LOCAL AND GENERAL NEWS.

HIGH TIDE

The tide yesterday afternoon was the highest for a mid-day tide for years.

SAILED TODAY

The S. S. Beatrice which discharged a cargo of coal for the International Railway sailed this morning.

The Best Cough Medicine we know of is Allen's Lung Balsam.

CHURCH SERVICES

Mr. Sterling Blackhouse student pastor, will preach on Sunday, Nov. 28th, at Bellefleur River at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. and at Jacques River at 3 p. m.

PUTTING IN LIGHTS

The I. C. R. authorities have decided to go back to twentieth century times at the depot here and are installing arc lamps to properly light the station platform.

IMPROVING

Mr. Norment LeCompte who went through an operation for appendicitis at the Hotel Dieu here is, we are pleased to say doing fine. His many friends will be glad to see him around again.

THE STORM

The storm which has been raging along the Atlantic coast from Florida reached here Wednesday and the wind was very high, but no damage has been reported. Snow and sleet, turning to rain, fell on Thursday and most of the snow has gone.

CHILD BURNED

Fire at Limousin on the north side of the St. Charles river opposite Quebec, Wednesday afternoon, destroyed two dwellings, a child of five years, named Bart, perishing in the flames. Hard work by volunteer firemen alone prevented a large conflagration.

NEW I. C. R. DEPARTMENT
The International Railway Board of Management, recently opened an industrial department, which for the present is in charge of Mr. E. S. Smiley, the division freight agent at Halifax. He is at present making enquiries about the already established industries and of possibilities for new industries.

PROFESSIONAL
O. J. McCully, M. D. M. R. C. S. London, specialist for eye, ear, nose and throat, will be at the Waverley Hotel, Campbellton, Thursday, Dec. 2nd, also at the Robertson House, Bathurst, on Wednesday, Dec. 12.

ECLIPSE OF THE MOON
There will be an eclipse of the moon on Friday night, or rather on Saturday morning. Commencing on the Pacific coast at one minute after eleven o'clock Friday night, it will not be observable here until about 4 o'clock Saturday morning, a little later except for night hawks or cat-risers. The eclipse will continue for an hour and a half.

I. C. R. AND BILLS OF LADING
The I. C. R. will in future accept only the uniform bill of lading as ordered by the Railway Commission. With the object of using up other forms which were in stock on October 1st, the government railway extended the time for the use of those bills not strictly conforming to the new regulations but this privilege has now been withdrawn.

BRAKEMAN HURT
While standing on the top of the van of a special freight train running by Rod Pine station yesterday afternoon, M. Avenhill, an I. C. R. brakeman, was struck on the head by a protruding water tank pipe and rendered unconscious for half an hour sustaining painful injuries about the face. One of his ears was badly cut while one cheek received a severe gash and one eye blackened. The injured man was thrown back on the sky light. He was carried into the van and taken to Bathurst where his injuries were attended to.

LOST POCKETBOOK

A traveller who got on the Maritime express bound for Montreal was relieved of his pocketbook between Bathurst and Campbellton Thursday morning and had to discontinue his journey until he procured funds from Montreal. The pocketbook contained, besides his ticket, valuable papers and $15.00 in cash. The I. C. R. police have the matter in hand.

RENEW PROMPTLY

We would again remind our subscribers that it is necessary to renew their subscriptions promptly. Recently we have allowed some to remain on our list, which have expired, and we trust that these will be attended to at once. Remit by postal money order to The Graphic, Campbellton.

OPERA HOUSE

The Opera House is at present putting on one of the best moving picture entertainments that has ever been seen in Campbellton. The names of the pictures will be posted in the announcement case on Water St. also in the Opera House adv. in this paper. Saturday night will be very interesting. One picture will be a Country Girl's Peril, a story that will interest every person who sees it. The new picture will be a wonderful story of the Lion Tamer. Don't fail to see Saturday night's show. Admission, only 10 cents.

OLD MAN FOUND DEAD

With face, hands and arms horribly rat eaten, Daniel Plimors, aged 75 years a recluse living about five miles from Moncton was found dead in his home Tuesday. He has just seen alive two weeks ago, when he was in Lewisville, Coroner Purdy Tuesday afternoon accompanied Undertaker Tuttle, went to Harrisville and break in the door, found him dead on the bed. The sight was the most gruesome the coroner and undertaker ever faced. Coroner Purdy concluded the aged man had collapsed of heart failure and exhaustion. The body was brought to Tuttle's morgue in Moncton.

Palatable as Cream—"The D. & L. Emulsion, for those suffering from severe coughs and hemorrhages, is used with the greatest benefit."

HEARD IN RECITAL
Friday evening, Nov. 12, Pierce Hall was fairly filled to enjoy a concert given by the faculty comprising the excellent staff of the Eastern Townships College of Music in which Miss Florence Crocker was heard in two delightful numbers. Her first song was "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice", the rendition of which was most musical and was well received. For an encore she gave "The Last Rose of Summer", which was well adapted to her rich voice. Miss Crocker's fine appearance and modest bearing are factors which add much to her popularity. Miss Crocker's second number consisted of a song by Brahms, given in the German, and Handel's "Had I Jubal's Lyre", and she responded very generously to encore.

ST. ANDREW'S DAY
Tuesday next is St. Andrew's Day and in honor of the occasion the Caledonia Society of St. Regis will hold their annual dinner at the Hotel. Invitations have been issued for the dinner.

THE HOME JOURNAL

Canadians need not go far afield in a search for a good family journal while we have such a publication as our own Home Journal. I know that the Ladies' Home Journal has a wide circulation in Canada. It is a fine production, though to be sure, in its bulk and in many of its features. The Home Journal covers quite as many topics as any other journal. The covers are an artistic delight and are equal to those of the Saturday Evening Post, which is the prize. For example, the editor is one of the finest women journalists in Canada and a woman whose writings have been appreciated in the New York press for some time. I am sure, whose work is known and appreciated in the Southern States, and to win in the New York Sun has more than once referred in a very complimentary manner. Why, then, do we not patronize our own wares? Why are we not proud to have a journal that we know how to love and that we know how to appreciate? This I do not believe. I have heard it said—and you may depend on it, it was ably contradicted—"Kirk" in Mail and Empire.

Many school children suffer from constipation, which is often the cause of seeming stupidity at lessons. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets are an ideal medicine to give a child, for they are mild and gentle in their effect, and will cure even chronic constipation. Sold by all drug stores.

LOVE MAKING CAUSES UPRHEAVAL IN COLLEGE

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 25—Tales of kissing in the dark and love-making in the chapel of the Northwestern College at Naperville and the sudden resignation of President H. J. Kirkhofer, head of the religious school following the disclosures, have given church and social circles of the village a shock.

Himself the professor of intellectual and moral philosophy, Professor Kirkhofer, who is the father of three girls and a boy, has been revered and loved in Naperville for a quarter of a century. As a result of the disclosures Northwestern College, with its two hundred students, of whom fifty are girls, is in rebellion and the evangelical association which founded the school is divided over the matter.

CHRISTMAS STAMP CAMPAIGN

THE 1909 BATTLE AGAINST THE DREAD WHITE PLAGUE.

Available Bids in the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives Increased Three-Fold as a Result of Last Year's Sale of Christmas Stamps. The Number Can Be Doubled This Year If Everyone Will Help.

STIMULATED by the success of a campaign for the sale of the Christmas Stamp of 1908, the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives is again appealing to the public for help.

The stamp of 1908 was most beautiful and its sale was a success. The design was in red and green, and of the same size as the regular government postage stamp.

This Christmas stamp will not carry any kind of mail, but any kind of mail will carry it—and carry too the happy Season's Greetings from sender to receiver. The stamps will be done up in envelopes of ten, twenty-five, fifty and one hundred for ordinary selling, and large users will be supplied in quantities. The price for ten or for one thousand is a cent each.

The banks, departmental stores, drug stores, book and stationery stores and many other stores will sell them. Women's clubs, church organizations, public schools, and many other organizations and individuals will help this year as last year.

There would seem to be no reason why everybody everywhere may not help in forming an army of willing workers to sell these stamps all over the Dominion. The Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives is in the caring for patients from every province in Canada.

The first issue of the stamp for this year is one million, and these will be put into circulation immediately, but there can hardly be any reason why the issue should not be increased many times over before Christmas.

The direction of the sale of Christmas Stamps is in the hands of Mr. J. M. Robertson, Sec.-Treasurer, National Sanatorium Association, 367 King Street, West, Toronto, who will give prompt reply to any enquiries regarding the stamp.

THE CLASH OF CIRCUMSTANCES.

"Then I say you need never come beneath this roof again."

"I had never hoped to see you, but a man must follow as his conscience leads."

Elise Dubert faced Elsie's defiance and he read contempt in a face that once had looked upon him with a warmer light. With her tall, straight figure and imperious attitude she showed her family's characteristics of pride and determination as her face bore its traits of firm mouth and chin. He turned to leave.

"At least I owe myself a word of explanation," he said quietly at the door. "When I accepted the hospitality of your father and your cousin it was with none but friendly intent. I was a stranger. I knew nothing of California. I can never forget the obligations they placed me under."

I have formed political convictions and in so doing have found that I can no longer be associated with them. It seems small, treacherous, even, I suppose, I cannot justify myself to you for they are of your own blood. Still, you must know that it has cost me something in sacrificing the hope I had. For I did hope, Elsie.

"She stood looking at him with proud eyes, unsmiling, a white, erect figure. Her air was that of one who awakes the withdrawal of an intruder. He held out a hand to her, then dropped it and stepped quickly out upon the porch, thence to the street."

Joseph Elsie was the subject under discussion in the study of the Dubert home a week later.

"There may be some difficulty in making him fight," said John Dubert slowly, looking out across the wheat field. "It would be quite like him to overlook a challenge and carry it off with his superior air." The speaker was a square, heavily muscled man of middle life, with a close cropped beard and mustache that did not hide a thin, hard mouth. His eyes were narrowed as he debated, half to himself, and took nothing from the aggressive quality of his face. Opposite him sat the only other occupant of the room a man about sixty years old, white and lined. His features showed the same marks that were somewhat veiled in the younger. There was a strong resemblance between them.

"You seem to have a poor opinion of gold to me."

Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Columbus, Ohio.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound during the last year, and my doctor told me it was good, and since I can do all my work again, I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a fine remedy for all women's troubles, and I never forget to tell my friends what it has done for me."

—Mrs. E. E. Hanson, 344 East Long St., Columbus, Ohio.

Another Woman Helped.

Granville, Ohio.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored my health and strength, and proved worth mountain gold to me. For the sake of other suffering women I am willing you should publish my name and her name. I have been the standard remedy for female ills. In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

of Joe Elsie's courage, he answered after a pause. John Dubert turned with a gesture.

"You misunderstood me if you think that, uncle," he replied. "Whatever it may be necessary to say to the contrary, I know Elsie for a man of high spirit and fearless. When he was in Tennessee he fought often enough and readily enough, killed his men twice and never refused a challenge. But since he came to Sacramento he has avoided all meetings and has been heard to condemn the code."

"Still, there must be some way of making him come to the front," said the elder Dubert.

"I shall find a way. We cannot sit still under this thing. John Dubert frowned heavily and there was an answering shade upon his uncle's face.

"If it came to a last resort he would fight," he said. "I have seen him back, suggested the elder man, grimly.

"There is another method open. That would throw sentiment against us. With a convention coming it must be careful. If it is managed right, a nite other hand, it will help. They will think twice before making an attack. For another thing, I have a fancy to be the challenged party myself. I tell you I know Elsie in Tennessee. The man is a crack shot with rifle and pistol. I have no mind to be a mere target. You know I am useless with firearms since my eyes went back on me."

Old Dubert stared. Then what in heaven's name, do you propose to name as weapons?

"All in good time, uncle. I have them ready picked."

"If, as you say, he's not apt to accept a challenge, he's not likely to issue one," grumbled the aged man, who knew it was "small use to press his nephew for what he did not care to tell. "Meanwhile, did you verify the report we had of his words?"

"I did, and learned they were stark truth. We had heard, Sam Fisher was in the group at the time. Some one asked Elsie if he would support me for Auditor or State next fall. He said he would not. They asked why. Then he came out with that story about the county funds when I was Treasurer. He mentioned you too, uncle. I inquired particularly about his language. He did not say 'what' but he said as well have said it. He wanted to know where we made our money so fast."

"He did, eh?" sneered the other. "Perhaps he was not so anxious to find out before Elsie threw him over. Did he say anything about her?"

"Not a word."

"Well, now, I want to know what you are going to do," the elder Dubert broke out rising with vigorous movement from his chair and pacing the room. "Joe Elsie is leading the only opposition you've had for years. He has influence for all he's been here but a short time. You'll never make headway till you get him. If you can't or won't, by God, I'll myself. What's the plan?"

John Dubert did not alter his place in the face of the sudden demand. He still stared out over the fields.

"I'm going to post him," he said, deliberately.

"Good, good. I never thought of that," cried his uncle, excitedly. "Post him in all the papers in the town. Put the thing up to him squarely. He can never hold up his head again if he ignores it."

"He won't ignore it," said John Dubert.

Joseph Elsie sat late that night in the upper office of the land company of which he was president. Word had reached him that the Duberts were planning an advance to his public declaration against them. He was not disturbed. He had spent an active early life in the politics of his native state and had been accustomed to the chances of opposition. He saw in the Duberts a corrupt and dangerous element in the young, vigorous development of new California and he had set himself to combat them. The danger he ran in so doing was a part of the game.

He was engaged in writing a political article for the columns of the newspaper which had been willing to join him in his opposition of the Duberts. The door of his room opened suddenly and Crawford, the editor of the sheet, entered. Elsie looked up in surprise. The visitor held a slip of paper in his hand and advanced with a scowl on his handsome face.

"This is what you run into when you back that crowd, Joe," he said, without preamble and laid the paper on the desk. "This is what they're inserted for tomorrow in every paper in the country. Even had the nerve to come to me with it; there's sheet iron creek for you."

"This was what the note bore:

"In justice to myself I denounce Joseph Elsie as a prevaricating, base, calumniating scoundrel, paltry and coward."

John Dubert.

"Let me be the bearer of your answer Joe," said Crawford, tensely. "In this thing with you to the end. I'd give something myself to have the change at the black visaged rascal myself."

"Well," exclaimed the editor, impatiently. "Elsie stood up and faced him."

Elsie was taken squarely aback. He had not been prepared for this. Flushed with anger, he sat reading and rereading the insult that would be the talk of the country within a few hours. Crawford awaited some explosion, some word of defiance, but Elsie said nothing.

"Well," exclaimed the editor, impatiently. "Elsie stood up and faced him."

"Crawford," he said, heavily, "you haven't known me long and I can't complain if you judge me as you would any other man of your acquaintance in my place. But for myself I know it is no cowardice when I say that I would give ten years of my life if this had not happened."

The other watched his face keenly, nodding in quick comprehension and sympathy.

"You don't say another word. It's the girl, I understand, old man. Do you see any way out of it? You can count on me."

Elsie shook his head with a long sigh.

"No; there's no way out of it. If he had met me in person, insulted me even struck me, I might have passed the thing off. I thought I had done with this miserable code of so-called honor that binds us in all our actions. It is false, Crawford, and that comes from a man who has lived by it."

"Shall I act for you then?"

"Yes; you know the procedure. I give you full power to make the arrangements. Accede to anything. He will have a fight, and it makes not the slightest difference to me how he gets it."

It was not the custom in the Dubert family to admit its women to the sterner purposes of the men. The first intimation of the state of affairs came to Elsie when she read the papers next morning. She started up as the paragraph came under her eye, her instant impulse being to seek her cousin. She knew what this meant. From beyond the studio door she could hear the voice of John Dubert and her father. But with her hand on the knob she drew back.

It was useless. What could she say? The man was an enemy to her house and to her. She hated him. Then was it strange that she must lean against the wall for support?

"She fought against the decision. No; she had not thought of Elsie. It was the danger her cousin must run that set the blood flowing about her heart. She returned to the porch and set herself to watch the first visitor was Jim Hammond, long her hopeless admirer, a henchman of the Duberts. He greeted her awkwardly on his way in. She confronted him when he returned, hat on hour later.

"When is it to be Jim?" she asked calmly.

"Tomorrow," he answered, embarrassed, but helpless against her peremptory tone. She put a hand on his arm.

"Come," she said, drawing him toward the parlor. "I want to speak with you a moment. Inside and shut the door and faced him."

"Jim-Hammond, you have vowed and protested often enough to me. I have never asked anything of you. I'm going to ask it now. The young man's face flushed and he stepped forward eagerly.

"Oh, try me, Elsie. I'll do anything I can for you and you know it. You are going to act as John's second?"

She swept across the parlor to the table on which Hiram Dubert's box of duelling pistols lay. The weapons were oiled and polished by her father himself each week and had served in many an encounter involving members of the family.

"Then here are the pistols they will use," she handed on. "I want you not the caliber? He looked at her blankly.

"Listen," she said. "This man Elsie is a professional duelist. My cousin's hot head is carrying him to certain death. The honor of the Duberts is as dear to me as to him, Jim, but I will not have him slaughtered. I am trusting in you. You'll

More bread and Better bread

—And the Reason for it

A STRONG FLOUR can only be made from strong wheat. Of course this special process is more expensive to operate but it means a lot to Purify Flour users—that's why we use it.

It means that Purify Flour is made entirely of the highest-grade flour parts of the strongest wheat in the world.

It means a high-class, strong flour and therefore yields "more bread and better bread."

Purify may cost a little more than some flours, but results prove it the cheapest and most economical after all.

Fifteen Years of Agony

"Fruit-a-lives" Promptly Cured Him After Doctors Had Failed To Give Relief.

CHARLES BARRETT, ESQ.

Harbor on Bonche, Antigonish Co., N.S., March 24, 1909.

"I wish to express my sincere appreciation of the great benefit derived from taking 'Fruit-a-lives.' I suffered from Biliousness and Dyspepsia for fifteen years and I consulted physicians and took many kinds of ordinary medicine, but got no relief. I was in miserable health all the time and nothing did me any good. I read the testimonial of Archibald McClellan, of Ottawa, and I decided to try 'Fruit-a-lives.' I have taken a number of boxes of 'Fruit-a-lives,' but before I had taken one box I felt better and now am entirely well. 'I am thankful to be well after fifteen years suffering, and I am willing to have this statement published for the sake of other sufferers, and to them I strongly recommend 'Fruit-a-lives.'" must find some way so that the bullets will be harmless. Make substitute balls of some substance. I know what I know such things are done. Will you help me, Jim?

Hammond's face went red and he could not speak. He was silent for a moment, then he said, "Why, Elsie, you're asking what I well might impossible," he said slowly. "I'm pledged in honor to act as your father's second. It's a man's affair, Elsie."

She looked him with a doubtful gesture.

Is it a man's affair or a help-less combatant against a dead who? Elsie is a professional duelist. I tell you. This must be stopped. I am showing you the way to stop it without a scene or a scandal. If you care anything for my cousin you should aid me to help him. If you care anything for me you should be willing to do what I ask. Surely my interest is nearer than yours."

But I'm not sure I know how to manage it," he faltered.

You can do it, Jim, if you want to. I'm asking once more," she pleaded.

He gazed at her over-whelmed by the commanding beauty of her, softened by the poignant appeal in the wide eyes. It was a face and figure that had haunted him for many a hopeless obsession and the tramping of the obsession swept him from all holds.

You will find me not ungrateful, Jim," she said softly, as he hesitated, and Hammond surrendered.

"I will do what I can Elsie," he said finally.

All the afternoon Hammond worked upon the plan he had devised with John Doherty's cousin to prevent bloodshed in the coming duel. His final conference with his principal was to take place at ten o'clock the next night. At midnight he would meet Crawford to arrange the final details of the affair. For hours he experimented with chalk, graphite, and other possible substitutes, and after many failures he produced several dummies which might serve his purpose if they were not closely examined. The only remaining difficulty was to manipulate the situation so that he should be the one to load the pistols. He felt that he had a fair chance of success when he preceded the duel.

GAS DISTENDED HIS STOMACH

Cause of Palpitation, and Prevented Sleep—When Health Was Gone, Cure Followed Use of "Nerviline."

"My last wish will be," writes Harry P. Pollard, a well-known boot and shoe traveler of Hartford, "that every one with a bad stomach may learn as I did, before it's too late, that Nerviline is the one remedy to cure. Why, I was in mighty bad shape, my digestion was all wrong, and every night I would wake with a start and find my heart jumping like a threshing machine. This was caused by gas on my stomach pressing against my heart. When I started to use Nerviline I got better mighty fast. It is certainly a grand remedy for the traveling man; keeps your stomach in order, cures cramps, prevents lamago or rheumatism, breaks up chest colds and sore throat—in fact there hasn't been an ache or pain inside or outside for the past two years that I haven't cured with Nerviline. Do you wonder I recommend it?"

For general household use Nerviline has no equal; it will cure the aches and ailments of the entire family—run anything but Nerviline. See, per bottle, five for $1.00, all dealers or the Cattaraugus Co., Kingston, Ont.

JOHN HALLAM, TORONTO

sented himself at the Doherty house at the appointed time.

He met the two men in the study, the younger rather nervous, the elder silent and composed.

Well, Jim, did Crawford accept the terms I named? asked John Doherty when his second entered.

"Yes," nodded Hammond, he agreed to everything, though he did put up a high because I wasn't ready to complete the negotiations on the spot.

Doherty nodded. "I had a reason for that. As a matter of fact the conditions I have in mind are a little unusual. Still, no one can say I went beyond my rights."

"What do you want John? Going to shorten up the distance? asked Hammond, with some misgiving.

"Considerably."

"Ten or eight paces?"

"No paces at all Jim," was Doherty's answer.

Hammond stared in amazement. "What then?"

"We will meet face to face," said the other walking to a corner of the room. "And these will be our weapons."

He laid on the table a pair of gigantic broadswords, newly sharpened and cleaned of rust. Hammond could scarcely believe that he heard or saw right.

"You mean to fight with those?" he stammered, while old Doherty chuckled with pleasure.

"Certainly. Why not? returned his principal. They are permissible, are they not? I do not propose to stand a mark man. Elsie, my eye-sight is good enough for close quarters."

"But this is unprecedented in California," said Hammond.

"What matter? They are commonly employed elsewhere. I don't know how to use them. Neither, as I figure it, does Elsie. The chances are equal. I want to fight, but I want to give blow for blow, that's all Jim. You'd better look up Crawford now and break the news to him."

To Hammond it was the hand of fate. Neither he nor Elsie could intervene now the affair must go forward.

He thought for a moment of sending up a servant to rouse her, but he hesitated. He was not sure he could intervene now the affair must go forward.

The combatants and their seconds met on the river bank about a mile below the city soon after dawn the next morning. Elsie had shown neither surprise nor resentment at the choice of weapons. He had no knowledge of the broadsword and he had taken for granted that his adversary must be an adept in its use. But as he had told Crawford, he was wholly indifferent. Against all his convictions and natural feeling, he must fight a man who had been his friend at one time, who was the cousin of the girl he loved. When the meeting became inevitable, he had no other interest in the details, nor did he particularly care what his outcome might be. He would do what he could; he owed it to his manhood, but he would not quarrel or bicker over the terms.

John Doherty had spoken truth, however, in telling Hammond that he was unskilled with the sword. He had chosen against prevailing traditions of the time. He was no coward. He sought no unfair advantage. But he meant to kill his opponent and in a hand to hand engagement he counted upon his long arms and weight of muscle. He counted something, at the same time, upon the complete surprise. It would be for Elsie and the resulting confusion in his adversary's mind.

Hammond and Crawford, equally ignorant with their principals as to the proper process of dueling with unsavory weapons, came to a simple agreement: which was acceptable on both sides. A straight line was dug in the dirt across which the combatants were to face each other. In fighting, either, if able, could press his enemy back a short distance. But they were strictly warned that neither must advance so far as to have both feet over the line.

The two principals took their positions just as the sun cast its first long shadow from tree and shrub. Elsie was the taller by several inches but his frame was slighter and his arms lacked the remarkable length of his opponent's. Both were calm and determined. They stood for a moment, sword points to the ground, while each studied the other and sought preliminary dominance by glance of eye.

"Ready," asked Hammond.

"On guard."

The sword rose and clashed. Cautiously, watchfully, Doherty formed a side thrust from Elsie's each could test the strength of his adversary's wrist. To the seconds, who followed every move with the keenest eyes, it became instantly evident that the contest would prove deadly. Edges and points were sharp. The inexperience of the duellists was not strong and active, well matched.

Doherty settled himself for a blow. Without uncovering himself with his hit he swung his blade high and sent it crashing in, throwing his right foot across the line. Elsie caught the stroke in midair and turned his weapon neatly. The descending sword swept harmlessly aside and Doherty recovered himself, with difficulty. Before he had regained a guard Elsie had thrust, awkwardly, but with venom, and his point hit along his opponent's right side grazing a rib. Doherty answered instantly with another lancing, downward swoop, which Elsie again evaded.

Warned to the track and conscious now that the upper hand rested with neither, the combatants quickened their pace. Thrusts and parry followed each other rapidly. The characteristic of each unaccustomed swordsman became observable. Doherty took naturally to a drawing sweep down or across, striking with a force that exposed him dangerously after each blow. Elsie's most frequent move was a quick lunge and recover. At this stage of the combat, however, his energy was chiefly directed toward intercepting Doherty's slashing attack.

Doherty's arm seemed tireless. Suddenly he pressed harder, launching terrific blows in quick succession. Elsie stood beneath the onsets manfully, but could not maintain his guard. His covering blade wavered for an instant and Doherty's weapon slashed home on his left arm. Elsie had broken the first blow of the descending sword but the wound was severe. Simultaneously the seconds rushed forward and called a halt.

The contest had now proceeded for twenty five minutes. Elsie's hurt had not disabled him and Doherty was suffering little from the cut on his side. Hammond, mindful of his trusted pact with Elsie, sought to catch a truce, an effort to which Crawford lent his aid. It was represented to the principals that honor had been satisfied the result resting equally between the two parties and each having proved his courage. But the fire of battle had been fanned. Elsie was now as eager as his opponent to fight to a finish and he would hear of no agreement.

"This begins to amuse me," was Doherty's comment to Hammond. "I'll kill him next time I get in that stroke."

Again they took their stand, and again, at the word, the swords crashed together. Previous caution was forgotten. They had each other's measure now, and their common purpose was to force the issue to a quick conclusion. The whirling blades made an incessant hammer and ring. Doherty felt the result first. Five times Elsie's weapon reached past his guard and drew blood. Aroused to frenzy by the consequent drain upon his strength he cut savagely and then, changing his tactics for the first time, Elsie's weapon reached past his guard and drew blood. Aroused to frenzy by the consequent drain upon his strength he cut savagely and then, changing his tactics for the first time, Elsie's weapon reached past his guard and drew blood.

During the last fifteen minutes of the desperate encounter the combatants were staggering like drunken men, sorely wounded and on the verge of exhaustion, but holding to the mad batter and thrust without pause. It seemed scarcely possible that man could endure longer under the terrific strain. Both were hard hit in a dozen places, their clothing torn to shreds, their faces hardly to be recognized. They left bloody marks on the grass as they tripped and fell. There was no longer any attempt to check a blow. The one surviving purpose in the frantic duel was to kill. So weak were they that time and again a cut fell harmlessly on the flat of the sword or a thrust that might have been fatal came to naught. Elsie's hand was numb and his feet were unsteady. Toward the end Elsie stumbled and fell to his knees. The seconds rushed forward to check Doherty, but with a tremendous effort he rose and met Doherty's rush with a thrust that caught the impending blow. A second later he was on his feet once more, awaring and tottering, his legs shaking in giddy pain, but jabbing madly at the other's face. Suddenly Doherty backed away, blinking to clear his eyes, lifted his sword and came in with a blow that had all his remaining power behind it. His sword clove fairly through his opponent's collar bone and down into his breast. Elsie's blade at the same instant passed through Doherty's body. The combatants fell together without a cry. The duel had lasted, with but one brief pause, for fifty-eight minutes.

Elsie died as he was being lifted into a farm wagon for removal. Doherty was taken to his home. His arrival there was preceded by that of Hammond, who, contrived to escape the household in some part of the shock. He himself gave Elsie the first word that their plan had failed. Even in that latter moment when he learned of Elsie's death and the fact that her cousin was fatally wounded she found courage for a crushing dismissal of the man who, as she counted, had betrayed her. She nursed John Doherty faithfully through the day and the next night. He died at dawn without regaining consciousness.

Throughout the first painful week of her sorrow, sharpened by the pitiable state of her father, the brave, self-controlled girl yielded but once. She fainted one afternoon in the parlor. It was recalled that the procession that followed Joseph Elsie's body to the grave had passed the house at that moment.

Buy Soap Already Aged

It lasts longer and does more work. Wise housewives buy soap in quantities and store it on their pantry shelves until it is hard and firm.

But we put Taylor's Borax Soap through an ageing process equal to standing six months in your pantry, so you can use it as soon as you get it. It is a compact, white soap that lathers freely in any kind of water, and the ageing makes it last twice as long as any other soap in Canada.

We go 12,000 miles to Ceylon for the coconut oil we put into this soap.

Most makers say it is too expensive, but we find it makes the best soap—so we use it.

Then we mix it with borax, which softens hard water, whitens clothes without injury and makes them sweet and clean.

No soap could be purer than this, for during the boiling process we run thousands of gallons of clean water through the soap. Thus every impurity is carried away and the soap is absolutely clean.

It destroys all odors, kills every germ, and leaves things wholesome and pure. Try it for woollens and flannels. It won't shrink them—it is a wonderful soap for every household use.
