Record of Current Events About Town.

Colin Campbell's House Burned—Fire in the Barracks.

The Majority Contest—Careless Discharge of a Gun.

The Mayorality.

Police Chief Directed.

School Vacations.

The summer vacation begins on Wednesday at all schools where the educational institute, and continues until the third Monday in August for cities and incorporated towns, and till the first Monday for all other places.

School Examinations.

The grading examinations in the city schools have been in progress this week, and the public examinations will be held on Tuesday morning. The public examinations in the Wesley and Duke Settlement schools will take place in the afternoon.

At the Hospital.

There are now four patients at the Victoria Hospital, three of whom are males. John Anderson, 45 years of age, was found in a room on the street, 15 miles from the city, yesterday morning. He was taken to the hospital and placed in one of the wards for treatment.

The Mayorality Contest.

The mayorality election, which takes place on Monday, promises to be a lively contest. The friends of both candidates are active and hopeful of success. The nomination of candidates opens at nine o'clock, and polling begins at ten and continues until four o'clock.

Colin Campbell's House.

Yesterday Mrs. Jeanie Campbell, who was in the rear of her house on Regent Street, narrowly escaped being wounded by the discharge of a gun fired at that house from a back yard on Charlotte Street. The shot flew all around her and, naturally, completely unnerved her, so that a doctor had to be called.

Peck's Bad Boy Contest.

As will be seen by advertisement columns, Alton's celebrated comedy company are billed to appear in the city hall in the great musical comedy, Peck's Bad Boy, on Thursday evening next. They will no doubt have a packed house, as the people are all aware that the company is one of the best that have ever visited the province.

Educational Institute.

The public are specially invited to attend the educational institute, which opens at eight o'clock on Wednesday evening. Addresses will be given by Sir John A. Macdonald, Judge King, Hon. Senator Boyd, Hon. Attorney General Blair, Dr. Stockton, Dr. Harrison and others. A choir, under the direction of Prof. Bristow, will furnish music.

The Time Honored Cannon.

The time honored cannon cannon whose whereabouts is such a mystery to all except the very few initiated at each Bonanza meeting, thundered forth its valleys about 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and the alarums of the city as they felt themselves rocking and to fire, but no accident occurred nor was any alarm excited as the sleepers at once realized the time honored practice.

A Big Ship Coming.

The famous Hays Steamship company are booked to appear in the city hall on Friday evening next week. This company has been playing at each Bonanza week to crowded houses. They have a great solo orchestra and a magnificent full uniformed military band which will give an operatic concert in every town they visit. The port of arrival is every town they visit.

Fire in the Barracks.

About eleven o'clock last night while the officers were entertaining a number of friends to supper at the barracks, a fire in Captain Trolie's quarters exploded and set fire to the bed clothing. The flames had communicated to several articles of furniture when the fire was discovered. An alarm was sounded but the flames arrived before the burning material had been known and the fire was extinguished.

Another Prize for the Students.

At the school exercises Tuesday night, as will be seen in another column, the Governor's silver medal was awarded to Mr. Arthur W. Slipp for proficiency in English in the Sophomore class. Next year, it was announced, that the medal would go to another class, thus leaving the Sophomores without a medal to compete for in this subject. Mr. Slipp thereupon promised to fill the blank, and the announcement that he would give a money prize next year for the study of English in that class was received with applause.

Looking for the offenders.

There are many complaints from the train men on the G. N. B. R. because of the cattle running at large along the line, oftentimes compelling the train to stop until they are removed off the track. Yesterday the train from Woodstock was again delayed on this account, in one case having to run along at a snail's pace for a distance of three miles before the animal left the track. The gates along the line are left open day after day, and Mr. Boyd, the claim agent of the company, is now tracing out the offenders with a view to prosecution.

Domestic Prize Competition.

It turns out that "Yessie," the successful competitor in the "Domestic Prize Competition" for the city of Fredericton, Miss Agnes Taylor, daughter of the late Captain Taylor, a pupil at Mr. Kilmer's school. The prize, consisting of a beautiful history of Quebec under the charge of Captain Taylor, is a pupil at Mr. Kilmer's school. The prize, consisting of a beautiful history of Quebec under the charge of Captain Taylor, is a pupil at Mr. Kilmer's school.

Death of the young man.

Mr. Robert G. McCreedy of this city recently died of a heart attack. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was a student at the University of New Brunswick. He was a very bright and promising young man, and his death is a great loss to the community.

A distressing fatality.

A letter from Mr. J. H. Smith, who has just returned from a trip to the United States, reports a distressing fatality. A young man, who was a student at the University of New Brunswick, died of a heart attack while on a visit to his parents in the United States. The death was a great loss to the community.

Fire at the barracks.

At the barracks, a fire broke out in the kitchen of the barracks. The fire was caused by a gas stove, and the flames spread rapidly. The fire was extinguished by the fire department, and no one was injured.

NARKA,

THE MURDER.

Marguerite could bear no more, she burst into tears, overcame with horror and confusion.

"Ah! I have suffered for my crime! I have wept on, 'ay, the tortures of the damned.....! no chance—God in His judgment so decreed—that I was pun- ing when the police were carrying him away.....! I saw him driven on between the two policemen. Oh my God! I my God! the look he gave me.....! it has haunted me like a dead man's eye. I felt sure at first that the Prince would have obtained his release when that failed, I did what I could.....! I spent my whole fortune trying to purchase his escape, to bribe the justice, trying to get alibi for him. I have lived in poverty.....! my life has been a hell of remorse.....! And now I am dying scorned and un- forgiven, murdered myself.....! it is just as I deserve!"

Marguerite dropped on her knees, shuddering in her soul with pity for the wretched man who had suffered and suffered so terribly. But her strong sense and habit of self-control quickly brought her back to the practical question of how to make this confession available for Father Christopher. She had presence of mind enough to remember that either it must be made verbally before another witness or Ivan must sign what she had written in presence of a witness.

"It is my good my confounding now," said Ivan, as if he guessed what was in her mind. "Will it help to set Father Christopher free, do you think? If it did, I know that before I died, it would make him less terrible to me."

"I have not a doubt," replied Marguerite, "that as soon as your statement is known to the authorities, they will liberate him at once; but you will have to repeat the confession, or else make it in the presence of another person. May I send for the commissary?"

"Yes, yes," said Ivan as he came. "I will swear before the whole world that I committed the murder, and confessed it to Father Christopher."

Marguerite went out, intending to send for the commissary. She found him in the entry, surrounded by the cure, the doctor, several police-officers, and others who had been attracted by the news of the murder. She told rapidly what had happened, and when the commissary, accompanied by the cure and the doctor, came in, Marguerite read what she had written, and then asked Ivan if it was correct, and if he would swear to the truth of the story.

"Yes, I swear, as a dying man, that what you have written is true. So help me God! I did not kill that man, but I did kill him, and put the pen in his hand, and he wrote his name; the others then signed their signatures. The commissary was putting me in the pen when I was told that he wanted it again. They gave it to him, and he changed it slightly. It was Narka's pen. He remembered signing it on her little writing table."

"What have they done to her?" he asked. "Narka's pen; what is the sentence?"

"She is acquitted in all points," replied the commissary, who had been in a police-office just come from the court. "Thank God! I muttered Ivan, and his face brightened, then, changing suddenly, he looked of hungry, wild, and came over it. "Now let them catch Schenk," he said. "If Schenk's doing—I was Schenk that stabbed me, I would die easy if I knew they would hang him!"

He fell back exhausted on the pillow.

CHAPTER XII.

The verdict of acquittal was received with loud and general applause, the Vilette element making itself conspicuous in the chorus of yells of triumph, which might have easily been mistaken for howls of rage. When M. de Beauchamp and Sibyl left Narka out of the court, half fainting, she barely knew where she was going, and allowed her self to be seated into the carriage without asking where they were taking her. It was only when she found herself on the steps of Sibyl's house that she realized where she was. It was then too late to protest, even if she had had strength to do it.

Sibyl took her upstairs, and put her to bed; she was kind and tender as a sister, and Narka, worn out in mind and body, submitted unresistingly to the soft ministrations. She was thankful to be at rest. Sibyl slept through the night from sheer exhaustion. Sibyl would have her lie in bed next morning; she forbade her to get up till the afternoon, and gave orders that Narka was not to be disturbed, even if Sister Marguerite came.

Immediately after the second breakfast Sibyl went with Gaston. They were both anxious to see Marguerite, and learn the cause of her mysterious summons from court the day before. The moment they were gone, Narka rose and dressed herself and slipped down to the hospital. She could not lie quiet in bed, when Sibyl might arrive at any moment and catch her. She had not been long in the hospital when a carriage drove into the court. It might be Basil! Narka started up and went to the window. A corpse was driven up before the steps; the hall porter was parrying with some one inside. Presently he opened the carriage door and satiated a lady to alight. Narka recognized Marie Kristy. The thought of meeting this girl, who loved Basil, who had been her rival, would have been intolerable; but it did not occur to her that Marie was coming upstairs; she was, no doubt, going to wait in the drawing room, or perhaps to write a note in the library. It was only when the sound of silk rustling on the landing became audible that Narka knew the young Princess was going to appear. She glanced round for a way of escape. There was a parroted door that opened into a tiny closet, a sort of door where the tea-table, etc., were kept. There was just time to spring across the room and open this door and draw it after her, without daring to shut it, when Marie entered.

"You will find everything here, Princess," said the servant, who soon the click of an opened inkstand, and then the noise of a pen scratching the paper, announced that Marie was writing. The time seemed long to Narka, but in reality ten minutes had not elapsed when Marie started up, exclaiming: "Sister Marguerite! I am so glad I was writing a line for Madame de Beauchamp!"

She only returned from Fontainebleau last night. You were at the trial; tell me about it. Was Narka Lark guilty? Did she conspire against the life of the Emperor?"

Marguerite lifted her eyebrows. "Why, did you not read the trial? It is all in this morning's newspapers. She was completely acquitted."

"Oh, I know that. M. de Beauchamp is rich enough to buy up the jury. And he was quite right to do it; but is she guilty? Is she the dreadful woman they say? I want to know the truth!" She spoke earnestly, nervously.

"Narka is no more guilty than I am," said Marguerite, with the warmth of conviction. "She is a noble woman, and she has suffered cruelly."

"Ah! But now they say—It is true, this story of Prince Basil's being in love with her and wanting to marry her?"

"Yes, it is quite true."

Marie grew pale, and Marguerite said that the words out like a knife.

"Poor child! So she was to be a victim, through no fault of her own. She looked as if a touch would have overwhelmed her with grief; but she struggled bravely, and kept up."

"I am glad she is good, since he is going to marry her," she said; "it would have been dreadful for Madame de Beauchamp; and I should have been sorry for her brother, who—"

Marie stopped short, blushed violently, and then grew white, and an expression of terror and defiance came into her eyes. Marguerite turned to see what had wrought the sudden change, and saw a gentleman advancing quickly toward the open door of the hospital; he was unkempt and travel-stained, like one come off a journey; but Marguerite recognized Basil at a glance. He went straight up to her, and took her hand, and raised it to his lips; he did not say a word, but his face, his noble manner, were eloquent with feeling. Suddenly, as if he had not noticed the presence of the young Princess, he made her a low bow. Marie took up her pen, and said: "I am not sending you away, I hope," she said.

"No! I was going," she shook hands with Marguerite, and then, looking steadily in the face, "I am glad to be one of the first to congratulate you on your approaching marriage. I hope you will be as happy as I am."

"I am not sending you away, I hope," she said.

"No! I was going," she shook hands with Marguerite, and then, looking steadily in the face, "I am glad to be one of the first to congratulate you on your approaching marriage. I hope you will be as happy as I am."

HEAR THE BELLS.

Something About the Origin of the Chime and Their Uses.

"Bells," says Coleridge, "are the poor man's only music, and, indeed, that would the world be without the music of their ringing! Many learned philosophers have ground out columns after columns of metaphysical essays in their attempts to depict to us the awful consequences that would follow upon should we be transported to a world without color or instrumental music; the result would surely be equally disastrous should some evil genius deprive us of all the bells in the world and of the art of manufacturing a new supply to fill their place."

What would London have done for a long mayor for three whole terms between the years 1889 and 1893 had not Richard Watson, the learned, gentle admonition of the how bells as they toll him in winter longed tones: "Then again, Whittington, thirteenth mayor of London."

The name of the inventor of the bells has been lost in the wide revolving shades of centuries past; what is in a name! It little matters who he was or where he lived, but we do know as much of his personal history and habits as we would if told his name was William or Thomas, Dan or Moses, and that he lived in an indefinite period of time.

Bells are mentioned as being part of the vestment or ornaments attached to the wearing apparel of ancient high priests as far back as the time of Aaron and his brother, Moses the great man.

Even in more remote times we are told that religious assemblages and processions were accompanied by the ringing of bells.

Polonia, history of Nola, Campania, a small Italian principality, was the first to use bells in the building where Christians congregate for worship. This was about the year 400 A. D. These primitive church buildings were not provided with bells.
