Trenching

AT GALLIPOLI, By JOHN GALLISHAW.

The personal narrative of a loyal Newfoundland soldier in the disastrous Dardanelles campaign. An adventure-story stranger than fiction; as well as a reliable account, by an unusually keen participant, of the gigantic failure at Gallipoli.

For obvious reasons not a great many details of the Dardanelles campaign were permitted to be published while it was running its dramatic and terribly costly course; nor since, either, for that matter. Mr. Gallishaw, a student at Harvard when the war began and now, wounded, again in this country, is at liberty to write about what happened. His book, moreover, gives an extraordinarily vivid impression of what trench-fighting and trench-living is like.

If you haven't heard or seen it, get it now.

Illustrated from photographs. Price $1.20 post paid cash with order.

A Child of Sorrow.

CHAPTER XLIII.

She was afraid to say anything of Purley's will and her prospect of wealth, for she knew Mr. Clark's pride of old. But her reticence was thrown away, for the door opened and in walked Heroncourt and Maida, and both of them with a look on their faces which made Carrie and Ricky open their eyes and mouths and stare. Then Carrie sprang to her feet, nearly upsetting Ricky, and rushed at Maida, catching her by the shoulders and scanning her blushing face eagerly.

"Maida—is it all right? You and Byrne—oh, it is all right, isn't it? I can see by your faces—"

"Yes, it is all right, Carrie," said Heroncourt, for it seemed as if Maida could not speak. "Mr. Purley has been one too many for us—Sir Jeremiah and he between them—and Maida has been obliged to capitulate. He is the dearest, the noblest fellow in the world, and will only consent to live on condition that Maida and you share his wealth. We made a hard fight of it; but it was of no use; he will have his way."

Ricky drew back, looking pale and disconcerted.

"Then—then—Carrie, you are rich!" he stammered.

Carrie turned on him, and, taking him by the shoulders, shook him. "And so, because you can't have that semi-detached villa and cold nut-ton, Mr. Clark, I suppose you propose to cast me off? Should I draw back if you'd come into fortune? Don't be silly—I mean, sillier than you can help!"

This solemn adjuration must have had its effect upon Ricky, for he put his arm round her and kissed her, saying, with a sigh of resignation:

"Well, it can't be helped."

Then the two happy lovers went off in two hansoms to Coleridge Street "to talk everything over," but the talking was not finished there, for after awhile Heroncourt whispered to Maida, and she blushed and nodded and ran upstairs to put her outdoor things on.

"Where are you two going?" asked Carrie.

"To Lady Glassbury's," said Maida, in a low voice.

Purley kept to his bond and did not die; but he got better but slowly, in spite of his own eager desire; for Heroncourt and Maida absolutely declined to be married until he was able to be present at the ceremony; but in the latter part of the merry month of June—all times are good for marrying, but is there any better time than glorious June?—the day was fixed. Then Carrie and Ricky sprang a surprise on the other couple.

"I'm sorry I can't be your bridesmaid, dear," she remarked to Maida, in a business-like tone; "I have a strong objection, one in which Ricky joins; in fact, I have another engagement that day."

"Carrie, what do you mean?" exclaimed Maida, with dismay, but beginning to smile for there was a twinkle in Carrie's eye which belied her air of gravity.

"Well, you see," she said, slowly; "I am going to be married myself that day. Oh, it's not my doing; it's more my misfortune than my fault. You see, I happen to be engaged to a marvellous young man who, alas! even before marriage, is playing the tyrant. I have a strong suspicion that before many months I sha'n't have a will of my own. I only hope he won't beat me."

"Oh, Carrie, how clever and good of him!" exclaimed Maida. "If I didn't love Ricky already, I should love him for this."

Once again the country was thrown into a state of excitement, not only with the news of the double wedding, but by the extensive preparations which were being made at both the Court and the Towers; for it was arranged that Mr. and Mrs. Clark should reside at the latter place.

Ricky declared that it was too splendid for "a simple cove" like himself, and was only resigned to its magnificence by the fact that it was within walking distance of the Court, so that the two sisters could still be near each other.

No such wedding had ever occurred and will probably ever occur in the county, and the church was crowded; while as large a crowd massed outside to see the two brides and the two fortunate men who had won them. Not a few of the crowd wondered who the little man was who gave both the girls away, but soon the truth leaked out; and for once the interest excited by the brides was shared by that usually unimportant and usually insignificant person, the "giver-away."

Long before the memorable day was over, the pale-faced little man with the shy, deprecatory air, but with the gentle smile, was popular with all, gentle and simple, and more especially with those who knew the story of his self-sacrifice.

Between Josiah and the Glassburys there had sprung up a great friendship; for Lady Glassbury was naturally full of admiration for him; and she stood beside him at the reception after the weddings and through the ordeals of the numerous introductions; for everybody who knew Heroncourt wanted to know this true friend of his; and it was she who, when the wedded couples were leaving for their honeymoons, led him in to the library to say good-bye.

There were tears in both the girls' eyes as that good-bye was said.

"But it is only for a month, Purley," said Heroncourt. "Remember you've promised to be here at the Court to receive us. Meanwhile—"

"Meanwhile," said Lady Glassbury, quietly but masterfully, "Mr. Purley is going to stay with us. It's no use refusing, Mr. Purley, for my husband insists upon it, and when he insists upon anything, not only the Foreign Office, but his wife also, knows that he has to be obeyed."

Purley looked around at them all, and stammered:

"You are all very good to me," he said, in his quiet, subdued voice.

"My dear Dulcie, you really should have some consideration; what on earth can you want with a lantern?"

"And you should remember, Sir Archibald Hope is the representative—"

"Of one of the oldest English fami-

"Yes, I'll keep my promise; I'll be here when you come back; and as her ladyship has been kind enough to ask me, I'll go and visit her—if Miss Maida—I beg her pardon—his face lit up with a smile as his eyes rested on Maida—"If Lady Heroncourt wishes it."

Lady Glassbury still stood beside him as they watched the two brides' carriages drive away.

"How happy they look!" he said, huskily, and to himself.

"Yes," said Lady Glassbury, her eyes dim, her lips quivering; and her hand stole to his and took it and pressed it. "And it is you who have made them so!"

(Concluded To-morrow.)

The Sound of Wedding Bells

Won After Great Perseverance!

CHAPTER I.

He is a tall, well-made young man, is remarkable. He is fair; his hair and moustache are as nearly golden as a man's dare be, and his eyes as blue as china. It is more than a light-hearted one, and as it is raised up now, with a smile of amusement at its owner's struggle to stop still in the surging crowd; it is very good to look upon.

The girl leans over the balcony, and returns his greeting with a bright nod and a frank smile of welcome.

"Is that, Sir Archibald?"

"What is left of me," he says, carefully refraining from using her name, which would be caught up by the crowd. Instantly, "I believe I'm in fact, except one coat-tail and the heel of one boot."

And she laughs.

And she nods with keen enjoyment.

"How delicious it must be down there!" she cries.

She has to shout almost to make her voice reach him, near as they are.

"Oh, very!" he assents, with a little grimace. "Much better up there. May I come up?"

But she does not hear him. A pressure greater than usual has occurred in the crowd further up the street, and her attention has been caught by it.

He waits a moment, his blue eyes resting on her fact with something more than admiration in them; then he shouts again:

"You look very safe and comfortable up there. Might one crave for a moment's refuge from the storm?"

She withdraws her eyes from the crowd slowly.

"May you come up?" she says.

"Oh, yes, if you like. Wait, though," she adds, simply; and he turns and holds on for another moment. "Would you—do you think you would really mind going and seeing what that man is selling up there by the church? I think it is those delicious little lanterns! and if it is—"

He nods. "You would like one? All right!" and the next moment he is swept away.

"Men was that you were talking to?" inquires Mrs. Fernor, drawn to the window in sudden alarm, "not a stranger, surely, Dulcie?"

"No, aunt, though I feel myself quite capable even of that enormity to-night. It was Sir Archibald Hope."

"Sir Archibald Hope down here!" demands Mrs. Fernor, incredulously, "is it possible?"

"Yes, quite, where else should he be? He is not a girl—lucky for him—to be stood upon a balcony. Oh, its cruel, the advantages men have. I have often wished myself a man, but never so much as to-night, never."

On the average Dulcie shocks Aunt Fernor say fifty times a day, and she is nearly used to it by this time, but she emits the usual faint groan.

"And what is he doing down there?" she asks; "he is surely not dressed up."

"If you mean does he wear the costume of a page or is he clad in armour, he is not. It hasn't occurred to him, I suppose. No, he wears the regulation British garments, aunt. What he was doing I don't know, probably nipping with some of the pretty girls—and they are pretty!"

When I saw him: now he has gone to buy me a lantern."

"My dear Dulcie, you really should have some consideration; what on earth can you want with a lantern?"

"And you should remember, Sir Archibald Hope is the representative—"

"Of one of the oldest English fami-

The Salt in Demand To-day

THE CANADIAN SALT CO. LIMITED

Yes; yes, do remember it, aunt. As to the lantern, I want it for the same purpose as the other people do, and as to him, well, he likes getting it. If you don't believe me, ask him when he comes back—if he ever does come back alive. I'm not sure of that."

Sir Archibald is not quite sure that he will reach the church alive; the sun is setting, the carnival is at its loudest and highest; the crowd, good-natured though it be, is so dense that well, accidents might happen in such a crowd, best regulated though it be. But he does get to the church, and is fighting his way into the eager ring of would-be purchasers, which surrounded the lantern merchant, when he feels a hand upon his shoulder and a well-known voice in his ear, and turns, copper in hand, with an eager smile:

"Hal—loo, old man! Why, who on earth would dream of meeting you here?"

The gentleman addressed is an Englishman. At the first glance at the tall, rather spare figure, with its square-set shoulders and upright bearing one would know him for a soldier. His face—a dark, handsome face, is slightly bronzed with travel; a thick moustache and a pair of grave, penetrating eyes, add to the distinguished look of the man, and it only needs to hear the voice, deep and full and slightly haughty, to recognize the aristocrat.

At the present moment the dark eyes wear a decidedly bored expression, and the voice sounds strangely grave, in contrast to that laughing voice of the great crowd.

The two men shake hands and look at each other as Englishmen do, meaning all sorts of kindly feeling, but characteristically speaking none.

"And what on earth brings you here?" demands Sir Archibald—by the way, we had better call him at once, as everybody else does, Sir Archie.

"The other looks around with a smile that is almost grimacing, and says: "I scarcely know,"—then, after a pause: "Can't you get out of this wretched crowd?"

Sir Archie, still keeping hold of his companion's sleeve, draws him toward the pavement.

"All right," he says; "I know a place where we can stand a minute or two. Keep close to me. Here, my good man, you can't push right through me; I'm not tissue-paper, you know." This, it is scarcely necessary to say, is addressed to one of the crowd.

Sir Archie, acting as guide, insinuates, pushes, struggles through the throng, his companion following him, until they reach a little corner of pavement formed by the angle of the Church. Here there is at least breathing space, and here, laughing and panting, he stands and chats to his friend, lightly.

"Awful squeeze, isn't it? But fancy you in Rome! Why, I thought you were in India with your regiment!"

As a rule, indigestion in the nursing mother is caused by such foods as heavy puddings or underdone pastry, doughnuts, fried foods soaked in fats, made such as croquettes or fritters, pickles and poorly cooked foods. But people differ in the power of digestion, and what will suit one person may upset the next. Overeating may also be a cause of indigestion.

"A mixed diet of such digestible and nutritious foods as are readily available, is desirable for the nursing mother. All foods are milk making foods. RIGA ABANDONED BY RUSSIANS

PETROGRAD, Sept. 3.—The Russian war office announced today in a statement that: "An order has been given for the abandonment of the region, on account of the military situation."

CAPTURED BY GERMAN FORCES

BERLIN, Sept. 3.—A supplementary statement issued this evening from General Headquarters, announces the capture of the city by the Germans.

KORNILOFF'S STATEMENT CALLED

LONDON, Sept. 3.—The evacuation of Riga by the Russians recalls the statement of General Korniloff, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armies, at a conference, that "if our army were to help us to hold the shore of the Gulf of Riga the road to Petrograd would be opened wide." Few believe that the Germans will undertake to open the Russian capital over an unpaved road 350 miles in length, bleak country almost impassable for armies. Nevertheless the news is considered serious, for it betokens the recovery which has been long predicted.

LENS.

Canadian Headquarters in London (by Stewart Lorne), correspondent of the Canadian Press, Sept. 3.—The German Lens struggle doggedly to obtain a constructive grip of our most important defences of the city, but they have failed. The construction is in progress instead of lessening. It is of the most west fronts that the enemy's most unskillful. On the spot, protected by the flooded area of the valley of the Souchez and by portable artillery and machine gun positions on Sallan Mines Hill, the west the struggle is house to house. In that sort of fighting the advantage because of their greater power of initiative, have a distinct advantage and are making steady progress toward the heart of Lens. The city has been using gas when opportunities are favorable, to delay the advance but even in this form of warfare are no longer superior. This morning two hundred drums of gas were projected by our motorgs into that part of the city in which the Germans are most numerous and their progress has been very quiet since the morning north along the Cite St. Laurent. For there is still a wide tract of ground between our most important posts, and the houses of Lens. In this direction the Germans are encircling attack and they are strong forces in the trenches, but any assault. On Sunday morning they twice tried to raid our lines, but they did not reach even the trenches on either occasion. Another German nervousness on the part of the front is their incessant throwing up of star shells at night to illuminate the trench area and replace heavy artillery and machine gun positions in front of our trenches. The whole proceeding is an excellent example of locking the stable door when the horse is stolen. Sunday's splendid visibility to-day led to our artillery to shell the gas plant behind the battle front. The gas plant is the chief sufferer. The gas plant were only two victims, two school children, and the children of a day home for several hours and youngsters who were dismissed from school when the shells began to fall. The fortitude of these French children is an unflinching source of comfort to all who have seen them suffer. In one of the mining operations near the front which has been Canadian Headquarters in France, via London (by Stewart Lyon, Special Correspondent of the Canadian Press), Sept. 3.—The Germans in Lens struggle doggedly to loosen the constructive grip of our men upon the defences of the city, but as the days pass the construction is increased instead of lessening. It is on the north and west fronts that the enemy shows most uneasiness. On the south he is protected by the flooded area in the valley of the Souchez and by formidable artillery and machine gun positions on Sallan Mines Hill. On the west the struggle is house to house. In that sort of fighting the Canadians, because of their greater powers in the initiative, have a distinct advantage and are making steady progress toward the heart of Lens. The enemy has been using gas when conditions are favorable to delay the advance, but even in this form of warfare they are no longer superior. This morning two hundred drums of gas were projected by our motors into that part of the city in which the German posts are most numerous and the enemy has been very quiet since. In the north along the Cite St. Laurent sector, there is still a wide tract of open ground between our most southerly posts, and the houses of Lens. From this direction the Germans fear an encircling attack and they maintain strong forces in the trenches to meet any assault. On Sunday morning they twice tried to raid our line but they did not reach even the outposts on either occasion. Another sign of German nervousness on the St. Laurent front is their incessant sending up of star shells at night to light up the trench area and replacing of heavy artillery and machine gun barrage in front of our trenches. The whole proceeding is an excellent example of locking the stable door when the horse is stolen. Sunshine and splendid visibility to-day led the enemy artillery to shell the arc far behind the battle front. Civilians usually are the chief sufferers. There were only two victims, two small school children, and the chief result of a day home for several hundred youngsters who were dismissed from school when the shells began to fall. The fortitude of these French children is an unflinching source of wonder to all who have seen them under shell fire. In one of the mining villages near the front which has been subjected to frequent bombardments at intervals for over two and a half years the people have clung to their own. I have passed through the villages several times when shelling was in progress and while grown-ups were walking warily to shelter in vaulted cellars, I never failed to see children playing in the street or near them. Not once have I seen children terrorized by shell fire. They are excited by it, but probably fear it less than they would being left alone in dark rooms. The operations in the north end which are so often recorded in the German wireless have proceeded with little interruption, though suspensions have been called by frequent torrential rain storms. It may be still news to Canadian readers that during some five weeks before the end of August on the Flanders battle front the enemy placed in line from time to time about thirty-five divisions of which about three-quarters had been withdrawn exhausted, the remainder holding the enemy front at the end of that period. During the battle of the Somme last year German divisions were not withdrawn as exhausted until they had a good deal over 4,000 casualties. Enemy divisions have been reduced in establishment since the Somme, their battalion strength now being considerably lower. Having regard to this reduction, it is now probable that German divisions are withdrawn as exhausted when their casualties are less than 4,000. Applying these considerations to the situation on the Flanders front it would appear probable that since about July 25th the enemy has sustained casualties approaching 100,000 in Flanders alone. Here in Artois his losses can hardly have been less than 80,000 men during the same period. German man-power cannot indefinitely make good losses of such magnitude.

intense east of Gorizia and on the Carso Plateau. In Brestovizza Valley after a very bitter struggle, we succeeded in advancing still more to the east and captured some prisoners. A violent counter attack by the enemy was broken up by our fire. The number of prisoners captured Saturday and Sunday on the Julian front was eight officers and 339 men. In recapturing an advanced position in Sabruva valley, as reported yesterday, our Alpinist captured a gun and three machine guns.

GERMAN DIVISIONS WITHDRAWN.

LONDON, Sept. 3. (Via Reuter's Ottawa Agency)—Telegraphing to-day from the French army headquarters, Reuter's correspondent says that since the beginning of the new battle of Verdun, ten German divisions have been withdrawn on account of losses. The enemy has now seven divisions in line on both banks of the Meuse. Therefore seventeen German divisions are in process of exhaustion by the operations begun on August 20. Since the beginning of August the enemy has been obliged to withdraw 30 divisions facing the Franco-British army in Belgium. The enemy had altogether 42 divisions in the Flanders battle. Therefore in a single month the Allies have put 40 German divisions out of action and at present 19 others are being reduced by the same methods to the same condition.

AN EVERY-DAY OCCURRENCE.

LONDON, Sept. 3. German airplanes visited the south east coast of England late Monday night and dropped bombs at various places, according to a special statement issued shortly after midnight. No report of casualties or damage has been received up to the present time. The official statement follows: Enemy airplanes crossed the southeast coast at 11 o'clock last night and dropped bombs at various places. No reports of casualties or damage have yet been received. A number of our airplanes pursued the enemy.

SAYS GERMAN ATTACK REPULSED.

LONDON, Sept. 3. Early last night, says to-day's official statement on the Franco-Belgian front operations, the enemy made his third attempt to capture our advanced posts southward of Havrincourt. His attack which was preceded by a heavy bombardment was repulsed. We carried out a successful raid yesterday evening southeast of Monchy-le-Freux. Our troops took the enemy completely by surprise and after destroying his dugouts and machine guns, returned with 18 prisoners.

KILLED AND INJURED BY RAID.

LONDON, Sept. 3. One was killed and six injured in a raid over Kent. The attack was made by a single airplane. The machine was wrecked over Dover.

THE QUESTION OF PEACE.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 3. According to a most reliable authority, the next session of the German Reichstag will be devoted exclusively to the question of peace. The majority has decided to challenge a statement of the Government regarding its minimum peace program, and it is said the Government will yield with a view to peace negotiations before Christmas. The German Government, according to this authority, favors plenipotentiaries meeting either at the Hague, Berlin or Copenhagen, but preferably the Hague.

ARTILLERY DUEL.

BERLIN, Sept. 3. Despite stormy weather, the intense artillery duel has been continued on the Flanders front, says to-day's army headquarters statement regarding the western war theatre operations. Inroads were made, it stated, on the ground recently gained by the French in Hurbelise region on the Alsace front.

CONFERENCE POSTPONED.

LONDON, Sept. 3. The International Socialist Conference, which was to be convened at Stockholm on Sept. 9th, has been postponed.

FRENCH FIGHTING.

On the French Front in France, Sunday, by Associated Press.—All day to-day the Germans tried vainly to dislodge the French from positions in Hurbelise captured Friday night, but their incessant efforts resulted only in increasing their already heavy casualties. The French, who displayed much dash in their successful attack on this strong point, proved themselves equally masters of its defence. They submitted to a most vigorous bombardment while consolidating their gains, and remain unshaken in morale by the thousands of shells which are continuing to-night to fall on the conquered terrain. During the operation two hundred Germans were captured, including seven officers; eight machine guns also were taken. The prisoners declared the French artillery preparation reduced the effectiveness of the German companies holding the front lines to forty men each. The French now occupy the northern edge of Hurbelise plateau and hold all the observation points. The French infantry engaged in the victorious attack, advanced with irresistible dash, and the airmen particularly distinguished themselves in this operation, descending low enough to fight German infantry with machine guns, also wiping out all the gunners of one of the German batteries.

REORGANIZING FRENCH CABINET.

PARIS, Sept. 3. Reorganization of the French Cabinet is foreseen in consequence of the retirement of Minister of the Interior, Malvy.

TRADE UNION CONGRESS.

BLACKPOOL, Eng., Sept. 3. The Trade Union Congress was opened to-day with a record attendance of 700 delegates. John Hill, of the Polhemakers' and Shipbuilders' Union, who presided, said in his opening address, that something more than resolutions were required to obtain reforms, and that "workout methods of going step in hand" to Ministers should be buried with the battle axes and bows and arrows of the England of the Plantagenets. Congress received a report of the Parliament Committee regarding the Stockholm Conference. The Committee came to the conclusion that the Conference at Stockholm at the present moment could not be successful, and recommended that an attempt should be made to secure general condition of a successful international conference.

THE POPE AND THE PRESIDENT.

PARIS, Sept. 3. "You ask for the opinion concerning the utterances of Pope Benedict and President Wilson," said Baron Denys Cochin, one of the leaders of the Catholic Party in France's Parliament, to the Associated Press to-day. "It is certain those of the Pope," he continued, "have rather the character of a protocol, while those of the President are encyclical, but I do not see why we should oppose them to each other. Did the Pope speak in vain? No, because his voice has been listened to. Did he speak inopportunist? No, the highest moral authority of the world was obliged to speak. Did he speak with partiality? No one has been able to pretend so. He desires first of all to put things back as they were before 1914, and regulate afterwards the questions raised on the Orient and in Western Europe in conformity with the wishes of the people and in such manner as not to provoke new wars. He does not forget the horrors committed, inoffensive populations carried off into slavery and towns burned. He condemns these crimes. Who, then, committed them? He renders us full justice as to the honor of our armies. For the future he recommends to all—to those who attacked us as well as ourselves—that they disarm, and we shall soon see the Germans obliged to resign themselves to that. But in addition Wilson desires the end of the Hohenzollern dynasty which instituted this regime. He makes war less upon the German nation than upon its guilty head; he uses about the same language as that used by the Allies against Napoleon in 1815 after his return from Elba. The President is more happy when he declares the present Germany to be the enemy of four-fifths of the human race. She is their enemy because she wanted to oppress them. Let that people, says the President in high and generous sentiment, resign itself to the acceptance of a regime of equality, and no longer seek to dominate all other nations as it is trying to do to-day. Such is the primordial basis of every peace project. There is none other than that, and the desires of the Pope are the same as those of the President. Such is the peace we shall have the peace we owe to the heroes of the French Provinces of Lorraine and Alsace will be the only acceptable pledge."

Petrograd and Moscow.

Riga has fallen, the defenders are in full retreat, many of them and of the army that held the line to the south are in imminent danger of capture. To such a pass has "democracy" brought the hapless Russians. Yet by many sensible observers among the Allies this latest and superficially worst disaster will be positively welcomed. They see in an advance in strength by the Germans far into Russian territory, laying waste, burning and pillaging as it goes, the only effective means of bringing the Russians out of their trance into their sober senses. The first effect of the transference of Riga to enemy possession is expected to be the substitution of Moscow for Petrograd as the seat of Russian government, a consummation in every way devoutly to be wished. It will almost certainly be made if the Germans continue to advance upon Petrograd, even though three hundred miles of forbidding territory have to be covered first. The New York Times said recently, "This step should have been taken voluntarily long ago, and probably the only reason it was not taken was that the Government feared it would precipitate riots. Petrograd is the brain and heart of anarchy and treason. The embarrassment of the Government and the demoralization of the troops were wrought from Petrograd. Russia is not an industrial but an agricultural state, the heart of which is sound; of a country unable to pull itself together all the elements of sedition, treachery and folly congregate in Petrograd and poison the streams of the nation's life." It goes on to show that the transference would probably have been made long since but for the Government's fear of outbreaks in Petrograd by the disturbing elements, which would now have no ground for demonstrations when the change is made under compulsion of the enemy. In the change, therefore, from Petrograd to Moscow Russia stands to gain greatly in internal order and stability, but she should profit more from the necessity that dictates it. The sound of the approaching cannon will cause the most fervid of the orators with which the revolution has filled Russia to break off in the midst of their declamations. The most foolish of them will realize the irony of discussing liberty and equality with the Germans threatening to take both under the kindly custodianship which the world knows so well. As the paper we have quoted says, "With German armies advancing into the heart of the nation, every Russian, however howled, he might be by false lights, would be face to face with the question, 'Shall we substitute the Kaiser for the Czar?' The most obtuse intellect in all Russia would see that if its possessor did not fight he would have to give up his revolution and return to the rule of a monarch. What happens when all Russia gets that idea in its head was demonstrated once for all in the case of Napoleon." Of which the only qualification that occurs to us is the difference between the advance of Napoleon with a single army along a single narrow route and the simultaneous advance of huge armies along a front of thousands of miles, capable of encircling and annihilating the greater part of the Russian army in its present state of helplessness and indiscipline. To which again the answer is that Germany and Austria have not between them half the man sufficient to realize such an ambition. They have, in fact, sufficient power to hammer the Russians into a united people, capable first of withstanding them; before they have progressed far and then of rebounding like a spring at the first weakening of the pressure. Regarded from these points of view, what is happening and has the appearance of a disaster may easily prove a blessing in disguise, the rehabilitation from without of a country unable to pull itself together from within.

New Appointments.

We understand that the following appointments have been decided upon by the Government: Mr. F. J. Morris, K.C., to be Judge of the Central District Court; Mr. P. J. The above appointments agree with general expectations and the predictions made by the Telegram. The last is an innovation which seems most desirable, arising out of the wish of the Government to have all purchasing on Government account put on a separate official basis.

Vox Benedicti.

An old man by the Tiber sits, His soul with agony is torn: Blasted are the Kingdoms of the Earth And weak Humanity, gone mad, Rends itself to death. The white-haired Watcher by the Tiber mourns For his children are legion mid the slain.

The boundaries that mark the realm of Kings, The outpost post of far-flung Empires, Stay not his care: His subjects dwell 'Neath all the standards of the earth, And men of every race acclaim his Fathership. The tide of slaughter, with increasing wave, Sweeps o'er the plains, The homes of many peoples know destruction. Desolation is the portion of the mothers of men, War's gory maw is heavy with their sons; Who shall stay this hurricane of death? The warring-men of earth are blind with blood!

Suspicion stalks the halls of every Court, Princes distrust each prince,— The leaders disagree. Yea, on the Pontif, when he lifts his voice, Is viewed askance by panting men-at-arms.

But why should he dissemble? His Kingdom is secure? Ere this the thrones of mighty monarchs fell, Ere this Europe knew the throes of war That wrecked her temples and laid waste her plains.

Then, o'er the thunders of the storm, sweet lands, No voice, save Peter's voice, had strength To reach the souls of men. So too, from this, His See shall rise Emerging triumphant as of old.

He is the strong man of the earth! Each warring State holds out a crippled hand, Too proud to sue.

There needs must be an arbiter, And who is there in all the universe More fitting than the Prince, Whose subjects serve all flags, Whose has the Father's true solicitude for all!

Poor Pride, that seems so cheap in these tremendous days, Struts in each camp, Vaunting its power to out-war the foe, Scorning all means save victory by the sword!

But, as yet, the harvest yields but tragedy, And the Old Man by the Tiber waits,— His voice has gone forth to the wounded and the war-weary, Peace is the prayer of the world, Peace is the cry of the battle-broken, Peace is the expectant, yearned for Messiah of the hour! And behold the white-haired Watcher by the Tiber is there, The Vicar of his Prince.

Extract Oil From Shale

A Prisoner Gains His Pardon for Making a Discovery That Will be of Almost Incalculable Value.
 Carson City, Nev., August 28.—The discovery of a new process for extracting oil from shale, has won a pardon for a term in the state prison for burglary. Crane devoted his spare time to chemistry and recently announced that he had found a process by which oil could be extracted from shale at small cost. The warden of the prison called his process to the attention of the government, which sent an expert to investigate it. Crane was granted a pardon by the parole board yesterday. The federal expert informed the parole board that Crane's method of extracting oil from shale will be of almost incalculable value to the government.

Accident on Bonavista Railway.

Engine Crashes Through Burning Trestle—Freight Cars Derailed—Engineer and Fireman Scalded by Steam.

About 1 o'clock this morning the engine attached to the Bonavista train on the way to Clarendville crashed through a burning trestle at a point midway between Trinity Junction and Seal Cove (Princeton) with the result that two freight cars were derailed and Engineer W. Stone and Fireman Maidment slightly scalded.

At 10 o'clock last night the regular train, consisting of several freight, mail and two passenger cars in charge of Conductor Roywell, left Bonavista and after picking up passengers at the various stations, was proceeding towards Clarendville when at the point mentioned the big engine crashed through the burning structure to the bed of a small brook, a drop of fifteen feet.

The violent was the shock that the tending and two freight cars were thrown completely off the track while the passengers and train officials received the full force of the heavy jolt; but fortunately none were seriously injured. Such was not the good luck of the Engineer and fireman, who besides getting a bad shaking up were slightly scalded. Dr. Barlow, who was a passenger on the train, attended to the injured men after they had been rescued from their perilous position by the train hands and a number of passengers.

The injured men are now at Clarendville and will be brought to the city if necessary for medical and surgical treatment. How the fire which caused the destruction of the trestle originated is not known, but it is supposed to have been started by a live coal dropped from a passing engine, which would ignite the dry grass or shrubbery beneath the timber, thus kindling the fire that ultimately weakened the structure, so that when the heavy weight of the engine was upon it the weakened timber gave way. No further particulars were received up to press-hour. We understand an inquiry as to the cause of the accident will be held.

It will take three or four days to repair the damaged trestle and to clear away the wreckage, and as a consequence the mail and passenger service will be discontinued for the present.

THE RETREAT FROM RIGA.

LONDON, To-day.
 Riga, Russia's big port on the Gulf of Riga, is in the hands of the Germans, and its civilian population are retreating eastward. Following up the railway advantage they gained in driving the Russians across the Dvina River on both sides of Uxkul, on Saturday last, the Germans threw bridges across the stream and soon were on the heels of the former defenders, some of whom offered resistance, but others of whom showed the white feather, giving the invaders no trouble in marching up the eastern bank of the Dvina toward Riga, 15 miles distant. Seeing the disaffection and inability to stem the tide of advance, the Russian commander ordered an evacuation. With the falling back of the Russians from the city proper and the advance of the Germans northward along both sides of the stream, the Russian defenders on the western bank around Dahlen seemingly are in danger of being caught between two fast moving bodies of the enemy and made prisoners. Behind them the Russians in retreat from Riga are leaving the country in waste, burning villages and farms. Whether the city itself remains intact has not been made known, but doubtless the guns in the fortress and the ammunition stores either were moved or destroyed to prevent them falling into the hands of the Germans. Aside from its strategic value in controlling the Gulf of Riga and of a base nearer the mouth of the Gulf of Finland, at the head of which Petrograd is situated, for the moment it is impossible to see the importance of the Germans' gain, and especially with the near approach of winter, when military operations in this northern region are almost impossible. Where the Russians will draw their line in the north to connect with that below the point of penetration by the Germans remains to be seen. On none of the other fronts have there been operations of great moment, except in the Austro-Italian theatre, where the Italians have made further progress on the Bainsizza Plateau and Brestovizza Valley and at various points along the line. Advances to the Italian Embassy in Washington are to the effect that along the front of the present offensive the Austrians have lost more than 128,000 men. Reports from Udine, Italy, give the Austrian losses as one-third of the first line army.

BRITISH OFFICIAL.

LONDON, To-day.
 An official report from British Headquarters in France to-night reads: A hostile raiding party which attempted to approach our lines early this morning southwest of LaBasse was driven back by our fire before reaching our trenches. The enemy's artillery has shown considerable activity during the day north of Ypres. Last night our airplanes dropped over three tons of bombs on the enemy's airbases with good results. In the air fighting one German machine was brought down and one was driven down out of control. One of ours is missing.

THE RUSSIAN DEBACLE.

PETROGRAD, To-day.
 The German offensive on the Riga front began on Saturday by an attack on the Russian Uxkul position, following an artillery preparation which lasted several hours. The Russian troops defending the Dvina River withdrew and the Germans succeeded in throwing two bridges across Dvina and passing to the eastern bank. The Russian Infantry, in spite of a brilliant action of the artillery, which destroyed one of the enemy's bridges, could not stop the German thrust and the enemy, taking advantage of this, rapidly developed his success and began to advance northward. Russian counter attacks against him were unsuccessful.

Boy Thieves on the Rampage Again.

Four lads, who are well known in police circles and who have a fondness for being out all night doing mischief, were arrested at an early hour this morning for larceny. Shortly after last midnight they took a boat containing a quantity of tea, pork, sugar, milk, bread, onions and potatoes. The outfit was taken from Browning's Cove and belonged to some fishermen who were evidently getting ready to go to the fishing grounds. The delinquents were enjoying their moonlight excursion until caught by Judge Morris in the Dry Dock. They had divided the provisions amongst them and much of the stock had been consumed when the lads were captured. They were brought before Judge Morris in the Police Court to-day and acknowledged the theft. They were remanded in custody until the owners of the goods are located. One of the prisoners was bailed only a few days ago for similar conduct.

FINAL GAMES TO-MORROW.
 To-morrow afternoon will witness our local "World's Series" when a doubleheader will furnish the clashes between the B. I. S. and Wanderers and the Cubs and Red Lions. These will be the final games of the season, and the championship depends upon the outcome. All four clubs are in fine fettle, so that to-morrow's games will furnish the thrills of the year. The first game will be between the B. I. S. and Wanderers and will commence promptly at 2.30.

YOU SAID IT, BO!
 Here's September, and the Pennant race goes merrily, crazily, on apace. Two they trail, others are neck and neck. And I can't dope the winning Clubs, by heck! It may be the Lions; the Blue-White Hoop; The College Cubs may cop by a nose; Or the B. I. S. lads may win this strife if the Wanderers don't give them the knife.

After to-morrow's doubleheader, that good old Turk—ALL BI—will nail on his winter underwear and spend the rest of the season the guest of three of the Clubs.

 Mr. P. J. The Gumption to Ask.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

A day or two ago a group of us were out walking and passed a garden in which there was a lovely yellow rosebush. "Aren't those roses wonderful?" said one of the group. "How I wish I could get a slip for my rose garden. I've always wanted a yellow rose."

"Why don't you go in and ask the woman if she will sell you a slip in the fall?" asked someone else.

Faint Heart Never Won A Rose Bush.
"Oh, I don't believe I will," said the first woman doubtfully. "She might not want to."

"Well, she couldn't any more than say so, could she?"

"No, but I don't know who she is and I shouldn't like to ask," and she turned regretfully away from the rose garden.

Once or twice on the way home she said again that she would have loved to have one of those yellow rose bushes.

And doubtless she could have had one just as well as not if she had had the courage to ask for it.

What Lots of Things We Might Have For the Asking.

I think many of us miss much we might have because we haven't the courage to ask.

My own past is strewn with "it might have been's." Just the other day I learned of a most painful one. Five years ago I fell in love with a dear little empty bungalow with an immense open fireplace. It stood all alone at the foot of a high cliff looking straight out to sea. None of the natives knew to whom it belonged, some man from the city, they said, hadn't been down for years, didn't seem to care much for it, probably there was something the matter with it.

My instinct was to pursue the matter further, find out who owned that bungalow, and if it could be bought at a reasonable price, but my own inertia plus the advice of even more inert friends dissuaded me, and I let the matter drop.

And They Tore Out That Fireplace!

A few weeks ago, by an odd coincidence, I met the man who had owned that bungalow, and he told me that he had been ready to sell at the time, and that it ultimately went for a small price because of the lonesome location. I so much admired. Worst of all, the people who bought it had ripped out that magnificent fireplace.

And to think I might have had it all if I had only had the gumption to ask for it!

Of course there are things that it would be cheeky to ask for. I do not counsel anyone to be rude or intrusive. But when you want a thing very much why not try to see if there isn't some way to get it without treading on anyone's toes?

SHORT HAND

Short hand is a form of sign writing which consists in taking down other people's remarks and then guessing them.

The short hand writer is one of the most valuable adjuncts of the business world, and when he is given plenty of time can make sense of almost anything that is thrown to him. It is a fascinating sight to see a nimble, hook-faced court reporter taking down the testimony of a witness with a machine gun delivery, only pausing now and then to seize a fresh lead pencil or ask how to spell some simple word. It requires more ability to become an expert short hand reporter than it does to be secretary of war, and yet a secretary of war draws nine times the salary with one-half the mental exertion. It is no wonder that so many court reporters resign and enter the legal profession, which pays better than the pop corn privilege at the White Sox park.

The demand for short hand writers has caused several thousands of earnest business colleges to spring up, which shed large hordes of ambitious stenographers every three months. These stenographers are then hired to sit in front of a mahogany desk and absorb the mental output of a business man who uses long, six-syllable words whether they fit or not. After a delicate, blonde stenographer has straightened out the grammar, spelling, rhyme and reason of a bunch of letters dictated by an employer who has a surplus of words and a deficit of thought, she will be too tired to tackle the roller skating rink or anything else except a hair mattress.

The ancient Egyptians were the first people to use short hand with any success, but they used a plain marble slab in place of the ruled note book. Short hand is a poor substitute for round hand, in making love by mail, the best medium being the typewriter with stuttering type bars.

Milady's Boudoir

WATER AS A REST.

Many of us tired to the bone, and feeling as if life itself is an effort wearily drag ourselves through the process of dressing for just one more social duty before our weary body can indulge in the sleep it craves.

But there is a way to rest up quickly, should one care to make a little effort, and the result is marvelous.

Pin a towel around your head, turban fashion, to protect your marcelled tresses, and another around your neck to protect your fingers from the moisture. Then turn on the cold water and hot water faucets. When the water is quite hot and the other stream very cold, dip two folded towels into the hot, wring them out and hold them to your face for a second. Now take two more towels and do the same with the cold water.

Alternate the two extremes this way until you begin to feel the effects of finishing with the cold towels.

Then if you give yourself a hasty massage with some good cold cream, you will be surprised when you glance again into the mirror.

All the tiny nerve lines will have disappeared, your skin is considerably refreshed, and you have a faint, alluring tinge of color, your headache has gone, and you now have a renewed force to urge you on for the impending social of the evening.

Most fashionable blouses have very high collars and jabots.

White fur girdles the waist of a frock of blue crepe de chine.

There are lovely little afternoon slippers of pale or gray leather. Hats of white muslin may be edged with a dainty scallop in color.

Georgette crepe makes the coolest dress for a hot afternoon.

Knife pleating edges the collar and cuffs of pretty blouses.

The Gas Range!

The Gas Range means comfort for the housewife; shorter kitchen hours for her, and a cleaner kitchen. It is a great mistake to think that cooking with gas is expensive.

Whenever a woman becomes used to gas for cooking, thoughts of a coal or wood stove fill her with gloom. A Gas range is so much easier to operate, so efficient for all kinds of cooking, and so much cleaner, that the idea of going back to the old style methods is decidedly unpleasant. Yet in winter many housewives think they must use a coal or wood stove, because there is no other way of heating the kitchen. THERE IS ANOTHER WAY AND IT IS FAR BETTER THAN THE OLD. THE CLOW GAS STEAM RADIATOR WAY. $29.45

Amazing Prediction

MADE THIRTY YEARS AGO.

Harold Frederic a generation ago was Berlin correspondent of the New York Times. On April 2, 1888, he sent across the Atlantic the following picture of the Crown Prince, when Europe was awaiting the death of Kaiser Frederick William:—

"This young man suggests, a perfectly-bred sleuth-bound, under whose smooth, delicately-soft coat lie the muscles of steel, and in whose mouth—sinister legacy of nature—is the inherent taste of human blood."

"He is saturated with all the instincts and ideals which have raised his parvenu Prussia to its present eminence, and his character is the crown and flower of two centuries of might and ruthlessness and spoliation exalted into a creed."

"He avowedly hates England as the country whence has come all the constitutional nonsense which nowadays limits and hampers kingship."

"Some future Taine will write to show that William II. of Prussia and the German Empire was a mysterious belated survival of the ante-medieval Goths and Vandals—an Attila born a thousand or more years after his time. The young man is practically all German in blood, the culmination of the Hohenzollern type."

A grimmer prediction has rarely been more accurately fulfilled.

And you'll not find it far. Along the path of Willing Feet.

And over Heartless Hill. Across the field of Sweet Content.

A word of cheer, a helping hand. Some good to give or share.

A bit of song, a high resolve. A hope, a smile, a prayer.

And in the place of Duty Done. Beside the Door of Home.

You'll find the House of Happiness. For Happiness does not roam.

Patriotic Football.

Though the weather looked threatening and there was an occasional shower of rain, the usual gathering of spectators attended last evening's football match between the St. Andrew's and B. I. S. The latter won by three goals to nil. Their opponents did not have a full crew on deck and what they did have comprised two substitutes. There was no scoring at all during the first period, partly due to the high wind that prevailed but mainly attributable to the bad judgment and poor shooting of the players. The game began too late as darkness set in long before it was over. Mr. W. J. Higgins refereed. This evening the C. E. I. and Star will play and the best exhibition for the season is expected. We would suggest that the match begin before 7 o'clock.

Chinaware plays an important part in every household. To-day, good china is very expensive to purchase owing to high freights and war risk insurance, apart from the increased cost of raw material. Cups and Saucers, Plates, etc., are continually being broken in every home, and they must be replaced—but why buy them? The Imperial Tobacco Co's Premium Store has on display in the Window some very attractive "Blue Bird" China and any quantity from one Cup and Saucer upwards can be obtained free of cost. A few tags or coupons and the chinaware is yours. Drop in the Premium Store when you are down town and let us tell you more about it.

Thoughts Upon the Times.

(By PATRIOT.)

The subject matter of Mr. Strong's letter in the Trade Review on Saturday may be considered by some as far-fetched and visionary, but when compared with projects of the kind on the Continent of America, it is really within the bounds of possibility. I believe it was that great French orator and statesman Mirabeau, who called the world impossible that "blockhead word." We are inclined to place too much reliance on our fisheries and too little upon our agricultural possibilities. The Newfoundland, who has travelled in the States and Canada, is often struck with the thinly scattered population in Newfoundland. Here and there the people are scattered about in the small harbors and coves, or on promontories or barren rocks nearest the fishing grounds. The cultivation of the soil seems to have been very remote from the minds of our ancestors. Nevertheless we have a country great with agricultural possibilities. Instead of having only a population of a quarter of a million people, scattered about on the coast line, we should have at least ten millions.

There is room for a million people at least on that magnificent tract of country between Mortier Bay and Garnish. It has in Marystown one of the finest harbors in the world. This harbor is as large as that of New York and is practically open the whole year round. The soil too is magnificent and capable of growing large crops of wheat, oats and barley. There are several fine groves of witch-hazel and birch in this neighborhood, the timber so much desired just now for shipbuilding purposes. It is here also that the enterprising farmer, Mr. Frank Simms, has his farm.

These thoughts lead one to ask what steps, if any, the Government is taking to encourage emigrants to our shores after the war is over. The Canadian Government and the great Railway Companies of Canada (the C.P.R. and G.T.R.) have planned progressive policies to encourage emigration to the North West, and already the number of enquiries concerning land exceed all previous records. After the war is over and the dove of peace once more settles upon Europe, there will be millions anxious to escape from her blood-soaked soil where they have lost all that they possessed. They will make good law-abiding citizens. Why should we not expect some of them to make their homes among us? Simply because our country and its resources are unknown to them. Writing from Dundee, Scotland, one of "Ours" now in training there, writes home to his parents as follows: "The people around here have very queer ideas about Newfoundland. One old gentleman the other day asked us what Regiment we belonged to, and when we told him he asked if all the people in Newfoundland were as white as we were."

If the world knew that our climate and soil were equal to that of the North West of Canada, and that the riches of our fisheries surpass in wonder the tales of the Arabian Nights, we would also have people enquiring about land with a view of permanently settling here.

What we require is a Government whose leaders are statesmen, men who can rise above the petty parish politics about which we hear so much, men who are broad-minded enough to grapple with the great Imperial questions confronting them. No era in our history ever offered greater opportunities for producing great men than the present. England has her Lloyd George, Russia her Kerensky, France her Joffre, Canada her Borden. Whom have we?

There is no safer or more satisfactory medicine as regards effects, as a purgative for children especially where undigested food has become lodged in the stomach and bowels and is causing trouble, than Castor Oil. Unfortunately, the taste of Castor Oil as ordinarily used is very unpalatable to children, and is often nauseating. For this reason mothers are often chary of inflicting the unpleasant dose upon the little ones. But now all trouble of this kind can be avoided by the use of our Palatable Sweet Castor Oil, which is simply the purest Castor Oil flavored and sweetened so that it can be taken by children without the least trouble, and with the best effect. Price 50c. a bottle.

Infantile Paralysis at Bonavista.

Dr. Brehm has been apprised by Magistrate Roper that there is an outbreak of infantile paralysis there and that there are two patients down with the disease. It has also been learned that the death occurred in the northern settlement recently supposed to be from this same malady, although the victim had not been attended by a doctor and the exact cause of death cannot be determined now. A strong effort is being made to stamp out the disease at Bonavista. This time last year infantile paralysis was causing much concern at Grand Falls.

Steam Roller in Dangerous position.

What might have been the biggest smash-up for many years, with the possible loss of one or more lives, was narrowly averted shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon when one of the big city steam rollers skidded on Duckworth Street, and dashed into the iron railing that surmounts the retaining wall on McBride's Hill. At the time of the accident the driver was steering the lumbering piece of machinery eastward, levelling off the street in front of the T. A. Hall, and while running close to the drain in front which skidded and turned sharply to the right and in an instant crashed into the iron railing. Had the box at the rear of the roller not caught in the cobble stone drain, thus preventing the hind wheels from working, the big machine would have toppled over the retaining wall, a distance of twenty feet with the probable death of the driver and several pedestrians who were passing at that time. The machine, however, was not damaged and a gang of men under engineer Doherty had it back on the street after a few hours of hard work. Councilors Mullaly, Tait and Secretary John L. Slatery visited the scene as did also a large number of citizens.
