CHAPTER XXIX

THE cabman drove Fleming to the

ed him with pretended friendliness, him. She had given film drink, had played the part of a traitress, so that she might pump him and learn all she could about Chalfonte, especially his whereabouts. He rose and searched his pockets and discovered that the wages paper had been abstracted: she must have taken it when he had been overcome by the draughts of raw and chean brandy. He sat on the edge of the miserable bed, shaking from head to foot and holding his burning head in his hands; and his heart burned rage and jealousy more flercely than his head; at that moment he hated the woman he had loved, with a hatred which consumed him body and soul. He was convinced that, having obtained the knowledge of Chalfonte's whereabouts. Maud would go to him at once; and Fleming was possessed of an insensate desire to follow her, confront her and Jack Chalfonte, and, somehow or other, to exact vengeance from both for her treachery.

The man was on the verge of delirium tremens, and the passion of his fury for a time threatened to drive him mad; but, after a while, he grew calmer, got his money from the keeper of the lodging-house, paid his scot, and staggered to the nearest publichouse for a drink; then he started to fulfil his purpose. As he left the lodging-house a man, who looked like a clerk out of work, or a commercial traveller who had seen better days, who had been lounging against a lamp post, followed Stephen at a respectful distance. The man was the detective employed by Mr. Horton; he had been come upon him by one of those accidents which are so useful to the de-

Stephen alighted and made straight for the little public house on the mainland, tossed down a drink, and then, followed by the detective, went to the boat.

Stephen was not attired as a navvy; he had turned up the collar of his jacket and drawn his felt hat well over his face, as if to protect it from the wind which was now blowing hard, and the boatman who took him

At that psychological moment the detective came up the beach, stared with amazement at the group above felled him promptly and ran down to the boat. The man who had brought the detective over had gone on to the hut for a drink, and Fleming jumped into the boat, cast it off, and picked

This was only the second time in which he had been in a boat; there was a heavy sea, and he found it difficult to manage the oars. Presently, as the waves lifted the boat on one side, one of the oars slipped from the pins and he lost it; he could see another boat putting off from the island, and he sprang with an oath and leant over the gunwale in an attempt to re bled and fell with all his weight, a wave caught the boat broadside, and overturned it instantly.

The excited watchers on the shore saw Fleming disappear. When he came up again the boat had blown some distance from him, and with horror they saw that the wretched man was making no attempt to reach it-that he could not swim. The man in the pursuing boat rowed with might and main; but, before he could reach the drowning man, Fleming had gone down again. Other boats had put off from the landing by this time, and were rowing down stream; for they knew the point to which the body would be washed; the navvies, who had stood in a group, ran in the same direction, and Jack and the two women were left standing alone. As yet they had not exchanged a word; white and trembling, Nora and Maud had watched Fleming's tragic end, and Jack, still panting with the struggle was essaying to stop the bleeding of a wound on his forehead. W. W. HALFYARD,

What Are We Doing

That is the important uestion to-day. Let each one of us answer the question for himself. These men went at the call of the King to defend our homes and preserve us from danger. everything is There was a great stir when peril seemed at hand. Posters were put up n conspicuous places, the newspapers dry, and all our needs are pressing. that did not answer the call was lookwere flooded with invitations, the man Perhaps your neighbour has a grouch, ed on askance, parties went round re-

but you should never share it; rise cruiting and much more beside. At whistling from your downy couch, last these methods of persuasion were and simply grin and bear it. The dropped and men were conscripted, er they lked it or not. The men went; many, alas! will not return. Some, however, have been rescued from the clare it—but don't repine and hand jaws of death and they are back with us. WHAT DO WE PROPOSE TO DO

FOR THEM? Surely we must endeavour to re store them to civil life just as earnestly and vigorously as we made soldiers of them. But this is not such an easy matter. Some have lost arms, others legs; some are injured in the back, others elsewhere; some have lost ther hearing, others their sight. Many have internal injuries and pretty well | all have suffered in the nervous system-that system which so intimately controls our whole make up. They have lived amid the romance of glamour and arms, amid perils and dangers, amid shricks and sights unholy. He may look all right but he isn't. And our brave veterans have a duty to perform likewise. They have met the dragon and fought him. They have now other dragons to overcome. The civilian life does not take their fancy now. They must fight the inclination to idle, the temptation to ease and pleasure, and resolve to be again among the best of our civilians. To employers they must be considerate and respond to the efforts they may make to help them along. Certain employers have made a real effort to employ as many of the returned men tice, leaving their employers in millions more lasts year than ever before the war because of the British Government regulation requiring "the use of vastly increased volume of water." The drinkers of Guinness are no less fortunate than the stockholders. Let the volume of water per barrel increase progressively and Britons will be cured of malt beverage drinking as once were all the male inhabitants in a young mining camp on the top of the Sierra Nevadas cured of whisky drinking. There was only one saloonkeeper, and he had only one barrel of whisky and no more to be purchased with gold dust. Every time he drew a glass of whisky he slyly poured into the barrel a glass of spring water artfully colored with brown sugar. When the bewildered miners were getting only a drop of firewater per drink, they clard that they "didn't seem

Methodist Missions

egate Tells of Work Accomplished and Plans for Coming Year.

By the express Wednesday, Mr. Artheur Mews, C.M.G., returned from Canada, where he had gone on business connected with the Methodist Church. Mr. Mews looked in at the General Conference, meeting in Here. eral Conference, meeting in Hamrelatives in Buffalo, that city belog then in the grip of the "flu," and hav-ing the added experience of a street car strike and a Liberty Loan camcar strike and a Liberty Loan campaign. At Toronto were held the sessions of the General Board of Missions, Rev. Dr. Saint and Mr. M.ws being the representatives from Newfoundland, with Rev. Dr. Fenwick attending as Superintendent of Missions. The Board consists of about dixty representatives, from Newfoundland in the East, stretching across Canada to British Columbia in the West. Appropriations, amounting to 1,000,000 (one million dollars), were considered and passed in respect of the work on the Home and Foreign Mission Fields. The amount of money is absolutely essential—it does not brovide for any additional missionaries or new developments, but simply makes prodevelopments, but simply makes provision for the maintenance of the work in hand. Last year the givings amounted to almost $800,000, of which Newfoundland contributed $24,000. Newfoundiand contributed $24,000. This year the standard has been set at $1,000,000, Newfoundiand's share being $30,000. Rev. C. E. Manning, M. A., is the General Secretary of Home Missions, in the place of the late Rev. James Allen, M.A., and Rev. Lloyd Smith, M.A., B.D., was elected Field Secretary in the recomb Secretary in the room of Mr. Manning. Rev. Dr. Endicott continues as General Secretary of the Foreign work. The sessions of the Board were most in-spiring. Bishop Hiaraiwa, of the Japanese Methodist Church, was pres-ent, and his counsels of advice were of the greatest value to the Foreign Committee. Revs. McKenzie, Stewart, Service and other missionaries from China, attended the sessions, and they all wished to be remembered to Rev. Dr. Bond, pastor of Cochrane Street Centennial Church, who visited them in China some years ago. In comman with other Churches, the Mathodist Church is getting ready to embark on a programme of missionary endeavour that will eclipse all former efforts—a programme which is necessary if the Church is to take her place and do her part in making democracy safe for the world. To celebrate the centennial of missions in 1924, it is proposed to raise $8,000,000, and arrangements for this will be made in a year's time. when the programme will be definitely

Arrangements for the meeting of the Supernumerary Committee at St. John, or at Sackville, fell through because of the "flu" and the board of health regulations. Eventually it was fixed for Saturday, 2nd Nov., at Amherst. Twelve months ago this Committee had commenced negotiations looking to an amalgamation of the two pension schemes of the Church. The reservitions had been successful and the General Conference in confirmed the work and gave the an-algamation legal form. Under this, all ministerial claimants in Newfoundin their allowances, and ministers' widows will receive 100 per cent. in-crease. This is to come into effect at once, and the Supernumerary Committee had to take up the matter and make the necessary arrangements. The General Conference orderd the raising of a capital sum of $1,500,000 for this Pension Fund, but, until this amount is raised, it is proposed that ministers and circuits shall contribute sufficiently to the current income to enable the increased payments to be made. This amalgamation and in-creased provision for the retired ministers is hailed with great satisfaction by the whole Church. The Administration of the Eastern section for this year will remain in the hands of the present Committee, and remittances are to be sent to Dr. J. H. Palmer, Sackville, as usual.

Too Much Fuss Over Germany.

The Boston "Shoe and Leather Reporter" says: "Entirely too much is being said and written about conditions in Germany after the war. This is not our problem except as we must defend ourselves from the frenzied efforts Germany will make to reconstruct her industries through the purchase of raw materials. In our own trade we are well aware that not less than three millions of cattle hides would be needed to fill the empty vats and restore the German tanning industry. The new and enormous demand for hides coming upon an already depleted market might develop panic conditions. It would seem plausible that in other trades as well as ours the period immediately following the war will be surrounded with dangers and difficulties which can only be survived through inter-Allied control. We must consider the rehabilitation of ourselves and our Allies. If our enemies were to win the war our inetrests would not receive consideration, hence it is difficult to understand why apprehension of their fate should take precedence of sensible plans for our own recuperation. Indeed it should be evident to all that the Teutonic menace to the peace of the world will not be removed until the inexorable logic of events has demonstrated to the German mind that the State policy which led up to the war has induced poverty instead of prosperity, com-mercial isolation instead of world domination. The great conflict will have been in vain if Germany is permitted to escape the natural consequences of her acts."
