and what was actually done.

Mr. Stanfield: Through the government House Leader to the parliamentary secretary, my question relates not to the tax being modified after the budget, but to the budget and to the proposed increase from 3 per cent, as was proposed in May of 1974, to 10 per cent as proposed in the budget of November. The charge is that information originated from the parliamentary secretary, about two weeks before the budget, that the tax was going to be increased from 3 per cent to 10 per cent, and it is contained in an affidavit attributing the source of this information to the parliamentary secretary. The Secretary of State is unable to deny that the name of the parliamentary secretary was mentioned in the conversation, which I would have thought he would have remembered. It relates to two weeks before the budget.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, then I must say that I categorically deny that. Mr. Nelson and I had no conversations about sales tax until after the budget came down, and then, as hon. members who have looked at the correspondence I tabled yesterday will note, he made very strong and forceful representations about the injustice of it and how it was hurting his business.

MR. REID—SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO ALLEGATION MEMBER FOR KENORA-RAINY RIVER GAVE OUT INFORMATION CONCERNING EXCISE TAX ON BOATS PRIOR TO BUDGET

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Mr. McMillan has publicly indicated, I believe by way of the CBC, that he had prior knowledge which came from Mr. Nelson. The statements made by the parliamentary secretary now do not deny the truth of that, but in light of the conflict which is apparent at this time as to what really did happen, and I do not want to say who was telling the truth, but in order that we determine—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Wait a minute.

Mr. Alexander: I say that with a great deal of respect. I am not criticizing what the parliamentary secretary said but I am emphasizing what Mr. McMillan has indicated. Does the Prime Minister not think that as a result of this confusion there should be an inquiry with respect to this matter, or that the matter should be put to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in order that the whole matter can be considered?

An hon. Member: Make a charge.

Mr. Alexander: My hon. friend says make a charge. I am not making a charge. I am just trying to determine what went on.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the hon. member, his question clearly anticipates a ruling which the Chair has to make on at least three outstanding questions of privilege. That ruling will take place at twelve o'clock. Whether individual members feel that that course should be followed will perhaps be reflected by the way the Chair deals with it and the way hon. members take it after that, but to ask individual members whether the matter should be referred to a committee when in fact three questions are before the House under reservation today for decision as to whether a prima facie question of privilege exists, which would be referred to the standing committee, I think puts an improper light on the question.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ACTION TO ELIMINATE CLAUSE BOYCOTTING ISRAEL

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On May 8 the Prime Minister, referring to the Arab boycott, made the encouraging statement that this type of practice is alien to everything the government stands for and that he would hope no specific directive to this effect to departments and agencies would be necessary. However on June 2 the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said that the government as a whole will be considering the matter in the very near future, and the view of the government will be communicated to all departments and the Crown corporation. I therefore want to ask the minister whether he can say whether the government has completed this consideration, and if so, what view the government now has of the matter and whether it is communicating this to the Export Development Corporation and other Crown corporations, agencies and departments.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this matter is still under cabinet consideration, but in answer to the hon. member I would say that the answer I gave on a previous occasion, June 2, 1975, still stands until we make a further decision and announcement.

FISHERIES

CLOSING OF PORTS TO RUSSIAN FISHING VESSELS—KNOWLEDGE OF REPORT BY MR. WEEKS CONCERNING EFFECT OF ACTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). When he made his statement last Wednesday that the government was closing our eastern ports to the Russian fishing fleets, did he have in his possession the report of Mr. Ernest Weeks, a government departmental report, which said that the closing of the ports to Soviet ships would have little effect on the overfishing? That statement has now been fully corroborated by Mr. Louis Day, Secretary General of ICNAF. I ask the minister, further, if he agrees that, apparently, the government has closed the ports to the Russian business, which we want, without closing fishing areas to Russian overfishing, which we do not want?

● (1140)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I certainly had in mind the report of Mr. Weeks, which is over one and a half years old and which was looking at the long-term development of Canadian ports, if and when Canadian jurisdiction were extended. The subject raised by the hon. member, that of the inconvenience to the Soviet Union, also was not covered in Dr. Weeks report, but at that time the level of visits was not at 400 a year, as it was one year ago. There were almost 200 in the first six months of this year.

As for the latter part of the hon. member's question—I am sorry, my memory fails me at the moment.

ABILITY OF PORTS ON ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON TO SERVICE RUSSIAN FISHING FLEET—REPORT OF MR. WEEKS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if his memory failed him on something else, when he told the House on Wednesday that the French islands, St. Pierre and Miquelon, did not have the capacity to service the Russian fleet. Was he aware that Dr. Weeks says in that report that both those islands could service the Russian ships adequately? Is Dr. Weeks in error, or has the capacity of these ports shrunk in the meantime?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, when I said my memory failed me, it was in relation to the third point the hon. member had made. I say again that Dr. Weeks was talking about a situation which existed roughly two years ago. Also, we have indicated to the French government the reasons for our closing. We invited them to consider our friendly relations and that we would find it difficult to understand if they did not support our point of view.

CLOSING OF PORTS TO RUSSIAN FISHING VESSELS—POSSIBILITY OF SERVICING BY OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received any indication from the government of France or the government of any other country which might service the Russian fishing fleet as to whether they will follow the Canadian example or undertake to service the Russian fleets which will now be denied access to Canadian east coast ports?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, the representative of the government of France was invited in and discussed this question with officials of the Department of External Affairs. He undertook to inform the Canadian government of any increase in the normal level of business at St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Speaking on the point on which my memory failed me, if I remember correctly, the hon. member was suggesting that the closure of the ports should have the effect of removing the fleets off our shores. That was never intended and that was never indicated in my statement, and it is totally irrelevant to the subject. Port closure is related directly to violation of ICNAF regulations.

PROPOSED REDUCTION OF ICNAF QUOTAS BY FORTY PER CENT—POSITION OF CANADIAN QUOTAS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for fisheries. In view of the unanimous support provided by this House to his negotiations for a 40 per cent decrease in international quotas on off-shore fishing grounds, will the minister explain to the House exactly the position in which that will leave our quotas vis-à-vis the quotas of the international fleet which have been involved in the negotiations?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for raising that question. After reading carefully the motion, which, unhappily, I received just as I was coming to the House, I realized that, inadvertently, the hon. member for St. John's East was talking about a 40 per cent reduction of quotas. We have asked ICNAF for a 40 per cent reduction in fishing effort by all nations, except Canada. We want to maintain the Canadian catch at its present level.

Mr. McCain: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the House to understand that the minister's position entails only the reduction of quotas for foreign fleets and no reduction of quotas for Canadian fleets?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I say to the hon. member, who I am sure supported the Canadian position at ICNAF last June and will support it at the coming meeting, that that is precisely the intent. The reduction would be to the foreign fleet's effort not to the Canadian fleet's.

BASIS UPON WHICH ICNAF QUOTAS ESTABLISHED—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN ALLOWABLE HADDOCK CATCH

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, mine is not a supplementary question. I have been hoping to ask it since Wednesday and it is directed to the Minister of State (Fisheries). Last week, five trawlers operating out of the port of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, reported that they dumped 94,000 pounds of prime haddock caught in excess of quota in a ten-day period. Will the minister inform the House if the quotas were established as a result of Canadian surveys, and by whom, or on information supplied by foreigners; and, since the present policy is not that of conserving haddock, will the minister immediately take steps to increase the allowable haddock catch, in order to prevent this unnecessary waste of fishing effort, money and food?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, my hearing aid is not working very well. I believe the hon. member was raising the question of fish discards. We have asked the representatives of the industry, mainly the large trawler operators who are most directly involved in these incidents, to meet with us. I know that the leader of this group was in Europe. I understand that officials are to meet him early next week. We want to find a solution, but we want a solution which will be equitable to all, primarily to small and medium sized boats which cannot travel as far offshore as can the larger trawlers involved in these incidents.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since 94,000 pounds of haddock were reported as having been dumped by five ships, and as more than 40 large trawlers operate out of Nova Scotia alone, not counting those operating from New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, the quantity of haddock being dumped must equal or surpass the landed volume. In light of this tremendous loss of prime food, will the minister take steps to permit all fish once caught by Canadian fishermen to be landed at Canadian ports until the 200-mile economic zone is either determined internationally or unilaterally by this government?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's suggestion is very appealing, but there is one serious disadvantage. It could re-open the whole area. This would mean that we do not recognize the ICNAF regulation and the quotas to which we have agreed. This could open the whole area to foreign fishing fleets, which is exactly what we are trying to avoid.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

USE OF CANADIAN ENGINEERS ON MAJOR PROJECTS IN NORTHERN AREAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and arises from discussions and exchange of correspondence between the minister and myself respecting the extent to which Canadian engineers will be used on major technical projects in the far north.

Will the minister indicate what progress has been made to ensure that Canadian engineering will be used in future large-scale engineering projects in the far north?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite correct. There was considerable concern felt when the contract let by Imperial Oil for the Taglu plant went to the Fluor Company. As a result the government has, therefore, decided to clarify its Canadian participation policy in the key area of engineering and project management by setting an objective that such services must be carried out by firms which are beneficially owned or controlled by Canadians, or else performed or serviced by Canadians, unless it is clearly demonstrated that the necessary capacity does not exist in Canada. We feel that the appropriate figure should be at least 90 per cent. Most of the work should be done here, in Canada.

Mr. Andre: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister clarify whether this matter will be put in the form of guidelines or in the form of legislation; and, if there are guidelines, is the minister prepared to table them in the House, or table them as soon as they are available?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, there is an inter-departmental committee, chaired by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to which an application for work of this nature should be referred and the committee will make the decision on it.

TRANSPORT

AREA OF APPLICABILITY OF FREEZE ON RAILWAY LINE ABANDONMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN CONNECTION WITH ESQUIMALT-NANAIMO LINE

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. On July 18, replying to my question, the minister stated that he believed the railroad abandonment freeze applies to all western provinces. My question is this. What action can the government take when a rail line, such as the Esquimalt-Nanaimo rail line on Vancouver Island, is abandoned, contrary to the government's stated policy?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when I answered the hon. member's question, I said that I believed the policy applied to all western provinces, including B.C. I ought to clarify. I have learned that it does not include B.C.; it includes only Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON HUMAN SETTLEMENTS IN VANCOUVER—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ADMISSION OF DELEGATES AND HOLDING OF CONFERENCE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the answer given Monday to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands that preparations for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlement in Vancouver next year will continue and in light of the reaction of the United Nations to Canada's postponement of the Toronto conference, will the minister now say what is the government's intention on admission of delegates to the Vancouver conference, keeping in mind that delay similar to that in the Toronto decision will put Canada in another embarrassing position and place Vancouver in a very difficult financial position in relation to the ongoing development done at the urging of the federal government.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation is simply this. Preparations for the conference in Vancouver are going ahead. There has been no balk in that respect. That was stated by myself in the House and I am happy to confirm it today. With regard to the admission of members of the PLO, I have stated elsewhere the situation. It is properly a matter for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but I think it ought not to be put in context with regard to this question. The government has decided that members of the PLO who are non-terrorists will be admitted to Canada under ministerial permit for attendance at the invitation of reputable Canadian organizations or at UN conferences.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for Urban Affairs. Is it still the view of the minister that the 1976 conference in Vancouver is viable? Also, does the government plan to carry on with preparations for the conference in Vancouver in spite of the withdrawal of the urban demonstration program and in view of the answer of the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not only are plans going ahead, but they are being accelerated to the extent they should at this stage of the preparations for that conference within the parameters indicated by my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

DISASTERS

FEDERAL AID TO VICTIMS OF TORNADO AT SAINT-BONAVENTURE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

With reference to the joint motion introduced earlier by the hon. member for Drummond and the hon. member for

Saint-Hyacinthe, could the Prime Minister assure the House that the Saint-Bonaventure disaster victims can count on immediate assistance from the federal government, through all its departments concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the hon. member, the House has agreed to the motion of the hon. member for Drummond that the government should assist as much as possible the disaster victims of Saint-Bonaventure. I should like merely to remind the House that the federal government is always willing to help. There is a procedure we must follow whenever the province of Quebec or some other province submits an application in respect of a disaster area. There exist all sorts of means to assist disaster victims. It is the responsibility of the hon. member for Drummond, within which the disaster area is situated, to see that the Quebec government submits a formal application to the federal government.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Has the minister received a request for assistance from the Quebec government and if not has he already taken some steps to help that disaster area?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have not been in my office for a couple of hours. Before that, there certainly had not been a representation, which I think is understandable. I suspect the province would want some time to assess the damage. I will be glad to do whatever I can in conjunction with other departments and the province to see what we can do to assist in that area. I might point out there is a disaster formula program which, I believe, is administered by other departments of government. However, we will certainly supplement those efforts if we are asked.

ENERGY

PROPOSED FEDERAL FEASIBILITY STUDY OF ENRICHED URANIUM PLANT AT JAMES BAY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Now that the federal government has decided to proceed with its own feasibility study of an enriched uranium plant in the James Bay area, will the minister tell the House what aspects will be looked into by the federal study that he feels were not dealt with by the Canadif report to which the government has access?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the conversations are not completed with the province of Quebec with respect to a mutual study of this question. The important concerns that we feel should be studied are firstly with regard to the suitability of the diffusion process for the purpose of uranium enrichment. As the time for the centrifugal process comes with, of course, much lower cost, does diffusion still represent the best method of achieving this? What would be the impact of this particular development if it were to go ahead on the availability of energy, not just in the province of Quebec but within an eastern grid, which is one of the objectives of this government? What would be the impact of this kind of investment on availability of funds and of real resources, such as equipment and manpower, compared to the other demands that will occur throughout Canada to meet energy needs and, above all, what will be the availability of foreign as opposed to Canadian uranium to be serviced by such a plant so that there will not be in the future any insistence on a higher level of Canadian exports of enriched uranium take place than we regard as within the national interest from the standpoint of the reserve formula.

PROPOSED ENRICHED URANIUM PLANT AT JAMES BAY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CANADIF FEASIBILITY STUDY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his reply. Since on July 11 the minister undertook to inquire if the parties involved in the Canadif study were prepared to have it made public, is he now in a position to make this available to members of the House of Commons? If not, when does he anticipate being able to do so?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I apologize to the hon. member. The inquiry has been made. I cannot report this morning on the response or if indeed there has been a response. I will inquire about a response.

I have asked for an authenticated French translation from the energy agency, which I will make available. Because of the possibility of an early closing of the House, I have departed from established precedent in not tabling this agreement in both official languages. I hope this will be understood.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege with regard to the tabling of documents?

Mr. Broadbent: No, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour suggested earlier today that those who had questions of privilege arising out of the alleged activities of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) should raise them at twelve o'clock, and I do so.

Mr. Speaker: I propose to take all outstanding questions of privilege with respect to that matter under Motions, which will be called very shortly.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME FOR BILL C-2

On the order: Motions:

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among the House leaders dealing with Bill C-2, and I am prepared to move a motion under Standing Order 75A. However, I would like to be certain of the support of the other House leaders. There have been some exchanges which relate to a statement by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would therefore invite you, Mr. Speaker, to ask the other House leaders whether they are in agreement to proceed with a motion under Standing Order 75A today.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am always prepared to support the President of the Privy Council when there is justice and equity involved. If the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is prepared to make a statement, as I understand he is, with regard to one item which has been contentious, I am sure this would facilitate our giving the government the kind of order about which the President of the Privy Council is speaking.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it was our understanding that agreement had been reached for a motion under Standing Order 75A specifying that later in the session, in other words, when we come back, the debate on the remaining report stage motions and on third reading would be limited to a total of two days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: We have had some discussions, Mr. Speaker, and we have agreed to let Bill C-2 pass within two days.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, if the House is prepared to restrict the debate on Bill C-2 to two days this fall, in a spirit of co-operation, I am willing to assure hon. members that I will move, in due time, an amendment to clause 31.4 which could partly satisfy the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on the matter of franchises. This amendment would partly include the terms of motion No. 5 now appearing on the order paper.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I now move:

That in relation to Bill C-2, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, two sitting days shall be allotted to the consideration of the report stage and the third reading and passage stage of the said bill;

That, after the disposal of the report stage of the said bill, the House shall proceed forthwith to the consideration of the third reading and passage stage of the said bill; and

That, on the second of the said days, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business in such sitting, any proceeding then before the House shall be interrupted, if required for the purpose of this order, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the report stage and the third reading and passage stage of the said bill shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Sharp: I should add that it would not be our intention to call Bill C-2 before we recess. Might I also ask whether there could be agreement, or perhaps an order of the House, that after we have disposed of Bill C-66 today—it is the only government business which remains, as far as the government is concerned—we should revert to motions for the purpose of putting the motion for the adjournment of the House later this day?

Mr. Speaker: It has been proposed by the President of the Privy Council that the House revert to motions later in the day. However, the terminology leaves a number of open-ended factors. First of all, it is conditional upon the passage of a bill and, second, no time is specified. I am not at all sure it is possible for the House to make an order with both these factors unresolved. Perhaps the House could simply indicate that it agrees in principle that the President of the Privy Council might return to the House at a later hour, under other conditions, and apply to the House at that time for permission to revert to motions; the House having given its agreement in principle at this time would not then interfere with the intentions of the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree to that, Mr. Speaker. I would point out that the manner in which the government House leader put forward his proposition reminded us of what happens to us when we ask hypothetical questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Is that consensus of intention agreeable to all members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. REID—NEWSPAPER ARTICLE ALLEGING NOVEMBER BUDGET LEAK

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are two points I wish to make at this time. The first is that I have instructed legal counsel to take all appropriate action against the Montreal Gazette as a result of the statements which were published yesterday and the lack of an adequate retraction. I have also asked that the same action be applied to La Presse of Montreal which carried a verbatim translation of the article which appeared in the Gazette of yesterday morning.

The second point I wish to make is that I have been informed, through my office, that Mr. Nelson of Kenora informed my office that the only communication he had with Outboard Marine Corporation concerning this tax was that he sent the sales manager a copy of my letter to him on December 19.

These are the only two points I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, in addition to what I said yesterday. I am prepared to hear your decision and abide by it. If you find there is a prima facie case of privilege, personal privilege in my case, I have a motion which I would be prepared to move.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before making a decision I might hear the terms of the hon. member's proposed motion.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the motion I would move is as follows:

That all articles contained in the July 24, 25 and any subsequent editions of the Montreal Gazette relating to the conduct of the member for Kenora-Rainy River vis-à-vis the November 18 budget, including most especially the allegations that the said member had advance knowledge of the said budget and conveyed that knowledge to businessmen, and the discrepancy in the editing of the Gazette's purported transcript of the proceedings of this House as compared to the report in the House of Commons Debates for yesterday be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I might, in passing, express some concern about the words "and subsequent editions" because it might appear that we are dealing today with events which could take place on an unending basis. However, I asked the hon. member to read the motion in order that I might have some guidance as to the precise matter which he wanted to have referred to the committee. There are other members who have given the Chair notice, and I take it they ought to be given an opportunity to develop his own question of privilege or to comment on the one which is before the House before I try to make a decision.

● (1210)

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, we believe that this is a bigger question than the simple one whether the parliamentary secretary has a matter of personal privilege that should or should not be referred to the standing committee. I note that the parliamentary secretary indicated that he intends to take legal action against the two newspapers to which he has referred. However, I would point out that perhaps that confirms the fact that not only in most members' minds, but also in the mind of the parliamentary secretary, the Gazette did not withdraw or retract in a substantial way the version in their report which appeared on July 24. I say that because I would draw to the attention of hon. members the statements made in this House yesterday by the parliamentary secretary, as reported at page 7887 of Hansard. He said:

I have asked the Gazette to publish a retraction and apology. If they fail to do so, I can only conclude that it was malicious. If there was malicious intent, then there are serious implications for all members of this House—

He continued:

—if the Gazette refuses to make a retraction tomorrow, and thereby makes it clear that this false and misleading story was published as a result of conscious and malicious intent... I would propose then to move—

He then recited his proposed motion. I think I should be put on the record exactly what the Gazette said in their editorial today. Under an editorial headed "Yes, but..." the editorial reads:

John Reid, Liberal MP for Kenora-Rainy River and Parliamentary Secretary to Privy Council President Mitchell Sharp, disclosed advance information not about last November's budget itself but about a later amendment to the budget.

The editorial continues:

The divulgence of inside information on tax change prior to public announcement is, however, just as serious whether that tax change is included in the budget or in an amendment.

From reading the statement of the parliamentary secretary and the apology that appears in the editorial of the Gazette, I believe it is clear that there has been no retrac-tion in substance, that there is no apology to speak of. I also believe that the malicious intent to which the parliamentary secretary referred yesterday has serious implications for all members of this House. That malicious intent, if it exists, is still not resolved, and I feel that the failure to examine this matter leaves a public cloud over the integrity of every member of this House, if not of parliament itself.

I also point out that in statements made in this House and in letters tabled there appear to be certain conflicts of evidence. I refer specifically to a letter that was tabled by the parliamentary secretary in which he stated:

I have spoken to the Department of Finance officials as well as the minister, and I understand they are likely to relieve the excise tax against boats, although not on motors.

That letter is dated December 19, more than a month before the actual amendment removing the tax was introduced on January 28 of this year. On questioning, however, we find that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is relatively indecisive whether he ever discussed this matter specifically with the parliamentary secretary, and I would say that he was indecisive whether any departmental official was involved.

I would also point out that in the statements made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) today there seem to be certain conflicts with the subsequent statements made by the parliamentary secretary concerning evidence and statements made and given to the Secretary of State either about pre-budget or pre-amendment leaks.

Having indicated those conflicts in certain statements, once again I would emphasize that this is surely a matter for the entire House to be concerned with. I believe that the only proper way of having the matter dealt with is by a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. If Your Honour does not feel it in order to refer the matter in the context that the parliamentary secretary has requested it be referred, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the question of advance knowledge by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, certain of his constituents and others of the January 28 amendment to the excise tax bill, and in particular the subject matter of the articles and editorial in the Montreal Gazette concerning the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, published July 24 and July 25 of this year, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that the committee sit at the earliest opportunity, have power to adjourn from place to place in Canada, that it sit while the House is not sitting, and that it have full power to call for persons and papers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members might be concerned about the presence of two or more motions being moved at the same time. Any proposed motion that has been put forward is put forward conditionally upon the Chair finding a prima facie question of privilege; the motion cannot in fact be moved but, rather, is a contribution to the question of privilege that is being raised alternatively by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) or to the question raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I have also received notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston), but I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is seeking the floor on a point of order.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of what the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has just said. He alleges indecision regarding my ability to be precise about conversations with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). That, of course, is so, but I did declare quite categorically to the House that on no occasion was either the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, or any other member of the House for that matter, given any advance information of the excise provisions in the budget of November 18, or for that matter any other provision.

Mr. Broadbent: By yourself?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): By myself, or, to the best of my knowledge, by my officials.

An hon. Member: To the best of your knowledge.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. Sharp: What more can you get than that?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Nor was any advance information given to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River or to any other member of the intention to present that amendment to the House, other than my cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is probably premature to give an indication of the stand that I propose to take respecting the point raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. However, I would ask other hon. members who wish to make a contribution at this time to make it as brief as possible.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I too rise on a question of privilege. My question arises from articles published in the Montreal Gazette both yesterday and today, and from statements made in the House by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) both yesterday and today. My question of privilege pertains to the fundamental importance of the principle of the maintenance of total secrecy of concerning tax changes in our system of government.

Claims have been made that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River not only had prior certain knowledge of changes that were to be made to the budget in the fall of 1974, but that he conveyed such knowledge to others who may or may not have stood to gain personally from such knowledge. Although the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River denies the accuracy of those claims, the Montreal Gazette stands by its original substantive contention. Specifically, that newspaper reiterated in today's issue that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River confirmed that he told their reporter, with reference to the forthcoming budgetary change at issue here:

We put on a lobby and we knew about six weeks before it was announced that it was coming off the boats but not the motors.

Mr. Speaker, if accurate, this in itself constitutes a serious breach of privilege which goes to the root of the parliamentary system. Serious questions must be asked and answered. The very important matter of confidentiality and responsibility in our system of government involving not only the member for Kenora-Rainy River but also the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is at issue.

If Your Honour should rule that I have a prima facie case for a question of privilege, I would move:

That charges relating to the release of confidential information concerning tax changes as set out in the Montreal Gazette of July 24 and July 25, 1975, and statements made in relation thereto in the House of Commons on the same two days, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, that the said committee be instructed to call the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, the Minister of Finance, Mr. Jacques Hamilton, officials of government departments with whom the member for Kenora-Rainy River is alleged to have had conversations concerning tax changes, and any other persons alleged to have had prior knowledge of forthcoming tax changes, and that the committee be authorized to sit during any recess of the House of Commons.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, in proceedings yesterday the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) quoted comments of mine in part that appeared in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, issue No. 12 of Thursday, March 6, 1975. Reference was made to those comments again today, and the hon. member rather graciously refused to name the source of them. I would not want an impression left that there was any wish on my part to shelter under a cloak of secrecy nor any reason why there should be. In order to set the record straight, I should like to quote the entire paragraph referred to by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

Mr. Speaker, I might say that in what the Gazette called an unabridged but edited version of what happened in the House yesterday there was an unfortunate abridgement which left the impression with any reader of that page that my remarks had actually come from the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: I know the hon. member is loquacious enough that he does not need any help from me in this regard, but this is what has been said, and it was in reference to what I think all members at the time assumed was a hypothetical case. I said:

I am just surprised at how wide the thing is being cast in the example that our witness from Kenora-Rainy River has given us, the particular example that he took. Much of what is involved in this whole business of conflict of interest is how the public sees it and interprets it. I for one on that very precise example said to various people, the Minister is going to withdraw this excise tax provision. And I had no confidential information whatsoever. It was just a good guess on my part, an intuition. I have no stock in any small boat company of any kind, nor did I rush out to purchase any following my statements. But I have no way of knowing whether some of the people who were petitioning me, as you suggested, immediately went out and altered their course of action and when my words turned out to be prophetic, again, I would have no way of knowing. But if anybody did I would hate to think I somehow was now in conflict of interest, or presumed to be, or seemed to be in conflict of interest, simply because I was a bit intuitive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same matter but a different aspect. As a private member of this House, I should like to raise a question of privilege. Yesterday and today at various points in his remarks and answers, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), by direct reference, implication or inference lumped other members of parliament in with himself in terms of representations on the issue of the tax on motors and boats. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that by implication, inference and direct statement he implied that other members of parliament had advance information and knew that such a tax change was going to occur before it did occur.

On December 9, 1974, I wrote to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and made a submission on behalf of three people who had written to me representing two different companies in my constituency. I asked the minister if he would give consideration to exempting the sales tax for people living in remote areas. The minister replied on January 13, and I will quote the meat of his letter as follows:

I have noted your concern related to the impact of the proposed tax on persons living in remote areas. You may be assured that this matter will be reviewed prior to parliament's final consideration of the proposed legislation to implement the special excise tax.

That is all the information I was able to elicit from the minister—the minister only, and from nobody else. I feel, Mr. Speaker, in the context of the issue you are deciding as a matter of privilege, that by inference, implication and direct statement other members of parliament are included in this matter of prior knowledge.

I also feel there is a question of privilege involved in the manner in which the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River replied to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) today, saying in effect that if members of the New Democratic Party did not know of this in advance, by implication they were not doing their job. Mr. Speaker, we made the normal recommendations that other members of parliament made. The hon. member also implied, I submit, that we had advance information, and that if we did not have it we were not doing our job. To add to the injury for other members of this House, as my leader reported to Your Honour earlier today the Montreal Gazette in an editorial today reports:

Mr. Reid has confirmed to us he told our reporter, "We put on a lobby and we knew about six weeks before it was announced that it was coming off the boats but not the motors."

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that "we knew" implies that he and other members of parliament knew. I sure as hell did not know, and the Minister of Finance quite rightly made sure I did not know and indicated that in his letter of January 13. I think the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River should rise in this House and make it abundantly clear that this involves him and him only, and no other member of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: If he has any reason to think otherwise, he had better damned well say so and he had better say it now. That is my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Dealing with the easy part first, perhaps, the alleged question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) is a question of difference, of disagreement. The hon. member can take it up in the way he has, or in some other way. For the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River now to stand in the House and endeavour to say that he was the only one in possession of that information would certainly discount the remarks of the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) who has indicated that he was in a similar position. I think this might be clarified in some other way. This could be a matter for debate or discussion, but to my way of thinking it does not in any way constitute a question of privilege. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

● (1230)

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say, very briefly, that I urge upon Your Honour that indeed there is a question of privilege here. I am much assisted in that conclusion by the words of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

We are all familiar with the ancient parliamentary tradition, maintained with great strictness, about the secrecy of budgets and budgetary matters resulting from the actual budget. This matter is discussed by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River in the committee on privileges and elections. Several very interesting points are raised by him in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, issue No. 12, of that particular committee. I do not wish to read the whole of the very interesting passages. The hon. member raised the question of changes in income tax and went on to say:

> If you have a fairly good idea, based on information that came to you in a confidential way, that the Minister of Finance might and is likely to take that step, and you arrange your affairs so as to take advantage of it or tell people who can arrange their affairs so as to take advantage of it, then it seems to me that you are in conflict of interest.

That is the precise allegation we are discussing here. If one is in conflict of interest, this parliament is the place and the committee on privileges and elections is the committee which should inquire into the alleged conflict of interest. Perhaps I am labouring the obvious, but I suggest there is no possible doubt that there is indeed a prima facie case of breach of privilege. I say "prima facie" because the committee may make very different findings and the House may reject any such case. But I ask you, sir, to rule that there is indeed a prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In terms of the basic question which I have to decide, I do not think it is necessary to hear any further representations. The proposed motions that have been put forward by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) are similar in two very fundamental respects. Both relate to the subject of an investigation by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections as to conflict of interest in general terms.

I would remind hon. members that if they seek consideration of a general question of that sort, there is nothing to restrict them in their ability to put down a substantive motion at any time and to ask the House to consider the advisability of examining the question of conflict of interest or even the actions in a particular instance of what might be an example. I differentiate in the fact that what is sought by way of a question of privilege, if it relates to the conduct of an individual member, must be a specific charge that that member has in fact done something that abuses the privileges of the House, and the member who puts forward such a motion ought to have the burden of taking it before the committee.

This is not to say that no member in a situation of this sort—I want to repeat and emphasize this—has the power to say that because of this examination, or because of the possibility that exists, we ought to be able to examine the question of conflict of interest or leakage of budget secrets, or whatever the general subject may be. Any hon. member who wants to move the House to that effect is able to do it by way of a substantive motion.

Procedurally, what I have to decide is whether such a request for a general investigation into the grounds of a specialized motion of privilege gives it precedence over other general motions. My general impression, without going into the details, for reasons which I will elaborate later, is that I will probably not find in favour of a request for a general investigation of the case by the committee, in other words, that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections find the facts and that the committee find out whether such an abuse of the practices of the House has taken place. I would think that a motion, to be a privilege motion, would have to be much more specific than that in respect of the conduct of any member. I think that is a long established precedent of the House and we have to remain with it.

On the other hand, I am spared some of the agony that the decision would involve, in my opinion, by virtue of the fact that it is not another member who seeks to charge the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) with a breach of conduct. Rather, in the circumstances it is the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River himself who, in his own motion for privilege, seeks to have the committee examine the conduct of the Montreal Gazette and another newspaper, obviously inviting, in the examination of that, an examination of the veracity of their statements and therefore an examination of his own conduct as a member by the standing committee.

An article has been described in the House as having accused an hon. member of a breach of the Official Secrets Act and of a breach of his privileges or rights or an abuse of his rights as a member of this House. The hon. member stood in his place and denied the accuracy of that article. Therefore, what is at issue is an alleged use of a national newspaper to accuse, falsely, a member of a misuse of his privileges as a member of this House.

Certainly, there has been a disposition on all sides of the House to say that, if there is a suggestion that such a thing has taken place, it is a fundamental interference with the rights of every member of the House of Commons to operate freely and perform his functions freely. If that question exists in general terms—and in the circumstances which are before me I can scarcely decide otherwise—I cannot see in any way that the Chair ought to interpose itself, from a procedural point of view, and prevent the House having an opportunity to take a decision in respect of the matter. I do stress, that it is, in the final analysis, a decision of this House which will say whether or not the matter goes to the committee on privileges and elections where the matters that have been discussed and raised by almost all members who have participated can be dealt with.

Therefore, I have no hesitation, under the circumstances, to say that in my opinion the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River does, in fact, have a prima facie case of privilege and the House ought now to decide on the disposition of that prima facie case of privilege in the terms of the motion he has put forward, which is as follows:

That all articles contained in the July 24th, July 25th and any subsequent editions of the Montreal Gazette relating to the conduct of the member for Kenora-Rainy River vis-à-vis the November 18th budget, including most especially the allegation that the said member had advance knowledge of the said budget and conveyed that knowledge to businessmen, and the discrepancy in the editing of the Gazette's purported transcript of the proceedings of this House as compared to the report in the House of Commons Debates, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

In that motion, I presume the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is supported by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier). I suggest the House ought to take a decision. There is a question of whether or not the members ought to be called in before the House takes a decision on the matter, or whether it is possible to simply put that question to the House now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in respect of our procedure from this point on. In view of the fact that this motion is debatable, it seems to me it would only be fair for members to have copies of it in their hands. The fact that two other members have indicated motions they would like to move, in different terms, may result in one or the other of them wishing to move an amendment to the motion in the name of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid).

I therefore suggest to the House that we use the time between now and one o'clock on something else, perhaps Bill C-66, and that the debate on the motion of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River be postponed until two o'clock.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order arising out of your remarks in which you were separating my position from that of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). I would also like to make abundantly clear that there is a separation between my position and that of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). At no time had I had any private conversations whatsoever with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), and any intuitions that came to me came simply from observing this chamber and the course of the debate.

● (1240)

Mr. Speaker: I am dealing, now, only with points of order. Standing Order 17 requires that in such a circumstance the question shall be put forthwith. I am prepared to delay it on the suggestion of the hon. member, but that is the only question to which we are addressing ourselves at the moment, whether we should proceed forthwith, whether the debate should commence now, or whether it should commence at two o'clock.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would like you to consider very seriously the following question, and I will be brief. If this matter goes to committee, and if we are to accept what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) said, namely, that he intends to take action—I assume in a high court—then I want you to consider very carefully, sir, as the head officer of this chamber, whether there can be an investigation going on in the committee at a time when legal action is being taken in a high court of the land.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I simply rise to indicate my general support for the suggestion brought forth by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think it would be proper to resume the debate on this motion at two o'clock.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I simply rise to seek clarification from you of the terms of reference that you indicated. I presume that under the general clause in the terms of reference, the committee would also have the power to send for persons and papers relating to this matter, and that this would be addended. If so, sir, I merely seek clarification, as well, in respect of those terms of reference, as to whether they would also give the committee the power to send for Cabinet ministers as witnesses before the committee, so that they could give the facts in relation not only to themselves but also to the people for whom they have a responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps those are considerations that should be taken up privately among members between now and two o'clock. Those are matters to which consideration should be given and on which there should be consultations, and at two o'clock the House can see what motion might be presented to the House for consideration at that time. Is the House agreed that the matter be taken up at 2 p.m.?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,336, 2,478, 2,542, 2,577, 2,578, 2,675, 2,683, 2,748, 2,863, 2,864, and 2,906.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Question No. 2,478—Mr. Kaplan:

For each year since the signing of the auto pact (a) what was the automotive payroll of the automobile manufacturers of North America (b) what percentage of the total was paid to employees in Canada?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following information on the automotive payroll of the automobile manufacturers of Canada. Data is not available from Statistics Canada for the remainder of North America.

(a) Total Annual Payroll(1) for Motor Vehicle Manufacturing(2) among Larger-Firms(3), Canada, 1957 to 1974, in dollars

1957	51,385,553	1966	121,504,673
1958	44,509,799	1967	125,019,162
1959	55,219,666	1968	140,935,987
1960	54,679,973	1969	161,035,952
1961	57,291,421	1970	158,625,661
1962	66,268,258	1971	195,898,766	prel.
1963	80,154,855	1972	227,317,106	prel.
1964	94,909,412	1973	274,446,420	prel.
1965	115,986,746	1974	295,458,246	prel.

NOTES: (1) Refer to catalogue 42-209, Motor Vehicle Manufacturers which will provide more detailed information.

(2) The sum of the payroll reported during twelve monthly reference periods each of one week's duration (see no. 4 below).

(3) As defined in S.I.C.'s 323, 324, 325 in catalogue 12-501, Standards Industrial Classification Manual, 1960 Edition.

(4) Refer to catalogue 72-002, Employment Earnings and Hours of survey concepts and methods.

(b) Cannot be answered.

* The catalogues referred to in parts (1) and (4) are available from Information Canada.

UNITED NATIONS—CANADIAN EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,542—Mr. Diefenbaker:

Are Canadians employed by the United Nations or any of its agencies or any organizations under its aegis subject to income tax on their earnings?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Canadians who work for international organizations and at the same time maintain residence in Canada within the meaning of the Income Tax Act are subject to income tax on salary and allowances they receive from the international organizations. Certain organizations reimburse the employees the amount of Canadian income tax paid by them, which results in an indirect reduction of Canada's assessed share to the organization; other organizations do not follow this policy. In the latter cases, beginning with the tax year 1973, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been authorized to reimburse, in appropriate cases, those international organizations of which Canada is a member for the full amount of the compensation which is paid to Canadian employees on fixed-term appointments of one to five years to cover their liability for Canadian federal and provincial income tax on the salary, allowances and other compensation they receive from the organization concerned. To date this has been done only in the case of two Canadians employed in senior positions with international organizations. Employees not in the professional categories are subject to income tax on their earnings, but are not subject to the staff assessment. Employees of the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal of this category would be subject to Canadian income tax on their earnings. As Canadian residents pay income tax to regional offices, it is impossible to obtain statistics of those working for international organizations outside of Canada either full time or on short contracts, who actually pay Canadian income taxes.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,577—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): 1. Nil.

2. (a) Nil. (b) Not applicable. (c) $14,000 to the Public Service Commission. (d) $8,230 for other expenses such as Berlitz.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE—LANGUAGE TRAINING COSTS

Question No. 2,578—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Department of the Secretary of State other than the Public Service Commission for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

3. What are the applicable costs for the Public Service Commission?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: 1. Nil in departmental Main Estimates but $159,000 to be sought in Supplementary Estimates plus Treasury Board allocation of $128,700.

2. (a) Because of the many unknown factors involved in the language-training process, such as the length of training time required, the salaries of the individuals involved and the number of individuals who will require language training during a given period, it is not possible to estimate the total salaries of those who will receive instruction during the 1975-76 fiscal year. However, the Treasury Board has allocated the amount of $128,700 to the department from vote 15 for the employees who will replace those on continuous language training. (b) The salaries of the instructional staff employed by the Public Service Commission's language schools are paid by the commission, not by the individual departments. The salaries of the monitors and teachers working within this department are included under item (c). (c) Services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission amount to $159,000. (d) Nil.

In so far as the Public Service Commission, as a department, is concerned: 3. (a) as in 2. $366,600. (b) Nil. (c) $43,200. (d) Nil.

Order Paper Questions

BLUMA APPEL

Question No. 2,675—Mr. Robinson:

What criteria will be used and what programme will be carried out by Bluma Appel in urging male executives of large companies to appoint women to their boards of directors?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Bluma Appel is visiting executives of large companies as liaison officer for the minister responsible for the Status of Women to bring the question of equal opportunity for women to their attention in International Women's Year.

TRANSPORTATION OF WHEAT

Question No. 2,683—Mr. Grafftey:

1. Was a mercy ship named the Atlantic Eagle commissioned to transport Canadian wheat from the Port of Montreal to Ethiopia and/or Samalia and, if so (a) how many tons of wheat were involved (b) on what date was it to be delivered (c) how many and which government agencies have been involved to date (d) what was the original cost estimate of the shipment (e) what is the revised cost estimate?

2. Apart from strikes at the Port of Montreal, have there been any other factors involved with the delay of the shipment and, if so (a) what are they (b) have they involved any revised and increased cost estimate?

3. Did the men at the Port of Montreal loading the Atlantic Eagle cease work because bags containing wheat were vermin infested and, if so (a) what action is now under way to rectify the situation (b) is an investigation being carried out by the government to see how and for what reason this situation developed?

4. How many bags of wheat were filled in the first instance?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The ship Atlantic Eagle was chartered by Canadian Commercial Corporation for and on behalf of the Canadian International Development Agency to transport Canadian wheat from the port of Montreal to Ethiopia and/or Somalia. (a) Tonnage involved 10,262 net metric tons. (b) The wheat was to be delivered to meet vessel lay days March 15 to 31, 1975. (c) The government agencies involved to date are: (1) The Canadian Wheat Board, (2) The Canadian International Development Agency, (3) The Canadian Commercial Corporation; (d) Original cost estimate of shipment was: Wheat, $2,196,-068.00; Transportation, $554,148.00; Total, $2,750,216.00; (e) The revised cost estimate is the same as (d) above plus out-of-pocket expenses, estimated $200,000, which have been incurred by the vessel's owners for ships time, extra bunkers, dockage, extra stevedoring, fumigation, survey fees, overtime and sundry expenses.

2. (a) Apart from strikes at the port of Montreal, the shipment was delayed when the union safety inspector was called in and ordered the stevedores to cease working on the ship as vermin had been reported seen. (b) Increased cost estimate outlined in 1 (e) above.

3. The men at the port of Montreal ceased loading the Atlantic Eagle on orders from their union safety inspector because the bags containing wheat were considered to be vermin infested. (a) The actions taken to rectify the situation were as follows: (1) The vessel and cargo that had been loaded (approximately 400 tons) was re-fumigated; (2) After fumigation the cargo on board was unloaded and the contents of all bags that were torn or holed were screened and re-bagged; (3) All cargo in sound bags was palletized and then loaded on the vessel. (b) Yes.

4. 205,240 bags of wheat were filled in the first instance.

WATER—PERMISSIBLE LEVEL OF RADIOACTIVE CONCENTRATION

Question No. 2,748—Mr. Francis:

What is the maximum permissible level of radioactive concentration in drinking water and how is the permissible level determined as there is little knowledge of the effects of long range low-level radioactive exposure on human beings?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The government has not established maximum permissible levels of radionuclides in drinking water. The maximum permissible doses scheduled in the Atomic Energy Control Regulations relate to exposures from radionuclides ingested in water as well as to exposures from other sources.

SAMSON—CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,863—Mr. Forrestall:

Can the Minister of National Defence give any assurances with respect to the continued employment by the government of DND civilian employees presently operating the communications system after the full introduction of SAMSON, particularly those resident now in Atlantic Canada?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The SAMSON program will not be fully implemented until at least 1977 and the number of civilian employees required for the system has not yet been determined.

AES TECHNICIAN STAFF

Question No. 2,864—Mr. Brisco:

1. How many airports in Canada do not have AES presentation technician staff?

2. Who is providing the Aviation Weather Briefing Services at Aeradio Stations at such airports?

3. Which airports are involved in Parts 1 and 2?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. The number of airports in Canada that do not have AES presentation technician staff is very large and is changing continuously as additional offices staffed with presentation technicians are located at 57 principal airports in Canada.

2. AES certified pre-flight weather information services are provided at designated Aeradio stations by MOT CATA staff.

3. Part 1—Airports with AES presentation technicians: Brandon, Man., Calgary, Alta., Castlegar, B.C., Churchill, Man., Dauphin, Man., Edmonton, Alta., Edmonton/Industrial, Alta., Fort Nelson, B.C., Fort St. John, B.C. Fredericton, N.B., Frobisher, N.W.T., Gander, Nfld., Goose, Nfld., Halifax, N.S., Hamilton, Ont., Inuvik, N.W.T., Kamloops, B.C., Kelowna, B.C., Kingston, Ont., Kitchener/Waterloo-Wellington, Ont., Lethbridge, Alta., London, Ont., Matagami, Que., Moncton, N.B., Montreal, Que., North Bay, Ont., Ottawa, Ont., Peace River, Alta., Penticton, B.C., Peterborough, Ont., Port Hardy, B.C., Prince Albert, Sask., Prince George, B.C., Quebec, Que., Regina, Sask., Resolute, N.W.T., Saint John, N.B., Sarnia, Ont., Saskatoon, Sask. Sault St. Marie, Ont., Sept Iles, Que., St. Catharines, Ont., St. Hubert, Que., St. John's, Nfld., Sudbury, Ont., Sydney, N.S., Terrace, B.C., Thunder Bay, Ont. Toronto, Ont., Toronto Island, Ont., Val d'Or, Que., Vancouver, B.C., Victoria, B.C., Whitehorse, Y.T.; Part 2—Airports with pre-flight weather information services provided by CATA staff: Lynn Lake, Man., Timmins, Ont., Wabush, Nfld..

R CLASS ICEBREAKERS

Question No. 2,906—Mr. Forresstall:

Will the $5 million reduction in expenditures by the Department of Transport on the R Class icebreakers delay the programme and, if so, for how long?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): After consideration of program priorities within the ministry and the capability of the shipyard in regard to delivery schedules, the ministry has sought and obtained Treasury Board concurrence to have the required $5 million reduction spread across Marine Capital Appropriations rather than applying this reduction wholly to the R class contract. It is anticipated, therefore, that the required spending cut will not affect the R Class icebreaker programme.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, July 24, consideration in committee of Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

On clause 1—"gasoline."

Mr. Towers: Madam Chairman, I suggested yesterday that we would be presenting an amendment to the bill before us, Bill C-66. I think it is a very important amendment. On two occasions which come to mind, the Minister of Finance changed policy he had announced on the suggestion of the Official Opposition, for which we are particularly grateful.

The first time was when he brought in legislation exempting the capital gains tax on farms transferred from father to son on the death of the father. At that time the minister felt that he was fulfilling our request. When we pointed out to him that the alteration was inadequate because the exemption should apply when such a transfer took place during the lifetime of a father and son, the minister complied. Another example was in the June 23 budget when the minister removed the duty on hymn books with or without printed music under tariff item 17210-1.

We now trust that the amendment which we are submitting, to add dyed or marked gasoline to the list of eligible exemptions, will receive the minister's approval. This is a very important and reasonable proposal concerning the well-being of the agricultural economy which would have a significant bearing on the finances of all those involved. I cannot stress too vehemently the merit of this amendment. I do not condemn the Minister of Finance for omitting dyed gasoline when the legislation was formulated because, being a resident of Ottawa and representing an urban riding, he might not be aware of the situation. While the minister has stated that there is no significant difference between imposing this gasoline tax on diesel fuel and imposing it on gasoline used for farming, I suggest there is.

I should like to refer to page 7132 of Hansard, where the following exchange took place between the minister and me:

MR. GORDON TOWERS (RED DEER): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is it correct to assume that diesel fuel will not be affected in any way by the ten-cent tax on gasoline?

HON. JOHN N. TURNER (MINISTER OF FINANCE): Your people were right.

MR. TOWERS: Would the same answer hold true with regard to bulk sales of gasoline to farmers?

MR. TURNER (OTTAWA-CARLETON): If the fuel is being used for farm purposes, yes.

The difference lies in the fact that diesel fuel is in no way, shape or form affected, while purple gas, which the minister says is to be treated in the same way, is affected because it is included with gasoline, even though it is totally refundable. This means that the bulk dealer must pay the ten cents a gallon tax to the supplier, and the farmer is compelled to pay the tax to the bulk dealer and then make application to the federal government for total reimbursement. To me, this is a futile exercise which does not benefit anyone, yet creates a headache for bulk dealers and for farmers who must apply for total refund, and eventually for the government to administer the refunds without receiving one penny in tax. Today retailers and consumers have too many problems without having to bear another burden of extra financing and bookkeeping, leading to more frustration.

As I said earlier, I am not criticizing the Minister of Finance for not including this gasoline, because apparently he did not realize there was such an oversight. But I do blame the supposed great champion of the farmers, the Minister of Agriculture, and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board who, if they are to be classed as responsible ministers competently representing producers of agricultural products, should be aware of this fact. I also place blame on the Liberal backbenchers because they failed to bring up this point. The hon. member for Scarborough West said that government backbenchers are 100 per cent behind this tax. This can only mean that the backbenchers, along with the two ministers just mentioned, either do not care about what is happening or they do not know, or both.

I have discussed the ten cents a gallon tax with several bulk dealers in my constituency, one of whom handles approximately 600,000 gallons of gas per year. He will have to provide an additional $60,000 to finance his operation. Another dealer sells about 1,200,000 gallons, which will result in a pay out of $120,000 extra during the year. I also spoke to the manager of a small, totally Canadian-owned oil company with a business amounting to $750,000 per year. He explained to me that he does not make a big profit, that his finances are limited and that this tax will place a severe strain on his company because most of the bulk dealers are compelled to extend credit; if they run into bad debts, not only do they lose the value of the product but the total tax as well.

In view of the fact that there are about 326,804,000 gallons within this category of marked or dyed gasoline, representing in the vicinity of $33 million in additional financing without one dollar being returned to the federal treasury, does this not prove my point? I should explain at this time that the figures I am using are the latest available from Statistics Canada. They are for the year 1973, and I presume the figures for the current year would be higher.

This manoeuvre is completely senseless if the bill is not amended. It is unacceptable, and it will be inflationary. While I know that some of this turnover will be on a monthly basis and part yearly, this extra cost can only add to the inflation factor. In view of the fact that this tax has a direct effect on all the western provinces, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island which have marked gas, could the minister not make provision to include the other provinces so that all gas used for agricultural and industrial purposes would be exempt from this tax entirely?

I certainly hope the Minister of Finance will accept this amendment. I know that the hon. member for Vegreville will make some supporting remarks, and perhaps others from our side. I trust that the minister will listen to them to ensure that this gross error is corrected. The amendment I would like to propose at this time is couched in the terminology of the act as implemented by the statutes of the province of Alberta. I move:

That Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be amended in clause 1 by deleting line 10 on page 1 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"other than aircraft engines, but does not include any fuel oil which has been marked by any dye, agent or other substance under the authority of a provincial statute.

Mr. Peters: Madam Chairman, the hon. member, in moving his motion, referred, if I am correct, to aircraft engines and marked fuels. If that is correct, there is a new dimension which I wish to bring to the attention of the minister because I presume he has overlooked much of the travel that is done on highways by diesel-driven vehicles.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Diesel fuel is not included.

Mr. Peters: As I understand it, the amendment has added other fuels and I suggest that we are giving an unfair advantage to Peugeots and Mercedes, both of which are operating now with a ten-cent federal sales tax at the pump. If we only use the word "gasoline" in this amendment we are including a new category. I am not in the least opposed to exempting marked gasoline because I am sure all the provinces accept and understand its exemption, but I would ask the minister if he will also give consideration to extending the definition to diesel fuel used for highway purposes.

Madam Chairman, may I call it one o'clock?

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

PRIVILEGE

MR. REID—NEWSPAPER ARTICLE ALLEGING NOVEMBER BUDGET LEAK

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just before one o'clock the House was in committee of the whole and would at this time ordinarily be resuming consideration of Bill C-66 in committee of the whole. However, it was agreed that we should give consideration at two o'clock to the question of privilege raised previously, and to the motion of referral of that question to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I understood that there were to be discussions about the possibility of amending the proposed motion.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the House leaders concerning the terms of the motion to be proposed by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). He is agreeable to an amendment which I believe will be proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose an amendment which will make it possible for the committee to consider certain aspects of this matter. When I proposed my motion earlier today I indicated, on behalf of my colleagues, that we think this is desirable. As the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) said, there have been discussions involving this party, the government and the official opposition. Three parties, at least, are unanimously willing to accept the proposed amendment.

I therefore wish to move:

That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom the words "most especially", and also by inserting therein, immediately after the word "businessmen", the following words: "and that the said member had advance knowledge from official sources of amendments to be proposed to a bill emanating from the said budget and conveyed that knowledge to businessmen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There has been some indication that the said amendment, which I presume is seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has been discussed among all parties. If that is so, I presume the House is ready for the amended motion to be put. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly to the motion, including the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We agreed that we would not put the motion. It is a debatable motion. At least, we agreed that we would not call it in the ordinary way. Perhaps the motion ought to be put at this time. The hon. member and others can then speak to the motion, and he can put his amendment.

The motion is the following: Mr. Reid, seconded by Mr. Ethier, moves:

That all articles contained in the July 24th, July 25th Montreal Gazette relating to the conduct of the member for Kenora-Rainy River vis-à-vis the November 18 budget, including most especially the allegations that the said member had advance knowledge of the said budget and conveyed that knowledge to businessmen, and the discrepancy in the editing of the Gazette's purported transcript of the proceedings of this House as compared to the report in the House of Commons Debates, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly to this important motion. The issue is this: it is the tradition of parliamentary governments, a tradition in which we share, that all matters pertaining to tax changes, whether introduced before a budget, in a budget or after a budget, shall be kept absolutely secret until introduced. The principle is that such changes in tax law shall be kept secret and shall be kept within the confines of the minister of finance and the cabinet.

Most serious allegations have been made. A newspaper article in the Montreal Gazette of two days ago alleged that a member of this House violated that principle, namely, that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) had advance knowledge of the details of the budget of last fall and had advance knowledge of changes that were to be made subsequent to that budget, and that in each instance he conveyed that information, which ought to have been kept secret, to other parties, in this case outside the House of Commons.

The principle we are considering does not distinguish between information conveyed to people outside the House and information conveyed to people within the House. It is alleged that the hon. member did convey such information to a businessman, outside the House. Without doubt, if the allegation that the business firm was so informed is accurate, that firm had a substantial financial interest in obtaining such information in advance.

● (1410)

There are two points to consider. One is the general and important matter of maintaining budgetary secrecy. The second is that in the particular instance of the alleged breach of this principle, the breach itself involved the conveyance of information to a person or persons who could have gained in a substantial financial way by obtaining such information.

The allegation that is involved is of fundamental importance to our whole tradition of government in Canada. I do not intend to elaborate in much greater detail; enough points have been made on the issue in the House in the past two days without the necessity of extended discussion today. I am sure the House will pass a motion to have a standing committee of this House investigate the serious charges, charges which, incidentally, involve not only a member of this House but, on the other side of the coin, the Montreal Gazette as to whether it should be held responsible for a serious breach.

It would be presumptuous of anyone in the House to reach a conclusion at this stage as to who ultimately must be held responsible in the situation we are now discussing. Did the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River commit the serious breach of which he is accused, or do the Montreal Gazette and others who have made the allegation have to be held responsible for making that allegation if it turns out to be incorrect?

As I understand the procedure, I will have to formally move the amendment that I discussed briefly when we came back at two o'clock. Before moving the amendment, I wish to suggest five areas of concern related specifically to the motion that the New Democratic Party believes must be gone into in a most thorough fashion.

First, there is the question of knowledge of the fall, 1974, budget by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. Did he or did he not, have foreknowledge of the details of that budget? Related to that, did he, or did he not, have knowledge of changes which were going to be made subsequent to the budget? Second, assuming that the hon. member had such knowledge, from whom did he obtain it? Did he obtain it from officials in the ministry of finance or in other departments, or did he get it elsewhere? Again, on the assumption that he had the information, we must find out the source.

Third, again assuming that the hon. member had the information, did he communicate the details of the fall, 1974, budget to anyone, and did he communicate details of proposed changes in that budget between last November and January of this year? Assuming he had the information, was there any subsequent communication of it?

Fourth, again on the assumption that such information was conveyed to a businessman or businessmen, to what extent would this knowledge have proved to be financially advantageous to such businessman or businessmen? That must also be considered by this committee.

Finally, on the broader range of ministerial responsibility we would like the committee to look into the question of what limits, if any, there are to the responsibilities of the Minister of Finance for any breaches of the secrecy principle concerning budgetary matters that may be involved in this particular case.

I wish to quote briefly from two sources which suggest the framework from which ministerial responsibility might be assessed in this particular case. The first quotation is from a study by Geoffrey Marshall and Graeme C. Moodie entitled "Some Problems of the Constitution". The most recent is the fourth edition, published in 1967. These two constitutional authorities have the following to say about ministerial responsibility in this kind of matter:

> If culpable action within a department clearly falls into the sphere where reasonable diligence on the minister's part in controlling his department would have led to his being personally aware of the issue then a failure to act can be construed as a personal fault. If, on the other hand, it does not fall within such a class of matters, or if deliberate disobedience has occurred, then the minister may properly disclaim fault on behalf of himself.

That general description of ministerial responsibility is one with which my party is in full agreement. I wish to quote another authority who reaches a conclusion which basically is a corollary of this principle, if accepted, that is assuming the minister is not directly responsible for a breach that exists within his department. If there is a breach which exists beyond the personal area of responsibility, what should be the guideline which sets out the course of action the minister must take in such a situation? The authority in this case is N. H. Brasher. I wish to quote from his publication "Studies in British Government". He sets out a position with which we are in general agreement:

> The minister cannot be held responsible for every peccadillo committed by the thousands employed in his ministry. He must, however, explain the position to parliament and take the necessary corrective action. The same principle applies if a major fault in the working of a government department is exposed.

I took longer to deal with the possible responsibility of the Minister of Finance in this case because that aspect of the matter in the past couple of days has not been dealt with to any degree. I repeat, it is an important matter to be looked into by the committee. Having made those points about the seriousness of the issue, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom the words "most especially", and also by inserting therein, immediately after the word "businessmen", the following words: "and that the said member had advance knowledge from official sources of amendments to be proposed to a bill emanating from the said budget and conveyed that knowledge to businessmen".

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will oblige the Chair by writing out the amendment. One has been provided to the Chair; it is an amended version of the original motion. It does not constitute an amendment; it is an indication of what the motion would be if adopted. The amendment has been repeated twice. I have the language in front of me. I can at least indicate that it has been moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom the words "most especially", and also by inserting therein, immediately after the word "businessmen", the following words: "and that the said member had advance knowledge from official sources of amendments to be proposed to a bill emanating from the said budget and conveyed that knowledge to businessmen".

● (1420)

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Just a word on this matter, Mr. Speaker. We agreed to the amendment which has been put forward since it does clarify the original proposal in a couple of important respects.

I do not intend to take the time of the House by suggesting directions the committee might take; I assume it will take its responsibilities very seriously and will hear arguments from all sides as to precisely what those responsibilities are. In view of the obvious importance of the questions involved—the leader of the New Democratic Party has mentioned three or four points, but there are some others, too—I should like to urge that the committee adopt the broadest possible interpretation of its reference and its responsibilities. I call on the government side of the House to recognize what those responsibilities are and, without being offensive about it, I urge that the committee should in no way take advantage of its majority of government members to restrict the breadth of depth of the inquiry or to restrict in any way the witnesses to be called.

I hope that the chairman, who I believe is in the chamber this afternoon, will facilitate to the fullest extent the calling of witnesses including ministers, if it be the wish of any significant number of members on the committee to hear such witnesses. I express the hope—and I know this is the wish of all members of the House, including the parliamentary secretary—that the committee will get down to work as soon as possible and pursue its task as vigorously as possible to a conclusion.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, as agreed this morning at the meeting of the spokesmen for the four parties in the House, where we requested that the motion be more complete, we agree, as requested by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. But we would like to add that we insist that all documents, requested both by the majority and the minority, must be produced at the committee if those documents exist, and all persons who are called before the committee do appear before it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Broadbent) agreed to.

Motion (Mr. Reid) as amended, agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at one o'clock an amendment to clause 1 was under consideration.

Mr. Peters: Madam Chairman, when the committee rose we were considering an amendment to exempt what is commonly known in a number of provinces as purple gas intended for farm use. Gasoline marked for farm purposes is, I believe, used in five provinces including Ontario. The amendment would, it seems to me, commend itself to attention by the minister because it would eliminate the necessity of supervising rebates to farmers who in any case would be exempt under this legislation. There would be no need for them to make applications for refunds and to receive rebates. Thus, if he were to accept this amendment, the minister could, in co-operation with the provinces, eliminate a large number of people from the bureaucratic process in this respect.

There is another advantage attached to this proposition, and it is that the provinces are already supervising the use of coloured gas. Readiness to issue such gas means the provinces are willing to define the terms "farmers" and designate those who are eligible to use this gasoline. In addition, it means the provinces are willing to supervise the bootlegging which inevitably follows the issue of any concession which the majority does not enjoy. The provinces are already cautious about young lads who are caught on the highway with coloured gasoline in their automobiles when it should really be in the farm tractor, and they are ready to impose certain penalties. Indeed, they have developed some expert methods of ascertaining when gasoline is being used for a purpose other than that which has been designated. Although, again, co-operation with the provinces would be required, I am sure all provinces on behalf of the farmers would be willing to introduce marked gasoline so that the farmers will not have to pay the tax and then ask for a rebate.

● (1430)

The hon. member for Red Deer mentioned that not only will the individual farmer be inconvenienced by having to apply for a rebate but the distributors, the bulk plants, under the minister's legislation will have to pay the full amount of the tax and then apply for a rebate themselves. Many farmers have an arrangement with the bulk plants under which they do not make any payment until late in the fall. In such cases the bulk plant will have to pay the extra tax, which it is true will be rebated, for a period of time during which the farmers are not reimbursing them. If coloured gas were used, we would eliminate much of this difficulty.

I would also like to ascertain from the minister why a very small number of people were allowed to get this advantage. It is a fact that gasoline is in a little different category from diesel oil, kerosene or other products used for aviation purposes or in trucks. However, some cars driven for pleasure, such as Peugeots and Mercedes, use those products too, and it seems to me their owners are receiving an unfair advantage.

The minister might say that he did not want to give this advantage to that particular category, but already we are putting a ten cents tax on fuel used for highway driving, whether it be gasoline or diesel oil. This would mean a second ten cents would have to be paid. Obviously, it would apply to truckers as well and would mean that the truckers would have to pay the ten cents a gallon when they went to the pumps for their diesel fuel and would have to request a rebate.

It seems to me that the minister is being quite inconsistent. If he does not want the truckers to have to apply for a rebate, why should the farmers? It cannot be said that in the one case it is too complicated whereas the gas used by the truckers does not have the ten cents applied to it. The truckers do not even have to apply for a rebate.

As far as the farmers are concerned, their gasoline would carry no tax, either provincial or federal. The gas is coloured and put into the tanks by the oil company. The company is willing to certify that it has supplied so many gallons of coloured gasoline to the farmer, and this is done on the basis of an annual report. It seems to me that the minister's officials have not advised him very well because he has two programs, one for the truckers who do not have to apply for a rebate because they use diesel oil, and another for the farmers who use a specific product that is already marked. They are not exempt and will have to request a rebate. As I say, this seems to me to be inconsistent.

I hope the minister does not do what almost every government agency has been doing, and that is to employ people to supervise collection of revenues. In many cases these jobs are simply created so as to avoid putting people on the unemployment insurance rolls. Most farmers and farm organizations understand the use of marked gas and have operated in five provinces with marked gas for a number of years. Even in Ontario they used it for a number of years and are quite familiar with the regulations and penalties. The province is willing to supervise the collection of the first ten cents, and I suggest that the second ten cents that we are now applying could be dealt with similarly. It would provide an opportunity for the federal government to get some service out of the provincial governments. Certainly under this legislation the federal government will not be collecting one cent more tax in the federal field than the province of Ontario will be collecting in the provincial field.

I hope the minister will be fair and equitable in his treatment of the two categories, those using diesel oil who are exempt, and the farmers who use marked gasoline and who are also considered exempt by the provinces as well as by a previous federal administration. I think both categories should be treated the same way in this legislation.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Chairman, I rise simply to support as vigorously as I can the amendment presented by my colleague from Red Deer. The excise tax as applied to farm fuel can best be described as a nuisance tax. It really does not provide any appreciable benefit to the treasury or to other budgetary provisions put forward by the finance minister. I think the proposal advanced by my colleague is sound, logical and sensible and I hope the minister will give it serious consideration.

I think the minister will probably suggest that, this being a manufacturer's tax, it may be somewhat difficult to identify. But we have ample precedent. A farmer who is engaged in the production of agricultural products is exempt from federal sales tax. When he buys an article that he requires for that purpose, he simply files an end user's certificate and does not pay the tax at the time of purchase.

The hon. member for Timiskaming outlined the manner in which purple or coloured gas is handled in the provinces. That, too, is a tax that can be applied at source with the manufacturer, and any administrative difficulties are quite minute. As I say, I think this proposal is logical and sensible and will certainly be most helpful to the farmer and particularly to the bulk dealers, who on this particular issue are going to be caught in a squeeze.

● (1440)

I was quite amused by the speech of the Minister of National Revenue. He used averages that suggested the western farmer burns about 1,000 gallons of gas per year. That may be an average, but I would suggest to the Minister of Finance and his colleagues that it is misleading. I checked with a couple of bulk dealers in my constituency. The amount of purple gas used by a farmer is more likely to be 3,000 gallons. Nearly every farmer has a second tractor which burns purple gas, certainly not diesel oil.

A farmer with a half-section would use 45 or 50 gallons a day for combining and probably about 1,000 gallons in total. The second tractor, used for spraying, fertilizing, cutting and baling hay, and probably a half-ton pick-up truck or delivery truck, would probably use another 1,000 or 1,500 gallons in a year. Conservatively speaking, the average half-section farm would consume about 3,000 gallons per year.

There is a problem in that the tax applies in respect of the bulk dealer. The bulk dealer in my constituency of Vegreville indicated to me that half the gas used on farms is purple gas. He expects that it will take about $40,000 or $50,000 additional operating capital for him to maintain his accounts receivable because most deliveries are on a net 30-day basis or sometimes 60 days, 90 days or even six months. He told me that the oil companies are claiming 1½ per cent interest on all accounts past due, so he is faced with paying interest on funds that are just being transmitted through the system. There is no sense in this exercise whatsoever, Madam Chairman.

If the proposed amendment is not acceptable to the minister, I am sure my hon. friend would be prepared to make a change in the wording. I think the principle is well enunciated, however, and I hope the minister will give it serious consideration. This morning I spoke to representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and was told that just this week they had passed a resolution asking the government to develop a suitable system, in consultation with them, to provide exemptions from the excise tax at the point of sale. That is precisely what this amendment attempts to do.

I think the other area that we should be concerned with is the possibility of an exemption certificate for commercial trucking concerns who will have hundreds of thousands of dollars tied up in excise tax while it goes through the hands of the dealers, the government and back to the transportation industry. I think the provincial government procedures in such cases are quite elaborate and could probably be followed here, and any abuses could easily be found. I am not sure if the provisions of this bill allow enough flexibility for the issue of exemption certificates, and I hope the minister will clear up that matter. If the bill has that flexibility, I think certificates should be issued and, if not, I strongly suggest that such a provision be incorporated in the bill. I would be glad to move an amendment to that effect.

We are not looking at small sales here; we are looking at tank wagon sales. I think the general application as it applies to commercial trucking, to tank wagon sales, should be considered as exempted purchases. If that provision of flexibility is not already contained in the bill, it should be. If the minister were to incorporate it he would be doing a great favour to the trucking industry and the agricultural industry and also to the Department of National Revenue. It would certainly streamline and modify the cumbersome bureaucratic procedures that will otherwise have to be followed. I hope the minister will clarify this point so that we can further consider all the amendments we may be advancing to future clauses.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Chairman, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Red Deer on this amendment and welcome hon. friends to my right back to the fight. I cannot understand why the advisers to the minister did not realize the implications of clause 1 when they were drafting the bill. As a matter of fact, I cannot understand why the minister accepted their advice. The dummy that advised him on this one should be fired tomorrow—even today. The bill exempts farmers and fishermen who, in several of the provinces, use gasoline as described in the amendment—"which has been marked by any dye, agent or other substance under the authority of a provincial statute."

Since they are exempted already in this legislation, I do not understand why the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue want them to apply for rebates. Think of the administration costs involved in processing the tens of thousands of applications. Think of the thousands of complaints members of parliament will get from farmers and fishermen if the rebates are late, and the trouble they will have trying to get extra copies of receipts and bills to submit in support of their applications.

All the minister has to do is agree that gasoline as described in the amendment should be exempt from the tax at the point of the 20 refiners and 13 importers. There would then be no necessity for the farmers and fishermen to apply for a rebate on gasoline that has been "marked by any dye, agent or other substance under the authority of a provincial statute." Alberta and Saskatchewan have these exemptions. I believe this is also the case in British Columbia, Quebec and, I think, Nova Scotia. In any case, five or six provinces have these exemptions and mark the gasoline with a dye agent or other substance.

Why would the minister want people to buy the gas that is exempt, under provincial statute, from gasoline tax, pay the ten cents a gallon excise tax and then turn around and apply for a refund, when he could eliminate all that administrative effort by just accepting the amendment? He would be exempting that gasoline at the source. It seems to me eminent good sense. I do not know why we should try to be so helpful to the government on a bad piece of legislation, but since we are conscientious, hard working members of parliament we will be as helpful as we can to the Minister of Finance.

I would like to hear whatever logical reason the minister can give this committee as to why he would want to unnecessarily duplicate the effort if he could eliminate the necessity for applying for rebates by accepting the amendment. If he is worried, as the hon. member for Timiskaming said, about policing at least five and maybe six or seven of the provinces which have exemptions on marked or dyed gasoline, and already have the machinery in place for policing any violations for bootlegging of purple gas or gas that is marked for some specific purpose, I am sure that he and his officials—the Minister of National Revenue in particular—could arrive very quickly at understandings, agreements or regulations at the federal-provincial level that would include, in the provincial policing of these exemptions, policing pertaining to the excise tax.

In the case of undyed or unmarked gasoline which would be used in a farm truck, when a farmer has other than a farm licence plate and he is doing commercial trucking, he must use gasoline that is unmarked or undyed and he will have to pay the ten cents a gallon. But if he is in a commercial enterprise as spelled out in the legislation, he will be eligible to apply for and get a rebate when he satisfies the Minister of National Revenue that he has provided sufficient and proper evidence. So there is no problem on that score.

A farmer who has a truck with a commercial licence rather than a farm licence plate, and buys orange or red gas for it, is still eligible for the rebate because he is in a commercial enterprise and he hauls grain, cattle or agricultural products for someone else, not for his own farming operation. He is treated in the same way as any other commercial or business enterprise. But for the purposes of the farmer's own farming operation, whether it is his tractor, half-ton truck or his bigger truck, by exempting purple gas or any marked or dyed gas the minister will have eliminated the necessity for applying for rebates. We must remember that there are over 300,000 family farm operations in Canada, and goodness knows how many tens of thousands of fishermen who may be using purple, marked or dyed gasoline in their boats.

I am sure the Minister of National Revenue could forget about adding the 200 or 300 people to his administrative staff to process the applications and send out cheques for rebates if this amendment were adopted, unless of course one of the purposes of the bill is to help solve unemployment. But if that is one of the purposes, the minister should say so. Perhaps we would have some sympathy for this measure, although I do not think we would even then. Surely to goodness, if for no other reason than administrative good sense and efficiency, and to obviate what I predict will be a whole host of letters to members of parliament who have farmers, fishermen, or both, in their ridings to equal the number of unemployment insurance letters that we get in the middle of winter, reading, "I applied for a rebate on August such-and-such and it is now January and I have not received it. Why can't I get a rebate on my boat or truck?"

The minister should ignore the idiots in his department who drafted this bill and accept an amendment that is eminently sensible. Perhaps the minister could stand up quickly and say he will accept the amendment and thus shut me up, at least on this amendment. If there are some hon. members in this place who are still in a hurry, accepting this amendment would speed things up a little, at least on this clause.

Madam Chairman, I submit to the minister very seriously that the thrust of the legislation he has put before us, even though I disagree with it, can be better served if he eliminates the need for applying for rebates for those who are eligible for exemption. It seems to me that it is so simple and obvious that it should appeal to the good sense of all hon. members, particularly my friends on the government side. I hope the minister will now rise and tell us he accepts this amendment or else try to give us some reasons for not accepting it.

Mr. Schellenberger: Madam Chairman, while not wanting to repeat all the good and valid arguments that had been made in favour of the amendment, which I have the honour to second, I should like to bring forward one added comment that I think the minister should take into consideration in accepting this amendment. It is that this tax will place an extra burden on farmers during two seasons in their working year which already place a burden on them, that is in the spring and in the fall.

When you look at the statistics, you find that every person who lives on acreages of land suitable for farming, and whose income is higher than $50, is considered to be a farmer. If you divide that figure into the 326 million gallons of purple gas used, you find that each farmer has only 1,000 gallons. But the situation is that a farmer who is really in the business of agriculture has a much higher income than $50 a year, and as a result this burden of ten cents a gallon on his agricultural fuel costs will be a significant increase, especially in the spring and fall.

I might add that farmers are already burdened with interest on their credit of some $1,500 a year. If we add the interest that they may have to pay in extra working capital to satisfy the extra cost of gasoline, that figure may escalate more and place an extra burden on people who already have a difficult time. I support the amendment on behalf of farmers and bulk dealers.

● (1500)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Say yes.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, I have to be very careful about how I respond to proposed amendments. I do not want to convert the committee into a whole group of insiders.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Our problem is that only eight of the provinces utilize marked gasoline. If this amendment were accepted there would be an exemption for such gasoline in eight provinces and not in two others. Therefore a federal tax in its operation would be discriminatory as among various provinces. We have always tried to arrange a tax which has equal application all across the country. If the bill is accepted by this committee and goes through parliament, that does not preclude our attempting to see what we can do and whether we can get some uniformity. I do not exclude that. I am just saying that in the current situation we have this problem.

I understand the force of the amendment; the approach illustrated in the amendment would mean that exemptions from a federal tax would be dependent upon provincial legislation. Provincial legislation is not necessarily uniform among the provinces. Of course that legislation can be changed at any time unilaterally by the provinces.

This is the same situation which dictated my having to change our approach on the characterization of equalization as it related to additional revenues from oil and gas. Originally we had proposed that if the producing provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia were to put the revenues into a capital fund, we could exclude those additional revenues. It became quite apparent to the federal government and the other provinces that this would really put the equalization formula at the mercy or at the unilateral discretion of the producing provinces, or particular provinces, so we had to come back to the House to ask for a federal uniform statute. The same situation prevails here.

In addition, the effective control of the exemption would be transferred to a very considerable number of distributors of coloured gasoline, and we would have lost the potential for direct control by means of audited refund claims to assure the gasoline was used for exempt purposes. The Department of National Revenue would lose that control.

We are continuing to look for more streamlined ways of administering this tax, but it does demand some uniformity on the part of the provinces, and further consultation.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister seems half receptive to the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Red Deer. Will the minister give an undertaking to the House that he will establish ways and means to provide for exemptions at the point of sale, particularly for gasoline used for agriculture or farm purposes, and perhaps for commercial purposes in bulk tank wagon lots? Does the bill provide sufficient latitude for the minister to allow for such a provision to facilitate a more streamlined, economical, and efficient method of administration?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have a wholesale tax here and it is difficult to transfer it up to the retail level, even for bulk sales at the wholesale level, but then I would be in the position of recommending exemptions for large purchasers to the detriment in egalitarian terms of the average small purchaser in the country. But I do give the undertaking that we will be looking for ways to streamline the operation of the bill as we see it in operation, and I have already made comments in that respect.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, the minister lost me there, and I am quite prepared to admit that it is my fault. When he talks about the provinces and that one or more provinces may take unilateral action at any given time in terms of their law as to exemptions, whether for farmers of any other group within provincial jurisdiction, from gasoline tax, I do not see how that interferes with what this legislation does. Let us suppose for a moment that the province of Alberta decided no longer to allow farmers to use tax free purple gas. Under this legislation it seems to me that the twenty refiners, thirteen importers, etcetera, automatically then charge the ten cents per gallon excise tax, so that any province which unilaterally changes its own law will not inhibit or complicate the objectives of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue in terms of collecting the ten cents per gallon. I just do not see how the argument of the minister holds water.

Second, the minister is still overlooking the main point. He is already exempting farmers and fishermen. Why go through the process of collecting the ten cents from them and sending it back when there is a mechanism for keeping track of gasoline which has been dyed or marked, or has some other substance in it according to provincial statute? The minister need not bother with the rebate. He is still overlooking that. He can talk about streamlining it all he likes, but he is overlooking the exemptions for those two major groups of gasoline consumers. He makes them pay the tax at the retail level. Then he makes them apply for a rebate. He has a beautiful short cut by accepting the amendment. He wants it streamlined, and accepting this amendment will do exactly that.

Any provinces which do not presently have exemptions or do not allow farmers or fishermen to use purple gas in their operations can pass that law tomorrow; the minister's legislation applies. Where any province may unilaterally decide no longer to allow farmers or fishermen to use purple gas tax free, the minister's law still applies.

The refiner and the importer then have to apply automatically the ten cents per gallon at their level on that gas whether it is marked, dyed, or has some other substance in it. Then the farmer or the fisherman will have to go through the process described in other parts of the bill for applying for a rebate. The argument of the minister that the provinces can take unilateral action is specious, and it has no effect whatsoever on the thrust of his legislation. The amendment of the hon. member for Red Deer in no way harms the minister's purpose of collecting the given amount of revenue.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In response to that, the amendment is clearly drafted. The following words are added: "but does not include any fuel oil which has been marked by any dye, agent or other substance under the authority of a provincial statute." Under its jurisdiction a provincial government would have the discretion to decide the ambit of the exemptions or the refunds under a federal tax, and there would be clear lack of uniformity, or potential lack of uniformity across the country.

Two provinces do not colour or mark gasoline. Moreover, some provinces decide to mark and colour gas for different purposes. For instance, some provinces permit the use of coloured gasoline in pleasure boats, which would be quite inappropriate given the objective of the special excise tax on gasoline now before the committee. I am just saying that a federal tax and the refunds and exemptions from that tax have to be uniform and have to be under the control of parliament and the regulatory authority granted by parliament. That is my problem.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I would like to clarify with the minister whether he can provide any figures concerning the cost of the extra bureaucracy which will be required to collect and rebate this tax. I know the Minister of National Revenue touched on this and said there would not be any extra cost. If that is the case, I suggest there is a certain amount of bureaucracy sitting around doing nothing at all. I cannot accept the explanation that it will not take much extra staff to process the rebates. The minister should tell us how much it will cost to administer the program. I submit that these costs could be avoided if the amendment were accepted.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have looked into the question of costs. My colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, dealt with them in his speech. Our best estimate at this time is that the cost of administration, including the receiving of claims, the reviewing, the issuing of cheques to claimants, and the implementation of a post-audit procedure, will be in the range of 1 per cent of the revenue involved. This is comparable to the cost of administering the federal personal income tax, which is about 1.2 per cent of the revenues generated by the personal income tax. In other words, the cost of administering this tax will be 1 per cent, compared with 1.2 per cent of the cost of administering the personal income tax.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Chairman, before we leave the amendment to clause 1 may I ask the minister does he think it advisable to amend clause 5 of this bill, to accommodate the points raised by the mover of the amendment and other hon. members opposite? Regardless of the minister's arguments, the fact remains that we shall be putting a lot of people through a needless procedure. Could the minister not meet objections by some other means, say, by making some agreement with the provinces with respect to purple gasoline, or by moving an amendment to clause 5 or to some other clause? What are the minister's reactions to my suggestion?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, clause 5 deals with refunds and clause 1 with the definition of gasoline, which relates to the exemption. These are different matters. If the hon. member is talking about bulk buying, I tried to deal with that situation when replying to the hon. member for Vegreville.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary's point is well taken. I have presented a draft amendment which I propose to move at a later stage. I hope the minister will study it, as I think it will serve the purpose. I suggest that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport will heartily endorse it, as he represents a large agricultural area. I suggest that the amendment would cover more than corporate consumers. It would apply to farmers as well, to trucking concerns, commercial concerns and others whom the governor in council may see fit to include.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, the minister suggested that no amendment he can bring in will make this bill non-discriminatory. I point out that, at the moment, many diesel burning cars will be subject to this tax. The minister suggested that diesel cars could be exempt because they burn a minute quantity. I suggest that this thinking should also be extended to boats.

May I raise another question? The minister referred to discrimination between provinces. I point out that there are lots of dye tablets in Alberta which can be used to colour gasoline used in other provinces. Such gasoline can be put to specified uses by Monday morning. The point is this. The gasoline is not manufactured in that coloured form. It is coloured afterwards, when it goes to the farm, when it is put in bulk tanks, or when it is to be applied to other uses.

The administration of this measure will be expensive. I understand that the government will spend $3.5 million in administering the program. In addition, it will be an extra cost to farmers and fishermen when they apply for rebates and they will need to do a lot of extra work to apply for rebates. Farmers and fishermen will need to keep records of the amount of gasoline used which is eligible for rebate.

Considering our difficult economic position, and as the well-being of a large percentage of the Canadian public is involved, will the minister take a second look at this measure and do something constructive for the benefit of a very important sector of our community?

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I am amazed at the minister's apparent lack of concern. He said the program will cost 1 per cent to administer. I suggest that that $3.5 million could be put to much better use in agriculture. It could help farmers who must pay inflated costs for farm machinery parts, and so on. I submit that the millions of dollars the government will waste can be put to much better use in society. People are taking money out of one pocket and the government is to put it back in another. I suggest that the program is wasteful and the $3.5 million could be put to better use.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was interested to note the minister's allusion to gasoline used off the highway. The province of Ontario did not levy tax on that gasoline, but now it does. I point out that some people drive diesel automobiles, and this bill will discriminate against them. At present when you pull up to the pump in a diesel automobile, you pay the provincial tax. If a trucker pays it, he is entitled to a rebate when he turns in his receipt. I understand that people driving diesel automobiles will pay one ten cents tax, and perhaps the other. This is discriminatory.

I know that an hon. member, after seeing a diesel automobile advertised in Montreal, said he intended to buy it this afternoon. As he is not in the House I presume he has bought it. He drives a lot and will save much money. I am not arguing against his interests, but it seems to me that if motor boats are exempt, diesel automobiles ought to be exempt also. There is no reason why those who pull up at the diesel pumps should not apply for an exemption. At present some are entitled to it, and others are not. It seems to me that we should not discriminate in our treatment of people. At present the bill discriminates against one group of people using diesel fuel, but not against another. How can the minister justify such different treatment in the same piece of legislation?

● (1520)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the hon. member that even though my eyes were not focusing on him, my ears were beamed in on what he had to say. He knows that. The difficulty with the diesel question is that 99 per cent of diesel oil is used commercially. Talking about administration costs, the cost of isolating that 1 per cent would be prohibitive. There is some merit in what the hon. member says, but there is no reasonable way of trying to isolate that. In that sense there is some discrimination. There is discrimination in favour of an owner of a small automobile as against the owner of a larger automobile. That is my answer there. The personal use involved is just too small a percentage to allow us to administer it properly.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Towers) negatived: Yeas, 42; nays, 59.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, the hon. member for Pontiac, the hon. member for York West, and the hon. member for Saint-Denis were included with this vote. If they were, they ought not to have been. They would have breached the rules of this House and they know it, particularly the hon. member for Pontiac because of his long years of service in this House.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Chairman, I hope I was counted because I was in the House. I refute categorically the allegations put forward by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Before again recognizing the hon. member Grenville-Carleton, I should recognize the hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Chairman, it was very inappropriate of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton to comment on a vote after it was taken. That was against the rules and procedures of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Poulin: However, since he chose to name me and my constituency, I may say that I had come back into the House and I was behind the curtain, on the line. I stayed out. I honoured that commitment. I did not come across that line. It was petty and small for the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton to make that comment.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I simply want to make the same point. I thought that I moved in on time. There was some shouting from the other side at that point, and I looked to Your Honour for direction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fleming: My name has gone into the record with the suggestion that I tried to act wrongly. I want to clear that up. I do not want that on the record. I went out. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is fully aware of that. He should not have suggested that I acted wrongly.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the same point of order. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton asked a question, namely, whether certain members were included in the vote.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is all.

Mr. Benjamin: He named certain members who, in his opinion, were not in the chamber on time for the vote. At no time did the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton claim that they tried to vote improperly. He only asked if they were counted. I want to verify whether the hon. member for Ottawa Centre and the hon. member for Saint-Denis were included in the vote. In my opinion, they were not in the chamber in time for the vote. I ask the same question of the Clerk, through you, Mr. Chairman, whether those two members were included in the vote. That is all.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Chairman, I do not understand at all the unbelievable nervousness of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). When you put the question, he was looking at you. I was then speaking with the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) in the fifth row. Casually, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre seems to apply what is called one law for one's friends and another for one's foes. He does not object to the vote of the hon. member for Champlain, with whom I was speaking in the corner of the House, since the latter voted in the same way as he did. He does not oppose to his vote, but to mine, because I was supposed to be on the other side. But he is perfectly aware of the fact that we are allowed to sit anywhere. He does not object to the vote of his colleague for Champlain, with whom, I repeat it, I was speaking. Mr. Speaker, I think we should certainly proceed with more serious things and stop playing games.

Mr. Alexander: I think the confusion arose because of members who will not stand clear of the curtains. I am not pointing a finger at anyone, but if this ball game is to be played the way it should be, members on both sides will have to stand back from the curtains so as not to confuse the Clerks at the Table. In this way we may be able to expedite the passage of this bill—I understand there is some semblance of an agreement—

Mr. Peters: Oh!

Mr. Alexander: All right, then. I will cancel that statement. But surely we can now proceed to the consideration of the bill.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, it was imputed to me that I had said that certain members I had named were absent. I did not say they were absent. If I did, I would apologize to those members. What I did was to ask whether their votes had been counted. If there was any statement made as to the absence of those members it came from the hon. member for Ottawa-Centre. I was careful not to use the word absent. But, of course, now it is out.

The Chairman: Order. The question has been aired long enough. All members are aware that when we are in committee of the whole members are not identified while a count is being taken. The Clerk who took the count assures me that the only members he counted were the ones who were clearly within the confines of the chamber. He did not count any who were behind the curtains. This leads me to conclude that only those who were in the chamber at the time the vote was called were counted.

It is, of course, difficult for the Chair to see what is happening on both sides of the committee at the same time, and if hon. members come in after a question has been put it is not easy to identify them. This bring me to the point I wish to make.

I realize we do not very often sit in committee of the whole, but hon. members might take time once in a while to read Standing Order 12(2) which says that when the Chair is putting a question no member shall enter, walk out, or cross the floor of the House, or make any noise or disturbance. We have had all of this. I am not talking only about coming into the House. I am talking about noise and disturbance. This does not help the Chair and it does not help the proceedings of the committee. I might add that those members who were behind the curtains and who, by bending over, did not help the Clerk to count the votes, making it more difficult for him, are to be blamed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On the point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Enough!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —about those two who came in after the vote was called, it is distinctly my impression, sitting where I am, that the hon. member for Mississauga came in and was counted.

The Chairman: Order. A ruling has been made, the amendment has been defeated, and I an now putting the question on clause 1.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I put another question to the Minister of Finance with respect to the wording of clause 1? I have in mind in particular the last four words, "other than aircraft engines". Could the minister explain the meaning of this to me? I take it to mean that gasoline which is used in airplanes is not subject to this ten cents a gallon tax. I can understand that this might as well be the case as far as commercial airlines are concerned because if they pay the tax they would be able to obtain a rebate since they are operating a commercial or business enterprise. But I should like to ask whether this also applies to the private owners of small aircraft. I suspect there are certain persons who use their aircraft to get to work, and they would not be obliged to pay the tax. Yet those who use their automobiles to get to work will have to pay it. Does the minister think this is fair?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The same considerations apply here, really, as apply in the case of diesel fuel. Over 95 per cent of the type of gasoline sold for use in aircraft is supplied to commercial or chartered airlines which would be exempt in any event. The price of administering such an exception as the hon. member is suggesting would be unduly high. I might point out that in a previous budget a 10 per cent tax was imposed upon the purchase of private aircraft, which has a complementary effect when the two are put together; there is already a 10 per cent excise tax on the purchase of private aircraft.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —I wish to make a correction to the point of order I raised a few moments ago. It was not to draw attention to the absence from the chamber of the hon. member for Mississauga but to say it was the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe—I had the impression he came in through the curtain to be counted after the vote was called.

Mr. Milne: On that point of order, Mr. Chairman, I happen to be the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe and I was sitting here writing a couple of letters, rather amused at the antics of the people opposite me.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Chairman, I can confirm that my hon. friend was here all the time.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

The Chairman: Order. I do not think we should pursue this matter. A decision has been rendered, the vote has long been taken. I do not think we ought to return to a discussion of who was in the chamber and who was not. I made my decision, and I invited the co-operation of hon. members when votes are taken in the future.

Mr. Milne: I think, in the circumstances, it would be appropriate for the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich to withdraw.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I certainly withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1540)

Mr. Peters: Will the exemption in regard to gasoline used for private aircraft be based on octane rating? I know of many small fields where aviation fuel is delivered by an entrepreneur from the community, who also delivers other fuel. Is the exemption based on type of fuel used or does he apply for the exemption after having serviced the aircraft?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Aviation gasoline is exempted to begin with, and the reason is that 95 per cent of the fuel is used in commercial aircraft. I would remind the committee that in the previous budget a 10 per cent special excise tax was levied against private aircraft.

Mr. Peters: I am also aware that many small aircraft use ordinary gasoline rather than a specific type of commercial aviation fuel. It is high octane fuel which is also used for high compression engines in automobiles. My point is, how is the exemption applied for gasoline supplied to a commerical flying club?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is my understanding that the overwhelming amount of gasoline used for aviation purposes is so designated. If a gasoline could be used in an aircraft, it would be exempt if used in an aircraft. I really think this is a matter for National Revenue Canada, but its use is fairly restricted.

Mr. Peters: I agree it is restricted, but this would apply to all flying clubs. On every field there are two or three dozen aircraft, and I want to get the answer to this question before two or three other people ask it of me. How is the person who delivers the gasoline going to certify that it is exempt? Is the distributor going to be given a form that will allow him to apply for an exemption?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, as I have said, I think we should leave this problem to National Revenue Canada. If it is ordinary gasoline it is subject to the excise tax. If it is delivered to a commercial flying club and is used for commercial aviation purposes, the purchaser is entitled to a refund. The great majority of the gasoline that is available for aircraft is aviation fuel which is used for the internal combustion engine of an aircraft.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions to ask the Minister of Finance. I realize he was faced with the problem of compensating eastern consumers and that he has to raise $500 million. When he was faced with this problem, surely he must have considered alternatives. Can he tell the House what the alternatives were that he considered, why he rejected them, and why he selected this particular tax?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I set that forth in the second reading speech and in the budget speech. Primarily the tax was applied against users of gasoline because I felt that was in the fairest way of apportioning it. An alternative might have been through the personal income tax system, but even progressively imposed there are a good many income taxpayers who do not own, drive, lease, or operate an automobile.

The Leader of the Opposition suggested that we could have achieved our objective by cutting expenditure further, but there again we have already tried to cut expenditure by $1 billion. So we felt that in order to maintain a national price for the general use of oil and gas other than for personal use—that is to say, oil and gas used for home heating, industrial use and commercial use—right across the country at $8 a barrel as against the world price of $12 a barrel, we thought it fair to impose the tax on the users of personally consumed gasoline. As I say, we thought that was the fairest way to do it, fairer than using personal income tax since the average payer of tax might not be equated with the average driver of an automobile.

Mr. Rodriguez: Did the minister consider the fact that there are $7 billion of deferred corporate taxes outstanding? Did he consider applying a 10 per cent interest charge on this deferred tax, which would raise $700 million? If he did, why did he reject it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): At this stage we had to encourage the continuance of capital investment in this country to provide industrial capacity and job potential for the next few years.

Mr. Rodriguez: Considering the fact that, in effect, this is an interest free loan which all the people in Canada who do not own businesses are lending to the corporations, would it not have been very fair to apply even a 5 per cent interest charge? On that amount this would have brought in considerable revenue to offset the deficit.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I disagree with that interpretation. This money is only deferred from tax, because it is eventually paid, on condition that the businessmen or corporations involved increase capital plant, which increases industrial capacity in the country and the job producing potential.

Mr. Rodriguez: Most reports indicate that that tax is never paid anyway. Let me ask the minister another question. Can he tell us why he exempted doctors and lawyers? Why would he give a rebate to doctors and lawyers? If it is because they are using their cars in pursuit of their work, why not exempt other working people who use their cars to get to work, such as miners in my area?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member is incorrect. Doctors and lawyers are not exempt. They will pay the ten cents tax on their gasoline when going to their places of work, just as any other citizen will. If a doctor is out on a call, however, this gasoline is being used for the purpose of earning income and will be deductible. But the doctor would have to pay the ten cents per gallon on gas used when going from his residence to his place of work, just as any other citizen.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the fact that when doctors are called out they are going to a job for which they are compensated—they do not do it for nothing—why does the minister not treat miners in the same way when they are called out to go to work?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to pursue this with the minister a little further. There are a couple of other alternatives. The minister said he decided against using the income tax as an alternative, particularly on an individual basis, because some people do not drive cars. Would it not be easier if the taxpayer indicated on his income tax form whether or not he drove a car? This is a lot easier to check on than policing applications for rebates. Would it not have been simpler to exempt individual taxpayers whose income was below a certain amount? This would include most if not all of the people who do not drive a car but do pay income tax.

● (1550)

Another option is open to the minister. On the $15.4 billion corporation taxable income, last year the effective tax rate was 32.4 per cent. Would it not have been easier to assess a 5 per cent increase in the effective tax rate in order to collect part of the money for the oil compensation fund and collect the other half from income tax on high wage earners? Another alternative would be a 10 per cent increase in the effective tax rate on taxable corporate income, which would have brought in the $525 million. Surely individual income tax and corporation taxes, or a combination of the two, would have done the job rather than going through all this nonsense of exempting occupations and classifications and then policing the rebates?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there are about 9½ million personal taxpayers as against about one million people who are eligible for rebates. The hon. gentleman is wrong in his estimation of the administrative difficulties.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question in regard to the tax as it applies to commercial trucking concerns. Has the minister had any discussions with the Canadian Trucking Association with respect to the administration of the tax? Also have the minister and his officials explored ways and means of minimizing the administrative procedures in the collection of the tax, such as an exemption certificate or some consideration for tank wagon lots at the wholesale level?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. We received representations from the Canadian Trucking Association and I am exploring ways to satisfy those representations.

Mr. Mazankowski: If the legislation as it stands is not flexible enough to provide for exemption certificates or minimizing administrative procedures, will the minister be introducing an appropriate amendment to allow that to take place?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman has rephrased the question put to me earlier in a more flexible way. We are looking at it closely.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, the minister mentioned that a doctor could get a rebate on gas used for going out on a call. How is this going to be regulated? Is it just going to be by the word of the doctor, or will a schedule be used or a table referred to?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It will be done in the same way as it is under the Income Tax Act. A doctor is required to declare, and prove if necessary, what percentage of his mileage is used on house calls, what percentage for personal use, and what percentage for going to his office. Personal use will not be subject to rebate nor will travelling to his office. Only house calls are eligible.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, it is rather interesting that the minister has said that doctors who are called out beyond the distance from their homes to their offices would qualify for the rebate. What about plumbers and electricians who go out on emergency calls beyond the distance of their work from their homes? Will they also be able to collect a rebate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the plumber is an independent contractor he will qualify.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Mr. Rodriguez: I just want to continue that, Mr. Chairman. There are many electricians and plumbers and other skilled tradesmen who are not on a private contract. They work to a contract, but when there is an emergency they are called out. Why should they not qualify on the same grounds as doctors and lawyers?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In a good many instances that expense is covered by the employer.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry? The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I have another question—

The Chairman: Order, please. I recognized the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, this is the most ridiculous—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: This is one minister I always thought would not allow himself to be party to such outrageous nonsense as this. The plumber, electrician, or a similar tradesman who is an employee of a firm or is on a special contract, is paid a salary and maybe called out. What about the foreman at the steel plant who is called out on an emergency at three o'clock in the morning and has to make a 40-mile round trip? He does not get the rebate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Four o'clock.

Mr. Broadbent: Four o'clock.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I hope it is beginning to dawn on the minister how ridiculous this move is that he is using to try to collect $525 million. We are not going to hold still for it.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being four o'clock p.m. it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of this House.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, and private bills.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED STUDY OF INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, a study should be made on industrial milk-producers in order that the government take the necessary steps to guarantee to these producers prices that would take into account production costs in view of reducing the number of industrial milk-producers who abandon their activities.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to take part in the House in a debate on the motion I have introduced and which is very important. I even sugggest that it is of utmost importance to Canadian agriculture and especially to the dairy industry. My motion reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, a study should be made on industrial milk-producers in order that the government take the necessary steps to guarantee to these producers prices that would take into account production costs in view of reducing the number of industrial milk-producers who abandon their activities.

However, Mr. Speaker, I must mention that I moved this motion in the House on October 10, 1974. Which means that the government dragged its feet heavily before allowing it to be debated and this in spite of the problems facing dairy producers, whom I mean to defend this afternoon.

It is a pity the government should let situations such as this deteriorate. Nevertheless, I am glad my motion is debated today. Not only is the issue still relevant, it is still more so in view of all problems which have compounded the situation since last fall, as well as those which the government has created through its incompetence and lack of initiative in the area of industrial milk production.

Not only has the Department of Agriculture failed to take adequate steps to support our dairy milk producers, it has made life even more miserable for them by doubling from 45 cents to 90 cents a hundredweight, effective July 1, 1975, the costs which Canadian dairy producers must pay for their exported products. Anyway, the Agricultural Producers' Union and the Federation of Industrial Milk Producers of Quebec wasted no time in reacting, and rightly so, because the situation is becoming increasingly critical.

In fact, those 90 cents that are withheld from the producers on powdered milk, exports, will mean that every industrial milk producer will lose an average of $2,000 annually. To my mind, that is utter nonsense. One does not need the brains of Papineau nor those of several ministers put together, the majority of whom are lawyers, to know that this step will simply ruin again hundreds of our milk producers. And all the more so because production costs rise constantly with costs going up for feed, fertilizers, chemical products, energy, fuel, farming equipment and so on.

In other words, the situation has become a catastrophe because, on the one hand, the cost of production goes up continually, while on the other hand, the producers see their income decrease. No one can suffer losses and stay in business especially in the milk industry, because the production of milk requires huge investments, it entails numerous risks such as cattle diseases, and the weather on which good crops and the cost of feed depend.

● (1610)

I see that the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) is listening. Since he is a producer, he must be quite interested. During the six-month period alone extending from the third quarter of 1974 to the first quarter of 1975, production costs have increased by 8.95 per cent, that is 84 cents a hundredweight. If we add those 84 cents to the set price for the third quarter of 1974, that is $9.41, we get a net price of $10.25 a hundredweight of milk, while the producer actually gets $9.97, less the 90 cents which the federal government must withhold for that famous export of powdered milk, less the transport cost of his milk to the dairy averaging 75 cents a hundredweight, which leaves a gross amount of $8.32 a hundredweight and this for 3.4 of fat matter.

This suggests, as indicated by the APU in its brief dated July 15 last, that the producer was in a better posture last year. Mr. Speaker, if the minister does not react as a result of such serious conclusions, I wonder when he will do so and what could make him move.

For instance, in January last, a press release from the Department of Agriculture on the outlook of the industry for 1975 indicated that gross farm income would increase by 4 per cent, but that, on the other hand, net farm income might tumble down by 12 per cent, due mostly to the rising costs of production. The Department of Agriculture itself admitted by this statement that there was real cause for concern. And at that time, there was no mention of this illogical rise in export costs nor of the price increase of gas that the government might pass on Monday.

Let us be realistic, Mr. Speaker, even if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) indicated that farmers could recuperate at the end of the year the 10 cents tax on gas, they will nevertheless suffer from the increase in fuel prices on account of all petroleum by-products used on the farm.

Therefore, it is obvious that the imbalance is increasing in an intolerable manner in the area of industrial milk and that the efforts undertaken to stabilize the prices in this industry have collapsed merely on account of the last increase of 45 cents per hundredweight of powdered milk to cover export costs.

The situation being such, Mr. Speaker, I therefore strongly recommend that my motion be agreed to because it is absolutely necessary and even vital for industrial milk producers. It is imperative that the House realize that, deal with those problems and immediately correct them before it is too late.

If the situation is left uncorrected and things are allowed to deteriorate from day to day, farmers will leave their farms and those who will dare stay on will accumulate deficits for as long as they will have the courage to keep on feeding the population and after a while, they will go bankrupt because there is not any manufacturing or other business where one can sell products below the cost of production and stay in business.

Today a purebred cow costs approximately $1,000, a half-bred cow about $700. I am referring to a dairy cow and the way cows are looked after today, the average milking period lasts about six years, which means that the farmer has large investments with regard to his dairy cows only. That also means that a good herd takes years to get established and requires very particular attention and care.

In addition, the dairy producer has the responsibility for coverings that must be done at the right time to get a continuous production and he must take the risks. Dairy production is really a profession.

A farm that works well must spend each year about $4,000 on general repairs and maintenance, exclusive of machinery depreciation. A farm with a dairy herd of 100 requires an investment of $200,000 approximately. At an interest of 8 per cent, this means $16,000 in interest charges only. However, you have to add $4,000 for maintenance and upgrading, and $6,000 for cattle turnover, including heifer breeding to replace cows, that is breeding and buying young cows. This means approximately $26,000 of unavoidable expenses, not including municipal and school taxes, seed costs, harvesting expenses and so on. All in all, the cost of operating a farm with 100 dairy cows amounts in fact to approximately $40,000 a year.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, those figures deserve consideration, and I would like to have that matter debated if my motion is agreed to by the House. There are a number of particulars I would like to mention and a number of remarks I would like to make in that respect, since I happened to be in the dairy business for several years, and I am familiar with the question. I would also like other members with experience in that area of production to speak up and contribute to the debate after the motion has been agreed to, in order to make the House fully aware of the real nature of the problem and to help it take appropriate corrective measures.

One must admit that today, industrial milk producers as well as farmers in general no longer have a net income that would merely match the interest on their investments, especially since the government, in 1969, allowed interest rates on agricultural loans and machinery to go up through bank loans. Input costs keep on rising, and income is being cut down while powdered milk export costs are left to increase immoderately. I dare say most industrial milk producers would be better off and would have a happier life with both feet in the stove, Mr. Chairman, as they say in Quebec, content with the interest of their money instead of working themselves to death night and day on their farm only to get the results that we know.

Just to show how serious the problem is, allow me to say that over the past ten years, the price of corrugated iron for instance and the cost of repairing buildings increased by 400 per cent, while the prices of machinery went up by 450 per cent. And what about salaries for farm hands?

Over the same ten-year period, the price of milk doubled only. At such a rate, those who are still producing industrial milk are no longer doing production work, but missionary work to feed the people at any cost. Industrial milk producers are not fools, far from that. They may have more sense than most members here. One day one of them will get up in the morning, sit down with his good wife and solemnly say, somewhat bitterly: "Well, that is the end of it! We sell everything." And then we are less another producer. Everybody will agree on that. Some might say: "Well, he will sell to another producer". And again: "What can be gotten out of it with another producer?" Even if he can sell his farm to someone who will go on producing industrial milk, milk production on the farm will decrease by 50 per cent. That is automatic. And I can prove it. Those are important explanations to give to the House in order that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) may act accordingly. With a new owner there is a 50 per cent drop in production. Where the former owner produced one ton of milk per day, three or five years later, the new owner will be producing half a ton only, for a number of reasons, due to inexperienced help or simply because of milking procedure changes, different grazing quality, or "commuting" cows from one field to another, which directly affects the volume of milk given by the cows, etc. Such are the facts, they cannot be ignored. When the day comes when we have to pay butter at $1.50 a pound, milk at 70 cents a quart, meat at $2.00 a pound and when we have to depend more and more on imports from other countries to feed Canada, when farmers are deliberately strangled, then it will be too late for the government to recognize its errors. They will have what they asked for. I introduced the motion in order to put a stop to that situation, to protect industrial milk producers in view of the seriousness of the present situation. I therefore ask for this House's attention, and the non-partisan cooperation of every member and minister, so that the motion be agreed to and that the proposed review may be conducted, in order to save our dairy industry if it is not too late. I am not trying to act smart but I wish to draw the attention of the government to this problem, so that in the future there will be still farmers left on our farms and we can be sure to eat three times a day fresh produce of our land, which have been grown by our gallant and courageous brothers, the Canadian farmers.

● (1620)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me give the government a bit of advice. At present, the government through the board of officials from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce imports, every year, 50 million pounds of cheese, as well as eggs, beef and porks, from the United States or other countries, with the Department of Agriculture or its Minister having no say in the matter. The importation of any farm product from any country should come under the jurisdiction of the Agriculture Department, therefore that of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture. Working in cooperation with Growers' Association and Farm product Marketing Boards he is familiar with the problems, the costs of production in each field, the Canadian consumers' needs and the amount of production which should be encouraged through subsidies or other means.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when we come back here in the Fall, after the summer recess which, in my view, all members really deserve, I would like the government to introduce a bill which would allow or enable one department only, namely the Department of Agriculture, to control the exportation and importation of agricultural products. This would have the effect of guaranteeing a sufficient output for the consumer, as well as a fair price to the producer, so that we may plan a long-term policy with a view to setting prices on the basis of production costs, so that our farmers take heart and remain in the farming business and that the young people who will become the farmers of tomorrow be assured of a decent living.

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), I should like to clear up the situation with regard to the dairy policy. All of us have long since recognized the importance and special character of the dairy industry in Canadian agriculture. Last year, the dairy industry accounted for 15.5 per cent of agricultural revenues. These figures do not take into account everything that milk and its by products represent for the other sectors of our economy. As in several other countries, the Canadian dairy industry operates under a price control system. As a result, the government has resorted to different ways of controlling production. Our programs have had great influence on dairy production and on the decisions of dairy producers. The latter want to obtain adequate guarantees as to the stability of their production so as to be able to make the investments required by modern and viable dairy enterprises. Indeed the government has adopted measures to give such guarantees. One of the objectives of the dairy policy is precisely to guarantee milk producers adequate income. Thus, we hope to witness the disappearance of the climate of uncertainty caused by the recent period of rapid increases in production costs.

Please allow me to repeat certain statements made by the Minister of Agriculture last April 18 before representatives of the dairy industry. Mr. Whelan had then announced a new formula for the adjustment of milk prices, which enabled to adjust the income of dairy producers. This formula takes into account production costs, and the remuneration of the producer and of the family manpower. The formula was developed as a result of several studies and discussions between the people concerned.

In April 1974, the Canadian Dairy Commission was authorized to meet the producers' associations and develop a program to achieve better balance between production costs and income. As a result, the Commission held a series of most useful meetings with representatives of the industry, whose recommendations were included in the new policy.

On November 29 last, the minister met the representatives of the Dairy Farmers of Canada. They presented him with a brief which was also used in developing a formula for the readjustment of prices. The members of the Canadian Dairy Commission, the representatives of the producers and the officials of the department worked hard, together, in an effort to find a sound formula. It may be easy to calculate the cost of feeding the cattle, the cost of labour, of fertilizers or fuel, but the value of the land, pastures and buildings, is much more difficult to assess. In short, we tried to find a formula that would be effective and fair to everyone and would enable us to develop an advanced dairy policy.

All the details of that formula were announced in the past few months. I would simply like today to go over the main lines and clarify certain details. According to the legislation setting up the Canadian Dairy Commission the objects of the long term dairy policy of the government are:

1, to provide efficient producers of milk and cream with the opportunity of obtaining a fair return for their labour and investment;

2, to provide consumers of diary products with a continuous and adequate supply of dairy products of high quality.

Pursuant to those objectives the government raised, effective April 1, the level of support prices by $11.02 per hundredweight. That amount represents the basic price implemented under the new policy. I must remind you that this price included all adjustments made in recent years by the government to offset increases in production costs and bring producer revenues back to suitable levels. The basic price will be adjusted on the basis of changes in production costs under a formula that came into effect last April 18.

In that price adjustment formula 45 per cent was allocated to the current expense index for adjusting production costs. The different components of that 45 per cent are defined as follows: concentrates and fodder, 13.4 per cent; insemination, 0.6 per cent; herd health related expenses, other transportation expenses and miscellaneous cattle expenses, 7.8 per cent; repairs to machinery and automobile expenses, 3.1 per cent; gasoline and oil, 2 per cent; rental of machinery or contract work, 0.4 per cent; lime and fertilizers, 3.1 per cent; seeds and other crop related expenses, 1.9 per cent; maintenance, land and buildings, 1.4 per cent; property taxes and insurance, 2.8 per cent; electricity and telephone, 1.9 per cent, and lastly, monthly paid farm workers, excluding the salary of the family, 6.6 per cent. It makes a total of 45 per cent.

The second index considered in the formula is the consumer price index as it modifies producer and family revenues. It represents 35 per cent of the formula. If we add those who indices we obtain 80 per cent.

● (1630)

By indexing only 80 per cent, the government keeps a margin of 20 per cent which leaves room to adjust prices according to future needs. This is an advantage that allows us to consider a number of factors, for instance significant changes in domestic and international stocks, changes in the revenue of dairy producers in other countries or major changes in competitive costs inherent in processing.

The percentages of 80 per cent and 20 per cent were defined from an analysis made by government experts and based on farm accounting statements for 1972-73. The next programs of the Canadian Dairy Commission will adjust the support level from this formula. We know that the indices must vary by minus or plus 4 per cent to warrant a readjustment of milk prices. Provisory adjustments will be made only if needed and when a period of at least three months has elapsed since the last adjustment. This percentage of 4 per cent seemed to us the best way to avoid too many changes in a same year and excessive price increases for the consumer.

As I said earlier, changes can only be made at three month intervals. We should therefore have been able to adjust the prices on July the 1st. There has been no change because the calculation of indexes has shown a margin of less than 4 per cent. As regard the duration of the policy, the government, yielding to the producers' representations, has decided that the new policy would be set up for a five year period. This lapse of time is about what is needed to help the producers plan in advance their investments. After the first two years, the government may see fit to review the formula itself in order to ascertain the validity of the ponderation factors.

There is still a major point to clarify: exports. In order to do that, I have to set forth the trade situation. On the world level, stocks of powdered skim milk are increasing and prices are sagging. At the beginning of 1975, the price for skim milk was 45 cents a pound. In April, when the European Economic Community increased its export subsidies, the price went down to 36 cents a pound, and it has kept going down ever since. It is now 26 cents a pound. It is therefore important to realize the whole extent of this problem. Faced with such a decrease, Canada has two alternatives: either accept competition and sell at the international price, or accumulate stocks. Obviously the second solution must be eliminated, because it would be too expensive. If we sell at the international price, we must support the ensuing losses.

Thus, for every pound of powdered skim milk, whose price was fixed at 64 cents, we must figure a loss of 37 cents. If we calculate total exports set at 200 million pounds, we obtain an exorbitant price—$74 million. The government is therefore forced to intervene and raise the deduction on exportation of industrial milk. Since July 1 this deduction is 90 cents a hundredweight. Although it is strongly criticized, this increase is necessary to maintain sales of powdered skim milk at the current levels of international prices. I explain. We were fully justified to announce an objective price when the international price was normal. In April, that price still allowed competition, with the deductions we had at that time. Unfortunately, the situation changed completely, and the Canadian government is not responsible for it. You know our department is much interested in exportation. We always tried to find new markets for Canadian products. The present situation leaves us with very few alternatives.

We have already considered the impact of government financing, but it would create many more problems than it would solve. Producers have already committed themselves to Canada to pay export costs according to a supply management program under GATT. Any government interference might have adverse effects and would merely be prejudicial to producers.

That is why we must levy the required amount at the production level. Be assured that we will try to devise the best means to solve this problem. To that effect, we have received proposals from industrial milk-producers. We should like to protect Canadian producers against international market fluctuations and we shall look fully into all the proposals submitted to us.

Let us now examine the matter of the decreasing number of producers. One of the goals of our policy is to provide adequate supplies to meet the needs of the Canadian consumers. Shall we reach that goal? Necessarily, with more producers. We have already noted an upward trend in production in the last few months. The only way to understand the decline in the number of producers is to rely on figures. It is true that the number of producers has decreased in the last ten years, but one should not jump to conclusions too quickly.

As a matter of fact, there is a significant increase in newcomers. In 1971-72, 1,500 young people entered agriculture and 1,600 farmers' sons carried on the work of their father. In 1974-75, the number of beginners amounted to 3,000, that is twice as many as three years before, and 1,900 carried on the work of their father. You will agree with me that these figures are significant. Within three years, the number of beginners doubled. Is the increased interest of young people in agriculture not a guarantee for the future? Let us keep in mind that the decrease in the total number of producers is mainly due to age. Even at times when the price of milk was quite favourable, the number of producers kept decreasing. Now we must review the situation.

If the number of producers is on the decline, how is it that supplies remain about the same? The answer is quite simple: producers are more and more effective. In 1971-72, each producer delivered an average of 150,000 lbs. of industrial milk. Today, they are delivering about 175,000 lbs. Here again, figures speak for themselves.

In the general interest, we must promote an increase in the number of deliveries by producers. It is a means of improving the productivity and efficiency of the undertaking. A study made in 1971 on industrial milk production in Quebec and Ontario has shown it. It appears that the production costs for farmers who have cows giving an average of 6,000 to 8,000 pounds of milk are almost double those who have cows giving from 8,000 to 11,000 pounds of milk.

Some changes are now taking place indicating some progress. The decreased number of producers has given rise to the growth of the undertaking. For example, in 1966-67, 61 per cent of Canadian farmers were producing less than 100,000 pounds of milk per year and 2.6 were producing over 300,000 pounds. During the daily year 1974-75, only 31 per cent produced less than 100,000 pounds of milk and up to 14 per cent produced over 300,000 pounds.

I know that it is useless to insist further, these figures are quite significant. Future will tell us the rest. The government does it utmost to offer an attractive income to encourage young people to get into farming. We offer not only grants and adjustment formulas but also improvement programs which have already give Canadian farmers the reputation they deserve. The development of dary farms did not come by itself, nor overnight. Among other things, about $3.5 million have been provided for the dairy control program and this is a program which Canada can be proud of. Since 1960, the annual yield per head increased by 300 pounds. The government is responsible for a good part of this increase. We encouraged the genetic improvement of dairy herds, notably through artificial insemination, the judicious choice of bulls, the upgrading and sound management of dairy farms. Free services are available to producers which enable them to increase their efficiency. I think that this new policy will put the industry back on the right track again and that the next few years will be for both producers and processors a period of stability and expansion.

I want to be clearly understood. I do not claim that the new policy will solve all the problems in the dairy industry. A policy can only provide for a framework enabling producers to make progress and to find by themselves solutions to the production and marketing problems. The government has been committed for a long time in the development of a comprehensive and long-term dairy policy. We have fulfilled our task completely. It is now up to the industry to assume its responsibilities and to contribute to the success of the dairy policy.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put things straight on this motion.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the mover of the motion in view of the present situation, especially that of the last few days. I believe that this motion is most welcome. I therefore congratulate the mover and tell him that we have no hesitation in supporting a policy which would correspond much better than the present one to the aspirations and the needs of dairy producers. Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize the intervention of the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau). Like the hon. member who spoke before him, he quoted very interesting statistics. He also talked about the efforts of the government as concerns agriculture.

To remain quite positive and objective, I would like to agree immediately with the fact that the government has made some efforts, that it has introduced several measures, and that it has been doing so for a long time, but this should not lead us to believe that the dairy industry is now in a comfortable poition. Again, I would like to say that we would support measures aimed at providing stability and the necessary income to dairy producers.

Statistics may be quoted and we may be reminded of the measures introduced by the government, but it still remains that we cannot forget the present situation. This is the main issue. I believe that this is why the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) found it appropriate to move this motion in view of the difficulties, and, I know perfectly well that our colleagues opposite are also aware of these difficulties. In closing, the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned that it is time for the dairy industry to take its responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the dairy industry has taken its responsibilities according to the programs introduced by the government through rather extraordinary modifications and massive investments, and we recognized this; the statistics prove it. Production has reached a very interesting level and people have specialized and have become more knowledgeable as concerns management and administration, and we recognize this fact. We know also that, thanks to the Farm Credit Corporation, funds have been earmarked to help producers get organized. They did, they are prepared to make a living out of that, but there is the matter of inadequate income. I hope the Minister of Agriculture, for whom I have great respect and who is an expert in farm matters, will find solutions. We hope he will find solutions. I remember in April last, the Milk Producers Federation made representations and studies, and presented a brief establishing production costs which called for additional subsidies. They had promised, they were committed to find formulas as good as those the parliamentary secretary talked about a moment ago, on a long enough period to meet the required minimum to prevent the milk producer from vegetating and to ensure a continuity and to get him interested in taking over the family operation.

But we know full well than in April last they did not meet requirements and production costs which had been established and recognized by the Prices Review Board. The government did not meet all the demands of the milk producers and what, as demonstrated by serious studies, were the actual cost. But when the minister promised some changes, the Milk Producers' Federation relied on him and hoped that finally they would get that basic income. I think we must see it that way. But we do know that recently, because of an unexpected situation concerning powder milk, the milk producer happens to be penalized and suffers a direct income lost. And we will never repeat that enough.

Of course we could say that things are not all that bad, our milk producers are better organized, our milking cows also increased their production. Certainly there are plenty of statistics pointing to improvement. But when we talk about essential income to allow those producers to have a decent living, as any other individual in our society, milk producers are far from feeling that secure. And this is why I, as many others, would urge the government if only to reply to the brief they received from FPU, to the representations made by the Dairy Farmers Union of Canada and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

So those organisations are now asking the government to take position and immediate corrective action, that is to say that the government must intervene in a hurry to precede the time when the contribution for the month of July will be reduced and we ask for your support; that is a letter that was sent to all members of this House. We hope the Minister who refused this week to commit himself to an affirmative answer on those briefs will have a change of mind. We also hope that all members of the House will succeed in convincing the minister of the urgency of this situation.

So if we look at the revenues we could have imagined for dairy producers in April last, we are now taking a step backwards when we limit ourselves to say that it is time for the dairy industry to face its responsibilities. I think that it is unfair to leave the dairy industry alone to defend itself against that situation at this time. The European Economic Community took its stand and the Canadian government might take some measures by setting up a fund, for a given period in any case, to meet and correct that situation, without letting the dairy producer pay for it. It will be understood, of course, that it is not only the government, especially not the Canadian government, which is responsible for an actual situation, but it does not have the right to let the dairy producers fend for themselves.

[Mr. La Salle.]

● (1650)

In my opinion, the request made by the Milk Producers Federation for the immediate withdrawal of the additional 45 cent contribution is fair. The Federation also urges the government to establish a fund to cover the costs of additional export grants which will be necessary for the remainder of the year, that is until March 31, 1976. In the meantime, producers should develop longer term alternatives to cover the export costs of powdered milk. The Federation should arrange without delay special meetings to that end.

Mr. Speaker, once more we will see after a number of years demonstrations by the dairy producers who have done a great deal and have responded in a positive manner to the government measures available to milk producers.

We readily agree that the government has made efforts, but we say that the government's silence with respect to the present difficulties is unacceptable, unfair and offensive to milk producers. I am convinced that not only the parliamentary secretary and other members who are more familiar with this matter will succeed in convincing the minister of the necessity of giving a positive answer to the dairy industry, but also that the minister will manage to get an interesting answer from the cabinet with respect to the establishment of a fund for the period specified in the brief submitted by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Mr. Speaker, I know some of my colleagues would like to speak on this matter, and I will therefore conclude my remarks.

I should like once again to congratulate the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) for giving us this opportunity to comment on this delicate situation, and I also hope the minister and all the members of the House will understand how important it is to solve this problem and therefore make it unnecessary for milk producers to hold meetings at the regional and provincial levels and to come to Ottawa, which entails further expenses.

I think those organizations are responsible and their studies and analyses have been carefully prepared. The statistics provided by the parliamentary secretary are not questioned, but no one can come and tell milk producers: You are in a good situation. Hon. members know it is not enough. We ask them to make an extra effort in order to correct an injustice to words milk producers.

I said earlier this week that it was a public lie to dairy producers to talk about the additional subsidy they were granted in April and the deduction imposed to them. We gave them with one hand a grant which, again, did not amount to a sufficient income. Through the bill, we deprive them of an immediate profit with the other hand.

Given the circumstances, and I do not intend to repeat myself, I hope that the government will understand the most difficult situation dairy producers have to face. We talk about stability and development in the dairy industry. We favour all that. One thing is sure, the dairy industry is not in an easy situation and government can very easily deal with that matter. Once again, dairy producers are quite ready to offer their long-term co-operation in order to find a formula which could be fairer for everybody.

Therefore I hope that the government will answer positively to the brief submitted to them and I challenge anybody to question these briefs. I have not prepared them myself, I do not have the ability to do so. I have considered them and I believe that they are worthwhile. Some members applaud when I admit that I do not have the ability to prepare such brief I only told the truth. I have nothing against someone who tells the truth.

The figures quoted by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) come certainly from his office. They are well prepared, well documented, and his officials are capable to provide him with the required documents. They have been set forth by my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin). They have been repeated by my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau). And both have told the truth. I do not contest those data. I am sorry for the situation, I deplore those data and I urge the government to take action on this situation which hurts and about which the dairy producers are expecting action from the government.

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, by making speeches at this period of the year and at such an hour, we raise questions in this House and throughout Canada. I am wondering about procedures, because at a time when we should be in summer recess, and at least outside Ottawa, if we must sit, let us limit ourselves strictly to urgent matters. Moreover, I believe this involves politicians' credibility, and also opposition and government capability. One thing is certain, there must be a problem of procedure—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must stress to the hon. member that the time imparted to private members' business is limited. Other members did show an interest in the matter under debate, and I would invite the hon. member to come to the subject matter, as quickly as possible in order that other members may also bring their contribution.

Mr. Tessier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Coming to the motion, I would first concur with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) who in my view eloquently stated the policies, as far as milk is concerned.

I believe the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) had an excellent preamble. Unfortunately, I am afraid his conclusion was somewhat overstated, because I feel the government did not cheat producers far from that when they offered, at the beginning of April, $11.02 for their products.

I feel the present milk policy—

An hon. Member: No one got that.

Mr. Tessier: No one got that, but the government offered it. I also believe that the milk policy is appreciated in the whole when it is fully understood.

I would mention the very positive contribution the Agricultural Producers' Union and the producers' associations have been very regularly making to hon. members. I believe their representations add something, and the development of a milk policy for milk producers is a matter of team work. They came here, we heard them, we made our own representations, and finally comes the time for a decision and that decision must be based on a milk policy.

As for the statements made by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), they do not contain any coherent policy as far as I am concerned. In my opinion, they represent a caricature of I know not what kind of agriculture, but one thing is sure, they do not even represent a caricature of Canadian agriculture, being so distant from the realities our own type of agriculture.

I also feel it is appropriate to remind our friends on the other side that once again today they are giving us the opportunity to decry what they have always been decrying haphazardly as being political partisanship. They are always telling us: "We are nor offering you miracle solutions without any partisanship." But when we refuse to play the same game, then we are accused of being members of old parties, either "red" or "blue". There are and there will always be some who accept to play that game.

At this moment, I am presenting the problem fairly and squarely—

[English]

Mr. Alkenbrack: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member think that, just because we oppose a penalty of 90 cents a hundred on industrial milk powder resulting from the inefficiency of the marketing programs of the government, we are playing politics?

[Translation]

Mr. Tessier: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I did not hear the beginning of the comments of the hon. member, but I would like to use my time to go on putting forward my views about the dairy policy.

I was just about to say that what we are suggesting to the Opposition is a serious administration, a sense of responsibility which Canadians can be proud of and also a sense of decision which, I agree, do not go with unapplicable political theories, nurtured illusions, lies, and half truths which cause Parliament to suffer from a lack of credibility on occasion and become a monumental joke.

I believe that there are accomplices of this joke, and they are not on this side of the House, but on the other side.

I am definitely opposed to the proposal of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), because it does not take into account the present agricultural policy. The principle he wants to defend seems well founded and valid, but I believe that if we want to talk about the true issue at this time, we must do so in terms of over-production and marketing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock.

At 5 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PROPOSED REFERRAL OF FOURTH REPORT ON EXECUTIVE COMPENSATION TO HOUSE OF COMMONS PRIOR TO IMPLEMENTATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As workers are still being urged to exercise restraint in their wage demands and in view of the difficulties we experience in trying to win increases for pensioners and veterans, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That this House calls on the government not to implement any of the salary increases recommended in the fourth report of the Advisory Group on Executive Compensation in the Public Service, tabled by the Prime Minister on July 25, 1975, without referring any such proposed increases to the House of Commons before they are put into effect.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of this motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DAIRYING—PROPOSED REMOVAL OF LEVY ON POWDERED MILK FOR EXPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since no really serious motive can justify the decision of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to impose, effective July 1, an additional contribution of 45 cents on every hundredweight of industrial milk, which additional contribution would result in an immediate and important reduction of producers' revenues, and considering that all powdered milk surplusses could easily be sold or even given away to needy countries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the Minister of Agriculture immediately rescind this legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

HELSINKI CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT VIEW OF RIGHT OF SELF-DETERMINATION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): I have a number of questions I should like to direct to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, but I want first of all, by way of an introduction, to wish him a pleasant and fruitful journey to Helsinki.

[English]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in light of the Prime Minister's upcoming trip to Helsinki, I ask him to advise the House if he believes in self-determination and if he will put forth at the conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe Canada's views on the matter of self-determination of nation states?

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his good wishes and can assure him that I will do my best to represent not only the views of Canada but those of the Atlantic alliance. As the hon. member knows, we have discussed in caucus all those problems of the NATO countries. We have reached a certain agreement which I think represents a significant development towards détente. As for the hon. member's question, I can assure him that I will be pleased to table in the House on my return the particulars of the agreement to be signed.

[English]

Mr. Wagner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Prime Minister's remarks, will the Prime Minister advise the House if he intends to make representations to Mr. Brezhnev, to allow self-determination in the Baltic states and in eastern Europe?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, hopefully, I shall be meeting Mr. Brezhnev but I doubt whether at this late date we shall be able to make significant changes in the agreement, as reached so far. I point out to the hon. member that the agreement provides for change, for peaceful change. It does accept, more or less, the boundaries which were agreed to by the United Nations, but does not freeze them for all time. It accepts the possibility of change through peaceful means.

Mr. Wagner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since self-determination is an integral part of security, because there cannot be security so long as the people are not free, has the Prime Minister considered refusing to sign the conference treaty if no acceptable provisions for self-determination are included in it?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, no, I do not plan to refuse to sign the treaty which has been arrived at through many, many months and years of negotiation between ourselves and our NATO partners. I repeat: the point the hon. member is attempting to make I think is covered in the draft document, as it provides for peaceful change and not for the freezing of borders for all time.

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSING WITH RUSSIAN LEADERS ACTIONS OF RUSSIAN FISHING VESSELS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In his discussions with the Russian leader will the Prime Minister be discussing matters that are related to the closing of Canadian ports to Russian fishing vessels, and under what conditions and circumstances will these ports be reopened? Will the Prime Minister also be discussing questions covering the International Commission for the North Atlantic Fisheries and the importance to Canada, as well as to all signatory powers, of Russia's remaining within the agreed quotas?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In a sense, Mr. Speaker, the questions are hypothetical, even though I recognize they are very important. I must point out to the House that there are a certain number of bilateral meetings which we are attempting to arrange. I do not know whether at this time I will have any great time with any particular leader. Well, I should not say that; there are some meetings that I know are confirmed, but in the case of Secretary Brezhnev I do not believe any meeting has been confirmed, and therefore it would be premature to talk about an agenda.

However, I would inform the hon. member that I did write to Premier Kosygin last week about this whole matter, and the thrust of my message to him was that we are taking these actions, as I believe we are entitled to do under ICNAF, with a view to ensuring that the fisheries will be there and will not disappear. I believe this is the point of view that the Russian fishermen themselves would be inclined to share with us. The way things are going now, the Minister of State (Fisheries) has made it clear that the species themselves are endangered. They are endangered for us, for our fishermen, and for the fishermen of other nations. That is the point of view that I will be conveying to him, that it is in the interests of humanity that we exercise discretion in the exploitation of these resources.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER TO PREMIER KOSYGIN AND ASSURANCE EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION TO 200 MILES WILL BE DISCUSSED AT HELSINKI

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister make available to the House the letters that he mentioned which will be exchanged between himself and the Russian leaders; and will he give an assurance that the 200 mile limit or economic zone will be discussed with someone during his visit to Helsinki?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the first point, Mr. Speaker, I will not give that assurance. This is correspondence that I had with Premier Kosygin and it would be improper for me to table it, at least without his permission. I have told the House the essence of my message in it. I have indicated a preparedness to have discussions with Secretary General Brezhnev in Helsinki if such an arrangement can be made.

I did raise the question of the 200 mile limit and indicated that in fact our actions now were predicated on the assumption that we were hoping that the 200 mile economic zone would eventually be recognized in international law, that we were acting as trustees, guardians and stewards of this resource so that there would be some for everybody—preferably first for Canadians, but that the resource itself would be there. It was in the context of international law evolving toward a 200 mile economic zone that we were taking our action.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REASON FOR DELAY IN TABLING REPORT ON EXECUTIVE COMPENSATION—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of the report of the advisory group on executive compensation in the public service which the minister tabled in the House last Friday. May I ask him why it took four months for the government to table this report, having had it in its possession, I understand, some four months ago; and did it have anything to do with the discussions that the Minister of Finance was deeply embedded in at the time in terms of guidelines for salary and wage increases? Related to that, would the Prime Minister inform the House whether or not any action has been taken yet on the report, having in mind the recommendation that certain salary increases become effective on April 1 of this year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member got the figure of four months. I have not been acquainted with the report, and I do not believe the government has, for anything like that length of time. I must say that I took cognizance of the report within a matter of a few days before the budget was brought down by the Minister of Finance. As a matter of fact, the chairman and the vice-chairman of the group, Mr. Lambert and Mr. De Grandpré, met with me on the very day the budget was being brought down and they were in the gallery on the night of the budget. I am not saying the report was not ready. It might have been in some other reaches of the civil service, but I did not see it until a few days before.

On the second part of the question, the government has not yet announced any decision on the recommendation. I must say that we have already considered it in cabinet and I hope we will be able to reach a decision very soon.

SUGGESTED LIMITATION OF PAY INCREASES FOR EXECUTIVES TO $2,400

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, with regard to my information about the four months, it came from the date of the report which is March 31 of this year, which would make it four months ago three days from now. In light of the guideline recommendations of the Minister of Finance in his concern about dealing with the problem of inflation, to the effect that no increases should exceed $2,400, will the Prime Minister assure the House that any increases the government might eventually make in the executive category will not exceed this amount?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as to the date itself, I gave an explanation. I might add, for the benefit of the hon. member, that the increases we have traditionally made date from April 1 and, therefore, regardless of the date the report is brought down, if there are any increases they presumably would be retroactive to April 1.

As to the size of the increases, while I take note of the recommendation of the hon. member, I would point out that it might be slightly unfair to impose a range of levels in civil service guidelines which have not been generally accepted by the public. Of course, we, as members of parliament, have limited our own increase to 7 per cent, but I must point out to the hon. member that this is not an example which has generally been followed and, therefore, I would not want to give any undertaking of this nature until we have studied the report in more detail and made a decision.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF REPORT ON EXECUTIVE COMPENSATION TO COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CURTAIL GROWTH AT EXECUTIVE LEVEL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister will not stick to those guidelines I would ask whether he will follow the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that before action is taken he will bring the recommendations back to parliament? In relation to that, given the fact that the advisory committee said that "the rate of growth (in the public service executive category) has been excessive", being some 82 per cent since 1970 compared with a general growth rate in the public civil service of only 27 per cent, will the Prime Minister inform the House what steps the government is likely to take to curtail this significant growth at the executive level of the public service?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the critique of the Lambert commission is justified. I would point out with some pride that the President of the Treasury Board anticipated by many, many months the conclusions drawn by the Lambert commission, and sometime last fall the President of the Treasury Board announced guidelines as to the rate of growth in the civil service. The figure for the first quarter of 1975 would indicate, indeed, that the rate of growth, which we thought was excessive, has been brought down to a very low figure. I do not have the figure at my fingertips, but the President of the Treasury Board could make it known to the hon. member. This is a justifiable criticism and we have already dealt with it.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC OFFICIALS OR ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Communications.

Could the minister tell us whether since the last meeting of the provincial ministers of communications, he had some dealings with the Quebec premier concerning the federal-provincial dispute on telecommunications generally and more especially on cablevision?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Would the minister tell the House whether he has indeed received representations from the Quebec Junior Chamber of Commerce in particular, and even from the Quebec Young Liberals' Association, that are against the minister's position?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I have received copies of messages sent to the Prime Minister of Canada and the premier of Quebec, but to the best of my recollection, no communication was addressed to me personally.

HELSINKI CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSING CONSERVATION OF FISH STOCKS BEYOND THE 200-MILE LIMIT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the series of questions asked the Prime Minister about his visit. Since he has indicated he plans to raise with the Soviet leader the question of the 200-mile limit, could he tell us whether he will be touching on such matters as the need to reach agreement on positive fishing conservation measures beyond the 200-mile limit or the continental shelf in the area known as the high seas particularly in respect of endangered species such as our salmon and also whales.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can say that the example of salmon was given by me in my letter to Premier Kosygin. If it is possible for me to meet with him, I would certainly want to put the subject on the agenda. I should like to remind the House, however, that largely I believe thanks to Canadian initiatives and the very good work of our Department of External Affairs on this matter we did manage to put environmental questions into the treaty, particularly under basket three I think. This was one of the Canadian concerns, the need to preserve the environment and endangered species.

AIR CANADA

ALLEGATION MINISTER REQUESTED MR. MENARD'S RESIGNATION—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION GIVING GOVERNMENT MORE CONTROL OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of press reports indicating that the minister was about to raise a question of privilege last week arising from statements made by the Chairman of Air Canada, may I ask the minister whether he is now in a position to confirm or deny the reported statement made by Mr. Pratte that it was the minister who precipitated the resignation of Mr. Menard rather than the Chairman of Air Canada, and that in effect it is the minister who is calling the shots concerning who should stay and who should go in the corporation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. I had a telephone conversation with Mr. Pratte on this transaction in which I indicated he should inquire and take necessary steps to protect the reputation of Air Canada, but I never said to him that he should fire Mr. X, Y, or Z.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, would the minister perhaps take this opportunity to clarify what he feels should be his position in regard to Section 5 of the Air Canada Act which states that the affairs of Air Canada should be under the management of a nine-member board of directions, and is the minister considering legislative amendments to grant more responsibility and control over Crown corporations as part of his new transportation policy?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I know there is a new study going on about the relationship of Crown corporations to the government, generally speaking, and probably it includes Air Canada.

DATE ON WHICH ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA ORDERED TO SUSPEND WORK ON CANDU REACTOR IN ARGENTINA

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On July 23, in response to a question from the Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister undertook to ascertain the date on which AECL was ordered by the government to suspend continuation of work on the CANDU installation in Argentina and to table the directives to AECL. In view of reports in the press that work on the project has been continuing since August of 1974 would the Prime Minister be in a position today to supply that information to the House?

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I might reply, the directives are from the Atomic Energy Control Board to AECL refusing the permission to export from Canada integral components for the Canadian part of the Cordoba project in Argentina. AECL has taken the position, I believe quite rightly, that it has a contract to perform and as one of the spokesmen has said it should be the government that should interfere with the contract if it is to be done for policy reasons. The government has done so by asking the Atomic Energy Control Board to withhold permission from AECL to export any component parts from Canada for the Cordoba project.

I would remind hon. members that this, of course, is a partnership with an Italian company, that the basic construction has been done by an Argentine company and the Italian company is continuing with the non-nuclear part, so the government of Canada cannot give instructions to the Italian company operating in that country. It can, however, and has, refused permission to AECL to export parts from Canada until the additional safeguard arrangements are made.

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—POSSIBILITY OF FINANCIAL COMMITMENTS BY CANADA

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could he tell the House if there has been any financial undertaking by the government of Canada with regard to this project during the period since August, 1974?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Export Development Corporation entered into a contract for the financing of the nuclear portion of the Cordoba project. The terms of that contract have not yet been met, and for that reason there have been no advances under the EDC contract. There will be no advances under that contract until the safeguard requirements posed by Canada have been met.

HELSINKI CONFERENCE—SUGGESTION PRIME MINISTER ASK FOR IMPROVED SYSTEM FOR REPORTING VIOLATIONS OF FISHING QUOTAS—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED SURVEILLANCE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the significance of his presence at the conference and the topic of the Atlantic fisheries and the 200 mile limit being considered, and since the foreign fishing fleets in the Atlantic waters have far exceeded the size necessary to catch the existing quotas—and since these fleets are fishing efficiently, effectively and continuously it is estimated that the quotas are exceeded by as little as 40 per cent and as much as 200 per cent—would the Prime Minister consider, as part of his topic for discussion, the possibility of asking that there be a reporting system which would be irrefutable in respect of the amount of fish caught by foreign fleets off our coast? At present there is no confidence in the reporting system.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the hon. member make that statement. If there were no confidence, we would not have taken the action we did with regard to the Russians. We obviously have some confidence. We sealed the ports.

An hon. Member: You acted too late.

Mr. Trudeau: You cannot have it both ways. On the one hand, one hon. member says the reporting system is not good and, on the other hand, another hon. member says we acted too late on the basis of a reporting system which is no good. We are attempting to make representations and we have been making them in a very forceful way by foreclosures. We will continue to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: I am somewhat confused by the Prime Minister's answer to my last question. I will have to read it to see what he really said.

Since it has been felt that the foreign fleets are coming within Canadian waters recently, will the Prime Minister assure us that there will be a surveillance strength put in place to conduct inspection both of the location of the fishing and the amount of fish caught if the proper catch allocations cannot be negotiated in the usual amicable way?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question begs an answer which I am not sure is correct. When the hon. member speaks about fishing in Canadian waters I do not know whether he is referring to the 12 mile limit, which defines Canadian waters now, or to the 200 mile limit, which is something we are trying to bring into international law.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CHURCHILL RIVER DIVERSION—PROPOSED NEGOTIATION WITH MANITOBA AND LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE COMPENSATION FOR CITIZENS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As negotiations have completely broken down between the federal government and the Manitoba government and the Northern Flood Committee with regard to the Churchill river diversion, and as the seven year delay in reaching an environmental and compensation decision will cost the Manitoba taxpayers untold millions of dollars in additional costs, what action will the minister now take? Will he resume negotiations or will the federal government continue with its plans to take Manitoba to court?

● (1430)

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the contention that the negotiations have completely broken down. I am looking forward to a response from the premier of Manitoba to the letter I gave him covering the two areas: the question of compensation, which was raised by the hon. member, and the extent of the flooding which is anticipated.

Mr. McKenzie: As the Manitoba government has provided no firm commitments in regard to compensation for the citizens of northern Manitoba, will the minister insist that the Manitoba government prepare such legislation immediately? Bill 10, which was introduced in 1969 by the previous Conservative government, could be used as an excellent set of guidelines with which to draft the legislation.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, this is a proposal I will be happy to pursue with the government of Manitoba.

SUGGESTED PUBLICIZING OF EXTENDED AUTOMOBILE WARRANTIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but since he is not here I will ask the acting minister, who happens to be the Postmaster General. In view of the evasions of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with respect to questions I asked in this House on July 23 regarding the existence of extended warranties placed on certain models of automobiles by automobile companies and his obstinate refusal to make consumers aware of their rights, I wish to ask if the minister is now prepared to publicize through Box 99 all extended warranties which have existed, now exist or may be found to exist in the future.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs asked me to apologize for his absence today due to illness in his family, and to inform the House that he will be back tomorrow, and at that time he will answer the question.

DAIRYING—POSSIBILITY OF REMOVAL OF LEVY ON POWDERED MILK FOR EXPORT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

ers, mainly dairy producers who expressed their opinion on that matter?

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF LAMBERT REPORT ON EXECUTIVE COMPENSATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. member for Nipissing in his capacity as co-chairman of the Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service of Canada. Would the chairman undertake to discuss with the committee the proposition that perhaps the committee might profit by studying the Lambert Report, which has just been circulated among members of parliament, with respect to executive compensation in the public service, particularly having regard to its recommendations on other terms of employment?

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for drawing the report to my attention. I would be pleased to consider his proposal.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DATE OF DECISION ON SELECTION OF LONG RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, partially because of his trip abroad, and also because of the fact that the Minister of National Defence is not in the House today. Since August 1 is the deadline of which everyone is aware in terms of the time for a decision the government has to make on the long range patrol aircraft, which is, incidentally, related to many of these questions about patrols off our coast. Has the cabinet made a decision on the LRPA, or is it in a position to make one, before August 1 and while the Prime Minister is away?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister of National Defence issued a press release on this matter. If it has not been released, I believe it will be released any moment now. The cabinet did consider the matter, and we did narrow down the options considerably. We explained that we were asking for a further delay because the industrial fall-outs and consequences of the decision have not yet been clearly established. As a matter of fact, until the night before cabinet was meeting on this last week, we were still receiving representations from some of the parties. Therefore, the matter of the LRPA is still in abeyance and will be studied in the weeks and months to come.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps we had better read the press release of the Minister of National Defence, but since it has taken seven years and involved four ministers of national defence to come to a decision, do I understand that there is a further time extension beyond August 1 by which time the government will make a choice between one of the two main contractors, either Lockheed or Boeing? Is it narrowed down to the two?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat that until the eve of the cabinet meeting last week we were receiving new variations of propositions regarding the industrial fall-out aspect in Canada, and it will take us a little while to consider these.

LEVY ON POWDERED MILK FOR EXPORT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture, and it follows a question I asked on July 4 and a number of subsequent questions regarding the price of powdered skim milk. The minister at that time said that the producers themselves accept the levy system for the products they are exporting. In light of the many letters I know the minister has received since that answer, has the minister changed his mind with regard to the imposition of the additional levy on the producers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is the same question which was asked previously by another hon. member, and I give the same answer to this hon. member, which is that I answered the question last week.

ENERGY

FUNDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRESS OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister inform the House as to the status and progress of the federal-provincial committee on the review of Fundy tidal power? Can he indicate if that committee is progressing with its work and if they anticipate they will be able to complete that work within the deadline anticipated when the earlier report was brought down? Is it the intention of the committee to establish a central office somewhere in the Maritime province to move forward with the work they anticipate they will have to do?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, dealing with the last point first, the last report I received from my officials in this regard was that it was not anticipated that at this point a central office would be needed, although that will be very much borne in mind, along with the number of undoubtedly salubrious sites suggested by the hon. member. Regarding the greater detail in the question I will undertake to inquire today and report on the progress to the hon. member tomorrow.

CANADA LABOUR RELATIONS COUNCIL

VIEW OF COUNCIL ON SINGLE SECTOR BARGAINING FOR PUBLIC SERVICE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. Because of the fact that the first meetings by the Canada Labour Relations Council are now over, and in view of the concern of the minister about the existing fragmentation of union power within the public sectors of the economy and his objective to reduce the number of bargaining points within these sectors, can the minister indicate whether the concept of single sector bargaining was discussed at these meetings? What was the general consensus of such a concept, and when can Canadians expect a reduction of bargaining points within the public sector to take place in order to reduce the number of strikes threatening in the entire economy?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in his question the hon. member has covered many areas. I will say yes, the question of reducing the number of bargaining points was discussed; and yes, the question of industry wide bargaining was discussed. The council decided that both were perhaps desirable objectives, and it agreed to form panels of management—or the business side—labour and representatives from government. They would meet over the course of the next two or three months and again in October, hopefully with some definite recommendations along these lines. In view of the summer and their readiness to meet right away and come up with these recommendations, I think that is moving quite quickly.

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON DEMAND FOR UNION FOR CONVICTS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, while on the subject of walkouts I would like to put my supplementary question to the Solicitor General. In view of the work stoppages by striking prisoners at the British Columbia penitentiary, who are demanding the acceptance of unions for convicts, can the minister advise this House what steps he is taking or has taken to bring this absurd situation to an end in order to prevent other similar institutions from following this unfortunate and incredible precedent?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the inmates at B.C. Penitentiary sent a message to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries asking that he go out to B.C. to discuss with them the possibility of forming a union for inmates. The Commissioner of Penitentiaries sent back a message that this was completely unacceptable and that he would not be willing to discuss it with them in B.C. or anywhere else in Canada.

● (1440)

Mr. Jelinek: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the sitdown strike is continuing and in view of the government's inaction, can it be surmised that the government intends to follow the course that these criminals are suggesting and make it government policy to allow convicts the right to strike that many honest Canadians do not share?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I think it was fairly clear from my answer that this is completely unacceptable. I might say the inmates are all in their cells.

An hon. Member: Thank God!

Mr. Allmand: They have not left their cells since this started. With respect to working, I might point out that not all these inmates are working—at any time—and the work is not the type of work that is done on the outside.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—REASON FOR ALLOWING ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA TO CONTINUE WORK ON CONSTRUCTION OF REACTOR

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last week I put some questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and he suggested they should be directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

When did the minister first know that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, a Canadian government agency, had undertaken and was proceeding with the task of supervising the building of a nuclear reactor in Argentina? Did the minister or the Canadian government authorize AECL to undertake this task and in view of the fact that the government was negotiating, as I understand it—negotiations have not been completed—was negotiating for more satisfactory safeguards, why did the minister or the government not require AECL to stop making this particular contribution to the building of a reactor in Argentina?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no doubt the hon. gentleman's questions last week were motivated by a misleading report in the Toronto Star. The report suggested that AECL had carried out the negotiation of its contract in Argentina without cabinet consent and, it also suggested, without the participation of the Department of External Affairs. Both assertions are mistaken. AECL at each stage in the proceedings, from the cabinet authorization of May 23, 1972, to submitting a proposal to tender which had been invited by the Argentine utility, up to and including the confirmation of the contract on December 20, 1973, acted with authority from cabinet, and the Department of External Affairs both here in Ottawa and through the Canadian Embassy in Buenos Aires had been involved in the negotiation of the contract.

The hon. gentleman suggested that the contract was entered into at a time when the government was negotiating additional safeguards. I would remind him that the contract was executed on December 19, 1973, that the government embarked upon a further re-examination of safeguards after the Indian decision or Indian action of May, 1974 to set off a bomb. The government thereafter stipulated there should be tighter safeguards, on December 20, 1974. So the contract was already executed and under way at the time additional safeguards were put in.

I would also point out, as I did to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, that AECL has an obligation to perform under its contract. In my view, and in the view of the government, AECL should meet its obligation but the government of Canada, acting through its agency, the Atomic Energy Control Board will withhold continuation of the contract, in so far as Canadian component parts are concerned, until they complete the safeguard agreement.

Mr. Nowlan: That is what happened to the gas supply—no wonder we are short on gas!

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO SOUTH KOREA—ALLEGED STATEMENT BY ENERGY MINISTER SAFEGUARDS CONDITIONS MET—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question. Mr. Speaker, I am again quoting from a Toronto paper but not the one the minister mentioned. The Globe and Mail of last Wednesday quoted the minister as saying that apparently South Korea had met all Canada's conditions on safeguards on the sale of a Canadian reactor. Is this so, and if it is, will the minister table any documents setting out such conditions?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the actual negotiations of the safeguards arrangement has been done by officials of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He might be in a position to respond.

Mr. Brewin: I do not know whether he heard my question.

An hon. Member: He was not listening.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I was listening very attentively.

Mr. Brewin: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is reported to have said that all conditions have apparently been met—is this correct? If it is correct, when will we be able to see these conditions? When will they be tabled?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the final stages of negotiation are still under way. We expect it will be possible to conclude the safeguards arrangements with the Republic of Korea.

Mr. Brewin: And table them?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

DIVORCE ACT

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR MARRIAGE BREAKDOWN AS A CAUSE—SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Justice is prompted by the recent report from the Law Reform Commission. Is the minister prepared to bring in legislation affecting the Divorce Act to provide for marriage breakdown as the basic cause for dissolution with consequential relief as to maintenance? This course was advocated by the opposition some time ago and rejected by the Prime Minister who as minister of justice, rigidly opposed this suggestion. Has the Prime Minister become sufficiently liberal now to go along with tis proposal?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to find my way through some of those rather obviously unfounded allegations to what may have been the question. I should like to assure the hon. gentleman that this government continues its very alert stance in attempting to move the law forward to put people in this country in the best possible position. We will be looking at the two reports on this subject from the Law Reform Commission, as well as the other very important reports coming from that commission. We look forward to the appropriate development of legislation therefrom.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, could I pin the minister down, in view of that nebulous reply, and ask if he is prepared to recommend a joint committee of this House and the other place to consider this issue, in light of the fact that the only solid progress in the last half century in divorce reform came out of a report of a similar committee eight years ago and since then the law has stood still?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's earlier question really gainsaid that remark, since the creation of the Law Reform Commission and the encouragement to have a look at divorce and family law is an example of a substantial advance. I have no doubt the appropriate course will be for this government to have a thorough examination of the proposals put before it and then to put legislation before the House.

ALLEGED HIGH RADIOACTIVE LEVELS OF WASTE DUMPS OF ELDORADO NUCLEAR AT PORT HOPE—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that well over a month ago a series of apparently substantiated allegations were made about the waste dumps of the Crown corporation Eldorado Nuclear at Port Hope, and in view of the fact that the minister has had a report respecting the veracity of those allegation for over three weeks, does the minister think he is decreasing the concern and worry of residents in the Port Hope area by keeping this report secret? When is he going to publish the report and what is he going to do about it?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to make it public as soon as possible. I will have to see if the translation is completed.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question. What is the minister going to do about the allegations of high radioactive levels and high toxicity levels in those dumps in the area around Port Hope?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could remind the hon. member of the briefing I gave him privately and the response made publicly in this House that the sites had been examined. In some cases, they will have increasing security and in other cases, in conjunction with the Department of the Environment and the province of Ontario, there will be further monitoring. Although there may not be an immediate risk, this will make certain the situation is kept under close control.

POSSIBLE COST-BENEFIT ANALYSIS OF PRACTICE OF MAILING COPIES OF MINISTERS' SPEECHES AND COMMUNIQUÉS TO RADIO STATIONS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services as a result of a query from a constituent and I am sure it can be related to all constituencies in Canada. In order to cut back on government expenditure, as suggested by the Minister of Finance in his last budget, and considering the tremendous increase in the cost of paper and labour, has the government undertaken a cost-benefit analysis of sending speeches and communiqués from the offices of ministers to civic officials, radio stations, etc. across Canada, when such mail cannot reach points in Alberta earlier than three to four days and as late as 15 days from date of release? I have an example of that in my hand.

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO INCREASE RETURN ON ANNUITIES—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The budget speech announced that legislation would be introduced to increase the rate of return on existing government of Canada annuities. Can the minister inform the House when the legislation will be introduced and will it be similar to the ten cent tax on gas, that is effective June 23, and can he tell the House how much the increase will be?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the House leader replied to a similar question to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre last week. Legislation is required and will be introduced early after the resumption of the present session of parliament in the fall. At the moment, the Department of Finance and other departments, including Manpower and Immigration, Revenue and Labour, are working out the details of what the escalation for interest and capital funding should be.

INDUSTRIAL MILK—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF LEVY

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. It relates and may be supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Hastings, which the minister chose not to answer. I will try to word the question in a way that will merit an answer. With regard to the 100 per cent increase in the levy on industrial milk, does the minister have any plans to help relieve the pressure on the industrial milk producer who is in debt to the bank for considerable sums of money, thus threatening his livelihood on the farm? I ask that with regard to the short-term view. In a long-term view, when will the minister be developing a policy to help stabilize the return on industrial milk over the long run?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Twice the minister has been asked that and twice he has said he has nothing to add.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If the answer is in the affirmative, will the minister advise how this can be reconciled with the act that requires senior appointments to be made by the board of directors?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no decisions have yet been made on senior personnel for Petro-Canada.

COMMUNICATIONS

ALLEGED MONITORING OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATIONS BY RUSSIANS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications of which I have given him notice. I understand the minister has conducted an investigation into the disclosure in last Wednesday's Toronto Star that Canadian long distance telephone conversations are being monitored by the Russians. Can the minister indicate the result of that investigation? Also, can the minister advise specifically whether he has been able to determine whether the Russians have ground monitoring stations, such as those allegedly contained in the United States in Russian consulates and the Russian embassy in Washington?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to answer the second part of the hon. member's question on which I have no information. As for the first part, the government has been aware for a long time, much before the publication of the articles he alluded to, that telephone communications can be monitored because hertzian beams or microwave networks are used on some transmission lines. Because of that danger, of which the government is aware, recommendations are made to all those who have to transmit or receive so-called "classified" information against the use of the telephone to that end. When it is absolutely necessary to use the telephone, as it is in some cases, especially to convey information pertaining to our defence agreements with our allies, very costly equipment is used to code the information at one end and decode it at the other. The Department of Communications is also very much aware of the danger and always requires that the microwave networks are located in such geographical areas as can best be protected against that type of danger. However, I must say to the hon. member that, in view of the present state of science, we will have to wait for the development of communications by optical fiber, or by laser beam, to do away completely with the danger to which he alludes.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED MONITORING OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATIONS BY RUSSIANS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT CITIZENS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Rockefeller commission in the United States which looked into the problem of Russian monitoring of long distance telephone calls by private citizens concluded, and I quote:

> This raises the real spectre that selected American users of telephones are potentially subject to blackmail that can seriously affect their actions, or even lead in some cases to recruitment as espionage agents.

What action is being taken by the government to ensure that telephone conversations are not being monitored by the Russians and what protection is there to individual citizens which will ensure they are not blackmailed by the Russians as a result of their long distance telephone calls?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the comments that the hon. members refers to are based on speculative reports and speculative news stories. I do not propose to respond on this subject on the basis of speculation.

UNITED STATES QUOTAS ON BEEF—GOVERNMENT POLICY FOLLOWING EXPIRY OF QUOTAS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Since negotiations commenced in Washington more than a week ago, and since we will soon be facing the anniversary of the global quotas affecting exports of Canadian beef, what will the federal policy be with regard to support prices or border quotas for Canadian beef after August 11 when the present quotas expire?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I said I would announce before August 12 what the decision or position will be by August 12, and I will do that.

CANADIAN PACIFIC

REDUCTION OF TRAIN CREWS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister order Canadian Pacific Railways to stop the current practice of reducing main line and yard railway crews by one brakeman, especially in light of the fact that Mr. Justice Hall has not yet reported to the government on the size of train crews?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire about those facts and give the hon. member an answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IMPRISONMENT OF MISSIONARIES NORMAN AND JOAN JOHNSON IN VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EFFORTS TO SECURE RELEASE

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to the case of Canadian missionaries Norman and Joan Johnson. Can the minister report any progress in securing the release of these Canadian missionaries from Viet Nam?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I advised the hon. member just a few days ago that I had taken additional action in the way of once again drawing this case to the attention of the PRG authorities. I have no information to depart today.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF LAYING CHARGES AS RESULT OF SALE OF TAINTED MEAT IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. It arises out of the possibility of prosecutions arising out of the sale of tainted meat in Quebec. Has the minister had an opportunity to investigate those violations of federal statutes, particularly the Food and Drugs Act, arising from the activity of the Quebec policy inquiry? If not, when will the minister give his full consideration to a matter which involves the health and well-being of an entire province? If so, is the minister now prepared to lay charges under the Food and Drugs Act?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the various facts to which the hon. member refers are the responsibility of provincial as well as federal authorities. It is customary in these circumstances to complete investigations before any charges are laid and not discuss the cases at large in advance of that.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If my questions a little earlier were as oblique as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would seem to indicate, I would like to say for clarification that under the cover of fog and darkness, it is believed that foreign fishing fleets have fished this summer with impunity within an area from which they are precluded by existing international agreement. It was my hope that the Prime Minister would seek from foreign fishing fleets an assurance of a behaviour that would in all respects assure an adherence to the letter of existing agreements. At the same time my question implied that it is to be hoped he would assume a firm posture with respect to Canada's position and the rights of coastal states to the long-term management of the resources of the continental shelf.

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is expressing dissatisfaction with an answer he received in the question period. That is scarcely a point of order. Perhaps the hon. member intended to ask for clarification when expressing dissatisfaction.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I made it perfectly clear that we took this action because we have evidence of overfishing by some foreign fleets. That was made perfectly clear to the House, and I do not see why the hon. member should cast doubt on that. As a result of that action the ports have been closed, and we took that action as a result of surveillance. I am glad to have the support of the hon. member for the government's action, but do not think he is justified in trying to reflect on things we have already done.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,785, 2,191, 2,317, 2,343, 2,437, 2,439, 2,521 (Corrected), 2,567, 2,569, 2,620, 2,689, 2,718, 2,791, 2,793 and 2,967.

Mr. Speaker, if question No. 1,753 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 2,892?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

FREELANCE SPEECH WRITERS

Question No. 1,785—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. During the period March 31, 1973 to February 28, 1975, on how many occasions did a representative of the government employ or otherwise arrange for the services of a freelance or contract speech writer to write speeches for a Deputy Minister or an Assistant Deputy Minister?

2. In each case (a) who was the Deputy Minister or Assistant Deputy Minister (b) what was the fee (c) what was the occasion of the speech (d) who was the freelance or contract writer?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs as follows: 1. Once.

2. (a) J. W. MacNeill, Secretary; (b) $225; (c) Speech to United Nations Preparatory Committee meeting re Habitat 76; (d) James Robb. Nil returns have been submitted by other departments and agencies.

ADVERTISING AGENCIES

Question No. 2,191—Mr. Neil:

What were the names of all advertising agencies in Saskatchewan used by the government or any Crown corporation in each year 1970 to 1974 inclusive and, what were the amounts paid to each?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: The only advertising agency in Saskatchewan used by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion during the years 1970 to 1974 inclusive was Foster Advertising Co., Ltd., of Regina. The agency was used to meet the advertising requirements of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, a DREE Agency, for the three prairie provinces. Dates and amounts are as follows: 1970-71, $6,742; 1971-72, $8,360; 1972-73, $5,809; 1973-74, $47,862.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation: 1970, Harvey Johnson, Regina Branch; 1971, Harvey Johnson, Regina Branch; 1972, Dunsky Advertising Ltd., Regina Branch; 1973, Dunsky Advertising Ltd., Regina Branch; 1974, Dunsky Advertising Ltd., Regina Branch. With regard to the amounts paid to advertising agencies, it has not been customary to require the CBC to divulge such details of its internal management and administration. Nil returns have been submitted by other departments, agencies and Crown Corporations.

MR. PITFIELD'S TRIPS WITH THE PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 2,317—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,798 to the effect that it is government policy that the Prime Minister may travel with an official or officials such as Mr. Michael Pitfield to give him administrative support and in order to provide for possible emergencies (a) what administrative support did Mr. Pitfield give the Prime Minister on the eight specifically named trips to foreign places in the capacity of liaison officer as listed in the answer to Question No. 447 (b) did any emergencies occur on any of these trips where Mr. Pitfield's services were required and, if so, what is the nature of such emergencies and the dates on which they occurred?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): (a) Analysis of correspondence, drafting of replies, review and discussion of problems, planning meetings and other duties such as trip arrangements, arrangements with national and local officials in relation to security and protocol, which it is customary for public servants to render to their minister. (b) On numerous occasions, experience has demonstrated the importance of the Prime Minister being accompanied while abroad by a senior official who can maintain liaison with Canadian and foreign officials and make arrangements to keep the Prime Minister fully briefed on situations requiring his attention. One example of a circumstance requiring the continuing attention of the Prime Minister and the availability to him of senior staff support was the potentially perilous chain of events that took place in Czechoslovakia in August, 1968. Another example was the unexepected declaration by the President of the United States in August, 1971 of new economic measures of profound consequence to Canada. On both these occasions it was necessary to make emergency arrangements to brief the Prime Minister, and for his return to Canada.

EXTINGUISHING LIGHTS IN GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

Question No. 2,343—Mr. Beatty:

1. For each building housing government offices in the National Capital Region, as of April 18, 1975, was the conservation policy recommended by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of turning off lights in offices where occupants had left for the night followed and, in each case, if not, for what reason?

2. What is the cost to the taxpayer of the large newspaper advertisements by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources which shows one of the Department's buildings at right with the lights extinguished in empty offices and exhorts the private sector to follow the same policy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the departments of Public Works and Energy, Mines and Resources as follows: 1. Lights are turned off in all National Capital area buildings housing government offices, where occupants have left for the night, with the following exceptions: (a) buildings in which cleaning services and/or security sweeps are required to be carried out after occupants vacate, in which case lights are turned off by security staff when all operations have concluded, or after operations have concluded in separate areas of the building, when switching arrangements permit. The following buildings are included in this category: Canadian Government Printing Bureau; External Affairs Building; Justice Annex; National Library and Archives; Supreme Court; Temporary Buildings No. 2 and 4; Centre Block; Confederation Building; East Block; West Block; East Memorial Building; West Memorial Building; Lampman Building; DND Headquarters; A, B and C Buildings Cartier Square; Cartier Square Militia Building, Kildare House; Laurier House; Government Conference Centre; National Arts Centre; Postal Station E; Victoria Museum; Hunter Building; Jackson Building; National Police Information Centre; National Police Services Building; RCMP Headquarters; Sir Charles Tupper Building; National Revenue Taxation Hdqtrs and Data Centre; Sir Alexander Campbell Building; Sir Leonard Tilley Building; GOCB No. 1, Tunneys Pasture; R.H. Coates Tower. (b) buildings having greenhouse operations, when lights are kept on in most of the buildings at night during the fall, winter, and spring, when heat and light is required for experimental purposes. The following buildings are included in this category: Building Nos.: 22, 140, 142, 12, 73, 75, 110, 50 and 21; Central Experimental Farm. (c) buildings in which occupants require at least partial lighting during unoccupied hours, for security reasons. The following buildings are included in this category: Lorne Building, Hangars 66, 67 and 68, Rockliffe. (d) buildings in which the Crown occupies leased space, and building owners have elected to leave lights on after the occupants have left, and cleaning operations have been concluded: Nil.

2. $96,767.07.

IMMIGRATION RULES AND REGULATIONS

Question No. 2,437—Mr. Jones:

1. What diseases are considered contagious under immigration regulations?

2. (a) What body or individual is given the authority, duty and responsibility to interpret immigration rules and regulations (b) who decides, in the final analysis, which diseases are contagious?

3. (a) What are the immunization requirements for aliens (b) who enforces such requirements?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and National Health and Welfare as follows: 1. There is no list of diseases considered contagious in Immigration legislation. There is however, sufficient protection to the public health of Canada in section 5 of the Immigration Act which prohibits the admission of persons afflicted with any contagious or infectious disease or with any disease that may become dangerous to the public health.

2. (a) The Minister of Manpower and Immigration or Officials empowered by the Immigration Act and regulations or by ministerially delegated authority interpret the Immigration Act and regulations guided when necessary by advisors in the employ of the Minister of Health and Welfare, the Solicitor General, etc. (b) A medical officer of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

3. (a) The immunization requirement for any person arriving in Canada from a place outside Canada, that is currently infected with the disease, is vaccination against smallpox within the three years immediately preceding arrival in Canada or vaccination within the 14 days immediately following his arrival in Canada. (b) Enforcement of this requirement is by the Department of National Health and Welfare under the Quarantine Act R.S., cc. 33 (1st Supp.) and the Quarantine Regulations established under P.C. 1971-2818.

INVESTIGATION INTO BOAT FIRE AT CHAFFEY'S LOCKS—RIDEAU CANAL

Question No. 2,439—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Dominion Fire Commissioner's office conduct an investigation into a boat fire occurring on July 14, 1974 at the approaches to Chaffey's Locks on the Rideau Canal (a) was the subsequent report classified "restricted and privileged" and, if so, for what reason (b) was the report submitted by the Dominion Fire Commissioner, R. A. Switzer, to D. H. A. Farmer of Parks Canada by letter dated October 2, 1974 (c) was the report made public and, if not, for what reason (d) will it be made public and, if so, on what date?

2. Did the report among other things conclude: Had this explosion and fire occurred during locking operations especially at low level, it is my firm opinion that the occupants of this vessel would have lost their lives?

3. Did the report make four specific recommendations in regard to all canal locks under Parks Canada jurisdiction and (a) if so, what were they (b) in each case, has the recommendation been carried out and, if not, for what reason (c) when will each such recommendation be implemented?

4. Did the report include with reference to all canals under Parks Canada this statement: "a general review of a fire during a locking procedure indicates that a major loss of life can be expected" (a) what steps has the government taken to limit the chances of such an incident (b) if no steps have been taken (i) for what reasons (ii) on what date will something be done?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1. Yes. (a) Yes, this is the standard procedure for all investigations carried out by the office of the Dominion Fire Commissioner. (b) Yes. (c) No. As the report is classified "Restricted and Privileged" the decision to release all or any of the contents rests with the agency responsible for the administration of the facilities under investigation. (d) See answer to 1 "C".

2. Yes.

3. Yes. (a) (i) Provide a fixed water spray system at each lock; (ii) Provide means to escape from locks such as nylon rope ladders with oversize rungs; (iii) It was reported that at one lock the lockmaster uses a loud-hailer to give fire safety precautions in addition to the posted warning signs. Consideration should be given for this practice to be implemented at all locks. (iv) If a lock is located within an area where fire department services are immediately available, a municipal fire alarm box or at least a telephone should be provided so that the fire department can be summoned. (b) Safety precautions in the locks had already been implemented by Parks Canada prior to receipt of the report from the Dominion Fire Commissioner. A fixed water spray system has been under development by Parks Canada and will be installed on the new lock at Smiths Falls this summer for evaluation. If the system works satisfactorily we propose to install such a system at locks over 10 feet deep. However, first priority is to equip those locks over 20 feet deep. Many of the deeper locks have been equipped with scramble ladders or portable ladders for several years. This year all locks not equipped with permanent ladders will have portable ones. Loud-hailer equipment has also been available at all lockstations for several years. Staff have been instructed to use such equipment for marshalling craft and for obtaining compliance with fire precautions before commencing lockage operations. Telephones are located at each lockstation and emergency numbers including that of the nearest fire department have been displayed for a number of years. In addition to the above, regular and systematic inspections of all lock facilities are carried out at the beginning of each season to ensure that required safety signs are in place and in good condition: all lockstations are equipped with fire extinguishers that can be lowered to a boat in a lock and operating staff are drilled in the proper use of the fire fighting equipment at their stations. (c) See reply to (b) above.

4. Yes. (a) Fire hazard signs have been or will be placed in locks. All locks have two fire extinguishers on the lock walls. Canal staff are instructed in use of fire equipment. Permanent or temporary ladders will be provided at locks. Staff have been instructed in the event of a fire or explosion in a lock to fill the lock in order that persons on boats may escape. All lockstations are equipped with telephone to summon emergency aid. Lock operators are to ensure compliance with fire and smoking restrictions before commencing a lockage operation. The 1975 notice of hours of operation of the canals contains a notice requesting boaters not to smoke, use open flame appliances or idle engine during lock operation. The same notice was contained in the booklet Navigation Canals published in 1973. (b) Not applicable.

MR. ROOSEVELT DOUGLAS

Question No. 2,521—Mr. Rodriguez: (Corrected)

1. What were the criminal charges against Mr. Roosevelt Douglas, a landed immigrant from Dominica?

2. Was he convicted and, if so (a) on what date (b) what were the charges (c) what was the sentence?

3. What is his present status in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Solicitor General and the Department of Manpower and Immigration: 1 and 2. Mr. Roosevelt Douglas was convicted under section 372 (renumbered section 387) of the Criminal Code, for which he was sentenced on April 30, 1971, to an aggregate sentence of 913 days. He was released on bail on May 14, 1971, and resumed his servitude on June 21, 1973. Mr. Douglas is a landed immigrant, on parole until the date of expiration of his committal warrant, i.e., December 13, 1975. A deportation order was issued against Mr. Douglas and the Immigration Appeal Board has upheld that order.

3. The status of Mr. Roosevelt Douglas in Canada is that he is a person under an order of deportation who is to be removed from Canada as soon as practicable in accordance with the direction of the Immigration Appeal Board. Because he is on parole from prison he remains within the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General and cannot be removed from Canada until his parole expires in December 1975.

Order Paper Questions

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—1975-76 ESTIMATES FOR LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,567—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Department of Labour for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): 1. $20,800.

2. (a) Nil. (b) Nil. (c) $20,800. (d) Nil.

MINISTRY OF STATE (FISHERIES) ESTIMATES—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,569—Mr. Herbert:

1. What are the total costs included in the 1975-76 Estimates of the Ministry of State (Fisheries) for language training?

2. How are such costs divided between (a) salaries of personnel receiving instruction (b) salaries of instructional staff (c) additional or supplementary services to be purchased from the Public Service Commission (d) other costs?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fisheries)): As fisheries and marine activities fall under the estimates of the Department of the Environment, please refer to the reply given to question No. 2,561.

CANCER RESEARCH

Question No. 2,620—Mr. Reynolds:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,524, how much would the government estimate of the $42,860,000 spent on medical research in 1974-75 was spent on the cure for cancer?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): National Research Council, $400,000; Medical Research Council, $4,445,000.

AIRCRAFT—COST PER FLYING HOUR

Question No. 2,689—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the actual hourly flying time rate charged by DND and DOT in respect of aircraft operated by them for use by and in the pursuit of the objectives of other departments for each type of aircraft made available?

2. Does any portion of such rate involve consideration of capital costs of the acquisition by DND and DOT of such aircraft in the first place, and (a) if so (i) what is it (ii) how is it arrived at (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Defence and the Ministry of Transport as follows: 1. Flying time rates for the various DND aircraft are listed below: Falcon, $545 per hour; Cosmopolitan, $376 per hour; Boeing 707, $1,211 per hour; Hercules, $743 per hour; Buffalo, $666 per hour; Voyageur, $601 per hour; Twin Huey, $209 per hour. MOT hourly flying rates, Aircraft Type and Rate: Jetstar, $555; Viscount, $500; King Air, $185.

2. (a) No. (b) As these aircraft were purchased for departmental objectives, only incremental costs are charged when used for other departments.

[Mr. Sharp.]

FOSSIL FUEL GENERATING STATIONS

Question No. 2,718—Mr. Francis:

1. Is the amount of thermal pollution released into the surrounding environment by nuclear generating stations 50% more than the thermal pollution from fossil fuel generating stations?

2. Has the government commissioned studies to study the environmental effect of such excessive thermal pollution?

3. Does such thermal pollution cause organisms to grow which deplete the supply of oxygen in the surrounding environment?

4. What long range effects will such thermal pollution have on public health?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Environment and the National Health and Welfare as follows: 1. No, the thermal input to the environment is the sum of heat contained in air emissions and water effluents. Nuclear generating stations usually emit heat only to the water environment unlike traditional fossil fuel generating stations which emit both to the air and water environments. Per unit of electricity generated the heat input to the water environment, through the use of cooling water, is greater for nuclear generating stations.

2. Yes, several studies have been commissioned with special reference to the Great Lakes' environment.

3. An increase in water temperature decreases the ability of the water to contain oxygen. Also, it will cause organisms to grow which have both positive and negative effects on the concentration of oxygen depending on the position of an organism in its life cycle and the time of day (sunlight available).

4. There is no evidence that such thermal pollution has any adverse effect on public health.

SUPPLIES FOR PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICIAL RESIDENCE DURING 1973-74

Question No. 2,791—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,666 which stated in part that the Prime Minister's and Privy Council offices spent $12,739 for "supplies" at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive during 1973-74, what is the complete list of all items making up this total along with the cost in each case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The expenditure of $12,739 includes food, cleaning materials, non-alcoholic beverages, totalling $12,299, plus iniforms for government employees (residence staff) totalling $440.

SUPPLIES FOR PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICIAL RESIDENCE DURING 1974-75

Question No. 2,793—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,667 which stated in part that the Prime Minister's and Privy Council offices spent $15,000 for "supplies" at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive during 1974-75, what is a complete list of all items making up this total along with the cost in each case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The figure of $15,000 as noted in reply to question 1,667 was a forecast expenditure. The actual expenditure of $14,953 is made up of purchases of food, cleaning materials, non-alcoholic beverages in the amount of $14,635, plus uniforms for government employees (residence staff) totalling $318.

*LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH NATIONAL EMERGENCIES WITHOUT INVOKING WAR MEASURES ACT

Question No. 2,892—Mr. Stanbury:

Has the Prime Minister carried out the intention he expressed on April 9, 1974, in the House of Commons, to discuss with the leaders of opposition parties the desirability of legislation to deal with national emergencies without the necessity of invoking the War Measures Act and (a) if so, what was the result of such discussions (b) if not, does he still intend to do so, or has the subject been abandoned by the government?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's statement of April 9, 1974 expressed a willingness to arrange a meeting with the leaders of other parties if they felt it would be a good idea to take this kind of action on a contingency basis for some future situation. The Prime Minister remains ready to arrange such a meeting on the basis indicated in his earlier reply.

LOBBYISTS

Question No. 2,967—Mr. Beatty:

1. Has the government considered the registration of lobbyists and (a) if so (i) what studies were done (ii) by and for whom were they done (iii) when were they completed (iv) what were their recommendations (v) where can copies be obtained (b) if not, for what reason?

2. What laws or regulations, if any, govern the relationship between lobbyists and government officials at the present time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council):

1. No.

2. Not applicable.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, July 25, consideration in committee of Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Penner in the chair.

On clause 1—"gasoline".

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, on Friday, just before we adjourned, I had been referring to submissions made by the Canadian Automobile Association. Specifically the association says that if the government needs revenue it should raise it from all those who use petroleum. Mr. Charles J. Clark, President of the Canadian Automobile Association put it this way:

If additional revenue is required by the government to finance a national oil policy, it should be derived from at least all consumers of petroleum products and not by the private motorist who consumes only 25 per cent of petroleum production.

Mr. Clark also had this to say when meeting with government representatives:

Instead of economic sanctions by government, the association strongly urges the support of other agencies including governments at all levels in voluntary conservation programs.

Frankly, although I do not have much faith in the voluntary method, it is a better method than the one the minister proposes in the bill. Mr. Clark contends that the government should raise its revenues from all those who consume petroleum products, not just from private motorists who consume a mere 25 per cent of our petroleum production.

What will be the effect of the minister's exemptions? Clearly, because of the proposed system of rebates, the cost or burden will be borne by the private motorist. Three quarters of our gasoline production is not consumed by the private motorist, but he must shoulder the greatest part of the burden for financing the oil compensation fund. Surely all consumers of energy should bear the cost of this program equally.

What am I saying is that the minister is to raise between $500 million and $525 million in a calendar year from motorists, who consumes only 25 per cent of our petroleum production. This situation is possible only because of the exemptions to be provided in the legislation. Its worst feature is that the minister is granting exemptions to those best able to afford ten cents a gallon, plus the additional five cents a gallon which will be imposed by the oil companies, plus the additional amounts, which may range from three cents to five cents more per gallon once the refiners, producers, bulk dealers and retailers pass their mark-up on to the consumer. The final price increase may be between 18 and 22 cents per gallon.

The so-called ten cents increase will cost the motorist either 11 or 12 cents once the markup is passed on. Those least able to afford the new prices must pay them. I ask hon. members is it fair to make those least able to bear the burden bear it? Is it fair or just to exempt those best able to pay? In particular the distinction the Minister of Finance makes between those who must drive to work and those who need not is so outrageous that I ask hon. members how they can possibly support this legislation.

To suggest that a doctor who drives to an appointment—which is driving to work—is any different from the worker driving to the office or plant in which he is employed is, in my opinion , a specious argument. There is no difference. Unless you are driving your automobile on holiday, or driving downtown to pick up your dry-cleaning or something like that, every other use of the automobile is a necessity, not something about which you have any choice, at least so far as a large number of people are concerned.

I presume the minister says that a lawyer driving to his office is going to pay the tax, but when he drives to the courthouse or goes to see a client he is not driving to work and will be entitled to a rebate. I submit that that is so intrinsically unfair that the minister's legislation is not deserving of the support of any member of this House.

Let me remind the minister of what the Canadian Automobile Association again had to say regarding what a number of members on all sides of the House have said in support of an alternative mode of transportation. As I mentioned the other day, the CAA does not disagree with efforts to conserve energy; in fact, it is in support of alternative modes of transportation. According to the CAA:

> In all too many instances, there is no alternative to the private car. While conservation is an admirable goal, and one supported by the Canadian Automobile Association, transferring people from automobiles to other modes such as urban transit systems through impositions on the motorist is not acceptable. What is required is to provide a more efficient, flexible, comfortable, convenient, attractive, public transportation system—

Note they say a "public" transportation system.

> —which will encourage motorists to voluntarily give up their automobile. And given a chance and an attractive alternative, the motorist will respond.

We also believe that given an attractive alternative the motorist will respond. The trouble with the contention of the Minister of Finance is that he calls for a ten cents a gallon tax on gasoline, as specified in clause 1, yet in an earlier breath he said that one of his objectives is to encourage people to use alternative modes of transportation. If massive numbers of people were to quit driving their cars to work and instead took a bus, or rode a bicycle or a moped, took the subway, or even flew to work, then the minister would not raise the money that he says he needs for the oil compensation fund. He cannot have it both ways, and I suggest this is another ridiculous feature of the legislation.

If the minister had been straightforward about this at the beginning and had said that the objective of the legislation is to raise revenue, that there was no other purpose, then one could understand what he is trying to accomplish much better. He should not have tried to muddy the waters by saying that there were two other objectives, namely, conserving energy and using other modes of transportation. If the people were to use other modes of transportation to conserve energy then he would fall far short of his $350 million which he needs for this portion of the year, and the $500 million that he is going to need for each 12-month period thereafter. It is something like the Minister of National Health and Welfare coming forward with legislation to slap another ten cents tax on cigarettes and saying that one of the objectives is to raise money and also to get people to quit smoking. You cannot accomplish both, because if people quit smoking there will be no additional revenue. That shows how ridiculous this bill is, Mr. Chairman.

The minister will get the agreement, I am sure, of many members in the back rows who have been complaining about this bill and, I suspect, catching heck about it back home, if he were to bring in something other than an amendment to the Excise Tax Act which provided for a very modest increase in, say, corporate income tax, individual income tax, or a combination of both. That would give him the money he requires for the oil compensation fund in a much fairer way and he would not have to go through the charade of saying he is trying to get people to conserve energy and to switch to other modes of transportation. I would promise him maximum co-operation from our group and he would be able to put such a bill, as far as I am concerned, through all stages in one day. I do not know how my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre would feel about that, but I suspect that many members of the House would approve.

The minister should also look into what is happening about this gasoline tax generally across the country. I suggest his advisers read the submission of the Canadian Automobile Association. If they did so they would realize how unfair is this legislation. It is compounding the unfairness of gasoline taxes across the country in view of the different levels of taxes in the provinces, taxes varying any where from ten cents in Alberta to, I believe, 25 cents a gallon in Newfoundland.

Another matter we object to has to do with the complaint of the counterpart in Ontario of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the federal government should never intrude into an area which is the preserve of the provinces. When the provincial minister complained that this tax would be an excessive burden upon people who had no choice but to use an automobile, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources advised the government of Ontario to reduce its gasoline tax. I can see why he advised them to do that, Mr. Chairman; he wanted to open the door for the Minister of Finance to move in and pick up the slack, which is exactly what occurred in the case of Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan has reduced its gasoline tax by nine cents a gallon to the consumer and it has also forgone an additional three cents a gallon which now no longer goes to provincial revenue but to the government insurance fund. The nine cents a gallon reduction was a direct benefit to every gasoline user in Saskatchewan, but now this bill more than removes that benefit from the consumer.

I submit that is about the tenth or twelfth matter that is unfair and unjust about this legislation. I for one cannot support this clause, or any other clause in this bill, unless the minister brings in substantial amendments to it.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a few questions regarding the ten cents a gallon gasoline tax. Has his department calculated what the loss of revenue to the federal treasury will be under the existing exemption given certain motorists, such as doctors and salesmen? I am talking about before the federal ten cents tax was imposed. What is the total amount of revenue lost to the federal government as the result of the existing exemptions?

● (1520)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have no way of calculating that.

Mr. Symes: Am I to assume also in respect of this ten cents tax that the Department of Finance has not calculated what revenue will be forgone because of the application of the exemptions?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the exemptions for all commercial use, including the examples cited by the hon. member, will run in the nature of between $180 million and $200 million.

Mr. Symes: In light of the arguments advanced about the discriminatory nature of this tax in that certain businessmen will have exemptions and others who drive their vehicles to work will not, why did the government not look at the option of reducing the amount of the exemption for people in the category of businessmen and doctors, if the amount will run to some $200 million in order to lower the federal tax from ten cents a gallon to perhaps eight cents of five cents? Surely this was an option, and I should like to know the reason it was discarded.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman surely recognizes that the exemption applies to farmers, fishermen, and a wide variety of people in the general category of those who use gasoline for the purpose of earning income in their business. We decided it was more fair to allow the exemption to apply where the existing deductibility of gasoline as an expense was applicable.

Mr. Symes: I still do not see the logic of that kind of calculation because of the discriminatory nature of the tax. It seems to me, as hon. members of the opposition have pointed out, that there are many others who could reasonably claim the expense for gasoline but who will not be granted the exemption under existing tax laws. I would just reiterate again how discriminatory we find this tax of ten cents a gallon on gasoline, and the exemption which only applies to the consumers of gaoline for the use of vehicles in certain categories but does not apply to those who use gasoline for other business purposes. Nor does this exemption apply to the consumers of other energy such as home heating fuel, and so on.

It seems that I cannot get anywhere with the minister on that aspect so I should like to move to his argument about conservation. When the minister presented this bill to the House he said he hoped the ten cents federal tax on gasoline would reduce consumption. What calculations has the minister made to back up his claim that there will be conservation, in terms of a reduction in the number of gallons in demand resulting from this ten cents tax?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I stated earlier to the House, in answer to a question by someone during the question period, that we did not have any precise calculation because one cannot estimate just what the extent of the conservation will be.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Chairman, that is an interesting way of presenting tax legislation; proceeding in the dark and having no calculations to back up the argument. How can the minister possibly believe that this tax of ten cents a gallon will have any significant conservation effect, particularly when we look at the fact that following the escalation in the price of oil, from some $3.80 a barrel in 1973 to $6.50 a barrel today, there was no significant reduction in demand? The fact is that there has been a continuing increase in demand in spite of that tremendous increase in the price. By what reason of logic does the minister argue that this ten cents a gallon tax will reduce use?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not know about the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, but I think most of us will be more careful in our driving.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister recognizes the concern of the opposition, and particularly the concern of the people in his own party. None of us are arguing against the principle of equalization or the need of the government to raise revenue in order to ensure to people in every part of Canada the same price for heating oil and gasoline. The grievance we have lies in the fact that the ten cents a gallon tax is very unfair. The minister really has not established that he could not have accomplished the same objectives in a more equitable way. That really is the argument we are putting forward. It seems to me that the minister might have applied the same sort of principle in respect of the gasoline tax as is applied in respect of the deduction of the cost of tools and equipment used in the course of employment.

The ten cents a gallon tax could probably be justified if the minister could demonstrate that all gasoline usage was discretionary. If this were similar to cigarettes or booze, the minister could make a case for a very high excise tax. He could always argue that you do not have to smoke or drink, and that you can leave these alone. I think it is clear that, while the use of the car is discretionary, a great portion of usage is necessary in employment, just as tools, safety boots and other things associated with employment are necessary. Such use of the automobile should be treated in the same manner.

In the minister's considerations in respect of raising this revenue did he give some thought to providing an exemption or a tax credit which would take into account some kind of average which most working men could relate to, so that there would be an exemption or compensation in respect of a certain portion of usage? This could be accomplished through a credit to income tax in the same way as a tax credit or exemption is now provided in respect of articles used in the course of employment.

The minister said in reply to an earlier question that not everyone drives a car. While that is true, there are very few families in this country who do not require a car for purposes of employment, even in the built-up city areas. It may be that not everyone does drive a car, but I am sure the figures would indicate that the overwhelming majority of Canadians do use cars in some way in respect of their employment. I am sure that people on unemployment insurance will argue the same point of view, that they have to drive 30 or 40 miles to the unemployment insurance office. They are expected to provide their own transportation or they will be cut off from benefits.

I would like to ask the minister this direct question. He has brought in a tax that even he will agree is regressive, just as every sales tax by its very nature is regressive. Why did he not provide some compensation based on income, and on the understanding that the car or the use thereof is not totally discretionary, but is required at least in part in most people's employment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, when looking at the means of financing what the hon. gentleman has conceded to be a deficit in the oil account, as between the export tax on the one hand and the import subsidy on the other, which is running now somewhere between $400 million and $600 million, and looking at the alternatives, we felt the fair way was to tax the user of that gasoline, particularly personal use of automobiles. This was felt to be the fair way of financing the national oil price and maintaining the price for home heating oil, as well as the price for commercial and industrial uses, at $8. Obviously this hurts some users more than others, but I was concerned about progressivity, which is the reason we restored part of the reduction in the tax on incomes above $25,000, adding back $250 at that level in order to add some progressivity to the total line.

I just say to the hon. gentleman that until we return to some style of self-sufficiency in respect of energy, particularly oil and gas, in this country in an energy-short world there will have to be some adjustment in the way we transport ourselves, and some adjustment in the way we live.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I do not disagree with the minister on the need to make that adjustment, but the minister really is suggesting that people have this kind of choice and can in effect make this adjustment. We make the argument that many people, even if they should agree with the need for conservation, very often are the low income people who do not have a choice. All we ask the minister is that he make an adjustment in the tax, or make an adjustment in the whole income tax picture, to find some kind of compensation to offset the regressiveness and lack of discretion which exist for many people regarding the use of gasoline.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, the minister in his budget said that one of the reasons for the imposition of this ten cents excise tax is so that people would be more careful in the way they consumed energy, particularly gasoline. He also mentioned that the purpose of the ten cents excise tax is to compensate the east coast for the shortfall. Now, suppose—and I am sure the minister must have considered this—people were indeed very careful in the use of petroleum and he was not able to raise the $350 million this year, or the projected $500 million, would the minister tell us in what other ways he would make up the difference if there should be a shortfall in respect of the amount needed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, as estimated by the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, the shortfall in the oil account, that is, the difference between the export tax revenue and the import tax subsidies, will be roughly, in this fiscal year, between $400 million and $600 million. We can add to that an additional charge to the federal treasury of about $200 million as a result of equalization resulting from one third of the additional proposed gas revenues that are attached to the equalization account.

Over a full year the revenue from the excise tax at the ten cents a gallon on gasoline is estimated to be roughly $525 million. Now, if consumption is less, and therefore revenue from the excise tax is less what will happen at the same time is that the import of gasoline obviously will be less so that there will be less of a deficit in the oil account.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I want to come to the issue raised by myself and colleagues in this party, as well as by others, of the inconvenience this places on those workers who are not doctors, lawyers, or sales persons. I should like to ask a question about the steel workers at the Shebandowin mine, a mine owned by the International Nickel Company, which is located 60 miles from the Lakehead. These workers have no place to live at the mine. The company will not build a company town so the workers cannot live at the minesite and therefore must commute daily. Since they are in the second year of a three year contract this has created some difficulty for them because they are faced with an unexpected charge against their family budgets. Is the minister prepared to assist the workers at Shebandowin or any other workers in a similar situation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, for reasons set out earlier there is no way we can fairly judge as between locations of people and jobs.

Mr. Rodriguez: I may say for the information of the minister that the company has a check-off list of workers at the Shebandowin mine. Surely it should not be beyond the capacity of the bureaucracy to determine who must drive and has the right to use a car. Surely it is not beyond the ability or the intelligence of the government to work out a system to take care of these workers. Is the minister telling me it is impossible for the bureaucracy to work out a system?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, you just cannot run a national tax system on a series of individual situations.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, it seemed that the minister was saying that he was working in the dark and did not know what the budget figures were. It seems to me that since the government brought in the budget, and is imposing a tax, it should have the facts and figures. I should also like to ask the minister about another matter. It concerns rural mail deliveries. Those people who deliver mail on the basis of a contract with the post office will be faced with the burden of this ten cents tax. Will they be eligible for the rebate?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman, but obviously they are paid by the post office by the mile.

Mr. Rodriguez: Perhaps the minister is not aware that they work on a fixed contract with the post office. If contingencies such as this arise in the middle of their contract, arrangements have to be made. Is the minister prepared to allow these workers any consideration in respect of the delivery of mail? When they bid on a contract they do so assuming that gasoline will be at a certain price, and now they are faced with this excise tax. Will the minister provide them with an opportunity to get a rebate?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the rural postal deliveries are done by independent contractors, as most are, then their expenditure for the purchase of gasoline is a deductible item for the purpose of earning income, and the rebate would be applied. Of course that covers a great majority of the cases.

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, Mr. Chairman, I was wondering about this excise tax and whether the minister had thought about levying another three cents on every dollar bet at the race tracks. Has the minister considered that as a way to raise money? The government now is taking 15 cents out of every dollar bet at the race tracks and I wonder whether the bureaucrats had considered taking another three cents out of every dollar from the bets at the racetracks. There is racing every day of the week in Canada.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I find that a strange position to be taken by a party which for many years has been opposed to lotteries. In any event I think that tax primarily is provincial.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I can say to the minister that such a position is very inconsistent with the philosophy of the New Democratic Party but certainly is not inconsistent with Liberal policy, and that is the reason I asked the question. It is a Liberal government which is imposing this tax and therefore I should like to know whether the minister has looked into this. I just wanted him to say yes or no, and not "go around the rosy".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We examined a panorama of options, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a couple of questions following those asked by the hon. member for Nickel Belt, who is very worried about the miners of Shebandowin. I assume that since they are miners they have a reasonable income, as compared with the many people who are working for minimum wages and have to drive their cars to work 30, 40 and even 50 miles. We know the minister has received representations about this. Along with all my colleagues on this side I have come to the conclusion that the minister has dug in his heels on the issue.

Perhaps the minister will recall the time when I spoke on July 14 and said I hoped he might reconsider his decision. I even went so far as to say I hoped he might repent. I wonder if he is nearer to repentance and would at least consider something different so far as this ten cents tax is concerned. I believe the figures which I have available state that if a tax of 2.5 cents were imposed on every gallon of every type of fuel, that is, gasoline oil, we would come up with the same amount.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I could not give the hon. member an answer to that. What we wanted to do was to limit the tax to personal use to cover the deficit so that we could maintain the price on commercial use, home heating oil, industrial uses, use by farmers and fishermen and other pursuits where we need to continue production in the country, at $8 as against the world price of $12. For that reason we limited the tax to personal use.

Mr. Darling: The figures I have show that 2.5 cents imposed on all fuel oil would be sufficient. I do not think heating fuel should be considered because the home owner should not be saddled with that tax. I am wondering what percentage of increase would be required on all gasoline used for business purposes as well as for pleasure to make up the amount we need.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I suppose the assumption is that the hon. gentlemen would be willing to see home heating oil bear part of the price?

Mr. Darling: No, I am referring to gasoline and diesel fuel. At present the government is letting many very wealthy people off the hook on diesel fuel because they are driving Mercedes Benz, Peugeot, or some other fancy cars and they do not pay the ten cents tax. I admit that the minister did say it would be a horrendous problem to catch those guys. I suggest that since they are all so well to do they will probably voluntarily send in the ten cents a gallon to the Minister of National Revenue. I wonder if the minister could give us a ballpark figure for how much would be required a gallon on all gasoline to come up with the amount which the government will get from the ten cents tax, which is imposed on people who can afford it the least in most cases.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will try to get the hon. gentleman the figure.

Mr. Darling: I am quite sure the minister has been reading the papers and has already heard how this tax has hurt the second most important industry in Canada, that is, the tourist business. I am hoping the minister will do something about this. In one particular town the businessmen stated that they had not seen an American car on the streets for some time, so certainly this new tax has had a very serious impact on the tourist industry.

I have made it a point to talk to a great many people in the Parry Sound-Muskoka area and I understand they are all feeling the pinch. Certainly there is a recession, but they are blaming the ten cents a gallon gasoline tax for their situation. I would like to give an illustration. Not long ago an American car with a trailer pulled up in front of a gasoline dealer in the town of Trout Creek and asked for directions to a certain camp. The dealer gave them to him and then asked whether he would like his car filled up with gas, to which the American replied "Oh no, I have been reading about your gas situation. I have the trailer full of gas". That guy was a jackass, in my opinion, to take a chance on carrying a trailer full of gasoline, but perhaps many more people will take that chance to save money. It is pretty tough when tourist operators are hit in this way.

I cannot say that there are no American cars in my own village of Burks Falls because it happens to be the only town between the American border and Timagami, 300 miles north, and No. 11 highway goes right through the main street. So we do see a good many American cars going through there. Nevertheless, tourist operators are feeling the pinch, and I am wondering whether the minister has had second thoughts and will try to do something to cut this tax down somewhat.

I have another question, Mr. Chairman. This afternoon before I came to the House I spoke to the mayor of the township of Muskoka Lakes, which is one of the well-to-do townships. He said the township is feeling the pinch and asked me what could be done. I told him that we in the opposition were doing everything possible. I also thought back to November 18 when the minister dealt us a low blow on that boat deal, of which we have heard something lately. I know the minister recanted by taking the tax off the hulls, but then the ten cents tax was imposed. The mayor said to me, "my God, what will Turner do next?" I said to him, "Look out, I will tell you". I am predicting this and I shake in my boots when I say this, Mr. Chairman. I said to him, "Come the next budget, if he is hard up, he will start taxing that beautiful fresh air in Parry Sound-Muskoka."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't put ideas in his head.

● (1550)

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Chairman, I was waiting for the discussion to come to an end on both sides of the House. Members just seem to be yelling at one another. I wish to put a question to the minister. He stated that the 10-cent excise tax, which is particularly hard on individual Canadian taxpayers, has been imposed so as to reduce the amount of gas consumption. The idea is excellent, although I refuse to admit that it should be imposed only on the individual taxpayer. I should like to ask the minister if he intends to require the same tax from Crown corporations, such as the CN. Immediately after the announcement of Bill C-66, the CN handed out contracts to the owner of an Ontario trucking firm for all parcel post services in the province of Quebec. Previously, the merchandise was being delivered by Canadian National on its regular line, which situation did not cost a cent in either gas or oil. And now a private trucking firm is going to be delivering merchandise that used to be shipped regularly by the CN. I don't know whether the minister is aware of the amount of gas that is thus going to be spent uselessly, because previously there was no gas involved in such deliveries. Now this gas will be spent wastefully, simply because the whim of some CN officials who are comfortably seated in their offices, probably with the idea of trying to reduce the CN workload and give it to a private Ontario firm which will be delivering merchandise in the province of Quebec. I wonder whether the minister is going to do something if he really wants to save on gas consumption. As for us, we are all in favour of saving gas. But if the minister wants to do so also, he should start by preventing Crown corporations from acting so foolishly. I think this would be a first step in the right direction, and I should like the minister's opinion on the subject.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In view of the hon. member's remarks, Mr. Chairman, I will simply say that I will draw the attention of my colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to that matter.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have spoken with respect to Bill C-66, and I believe it is important that hon. members, and certainly the people of Canada, remind themselves of the true import of what the minister is proposing in Bill C-66. The fact is that Canadians are moving back to a two-price oil policy in Canada. It is not a geographical two-price system where those east of the Ottawa Valley pay more for imported oil while those west of the line pay less for our domestic product. It is a two tiered system based on one's class in society. One class of Canadians, mainly the commuter going to work, must pay world prices for oil, while the exempt class, those who can claim gasoline as an operating expense, get their gasoline for ten cents per gallon less. It is rationing through price.

As this debate on Bill C-66 goes on, the unfairness of this two-price system for petroleum products becomes more obvious. Few disagree with the concept of having a uniform price for oil products across Canada, but it is difficult to understand why the government feels that the subsidization for such a program, some $525 million, should fall on a relatively small sector of our petroleum users.

It is estimated that the ten cents per gallon tax will be levied on approximately one third of the total gallonage of all refined petroleum products used in Canada. If the government were to trim some of the fat from its current spending programs, there is no doubt that it could save the $525 million it needs in a full year for this subsidization program. Even if the government feels it cannot cut back on its spending, it is our belief that the subsidization program should be treated as a national expense and paid for out of the general treasury. In either event, if the subsidy were covered by a cutback in spending, or through a general levy, it would ensure that the subsidization would not fall so harshly on one sector of our people. All would pay their pro rata share, including the businessman and the corporation as well as the working man.

The Minister of Finance has hinted that the ten cents per gallon excise tax will contribute to energy conservation, but I noted earlier today in this debate that he could not back up his contention that this will in fact help conserve energy in Canada. I would suggest that very few people take this conservation argument seriously.

Oil company officials have told me that they anticipate that consumers, who are already absorbing the ten cents a gallon tax will absorb it as another price increase without cutting back their demand for this type of fuel. People using cars to commute to work have no alternative but to pay the higher tax, which for most commuters in my riding means an extra $15 to $30 per month in their travelling expenses to and from work. This is an unnecessary and grossly unfair tax which falls discriminately on those who are least able to pay.

With that background I would like to read into the record a letter which I received from a constituent, in which he states:

I am one of Canada's contradictory taxpayers.

House prices in Toronto put homes beyond most people's budget. The government advocates we move to smaller centres where homes are less expensive. There we find jobs are fewer and lower paying and therefore we must commute to jobs in Toronto. Now the government puts the squeeze on us by adding 15 cents to the price of gasoline.

Why is the government putting the screws to we middle class people who wish to work and own homes?

Perhaps the minister could answer this question: what reply should I give to that constituent?

An hon. Member: He is speechless.

Mr. Paproski: The minister doesn't care.

An hon. Member: He has no reply.

Mr. Stevens: I think the record should note that the minister simply laughed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The record should note that I just smiled at the rhetorical question of the hon. gentleman, knowing that he has enough ingenuity to answer any letter from a constituent.

Mr. Stevens: Let me try another letter on the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Another constituent wrote as follows:

How is Mr. J. Turner's budget going to help the working man with his fight against inflation?

The company I work for is offering us a 3% increase in our pay and J. Turner's budget is putting the cost of living up 2% along with the other raises in all the rest of the items. It is getting worse for the working people instead of better.

That constituent is presumably referring to the estimate now made by economists that the energy moves proposed by the Minister of Finance will be putting up the cost of living between 1¼ per cent to 1¾ per cent. I would like the minister to help me in replying to that constituent. Has his department done a study with respect to the impact of the proposal in Bill C-66 to put on a ten cents tax, on the cost of living, or the impact of raising the price of oil $1.50 per barrel which he also announced in his budget? In short, what will this mean in terms of inflation in Canada when it is actually felt?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the impact of this bill is less than one half of 1 per cent of the CPI. That is the price I believe Canadians have to pay in the short term in order to maintain one national price for Canadians and to maintain the price of fuel oil for commercial use and for farmers and fishermen at $8 per barrel, or two thirds of the world price.

Mr. Stevens: In speaking about the price which must be paid to maintain one oil price in Canada, which I reiterate no one is disagreeing with in principle, we are saying that the minister has chosen a means which is costly and extremely discriminatory.

Earlier in this debate the Minister of National Revenue stated that the administrative cost with respect to this tax would be 1 per cent. As 1 per cent is roughly something over $5 million of the total amount to be raised, can the minister indicate whether $5 million will actually be spent in administering this tax? Is it needed in the collection of the tax? Is it needed for the rebates, bearing in mind that for $5 million 500 civil servants could be hired at $10,000 per year, or if the government wants to pay $20,000 per year it could hire 250 civil servants with this $5 million, which the Minister of National Revenue indicated would be the total cost of administration of Bill C-66 with regard to the ten cents Turner tax?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the expenditure, of course, is the collecting of the tax and paying the rebates under the tax. That figure of 1 per cent is less than the figure of 1.2 per cent for the collection of the personal income tax in this country, and I think it demonstrates a relatively efficient administrative system.

● (1600)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, obviously the minister's definition of relativity is different from that of members on this side of the House. I should like the minister to be more specific. Can he give a breakdown of how that $5 million odd will be spent? Where is that kind of money needed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I will get the details from the minister in charge of administering the tax, the Minister of National Revenue, and ask him to give those figures to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka has referred to the likely impact of this tax upon the tourist industry. Has the minister any calculation of the amount of the total tax that will come from tourists?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, that would be very difficult to calculate and we do not have it.

Mr. Stevens: Could the minister indicate if he tried to obtain that figure before deciding to bring in this discriminatory tax?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we weighed the effect of the tax on the economy and Canadians generally in the short term, as against the medium and long term necessity for it.

Mr. Stevens: Touching on another question, namely the airport transport tax, could the minister elaborate on what he said in the budget, namely, that the tax was required to cover deficits in the operational and construction side of airports in Canada? What is the relative shortfall he is referring to? How much is operational and how much is actually construction of airports in Canada?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman made his point on second reading. I mentioned in the budget speech that the increase represented by the air transport tax was essential to help lessen the heavy deficit in airport construction and operation. For example, the total air transportation program had an operating deficit—that is to say operating costs less revenue—of just over $200 million in 1974-75. This deficit is for airports, air traffic services and en route navigation aids. It does not reflect any portion of capital cost. For airports only, the loss on operations for 1973-74 was $105 million. This loss reflects full costs including depreciation. The loss for 1974-75 is likely to be significantly higher.

Furthermore, the public account for 1973-74, at page 26-16, showed net income for the airport revolving fund in that year of $6.4 million. With the opening of Mirabel airport this year, this net income will disappear. In the current fiscal year, the revenue from the air transportation tax prior to the increase announced for August 1, 1975 was estimated at $37 million. The increased revenue resulting from the tax increases effective August 1, 1975 is expected to generate additional revenue up to $16 million. This revenue is necessary to offset costs for both revolving fund airports and all other airports.

Mr. Stevens: Now that the minister has familiarized us with these deficit figures and how they are arrived at, could he indicate if, faced with these deficit figures which presumably come from the Department of Transport, he inquired why our airports are operating so much in the red, especially when we realize that most if not all United States' airports operate profitably? Ours, operated by the federal government, appear to be getting more and more into a deficit position.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, without accepting that, I have been looking at the situation of the self-financing of airports. A direct reply to the question could more properly be proffered by my colleague. The hon. gentleman tried to take up that subject, or an allied subject, with me when we were discussing the Financial Guarantee Act, but the Minister of Transport could more properly answer it. With the over-all figures with which I am faced I felt, as did the Minister of Transport for whom I introduced this particular tax, that we ought to raise the air transportation tax.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, may I assume that the minister accepted the deficit figures given him by the Minister of Transport without comment or question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Stevens: To what extent did the minister question the Minister of Transport about the deficit? Did he ask him if he had reviewed the operation of United States airports to determine how they could run at a profit?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. gentleman understands that under the parliamentary system each minister replies for his own expenditures, and the over-all responsibility for expenditures lies with the President of the Treasury Board, while the over-all policy for this matter lies with the Minister of Transport. Under our parliamentary system of the collective responsibility of cabinet, my conversations with the Minister of Transport are privileged.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister indicated that the total revenue generated by this tax, if the bill is passed, would be about $53 million. In view of the fact that the total amount in our current year's estimates for the construction of the Pickering airport is $51.2 million, has the minister considered recommending that it be discontinued? In that way the $53 million revenue that he contemplates raising by this tax would be saved this year and in future years.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, that is not a subject I would be free to discuss at this stage in this committee.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister might not feel free to discuss it, but in answer to my question if consideration had been given to that type of offset I suggest, it is quite in order to answer. Was any consideration given, in the spirit of restraint, to keeping this tax down by simply saying "Let's forget Pickering".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I cannot elucidate on what I have already tried to indicate to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Stevens: Coming back to the Turner ten cent gasoline tax, could the minister indicate—I have had dozens of letters from my constituents protesting this tax—in rough terms how many letters he received and how many said "Good boy, John, we like that ten cent tax" and how many stated in no uncertain terms that they feel it is inequitable and unfair?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we get a good deal of mail after every budget. After the last budget it was not in excess of previous budgets. Some letters liked the budget and some letters did not like the budget.

Mr. Stevens: Knowing the administrative talent the minister has around him, I thought they would have calculated the number of letters about the ten cent tax and reported the number in favour and the number opposed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, let us be realistic—who the hell likes a tax? One does not expect to win a popularity contest by putting on any type of tax, particularly a visible one like a gasoline tax. Most of the people who wrote to me were satisfied with the explanation that it was in the interests of self-sufficiency, and of one national oil price for the country and was in the immediate and long term interests of the country.

Mr. Stevens: How does the minister know they were satisfied? Did people write back saying "Your tax is quite satisfactory, go ahead and impose it?"

● (1610)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I can state to the hon. member that to anyone who holds this portfolio, no correspondence or no news is good news.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct one final question to the minister dealing with the Turner ten cent tax. In view of the fact the $1.50 increase per barrel of oil will be effective as far as the retail price is concerned on August 15, has any consideration been given to cutting back the ten cent tax effective that date in order to ensure there will be no further price increase at the retail level on August 15?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, sir.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Chairman, one of the points the opposition has been making in debate on this ten cent a gallon tax is that, people who have no other option will still have to drive their cars to work and hence they will be hit by this discriminatory tax, so the consumption of gasoline will not go down. In the last election campaign, the Liberal party made some rather grandiose promises to the people of Canada about improving public transit. They said they would forge ahead with improving municipal bus lines and an urban train system from the suburbs to the centres of the cities, as well as subways. I would like to know what has happened to those great promises.

I always assumed that Liberals were men and women of their word; once they said something they would live up to it. Judging by the results of July 8, many Canadians thought they were honest people who would live up to their promises. I would like the Minister of Finance to tell us what happened to those promises. On June 17, 1974 in Toronto, the Prime Minister announced a $270 million program to aid public transit. He said a Liberal government would pay 100 per cent of the cost of Canadian-made commuter vehicles and 50 per cent of the cost of platforms and stations. The government would also pay 25 per cent of the cost of Canadian manufactured vehicles for public transit within cities.

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is not at all dealing with the matter under consideration by the House. I am prepared to hear and consider the points of view he is raising, but for the well-being of the House, I think he should limit his remarks to the matter now under consideration by the House.

[English]

Mr. Symes: I know Liberals do not like to hear old promises exposed or brought up again. My point is that the Minister of Finance is saying this tax will encourage Canadians to use alternate means of transport. I ask the minister, where are they? We know that public transit is the only logical alternative to driving a car. I am asking the minister to explain what has happened to those promises to improve public transit. That is entirely relevant.

As I was saying, the Prime Minister in that election campaign said that encouragement and assistance would be given to smaller municipalities for the creation of new transit systems, Canadian industry would be encouraged to develop passenger vehicles, and experimentation with new transit systems would be assisted by federal financing of demonstration projects.

The following day, June 18, 1974, the Prime Minister announced in Cornwall, Ontario, that a Liberal government would take responsibility for rail passenger service out of the hands of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways and entrust the task to a new Crown corporation. The corporation would run high-speed rail services in heavily populated areas such as the Windsor-Quebec City corridor, introduce luxurious transcontinental excursion trains and establish a "super-bus" service between medium sized cities.

The Liberals also promised to set up a national urban transportation development corporation to promote improvements and develop policy on urban transportation. The corporation is mentioned in the 1973-74 annual report of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs, but as the minister was forced to admit in committee on May 1, 1975, the corporation has not even been set up as yet. There were three major promises in the last election to promote public transit, providing an alternative for people instead of using their automobiles. I ask the Minister of Finance, who I believe is an honourable man who lives up to promises, when can we expect to see these three major promises, made by the Prime Minister in the last election campaign, come into effect and provide automobile drivers with a logical alternative?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, only the Prime Minister is entitled to respond to that type of question on behalf of the government.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Chairman, the minister knows full well that it is a cabinet decision. The decision is based on what the Minister of Finance sees as budget priorities. All we can conclude is that the minister does not see any need to uphold election promises. He does not see any need—

The Chairman: Order, please. I believe the Chair has been most lenient with the hon. member. At some points, there has been a connection with the clause under debate. The hon. member is aware of Standing Order 55(2) which instructs members to direct their remarks to the relevant clauses before the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I have a few more questions to ask the minister. To begin with, I find it very strange that in answering my colleague, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, he would disavow promises made by the Prime Minister by saying that only he can answer them. I thought that any member of the Liberal party could do that.

I would like to ask the minister whether he, his colleagues or his officials, would give some rough or ballpark figures, if not exact ones, on the situation east of the Ottawa river. I take it that most of the expenditures out of the consumption fund will be to subsidize the export price east of the Ottawa river. Can the minister advise how much that amounts to per gallon. I find it somewhat incongruous and very illogical that the purpose of the consumption fund is to subsidize the export price, mostly east of the Ottawa river. The minister then proceeds to take back ten cents a gallon from those same gasoline users. Was that aspect of the matter looked into? How much per gallon does the subsidy amount to in order to reach some price equalization compared to the ten cents a gallon the minister is levying in this bill?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether we can break that down the way the hon. member suggests. By financing the deficit on the national single oil price against personal consumption, we are able to preserve the $8 a barrel price for industrial, farming, fishing and home heating consumption. How that breaks down per gallon is difficult to estimate. Obviously, the person who drives for personal use is paying more than $8 per barrel. The price he is paying is closer to the world price in order that we can maintain the price for those who use gasoline industrially, commercially, for farming or for fishing at two thirds of the world level.

● (1620)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I suppose I should be satisfied with that answer, although I am not. I note that although the price is supposed to be equalized, a day or so ago there were wide price differentials in this country, even if one takes into account the differences in provincial gasoline taxes. I note that No. 1 grade gasoline in Halifax was selling for 89 cents per gallon, whereas in Regina it was selling for 71 cents. Surely, there should not be such a wide spread if we are trying to equalize prices.

May I ask a second question? When the minister was asked earlier this afternoon how much gasoline is consumed in this country, he said he does not have those figures before him. Since the bill is to allow the heaviest users of gasoline a rebate, or a deduction under the income tax act, has the minister considered imposing a smaller tax, say of three or four cents a gallon across the board, instead of ten cents a gallon as proposed in the bill. Can he say how great the government's revenues would be if a tax of three or four cents per gallon were imposed across the board and few exemptions and rebates were allowed? An across the board tax would force those who use most to pay most, which is only right. Why not charge three or four cents a gallon across the board? Would that not raise as much money as the government now seeks under the present bill? I ask again, does the minister know how much gasoline is consumed in Canada, and would not a lower across the board tax bring in as much money as will the provisions of the present bill?

Mr. Darling: That is the question I asked about ten minutes ago.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, the hon. member asked that question, but in a different way perhaps one hour ago. The hon. member asks why we did not charge, say, three of four cents a gallon right across the board, which would include gasoline used commercially, in farming and in fishing, instead of ten cents per gallon on personal use. We did not contemplate that, as that course would have affected the price structure of everything produced in this country. It would have affected the price of food; it would have affected the price structure of our entire manufacturing and industrial fields in Canada. It would have affected the price of mail delivery and of milk delivery. Therefore, in order to maintain the price of gasoline used industrially, commercially, in farming and in fishing, et cetera, at two thirds of the world level, we concentrated the tax on gasoline to be used for personal use.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister a very specific question.

Since one of the goals sought by this bill was to reduce gas consumption there seems to be at first blush some sort of contradiction since if a decrease in gas consumption is encouraged and millions of dollars in revenue are sought at the same time there seems at first blush to be a contradiction. I would like to get explanation on that.

But more precisely, if a decrease in gas consumption is being considered to conserve oil energy could the minister say according to the calculations of his experts by how much gas consumption could be reduced if this bill is implemented?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, that matter has already been discussed in the House. First of all, it was not possible at that time to estimate conservation against an increase in the price of oil per cent per gallon. On the other hand, even if there is some conservation, some decrease in our consumption brought about by the increase in price, brought about up to a certain extent by that tax of 10 cents a gallon, it is true that the amount of money coming from the tax would be less but, on the other hand, oil imports into Canada would be less also. So, the reason for covering the deficit would be less valid and consumption might be down. The need for the tax would also be less because imports would go down.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, now that the Minister of National Revenue is in the chamber, can he answer a question? Previously, the Minister of Finance told the committee that the cost of collecting the tax and paying rebates would equal about one per cent of collections, or about $5 million. How is that $5 million to be spent? Will the minister consider hiring about 500 civil servants at $10,000 per year each? Is that in the minister's mind? Or, is the minister considering a smaller staff and other types of expenses which were not contemplated?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, I do not have that material in front of me. The one per cent figure is correct. The expense will be borne by the Customs and Excise branch of the Department of National Revenue, which will be collecting the tax and doing much of the administration, the taxation branch of the department, which will be doing the data processing, and by the Department of Supply and Services, which will be paying refunds. I do not have figures as to the number of employees intended to be employed. They will be distributed among the three bodies mentioned. Those three bodies will also bear the cost of administration.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, could the minister go further, and explain if the $5 million, that being roughly one per cent of anticipated collections, entails a new expenditure, or is the money earmarked for personnel already employed by the three departments which the minister anticipates will be involved in collecting the new tax?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, when I spoke the other day, I mentioned the cost of collection. I do not have my speech in front of me. I believe I spoke about less than one per cent. I am not going to allow the hon. member to pin me to some precise figure. We are currently working out how much of that will be in money and involve existing staff; we shall see what arrangements we can make with staff in order to accommodate this additional work load.

Mr. Stevens: Has any agreement been reached about forms and documentation? Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if an agreement on documents has been reached between his department and those in the Department of Finance who will be actively interested in the matter of income tax?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, a liaison committee has been set up which includes personnel from the Customs and Excise and taxation branches, and the Department of Supply and Services. It is to design forms that will be used in connection with this legislation. There has been a high degree of co-ordination and consultation between committee members. I have not yet approved the forms, because the legislation has not yet been passed.

● (1630)

The Deputy Chairman: With respect to the hon. member, I must point out we are dealing with a bill that imposes tax. It is not strictly acceptable to pursue this line of questioning, though the Chair does not want to be overly strict in the interest of the hon. member.

Mr. Stevens: I was trying to short-circuit matters, Mr. Chairman. I will put all my questions to the Minister of Finance and presumably he can gain the information from his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. Could the minister indicate whether any consideration has been given to streamlining the collection system? Instead of requiring a person to pay the tax, save receipts, and file a declaration, has consideration been given to some type of exempt card, which would avoid a person having to pay the ten cents a gallon tax and then apply for a refund?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, I think that is clearly a policy matter that depends on the kind of tax imposed. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, should really answer that question.

Mr. Stevens: I note the Minister of Finance suggested that from his place. Perhaps I could put the question to him.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I dealt with that on Friday fairly thoroughly. If the hon. gentleman is not happy with what I said—or not satisfied with my response, he may not be happy with it—I would be glad to go over it again.

Mr. Stevens: A favourite trick of the Minister of Finance is to say that something has been covered in a previous exchange. I should like him to go over it again.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Would the hon. member give me his specific question?

Mr. Stevens: Has consideration been given to streamlining the administrative problem that appears to exist here whereby people will have to pay the ten cents a gallon tax, will then have to file declarations periodically depending on the amount of usage, and hopefully will get a refund, in the meantime having to maintain receipts? To be very specific this kind of tax exemption exists, for example, in the province of Ontario with respect to farmers. I suggest the way it is handled is a much more streamlined process than that we are now contemplating. A farmer simply signs a declaration that he has purchased certain goods, that is he is carrying on the business of farming, and he does not have to pay the tax. There is no red tape regarding applying for a refund, and it is a much more equitable way of handling the tax.

Has the minister considered this type of simplified approach whereby people can simply stamp something on a card which exempts them from paying a tax, and in that way eliminate a lot of red tape that is going to cost over $5 million in terms of administration, according to the Minister of National Revenue?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This is, of course, a manufacturer's tax, and refunds are available at the retail level, which is why the streamlining would have to take both those factors into account. The answer is yes, we are considering ways of streamlining it, but it might be more appropriate to discuss this on clause 5, which deals with refunds. As for the amount of $5 million referred to by the hon. member, this is about one per cent of the expected revenue from the tax and compares very favourably with the current 1.2 per cent administrative charge for personal income tax.

Mr. Benjamin: I have one short question, Mr. Chairman. Can the minister say whether there is anything in the bill or whether he envisages any regulations that would prevent any escalation of the ten cents a gallon tax that is applied at the refiner and importer level? I am talking of, say, a percentage mark-up all the way down the line, from the refiner to the distributor, to the bulk dealer, to the retailer. By the time it gets to the gasoline pump this tax may be more like 12 or 13 cents a gallon to the automobile user.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in the legislation to prevent it, but the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that he would be monitoring that at the same time as the $1.50 increase per barrel is passed through.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have one short question, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps ten minutes or even half an hour ago in response to a question the minister said that this tax would reflect itself in the consumer price index by raising the index by one-half of one percent. May I ask the minister whether he means one-half of one per cent, or a half of a percentage point? A half of one per cent on the present CPI would be almost one per cent.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman is quite correct—a half of a percentage point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the minister sure of that?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Now that the hon. gentleman forces me to precision, yes, I am sure of that.

Mr. Towers: I was wondering whether the minister could explain why it will cost .2 per cent less to collect this tax than to collect income tax? It comes under the same department.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, that is more properly a question for my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, who is in charge of the administration of the tax. I might tell the minister that I was asked why, in percentage terms, it costs less to administer the ten cents tax on gasoline than the 1.2 per cent it costs to administer personal income tax.

Mr. Basford: Because the administration is a great deal simpler, Mr. Chairman. Administration of personal income tax requires a great deal of checking, auditing, and computer work in order to determine the assessment and either certify the payment of the correct amount of tax, or that the amount be reduced or increased. The administration of the gasoline tax refund program is administratively much simpler, certainly far more simple than administering the income tax collection.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance has used the figure of 1.2 per cent with regard to collection of personal income tax as some type of bench mark and has said that, relatively speaking, the one per cent is a lower cost figure. My question to the minister is this: is he not aware that the 1.2 per cent figure he is now referring to is substantially higher than the average collection expense for personal income tax over the last ten or 15 years? Is it appropriate to take the relatively high administrative cost figure that he is now referring to and use it to justify what I regard as a high collection fee, one per cent, for the new ten cents a gallon Turner gasoline tax?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I just do not agree with what the hon. member says.

Mr. Stevens: I will bring the figures down and present them to the minister later in the debate.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Before putting the question, may I say that in order to avoid difficulty I would remind hon. members that when a question is being put members are not permitted to enter or leave the chamber.

● (1640)

Clause 1 agreed to: Yeas, 40; Nays, 22.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

On Clause 2.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I think I understood what the original clause was for, but I should like to ask the minister what the 8 per cent of the amount paid will represent. Under the old measure it was understood that $5 was the tax, but under the new one we have gone to $10. Is the original 5 per cent related to the 8 per cent in the new legislation, and does this affect only charter flights, or does it also affect the tariff structure on flights inside Canada? Does it affect the tax collected on external travel as well? Does this establish a tax that we previously did not have on flights leaving the country?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the proposals found in this clause increase the air transportation tax now in existence from 5 per cent to 8 per cent. The figure eight is underlined, which indicates a change from 5 per cent to 8 per cent effective August 1, 1975, on air transportation in Canada on flights within the taxation area, that is to say, Canada and the United States except Hawaii and the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. The governor in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport may prescribe maximum amounts for the tax levy. At the present time the maximum payable is set at $5.

Mr. Peters: Does the 8 per cent change the $5, or is it Clause 3 where it is changed to $10? I am confused as to whether Clause 2 has any relationship to Clause 3, because Clause 2 refers mainly to charters.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, let us look at Clause 3, if you do not mind, as it is interlinked with Clause 2. This clause increases the tax, effective August 1, on air fares for flights from Canada to locations outside Canada other than the United States and the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon from $5 to the lesser of $10 or the amount which may be prescribed by order of the governor in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport. There is also a provision for a reduced rate when the passenger is a child under 12 years of age and is being transported at a reduced fare. Just to make that clear to the hon. gentleman, Clause 2 applies to flights in North America excluding Mexico, and Clause 3 applies to flights from Canada to elsewhere outside Canada.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this is a sizeable tax on travel, particularly when you think in terms of members of parliament and others for whom the government must pay the transportation bill. This 8 per cent will amount to a sizeable figure if it applies to all those travelling in the North American area. Has the minister given any consideration to the establishment of a departure tax of a set amount rather than this tax being applied to all travel in North America? I presume this would apply more specifically to Clause 3 than to Clause 2, but it does seem to me that 8 per cent is an amount which will only add to the difficulties faced by the airlines in this country at the present time.

Air Canada, for instance, is operating now on its scheduled air flights very close to the break even point, with approximately 50 per cent capacity. When we add the 8 per cent Air Canada will still be flying across the country, but it may end up with a deficit. There is a level at which a tax of this kind is economical and at which point there is some return. However, there is a point at which it is not economical.

It seems to me that Air Canada is running very close to the break even point on its flights to the United States, but the aircraft destined to Los Angeles are not operating at anywhere near full capacity. If we add on this extra burden this may result in a reduction in air travel and we may end up not getting any extra money. I am not sure about other air carriers, but from the reports I have seen it seems to me that Air Canada is operating pretty close to that break even point. Prices have gone up radically in the past five to six years, and with this increase in price I do not think the number of people being carried will necessarily increase. This will result in a diminishing return.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In respect of the taxes in Clauses 2 and 3, that is to say the tax within the North American area and the tax on flights from Canada outside North America, there is a maximum which the governor in council can set. At the moment the maximum is $5 on both.

The reason the departure tax was not used, which as I understand it is a flat departure rate, was that the Minister of Transport and the government felt there ought to be some increase in the tax for increased distances. On the other hand, to meet the point the hon. member has just brought out, obviously there should be a maximum to ensure that air travel remains competitive, and that is where the balance has been struck.

Mr. Peters: I would like to ask the minister how the governor in council gets the recommendations as to what the maximum should be? There is not any allowance for that in the bill, but there is a definite statement in respect of 8 per cent.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The maximum dollar amount is recommended by the Minister of Transport after consultation with the Minister of Finance having regard to problems of airport financing and operations.

● (1650)

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Madam Chairman, at this stage of clause 2, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In Bill C-66, with respect to the tax increase, the 10 cents per gallon tax on gasoline, the minister provided that certain categories of people might get a refund of that tax, in other words would not have to pay the tax. Would it not be possible to do the same thing with respect to the air transportation tax in the case of certain categories of people like for instance diseased people who have to be flown to hospital. It is a well known fact that three out of four air passengers travel on behalf of companies or groups which give them a refund on their ticket. So it is not the individuals, but the company or the government which pay for rates or air transportation tax increases. But in the case of ordinary citizens, or of emergency flights, I think the possibility of a refund should be considered. I would like to know what the position of the minister is in that respect.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, since air transportation companies provide low rates for certain categories of passengers, of citizens, for instance senior citizens and children, it is obvious that, since the tax is a percentage of the rates, it would be lower in the case of those people. But no exemption or abatement is provided in the bill.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Chairman, if I understand the minister correctly, clause 2 will cover Canada-U.S.-Caribbean flights, while Clause 3 will cover international flights.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Clause 2 refers to Canada and the United States with the exception of Hawaii and St. Pierre de Miquelon, and Clause 3 covers everything else.

Mr. Benjamin: Then domestic flights for this purpose mean Canada-U.S. in Clause 2. May I ask the minister why there is the omission in Clause 2 of a provision that is contained in Clause 3, namely, the provision in which a child would pay 50 per cent of the amount prescribed in Clause 3.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, I have a feeling it is because there is already a reduced fare applicable on the domestic rate. Yes; that is the answer.

Mr. Benjamin: I take it that 8 per cent in respect of these domestic fares would represent $16 on a $200 fare. What is the rationale for that type of a tax on domestic flights, and what appears to be a flat $10 on international flights?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Let me try to explain this. On the domestic flight it is now 8 per cent but not more than the governor in council sets within the limit, which is now $5. In respect of places outside North America it is $10 or such lesser amount as the governor in council sets. A maximum of $10 is set by legislation on foreign flights, and there is a maximum set by the governor in council on domestic flights.

Mr. Peters: What is the reason for the change from 5 per cent to 8 per cent if there is already a $5 ceiling? I do not see that much is being accomplished.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think you can anticipate that the Minister of Transport will arrange the upward limit.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

On Clause 3.

Mr. Peters: Madam Chairman, it has always been the case that if I buy a ticket in Canada to go to a foreign country which has an airport departure tax I, in effect, on purchasing my ticket pay the departure tax here and at the other end I again pay the departure tax. However, people coming here who have bought a round ticket in their country of departure do not have to pay the departure tax twice.

I am well aware that there are some advantages to this system, but it seems to me that anyone coming here from another country would not be making a contribution to the departure procedure here. I am wondering whether an Ottawa departure tax should be applied to a ticket which does not indicate such a tax has been paid. On a ticket bought in Canada I believe the amount paid would be $10, which would involve $5 going and $5 coming.

Obviously there must be a cost involved in respect of people coming here to cover the surveillance costs and other things, but they do not pay the tax. If the Olympics go ahead we will probably find that many people will be visiting Canada in the next year and yet they will not pay any departure tax from our airports.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not quarrel with what the hon. gentleman has said. However, jurisdiction over the tax is at the place in which the ticket is purchased, but the departure tax on the other hand is applicable at the port of exit. What the Minister of Transport ought to consider on the basis of the hon. gentleman's representation is a reciprocal departure tax, and I will draw it to his attention.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, I have tried to follow the minister in all his explanations about the tax being the lesser of (a) or (b) etc. I notice that according to the final clause of the bill, sections 2 and 3 shall come into force "on August 1, 1975, which is only about four days away. Therefore can the minister tell us now what the tax rates will be on August 1, bearing in mind that the governor in council has the right to fix an amount below the maximum amount set in this bill? Could the minister give the information to us, both for domestic and international flights?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The maximum is $8 for both.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should just like to draw the attention of the Minister of Communications to this new system of beaming from the official gallery which we have. It seems to have worked a lot better than some other methods of communication.

Mr. Baldwin: It is kind of expensive.

Mr. Benjamin: In Clause 3 I notice the following words at line 26:

such amount as may, for the purposes of this subsection, be prescribed by order of the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport;

I note in the act that that clause came under 10(2) and (3) and it was not in the section in which it is to be found now. I wonder why it is being changed. Apparently in the old Excise Tax Act that part applied to domestic flights, but it was taken out and now it applies to international flights. Is that correct, and if so, why?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member may be looking at the old bill. This tax was originally imposed a year or so ago.

Mr. Benjamin: I am referring to clauses 2 and 3 and the explanatory notes, which read:

These amendments relate to the air transportation tax imposed by subsections 10(1) and 11(1).

Then we have the following wording under (b):

such amount as may, for the purposes of this subsection, be prescribed by order of the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport.

This does not appear further down in the part which would now apply to Clause 3 of the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Look at the top of the next page.

Mr. Benjamin: It was in the old act under Clause 2, but will not be there any longer. Is that correct?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, the same flexibility is now given to foreign flights that was given on domestic flights.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On Clause 4.

Mr. Peters: Madam Chairman, I have a question for the minister on Clause 4. I read in the expert column by Dillon O'Leary, the son of the famous Senator of the same name, and of Irish extraction, that when the increase was put on in the federal budget the amount was translated to 20 cents in Ontario. It is removed now and only 15 cents is deducted in Ontario, so the five cents is still a reflection of the federal tax. I am aware of what happened. The Ontario government decided to reduce it to 15 cents and to keep the five cents. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance in that he started it and he gave them the opportunity to do this. I wonder what extraordinary measures he intends to take with regard to those who favour the grape and its derivitives to get that five cents off so that wine producers in Ontario and elsewhere will benefit from the removal of the total tax.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The effect of the amendment, as the hon. gentleman surmises, is to hold back excise tax increases which were put on producers on November 18. This means the decrease represented by this clause amounts to 20 cents a gallon, as he said, on wines of all kinds containing not more than 7 per cent of absolute alcohol by volume, and 40 cents on all wines containing more than 7 per cent of absolute alcohol by volume.

The hon. member asked me what I will do about the provincial government and its pricing policy at LCBOs. That is within their jurisdiction, but it should be clear to domestic grape growing and wine producing industries that we have rescinded the 20 cent increase.

Mr. Peters: We do not grow apples in northern Ontario but I am curious about the difference that has been made with respect to ciders. There is a stronger and a weaker cider. For instance, Calvados is almost undrinkable. I would like to ask the minister whether there is a tax on the ordinary cider that is manufactured for sale in grocery stores, and how is it supervised? I gather that after a period of time cider becomes stronger. Is there any tax on cider produced from fresh apples and sold along the roadsides in parts of southern Quebec and Ontario?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not know from what stores the hon. member buys his cider, but he cannot get high alcoholic content cider in grocery stores. Cider containing less than a certain percentage of alcohol is not taxed, it was relieved of the sales tax in two or three previous budgets, as is every so called soft drink. If it has the necessary alcoholic content it bears a general tax, but it was not affected by the special tax imposed in the November 18 budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: To elaborate on that question, Madam Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if he is thinking of cider as well as wine? In other words, are ciders included in the wines mentioned in clause 4?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, there was no special tax on beer or ciders on November 18, and therefore no need to repeal such a tax.

[English]

Mr. Towers: Madam Chairman, it is not often that a minister changes his policy within six or eight months. In view of the fact that a large number of Canadians are incensed at his reducing the tax on wine at the same time as he is increasing the tax on gasoline, I am wondering if the minister is prepared to say that he made a mistake in the November 18 budget, or what is the reasoning for the quick change in policy?

● (1710)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because of recent changes in the market the domestic wine and grape growing industry has been seriously affected, and I wanted to improve its position on the basis of representations made by very many hon. members of this House, particularly the hon. members from the Niagara Peninsula.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Madam Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if we have to see the bottom of the bottle or the bottom of the barrel to know whether cider and beer are included in Clause 4. In fact, it seems that we did not get a satisfactory reply to the question asked by my colleague from Champlain.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is obviously a certain excise tax on beer and a certain minimum tax on cider. However, this clause removes only the special tax placed on November 18 on wine. But no special tax was placed on cider or beer on November 18. This is why these two items are not included in the clause.

[English]

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, before we get into the debate, I rise on a point of order. I know that the minister is prepared at this stage to move an amendment, as he indicated at second reading, and when he moves his amendment I will propose a subamendment, which would permit hon. members to discuss this clause in the light of the amendments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have another amendment.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): One could see just how frustrated those two hon. gentleman would be if I did not present my amendment first.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would be prepared to move mine first.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The committee will recall that as a result of Mr. Speaker's decision a subclause of clause 5 was stricken because Mr. Speaker held that it did not correspond with the ways and means motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Very sound judgment.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In any event, I would like to move an amendment to reintroduce a clause, in strict conformity with the ways and means motion, to give furtherance to the sense and ambit of the decision of Mr. Speaker. I therefore move:

That clause 5 of Bill C-66, An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act, be amended as follows:

(a) by striking out lines 26 to 36 on page 2 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(b) a municipality,

(c) a person for commercial or business purposes,

(d) a farmer for farming purposes,

(e) a fisherman, hunter or trapper for commercial fishing, hunting or trapping,

(f) a person under conditions for which relief from the consumption or sales tax is provided by virtue of any provision of this Act other than subsection 27(2), or

(g) a person of such other class of persons as the Governor in Council may by regulation prescribe,"; and

(b) by striking out line 18 on page 3 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(1)(a) to (g), for the purpose of making a"

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, a little while ago I heard someone ask the minister if he ever admitted making a mistake. Of course I understand it is a rule laid down in the Privy Council that any minister who admits making a mistake is forthwith fired, so we do not expect this to happen, but we have now gone all around the compass and come back to where we were at the time of the ways and means resolution, and I am one of those who feel that this is probably a wise decision.

I would like to believe that this was the advice originally given to the minister by his officials, that he took it to cabinet, and cabinet rather ruthlessly changed it and put in that unmentionable mess which brought into the bill the provision of the Income Tax Act, section 149, which would have been absolutely unenforceable. It will be difficult enough to enforce some of the provisions with regard to rebates, but section 149 of the Income Tax Act, as a basis on which rebates would be paid, would be simply nothing less than a monstrosity. I am glad to see that the minister recognized that, and I give him credit for doing so.

I feel that this is a case where we should object very strenuously to the governor in council having this power. If it is a matter of giving the governor in council power to impose a tax, I would strenuously resist it, and I think most members of the opposition would resist it, but giving the governor in council the right to add to the classes of people who are entitled to secure a rebate from a tax is something to which I am prepared to give acceptance, subject to an amendment which I will read now. I will not put the amendment, but I will read it now so that the minister, hon. members, and the Chair may have some idea of what is involved. My amendment will relate particularly to proposed Clause 5(g), and I think I will have to add to it. If the committee will look at proposed Clause 5(g) it reads as follows:

(g) a person of such other class of persons as the Governor in Council may by regulation prescribe,"

My amendment will have the effect of adding after the word regulation the following words: "subject to negative resolution of the House of Commons", before the word "prescribe".

So Clause 5(g) would then read as follows:

(g) a person of such other class of persons as the Governor in Council may by regulation subject to negative resolution of the House of Commons prescribe,"

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

I see that I shall have to do some editing now, but that will be the effect of my amendment.

In support of this proposal I would like to read to the committee the appropriate section of the Statutory Instruments Act which gives to the words "subject to negative resolution" a statutory definition. Section 28A. of the Statutory Instruments Act provides in subclause (d) as follows:

(d) the expression "subject to negative resolution of the House of Commons", when used in relation to any regulation, means that such regulation shall be laid before the House of Commons within 15 days after it is made or, if the House is not then sitting, on any of the first 15 days next thereafter that parliament is sitting and may be annulled by a resolution of the House of Commons introduced and passed in accordance with the rules of that House.

● (1720)

When my resolution is brought into proper form by adding one or two words, the effect will be that the governor in council—that is pursuant to subclause (g) if the amendment which the minister has introduced, is accepted—will have power by regulation to add a person or such other classes of persons as he may think appropriate as being entitled to a rebate. These classes will be in addition to those enumerated in the subclauses which appear in front of the new subclause (g).

My amendment will provide that by a negative resolution this House will have the right to debate and strike out such classes of persons as the governor in council may prescribe, as being additional to those already established. In other words, if the minister saw fit to prescribe that members of parliament, members of the press gallery or any other group were entitled to a rebate, this will be done by order in council. The order in council will come into effect immediately it is published and, according to the date fixed in the Statutory Instruments Act, if parliament is sitting, there is then an opportunity for members to post a notice of opposition to the arrangement. After a debate pursuant to the rules of the House if enough members could be found to vote a regulation down, it would be annulled.

We are not seeking to postpone the coming into effect of the regulation by waiting until this House has passed it. That would be an affirmative resolution. The meaning of the Statutory Instruments Act is quite plain, and I suggest the minister might be prepared to accept this, after consideration as part of his amendment. If not, I will move it in due course.

I have sat here very patiently listening to the excellent arguments advanced by all members, particularly those in the New Democratic Party, which had a strangely familiar ring. Of course, those hon. members, not being here for the early part of the debate, wanted to be involved when they finally arrived so they just turned to Hansard and read the speeches which members of this party made earlier!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: This repetition for the second and third time of the excellent speeches made by members of this party had its effect. I could tell this from the happy faces opposite.

I should like to give the committee the reasons for the amendment that I will propose—unless the minister is prepared to work my idea into his own amendment. As a member of the Joint Committee on Regulations and Statutory Instruments, I know that a number of anomalies were discovered with regard to delegation of powers by parliament through statutory instruments to the governor in council, individuals, corporations and ministers. An arbitrary decision has been taken by the Privy Council which made an interpretation of the Statutory Instruments Act which places certain orders in council outside the ambit of examination by the committee and ultimately by this House. It has also taken outside the right of the people of Canada to have published a large number of statutory instruments. This has been done by their definition of the words "statutory instruments". It is my opinion that the only safe thing is for this parliament, having once given away certain delegated rights to the governor in council, to ministers, to tribunals of any kind, to insist upon these orders in council, these regulations, these statutory instruments, coming before the House for consideration.

I am not going to go beyond that now because I believe we will have a debate on this subject later this year. I know some members of the committee from the opposite side have taken the same stand as I do. I think it is the part of prudence, when we give to the government a very important power such as is contained in the right to establish a group of people entitled to a rebate of tax, to ensure a method of bringing back the statutory instruments by which this is done to this House for examination and, if necessary, to be struck down. We are talking here about a fundamental right, one which goes to the heart of the process of government, that is the right to tax and who shall be exempt from tax.

People may ask—why do this? We elect a government and through parliament give that government authority for three or four years to pass orders in council, to make statutory instruments, to make regulations whether they are for the Department of Manpower and Immigration, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Labour, the Department of Finance, the Department of National Revenue or whatever. Probably 90 per cent of the decisions which affect the people of Canada are not made by passing bills in this House, but by regulations passed under those bills. It is very important to make it clear that in doing so we must retain the right to review those decisions.

This government is not a benevolent dictatorship for four years. It received about 30 per cent of the votes of all people entitled to vote at the last election. I am not objecting. That is the process under which we operate and the government is entitled to be where it is, to form the cabinet and to sit on the right side of Mr. Speaker. The government received slightly over four million votes and 13 million ballots could have been cast at the election. That is the way we operate and we have not devised a better system.

During the four years that this government sits on the right side of Mr. Speaker, I will take every opportunity, when they ask for and obtain the right to act by order in council or regulation, to examine that power. They must bear in mind that a very large percentage of the people in this country do not support them. The powers they seek and the powers they exercise must therefore be subject to a reasonable measure of review in this House. This has not happened very often in the past. This would be a better parliament and a better country if we had more opportunity in the House to examine, review and, if the House so wills, to rescind, annul or change regulations and orders in council.

● (1730)

For that purpose, I propose to move this amendment. The minister has had a chance to consider it. If it has to be moved, I will have to put in it the fact that it has reference to subclause (g). The minister might have an opportunity at this time to indicate if it is acceptable to him. If so, it might well, by consent of the committee, be incorporated into his amendment.

Before resuming my seat, I want to say that when we get further along to clause 5, I will be moving an amendment with regard to clauses 3 and 4 which also give the governor in council the power to do certain things by regulations. They will be amendments of a kind similar to the one I will move now, if necessary.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, I wonder if it would be more appropriate if, before we debate the subamendment of the hon. member for Peace River, the amendment I put forward to the committee to re-establish the bill with the ways and means motion might be approved. We could then debate the subamendments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, I might be persuaded in a moment to agree to that, but first I would like to indicate what I had intended to do at this point.

As for the amendment of the minister, of course it is not necessary to comment on it in substance. It is simply a procedural effort to conform with the recommendation made by Mr. Speaker. However, we now have the amendment before us and the hon. member for Peace River has suggested that there is a subamendment he would like to move, but he has not yet moved it.

I have a subamendment that I would like to move. I am prepared to move it now. However, if the minister persuades me, I might be willing to wait until we have amended the basic clause. Let me indicate what it is. I had the amendment prepared in relation to the printed bill as it is before us. Of course, the minister has changed some of the lines in that bill. If I were moving it now as a subamendment to the minister's amendment, it would read as follows:

> That the amendment be amended by adding in subclause (c) after the word "purposes", the following words:
> "or for the purpose of getting to and from his place of employment,"

As the minister is aware, subclause (c) in his amendment is the same as subclause (b) was in the printed bill, which refers in terms of exemptions to "a person for commercial or business purposes". My amendment or subamendment, depending on where it is moved, will change that clause to read in its entirety:

a person for commercial or business purposes or for the purpose of getting to and from his place of employment,

As I say, I have my right to move it now, but if the minister thinks it would be tidier to have his amendment voted on, on the clear understanding that we then come back to clause 5 as amended, with the full right to make amendments such as the hon. member for Peace River and I have suggested, I could be so persuaded. I gather that is the co-operative thing to do and I am prepared to do it in that way. I have indicated my subamendment. If we do it the other way, once the clause in the printed bill has been amended as the minister suggests, I will be seeking the floor to move the amendment I have just suggested which has to do with including exemptions for those who have to use their cars to get to and from their place of employment.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, if the committee were agreeable, I submit we vote upon my amendment and it would then be in order for both the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to present their amendments to the new, revised bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I will agree to that, Madam Chairman.

Mr. Baldwin: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Madam Chairman, I wanted to move a sub-amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), which has the same purpose as my sub-amendment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has not yet moved his amendment.

Mr. Allard: But, Madam Chairman, I simply wanted to make a correction to the amendment he wants to move and add the following:

in the case of a worker who must travel a minimum of five (5) miles in his own car to reach his place of employment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would like to point out that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has not yet introduced his amendment. When he does, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) can move his sub-amendment.

[English]

The question is on the amendment of the Minister of Finance. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The question is now on clause 5, as amended.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, I should like then to move:

That the amendment be amended by deleting all the words after the word "regulation" in subclause (g) and substituting the following:

"subject to negative resolution of the House of Commons prescribe"

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, as a courtesy to the hon. member for Peace River, I would like to respond to his amendment about a negative resolution against the use of governor in council regulation as it affects the rebates under this tax. The hon. member knows that I share with him a concern about limiting the power of delegation and the power of regulation from this House to ministers and from ministers to their officials. With his co-operation and that of others still here, I might say that when I was Attorney General, I brought in the Statutory Instruments Act, as a result of which we now have a regular standing committee of the House and the other place dealing with the regulations coming before them and evaluating those regulations against other sets of criteria. They are set out in the bill.

● (1740)

The difficulty with negative resolutions is that as the hon. member for Peace River concedes, the House has not established rules for dealing with negative resolutions and, frankly, I hesitate to do something when I do not know what I am getting into. There was a precedent in the case of manufacturing incentives, as we included the provision for debate if 60 hon. members so requested. As the committee will recall, at that time we included rules of procedure right in the statute in order to overcome the problem as to what the governing rules would be. At the moment we do not have rules governing any general negative resolution.

My second concern is that the one thing we need with a tax is certainty, that is, certainty as to whom it applies and to whom it does not. I submit to the Chair that what the hon. member suggests would generate a great deal of uncertainty for taxpayers, because at any one time a taxpayer would want to assess the prospect of whether the House would annul relieving legislation at some future date. I should like to gain more experience with the operation of the regulations before submitting them to a further test in the House in the form of a negative resolution. We would want more experience as to how a negative resolution works, and would want to know what effect the rules of the House will have on a negative resolution.

I point out to the hon. member for Peace River that because the government had second thoughts about delegation it attempted to amend the bill, but Mr. Speaker, as a result of opposition arguments, decided that it went beyond the scope of the ways and means motion. We abided by Mr. Speaker's decision. We wanted, in writing the bill, to leave the House in full control of the ambit of the rebates and exemptions. I should hesitate to submit the substance of this clause to the untried procedure of a negative resolution.

Even under the present situation the regulations, when promulgated by the governor in council, must be published in accordance with the provisions of the Statutory Instruments Act and will, in the ordinary course, be submitted for review by a standing committee of the House.

For these reasons, Madam Chairman, I am reluctant to accept the precedent of a negative resolution, particularly as it applies to a tax bill and as taxpayers must be assured of certainty. I would far rather see it introduced in some other type of legislation and see how it works, particularly if it could be reinforced by some amendment to the standing orders of the House, so that we could know what we are getting into.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Chairman, there is no better way for the minister to obtain on-the-job training with negative resolutions than through the present means. There is a simple means of introducing a negative resolution, actually the only means available to us, namely, that of introducing such a resolution in connection with a motion on an opposition day on which there is to be a vote. That is the limited procedure available to opposition members to challenge the government on issues of this kind. That procedure is plain and well known. If I, or the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, were to move a motion on an opposition day the effect of which would be to challenge any particular order in council, our action would be in accordance with procedures with which the House is familiar and which we have used previously.

I say to the minister that he is right—the House has been delinquent in not devising a code for dealing with negative and affirmative resolutions, and that explains much of the present difficulty. I suggest, nevertheless, that there are one or two government statutes—I cannot remember them just now but will bring them to the minister's attention—which use wording precisely similar to that we were contemplating in order to satisfy some request which had been made by opposition members.

I challenge the minister's assumption that this order in council will have to be published. This is precisely what I was trying to say a little while ago. The Privy Council has brought forward some arbitrary, arrogant, and seemingly unchallengeable decrees as to what, in its opinion, constitutes a regulation, subject to supervision by the scrutiny committee, and a regulation which must be published. This matter has engaged the attention of the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. It has caused a great deal of concern, and I shall bring before this House a proposal for the review of the statutory instruments legislation.

I have some grave doubts about the way the proposed section would read. The minister has introduced an amendment, and I doubt whether the proposed section would constitute a statutory instrument which can go before the joint committee and which must be published. That is precisely my fear, precisely my anxiety.

I, myself, am at the point of preparing a number of proposals having to do with how the House ought to deal with affirmative and negative resolutions. Judging from what I heard the Minister of National Revenue say, it may take him five or six months to complete the regulations and methods of paying rebates. I judge, if you consider the number of applications members will receive and proposals they will make on behalf of their constituents, it will take the Minister of National Revenue at least eight months to establish any standard form of jurisprudence or procedure dealing with the difficult question of rebates. And therein lies one of our criticisms of this bill.

An hon. Member: Not at all.

Mr. Baldwin: I hear an hon. member criticizing my suggestion. I say to the hon. member these criticisms are well founded. This bill was brought forward without adequate preparation, in a half baked form. There has been inadequate preparation with respect to the matter of rebates. That is why we, in my party, have been so vehement in opposing it. There ought to have been before the House a code or regulation under which we, our constituents, and all the people of Canada could know the circumstances under which rebates are to be paid.

I say to the minister—and I am trying to be conciliatory—that he is not losing anything, as, in my judgment, there will come before this House this fall a proposal for a code governing how the House is to deal with negative and affirmative resolutions. In this case we are considering a negative resolution. If the minister will examine the definition of a negative resolution he will see that the final words of the definition say that it may be annulled by a resolution of the House of Commons introduced and passed in accordance with the rules of that House. At this moment we must adhere to our present rules.

As the minister knows, a matter like this can be raised either by way of a private member's motion, which is of no great consequence unless the government is prepared to facilitate discussion of such a motion and allow it to come to a vote, or by way of a motion raised pursuant to opposition day procedures, and six such opposition days are available in one year. Those are two specific ways for the raising of this question. The minister does not need to be in a quandary as to how it will be done. I have suggested the only two ways in which, at present, it can be done. I suggest, and this is not only my belief but reflects the reality of the situation, that there will be in place, even before this fall, a procedure in this House for dealing with negative resolutions.

Speaking to the merits of the matter, I dislike very much giving the government, in a taxation measure such as this, the right to propose classes of persons who shall be exempt from taxation. My objection applies equally to the power to take away that exemption. If you give the government power to grant exemptions, you give it power to remove exemptions. I am reluctant to let such power pass out of this House unless we shall have some opportunity at a later date to challenge it and vote on it.

I am most sincere about this, Madam Chairman. We are dealing with a taxation question, and I simply do not think we should give power to the government to impose taxes by order in council, or even to propose rebates and exemptions, unless the umbilical cord to this House remains uncut. I suggest that if the minister is not prepared to do this, then it is evidence of bad faith on the part of the government, which refuses to allow to the House the simple right of review proposed in this amendment.

● (1750)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Chairman, I hope the minister will give serious consideration to the proposal of the hon. member for Peace River. In fact I hope that consideration might be given to the amendment over the dinner recess between six and eight o'clock. Perhaps it would not hurt if we called it six o'clock so that the government could give the matter serious thought.

In the meantime may I just say a few words. I think we frequently put on the record what everybody knows, but may I do it again. The difference between an affirmative resolution and a negative resolution is such that the hon. member for Peace River has chosen the method that is least awkward for the government. As I understand it, if one is asking for an affirmative resolution it means that an order in council cannot come into effect until the matter has been brought before parliament and there has been an affirmative vote. On the other hand, use of a negative resolution means that an order in council can be put into effect at the moment stated in the order, but can be nullified if later on there is a negative vote in parliament.

The minister said that in the field of taxation there has to be some certainty. The government operates all the time on the basis of putting on taxes and then starting to collect them, counting on the fact that it will get approval from the House later on. The ten cents tax on gasoline is being collected right now even though the bill that would endorse it, Bill C-66, has not been passed.

The government will be in precisely the same position if it accepts the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. It would have full authority by order in council to make these tax changes having to do with exemptions—in or out, as you will—and to put those changes into effect at the moment specified in the order. So there is no awkwardness for the government in that case. If the government believes that what it is doing is right and believes that it will have the support of the majority of the House, it can act. Accordingly I submit very strongly that there is a good argument for the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Peace River.

As the Minister of Finance has pointed out, he was one who had something to do with this affirmative and negative resolution proposition. It was fine to put it forward academically as a proposition to protect the rights of parliament, but why not apply it when a practical situation occurs?

So, Madam Chairman, I have had enough practice at speaking that I think I could keep going until six o'clock if necessary, but surely this is something that the minister ought to look at with his officials over the dinner recess, and I suggest we not conclude the point now. The simplest way, unless somebody else wants to say something about it, is to call it six o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There being no agreement, is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Madam Chairman, I think there is some sense in what the hon. member just said. I think that by general agreement we could call it six o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair till eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-66, to amend the Excise Tax Act. When the committee rose at six o'clock Clause 5 as amended was under consideration.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance looks to me like a man who has come here with an olive branch. Perhaps he might like to give us his views at the moment, or indicate that he is prepared to entertain more argument. I have a very large number of new arguments I developed during the supper hour. I have had a very good supper and I have all kinds of fresh ideas, so I am full of enthusiasm. If the minister needs more convincing, I am prepared to make the effort. Perhaps he is in the position of a hung jury right now. He has not made up his mind and wants to hear more arguments from us. I can carry on with those arguments, but perhaps the minister would like to say something about what his attitude is now.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have enough respect for the hon. member for Peace River to know that once he states his argument he does not have to repeat it.

Mr. Baldwin: I have new ones.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He does it so succintly and clearly there is absolutely no doubt about what he has in mind. I would, first of all, repeat what I said earlier, that having introduced the Statutory Instruments Act, we sought to place some limitation on the power of the government to delegate to ministers, or the governor in council, the authority to regulate, through officials by way of sub-delegation.

I have a good deal of sympathy for the hon. member's argument, and quite frankly I share his concern over the fact that we have not been able to bring in to this House, or that this House has not been able to adopt, through the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, new rules relating to this type of matter which would have provided a code for dealing with affirmative or negative resolutions challenging the regulatory authority given to ministers by this type of bill or bills. I am concerned also when the hon. member tells the House that he has some insider's information on what the Privy Council office is going to pronounce as to the necessity for publication of this type of regulation.

Mr. Baldwin: I have a correction to make in that regard.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is my personal feeling that, this being a regulation, it would be subject to publication under the act. I leave it to him to expand on that if he wants to later.

There is, of course, a right of review already granted to parliament through the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, although I have no quarrel with what the hon. member said about the limited occasions on which that right can be exercised, either by way of a resolution prompted by the committee or by the opposition designating an opposition day under which to bring to the attention of the House the fact the government or a minister may have overridden the criteria against which regulations are to be drafted.

My problem, as I stated before the dinner break, is in allowing this bill to be the subject of negative resolution procedure before I have any idea of what the rules are going to be regulating the disposition of such resolutions. I hesitate to launch a taxation bill into that position because of, as I said earlier, the necessity for certainty as it applies to the taxpayers being able to arrange their affairs, knowing some degree of precision what the law is going to be.

Perhaps I might say to the hon. member that I am committed to the widest review of regulations and to the public scrutiny the publication of these regulations demands. However, I cannot bring myself to putting this bill on an experimental basis until the House itself has agreed to ground rules for the disposition of resolutions proposed by hon. members.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I detected a note of hesitancy in the way the Minister of Justice approached—

An hon. Member: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, the Minister of Finance. Justice has long fled, Mr. Chairman. I noted a negative attitude in the way the minister approached this proposition. I can tell that his heart was not in it. It may be that his officials have persuaded him, and I have the feeling that all too often it is the officials, present company excepted, rather than the ministers who make the decisions.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not quite fair. I take the responsibility.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister may take the responsibility, but I have been around here too long not to know precisely how that responsibility is placed in the minister's hands. I have listened to representations before the statutory instruments committee in connection with my attempt to get a little more freedom of information, and I know just exactly how the situation lies. The minister knows this, as does the President of the Privy Council. They pretty well do what they are told. That is about the size of it, and most of us over here know that. Before I go on to make my other arguments, and because I have detected this note of hesitancy in the voice of the minister who perhaps wants more persuasion, I should try harder. Perhaps he wants to be courted a little bit on this, and I am prepared to court him. There is lots of time for courting and this is a fine evening for it, Mr. Chairman.

I see the President of the Privy Council in attendance. I have a suggestion for the minister. He says he does not want a tax bill to be the subject of this experiment, and I will come back to that in a little while. Perhaps the President of the Privy Council could also consider this suggestion, or undertaking, as I think he should. It is that this House will consider a code for establishing rules in respect of negative and affirmative resolutions. After all, we have had this law on the statute books since 1971, or 1972 when the Statutory Instruments Act was passed, yet we have never been given the authority to follow the Procedure set out in the Act. This situation is like the one created by the famous Roman emperor who was compelled by law to publish his statutes, so he hung them up so high no one could read them. That is what the government is now doing.

An hon. Member: Give us his name.

Mr. Baldwin: Perhaps it was Caligula, who also had some horses. We have some horses here, but I think we have the wrong ends, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Caligula was the Roman emperor who appointed his horse to be a consul. Sometimes when I look at the cabinet I have some doubts, I must say, about whether Caligula's plan is not still operating.
