A VISIT TO THE SANATORIUM . A SKETCH IN NT. JOHN. I Having recently felt slightly indisposed we thought we would pass by our family physician for once, and try one of the new lights in medicine, whose flaming advertisements attract us. We re- paired to the learned doctor's abode, and depositing one dollar, lawful money of the Dominion, and entered the sanctum. Instantly our cars were as- sailed with a stentorian ery of "Hold your tongue, —don't say a word." Rather startled at the greet- ing we looked around and discovered a genitemanly looking man, seated comfortably in a capacious. arm-chair and enjoying the fragrance of a mild Havana. Standing near him was a man, elabor- atelygot up, and bearing on his countenance the look that you would naturally expect to find in the attendant and factorum of a great man. Hardly had we taken in these details when the possessor of the eigar again howled forth, "Cerebro-spinal-men- ingits. John, give him fifteen drops of the elixir." We took the dose and departed, feeling convinced that we had speit one dollar foolishly, but com- forted with the mowledge that scores are daily	 among them-were laying bets as to whether it really was Madame Jastram. One insolent Freechman pushed his way so close to her chair, that his coat sleeve fairly brushed her dress, but he felt no inclination to keep his stand after a gesture from Wargrave had warned him that, whoever the lady might be, she was some person whom that gentleman did not intend to have annoyed. The son of Gaul tried to hold his own for an instant, but his eyes speedily fell under the menacing glance which met his; he knew Wargrave too well by reputation to desire any disagreement, and slunk away. Prosser and Prosser's companions were drawing closer to the table, not meaning to be impertinent, but anxious to decide their wager. In their excitement they spoke more loudly among themselves than they were aware. Several of the players looked round in an anjoyed way, and - a warning hush was uttered by the nearest usher. Wargrave stepped back a few paces from the table, and, with a pleasant smile of greeting, laid his hand on the shoulder of a young man who had been the loudest among the speakers and had mentioned Madelaine Jastram's name. Prosser and Prosser's companions were drawing closer to the table, not meaning to be imperiment, but auxions to decide their wager. In their excliment they spoke more loudly among themselves than they were aware. Several of the players looked round in an annoyed way, and a warning hash and on the shoulder of a young man who had been the loudest among the speakers and had mentioned Madelaine Jastram's name. "You are in a denice of a hurry," returned the yout for a young man who had been the loudest among the speakers and had mentioned Madelaine Jastram's returned Wargrave, "I want to pay you my share of yesterday's expedition." "You are in a denice of a hurry," returned the youthful Englishman, who aspired to the doubtful reputation of being "fast," and was therefore flattered by Wargrave's friendly notice. FOR THE WATCHMA A HUNDRED YEARS AGO A hundred years ago the birds Werksinging as they sing now, The fields these flexed with flocks, the flew Were springing as they spring now; Men toiled as men are toiling now, And moited as men are moiling now, And noped as men are proping now, And dice as men are dying.

And dice as men are dying. One lived for love and one for gold, And dreams of fame beguiled one; One dwelt in flattery's tinselled court, Another, a reviled one. The moon looked down the tale to hear. That still deceives the malden's ear, And Slander spun her slimy thread, And palsied many a heart and heid That scorned to be denying.

A hundred years ago: The graves That mourners wet with weeping. Are lost; the mourners with their dead, All sorrow past, are sleeping: Are sleeping, as we soon shall sleep. No more to laugh, no more to weep, No more to hope, no more to fear, No more to ask why we are her With weariness and sighing.

e edition). Fun sitting on the stile, Mary, Where we eat side by side, On a bright May morning long ago, When first you were my bride; The corn was springing fresh and green. And the lark sang loud and high; And the love-light in your cye. The place is little changed. Mary, The day is bright as then; The lark's loud song is in my ear, And the corn is green again; But I miss the soft clasp of your hand, And your breath, warm, ou my check; And I still keep listening for the words You nevermore will speak. Tis but a step down yonder lane, And the little church stands near, The church where we were wed, Mary ; I see the spire from here. But the graveyard lies between, Mary, And my step might break your rest : For I've laid you, darling, down asleep, With your baby on your breast.

I'm very lonely now, Mary, For the poor make no new friends But O, they love the better still The few our Father sends! And you were all I had, Mary, My blessing and my pride; There's nothing left to care for now, Since my poor Mary died. Yours was the good, brave heart, Mary That still kept hoping on, When the trust in God had left my soul, And my arm's young strength was gond There was comfort ever on your lip, And the kind look on your brow ; I bleas you, Mary, for that same, Though you cannot hear me now.

I bless you for the pleasant word When your heart was sad and sore; O, I'm thankful you are gone, Mary, Where grief can't reach you more ! I'm bidding you a long farewell, My Mary, kind and true ; My dary, kind and true; But Fil not forget you, darling, In the land I'm going to. They say there's bread and work for all, And the sun shines always there; But I'll not forget old Ireland, Were it fifty times as fair! And often in the grand old woods I'll sit, and shut my eyes, And my heart will travel back again

To the place where Mary lies ; and I'll think I see the little stile Where we sat side by side, And the springing corn, and the bri When first you were my bride.
