no reference to voluntary guidelines, the approach that is central to the economic policies advocated by the present Conservative leader. It asserts that the Progressive Conservative party opposes the introduction of a system of universal compulsory wage and price controls "at this time" and I emphasize the words "at this time". The paper says, and I quote:

> To date, there has been no strong evidence that such a policy, and the unprecedented intrusion of government into the private sector which it would involve, would be beneficial to the Canadian people...however, if circumstances warranted such action, a Progressive Conservative government would be prepared to consider the application of some wage and price controls on a selective basis.

In the past, spokesmen for the Conservative party have been vocal in their opposition to the selective measures adopted by the government to provide a general stimulus to the economy through the provision of special assistance for regions and industries that have been most adversely affected by slow growth. Their position is in sharp contrast to the approach proposed in the same Conservative policy paper to which I referred earlier. The paper insists that "regionally sensitive policies must be a key ingredient in a national strategy for economic growth." Later the paper adds:

• (3:50 p.m.)

> The Progressive Conservative party believes that Canada consists of several different economic regions, with in some cases fundamentally different economic conditions and requirements and that government fiscal and monetary policies should take account of these differences.

It is these kinds of contradictions which make it very difficult to determine just what the Conservative party believes about almost any given issue.

I have already informed the House, Mr. Speaker, that it is my intention to introduce a new budget some time in the next month. As I indicated in my remarks earlier today, most of the evidence available to date indicates that over the past six months the economy has been moving forward at an accelerating rate. We are, however, closely monitoring the course of economic developments and, as in the past, remain fully prepared to adopt further new measures if they appear necessary to ensure that the pace of economic growth is maintained on a sound and healthy basis in the months ahead.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) wishes to ask the minister a question. I should bring to the attention of hon. members that we should try to stay within the time allotted. If the Minister of Finance will permit the question, he still has a few minutes left.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the minister referred in his speech to the Toronto-Dominion Bank and to the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada. The minister was suggesting that the economy was improving. I am sure the minister would not want to mislead the House. Is it not true that in the statement to which he referred, Mr. Douglas Peters said that unemployment in 1971 would continue to be high? Is it not true also that Dr. Arthur Smith, Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, said that high unemployment levels would not be substantially reduced within the next three or four years?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate that unemployment is high in Canada at present. It will take some time to overcome the relatively high unemployment in this country. The policies of the government are indeed aimed at bringing it down over a period of time without causing, on the other side, as a result of undue expansion in the economy and as a result of fiscal and monetary measures, another round of inflation which will take money out of everybody's pay cheques.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much the conditions which make it necessary for me to take part in this debate. I welcome the opportunity to take part in it because it gives me a chance to appeal once again to the government and, in particular, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). I ask him to abandon his sterile attitude and empty words and to do something more effective to get the economy moving ahead again at a satisfactory pace. I realize that that is not an easy task, especially when you consider the downhill path on which this government has taken the Canadian economy for the past couple of years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: That is all the more reason for this government to now rid itself of this complacency. In all fairness to the minister, and I say this without being unfair to him, complacency is what he exuded this afternoon. Let the government finally start to do something to encourage the economy instead of continuing its policy of simply coasting along.

Some alarming figures have come to light, Mr. Speaker. One month ago, in the middle of April, there were about 348,000 Canadians who had been out of work for over four months. Over 50 per cent of Canadians who were out of work at that time had been out of work for more than four months. What is being done about this? How many of these people are receiving unemployment insurance? We may know something tomorrow as a result of the statement promised by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey). In any event, this is a soul destroying process that has been going on for those 348,000 Canadians who have been out of work for over four months. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) now recognizes, if I understood him correctly on television, that it is a lot easier to slow an economy down than to start it up. That was known to quite a number of people a long time ago. Certainly, it takes time for government policies to take effect, and particularly to have a stimulating effect. I should like to know what the government proposes to do about those 348,000 Canadians who have been out of work for more than four months. Will it let them rot?

Federal manpower officials in the province of Ontario, the province in which there was the sharpest rise in unemployment between March and April, said that they had an explanation for this rise. They described the rise as a sort of freak caused by the severity of the winter and the lateness of the spring. They talked about the St. Lawrence Seaway and so on. Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures which have come out indicate that in April, 1971, as compared with April, 1970, the number of those who were out of work this year because of bad weather is not higher than last year. Of course, the figure is considerably below the one for March, as one might expect. Let us not have these phony explanations which are often given by officials as a result of the advice of their superiors. Let us come to grips with the real problem.

Just who are those people who have been out of work for more than four months? In the course of the past year there has been a dramatic increase in unemployment among youth. That is dramatic and alarming. In April, according to DBS figures, the number of young Canadians under the age of 25 who were out of work represented 13.6 per cent of the work force. More than one Canadian in eight who was out of work was under the age of 25.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: The figure, seasonally adjusted, was 12.3 per cent. That still represents almost one in eight. Of course, students at that time had not come out of school.

Mr. Pepin: Could the hon. member give me the comparable figures for this group since 1960?

Mr. Stanfield: I can go as far back as the minister likes. I always thought he liked to look ahead. Of course, when it suits his convenience, he likes to look back. He might be happier talking about the 1930's, I don't know. We like to talk about the present and the future.

Mr. Nowlan: The present is what we are worried about.

Mr. Stanfield: We want to know what is to happen to these people who have been out of work for more than four months. I am referring to our young Canadians. Are they to go on welfare in increasing numbers, thereby adding to the problems of the provinces and, of course, to the problems of provincial and municipal taxpayers?

The minister quite properly talked about inflation and the problems of inflation. Inflation is a problem. I ask the minister, in view of what he said this afternoon, whether he still believes that it is appropriate to fight inflation in Canada by creating or even by maintaining massive unemployment? He suggested I have been saying that one can fight inflation simply through using voluntary guidelines. Nothing could be further from the truth. I have emphasized ever since coming to the House that, certainly, one must implement appropriate fiscal and monetary policies. I suggested, long before the government did, that it ought to resort to voluntary guidelines as a method of supplementing monetary and fiscal policies. If they had had the courage and foresight to try the course at the time I was suggesting it instead of waiting for the peak of inflation before trying it, that action might have been more helpful than it was. Let us not have these gross misrepresentations on the part of the minister. It is bad enough when he oversimplifies his own attitude with respect to the economy; let him not oversimplify the attitude of his critics.

The government made a big mistake, as it now seems to have recognized, in slowing down the economy so much. Clearly, when it had gone too far, and it must have been clear even to the minister and to the government that it had gone too far, it made a further bad mistake in not applying quickly stronger stimulants to get the economy going. The Prime Minister now recognizes that it is far easier to slow the economy down than to get it started up again. The stimulus that could have been used, Mr. Speaker, need not have been a continuing stimulus. One need not do something in 1971 and continue it through 1972 if it is no longer appropriate.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The minister talks about forecasting growth and employment. I have not seen any forecast of economic growth for this coming year, other than by this government, which indicates a substantial reduction in unemployment. On some days the minister says that a tax reduction of the sort I suggest would be inflationary. On other days he says it would not necessarily be inflationary under present conditions. The minister moves around like a wheel. One day it is inflationary, the next day it is not. If the minister wants to talk about something being inflationary, I am sure that from time to time he must have in mind the increase in the supply of money in this country by the Bank of Canada, something which may be much more difficult to adjust if the inflationary pressures grow than the kind of remedy I have been suggesting.

The minister described the economy today as burgeoning. I think that is the word he used. I think that I have described it fairly as being hesitant. After the April figures, I do not see how anybody can honestly describe it more favourably than as being hesitant. I urge the minister to bear in mind that the economy is not a machine. It is not something that automatically responds by simply having more money fed into it. People respond to certain stimuli and incentives. Despite his speech here this afternoon, I hope that the minister will consider these when he prepares his budget. I hope that he will bear in mind the importance of some method to remove the hesitancy from the economy, the need to get it started moving forward in terms of employment and, preferably, a flexible method of the sort I have been suggesting which lends itself to adjustment as the factors of the economy change.

The minister kept saying that he hoped he would learn something new and sensational this afternoon. I do not pretend to propose anything other than what I have said here before. I again beg the minister to open his mind and realize the importance of moving employment forward. Instead of looking for something new or sensational, I ask the minister to listen to the sensible suggestions that are being made to him.

I must disagree with the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) to some extent. At the present time, I do not think that the emphasis should be on increased expenditures, although there may very well be particular cases that have to be met such as, for example, members of Parliament. Seriously, there may well be others. The important stimulus needed by the economy now, in terms of psychology and from every aspect, is a considered reduction in taxes.

I spoke of the minister's complacency and arrogance in the sense that complacency soon moves into arrogance. As far as this government is concerned, I do not think there is any more apparent area where complacency and arrogance prevails than in the field of regional development. I intend now to talk about this. In saying that, I certainly do not want to take anything away from the general economic policies of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in terms of complacency or take him off the hook in that regard in any way. The complacent policies of the Minister of Finance have certainly been shown to be ineffective. We on this side have already had a good deal to say about that. I assure the minister that unless he is prepared to make a substantial move in the direction of common sense and a substantial move in the direction of inspiring the economy with some degree of confidence, he will certainly be hearing a great deal more. Unfortunately, the Minister of Finance is not the only member of the cabinet who can be accused of arrogance and drifting. He is, at most, first among equals with regard to complacency and arrogance. I must say that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), as he is called, seconds him very well in the area of complacency.

We have heard a lot about the elimination of regional disparity. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), based on the figures on which he works in connection with the adjustment of dock yard wages, must be very well aware that economic disparity between the east and west coasts has increased since 1968. I want to be fair to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. To a very considerable extent, his efforts have been thwarted by the offsetting policies and the obstacles erected by the Minister of Finance. I am sure that the people of the eastern provinces were as stunned as I was the other day to hear the minister preen himself, not because the situation in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec had improved, but rather because the situation in Ontario and other wealthier provinces had deteriorated. Look at the figures for the Atlantic provinces. The adjusted unemployment rate for April 1971 was 8.1 per cent. The unadjusted rate for 1971 shows 11.6 per cent of the people out of work compared to 10.4 per cent the previous year. It is difficult to regard that as an improvement, except through some tortured reasoning resorted to by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

It is true that in Ontario the position deteriorated from an unemployment rate of 4.7 per cent in 1970 to 6.5 per cent in the month of April. By putting these two things together, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion argues that actual conditions in the Atlantic provinces have improved. I do not know what point we have reached in this country. What the minister was in effect saying was that because one of the relatively wealthy provinces in Canada was now going downhill even more quickly than the poorer ones, the relative differences between the two have become somewhat smaller. On this basis, the minister claimed to have done a good job in fighting regional disparity. That is a new low, even for this government. I have often suspected, and half in joke suggested, that the real goal of this government is the equalization of poverty across this country. We now have the evidence that this is the case from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I can tell him and the other ministers present that it is cold comfort indeed to the less well-to-do provinces to be told that they are rapidly being joined in their misery by the rest of the country.

I do not think there has been any single statement that has so clearly shown the fundamental bankruptcy of the policies of this government as that made the other day by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It points out the irony of the use of the word "expansion" in the name of that department. The only thing the minister has really expanded has been the size of the designated area in this country. He now has about half of the country designated and this is not because it does not need to be designated. In that sense, it really is a department of expansion. In the interests of accuracy perhaps the minister should change the name to the department of universal economic collapse, which would be more appropriate at the present time.

• (4:10 p.m.)

It would be appropriate, too, if he and his departmental advisers condescended to take into consideration the suggestions coming to him not only from the opposition in this House but also from people whose business it is to study the economic problems with which that minister is supposed to be dealing. For example, as far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, he and his department should be listening to Professor William Smith and the Atlantic provinces advisory council. The minister and his department should be listening to other voices that are being raised in warning and appeal—appeal to this government to adopt a strategy for development of areas of slow growth.

This is not simply a question of spending money, Mr. Speaker. The government has been criticized by this advisory body in the Atlantic provinces, which the government itself established, for its failure to devise a feasible strategy for the development of those provinces. It has been criticized for lack of co-ordination. In fact, in short, it has been criticized for wasting money and for its failure to make a concerted effort. We now seem to have reached the point where the minister does not even seem to be able to find a chairman for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Critics have been pointing out again to this blind and deaf government two facts that are clear enough. First, that the have-not provinces in this country always take the lead in suffering the consequences of federal policies that encourage unemployment, that slow down the economy. They are also the last to recover.

The Minister of Finance tried to make something this afternoon of some suggestions contained in a policy paper of this party to the effect that the government of Canada had to adopt a flexible fiscal and monetary policy if economic disparity were to be overcome. I have been saying this for years. Anyone who has ever spoken on behalf of the Atlantic provinces has been saying this for years. Yet the Minister of Finance comes before the House this afternoon and suggests that this is something new. Certainly we are saying that there must be flexibility; but I must also say in passing that to talk of economic benefits in the present circumstances is rather abstract at best, because under this government there are not many benefits to count, only costs. In any case, the economists of the Atlantic provinces, and in particular the advisory council that the government established, have been and still are pressing the government to draw the necessary conclusions from this regrettable but real state of affairs. I repeat that it is not so much a question of money as of making a co-ordinating effort.

We are in the position where the chairman of that council is seeking an answer from the government, and is really suggesting that the government should be prodded into providing such an answer. Surely, there must be long-range policies to help boost the economies of the less favoured regions of Canada; but these advisers are also suggesting that the government should take an urgent look at the possibility of applying sensitive policies in a co-ordinated way to give a boost to these economies. I think that that suggestion must be considered closely and urgently, and I think that an answer from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to Professor Smith and his colleagues on the advisory council of the Atlantic provinces is long overdue and must be forthcoming.

I may say that it is not enough for the Prime Minister casually to say, as he did the other day, that really 3 per cent unemployment is impossible to achieve in this country because this would mean a rate of one per cent unemployment in Ontario to compensate for a 5 per cent rate in some other provinces. That is not a policy; that is an absence of policy. That constitutes simply a retreat in confusion all along the line. Those words tell us that this government has no confidence in its own policies that are supposedly designed to help eliminate regional disparities and to reduce high rates of unemployment in areas of the country where economic growth is slow.

Mr. Douglas: Five per cent is lower than the present rate.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, it is lower; it would almost be Utopia by comparison. In short, for the Prime Minister to talk in this way is an admission of failure that is as serious as the incredible position taken the other day by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Each in his own way, one casually and the other with great protestations of success in the implementation of his policies, is telling us that this government has little or nothing to offer in the development of effective regional economic policies.

I want to emphasize a point that I have been emphasizing for the past year, and that is that you cannot successfully attack economic disparity in the Atlantic provinces, in Quebec or in other areas of slow growth as long as there is massive unemployment across the country. You can pour all the money you like into areas of slow growth, but it will just not develop any momentum unless the economy of the country is moving forward generally at a satisfactory rate. Let me repeat what I said many times in and outside this House, namely that one of the most effective measures that the government could take to help areas of slow growth is to get the economy of the whole country on a healthy basis and moving forward satisfactorily. There is no conflict in this respect, at this time at least.

I see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) smiling. I would have thought it would have been obvious to him because this point has been raised by many others as well as by me. As long ago as 1960, Professor Alec Cairncross, who came over to Canada to do a study for the Atlantic Provinces, said that the Atlantic provinces could only move forward economically on the basis of a satisfactorily expanding economy in Canada.

Mr. Drury: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? I have listened with great interest to his remarks in connection with the general proposition that the sine qua non of helping the disadvantaged areas is to get the general economy moving forward. However, I suggest this is not the only thing required by a long way.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the hon. gentleman asking a question or making a speech?

Mr. Drury: Earlier the hon. gentleman made reference to the fact—as I had experienced with wage negotiations—that wage disparity between British Columbia and Nova Scotia was increasing, and perhaps this is one of the consequences of moving the economy forward, even at a slow pace. I would ask him how he reconciles these two propositions.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I lost the minister a long time ago I must admit. Surely, the hon. gentleman is not going to accuse me of thinking that special measures to help areas of slow growth are of no importance. He was hardly in his seat following the change of government in 1963 when I and a lot of other people were at his door urging the government to adopt special measures to stimulate the economy of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Laing: The mistake you made was in thinking he was smiling. He looks like that all the time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition may complete his reply, but I suggest it does not help to have interjections once he has answered the question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I will conclude fairly shortly now. I want to remind the House of what I was trying to explain to the President of the Treasury Board something which I think he really understands, namely that in addition to incentives, encouragement and development of the infrastructure of areas of slow growth, these areas are only going to move forward when we have a healthy economy in the whole of Canada. That is why I suggest it is urgent for the country, and especially those parts that ordinarily suffer from slow growth, that the Minister of Finance take effective measures to stimulate the economy and to remove its hesitance. For the sake of the 348,000 people who have been out of work for over four months as of last month, and the vast number of young Canadians who are starting out in life under these very depressive conditions and outlook, I hope something can be done. For the sake of the government and those people who are out of work as well as those who are paying extra taxes because there is so much unemployment, and for the sake of those who suffer from the ever-spreading poverty which is a result of this unemployment, I hope the government will do something effective in its upcoming budget. If it does not, the people of Canada are facing a difficult time ahead, indeed, and so is the government.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we can but subscribe to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). The present economic situation requires that immediate emergency measures be taken to bring about a high level of employment.

The means envisaged by the hon. member could only be those advocated by the Social Credit, if he could finally do away with the usual tax policies which are the recurring theme of our good friends in the NDP.

There is no doubt that special expansionary programs and policies in the monetary and fiscal fields should be adopted forthwith. For our part, we are quite ready to assist the government in setting up financial programs whose beneficial effects are certain.

The first measure to retain our attention should deal with credit availability which should be based on our actual resources and manpower potential. This would give us an opportunity to assess the actual production capacity of the population which is anxious to put its talents, its competence and its courage at the service of the community.

Once this potential has been determined, there remains but to get this whole business on the road by issuing the required credit. There is no need to sit down quietly, waiting for the good please of Big Business, American, European or other. Neither must we wait for the last results of the flights and mathematical acrobatics of the American dollar, the Deutschmark or the Japanese yen. No! Let's be consequent. Let us show some horse sense. Let us consider all that is materially possible around us and let us make it financially feasible.

Mr. Speaker, roads, bridges, schools, hospitals, to give but a few examples, these are not built with money but with materials, workers and engineers. Are we short of these in Canada? Sand, iron, wood, minerals, our country is full of these raw materials! Who can deny it?

Are we short of manpower, then? Putting the question brings to mind the record number of unemployed in the country, the recent increase in unemployment in April, at the time when there is usually an upsurge of economic activity. No, 700,000 times no. There is no shortage of manpower. Who could claim that our universities do not provide all the engineers who are or would be needed to establish plans and carry out scientific calculations?

What then is lacking, Mr. Speaker? Money? That is right! Then, let us just issue all the money materially required for this purpose, let us have the Bank of Canada grant all the credit required. Why seek the permission of New York, London or Paris? What rights have foreigners to directly influence our lives.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, I say we should return to a sound and rational economy. Let us attend to our business. Let us examine our opportunities and take action. Let us stop tailoring our policies to the views of Nixon, Heath, Brezhnev or Mao. The ridiculous and stupid principle that we are applying to our external trade inevitably and irremediably leads our industry and our trade to utter failure and decadence. For how can we increase our production, hence our manpower, if we let into the country any product whose cost is lower than the corresponding production cost in Canada?

Butter is cheaper in New Zealand, so let us buy butter from New Zealand, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said last year.

Cars are cheaper in Japan and in the United States, so let us close all our automotive plants and let us buy cars from these countries.

Textile products are cheaper in China, so let us buy them from China and let us close all our mills. This is why one of the main industries of Quebec is dying. European shoes are less expensive, Mr. Speaker. Canadians who a few years ago walked almost exclusively in our shoes now see the Canadian industry in pitiful jeopardy. We walk on Italian, Polish or Spanish soles before going barefoot.

It is obvious that these policies cannot be maintained much longer. Let us produce in Canada all that is materially possible. The price question is relative and secondary. There would be absolutely no problem in this connection if we merely balanced the cost of production with the purchasing power. If there was as much money available as there are products, everybody would be happy.

Those are concrete proposals. We feel sure, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian people would be satisfied if they were carried out.

According to the motion we are debating, to achieve full potential growth through a planned investment and foreign ownership policy, credit must be liberalized. All programs, though they be interesting and good, cannot solve anything by themselves. The proposal that taxes be further increased in order to help the state to invest is basically faulty.

It will become absolutely necessary to consider applying the economic principle that all new production must be financed by new credits. It is not up to the government nor to the producers to determine the extent of such new credits, but rather to the consumers themselves. From wants come necessity which in turn creates production, thanks to the private initative of manufacturers and tradesmen.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, those new credits must be financed without interest. High interest rates in fact keep our industries from progressing.

A planned investment policy is impossible without the application of the healthy and reasonable economic principle that any new production must be financed by new interest-free credits. Thus, we could easily promote the development of secondary industry that could be, as indicated at the end of the motion, and I quote:

—providing the necessary employment opportunities for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who enter the work force every year.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to this debate with interest. I listened to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) present his case earlier this afternoon. I listened with both ears. If I had had a couple of more ears I would have listened with them also because I had hoped to hear something. But I heard no new ideas. I did not hear anything that would help solve any problems. I have read his resolution which indicates that the only way to provide the necessary employment opportunities for Canada is through secondary manufacturing. Then, he went on to tell us how we should be spending money on a great many other programs in order to improve the employment picture in Canada. Well, I suppose we could have full employment in Canada if we were willing to accept the standard of living which goes with full employment. Our attention is constantly drawn to those countries in Europe and elsewhere which do seek full employment and have full employment. I refer to countries like the United Kingdom, which is coming very close to it, Germany and Japan.

I have looked at these countries and at their employment situation. I know a young lady who went from Canada to Germany a few months ago. She is employed there. Her salary for doing approximately the same kind of work she did in Canada is just about half what her Canadian salary was. Her living conditions I suppose, if one could measure them, would be about a third of what they would be in Canada. So, if we want full employment on that scale, I suppose we could have that kind of full employment. A year ago while I was in Japan I spoke to an interpreter who was with our party. My wife and I asked her about her living conditions. She told us she lived in one room. She described it as a three-mat room. I asked what that was and she referred to those little mats they have on the floor, the tatami mats, which are three feet by six feet. A three-mat room is nine feet by six feet in size and for that she paid $40 a month in rent. There is a toilet down the hall and when she wanted to have a bath she had to go three blocks down the street to a community bath. This young lady was a university graduate and was employed by the Japanese government. That is full employment in Japan. I suppose if we wanted to accept that standard of living in Canada, and if Canadians were willing to cut their salaries by 50 per cent or so, we could have that kind of full employment.

We are having some economic storms in Canada at the moment, but that is not to say that the ship is in danger. Not too long ago I listened to a German economist talk about world economics. He mentioned our monetary situation and recited what, in his opinion, were the stable currencies of the world. The currencies which in his opinion in the next five or ten years, or in a generation, would be the currencies which would stand up he listed as being the Swiss franc, the German mark, the Japanese yen and the Canadian dollar. I hear the old litany from the other side of the House concerning the economic condition of Canada. I hear this over and over again. However, I do not hear any suggestions in respect of improvement which are worth listening to. We have a strange situation in Canada. One member of the opposition talked about the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) criticizing the government. Well, I welcome the criticism of the hon. member for Duvernay. I look forward to hearing his ideas, and his contribution in respect of improvements we can bring about in our economic system. I suspect we will hear a great deal more from him than from the opposition about what would be beneficial to the country. I think it is a sad situation when people on this side of the House have to provide the government and the opposition, too. That is the situation in which we seem to find ourselves today.

We might look at the situation in Canada today and see what the economic indicators are. My department tells me that tourism will be up this year to the highest level we have ever reached. It will exceed the level it reached during centennial year, 1967. I believe this is a pretty good economic indicator. I see that our trade surplus has reached $3 billion, the highest figure it has ever been. I think that is a pretty good economic indicator. I see that investment intentions this year are up again by 10 per cent. That is a pretty good indicator. It is expected that there will be 250,000 new housing units this year, a record level. That is a pretty good economic indicator. There are many other such indicators in the Canadian economy today.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce fortunately does have some excellent programs for improving the economic situation in Canada and for improving the employment situation. Canada happens to be experiencing a rapid increase in population, particularly in that segment of the population which is in its first working years. About five years ago we recognized that this would happen, so the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce began introducing a number of programs designed to do exactly what the members of the opposition want to see done. I refer to such programs as the industrial research and development program, which was introduced in 1966 and which now is beginning to bear full fruit. Since it was introduced about five years ago a total of 2,113 applications have been received and grants have been made in an amount of more than $75 million. The program is designed to provide for the payment of grants based on expenditures for scientific research and development carried out in Canada. This is an area in which Canada must be very concerned.

We have been watching the research programs carried out by the major nations of the world. We see that we have a deficiency here because it is difficult for small companies to compete with large companies in conducting this kind of research. So, Canada and Canada's government has responded with a program that is bearing a great deal of fruit. During the five years this program has been under way 1,200 companies in Canada have participated in this progressive program. Also, I want to say something about the PAIT program which was introduced in 1965, a program for the advancement of industrial technology. It is a program of forgivable loans to encourage industrial growth and production by providing assistance for the development of new or improved products and processes which incorporate new technology and offer good opportunities for commercial exploitation in domestic and international markets. Since 1965, there have been 339 projects approved under this program at an estimated total cost of $162 million, with the government's share of that being $82 million. This is another successful program designed to improve productivity and employment in secondary industries in Canada and designed to do the kind of thing that has been outlined, rather vaguely I would say, in the motion of the hon. member for Waterloo.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I want to refer also to another new program, the industrial design assistance program which was begun in 1970. The primary objective of the IDAP program is to improve the competitive position of Canadian secondary industry and to expand sales in foreign markets by upgrading the design quality of Canadian products. I should like to refer to the results of that program because it is important to have a look at the positive results achieved in Canada by programs of this kind. To date—and this was just begun toward the end of last year—over 20 applications for IDAP assistance have successfully obtained agreement for funding, totalling approximately $400,000. These companies anticipate first year sales totalling $13 million, including substantial exports.

Then, we have another program called PEP. I should like to recommend this to opposition members because they could certainly use it. The objective of this program is to induce improved productivity in all manufacturing and processing sectors of the Canadian industry. As a result of the PEP program, it is expected that many of those companies which have shown a low level of productivity will start to thoroughly investigate the ways and means to become internationally competitive. The program was introduced late in 1970 and already there have been three applications for PEP assistance which have successfully obtained agreement for funding totalling approximately $50,000, and an additional six applications will be decided upon imminently.

Another program which should be mentioned is the general adjustment assistance program which was brought in after the Kennedy round. The GAAP program is primarily designed to help manufacturers take advantage of export opportunities arising from the Kennedy round. In 1970, this program was extended to assist manufacturers of textile or clothing goods or footwear.

Hon. members have heard of these programs before but they seem to forget that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has a long list of such programs to combat difficulties in the Canadian economy, to encourage secondary manufacturing, and to improve economic conditions in Canada. I have not listed them all. There are many more I could mention, such as the automotive adjustment assistance program which was begun in 1965 and has had such tremendous success, and the PIDA program for the pharmaceutical industry which was begun in 1968. It, too, has been a great success. I could also mention the machinery program designed to encourage the expansion and efficiency of Canadian manufacturing by providing a reasonable measure of tariff protection to machinery manufacturer and enabling users of machinery to obtain remission of duty on imported capital equipment which is not available from Canadian production. I could go on and on with program after program, such as the shipbuilding program and the lumber and plywood export promotion program for the British Columbia industry. There are many such programs that are being used as tools by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

I must say that I cannot understand the lack of faith in the people of Canada which I hear day after day from the opposition.

Mr. Rowland: It is not lack of faith in the people but in the government.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): The most essential ingredient in the progress of a nation is confidence in the people. If we have confidence in the business and other sectors of our industry, Canada will be a progressive nation, but if the confidence of the people of Canada is destroyed, then indeed we will have difficulty in making Canada a prosperous nation. I want to recommend to members of the opposition that they lift up their shoulders and look forward at the possibilities that Canada has. They should look at the future ahead of us and at the progress that Canada is making, then Canada will indeed live up to the opportunities that we have.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this government will be known to history as the government that gambled and lost. Cold bloodedly and deliberately it has gambled on taking measures the textbooks prescribed to cut down inflation. It knew perfectly well that such a massive slowdown of the economy would cause massive unemployment. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said he could live with 6 per cent unemployment. The chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission subsequently told a university audience that he and others knew that the unemployed would bear the brunt of the fight against inflation. But this gambling government went ahead trying to cure inflation by massive doses of unemployment. They gambled with the economy and lost.

In March their own member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) told the House that the government's policies to deal with unemployment and inflation had been a near economic disaster and a total moral disaster. While there had been a more modest rate of price increases as a result—and I may say a temporary result—the main beneficiaries of the exercise, he said, had been the people with money, and those who had suffered were the unemployed. Young Canadians, too, have suffered, he said, pointing out that last year's economic slowdown resulted in lost economic activity of $3.5 billion, an amount which, if it had been properly spent, could have provided the base for 100,000 new jobs.

But the government did not limit its reckless activities to the economy. It has gambled and is still gambling with the lives of 22 million Canadians. This government, in spite of its show of bravado, is losing ground steadily. But its loss is as nothing compared with the losses being sustained by the Canadian people. The plight of the elderly, the sick, the handicapped, the veterans, those on low fixed incomes, families on social assistance, and the unemployed is tragic and deepening with every move this gambling government makes.

Today, I want to speak particularly of the cost to young people from coast to coast. They are suffering now and because of their situation our whole Canadian future is in danger. Last fall there were plenty of warnings given after the summer we went through. Dr. Baetz of the Canadian Social Development Council gave figures to indicate that most likely there would be larger numbers of unemployed again this summer. His figures were underestimations. The figures for April of this year showed an 11,000 reduction in the number of unemployed aged 55 years or more, but a sharp increase in the number of younger workers looking for jobs. For those under 25 years, the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment went up from 11.1 per cent in March to 12.3 per cent in April, and there were 57,000 more of them unemployed in April than there were a year ago.

• (4:50 p.m.)

As already mentioned in this debate, Arthur Smith, Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, has warned that unemployment will be excessive for at least three years. Last year's figures showed a large number of unemployed young people. A release issued at the end of summer by the Department of Manpower showed that of 179,000 students registered across Canada for employment at the peak of summer, 68 per cent of them found jobs, 32 per cent were still seeking work, and of these 27 per cent were post-secondary students and 73 per cent were high school students. It was the high school students who had to bear the brunt of the unemployment catastrophe.

That was the situation last summer. The picture now has become even more sombre, because this year unemployment has reached up into the ranks of college graduates. It got there last year but is making a heavier impact this year. In April, a report was issued by the Science Council of Canada, not a rabble rousing body but a group of people who consider themselves to be very cautious and careful in the figures they use. This is what the report said in essence:

> Half of the 14,000 or so students graduating from Canadian universities in science and engineering this year will not be "effectively utilized," according to a study prepared for the Science Council of Canada.
>
> This figure includes graduates at the bachelor's, master's and Ph.D. level.
>
> About 400 of the 1,200 to 1,500 post-graduate students who will receive PhD's this year could be in surplus.
>
> Prospects for PhD's next year are bleaker. The most optimistic prediction is that 500 of the 1,800 science and engineering PhD's will be in surplus.
>
> The outlook for the next few years is just as gloomy.

In the face of this, I do not see how there can be such whistling in the dark in such a cheerful way by members on the government benches. It is another case where there are none so blind as those who will not see, and none so deaf as those who will not hear. It is no longer just the problem of summer employment for young people that is in front of us. The cold truth of the matter is that society no longer has a place for growing numbers of young people. Under the government's policies young people are being discarded, like old cars on the junk heaps of industry. That is what has been happening to them.

I can tell hon. members on the government benches what is happening. I will take my own province of British Columbia as an example. In a memorandum dated April 8 of this year to the Vancouver City Council dealing with the subject of single transients, aged 18 to 25 years, in British Columbia, the Board of Administration reported some chilling facts.

> In 1965 the 25 and under age group represented 2.5 per cent of the total population in receipt of social assistance. By 1970, this 18 to 25 year old population represented 11.4 per cent of the total receiving social assistance, an increase of almost 500 per cent in the five year period.
>
> Population figures for British Columbia show that in the next five years there wil be a peak population of 203,000 aged 15 to 19 as compared with the present population in this age group of 182,400.

What is going to happen to the social assistance figures for British Columbia? What is going to happen to the social assistance figures for every municipality across Canada? What is going to happen to the taxpayers' ability to foot the bill? More important, what is going to happen to our young people? What is going to happen to our society? In this connection studies have been going on in British Columbia for some time, and they show what is happening right now. I can tell hon. members opposite the sort of thing that is going on now, and what their policies are doing to the young people of this country.

These studies in my own city of Vancouver show that a new style of life has been evolving for some time, a welfare life style among young people. It already is affecting about 15 per cent of a large sample of the population, young men and young women alike. These are young people who have been without work over the last months and years, and these are some of the things that the survey is finding out about them. This rot will spread because nothing is being done to check it.

This 15 per cent of our young people no longer want full-time work. Many no longer want work of any kind. They have learned to live on welfare, on a marginal income because they have no opportunity for work, and now they are used to living on welfare. Most of them are using drugs on a daily basis. They include young people from all levels of education, including university graduates. Half of them are living communally, or I suppose you could call it wholesale common-law. Most of them come from homes above the poverty level. This last fact is something which should strike home to hon. members opposite who are inclined to think that as long as the comfortable sector of society is doing well, we are living in the best of all worlds and God's in his heaven. These are young people for whom there is no place in our society. They no longer have a role in the community. They have no chance to earn their own way. They have no chance for responsibility. Without responsibility what is going to happen even to their rights as human beings?

We know that Mayor Campbell of Vancouver dismisses them as free-loaders and hopes for a bigger budget for law and order to handle what may result. We know that our provincial Minister of Rehabilitation—what a word that is to apply to P. A. Gaglardi!—believes in posting notices telling young people to stay away from British Columbia. If this continues, I suppose we shall soon find each province putting up a Chinese wall around itself, not only for chicken and egg wars but to keep out young Canadians for whom there is no work. Yet the federal government sings its soul to glory, and says we have turned the corner, that we are taking more ore out of the ground, that we are having more export trade, that everything is wonderful. But, Mr. Speaker, at the heart of this country the most important thing is that we have no place for our young people. I am talking about people. Hon. members opposite can talk about the rest of things if they like, but let me warn them that once young people have lost confidence it does not matter what hon. gentlemen opposite do with the ore, the minerals and the export trade. Their government is finished.

An hon. member opposite has said that the Canadian people should have confidence in the government. Do you expect them to have confidence in a government that carries on in this way, a government that just does not care? I see the minister nodding his head affirmatively. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I must conclude that not only has he no ears and no eyes but that his heart has been replaced with something a great deal more chilly than a human heart ought to be.

In a statement on income security issued in April by the National Council of Welfare we find this sentence:

• (5:00 p.m.)

Updated estimates based on those prepared for the Carter Commission indicate that the cost to the taxpayer of indirect subsidies to the rich extended through the tax system alone is at least $800 million—one-third more than the entire family allowance program.

The Opportunities for Youth program and the other programs provided by this government, if my arithmetic is correct, will provide $82 million for unemployed youth this summer—$800 million as subsidies to the wealthy through our tax system and $82 million to the unemployed youth! It is not hard to see what should be done, Mr. Speaker. The government should cut out its widespread and unjust subsidization of those people who do not need it and should use their money to give young people the start they need.

It has been pointed out this afternoon that in order to achieve anything substantial we would have to cut our standard of living down to something akin to what exists in the nether regions of Africa. But some of us have memories of what happened when World War II came along, Mr. Speaker. Until then there had been no money for anything, but because we had a government that decided the war had to be proceeded with, suddenly we had growth and industry and all the things necessary to pursue that war. If we had the kind of government that did not have twisted and crooked values, if we had the kind that cared about people and not just the affluent élite, there would be no difficulty about putting people to work. We would clean up pollution, clean up the beaches; we would build schools, establish forests and do the other things that this country needs. We would fill the cultural gap that is so obvious in Canada and we would replan and rebuild our cities into places decent enough for people to live in.

When we say these things out loud, members of the government shake their heads and say, "We have heard nothing new". They are not new but then they are as new as Christianity in that it has never been tried. I think the government should try some of these suggestions before they say there is nothing new. Until they do we will have the young people of this country undermining the values of our society because they must.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I interrupt the hon. member because her time, as limited under the special order made earlier this day, has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather)—Finance—Use of portion of revenue from alcohol to combat alcoholism; the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Labour Conditions—Failure to hire Saskatchewan welders for pipeline construction project in province.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—REQUEST FOR ECONOMIC MEASURES, PLANNED INVESTMENT AND FOREIGN OWNERSHIP POLICIES TO ACHIEVE HIGH EMPLOYMENT THROUGH DEVELOPMENT OF SECONDARY MANUFACTURING

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Saltsman:

That this House calls upon the government to adopt immediate emergency economic measures to move the economy to high employment through special programs and more expansionary monetary and fiscal policies, and also to achieve full potential growth through a planned investment and foreign ownership policy and to stimulate the development of secondary manufacturing as the only way of providing the necessary employment opportunities for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who enter the work force every year.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the motion before us on the subject of economic conditions. I believe that we need to adopt a more expansionary philosophy in connection with our monetary and fiscal policies, particularly now that so many people are unemployed. I congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) upon expressing her concern for people. The sad part is that much of what she said is true. I am not going to deal with the question of unemployment rates as the Leader of the Official Opposition dealt with them at length.

I should like to take a brief look at what has gone on in Canada in the last five of six years. We have seen Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Benson carrying on an experiment to find out whether a country the size of Canada could control inflation and to learn what the net result of it would be. In looking at Canada's economic picture from 1965 to 1968, we find that this country had the highest rate of inflation in what might be called the western world. I believe only The Netherlands exceeded Canada's rate of inflation during that period. That was because they had just recently removed the wage and price controls in that country.

From July 1968 until December 1970, Canada had the lowest rate of inflation in the western world, so we went from a period of sharply accelerated inflation to a period of very low inflation—in fact, no inflation at all. I think the rate for the last full year was 1.9 per cent and perhaps this is good. Perhaps the government should be patted on the back. They attempted to do this themselves on January 1, 1971, when the Prime Minister said that he had inflation licked. But what did he say a year earlier on January 1, 1970? He said that we would have to live with unemployment and that even if it got above 6 per cent we would still have to live with it. He was determined to control or curtail inflation. What effect did this sharp reduction of inflation have in Canada from June 1968 to the end of 1970? Well, we had an influx of foreign moneys. The dollar seeks a place where it can find the highest rate of return, so dollars came to Canada. We still kept a tight monetary policy and we had to float our dollar or it would have cost us an enormous amount of money to pay the difference in exchange.

Floating the Canadian dollar cost us, as primary producers and producers of manufactured goods, millions of dollars. And was it necessary? What was the net result of this curtailed rate of growth, this curtailed monetary policy? The Prime Minister indicated the result last week on the television program "Weekend" when he said:

... the Canadian dollar is so strong indeed that it is hurting our export trade because people are finding it cheaper to import goods and more difficult to sell them abroad.

What does this mean to the Canadian seeking work? It creates a situation where it is cheaper to buy goods that come into Canada and it is more difficult to sell the goods produced in Canada, therefore our export total goes down and our import total goes up. Of course, this creates unemployment. Perhaps Mr. Smith of the Economic Council of Canada was correct when, in the fifth or sixth report of that council, he said that Canada really cannot control its rate of inflation and if we do perhaps it will cause undue hardship on various segments of our society. Unpalatable as that statement may be, I think it must be reckoned with and we have to accept portions of it. What portion of the Canadian economy can Canadians control? What portion of the monetary policy of Canada can Canadians control?

First of all, I think Canada should control the rate of differential between the Canadian dollar and the American dollar, the mark, the yen or whatever it might be. We can control that, and we should make a determined effort to see that our dollar should be 8 per cent, 10 per cent or 5 per cent less in value than the American dollar. In this country we are faced with a different cost of production. We produce for a small home market. We produce mainly in a winter climate and therefore we should have a differential of about 8 per cent between our dollar and the American dollar. In doing this, we must recognize that we have to allow our dollar to inflate at a rate similar to the currencies in the rest of the western world, particularly the United States dollar.

• (5:10 p.m.)

It is well known that a crisis developed because the value fixed for our currency was out of line with the value that the free forces of the market would have established. That is why Germany recently, after having gone through a similar period, has had to float its currency. I think that we need a basic expansionary policy which will allow our money supply to expand. It is interesting to note that even although we have gone through a two-year period of tight money in this country, the government is still wondering which is worse, unemployment or inflation. Last month, I think, the Prime Minister issued a grave warning that we were not to permit another inflationary spiral to take place.

Actually, Canada is a country that can be hurt in two ways. If we permit our economy to inflate too fast, we shall price ourselves out of world markets. On the other hand, if our fiscal policies are too restrictive, our money will increase in value and we shall, as well, price ourselves out of world markets. In that sense, as I say, we can price ourselves out of world markets. We must not allow our economy to inflate too quickly and neither must we embark on too stringent a monetary policy. I think it has been accepted that we must try to balance the scales in that regard.

Whether you judge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in a political or non-political sense, you will see that he has failed to balance the economy and to keep in step with the rest of the world. Here, he has failed miserably. He brought about a period of high inflation prior to 1968; that priced us out of world markets. Then he tried to curtail inflation too rapidly between 1968 and 1970 and, since it became cheaper to import goods than to produce our own, we were also priced out of the market. Our money became more valuable and that increased the price of our products in world markets. Both actions have brought the same result.

It is no wonder that the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), who was formerly minister in charge of the Post Office, resigned. He became thoroughly disgusted with the inept job the Minister of Finance is doing. In other words, he passed judgment on the government. He had given advice to the Minister of Finance. One could read the speech that the hon. member gave on June 2, 1970. He recognized, on June 2, that the Canadian dollar was strong and far stronger than the American dollar. If I had time I would read what he said in that speech about the floating of the Canadian dollar. He recognized that if we were not careful, we could price ourselves out of world markets, especially if we adopted too stringent a monetary policy.

It is interesting to note what Mr. Rasminsky, head of the Bank of Canada, had to say about this matter. The Toronto Telegram of Friday, April 30, contained this report:

> Mr. Rasminsky's position on the direction of economic policy is this: Economic growth should be geared to ensure a steady reduction in unemployment while simultaneously 'avoiding an expansion so rapid that it would over-shoot the mark.'

In other words, he recognizes clearly this question of balance. We must maintain this balance which involves on the one hand our own economic and monetary policy and, on the other, the actions of those with whom we trade. Canada really is a major trading nation. In British Columbia, the Prime Minister said that almost 50 per cent of our goods are exported. I think the figure is higher than that. I think probably about 70 per cent of Canadian production, either directly or indirectly, is export oriented. Our monetary policy, in other words, must keep in step with that of our trading partners, basically the countries of the western world. The Minister of Finance has failed miserably to accomplish this. If we had kept in step we would not have needed to float our dollar, unless he wanted our dollar to come up to par with the United States dollar. I have not heard him say that. On the other hand, I have heard him say that he wants our dollar to be worth 95 cents or less in terms of the United States dollar. He ought to be taking steps to do that and he is not doing so.

Measures to Improve Economy

The Prime Minister is still caught up in his fears about inflation. He wonders which is best, high employment and high inflation or high unemployment and no inflation. You cannot state the problem that simply. We have to consider the rest of the world. If there is inflation in the rest of the world, surely we need some inflation in Canada, although I should like to think of it as being lower than that in the rest of the world. Otherwise, our dollar would become too strong and we would price ourselves out of world markets in that way, as well. We can clearly see that we have been out of step with our trading partners in the western world. We must get in step with them, because a great deal of Canada's employment depends on export projects.

Why does this country which is capable of producing a great deal depend so much on exports? We do not have to depend on exports. The fact of the matter is that we can buy imports more cheaply than the goods we can produce here. So, we must get in step with the rest of the world so that Canadians can be induced to buy Canadian produced goods and so that Canadian produced goods have a chance in the markets of the world. The Minister of Finance has failed in that Canada's monetary policy has not kept in step with policies prevailing in the rest of the world. He has failed miserably in creating an economic climate in Canada in which the current work force will be absorbed in the economy and in which the increase in the labour force, an increase resulting from the natural rate of growth in this country, will be absorbed in the economy. To my way of thinking that is the most serious charge to be made against the minister. I commend the hon. member for Duvernay for resigning from the cabinet. In doing so he pointed out vividly to the Canadian people that all was not well with our economic policies and that action ought to be taken.

I urge the Canadian people who are to go to the polls on May 31 in the four by-elections to register their disgust with the way the Canadian government has managed their economic affairs. One could talk about monetary policy all day; that really does not touch the imaginations of many of the little people throughout Canada. On the other hand, the subject does touch the pocketbooks of many of our little people and, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) so aptly put it, government policies have detracted from the opportunities of young people to become part of the growing and viable economy that we ought to have in Canada. I severely condemn the Minister of Finance because of his inept handling of the Canadian economy and economic policy in the past two years.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on May 18, 1971, with June around the corner and July and August in our immediate future, with September looming, that being the month in which we begin to see lay-offs in small industries and decreasing employment opportunities, with the temperatures in the seventies and the prospect of temperatures rising to the eighties. we should not be talking about unemployment. It was no consolation to Canadians who listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) today to hear that he blamed unemployment on God and on a late spring. First, it is not correct that we have had a late spring. Actually, in those areas where we have the worst unemployment at the moment, spring has been at least one month early. I was astounded to learn this week that the regional director for the Atlantic region said there was excessive unemployment in that area because of the late spring. He knows that is not correct, and he knows that spring this year has been relatively early.

It was little consolation to listen to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on national television on Sunday night talking about the reasons behind government policies of about one year ago. He suggested that they created the situation we have today. The Prime Minister suggested that Canada had to opt for an anti-inflationary policy because inflation and the runaway effects of inflation would have such a detrimental effect on unemployment. Of all the countries, the minister used Latin America as an example. He said that we can see what is happening in Latin America. He tried to create the impression that today inflation in Canada had reached such devastating proportions that it had to be brought under control at all costs. Second, he indicated that because we are an exporting nation largely dependent on exports to the United States and other countries, inflation had to be checked. Third, he indicated that the reason it had to be checked was its effect on the little man, people on fixed incomes, seasonally employed, on pensions and people who receive $250 or $300 a month on which to raise a family. These are the people who will be hurt if inflation is not brought under control.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The fallacies are simple. The Prime Minister and his government have created the demon of inflation. Inflation had never reached the proportions it reached in Canada in 1970. We never had to create massive unemployment to bring it under control. The Prime Minister created the feeling of "Trudeauphobia" and the fear of inflation in order to justify the sad state of affairs, as well as the selection of very serious and chronic economic policies.

The minister referred to the export situation. We all know that if we have inflation at the rate of 10 per cent a year and our neighbours have inflation at the rate of 5 per cent a year, we are hurting our export markets. The fact is that our greatest export market, the United States, had an inflationary rate of 6 per cent last year. We had a rate of 1.5 per cent. I am no economist, but it is simple logic that the aim of Canada should be to keep inflation in harmony with that in the nations to which we export our produce in order to remain competitive. The fact is that it is a comparative problem.

Another fallacy is that the very people the Prime Minister wants to help with his anti-inflation policies, those on fixed incomes, seasonally and marginally employed and the unemployed, are the people who have been most adversely affected. They have been rendered unemployed. Members opposite know that this is a fact.

The results of the present policies have been massive unemployment, an increase in regional disparity, much more difficulty in trying to export the unfinished resource products of the agricultural industry, the forest industry including the paper industry, the fishing industry and the mining industry. All those areas which differ from the more industrialized regions of Canada, such as the Atlantic region, Quebec, and the northern prairie region and parts of British Columbia are the areas that have been most adversely affected.

We have had a tremendous loss in potential. If members had time to ponder this fact, they would see the effect which this loss of potential had on Canada. If an industry is forced to cut back, lay off and produce at a slower rate, it has to charge more in order to increase its margin of profit. Everyone knows the effect that has on inflation. It is impossible for any member to develop the extent of the problem in 15 minutes. In the few minutes which I have, I want to dwell on some suggestions. I have been advised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) that he will at least read these recommendations.

First, the minister should seriously consider abdicating his role as Minister of Finance. I do not believe that the minister has confidence in his policies. In fact, I do not believe they are his policies. I believe that the Prime Minister is cramming these policies down the throats of the cabinet members. Like the Canadian people, whether they like it or lump it, they have to swallow them. The Minister of Finance ought to be honourable and consider abdicating his present role.

Second, it is time that the Prime Minister assumed his responsibility and stated what the Canadian government, now in power with 152 members, has as its expectations for inflation and unemployment in Canada in 1971 and for successive years. Someone has to assume the responsibility of setting the goals and expectations for the Canadian nation. Will we tolerate 3 per cent inflation? Are we prepared to tolerate 6 per cent inflation? Are we prepared to tolerate 3 per cent unemployment? What are the goals the Canadian people can expect for 1971 and the successive years?

It is not good enough for the Prime Minister to appear on national television and ask the Canadian people to define what is meant by the term "full unemployment". This government which was elected by the Canadian people has the responsibility of setting the goals and expectations. If they are not prepared to do this, the least they can do is reduce expenditures $2 million by laying off Mr. Young and his bunch of boys who are running political interference for the government.

Third, the government should reassess its monetary and fiscal policies on a regional basis. I visited the province of Prince Edward Island last week. This month that province has 10.1 per cent unemployment on an actual unemployment basis. I believe that is the figure. The reason for this situation is that they cannot sell their agricultural produce to the New England market because of the tariff structure. The time has come when the government must realize that policies which are uniformly applied across Canada disadvantage some regions, especially the slow growth areas. We are the first to feel the pinch and slow down. We feel it to the greatest extent. We are the last to feel the effects of recovery.

Somebody has to face these facts, even though our small population does not justify it on a political basis.

Fourth, we must reassess our policy of incentives and loans to industry, especially in the slow growth areas. The three recent reports by the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary bear me out on this. They indicate that in the slow growth areas, such as in the Atlantic regions, particular industries cannot avail themselves of the loans guaranteed by the government. The lending institutions refuse to co-operate. I am not saying the legislation is bad, but some way has to be found to enable industries to take fuller advantage of loan programs. If we expect these industries to recover, expand, grow and develop, we must make money available to them. The industries that find it most difficult to avail themselves of loans at the present time are the industries in the slow growth areas.

The major point I want to make is that the tax uncertainty in this nation has a crippling effect on our economy. People do not know where they are going. They do not know whether to expand. They do not know whether to take their few dollars out of the bank and invest them because they do not know when this valuation of assets will take place. They do not know about capital gains, the protective tariffs for small business and concessions to mining companies. All in all, the tax uncertainty is having a detrimental effect on the economy. The minister has been on the horns of a dilemma for a year in connection with these tax proposals. I am not prepared to wait for a month. Some indication has to be given of the present tax position of this government.

Another point is that the government must reassess its priorities. Many members religiously avoid mentioning the emphasis that is put today on linguistic equality in this nation. I continuously receive representations from concerned Canadian taxpayers on this matter. There is a tremendous effort being made in this country to bring about linguistic equality. On the west coast of the province of Newfoundland there is a place called Port au Port. The hon. member who represents that area can speak with authority on this. There is a very small group of people who live in that district who have been assimilated over the years. Now, this area has been classified as a bilingual district. Everything must be done on a bilingual basis, including the distribution of information. I believe it was in 1964 that Professor Stoker, a linguistic expert at the university, said that three years previously the process of assimilation had reached the stage where the people no longer had any desire to have a separate culture or anything of this nature. Yet that part of our country has been designated as a bilingual district.

Every day dozens of circulars and pieces of literature cross my desk. Whether we like it or not, they are printed in both languages. I can go further and state that there are civil servants taking language immersion courses who will retire before their courses are completed. There is no sense to this. I contend that a lot of problems in Canada, including Quebec, are economic, not language problems. I would like to see the present government reassess the problems and adopt some policy positions.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Ever since 1968 the Prime Minister of this country has acted like a great, charismatic leader on television, in this House and elsewhere. I have never heard him state in the House or publicly what he considers to be the priorities for this nation. I have never heard him state any clear, definitive policy positions. I have never heard him state any manpower policy positions. I have never heard him state any foreign-ownership policy positions. I have never heard him state any resource development policy position. This country cannot continue without being given some indication of over-all government policy.

You cannot kiss away the problems facing the Canadian nation at this moment. You cannot kiss away the unemployment problem facing Canada, the depression being experienced by the agricultural industry or the forest industry. Someone has to stand up and sanely, soberly and rationally lay down priorities and policy positions that are based on hard-nosed facts.

This is not a popularity contest that we are running, Mr. Speaker. Here we are in the month of May, and I suggest it is not enough for the Minister of Finance to tell the country that we are going to recover, that unemployment is going downhill. Are Canadians going to be satisfied come September when they have had only six weeks' work? I remind hon. gentlemen across the way that there are 659,000 Canadians out of work. Are they going to be satisfied, when the lay-offs start in September and the cold winter months are ahead of them, that this country is commencing a recovery? In my own province 16.4 per cent of the people are unemployed. This represents 25,000 people. This is the most diluted kind of statistic because the true figure may be more than 20 per cent. When people tell me that things are going to be better next week, I tell them that they are not better today. The Trudeaumania that swept this country in 1968 is fast becoming Trudeauphobia, and it is time we brought it to a stop.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I think the evidence that has been presented to members of this House in the past few days, and over the past several months in particular, demonstrates a total failure on the part of the government to deal with the problems facing the Canadian economy. I feel that the actions taken by the Liberal government can be summed up by placing them in three general categories. We have seen examples of gross mismanagement, of poor or bad judgment, and a lack of courage in dealing with Canada's economic problems.

If I may turn to each of these three categories in turn, one example of mismanagement that comes readily to mind has to do with the student summer employment program announced by the government not long ago. I find it very interesting to note the comments of some of the officials who say they feel we are doing reasonably well in dealing with this situation, considering that the program had been introduced so late in the season. I suggest this is nothing but poor management. The government has been unable to bring forward its announcements and plans until this late date, and this will have a detrimental effect on solving the over-all problems facing the Canadian economy at this time.

Secondly, with respect to poor judgment we have very ready examples of this in the inadequacy of government programs which have been introduced over the past year or two to cope with the series of economic problems that have arisen. I have read in a number of publications, such as The Executive, a magazine certainly not unsympathetic to the federal government, and elsewhere that government officials were astounded that the economy had been so slow in responding to some of the policy initiatives introduced by the government, first of all to deal with the problem of inflation which the government was really rolling up its sleeves to tackle. It took a long time to get any sort of response at all. I read that government officials simply could not understand this and were very surprised that the economy was so slow in responding to the measures taken by the government.

Similarly in dealing with the unemployment problem which has grown rapidly during the past winter, again government officials could not understand, according to some of the publications I have read, why it took so long for the economy to respond to some of the initiatives that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and others were bragging about in this House. I feel this is a case of poor judgment. Somehow the government has lost its grip on and control of the situation. It is not able to handle it any longer, so it flounders about from crisis to crisis. In addition we have seen a demonstrated lack of courage in tackling some of the problems that exist.

To analyse the situation I think we must look at what is happening to the Canadian economy today. Why have government officials been so surprised? Why has the government found it difficult to understand why the economy has been so slow to respond to policy initiatives? I think the answer is very simple: the Canadian economy has changed. It is a different sort of economy today from what it was a number of years ago. Today we have a managed economy, not an economy managed by the government or an economy that is operating in a free market but one that for the most part is controlled by large corporations which call the tune, which take the initiatives that determine the course of affairs in the Canadian economy. I have seen it demonstrated by this government that it is not willing to tackle the sources of economic power in Canada, or the seat of economy power in Canada, in order to deal with the economic problems that are plaguing the Canadian nation.

This afternoon I listened to the Minister of Finance taking part in this debate and could not help but feel sorry for him. I thought back to last Thursday and his statements about the unemployment figures that were announced. He simply could not understand what was the trouble, what was causing the increase or why it was that government policies had not been more effective. He was floundering about in helpless fashion. We had a further example this afternoon when the minister was pretty hard put to try to come up with any sort of plausible defence of government policy.

It seems to me that there is a noticeable lack of enthusiasm and support for the minister and his policies from the government benches. This is demonstrated by the absence of participation in this debate by government members. Since the Minister of Finance spoke, I understand that one other government member has made a speech in the debate, which is one more indicator to me that there is a very noticeable lack of enthusiasm for the policies of the minister and for the situation in which he finds himself. In response to the speech made by my colleague from Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) the minister tried to say that many countries would like to have an economy with the record that Canada's has. I question that statement very much. Many countries are doing as well as or better than Canada, and with a good deal less in the way of resources at their disposal.

I note that the minister also disagreed with my colleague in his references to the need to put the resource industries of Canada—the primary resource industries, the minerals industry, and so on—on the same footing as the rest of the Canadian economy and to take away the special advantages that they enjoy today. The minister has the right to disagree. In fact, in doing so he is being consistent because this is in line with the statements he has made over the past several months in which he made it very clear that the tax concessions which these industries have enjoyed for so many years will be continued for a further period.

I also noted that the Minister of Finance did acknowledge that there were some problems. I believe he referred to them as trouble spots in Canada. It seems to me a rather euphemistic expression, to refer to the 659,000 people in Canada who were out of work during the month of April as simply being trouble spots. That is a great many trouble spots! I suggest it is time the Minister of Finance woke up and realized the situation.

• (5:40 p.m.)

He also attempted to analyse the unemployment situation. If I interpreted him correctly, he gave the impression there are problems but things are going all right; there are some good indicators in the Canadian economy which show that things are on the upward trend. This does not do away with the fact that there are still 659,000 people out of work.

I was also amazed to note that the Minister of Finance was so hard up to find a defence for his policies and, in some cases, the lack of them, that he had to start worrying about the recent NDP federal convention. I suggest he will have to worry a great deal more about the NDP and its federal convention than he has up to the present time. I assure him, just to set his mind at rest, that there is absolutely no problem of reconciliation between NDP policy as set down at that convention and past conventions and the position being taken by NDP members of the House of Commons.

The Minister of Finance did acknowledge that there were some problems concerning unemployment, and that unemployment was at a level which made all of us unhappy. I should not expect any less from the minister in that regard. It seems to me he must take a closer look at what is happening to the Canadian economy at the present time. The fact is that in April, 1971, there were 342,000 people in Canada who had been out of work for four months or longer. That compares with 308,000 people in the same category in March, 1971, and only 229,000 in the same category in April of 1970.

Attention has also been drawn to the large number of young people who are out of work at the present time. This is a source of serious concern in Canada. I also find that there has been an increase in unemployment at every age level set out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I noticed that the minister was so hard pressed to deal with the problem that he had to blame it on the winter. I acknowledge there have been problems in some parts of Canada in that regard which would have a temporary effect and which may be overcome in another month. I also know that in every region across Canada, except in the parts furthest west, there was a notable increase in unemployment in the month of April as compared with March.

In the Atlantic region, unemployment for April was 11.6 per cent, compared with 10.9 per cent in the month of March. I have not been in the Atlantic provinces recently, but the information I have does not suggest that their winter or spring conditions were so bad they could account for the increase in unemployment that took place between March and April. It seems to me a much closer analysis is required of the situation than the Minister of Finance has come forward with up to the present time.

I should like to briefly refer to three areas which I think deserve special attention in attempting to deal with Canada's serious economic situation. The first area concerns the problems of rural Canada. This is having a very serious effect on the Canadian economy. Farm income in Canada in 1970 was $1.198 million, which is 23.9 per cent less than the 1969 level of $1.595 million. This is bound to have a serious effect on the Canadian economy and on employment in centres such as Brantford where a large part of the farm machinery manufacturing industry is located.

In my own province of Saskatchewan, the farm net income in 1970 was $202 million. This is $200 million less than the $402 million for 1969. In 1970 the net income level for farmers in Saskatchewan was cut in half. We see the results of what is happening in the drift away from farms into the cities of people who do not have skills with which they can demand a decent and adequate level of income. We also see what is happening to our rural communities and small urban centres, those complexes involved with the rural community structure. We have made proposals for emergency assistance on a long-term basis which would help to deal with these problems by increasing the net income available to farmers and our rural people. These would be much more beneficial than the proposals which have been brought forward by the government.

Secondly, I suggest the government's policy dealing with regional development has been an unmitigated disaster. The minister sloughs off criticism, but he is not able to come up with any concrete answers. He simply says we are doing all right, we are giving away millions of dollars in grants, much of it to large corporations which have no need of it. There are no plans available to deal with the economic problems of the underdeveloped regions of Canada or regions which do not come up to the average of Canadian income.

I suggest, thirdly, there is a need for reorientation of our trade policy. I noticed the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) was bragging this afternoon about our export surplus when answering a question during the question period. On the other hand, the Minister of Finance was expressing concern and worry about the export surplus. This shows that the government is having a good deal of difficulty co-ordinating its position. We must find out what our trade policy is. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce always answers by saying we must keep a balance.

What is the government doing to take into account the growth of new trade complexes, particularly the European Common Market? How are we going to adjust to this, and what is the government's response? The minister says we are going to undertake multilateral negotiations to reduce tariffs and other non-tariff trade barriers in Canada. We have to come up with alternatives. Canada must consider what it will do if such multilateral negotiations are not successful or are not possible. We have yet to hear from the government what its answers are. I commend the motion moved by my colleague the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman).

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, while I cannot support this motion put forward by the hon. member of the NDP, I think it is a good idea in one sense to have a debate at this time on the economic status of the country. I say this for three reasons. This country is experiencing, and in all likelihood will continue to experience, levels of unemployment without economic or humane justification. It has become manifestly apparent that the government's attempts to curb inflation have not been successful in that they have not had any effect in reducing unemployment.

Finally, the government has allowed the Canadian dollar to reach a level in international monetary markets which, by the Prime Minister's own admission recently in Vancouver, is harming our international trade upon which our economy is vitally dependent. This can be related particularly to the economy of the western grains industry which last year lost $90 million to $100 million as a result of the increased value of the dollar.

The government has suffered the embarrassment of having two of its most articulate ministers resign from the cabinet over its economic policies. In more normal times one would be content to view such resignations as a somewhat unavoidable result of the interplay of strong personalities. However, when one examines the figures of the labour force contained in the press release for the week ending April 17, he finds that the unadjusted rate of unemployment is 7.8 per cent. When one also remembers that the increase in unemployment is the largest in 13 years, one begins to understand some of the true and bitter realities of the current state of our economy.

• (5:50 p.m.)

It cannot but be cause for the most serious concern by each of us in the House when we remember that the unemployment figures to which I have referred do not include the effect on the Canadian labour force of the several hundred thousand young people who will be leaving our secondary schools, technical colleges and universities to seek either permanent or temporary employment. Let us also remember that at about this time of year a very large percentage of the people undergoing training courses sponsored by the Department of Manpower and Immigration will be coming onto the labour market.

Notwithstanding the infinitely broader and perhaps even more fundamental question of the effects of automation on the concept of full employment in a highly industrialized and specialized society such as we have, we must remember that not only is the work ethic still dominant in Canada but more important is the fact that work is a basic necessity for the individual's well-being as well as that of the nation collectively. In our society one is defined largely in terms of what he does to earn his living. I do not suggest that this is a correct concept, but it is an inescapable fact. Thus, when one is deprived of the opportunity to earn his living he becomes deprived of much of his personal sense of worth.

The sociological and psychological effects of mass unemployment, particularly amongst our young, well educated people, our skilled tradesmen and technicians, is an evil which must be rooted out of our society before it leads to the most destructive consequences. No longer are our people prepared to accept such conditions as inevitable features of a free enterprise economy. If the government cannot find the solution to the malignancy of massive unemployment, I have not the slightest doubt that the radical forces in this country will be joined by a great many of our younger citizens who are, understandably, disillusioned with the inability of the government, with all its massive resources, to lead this country in a manner which enables those who are capable and desirous of working to find appropriate employment.

Mr. Speaker, it is all very well for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to say that he accepts the responsibility for unemployment, but I ask: What are the practical effects of such a declaration? Does it in any significant way ease the soul-destroying anguish of the unemployed father whose insurance benefits have expired and who, still being unable to find employment because of the government's economic policies, must now resort to the indignity of seeking welfare to sustain his family? I can assure you that the Prime Minister's words are of no comfort whatever.

There is an old cliché which states that poverty is not a disgrace. I say that in this country, in this day and age, poverty brought about in large measure by the government's deliberate policies is not only a disgrace but a moral condemnation of our whole society. We are not without control over our economic destiny and when the government embarks on certain courses of action it is because it has chosen them over others. The policies which the present government has pursued in attempting to manage the economy reflect the most insensitive aspects of nineteenth century economic thinking.

One can only hope that on some glorious day in the next few weeks, possibly on the occasion of the presentation of the budget to this House next month, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and his chief advisers will be dragged into the twentieth century, notwithstanding the resistance which they will obviously offer to the pursuit of policies which reflect and serve the needs of the average Canadian as opposed to satisfying the view of the government's economic advisers whose advice, presuming it has been accepted, has so disastrously affected our country.

Mr. Speaker, figures recently released by the government indicate that its battle against inflation could well result in its being routed out of office by a justifiably angered population. The trend in the first quarter of this year indicates that if inflation continues to grow at its present rate we shall have nearly 6 per cent inflation for the whole year. Once again, people on fixed incomes or modest pensions, who are supposed to be the beneficiaries of the government's anti-inflationary policies, will be the most cruelly affected. We must also consider the effect of this renewed round of inflationary pressures on interest rates generally in our economy.

In the Globe and Mail of today I noted in the financial section an article entitled "Interest rate rise looms". The article dealt in general terms with the effect on interest rates in the United States of the current international monetary difficulties in Europe, as well as the general reappearance of inflationary factors in the economy. I should like to quote one paragraph from that article because of its relevance to Canada. It reads:

> An indication of the kind of problems posed to potential borrowers by today's capital market conditions is Quebec's continuing hesitation over its planned 100 million dollars (United States) issue in New York. Postponed once because of market uncertainties, this is currently scheduled for early next week. But the province's financial managers remain very concerned about disturbed market conditions, and it would not be at all surprising if the issue were postponed again.

Mr. Speaker, when borrowers become apprehensive about borrowing because of existing interest rates, or provisions in their borrowing contracts to provide for adjustments according to market fluctuations, or when lenders refuse to do so unless borrowers agree to escalator clauses in the borrowing market, then the market reaches a situation which prohibits growth because the capital investment on which our economy is so dependent becomes simply too speculative and risky for either the borrower or the lender.

When mortgage rates—I am speaking of prime mortgages—command interest rates of 10 per cent and 11 per cent as they have in recent months, and when businessmen must pay similar rates or even higher in order to borrow money needed for their day to day operations, one sees just how blatantly ineffective the government's so-called anti-inflationary policies have been. What disturbs me is that our chartered banks, trust and insurance companies and other major lenders having tasted the sweet blood of double-figured interest rates will not be content to have interest rates return to sensible levels. Again, I think it is quite clear that the government's record in attempting to use its influence and authority to drive down interest rates has been singularly ineffective.

On March 18 there appeared a very timely and forthright editorial in the Globe and Mail on Canada's chartered banks, entitled "Their account is overdrawn". I should like to quote the first paragraph of this editorial.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should bring to the attention of hon. members that it is six o'clock. The hon. member has about five minutes remaining to him by virtue of the order passed earlier this day. Is it the wish of hon. members that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) be allowed to conclude his remarks now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ritchie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should also like to thank the House for its courtesy. I was about to quote an editorial which reads in part as follows:

> Things are tough all over, as the spokesmen for Canada's chartered banks were saying just the other day. So they have sought unanimous solace in an adjustment of the charges they make for most services. There will be a 33 per cent increase in charges on current accounts, a 27 per cent increase in the cost of writing personal cheques, and a 33 per cent increase in the charge for paying utility bills through bank branches.

Mr. Speaker, I shall leave that point and pass on to my last point of disagreement with the government's management of our economy, which involves the unpegging of the Canadian dollar. At a time when Canadian industry has been experiencing inflation at home increasingly strong competition from other countries for its world markets and excessive demands by some parts of the economy, the government has for some mysterious reason seen fit to aggravate their difficulties by unpegging our dollar and allowing it to rise to parity with the United States dollar. In fairness I must say that the Minister of Finance and the government have been consistent in refusing to alter the decision once it had been made. No matter how harmful or manifestly wrong it is shown to be for Canada, they will nevertheless continue to cling to it.

Mr. Speaker, in the Montreal Gazette of May 6, 1971, there appeared an article by that paper's financial columnist, Mr. John Meyer, entitled "And what if our dollar had been repegged?". It reads:

• (6:00 p.m.)

> Finance Minister Benson has refused to be rushed into repegging the Canadian dollar. The wisdom of that course should now be readily apparent in the difficulties being experienced by West Germany and, to a lesser degree, Holland, Belgium, Austria and Switzerland. The deutschemark has been formally set afloat and the currencies of the other countries are floating in fact, if not yet formally proclaimed to be doing so.
>
> Had the Canadian dollar been repegged, it too would be under the sort of pressure being felt in Europe and which, in the long run, courts national bankruptcy to attempt to resist indefinitely.

Finally, he says:

> It's extremely doubtful that the United States feels any serious compulsion to go beyond the current adjustments in its policies. Why should it? It's the principal beneficiary of any upward revaluation, relative to the U.S. dollar, or the deutschemark or any other currency, including the Canadian dollar. The higher the foreign currency, the less competitive are imports, the more competitive American exports...
>
> What is being demonstrated here is the extent to which, in a context of fixed currency relationships, the policies adopted in the United States can influence those of its trading partners. When those policies are taken to extremes, as they have been the past two years, they can cause similarly extreme reactions abroad until relief is obtained by breaking away from a fixed relationship.

I think it is time for the Canadian government to look at the repegging of the Canadian dollar, even if it is done in the so-called narrow range, with a crawling peg or by some other mechanism. I think our exports will be hurt badly if we do not look very closely at the value of the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Speaker: It being after six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume at 8 p.m.

At 6.05 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my personal approach to the economic question is dictated by a strong sense of relativity. In every crisis I have witnessed, in Canada or abroad, I have seen very competent men, men of demonstrated good will, taking completely opposite positions, offering contradictory solutions. The good remedies of some may have failed and the bad remedies of others may have succeeded. This may be the reason why some newspapers print in separate but opposite columns the differing opinions of experts, namely to pinpoint their variety of opinions.

I drew the conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that economics is an inaccurate science and a difficult art where humility is appropriate, and even essential. That is why I consider as somewhat out of place certain opinions expressed this afternoon, in particular by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman)—who is usually such a likable fellow—who terms the government as "ignorant, incompetent, dishonest and arrogant".

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spoke somewhat in the same vein, using the words "complacency, drifting, creating massive unemployment", etc., and charging the government with systematically creating unemployment, as if the control of inflation was not justified in terms of protecting jobs, the incomes of people on fixed income and our exports.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, there are a good many factors involved in an economic situation which relate to tax policy, monetary policy, industrial policy, wage policy, federal-provincial relations, employer-employee relations, international conditions both economic and political, factors over which the government often has little or no control whatsoever, psychological factors the success of which may not be assured even with the best planning and the best administration, especially in an open economy, within a liberal or joint undertakings system such as the one we have in Canada. The best ship has to face the storm!

This is the reason why it seems to me that the main thing is to strike a balance among these ever-changing factors, in the best possible way, to act with common sense, with well-informed, enlightened, alert, and flexible empiricism, and, to make a long story short, to do whatever seems best and let the hens cackle, as the saying goes.

These remarks may appear naive to some people but, as far as I am concerned, I prefer to appear naive than to be so.

What did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) say to us this afternoon? Three things: First, that one must not judge the economy of a country on one single index, the unemployment index, although it is very disquieting and important. He suggested that others be considered, such as the gross national product, the sales index, bank loans, interest rates, investments, house building, and on the basis of these other indicators, he concluded that——the economy was moving at an accelerated rate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this makes sense to me. One must not judge complex situation on the basis of a single index.

He reminded us of measures taken by the federal and provincial governments to solve the unemployment problem: monetary, fiscal, social and administrative measures. He suggested that Canadians be patient and persevere a little, as we say in Drummondville, so as to know the effect of his action, adding that he was quite ready to adjust slightly his range if necessary.

This seems wise to me, Mr. Speaker, this spells good sense to me.

Third, he told us that the opponents of the government recommend different action, according to the party or even to the wing of the party to which they belong, according to the various stages of their intellectual development. Then he quoted some authors, some institutions which share the opinion of the government about the approach to solve Canada's present economic difficulties.

All this, Mr. Speaker, appears to me as a normal, thoughtful, well-balanced position in these circumstances, and I do think that what the Minister of Finance said this afternoon will meet with general acceptance from the public opinion.

The motion of the hon. member for Waterloo calls upon the government to adopt a planned investment policy, to stimulate the development of secondary manufacturing. Unfortunately he did not elaborate in his much too short address. However, having heard his views often enough, I think I know them.

What is involved here, what is hinted, is that we do not have enough planning, that we do not stimulate secondary manufacturing adequately or well enough. We know that the hon. member for Waterloo believes in planning whereas many other people, even socialists or their sympathizers, nowadays look in a rather detached way at it; apparently his faith has remained intact.

However, through the trips I made recently to the USSR and to Germany I was confirmed in my view that even the most adamant advocates of planning nowadays display some detachment.

I personally feel that governments in general should do more and better planning without discrimination, with intelligence, flexibility and in all freedom, as said a reputed writer. I think that the present government is doing so increasingly, better and better, with the avowed or implied co-operation of industry and the provinces. But, of course, such things are never done well enough. There is always room for improvement.

But it is not because we do not have a five-year program that there is no planning. The hon. member for Waterloo often reminds me of those old constitutionalists who believed that there was no English constitution because it was not written in one document, because it could not be put in one's pocket.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Secondary industry is not having an easy time in this country at the moment, I will admit. This is known and recognized by the government, and the reasons are also well known. Canada has a small domestic market, there is a restriction to trade in the world and, consequently, a lack of economies of scale and specialization in many cases.

Mr. Woolliams: A free dollar was out of competition with the rest of the world.

Mr. Pepin: I will come to that.

Mr. Woolliams: I don't know who wrote that, but I am just telling you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order.

Mr. Pepin: I am well aware of a few things, and some others that my friend is not aware of. The government is working hard to improve the basic viability of this important sector of our economy. This is done by providing assistance covering all stages of the product cycle and helping in the rationalization of sectors in difficulty. It is also being done by gaining access to wider markets and by active participation in international negotiations.

If I had more time, Mr. Speaker, I would indicate the extent of negotiations going on right now in all parts of the world in which this government is having some success recently as, for instance, the EEC enlargement negotiations.

The government is also providing assistance to marketing by exporters all around the world. These efforts are bearing fruit, as witness the improvement in the manufacturing sector of the Canadian economy, in output, productivity, employment, investment and export of manufactured products.

On a number of occasions I have told the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) that manufactured products constitute a greater and greater part of our export performance. They have increased from about 10 per cent at the beginning of the sixties to something like 40 per cent at the present time. Those who say that there has been no major improvement in the situation pertaining to secondary industries should look at the facts.

I recognize, however, that the forward trend was interrupted last year. I am aware of the monetary situation not only in Canada but in the world in that period. There was slow demand in Canada and in the United States, labour and other cost increases, high interest rates, low returns to producers. In such circumstances, everything that is relatively marginal in the secondary industry sector is, of course, subject to tremendous pressure.

Mr. Thompson: Bad government policy.

Mr. Pepin: Is that the extent of the contribution of the hon. member to this debate?

Mr. Thompson: Give us time.

Mr. Pepin: A number of these factors, Mr. Speaker, are in the process of being corrected. My department is doing all it can to counter these forces, with some success. First of all, our services as a department are becoming more competent, more aggressive and are being better received by industry. Research and development funds are increasing; they increased 27 per cent in 1970 over 1969, and 24 per cent in 1971 over 1970. This constitutes a sum of $85 million which is being provided to industry for research and development.

Our whole programs have been improved. For example, the PAIT program has been improved in the sense that what used to be loans are now grants, and consequently the program is much more popular. Restructuring of industry in certain centres which are in difficulty is a major preoccupation of the department. For example, the GAAP program has been extended to cover the textile and footwear industries. Some special programs have been created. There is, for example, the export subsidy to ships which is already a major success. My friends are aware of the fact that already $100 million worth of ships have been ordered from Canadian shipyards for export and there is more to come.

[Translation]

The Export Development Corporation is also doing more and more with more and more success. In 1969, the amount of export insurance reached $242 million; in 1970, this figure was increased to $500 million and will at least remain at the same level in 1971.

As regards financing, the Corporation has financed $65 million worth of exports in 1969, $100 million in 1970 and $200 million during the first three months of 1971.

Mr. Speaker, I am trying to show how the government is trying to compensate some difficulties inherent to the manufacturing sector through other kinds of assistance.

The same applies to the marketing sector. Our exhibitions and missions are contributing to increase our exports in the industrial sector.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

There are two examples, Mr. Speaker, that I want to mention in conclusion to illustrate the fact that we are having success in developing exports for manufactured products and, consequently, that we are helping to strengthen the secondary manufacturing sector. The value of the average annual export sales of Canadian railway rolling-stock over the last five years was $13.6 million. During the past 12 months—listen to this—the Canadian industry has broken into several new market areas with sales of 35 locomotives to East Africa, 54 to Nigeria, 6 to Jamaica, 57 to Yugoslavia, 46 commuter cars to the New York subway, 26 tank cars to Mexico and 604 gondola-type ore cars to Australia, for a total value of about $80 million. This again compares with an average of $13.6 million in the last five years. It indicates the amount of marketing support being offered by the government.

May I cite one further example and give one more figure. Yesterday, in Montreal, I announced that the Marconi Company was getting a $23 million order from Iran. This is the result of the opening of a line of credit by the Export Development Corporation to the government of Iran in order to allow that government to buy in Canada communication equipment. That is another indication of what is being done to strengthen secondary industry—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise).

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister had finished. I wanted to hear everything he had to say so that I might be able to answer him. This is very important.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I hope the hon. member recognizes that according to the agreement made in the House while I was present this afternoon there was to be no extension of time.

Mr. Woolliams: Not even if there is consent, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): If the hon. member wishes to seek agreement, that is different. The original agreement was made by unanimous consent. Does the House consent to break the agreement?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker. It was a pretty good agreement. It was entered into in good faith. Let us keep it.

Mr. Woolliams: Where is the hon. member's consideration?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would have been willing to listen to the rest of the minister's statement which would have taken only a few moments. From this statement we can however guess how he feels about his government's administration.

Of course I would have been quite surprised if the minister had condemned his government's policy. I do not think the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) would have had the nerve of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), for instance, or of the former Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) who have both severely condemned this government's economic policy.

The contribution of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to this debate is rather insignificant, because we already knew that he was going to commend the approach of this party and of the cabinet, of which he is a member.

However, the people who might read his remarks as well as those of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will completely disagree with both of them.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate and thank the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) for having introduced this motion this afternoon. It puts forward a number of quite acceptable principles. However, its success will depend on the performance of those called upon to apply them and to establish, as requested, special programs designed to move the economy to high employment.

In fact, the Liberal party tried to achieve such objectives, but, it seems to me, in a somewhat abnormal fashion. It proceeded from bottom to top, whereas it should have done the opposite.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), with his subsidies program, also tried to bring about a high level of employment, but with a view to solving the production problems. He attempted to settle non-existent problems, for there are no production problems in Canada at the present time. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has just said that he does his best to increase our export trade because we have too many products.

A war is now being waged among the provinces, because of a glut rather than a scarcity of products. The provincial authorities are now erecting walls between the provinces to prevent interprovincial trade.

Not so long ago, I heard the premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Ross Thatcher, say that the main problem now is overproduction.

At a time when we find overproduction everywhere, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion generously subsidizes the industries in order to help them produce more. All those amounts that are given out do not reach the consumers because the problem does not exist at the production level but at the consumer level. That is where the real problem is.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard).]

Instead of subsidizing production, the minister and the government should have subsidized the consumers. Thus, consumers, particularly those who are in need—whether they are unemployed, handicapped people or older people—could have benefited from the production at their disposal and through consumer subsidies they could have ordered from producers and industrialists the kind of production they want.

But the opposite is the case at the present time; producers are subsidized and there are some who would like consumers to buy the goods that are made for them. But as the system in which we live is increasingly automated, those subsidies given out to the industry are not always profitable to workers but they are profitable to the machines that replace them.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I just read a report stating that some steelworks had been constructed in Japan recently where not a single worker is needed for the production of parts. One is needed at the door to direct the iron towards the works and, when the process is completed, another is required to ship the product.

The same situation can be found fairly often in a large number of industries, and we are told that in the near future a similar process will be used everywhere.

When industry is subsidized, it is fairly often the purchase of machinery to replace the workers that is subsidized. Consumers do not benefit from such subsidies and yet those are paid with their taxes.

The motion submitted by the hon. member for Waterloo states, in part:

—emergency economic measures to move the economy to high employment—

That is a change in the New Democratic Party's use of terms. Not so long ago, full employment was what we spoke of; now, we speak of a high level of employment because, when you give the matter some thought, it is increasingly difficult to achieve, full employment what with machinery, automation, cybernetics even.

The motion also calls for:

—expansionary monetary and fiscal policies

But no ways and means are indicated. There are means of extending the monetary field, but care must be exercised. It must indeed be noted that over the past 10, 20, 30 years, there has been a monetary expansion, but this has been achieved through debts. We are still paying interest on debts contracted 30 or 40 years ago. Such a monetary expansion is not favourable to the development of Canada, or to an improvement in the Canadian standard of living.

Expansion in the fiscal area is also advocated. That worries me because I have learned from experience in public affairs that every move toward fiscal expansion has always been to increase taxes. The only fiscal changes that have been made have been tax increases. Therefore, this request worries me a lot.

The government is also called upon —to achieve full potential growth through a planned investment and foreign ownership policy—

Mr. Speaker, I think this is acceptable with regard to local investments, but we must be careful about foreign capital. Indeed, we have seen the premiers of nearly all Canadian provinces go around the world in order to get foreign capital. But each time we succeeded in getting foreign countries interested in investing capital here, we paid for it. Each year, we must let profits go out of the country back to those investors. The fact that those sums or benefits go back to their foreign sources means that we are deprived of that much in capital assets.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that local investment should be promoted to a much greater extent than foreign investment. But how is that going to be achieved?

It happens, Mr. Speaker, that in private industry or in business we lack funds. Savings accumulate here and there, but they are attracted by high interest rates offered by the federal, provincial and particularly municipal governments. The three levels of government are at war to attract the savings of individuals, because in the first place a rather high interest is paid, and also because garantees are offered on bond issues sold to the public. Thus all those savings are drained off by the public enterprise and none are left for private enterprises.

The Social Credit advocates the following solution. The government, through the Bank of Canada, should make funds available to non-profit public corporations which render some services to the Canadian people. Thus, individual savings would be available to private enterprise. We could then refer to local investments, because there would be some capital to invest.

Those are the few considerations which I wanted to state during my contribution to this debate on the motion under consideration.

The motion concludes with a request that a stimulus be provided for the development of secondary manufacturing. Well, Mr. Speaker, this request should have been complied with a long time ago.

There is a serious lack of secondary industries in Canada. We are still only extracting natural resources that we are mostly shipping as raw materials.

A few moments ago, I was referring to the case of a new highly automated Japanese steel mill. I did not say that this was the first one. In fact, there are many others and we are aware that Japan is a big importer of iron, coal and copper from Canada, but they import these as raw materials, to be refined and processed.

I think that in such a field, Canada would find it profitable to facilitate the establishment of industries to promote the creation of secondary industries, in order to process our raw materials here.

Our country, particularly the northern area, abounds in ores of various kinds and we are satisfied with burying our miners underground to extract the ore, ship it to foreign countries where it is refined and then shipped back to us for our own use. There is no rhyme or reason to this, and immediate steps should be taken to change this situation.

Thanks to our labour, equipment and technology we could be much more self-sufficient than we are today, and it would be to our advantage.

Those are the few considerations which I wanted to express tonight in connection with the motion before the House.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, it was rather refreshing to hear the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). He talked about the problems of the secondary industry, and unemployment. I thought back to 1962. At that time we pegged the dollar in order to permit our secondary industries and primary producers to compete in the world and regain full employment. At that time some hon. members, including some who are still here and the former Secretary of State for External Affairs who has gone to the other place, wandered up and down the land and brought our government to a minority position. Today the problem is that the government has freed the dollar and we have priced ourselves out of world-markets, no matter how you dish it out. That is the ironic part about politics.

The government does not now, and never has had, a comprehensive, realistic policy on foreign investment. We have heard a lot about it. At best, the government has instituted a series of ad hoc arrangements which mean that it is responding to one crisis after another. It is known as a crisis government. The government has substituted brinkmanship for sound, rational investment policy. The results for Canada have been catastrophic. As a result, we have high unemployment together with inflation, although the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said he had inflation licked. Inflation has licked the Prime Minister, and unemployment is going to lick this government.

• (8:40 p.m.)

The Canadian government's decision to save Home Oil for Canadian investors stands in glaring counter-distinction to this and the Quebec governments' intention to finance the James Bay project with foreign, mainly United States, capital to the tune of $2 billion, regardless of its effect on the ecology. So once again western Canada is discriminated against. Although Home Oil is one of the biggest independent companies in Canada, the government has said no, it cannot be sold to foreign investors. But it is fine if Quebec, through this government, brings in $2 billion of foreign investment to take over the resources of that province, when the province of Quebec—I hope Quebeckers will hear my voice through the media—has one of the highest unemployment rates in Canada. We are going to give away electrical energy. We are using United States capital to finance Quebec's resources and to give Americans jobs that the workers in the province of Quebec should have.

Mr. Boulanger: What would you do about it?

Measures to Improve Economy

Mr. Woolliams: If you will just listen I will tell you what can be done about it. This government has shown a glaring inability to do anything about it. There are certain facts that would constrain a rational approach by the government in the field of foreign investment. With respect to our foreign investment policy as it is applied to natural resource development, it is obvious that the federal government cannot have such a policy unless that policy intimately and meaningfully implicates the provincial governments. The reason for this is simple. It is the constitutional prerogative of the provinces to develop their own natural resources.

We all know what happened at the time of the Bennett government when the natural resources of western Canada were returned to the provinces. The federal government has only a limited role to play in this area. I agree that is the case, but it has to be worked out with the provinces. However, this limited role can be an important one if the federal government and the provinces can agree to certain guidelines relating to foreign investment and natural resource development. Such guidelines will always be impossible to achieve if the federal government persists in operating an economy wherein provincial governments find it difficult, if not impossible, to attain their own economic objectives. The reason Bourassa and the Quebec Liberal government has decided not to wait for Ottawa is that they, like Ontario and Alberta, are convinced that the federal government's economic policies are not in the best interests of Canada as a whole or any individual province.

The important thing to underline in any discussion concerning intergovernmental co-operation is the need for the federal government to pledge that it will do everything in its power to ensure that Canada fully utilizes all of its economic potential. A full employment, growth-oriented, dynamic economy ensures that Canada will gain economic degrees of freedom to pursue an independent, rational investment policy regarding our natural resources. The reason the Quebec government is not waiting for the federal government is that Quebec is convinced that the federal government's economic policies are not in Quebec's own interests; and neither are they in the interests of western Canada.

If Ottawa is not providing the economic climate which is conducive to Quebec's growth, then Quebec will go outside Canada to get the moneys available to develop Quebec, as it has had to do, at the same time handing over its jobs to United States workers. In the same sort of way, Ontario is not prepared to stand still while Ottawa screws up the Canadian economy. Intergovernmental co-operation on economic matters is impossible so long as the provinces are convinced that Ottawa's economics are not in their own best interests. This government will not even discuss a problem so important to the welfare of all Canadians at a constitutional conference.

We were asked what we would do when we formed the government. After establishing a full employment, economic policy—and we on this side of the House have made it clear to the government, through my leader, on many occasions how we would get the economy moving again at full strength—we would have to tackle in a meaningful way the problem of foreign investment. I do not have much time to go into detail, but these are some of the actions that we would consider taking. First of all, we need proper information. There is a lot of false information concerning foreign investment, for political reasons. What we need is proper information about the actions of foreign subsidiaries in Canada. Without information there can be no clear understanding of what these subsidiaries are doing and what Canada might want them to do differently. Increased financial disclosure by private companies is necessary in order to come to a decision; I think everybody would agree with that.

Secondly, having obtained proper information we would need to decide in which sectors of the Canadian economy foreign investment should be restricted or regulated. If we pulled out foreign investment in Canada tomorrow, it would be like pulling the plug out of a big bathtub; we would just hear the water gurgling, and further unemployment would be the result. We must consider, first, the importance of the sector to economic planning. By economic planning I mean devising appropriate rules and regulations and establishing the proper economic climate. Then we must consider the policy-leverage aspects of the sector, that is, the importance of the sector in allowing the government's economic policies to become more effective.

Then we must consider, if we are going to be nationalistic at all, the cultural sensitivity of the sector, that is, its importance as a factor in the establishment and maintenance of a Canadian identity. We have to ask ourselves the question: Do we want to remain Canadian?

Thirdly, the key sector concept raises two questions. Is there adequate Canadian capital and entrepreneurship to man these sectors? It is no good our saying that there is enough capital in Canada to build a pipe line from the Arctic down through the Mackenzie Valley to the mid-west. As a matter of fact, it would be a shorter distance to transport natural gas or crude petroleum from King Christian Island to eastern Canada were the pipe line is. It is 1,500 miles closer than the Mackenzie Valley route. Yet I question whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) even knows this. He has no policy—only the kind of breeze that he blows from time to time—and speaks without knowledge, as he showed us the other day when he made his statement.

The second question we should ask ourselves is, how one can be sure that Canadian-controlled enterprises will behave in a way that coincides more closely with Canadian national interests? It is frequently claimed that sufficient Canadian savings exist to provide for Canadian-owned investments in the full amount needed for the development of our country. The argument is that foreign subsidiaries have been expanding 85 per cent through the use of retained earnings generated in Canada and only 15 per cent through the use of the inflow of new capital. In these terms the adequacy of savings begs the question whether these savings would have been generated without the original foreign initiative, and the question regarding the right and advisability of Canadians to expropriate these savings for their own use.

When we save money in the bank, our savings are invested in various ways. But there is a need for foreign capital. My point is: How do you determine just where it should be used, and in what sector, so as to create a climate in which the economy can be kept moving, at the same time retaining some form of Canadian stamp or control?

A more relevant proposal is the provision of further incentives to holders of Canadian institutionalized savings—that is, mutual funds, pension funds and insurance funds—to invest in Canadian enterprises. At the extreme, these incentives might be made a requirement. The stimulation of Canadian entrepreneurship is a far more difficult question since it is by no means easy to locate it and to quantify its potential.

A proposal in this area must provide for two phases, one short-run and another long-run. In the short run it is necessary to provide financial incentives and assistance to the operation of new firms in key sectors, including assistance with the importation of technology and the arrangement of management contracts. In the long run it is necessary to produce greater numbers of entrepreneurs and people with the kind of managerial skills that we need. Representatives of business and of schools of administration should be encouraged to research this question and, where possible, to adjust their programs to provide more extensive and appropriate learning experiences.

The claim for Canadian equity participation in Canadian firms, either minority, majority or controlling, is not a claim that the view of Canadian corporate owners will necessarily coincide with that of Canadian governments; there will be some confrontations. Rather, it is based on the view that Canadian owners and managers will be more receptive to and have a better appreciation of the reasons underlying Canadian government policies than will foreign owners and managers. We have to be shown that. It has to be proven.

• (8:50 p.m.)

A number of proposals are made which will help sensitize foreign-owned firms in Canada to Canadian government policy. First, federally-incorporated companies should be required to have at least three Canadian citizens as members of the Canadian board of directors, at least two of whom should be outsiders who are not connected with the company. This would ensure exposure of the board to Canadian opinion and view. At the same time they should show a fair profit and return.

In order to sensitize foreign subsidiaries to Canadian conditions, the Canadian directors should be provided with lists of their duties as directors, for which they should be held legally responsible. This should be the case in respect of the companies acts of the provincial governments or the federal government. The board of directors should be held responsible for its decisions. This proposal is an attempt to prevent the appointment of Canadian directors becoming a rubber-stamp operation and it is a recognition of the need for the Canadian government to state more precisely what is expected from foreign subsidiaries. The United States does this, and Canada can do it. I do not think anyone would think for one moment that the United States would not continue to invest in this country provided there was the kind of confidence in Canada that there should be. One of the reasons the United States is investing today in Germany and Japan is that it has lost confidence in Canada, and I put the onus for this on the government.

A policy toward foreign takeovers should be developed in line with the establishment of key sectors. Foreign takeovers of Canadian firms in key sectors should be monitored and restricted, although not necessarily disallowed. A takeover in a key sector might be permitted where there was a commitment to make equity available to Canadians over a number of years. When the stock was issued for the Alberta gas line, which was controlled, engineered and initiated by the provincial government, every citizen of Alberta had the opportunity to invest up to $20 in the stock of that company.

An hon. Member: Non-voting shares.

Mr. Woolliams: They were not non-voting shares. You make your speech and I will make mine. Those $20 shares are today worth $57. It was a guarantee by the provincial government. The same thing could be done federally to develop the proper sectors and resources of our country. This is not difficult, but we have to start now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, when I first read this motion I wondered how it was that the Liberal members had proposed an opposition motion. There is nothing at all in the motion with which the government disagrees, as far as I can see. Indeed, if I read this motion correctly it has to do with new expansionary monetary and fiscal policies, which I think is the objective of a great many members on all sides of the House.

With regard to promoting secondary industry, about which we have spoken on this side, the minister mentioned the methods being used to accomplish this end. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) said in the House tonight that we are dealing with the question of foreign ownership. Therefore, it is not difficult to agree with this motion. Indeed, I am glad to know that the proposers of the motion have also come to the conclusion that the people who will solve our unemployment problem are the entrepreneurs, those involved in secondary industry.

In the few minutes at my disposal I should like to deal with an issue which will come before this House and the country in the very near future. There are two schools of thought as to whether we should adopt restrictive or expansionary fiscal policies. I feel that the restrictive school of thought should be brought to a conclusion. There is not a more kind measure this government could adopt than to give Mr. Young his walking papers and thank him very much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Otto: We should tell him he has done a good job 30 years too late and that his ideas—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is that the Liberal position?

Mr. Otto: I would say it is. I think members opposite will find that a great many Liberals throughout the country, not only in this House, are inclined to accept the record, and it is quite evident. It has been expounded in the last year or so that restrictive measures do not work. Indeed, expansionist measures and the adoption of the ideas of some of our new economists such as Miss Diane Cohen, Mr. Weldon and Mr. Friedman, will have a great bearing on the policies of this government. Therefore, I think the motion is quite good.

Let me say to members opposite who proposed this motion that one of the essentials to a successful conclusion is this: If we are indeed going to adopt expansionist measures, we will have to bring our economy and our industry into greater efficiency. We will be faced with this problem in the forthcoming budget. If we are to keep inflation under control we must be very selective in making tax concessions. There is an argument at the present time that if we allow tax concessions across the board there will be an inflationary push. The hon. gentleman opposite shakes his head, but I suggest there will be an inflationary push.

If there is already a push and a squeeze between manufacturers' costs and the sales position, and you throw $500 million or $600 million into the consumers' hands, there will be immediately an upward price movement. If this will mean an inflationary push, we must think of another method. We must give tax concessions to corporations and businesses: it is their reserves which are decimated. They cannot get loans to buy new equipment and machinery because the banks know they have a poor profit picture and that their reserves are down to nil.

If we gave tax concessions to the corporations they would have to make a profit by selling their goods at a low price. If we did this, just think what hon. members across the way might say. Everyone over there would rise with indignation and ask what we had done. They would suggest we had given tax concessions to business and nothing to the poor consumers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What have you done?

Mr. Otto: Just what we intended to do. I ask the hon. gentleman opposite how new policies can be adopted when they are ingrained with the old policies. What gentlemen opposite are saying is that we should adopt new concepts and new expansionist policies, but do not show any favouritism toward business—give the concessions to the consumer. This is the position they take in the motion. The last part of the motion refers specifically to the fact that the people who will succeed in getting other people to work are the entrepreneurs. We have to come to this conclusion in some way.

With regard to secondary industry, I should like to direct the attention of the House to the most recent United States labour figures. It is surprising to find that 63 per cent of American people are employed in the service industries. That covers everything from superintendent of a plant to a salesman, the sales manager, the executive, junior executives, lawyers, architects and engineers. Only 37 per cent are employed in the factories operating machines and producing goods. There is already an impetus for a large number of Canadians to work in factories producing goods. In a short time we will not be saying we are the hewers of wood and the drawers of water; we will be complaining we are the ones making the goods by working in the factories and the Americans are the ones who occupy the high positions in industry. There is already a movement in that direction and I think it will continue for the next 10 or 15 years. We are already considering the next phase, which is foreign ownership. I will deal with that matter in a minute.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, this government should recognize that if we are to have any influence over secondary industry we must re-think two positions we have adopted over the last five years. I believe hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have already brought this matter to the attention of the government. If we continue our regional incentive programs it is completely incongruous to say we will promote industry in those regions where industry really is not suited, and at the same time try to bring more efficiency into our economy. This is impossible, because what we are really saying in all our regional incentive programs is that the government will pay from $2,500 to possibly $10,000 per job for an industry to establish itself in an area, which economically does not make sense. This only deprives other, more efficient areas of this type of industry.

So we are at cross-purposes. We may decide to put an industry in northern Ontario or northern Quebec a long way from the market and in an area where there are transportation and technological problems. We say we will pay an industry to go there, and at the same time complain that the industry is not efficient. Of course it is not efficient because it is competing with the Germans and Japanese who are very sophisticated.

While speaking of the German market, we must consider their position in respect of free enterprise and anti-combines legislation. In the last two years, hon. members will be interested to know, the German coal industry found itself in a serious predicament. The industry was competitive; it had about 57 plants and 103 enterprises, none of which was making money. As a result, two years ago the German government sponsored and promoted a combine, the Ruhr Coal A.G. This is a company which now controls all the German coal producers. It is working toward an efficient combine and monopoly in order to make the German coal industry prosper, while we on the other hand have not acknowledged that there is a time when we must re-think our ideas in respect of industries in which an element of competition no longer applies.

In some industries there is no competition. There are large corporations which probably tolerate a smaller competitor merely as a figurehead. The fact is, however, that a certain segment of our industrial enterprise has no competition. We should accept that fact and promote some sort of combine or monopoly to make it more efficient, rather than have each enterprise lose money.

This brings me to the question of foreign control. I believe the policy the government will introduce on this issue will be found to be acceptable and welcome to the whole country. But I have never worried too much about control in respect of Canadian industry. The real issue is efficiency. There is a second and possibly just as important consideration. We as Canadians must decide which industries are to be exploited and promoted, although not on a worldwide basis because we are not concerned about a multinational corporation as an investment in Tanganyika or Brazil even though it would be more profitable to establish it there than in New Brunswick or Ontario. We must consider it from the Canadian point of view.

After more than 22 years in business I have learned that there is no school, university or educational process within which to train executive cadre, other than apprenticeship. It is an unfortunate fact in multinational corporations that when it comes to the man who makes the decisions, someone is always sent here to manage. So we have nowhere in which to exercise apprenticeship. Therefore, the United States executive is much more efficient. We should have a policy which would allow our young people to enter the executive cadre and assume control of corporations. We should regulate this matter.

There is another element which possibly has never been emphasized. The United States industrial enterprise is very great and has a vast accumulation of capital. Our presumption always has been that capital comes from savings. I deny this. Venture capital, or risk capital, does not come from the money we accumulate by scrimping and saving. This money is used to buy insurance policies, something nice and safe. The money which is invested and reinvested is the money which comes from dividends. If we look at the record of dividend payments and reinvestment of dividends we will find that a fantastic proportion of the dividends received by a shareholder are put back into the market. We do not have this.

The United States has the world's largest reserves of capital investment. So, as an hon. member said, it is important to ensure that eventually Canadians will be able to buy this equity and obtain shares in order to reinvest the money. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I strongly supported the white paper on tax reform because it emphasized the need to provide a wider distribution of shares in the country.

I do not think any of us would find anything to argue about in this motion. It is a question of timing and a question of emphasis. So far as this motion is concerned, the government has done more than it asks for. Indeed, there is nothing in the motion that we have not done or are not in the process of doing. Therefore I do not find any difficulty in supporting it.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). Having heard them, I only wish that this influence on the policies of the government was a bit more profound. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) during his remarks charged the opposition with being somewhat intemperate in its attack, and with failing to realize that the circumstances in which this country's economy now finds itself are at worst the honest mistakes of honest men attempting to do an honest job in the very imprecise area of economics. We are all aware of this. What makes us intemperate, if such we are, is the distorted value system upon which this government has based its policies.

Perhaps I might illustrate what I mean. This afternoon I listened with absolute horror and total disbelief to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howard, Okanagan Boundary) defend his government's economic policies. In commenting on those remarks I will be employing language which does not come easily to my tongue. However, I make no apology for this because the kind of social philosophy presented to us by the parliamentary secretary can only be described as disgusting by any civilized group of men.

He told us that we could have full employment if we were willing to sacrifice our standard of living. He implied that we would not be willing to make such a sacrifice. For the moment I will leave aside the validity or lack of validity of the direct relationship he implied between high rates of employment and low standards of living. I want to emphasize that a member of the government stood in his place and told us, in effect, that if forced to choose between 600,000 or 700,000 men and women being stripped of their dignity through being denied gainful employment and having to give up the opportunity for some of the niceties of life available to the fortunate third of the people in North America, he would choose the second television set. I thought that today one could only find people with that total absence of social conscience in the works of Charles Dickens.

• (9:10 p.m.)

What an utterly barren, hopelessly antique, totally depraved approach for man to say, "I will fight unemployment only if it does not hurt me. I'm all right, Jack"! Moreover, the direct relationship between the standard of living and the rate of unemployment which the parliamentary secretary postulated simply does not exist. He told us of a secretary who went to work in the full employment economy of Germany and had her wages cut in half. He told us of "three mat" apartments in Tokyo and implied that if we in Canada were to achieve full employment, not only would the parliamentary secretary's friends be forced to sell their second Skidoo but all of us would be forced to live like rats in a hole. What a piece of sophistry! What a fatuous bit of histrionics hoping to pass as argument!

No one can deny that the standard of living in the full employment economies of Germany and Japan are below our own. What the parliamentary secretary neglected to tell us was that the standard of living in those two countries is rapidly overtaking our own. What he neglected to tell us was that the standard of living in the full employment economy of Sweden has already surpassed our own.

Then the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce went on to assert that he had heard no new ideas from the opposition, implying that because they were not new they were valueless. If it does not glitter with new paint, it is no good, whether or not it has been tried. There speaks the petty bourgeois Philistine of nineteenth century literature. He said that even with four ears he would not have heard anything of value from this side of the House today. I would suggest to the hon. member that there must be something between the ears before one can attempt to weigh values.

Enough said about the remarks of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. The fact remains that this winter the government had to acknowledge the existence of almost three-quarters of a million unemployed people in Canada. In April, the figure was 659,000, up 9,000 from March. Probably there was and still is further hidden unemployment not measured in the statistics. This situation illustrates vividly the Liberal party's callousness toward people and the total bankruptcy of its economic policies.

Never before in the history of this country did a Prime Minister state before a national audience that it was his government's intention to allow unemployment to rise, if necessary, to 6 per cent to combat inflation. Never before did any federal government knowingly, consciously and with a cool, detached deliberation sentence hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers and their families to the hardships of unemployment. The brutality, the callousness, the studied indifference to the human consequences of this anti-inflationary approach was matched only by its ineptitude. Its ineptitude is measured not only in terms of its social consequences but in terms of its complete failure to deal with the inflationary situation it was supposed to meet. The cost of living figures for the first quarter this year show conclusively that inflation is not licked and that at the same time unemployment is continuing unchecked.

What do the figures in connection with the frightening level of unemployment really mean? We are not talking about statistics; we are talking about hundreds of thousands of human beings. We are not talking only about the unemployed themselves but also about the people who depend upon them and their jobs. These unemployment figures represent human tragedy on a massive scale. They represent fear, want, hopes dashed and confidence undermined. We are not talking about mere figures of 660,000 or 700,000; we are speaking about the immense and continuing suffering, deprivation and spiritual degradation of hundreds of thousands of people as a result of deliberate government policy.

That is why I cannot discuss this subject with any degree of equanimity. Any government that is calculatingly responsible for such a situation and which speaks to me about the just society is guilty of total, complete and unparallelled hypocrisy. No government which has looked at the full cost of unemployment would deliberately choose increased unemployment as the answer to inflation. But that is what the Trudeau government has done. New Democrats, in contrast, state that full employment should be the primary economic goal of government. If some price rises occur with full employment or because of shortages or external circumstances, it is far better and cheaper to compensate the victims of inflation, those on fixed incomes, than to squeeze the life out of the economy and pay the staggering bill for unemployment.

In the short run, the present serious shortage of jobs can only be overcome by priming the economy. The New Democratic Party has been urging the government to undertake the following policies immediately. We have urged the institution of a massive public housing program which would be focused on areas of acute shortage and which would involve the provision of additional mortgage money at reasonable interest rates for low-cost housing. We have advocated the stimulation, acceleration and expansion of anti-pollution programs, including capital aid for sewage and waste treatment facilities.

We have advocated the acceleration of other public works projects, but only after re-evaluating their social usefulness. It may be that new post offices might not be nearly as important as new convalescent or nursing-home beds. Making funds available to the provinces and municipalities for such works would be an important feature of the program we are advocating.

Another short-run policy we have advocated in order to supply jobs for the immense number of people out of work is the increasing of purchasing power by tax relief for low-income groups and by increasing allowances to those on pensions and other fixed incomes, together with the inclusion of a cost of living escalator in all such allowances.

We have advocated the tying of new unemployment insurance benefits to the cost of living index, and the extension of seasonal benefits to meet the present emergency. We have also advocated the provision of funds to increase employment opportunities for young people in the area of services to people, such as child care, convalescent services, assistance to elderly persons, recreation, conservation and public health.

To maintain full employment in the long run, this party also advocated a number of policies—among other things, changes in the tax system to end the discrimination in favour of capital-intensive industries. We have advocated an end to the special tax concessions to resource extraction industries which encourage investment in overcapacity there with the result that secondary industries, where the jobs are, lack development capital.

We have advocated an investment reserve system which would involve the placing of a few points of tax on business into a reserve that can be drawn upon within designated periods of time for designated purposes in designated areas. Such a program would make use of the planning capacity of the whole of private industry. We have advocated the creation of a real Canada Development Corporation which would be unequivocally an instrument of government policy and which would be employed to develop secondary industry, to expand resource processing in Canada, to rationalize established industry and to invest in the development of the leading edge of technology.

I could go on into the night listing specific policy suggestions which this party has made. What they all add up to, however, is planning the development of the economy and in so doing ending the haphazard approach to economic development adopted by the present government, policies which the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) has aptly described as being "stop—go, boom, bust, rags to riches" and which are at the base of most of our economic ills.

What about controlling inflation? In my opinion, we must begin to face up to the fact that inflation in Canada is largely imported from the United States, largely because of our overdependence upon them as a market and as a supplier to our market and because of the corporate pricing policies of American-owned firms operating in Canada. With these factors operating, even the most draconian measures, such as those the government introduced, can only have a marginal effect, and we have seen that. To end the importing of inflation we must diversify our markets and our suppliers. We must drastically decrease the percentage of our economy which is controlled by foreign-owned corporations. And, finally, we must pray for an end to the war in Viet Nam.

Should we succeed in doing all these things, perhaps fiscal and monetary policies of a normal kind will serve to keep internally-generated inflation at an acceptable level. But the real point is that we must not continue to sacrifice the lives of Canadian men and women on the alter of controlling inflation, a god which in present circumstances cannot be appeased. Instead, we must make full employment our primary economic goal.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) was making a very valid point on federal tax policy when his time ran out at about ten minutes to nine o'clock. One conspicuous example is the fact that current Canadian tax policy, as opposed to U.S. tax policy, makes it far easier for an American company to acquire control of a Canadian company than for one Canadian company to acquire control of a second Canadian company. To be specific, American companies and other foreign-owned companies are allowed by their governments to deduct as a business expense the interest paid on money which they borrow to acquire Canadian companies. This is obviously so unfair and so advantageous in particular to the American companies that at the present time the figures show 75 per cent foreign ownership in some fields of Canadian industry.

That is not the whole story by any means. But if we are serious in our desire to regain control of industries which we have already developed, and if we hope to have Canadian control of other industries which we hope to encourage, then a serious tax change has to be made and made now. This motion suggests immediate, emergency measures. Unfortunately, it is too late to do anything very dramatic or sudden this year. But for goodness sake let us start now. It is never too late to mend. It is never too late to start taking control of your own house.

I think that a government which has talked so much about participatory democracy should do something about participation by our own people in the wealth of our own country. I am shocked and amazed that any government which calls itself Liberal, in the old Gladstone-Laurier sense, should argue that any level of unemployment is acceptable to the Canadian people. I do not often praise Soviet Russia, but I understand that at the present time Russia is seeking to recruit unemployed people from the European labour markets. If these people have skills, Russians are offering them jobs and good opportunities, with good wages which they can take back home in gold. But here in the upper half of North America, the richest half of North America, the undeveloped half of North America we sit around and mostly worry about sharing government jobs and government hand-outs of one form or another.

We have a Department of Industry which, by a stroke of the pen, is able to hand out as much as $12 million to any entrepreneur who seeks help. That sounds fine if it were not coming from a schizophrenic government. What is the good of it offering $12 million to start an entrepreneurial business and then putting out a white paper on taxation which says that in five years it will take a quarter back, in ten years it will take half back and within a generation it will want the whole darn works? Nobody is going to invest money, time, energy or education in the future of a country which offers nothing better than state control.

State control has never worked for the little people. It has not worked in Soviet Russia nor in Czechoslovakia. It is not working in Red China today. They tried it in agriculture, but it did not work. At a time when the Russians and Chinese are giving land back to the peasants, we are rushing through Bill C-176 which is trying to do exactly the reverse, forcing the people of Canada to give up their land to a supposedly all-knowing and capable government, but a government which is floundering with unemployment figures approaching 7 per cent and in local communities with unemployment running a great deal higher than that—up to 10 per cent, 12 per cent and 14 per cent.

The big excuse used by the government is inflation. Mr. Speaker, we have been living with inflation for 20 years and by and large it has done us proud. By inflation we are able to have a two-car garage, get a bigger mortgage and live in a better house. At least that is the case for those who have jobs. But tonight I wish to concentrate on unemployment because it is our big problem.

In some cases I think we have academically overeducated our young people. They are coming out of school in the hundreds of thousands and they want to participate in the economy. But what are we offering them—soup kitchens, bread-lines, hostels, walking tours of Europe! And when they go to Europe they will find that Europeans are fully employed. When they return they will want to know why they cannot have the same. I think we must have full employment. I think we can achieve it. I agree with the motion when it stresses urgency. It is something we should tackle today.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) returns from Soviet Russia, I hope he will have a satchel full of ideas, not communistic ideas but North American ideas, entrepreneurial ideas to put every Canadian back to work on his own land or in his own business, using a tax policy which means that 20 years from now a man's life will be richer and happier, without him bequeathing unemployment to his children and having them sit around on Parliament Hill or on the Mall growing hair and whining.

Let us be realistic about this, Mr. Speaker. My taxes are high enough but I am willing to be taxed a little more if a 10 per cent increase in my taxes will give jobs to young people. These young people have gone to work in our education system, although in many cases I do not think it is worth a damn. Now they are emerging as PhDs, or as master mechanics from our technical schools and we are telling them that we have nothing for them to do. And all this is at a time when we have only one decent road running east and west across the country, with no decent road running north and south.

We have no transportation into the Arctic worth talking about. We have no idea of the wealth of our natural resources, but our greatest natural resource is our young people. All we are saying to them is that some day things will get better in the American economy and then we will catch up. In effect we are waiting for the American economy to recover, hoping to ride on its wave of prosperity and, incidentally, in the meantime letting the Americans defend us from all the assaults of our enemies. Yet according to my friends to the left we should not accept American money or American investment.

Now I hear a chorus coming from the government benches that we ourselves should own Canada. But they do not have a policy to bring this about. My colleague from Calgary North suggested a tax policy to them. Make it pay to save money. Make it specific. Invest in Canada. Trade is the answer. It is trade that gives us jobs. Only by trade can you set up a business and have something to sell. It is no good setting up a business if you do not have markets.

We need a proper fiscal policy. We don't want a floating dollar. We want to know where the dollar should be pegged to put Canada back into the markets of the world. There is no single commodity in Canada, be it natural or manufactured, which does not benefit from a dollar pegged well below the American dollar. When we had the 92½-cent dollar we flourished. That was supposed to be the biggest mistake that Mr. Diefenbaker's government made; but it was the 92½ cent dollar which put this country into the ten years of greatest prosperity we have ever seen. We had better decide now where we want the dollar pegged, or it will rise to U.S. $1.10.

I was also shocked to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) say that the GNP was so high that we did not have to worry any more. This makes me ask the question: Who is making the money? Let us find out. If they are making so much money, then let us create jobs for our own people, and not only for the young people. There are many middle-aged and old people who need jobs. You cannot live on the old age pension today. Where can you live on $100 a month?

• (9:30 p.m.)

The universality of the old age pension makes me laugh. If you build a little shack and manage to save $5,000 in 40 years of work, then the supplement is cut off and you are expected to live on $80 a month. Talk about beating inflation! Are we beating it with the 42 cents given to the old people? That is all we have done in the last five years, give them 40 cents a week which would not even buy a good cigar—maybe seven six-cent stamps to write your Member of Parliament, maybe six seven-cent stamps; I leave it to the Minister of Finance to work that out.

What are our human resources? I suggest that because we are so ignorant about our natural and human resources we should put a couple of hundred thousand young people to work to find out what is our future and their future. I have faith that this country is worth developing. I have faith that the answer to our economic problems is not to sit around and wait for the Americans to solve them. The answer is to create jobs for our young people. They have the brains, the youth and the skill, and it is up to us to give them leadership. I believe that the few who are sitting around growing long hair are far outnumbered by the fine young people who have spent four or five years in high school or college to prepare themselves for the working world, for a bigger and better Canada. I do not think this government is big enough to handle the job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bigg: Are we big enough to handle it? We had better be. This is the land of opportunity but there is no magic formula. It will take hard work and planning and emergency measures. It is not very often that I can wholeheartedly support a motion put forward by my friends on the left, but I feel there is a terrible emergency here and if my friends on the left do not shout about it, the very rocks from Vancouver Island to Newfoundland will shout about it.

There are no quick answers, Mr. Speaker. There are not even ten. We need a lot of answers and a lot of work. If the people on the other side of the House cannot do it, then I say call in the young people and let us survey our natural resources, our human resources, our technical resources, our fiscal resources—you name it. Put them to work, and now.

We have wasted two months already. I expect it would take another month to put them to work, but let's do it. Then let us see that when they come out of school next year we have a comprehensive plan which will mean that we are out looking for the labour markets of the world to help us carry on the ideas we have formed in this chamber. If we do not start here it is no good looking to the colleges, to Sparks Street Mall or the United States of America.

The problems of Canada are supposed to be solved in this chamber; that is what we are here for. If this government thinks it is incapable of doing it, if they can cynically state that we can stand 10 per cent unemployment in a vibrant and young country like this, then they have no alternative but to resign. I have confidence in the ideas of this party, Mr. Speaker. We can develop Canadian trade and have policies from coast to coast, with none of this divisive business. Let us see what the Maritimes people can produce. Perhaps we can produce a new race of mariners and give them the job of shipping our oil, our wheat and our bauxite around the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in recent weeks and to the minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) today I could not help thinking of them as characters in Alice in Wonderland—the worse things get, the more they shout that things are better and better.

In April, 1970, Canada had 544,000 people unemployed, and in April of this year unemployment had risen to 659,000, an increase of 20 per cent. If you compare April, 1970, with April, 1971, you see that in Quebec unemployment rose from 203,000 in April, 1970, to 234,000 this year; in Ontario, unemployment rose from 145,000 in April, 1970, to 205,000 in April this year; in the Maritimes it rose from 66,000 in April, 1970, to 75,000 in April this year; in British Columbia it rose from 58,000 in April, 1970, to 72,000 in April this year.

If you look at the seasonally adjusted rates of unemployment for the last five years, which the Minister of Finance keeps telling us are looking better all the time, you see that there has been a steady increase. In April, 1967, the rate was 4 per cent; in April, 1968, the rate was 4.9 per cent; in 1969 the rate was 4.9 per cent; in 1970 the rate was 5.6 per cent, and this year the rate is 6.7 per cent. In Ontario, the wealthiest province in this country, the seasonally adjusted rate for unemployment in April, 1971, was 5.7 per cent, the highest in the last ten years.

The unemployment which we are experiencing is not an accident, Mr. Speaker. Canada has the highest unemployment rate of any country in the western industrial world. In Great Britain, the rate of unemployment has just gone over 3 per cent, and in last week's local elections the Conservatives lost over 2,000 seats. The election was fought on national issues and the people spoke out.

Our unemployment was brought about by a conscious decision of this government. In December, 1969, the Prime Minister said that he would not be deflected from the fight against inflation even if the result was that we faced 6 per cent unemployment. The government cut back on programs and called on provincial and municipal governments to follow suit. It tried to implement a policy of voluntary restraints on wages and salaries but, of course, not on profits.

The fight against inflation was temporarily successful. Last year the cost of living rose by less than 2 per cent, but the result was precisely what the New Democratic Party in Parliament, and economists outside, had predicted—higher unemployment. As most economists predicted when the government implemented its policy of restraints, the increase in the cost of living could only be slowed down temporarily. I know of no economist, except some of the trained seals working for the government, who seriously argued that inflation could be stopped in Canada when costs were going up in the United States. After all, we sell most of our products to the United States and we import more from them than from any other country. It is almost impossible, Mr. Speaker, to keep prices in Canada from rising if they are doing so in the United States.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The inevitable happened, as had been predicted by everyone but the government. In the first four months of 1971 the cost of living rose by 1.8 per cent, an annual rate of 5.4 per cent. The Minister of Finance has suggested that this is only temporary and that the increase will slow down. There is no reason to believe that. The price war the supermarkets engaged in last year has disappeared. The temporary help we obtained by unpegging the dollar cannot be repeated. Therefore, costs in Canada will go up this year, as I have suggested.

Now we have the worst of all possible worlds, high unemployment and an increasing rate of inflation. The result of the government's policy has brought tragedy to tens of thousands of Canadians individually and to the provinces and municipalities. Some of the most highly-trained Canadian citizens cannot get jobs. Today, the Toronto Telegram predicts a long job hunt for many of the University of Toronto's 5,700 graduates. A survey undertaken by that newspaper shows that only 40 per cent of this year's engineering graduate class will find jobs at this time, whereas last year 85 per cent of the graduating class at this time of year had found jobs.

Today's Toronto Star reports Quebec Labour Minister Cournoyer as saying that Quebec's welfare recipients have increased by more than 500 per cent in the ten years between 1960 and 1969. They increased from 22,500 in 1960 to 114,3000 in 1969. At the same time, those receiving unemployment insurance declined from 139,000 in 1960 to 101,000 in 1969. The decline in the number of people receiving unemployment insurance in Quebec is not the result of lower unemployment in that province. As I said earlier, they are suffering from higher unemployment than ever before. In that province a tremendously large number of people have been unemployed for so long that they have used up all their unemployment insurance benefits. The figures for April, 1971, ought to have a sobering effect even on this government, for they show that 152,000 people have been unemployed for more than six months and that 190,000 people have been unemployed for between four and six months. That increase is startling when one compares it with the number of people who were unemployed for four months or more in other years.

We call on the government to stop its insane preoccupation with inflation, which is a worldwide phenomenon which cannot be prevented and cannot be slowed up very much in one country, and to concentrate on implementing a policy of full employment. The NDP government of Manitoba has not only given this type of advice to the federal government at Ottawa but has implemented the kinds of policies to which I have referred. In February of this year 22,000 people were unemployed in Manitoba, the rate of unemployment being 6 per cent of the labour force. Between February and April of this year unemployment in Manitoba was reduced. It went from 22,000 in February to 18,000 in April. The rate of unemployment dropped from 6 per cent in February to 4.8 per cent in April. That trend has not been duplicated in any other province of this country.

It is no accident that that happened. It come about because the government of Manitoba rejected the idea that it ought to or could combat inflation. The government of Manitoba has taken the position that its objective is full employment. When they talk of full employment they talk about the 3 per cent unemployment level referred to in the report of the Economic Council of Canada. Last week the government of Manitoba proposed an expansionary budget designed to provide increased employment of people and resources in the province. The total estimated expenditures for the 1971 fiscal year are over $500 million. For the fiscal year 1971 that government plans a deficit on capital account of an estimated $300 million over and above ordinary revenues. They propose to invest large sums of money in housing, in the expansion of hydro facilities and in the expansion of telephone facilities.

The government of Manitoba has planned a massive public housing program for 1971. They propose to spend $33 million. They had intended spending over $50 million but the federal government would not co-operate and they therefore propose to spend, as I said, $33 million. This is still the largest amount in Manitoba's history, representing an increase of 154 per cent in public housing spending as compared with 1970. The number of housing units involved is in excess of 2,200, representing an increase of 107 per cent from 1970 and almost 1,000 per cent from 1969.

This is the kind of program we have been advocating ever since the government proposed curing the ills of this country by concentrating on the fight against inflation. We have proposed that the government should, instead, make its No. 1 priority full employment. This could be done if the government stopped talking about tax reform and got on with the job of introducing tax legislation which will do away with the inequitable, regressive and inefficient tax system we have at present.

We have proposed that the government adopt tax policies which will put the burden of taxation on those who can afford to pay. We believe that a more equitable tax structure must be achieved by all levels of government and must be based as much as possible on ability to pay. May I say, in a practical way, that we need to increase income tax exemptions to $2,000 for single persons and $4,000 for married persons.

In the budget which the minister proposes to bring down one month from now we ought to reduce the taxes paid by people in lower income brackets. We ought to be thinking very seriously of increasing old age pensions. We ought to think in a practical way about beginning to put into operation the kinds of projects which are needed so badly in this country. We ought to think about a massive increase in public housing such as has been begun in Manitoba. We ought to think about helping schools and universities acquire new buildings and equipment which they need. We ought to think seriously about helping the provinces and municipalities to deal effectively for the first time with the pollution of air and the pollution of water, and to eliminate it.

There is not one municipality in Canada which does not have inadequate sewage disposal facilities and which does not need to put the squeeze on industries which pollute the air. If one goes no more than 100 yards from this very building one will see how badly the Ottawa River has been polluted. Asking the city of Ottawa or the city of Hull to do the job by themselves is asking for the impossible. The government at Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, ought to take the lead through grants and loans to enable the provinces and municipalities to work on the tremendously important task of turning this corner and to enable them to meet the problems of inflation. If we begin to do these things, we will stop the kind of unemployment we have experienced up until now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon and evening we have listened to many reasons why the government feels it has acted in a proper manner. They tried to justify the Prime Minister's expression last fall when he said, "Push me and see how far I will go" and when he said that 6 per cent did not seem to be an unreasonable unemployment figure if it meant curtailing inflation.

Almost every country has a higher rate of inflation than Canada, but no country is paying the same penalty. Many of my colleagues have referred to the expense involved in people not working and the hardship it creates. But there will be a long-term problem with which we will have to live. I refer to the young people who are entering the labour market and are unable to find work. These young people will be discouraged before they even get started. The old adage may be true—if you keep a person on welfare for a period of time, that will probably be the pattern for the rest of his life. It may well be that we are creating a situation with which we will have to live for a very long time.

I was in northern Ontario this week. I found that the unemployment figures being used really do not apply to that part of the country. The actual unemployment figure is very close to 25 per cent. I am not referring to the seasonally adjusted figure, the Canadian average or the Ontario average. If 25 per cent are unemployed, the other 75 per cent will have to carry them. This means that as soon as the seasonal benefits of unemployment insurance cease, the municipalities will be carrying the welfare load for many years.

It has been pointed out that the city of Ottawa will have a great deal of difficulty fitting the high cost of snow removal into its budget for several years. No doubt the cost of snow removal is high, but think of a municipality where 25 per cent of the wage earners are going to apply for assistance. It is true that the municipality will only pay 20 per cent of the cost, but in many areas where employment has been poor for several years this will bankrupt them.

I listened to the Prime Minister on television the other night. It was pointed out that the interview had been taped prior to delivery and was several weeks old. I suggest that the broadcast was several months old. The subjects and the discussion were months old. The program was taped before this calamity affected many of our communities. At the time it was taped, it could still be argued that we could economically afford to curtail unemployment, building, development and secondary industry, all for the sake of curtailing inflation.

Surely all the economists in the government are not archaic. Some should be table to tell the government that in other countries inflation is not a serious problem as long as the gross national product increases to the same degree or more. I agree that it costs more money to purchase commodities, but there is more money available. What advantage is there in the person who has been unemployed for seven or eight months knowing that if we are able to keep him out of work, we are able to cut down on the niceties of life and that a television set or drugs will cost less? He knows that the only place he can get money to buy food and pay rent is the welfare office. You can be holier than thou in terms of inflation but you cannot be holier than thou with regard to the needs of these people.

Another budget is going to be brought down. Until I heard some of the government members today I would have predicted that we could not possibly operate for another year with old age pension recipients paying income tax. I was sure this mess would have been straightened out so that we would not ask an old age pensioner receiving a guaranteed supplement to pay $70 income tax out of one of his monthly cheque. Something should be done for the man carrying the lunchpail who is still employed, so that his lot will be better and he will have a little more money to distribute and will enjoy the same purchasing power as the top one-third of the country. If I understood the government members correctly, they said that if you spread the load and give a concession across the board, this would be inflationary. They said he would spend the money, and you cannot give him a reduction.

Canadians will not forget that this is not an emergency that has arisen, it is not a calamity that affects the nation, nor is it something that is happening in Europe. They will not forget that this is not happening in other countries. The situation in Canada today, with more unemployment than we have seen for many years, is a creation of the government which intentionally set out to have 6, 7 or 8 per cent of the people unemployed. The Canadian people will not forget that they have been made the tools of a government which is not interested in the welfare of the average Canadian but is more interested in those clipping bonds coupons, living on insurance benefits and enjoying the niceties that many of the working people have been unable to afford even in good times. In all humanity, this government will have to consider its citizens and make adjustments in the budget to put Canada back in the employment field, rather than on the welfare rolls.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), proceedings on this motion have expired.

• (10:00 p.m.)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—USE OF PORTION OF REVENUE FROM ALCOHOL TO COMBAT ALCOHOLISM

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question tonight is: Is consideration being given at the federal level to providing an amount of money, possibly a percentage of federal liquor revenues, toward combating alcoholism and promoting temperance in Canada? As hon. members know, the province of Prince Edward Island and the province of British Columbia have recently moved toward this goal, but what is the federal government doing in this regard? I should like to put a few figures on the record in this connection. Ottawa takes in rather more than $1 million a day as its share of revenue from the sale of drink—that is, liquor, wine and beer. If we include the federal government sales tax, revenue from liquor totals close to $400 million a year.

What does Ottawa spend, having made this immense amount out of the sale of alcohol, on preventing people from becoming alcoholics or on educating young people particularly against the acceptance of drinking, or at least of overdrinking? It spends little or nothing, Mr. Speaker. It is true that the federal government shares in projects of health and welfare with the provinces and that some of this money goes in providing aid to alcoholics. But it is not this that I am talking about. What I am urging is that at least one per cent of federal revenue from the sale of liquor—that is to say, approximately $4 million a year—be directed toward promoting temperance and publicizing the health and social problems that are caused by drinking to excess, very much in the same way as the health and welfare department some years ago embarked upon a program to educate young people against starting to smoke cigarettes.

It is not as though the federal government could not afford to earmark some of the revenue obtained from the drink trade for this purpose. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that more than half of a bottle of whisky consists of water? Do you know that $5 out of each $6 bottle of whisky represents taxes? Canadians are actually drinking watered taxes. Even so, the result is tragic in many thousands of homes, families and businesses. As one who helped instigate the breathalyzer legislation, I know that the 15 per cent drop in fatal accidents since the advent of that law means that there are 760 Canadians alive today who otherwise would have been in the graveyard during the first year of application of the breathalyzer law.

The loss caused by alcoholism to Canadian industry and business is estimated to be $325 million a year, manifesting itself in multimillion dollar hangovers. There can be no estimate of the loss to Canada, caused by alcoholism, in broken homes and in rising crime. I raised this question some time ago and was told that Ottawa made a total grant of $15,000 a year to the Canadian Foundation on Alcoholism. A few days ago the minister of health told me that the government has no stated formal program in regard to combating alcoholism, though he said—and it is true—that Ottawa shares funds with the provinces, some of which go to assist victims of alcoholism. But, Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to get at this question. What I want the government to say tonight is what its attitude is to setting up a fund consisting of, say, one per cent of its annual income from the sale of liquor, which money would go to educating people against alcoholism, to preventing alcoholism—not to bind up the wound but to stop the wound from developing in the first place.

The federal government takes in $1 million a day in revenue from the sale of drink. When the sale of liquor promotes social ills, broken homes, death and disease I think it is the duty of the government to set aside some amount from its revenue from such sale in order to combat alcoholism and to educate people, particularly the young people, against the use of alcohol. My question is: Will the government consider setting up such a program, providing funds for the program and encouraging interprovincial action with the federal authority to combat alcoholism in Canada?

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that all or a portion of a given tax source be earmarked for a particular expenditure is not uncommon. What it means is that a particular revenue item would be committed in advance to pay in whole or in part for a specific program. The specific program is invariably of the of unassailable virtue and unquestionable merit.

Notwithstanding the allure, the idea involves the abdication by Parliament of its control over spending. The funds for a designated program would rise and fall with the tax received, without regard to the relative costs or public desirability of the program; Parliament would not have to consider that. The tax revenue once earmarked would automatically flow to the designated program, and to that extent Parliament would be relieved of its direct right and obligation to determine how much the government shall spend and the purposes for which it shall spend it.

The hon. member's suggestion may have some superficial appeal, but recognizing its implications for Parliament the government is not prepared to concur in the denial of the right and obligation of Parliament at each session to vote supply. With respect to the idea of the program itself, I will certainly refer it to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro).

LABOUR CONDITIONS—FAILURE TO HIRE SASKATCHEWAN WELDERS FOR PIPELINE CONSTRUCTION PROJECT IN PROVINCE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on May 17 I asked the following question of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) as recorded in Hansard at page 5858:

> I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. It is based on the practice of hiring pipeline welders in Edmonton or Winnipeg only for a Trans-Canada construction job in Saskatchewan, a practice which effectively prevents the hiring of welders from Saskatchewan. Would the minister investigate such hiring procedures and determine whether Saskatchewan welders are not entitled to a fair chance of such job opportunities?

The Minister of Labour replied:

> I am not sure if this is a question I can answer adequately. Perhaps it should be directed to the Minister of Manpower. But it seems very likely to be a problem coming within provincial jurisdiction since it concerns hiring arrangements.

I then directed the following supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), although it was not permitted at that time:

> Could I ask the Minister of Manpower if he has any indication whether any Saskatchewan welders could be hired for work on this project?

Mr. Speaker, Majestic Construction Limited of Edmonton has a $55 million contract for a pipeline from Burstall to Moosomin, in the province of Saskatchewan. This is with regard to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited. The welders belong to the International Brotherhood of Plumbers and Pipefitters. However, the hiring on jobs from Swift Current west is under the jurisdiction of the Edmonton hiring office, and the hiring from Swift Current east is under the jurisdiction of the Winnipeg hiring office.

It appears that this problem should have been resolved long ago by the union itself. There should have been hiring from the province of Saskatchewan in order that the welders in that province who qualify could have been hired at that hiring hall. I assure you that there appears to be no excuse for hiring practices such as are being carried on by this union. However, I believe the greatest challenge we have before us is in relation to the danger of balkanization of various provinces.

Many provincial governments are acting or reacting in such a way that they can do nothing but harm to this nation. We are fast approaching a situation where there will be ten provinces, each passing legislation denying the entry of anyone from another province to work within its borders. We have already heard words from Quebec that manpower should be under provincial legislation. We know what has happened in Quebec. They have suggested that construction workers should be hired from Quebec only, and that people from provinces other than Quebec should not be permitted to work on construction jobs there.

We also hear from British Columbia that government people are suggesting that only B.C. workers should be employed on any project within that province. A typical example was seen recently in Prince George where some Saskatchewan people went to obtain employment. Employment was available, but when they said they came from Saskatchewan they were told that only British Columbia people were being hired. We also hear that people in the province of Alberta are suggesting that people from Saskatchewan should go back to Saskatchewan rather than come into Alberta for job opportunities. We have to ask ourselves, where we are going with this type of provincial barrier?

• (10:10 p.m.)

We listened to the chicken and egg debate in this House of Commons concerning the movement of produce from one province to another. We now have a provincial immigration war going on across our nation. No better example could be used than having the Minister of Labour pass the ball to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) in respect of this question. Surely the present pipeline contract over which this dispute arose was public knowledge for some time. This is what the Minister of Labour for Saskatchewan indicated in a press release:

> I wish to make it known, in the bluntest of terms, that the government demands Saskatchewan residents be hired for work undertakings in the province. If this policy is not adhered to immediately, we will take whatever action is needed to facilitate its prompt and effective implementation.

Surely that Minister of Labour knew about the $55 million contract, if he wanted to set down guidelines for the hiring of Saskatchewan welders. I ask the parliamentary secretary whether his department intends to allow Canada to become a country of ten nations, or whether the federal government intends to get the ten Premiers together to bring sense and reason to bear on the real problem facing our nation at the present time.

There is no reason for having a Department of Labour or a Department of Manpower if each province makes its own decision. The relocation grant will mean little if this is to continue and if each of the Premiers of the ten provinces are to set up their own little empires and hire only within their provinces. With regard to the contractor to whom I referred who refused to hire Saskatchewan welders, the union and the provincial government can only be held responsible for the situation which has developed in the province. Unless the federal government immediately moves on this serious problem in Saskatchewan and also in respect of each of the ten provinces in Canada, we will no longer be a nation.

I believe it is important that the parliamentary secretary attempt to answer tonight whether or not the department he represents will try to do something to bring about understanding among the ten provinces of Canada with respect to hiring practices. I am positive that unless understanding is brought about within the departments of labour in each of the ten provinces in Canada, we will become balkanized and a country of ten nations, which is something we must avoid at all costs.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the concern of the hon. member is at two levels, one short-term and one a long-range solution. Evidently, if the hon. member is looking for a quick solution to the question the most effective place for the matter to be raised would be in the legislature of Saskatchewan. He has admitted that this issue comes under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments.

We have information to the effect that the collective agreements in connection with the pipeline construction project give jurisdiction over welders on this project to the Plumbers and Pipefitters Locals 254 in Winnipeg and 488 in Edmonton, and that other workers are under the jurisdiction of union locals in Saskatchewan. We also understand that pending settlement of negotiations between the plumbers and pipefitters locals in Winnipeg and Edmonton and the local in Regina, work on the pipeline will not commence.

Regarding the long-range issue that the hon. member is raising, as to whether provincial governments should or should not have jurisdiction on labour relations, as they now have for specific sectors, of course this would be a question that could be raised at any federal-provincial constitutional conference. But if a satisfactory solution to this specific issue or to similar issues is to be found within the context of the present Constitution, I would suggest that the approximate place for raising the question is in the respective provincial legislatures, and the hon. member knows that.

At 10.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 19, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Ottawa, May 19, 1971

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Gérald Fauteux, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 19th of May, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau
Brigadier General
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

[Translation]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Fourth report of Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, in the two official languages—Mr. Leblanc (Laurier).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

On the order: Motions.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I thought the Minister of Labour had a statement to make and was going to rise.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for welcoming me back to the House. I was fishing for a few moments.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, last week when we were discussing the unemployment figures for the month of April I promised to make a statement on motions pertaining to the possibility of extending seasonal benefits. First, in discussing this matter, I think I should emphasize that seasonal benefits are available under the Unemployment Insurance Act for the period between December 1 and May 15 and are payable to those who have a very minimal attachment to the labour force but are unable to qualify for regular benefits. Eligibility is based on much less rigid qualifying conditions but is not limited to those who work in seasonal occupations. In this context it must be emphasized that the basic purpose of unemployment insurance is to provide benefits for relatively short-term periods of unemployment. Under both the present program and the new program, a maximum duration of 51 or 52 weeks is considered the right period of time, with an average duration per claim of about 14 weeks.

The case for extending seasonal benefits could possibly rest on two points: First, the relatively higher unemployment rate for this time of year and hence the relatively greater difficulty of finding work; second, the assumption that people whose benefits terminate at the end of the seasonal benefit period will automatically begin drawing welfare. By this reasoning, the assumption is made that the 200,000 claimants whose benefits terminated on May 15 require a continuation of financial assistance and that the simplest method of assistance would be to extend the benefits for further periods of time.

• (2:10 p.m.)

With regard to the case against extension, while the extension of seasonal benefits appears to be a relatively automatic and simple type of adjustment, I would like to explain the reasons why it did not appear to the government that we should take this measure at this time.

Although the level of unemployment for this time of year is higher than in past years and higher than had been anticipated for the month of April, I would like to emphasize that the number of people drawing seasonal benefits is not correspondingly higher this year than the number who were drawing seasonal benefits in former years at this particular time of the year. I might add that the number of people drawing seasonal benefits on May 15 last year was 180,000 as opposed to 200,000 this year and 160,000 in 1969.

Of these estimated 200,000 claimants who were drawing seasonal benefits at the end of April, there would be approximately 40,000 in the fishing industry and 12,000 in agriculture. These industries can be identified separately because of the distinct contribution system for them, but in addition it is known that there are many tens of thousands of people in forestry, water transportation and other industries whose period of unemployment could reasonably be expected to end at this time.

Studies carried out by the commission of the recipients of seasonal benefits have indicated that more than 60 per cent of such claimants are back at work at or about the time that seasonal benefits terminate. These studies have also shown that there is another large group of claimants who have, for all intents and purposes, left the labour force voluntarily and in some cases have been on prolonged claims for periods of up to 70 weeks. Included in this group would be those who have left the labour force because of age, retirement or occupations in the home.

It has also been observed in the studies mentioned earlier that seasonal benefits in certain occupations and regions have come to influence the pattern of work where recalls by employers and the return to work by employees are made to coincide with the end of the seasonal benefits period.

There is no evidence that persons exhausting seasonal benefits necessarily go on welfare. We have analysed figures over a number of years of the numbers of unemployed employables on welfare in certain cities and there is no significant indication that welfare rolls increase significantly as a result of the termination of seasonal benefits, or conversely that welfare rolls decline on December 1 with the start of seasonal benefits. Indeed, it is generally accepted that the increase in welfare beneficiaries during the past few years has come mainly from that part of the population not now covered by unemployment insurance or unable to qualify under the present rules.

All these considerations point to the fact that the extension of seasonal benefits would have the tendency of providing an automatic benefit to a substantial number of people who may in fact no longer be members of the labour force. On the other hand, it would not in any way change the situation for those who cannot qualify for unemployment insurance benefits under the present rules.

To conclude, the cost of extending benefits even for a period of let us say six weeks ending June 27 would be between $35 million and $45 million. The government believes that because of the difficulty of clearly determining those among recipients of seasonal benefits who would deserve assistance, this would not be the best way of spending such a large sum of money.

The white paper on unemployment insurance and Bill C-229 both propose that the solution to the problem of people who do not qualify for regular benefits rests primarily on lower eligibility conditions and a method of extension of benefits which reflects the economic conditions at national and regional levels. We feel so strongly about these features that we are proposing to abolish the present method of paying seasonal benefits. This has been endorsed almost unanimously by all those who have expressed views on the white paper and on Bill C-229. Because these will be in effect very soon, I believe that the extension of seasonal benefits at this stage under the circumstances I have just explained would not be desirable at this time.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) quite properly asked for some added information in the form of a breakdown of the characteristics of the 348,000 Canadians reported out of work for more than four months as of mid-April. It is a detailed answer, Mr. Speaker. I have sent a copy of it on to the hon. gentleman, but based upon the findings that we have been able to come up with it would appear that approximately 300,000 of these 348,000 people who have been unemployed for 14 weeks or more are drawing or were drawing unemployment insurance at the time the latest statistics became available.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, the long awaited no-statement has suddenly been produced by the minister. We on this side sit here in utter disbelief and indignation when we hear the minister say that in his judgment, because of a cost of some $35 million or $40 million, it is not feasible for the government to become involved with the seasonal workers, this at a time when the government judges it satisfactory to spend some $58 million on behalf of students seeking employment. It seems to me that the judgment of the government has to be questioned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I listened to the minister in utter disbelief. It appears to me that his role is to be the nice guy. His role as minister is to palliate, while the role of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is to throw red herrings into important discussions similar to this one. When thousands have been unemployed for so long that they have lost all their benefits, and the cities are being crippled by welfare payments, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) will not bring in any extension of benefits for seasonal workers, which in effect would reduce the tension and lack of confidence that are permeating our entire society.

With six weeks to go to the target date for implementation of the new Unemployment Insurance Act the minister has suddenly been gripped by the urgency of the plight of the unemployed. But apparently his only concern about them is to attempt to mitigate or explain away their situation. He has not given us a statement of purpose, a statement that would indicate to the unemployed that something is going to be done. Rather, he has given a statement indicating that he is going to bring in some relief to alleviate the situation on July 1.

The minister and the government have become so smug and snug that they have lost touch with the frustrations and despair that go along with being out of work for any length of time or with being out of work—period. The Minister of Labour leaves the impression that he is above it all. The minister wants the country to believe that he is the conscience of the Liberal party, of Pearson, King and St. Laurent, and that his job is to be the humane flank for an inhumane government. I suppose that is why he had the audacity to make this statement today, or maybe he would like to leave the impression that he does not know what is going on in the government.

Let me remind the minister and the government that as a result of the government's fiscal and monetary policies it has left the people of the country with a lack of confidence in the economy which has deprived us of $2 billion in the last year and 200,000 jobs. That is a shameful record, to say the very least. The deliberate waste of our human resources which stems from archaic and questionable fiscal and monetary policies is just short of criminal. The government's policy in effect is really to remove employables from gainful employment and prevent others from being gainfully employed, directing all of them to the welfare rolls. To me that is a platform for chaos, disunity, misery and despair. Hellyer and Kierans are the only two who are responsible, and I would say—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should remind the hon. member that when he refers to other hon. members he should as much as possible refer to their constituencies. There is no reason why the two members he has referred to should not be designated by reference to their constituencies.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry for my lack of understanding, but let us say that the two ministers who recently resigned questioned not only the leadership of the government but also the economic policies which have exposed the disastrous course of the government. They have stated, and this is the way I read it: Stop looking at the man and look at his government, his policies and their effect on the nation. It seems to me that this government feels so snug with its majority that it has become smug and has simply lost touch with how desperate and tense a life it is for the thousands of jobless.

• (2:20 p.m.)

As I said before, the ministers' job is to be the humane flank for an inhumane government. I believe his position is an illusory, deceitful and fruitless posture and his own actions and his participation in this cabinet have made this pretence a rather morbid national joke.

Where was the Minister of Labour when the cities pleaded for assistance to help their unemployed? Where was the Minister of Labour when the provinces requested emergency assistance beyond the inflexible and inadequate Canada Assistance Plan? Where was the minister when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) persisted with indifferent, slow growth policies all winter? We on this side of the House know. He has been and remains at the centre of the problem. He is part and parcel of this whole devious scheme.

We have pleaded with the minister month in and month out to take it upon himself to bring in easier access and higher benefits in order that some confidence may be regained and so that there will be a psychological effect on the country. The minister has refused. While talking about universality and standing up proud and strong against the teachers, he has ignored the plight of tens of thousands of long-term unemployed young people who have been without work and unemployment insurance benefits all winter. Instead of providing an answer for them—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. I know how important the matter is to which the hon. member is referring but he appreciates, I am sure, the limitations placed on comments made by hon. members when speaking on behalf of opposition parties in reference to ministerial statements. The Standing Order states that an hon. member shall comment briefly on the statement made by the minister. I have said often and I repeat that it is very difficult for the Chair to determine what is brief and what is not. Hon. members have to be guided to some extent by their own concept of brevity, but I would invite the hon. member to come to the conclusion of his statement.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the minister presents a statement such as this, a "know-nothing" statement, it gives the opposition the right to bring home to the government and to the Canadian people just what the circumstances are. However, I shall bow to the wishes of the Chair, and rightly so. In conclusion I should like to say that it is time for the Minister of Labour and the government to come clean.

Some hon. Members: Resign!

Mr. Alexander: He should accept our position that the first step toward providing lasting and adequate assistance for the poor, the unemployed and students is to get the economy back to full growth and full employment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, we have heard a smug statement from a minister reflecting the thinking of a smug cabinet which has lost completely its touch and its concern for the average person in this country. The average person in this country, whether he happens to be working or not and many are not right now, is concerned about the very high level of unemployment that exists, because all of us are affected directly or indirectly.

Given the pious expressions which have come from this minister in the past one would have hoped that he would find reasons and a method to extend the seasonal benefits. He did not come before us today as he did the other day and suggest that there was no possibility of extending benefits within the present legislation because apparently he found that there is that legal possibility and he could have acted had he so desired. Instead, he presented to us a loosely connected batch of arguments that do not hold water.

First of all, he suggested that the number of people drawing seasonal benefits is no higher than at this time of the year in the past. Second, he said that a number of farmers, fishermen and others who are seasonally unemployed would be going back to work soon. I should like to remind the minister that one of his obligations is to check statistics rather carefully. If he does he will find that, compared with this time last year, there is now an increase of 30 per cent in the numbers of those drawing seasonal benefits. The figure has gone from 172,000 to some 223,000 which is, I repeat, a 30 per cent increase. It is not a constant figure.

Furthermore, when the minister says that a number of those people will soon be going back to work, I suggest that he look at the speeches made recently in this House, one yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and one last week by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang). In those speeches those ministers pointed out that because of the exceptional winter we have faced, because of the prolonged cold and so on we are perhaps at least one month behind in catching up with the normal seasonal increase in the numbers of employed. That, it seems to me, provides within the context of government arguments good reason for extending seasonal benefits. Two responsible ministers in the cabinet have said that this country is lagging behind as a result in part of a severe winter. That is what seasonal benefits are all about. If there is a lag, why then does the government not extend seasonal benefits?

The third argument that the minister trotted out for us to consider is that normally those who go off seasonal benefits do not go on the welfare roles. He referred to a study which shows this. I suggest that the government is under the minimum obligation of tabling in the House that study which documents that purported fact. It may be the case that in the past a number of those who went off seasonal benefits did not go on welfare. That may have been true when only 130,000 people were involved. Nevertheless, if 200,000 people are now getting such benefits and are cut off, I suggest to the government that it is an elementary step of logic to expect that a very large percentage of them will find themselves on the welfare rolls across the country. So much for the third argument, Mr. Speaker. I use the word "argument" in a flattering sense, because I do not think what the minister actually presented amounted to arguments.

This government has produced the highest level of unemployment in this country in a decade and is now obligated to do something about it. We heard the Minister of Finance yesterday say effectively that he will not change his course of action. I, for one, had hoped that the Minister of Labour, who of all men ought to be concerned about the average people in this country, would come before the House, acknowledge the facts about the seasonal situation we have gone through in the past winter, a situation that was acknowledged by two other cabinet ministers, and extend seasonal benefits. But no, he has not done that. He has joined the Minister of Finance and his other smug colleagues and is sitting this very serious problem out on the front benches of the government. I suggest that if the minister is concerned about the average person in this country, he ought to follow the two hon. members who were recently cabinet ministers and become a backbencher in the Liberal party.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, like hon. members who spoke before me, I would have liked to obtain a copy of the minister's statement in my own language. I wish to make another remark before commenting on the statement. We are tired of hearing government members make statements to the House and apologize to us because they are unable to give us a French version of those statements. The minister always says: The translation is not completed yet, we are sorry, we apologize. We can accept his excuses once or twice, but we find that this way of doing things has become a habit. I regret having to take the minister to task for not supplying us, as he does other hon. members, with a French version of his statement.

Mr. Speaker, the minister announced today that an extension of six weeks' benefits will be granted to those who were deemed to be unemployed from May 15 to June 30, 1971. From now on, there will not be any regular or seasonal unemployed, but permanently unemployed before they in turn become welfare recipients. That is the way this government seems to solve the unemployment problem of Canadians and yet, in 1968, it had pledged the establishment of a just society.

Yesterday, the Quebec Minister of Labour stated that the number of welfare recipients had quintupled between 1960 and 1969, on account of the federal government's economic policy as well as that of some provincial governments—and this is where the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) is not giving us all the figures concerning unemployment insurance benefits—welfare recipients in the province of Quebec numbered 139,400 in 1969 as compared with 101,500 in 1960. Mr. Cournoyer pointed out that the recipients of unemployment insurance are now on social welfare.

We can note the same phenomenon in Ontario where municipalities have indeed paid $9,500,000 in social welfare allowances in February 1971, an increase of 68 per cent over February 1970. In February 1971, 69,946 persons received allowances from the Ontario social welfare service, an increase of 48 per cent in comparison with February 1970. There were in March last 70,000 unemployed in the metropolitan area of Toronto and 201,000 throughout Ontario.

• (2:30 p.m.)

It is unnecessary to quote other figures to show to the Canadian people that this government is quite competent when it comes to making statements but that it is extremely incompetent where economic achievements are concerned. Today Canadian provinces and municipalities are experiencing a depression period, because the government does not shelve the financial and monetary concepts of 50 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) has been making statements and pointing out that he wants to create employment. But where are the figures with respect to employment? Some 200 jobs are created in one community while 800 workers are laid off in another, according to figures.

Mr. Speaker, there is but one solution to the economic problem in Canada and it is not a matter of getting back to creating jobs, but one of creating purchasing power for consumers so that they can buy products, which would automatically generate some jobs and allow our country to become prosperous.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I will gladly apologize to the Social Credit party if I did not send them a copy of my statement in the French language. However, I suggest that the hon. member check with his leader—and who knows who it is in that party—and report back before the question period ends on whether we delivered to him an advance copy of my statement in French. If it was in English, I apologize. If it was in French, I hope the hon. member will do the same.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

I would suggest to the minister that in the future he should make at least one French copy available to us in this House if he cannot hand it over to us before.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South has the floor.

* * *

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN CONCERNING INFLATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I would like to seek unanimous consent of the House to move a motion. My motion arises out of a continuing series of statements by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission to the effect that inflation remains Canada's number one economic enemy in spite of clear evidence that anti-inflationary policies have contributed to the present unemployment crisis. Because Dr. Young's statements are doing great harm to economic recovery, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the present chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission be dismissed forthwith and that, if the commission is to be retained as a government agency, its functions be redefined to prevent its chairman from being a propagandist and apologist for disastrous policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion presented by the hon. member for York South. The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Woolliams: Before we deal with questions on the order paper, Mr. Speaker, I would like once again to bring something to Your Honour's attention. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is absent. We know that he is on an official visit. Under the roster system there are seven ministers who are supposed to be here but are not. We do not accept the roster system. There are 15 absent altogether. How can the opposition conduct its business today and ascertain what is going on?

I would like to name these ministers, and I think Your Honour should bear with me. Their names should be on the record. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister is away, and I do not make anything of that, surely the government House leader should get these ministers out of their offices and bring them here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: The number is now reduced to six. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has come into the chamber.

Mr. Benson: I have been here all the time.

Mr. Woolliams: The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), who is responsible for the wheat board, are absent.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe at the sound of my voice more will come into the chamber. With the Prime Minister away, maybe the roster system could be set aside and we could get some kind of organization so that the opposition can do its job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: They are all sick, sick of Benson.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

COST OF FRENCH-ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Question No. 599—Mr. Nowlan:

1. What was the average cost per word of French-English translation performed by the Translation Bureau, including apportioned overheads?

2. What was the average cost per word of French-English translation performed by outside contractors?

Questions

3. What was the percentage of French-English translation performed by outside contractors in each of the past five years ending March 31, 1970?

4. For each of the same years, in the Translation Bureau of the Department of the Secretary of State, what was (a) the total production in hours of service (b) the total production in words (c) the backlog of work in words to be translated at the end of each year?

5. For each of the same years, what was the number of unfilled authorized positions, in each grade, at the end of each year?

6. For each of the same years, what was the average number of months all translators and interpreters working in the Translation Bureau had been on the staff?

7. For each of the same years, what was the number of translators and interpreters who had been on the staff of the Translation Bureau (a) less than twelve months (b) less than twenty-four months?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. The average cost per word of French-English translation performed by the Translation Bureau, including apportioned overheads, was the following: 1965-66, 3.5 cents; 1966-67, 3.9 cents; 1967-68, 3.75 cents; 1968-69, 5.45 cents; 1969-70, 6.06 cents.

2. The average cost per word of French-English translation performed by outside contractors was the following: 1965-66, 2.65 cents; 1966-67, 2.7 cents; 1967-68, 3.1 cents; 1968-69, 5.04 cents; 1969-70, 5.24 cents.

3. The percentage of French-English translation performed by outside contractors in each of the past five years ending March 31, 1970, was: 1965-66, 8.27% 1966-67, 11.22%; 1967-68; 11.78% 1968-69, 9.04%; 1969-70, 10.71%.

4. For each of the same years, in the Translation Bureau of the Department of the Secretary of State, (a) the total production in hours of service was the following: 1965-66, 122,948 hours; 1966-67, 146,106 hours; 1967-68, 171,664 hours; 1968-69, 207,740 hours; 1969-70, 264,584 hours; Service hours cover time spent on revision, research, administration, editing, proof-reading, lectures to trainees, and other duties, but not the time spent on translation proper. (b) the total production in words was the following: 1965-66, 77,005,931 words; 1966-67, 93,272,627 words; 1967-68, 94,918,864 words; 1968-69, 89,405,003 words; 1969-70, 102,511,387 words. (c) the backlog of work in words to be translated at the end of each year was the following: 1965-66, 4,876,826 words; 1966-67, 5,825,453 words; 1967-68, 5,655,284 words; 1968-69, 6,216,250 words; 1969-70, 9,633,128 words.

5. It has not been possible to establish the number of vacancies in each grade. The number of unfilled authorized positions as at September 30th: 1966, 44; 1967, 54; 1968, 38; 1969, 97; 1970, 87.

6. An excessive number of man-hours would be required to supply the information requested.

7. (a) 1965-66, 52; 1966-67, 57; 1967-68, 74; 1968-69, 107; 1969-70, 108.

(b) 1965-66, 88; 1966-67, 109; 1967-68, 131; 1968-69, 181; 1969-70, 215.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

[English]

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES IN DEFRAYING COST OF LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 678—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. Are federal funds available to assist the provinces in defraying the costs of (a) teaching new Canadians to speak English (b) teaching Francophone Canadians to speak English (c) teaching second generation Canadians to speak English?

2. If so, what amount is available for each province?

3. What steps should a local community (e.g., Ottawa) take to secure its share of such funds?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. (a) Federal funds are available to help provinces defray the cost of English language classes and textbooks for new Canadians. (b) and (c) Under the programme of cooperation and development of bilingualism in education, federal funds are allocated to the provincial governments on the basis of their minority language educational programmes (French outside the province of Quebec and English in Quebec) and of their second language teaching programmes (English in the province of Quebec and French in other provinces). However, ethnic or linguistic origin or length of residence in Canada are not criteria used in the allocation of these funds.

2. (a) The federal government contributes one-half of whatever the provinces spend or contribute towards the teaching costs of English or French instruction to adult immigrants, plus reimbursement for expenditure on language textbooks for use by adult immigrants up to the amount of the average calculated on the five preceding years.

During the fiscal year 1970-71 the federal government contributed the following amounts to the provinces:

Under the Language Instruction Agreement
British Columbia		$ 28,331.00
Manitoba		6,141.00
Alberta		6,266.50
Ontario		712,192.16
Quebec		64,751.00
New Brunswick		904.81
Saskatchewan		5,385.64
Total		$823,972.11
Under the Language Textbook Agreement
Alberta		2,051.10
Saskatchewan		1,150.03
Manitoba		4,328.84
Ontario		72,397.25
		79,927.22
Quebec	(approx.)	50,000.00
Total		$129,927.22

(b) and (c) Since ethnic or linguistic origin or length of residence in Canada are not criteria used in the programme for the development of bilingualism in education, meaningful figures concerning the teaching of English to francophone or second generation Canadians are not available. However, in addition to grants for administrative costs, grants to the province of Quebec for 1970 will total approximately $17 million for educational programmes conducted in the English language and approximately $4.5 million for teaching English as a second language.

3. Requests for federal funds for teaching New Canadians to speak English should be directed to the Provincial Department responsible for the integration of New Canadians which administers the federal-provincial Agreements on Language Instruction and Language Textbooks. Arrangements for second language instruction are designed to make federal support possible without infringing on provincial jurisdiction in the field of education. School boards or institutions seeking assistance under this programme should direct their request to the department of education of their province.

[English]

YOUTH HOSTELS

Question No. 766—Mr. Alexander:

Has any report or evaluation of the project which provided facilities for youth hostels in various Canadian cities been undertaken and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: An evaluation and survey of activities in the transient youth field, including a partial assessment of the National Hostel Task Force activities during the summer of 1970-71 was undertaken by the Canadian Council of Social Development. This survey was financed by the Department of National Health and Welfare. The report is available from the Canadian Council on Social Development. In addition, the Department of National Health and Welfare conducted its own survey of the transient youth situation during the summer of 1970. The resulting report is available from the Department.

In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: An appraisal of the programme was made but no written report followed.

SUPPLY OF WEAPONS FOR WAR IN VIET NAM

Question No. 930—Mr. Rondeau:

1. Does Canada provide weapons for the war in Vietnam, if so (a) how many (b) what types?

2. How much money does Canada obtain from such supply yearly?

3. How many people are employed in the manufacture of such weapons?

4. What are the names of the plants involved (a) what amounts are involved (b) what type of weapons are involved (c) what is the caliber of the weapons?

5. What amounts does the Department of Revenue collect (a) as taxes (b) as various profits?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of National Revenue as follows: 1, 2, 3, and 4. Canada does not grant export permits for the shipment of weapons to Viet Nam, and no weapons are delivered by Canadian suppliers to any destination in Viet Nam. Defence equipment sold by Canada to the United States is absorbed into the general inventory of the military services of that country and its ultimate disposition and destination is a matter for the authorities of the United States to decide. The same principle applies to defence equipment which Canada purchases from the United States.

5. (a) Records maintained by the Excise Tax Branch do not provide for this type of specific information. Moreover, goods manufactured in Canada and exported are exempt from sales tax under the terms of section 44 of the Excise Tax Act. (b) Not applicable.

NATIONAL REVENUE—OUTSTANDING TAXES

Question No. 1,112—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the total, in dollars, of delinquent taxes owed to the Department of National Revenue by individuals and corporations?

2. What was the amount, in dollars, as of this date in 1968, 1969 and 1970?

3. What is the amount, in dollars, of sales tax outstanding in the same periods?

4. What was the amount of penalty outstanding in the same periods?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Taxation Division: 1, 2 and 4. Taxes, penalties and interest outstanding:

	March 31
	1970 ($000)	1969 ($000)	1968 ($000)
Particulars
Income Tax
Individuals	171,144	143,499	122,017
Corporations	113,771	96,036	116,959
Tax Deductions	18,789	13,077	11,286
Non-Residents	4,051	3,964	6,329
Deferred Tax	4,563	4,757	5,099
	312,318	261,333	261,690
Estate Tax and Succession Duty	20,992	15,405	15,903
Sundry	—	—	5
Total	333,310	276,738	277,598

Customs and Excise

3 and 4. Sales tax and penalties outstanding:

	Sales Tax $	Penalty $
March 15, 1971	11,466,229.06	1,756,919.06
March 31, 1970	12,987,924.28	1,373,761.31
March 31, 1969	8,329,890.22	1,395,963.71
March 31, 1968	10,609,742.04	1,862,509.28

Questions

CANADA COUNCIL ASSISTANCE FOR PRODUCTION OF FILM ENTITLED "LES MÂLES"

Question No. 1,236—Mr. Valade:

1. Has Canada Council or any other federal agency made grants or any financial assistance for the production of a film entitled Les Mâles and, if so, how much money?

2. Has this film any artistic value?

3. What criteria justified such assistance?

4. What firm benefited from such financial assistance and is it a subsidiary of other cinematographical concerns taking part or having interests in this film?

5. Which firm owns this film and, who are (a) the principal officers (b) the chairman (c) the vice-chairman (d) the secretary-treasurer?

6. (a) Does the government or governmental agency concerned receive any benefit from the marketing of this film (b) how are the financial risks shared?

7. In case of financial failure, are any guarantees of reimbursement or payment stipulated by the government or its agency of the beneficiary and, if so, what are they?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. The Canadian Film Development Corporation has invested in the film entitled Les Mâles. I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation that in order to protect the producer and other investors in their negotiations with third parties, the Corporation does not divulge the amount of its investments.

2 and 3. The criteria justifying this investment are those stated in section 10 (2)(a) of the Act providing for the establishment of the Corporation: "that the completed film will, in the judgment of the Corporation, have a significant Canadian creative, artistic and technical content..."

4. The producer of the film is Onyx Films Inc. The Company is not a subsidiary of another film company.

5. The owner of the film is Onyx Films Inc. whose principal officers are: Michel Plessis-Bélair, President, Guy Fournier, and Claude Héroux.

6. (a) The Corporation has recovered part of its investment. (b) The Corporation, like other investors, is reimbursed in proportion to its investment.

7. No form of guarantee has been required from the producer.

[English]

TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS IN GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 1,280—Mr. Nowlan:

Do any government departments still have every letter, document and memorandum in French translated into English as a matter of course and, if so, which ones?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): No.

[Mr. Gray.]

INVESTIGATION OF FOOD PRICES AT KASABONIKA, ONTARIO

Question No. 1,300—Mr. Yewchuk:

Is an investigation being carried out on food prices at Kasabonika, Ontario, and, if so, what is the nature of such investigation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): So far as the Combines Investigation Act is concerned, the general practice is that no information is given out as to whether a particular inquiry is in fact being pursued unless and until a report is published or proceedings taken in the courts.

PIPELINE RESEARCH CONDUCTED BY CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE

Question No. 1,302—Mr. Harding:

1. What specific aspects of pipeline research are being conducted by the Canadian Wildlife Service?

2. What are the amounts being spent on such research?

3. On what date can the results of this research be expected?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): 1. Northern Ecology Studies: Co-operative studies with the State of Alaska on the Porcupine Herd of caribou which cross between Alaska and the Yukon Territory. The studies concern population structure, recruitment, mortality factors in relation to harvest rates and migration routes. To critically evaluate the requirements for food and space of this population. Provide guidelines to development organizations for mitigating damage to wildlife habitat. Waterfowl Population and Habitat Inventories: Nesting and staging grounds in amplification of Arctic ecology map series data. Dall Sheep Population and Habitat: Studies of population structure recruitment, mortality factors in relation to harvest rates, and habitat requirements.

2. $92,033 by the Canadian Wildlife Service during the fiscal year 1971-1972, has been authorized through normal budgetary procedures.

3. Preliminary results have already been communicated to resource use agencies and pipeline consortia on request. Final reports will be available in 1973.

BONNE BAY PARK, NFLD.—LOSS OF FISHING PRIVILEGES

Question No. 1,305—Mr. Marshall:

1. Will Newfoundland fishermen whose inshore fishing areas lie within the limits of the Bonne Bay Park be compensated by the federal government for loss of their traditional fishing privileges and, if so, in what manner?

2. Has the federal government, in co-operation with the Province of Newfoundland, discussed plans for retraining programs and other aids for the fishermen who might be displaced by the establishment of the Bonne Bay Park?

3. Will fishermen within the boundaries of the Bonne Bay Park be allowed to retain the use of wharf and other facilities situated within the boundaries of the Park?

4. Has the Government of the Province of Newfoundland entered into discussions with the federal government as to plans for the resettlement of those communities within the boundaries of the Bonne Bay Park and, if so, what communities are affected?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. When the boundary has been finalized, discussions regarding compensation for fishermen will take place and compensation will be arranged if there is a loss of traditional fishing privileges.

2. Preliminary discussions have been carried out with the Provincial Government to outline the types of programs which have been carried out in other areas. In establishing a park the province retains jurisdiction for resettlement or retraining programs.

3. An assessment will be made in conjunction with the fishermen to determine their needs and to explain park requirements.

4. The boundaries attached to the agreement signed last October 31 indicate which communities will require relocation. Preliminary discussions have been carried out with the Provincial Government to outline the types of programs which have been carried out in other areas. In establishing a park the province retains jurisdiction for resettlement or retraining programs.

COMPULSORY CONTROLS ON PRICES AND WAGES

Question No. 1,320—Mr. Yewchuk:

Has the government taken a position with respect to compulsory controls on prices and wages and, if so (a) what is it (b) on what basis was it taken?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Attention is directed to Hansard page 5680, dated May 11, 1971.

REPRESENTATIONS BY NEWFOUNDLAND TO AMEND REGULATIONS GOVERNING SEAL HUNT

Question No. 1,335—Mr. Carter:

Have representations been made to the Government of Canada by the Premier of Newfoundland to amend the regulations governing the seal hunt and, if so, what changes in the regulations were recommended?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Informal discussions were held between the Government of Canada and the Premier of Newfoundland, primarily related to the continuation of the hunt. No official recommendations for specific amendments to the Seal Protection Regulations have been received by the Government of Canada from the Premier of Newfoundland.

REPRESENTATIONS FROM NEWFOUNDLAND CONCERNING OPERATIONS OF HERRING SEINERS

Question No. 1,338—Mr. Carter:

Did the Government of Canada receive representations from the Government of Newfoundland concerning the operations of herring seiners on Newfoundland's inshore fishing grounds during 1970 and, if so, what were the recommendations?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Several discussions were held between officials of the Government of Canada and officials of the Government of Newfoundland on problems which arose between small boat fishermen and large seiner fishermen. The discussions related to means of resolving the concerns of both types of fishing operations.

REQUEST FROM NEWFOUNDLAND FOR ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN WHO SUFFERED LOSSES IN THE FERRYLAND AREA

Question No. 1,339—Mr. Carter:

Has the Government of Canada received a request from the Government of Newfoundland to assist fishermen and others in the Ferryland (Newfoundland) area who suffered losses of fishing gear and property etc., as a result of a recent severe storm in that area and, if so, was assistance offered and to what extent?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): No official representations have been received from the Province of Newfoundland for storm damage assistance at Ferryland or any other location in respect of damage sustained this past winter.

MONTMAGNY CONSTITUENCY—PROJECTS IN WHICH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT HAS BEEN FINANCIALLY INVOLVED

Question No. 1,442—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For each project in which the government has been financially involved from 1965 to 1968, in Montmagny County (a) what was the nature of the project (b) what amount was allocated by the federal government (c) what amount was allocated by the provincial government (d) have other contributions been made and, if so (i) in what amount (ii) by whom?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on expenditure disbursements or revenue collections for constituencies, counties or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way. Information concerning expenditures could be supplied about specific projects or programs which are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular constituency or locality.

BELLECHASSE COUNTY—PROJECTS IN WHICH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT HAS BEEN FINANCIALLY INVOLVED

Question No. 1,445—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For each project in which the government has been financially involved from 1965 to 1968, in Bellechasse County (a) what was the nature of the project (b) what amount was allocated by the federal government (c) what amount was allocated by the provincial government (d) have other contributions been made and if so (i) in what amount (ii) by whom?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See answer to Question 1,442 answered this day.

Orders for Returns

LÉVIS COUNTY—PROJECTS IN WHICH THE GOVERNMENT HAS BEEN FINANCIALLY INVOLVED

Question No. 1,446—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For each project in Lévis County, which involved the government financially since 1965 (a) what was the nature of the project (b) what amount was allocated by the federal government (c) what amount was allocated by the provincial government (d) have other contributions been made and, if so (i) in what amount (ii) by whom?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See answer to Question No. 1,442 answered this day.

DORCHESTER COUNTY—PROJECTS IN WHICH THE GOVERNMENT HAS BEEN FINANCIALLY INVOLVED

Question No. 1,447—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For each project in which the government has been financially involved from 1965 to 1968, in Dorchester County (a) what was the nature of the project (b) what amount was allocated by the federal government (c) what amount was allocated by the provincial government (d) have other contributions been made and, if so (i) in what amount (ii) by whom?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See answer to Question No. 1,442 answered this day.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ASSISTANCE TO INDIAN ORGANIZATIONS IN PAST FIVE YEARS

Question No. 706—Mr. Horner:

1. How much money has gone to Indian organizations in Canada in the past five years (a) who are they (b) what amount to each?

2. How much money has gone to other organizations or associations connected with Indian people (a) who are they (b) what amount to each?

3. How much money has been spent in the office of the Committee on Indian Rights and Treaties?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—ASSISTANCE TO WELFARE ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 1,042—Mr. Rondeau:

1. How much money was paid by the Department of National Health and Welfare to various welfare organizations during the past year in Canada (a) what were the names of the organizations (b) and, what amount did each receive?

2. Did the Department finance "The Hamilton Welfare Races"?

Return tabled.

[Mr. Jerome.]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Notice of Motion No. 198 is acceptable to the government.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MR. F. C. JAMES AND THE CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION AND GOVERNMENT

Motion No. 198—Mr. Rowland:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between Mr. F. C. James of Winnipeg, Manitoba and the Canadian Transport Commission, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Supply and Services.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Notice of Motion No. 232 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the conditions stated by the parliamentary secretary, is the pleasure of the House that Notice of Motion No. 232 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING PROPOSED NATIONAL PARK AT VAL MARIE-KILLDEER, SASKATCHEWAN

Motion No. 232—Mr. Burton:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the following documents with respect to the proposed second national park in Saskatchewan to be situated in the Val Marie-Killdeer area (a) all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan on this park since January 1, 1964 (b) all correspondence between the Government of Canada and other interested persons and organizations since January 1, 1964, concerning the proposed park (c) an outline of plans for development of this park.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Would Your Honour be good enough to call Notices of Motions Nos. 163 and 179?

COPIES OF MINUTES OF MEETINGS OF PUBLIC HEALTH ENGINEERING ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Motion No. 163—Mr. Alexander:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the Minutes of all meetings of the Public Health Engineering Advisory Committee, responsible to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, up to and including the meeting of November 24, 1970.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Public Health Engineering is an advisory committee to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the minutes of their meetings are regarded as internal documents for use by the minister. For this reason it is regretted that the documents cannot be tabled. The hon. member for Hamilton West may therefore wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Alexander: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

REPORTS RELATING TO USAGE OF MARIJUANA

Motion No. 179—Mr. McIntosh:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all reports or other documents relating to tests or experiments conducted to date by or on order of the Department of National Health and Welfare on usage of marijuana.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is a long-standing tradition in scientific circles that publishing the results of research is the prerogative of the researcher, and not of the sponsoring agency. For this reason, and as a matter of policy, the Department of National Health and Welfare does not make public the findings of research workers.

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): On my hon. friend's behalf, transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—ASSISTANCE FOR THOSE WITHOUT INSURANCE BENEFITS—AID TO PROVINCES AND MUNICIPALITIES TO MEET WELFARE COSTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question. In view of the very alarming unemployment figures for the month of April and now that he has refused on behalf of the government to extend seasonal unemployment benefits, does he propose to recommend any measures to offer assistance to those who find themselves without unemployment insurance benefits? For example, does he propose to advance the effective date of the proposed changes in his new insurance legislation, some important items of which will not become effective until January 1, next?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The one feature which does not become effective until January 1 is the provision for universality. The one feature which does become effective as of July 1—and it is a provision to which the hon. gentleman has often expressed opposition—is easier eligibility. I hope that when the bill comes before the House the opposition will accept readily the proposal that a person should be entitled to unemployment insurance after eight weeks attachment to the labour force, not after 12 weeks or 16 weeks as the hon. gentleman has prescribed publicly on several occasions.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister's answer will not bring much comfort to those who are now waiting for such assistance. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether, in view of the figures for the month of April and the consequential increase in welfare burdens falling upon the provinces and the municipalities, the government of Canada is now prepared to review the adamant position it has taken in the past with regard to making further assistance available to provinces and municipalities? Is the government prepared to reopen this question with the provinces and municipalities so as to be of assistance to them and also to ensure that people in this country do not go hungry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The government is now paying 50 per cent of welfare costs under the Canada Assistance Plan and does not contemplate changing this situation at the present time. I have no doubt representations will be made by the provinces and municipalities which, quite naturally, would like to have the general taxpayer rather than the local taxpayer bear a larger share of the burden.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the Acting Prime Minister not agree that when the government accepts the responsibility for slowing down the economy, thereby creating additional unemployment and adding to the welfare burdens of the municipalities and provinces, it is proper that it should follow through by bearing an increased proportion of the heavier burdens imposed upon the other levels of government rather than simply telling the provinces to control their own expenditures?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is obviously not a supplementary question. It is an argument.

UNEMPLOYMENT—NUMBER OF PERSONS RECEIVING INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. The minister has mentioned the fact that some 200,000 persons are in receipt of seasonal unemployment insurance benefits. Can he tell the House how many persons are in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits on the latest date for which figures are available?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The latest date for which figures are available, according to the Bureau of Statistics, is the end of March. Possibly by the end of the question period I can answer more factually the question which the hon. member has put to me. I will try to do so in the next 15 minutes.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNEMPLOYMENT—NUMBER OF PERSONS SEEKING WORK

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he give us the figures from his department and tell us how many persons are registered as being out of work and seeking employment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I do not have the latest figures with me but, as the hon. member knows, I can supply them to him whenever he wishes as I did for a previous month. I will be glad to do so again.

* * *

MANPOWER

INTENTION RESPECTING ADULT RETRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that, as I understand the position, those attending retraining courses are not counted in the unemployment figures, would the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions with respect to his intentions in connection with the adult retraining program over the next decade, let us say?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I will consider an appropriate time for making such a statement on motions, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the number of people taking retraining programs is an important factor in the labour force, but the number under training this year compared with last year is not significantly different.

Mr. Comeau: Does the announced 15 per cent reduction in federal grants for training courses constitute an admission of failure by the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NUMBER OF PERSONS RECEIVING SEASONAL BENEFITS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Would the Minister of Labour take the time to clarify or correct his statement that there has been no increase in the number receiving seasonal unemployment insurance benefits this year, because according to the Bureau of Statistics there has been an increase of approximately 30 per cent?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I said in my statement, and it was not necessarily in the prepared text, that the number of people receiving benefits on the latest date for which figures are available, May 15, was 200,000. I also indicated that this compared with 180,000 at the same time last year. When correcting statistics perhaps the hon. member might inform the House that the figures he used were applicable for the month of February, while the figures I used were for the month of May.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

[Translation]

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED MEETING WITH QUEBEC MINISTER OF LABOUR TO DETERMINE JURISDICTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the Quebec Labour Minister stated that he would like to have jurisdiction over manpower in Quebec, would the minister be prepared to meet with him as soon as possible to decide on the sharing of responsibilities and would he make a statement in that regard soon?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): There have been conversations between the minister in Quebec and myself and I expect there will be further conversations. I think there is no doubt about our position that the important economic aspects of manpower and the mobility of manpower are of vital concern to the federal government and fall clearly within our jurisdiction.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION THAT INFLATION REMAINS NO. 1 ENEMY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of a recent statement by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission to the effect that inflation remains Canada's No. 1 economic enemy. I should like to ask the minister whether this is also his and the government's position at this time and, if so, whether this means that the government intends to continue pursuing gradual measures for economic recovery.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): First of all, I have not seen the statement made by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission. In answer to the second part of the question, the government's policy for over a year has been very expansionary in both the fiscal and monetary fields.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the minister has emphasized on a number of occasions that one has to go somewhat slow in order to avoid inflationary pressures, will he inform the House and the country whether it is the government's policy to hasten measures to attain economic recovery, or does he intend to continue the same gradual policies he has pursued up to now?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the government intends to move as fast as possible toward full employment in Canada with relative price stability.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South on another supplementary question and then the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, but I think in fairness the Chair should then recognize the hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question arises out of the answer the minister has just given. As I understood him he said that the government would pursue policies for economic recovery and price stability, or words to that effect. I should like to ask him whether his studies and the studies of his advisers have indicated that in order to attain what he calls price stability, economic recovery must not be permitted to take place quickly so that unemployment in this country might be reduced to a bearable level, say this year?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the studies that we have carried out indicate that the type of stimulus we have been giving to the economy is having an effect on the economy—

An hon. Member: It sure is.

Mr. Benson: —and will continue to have an effect on the economy, and that we will move to the full, normal capacity of operation of the economy with, hopefully, reasonable price stability.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION PROGRAMS TO COMBAT INFLATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission to the effect that inflation is the country's No. 1 economic enemy, will he confer with the chairman of that commission and at the first opportunity report to the House on motions on what programs the commission intends to follow in order to combat what the chairman has described as the No. 1 economic enemy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say I am surprised that anyone on the other side should be advocating inflationary policies, which seems to be the purpose of all these questions. I can think of nothing more likely to harm employment in this country than inflationary policies, and this government will resist them and will follow sound expansionary policies, which is what the country needs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously this debate could be pursued for the whole question period. I suggest to hon. members that if we have time to return to this very interesting debate later we might do so. At the moment the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Champlain.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DECISION OF CRTC RESPECTING EXTENSION OF FRENCH NETWORK IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State.

Has he, or does he expect to, intervene concerning the CRTC decision following the request by the government of New Brunswick to extend the French network in this province?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State has not intervened in this connection. However, he is studying the matter because many representations have been made by the people of New Brunswick. At the present time I am having discussions with the CRTC whose decision seems to have been given a wrong interpretation by some people in New Brunswick, unless it is the latter's protests that were interpreted incorrectly.

For the time being, there is some confusion which we are trying to clear up and I will be pleased to inform the House as soon as we have been able to straighten out the situation.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the minister. Does he feel the extension of the network necessary?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking the minister to express an opinion.

* * *

[English]

COMMUNICATIONS

BROADCASTING, CABLEVISION—DISCUSSION AT JUNE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State. As this whole problem of broadcasting and communications, let alone cable television, has bubbled onto the scene in the last two or three months, has the minister today or yesterday recommended to his colleagues in the cabinet, particularly the Prime Minister who may be in Moscow, that this matter be placed on the agenda of the June conference of the provincial premiers and the Prime Minister in order that some of these problems can be clarified?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I believe I answered that question last week, Mr. Speaker. I feel that it does not behove the Secretary of State to make a recommendation in that respect. We told the provincial authorities we were willing to discuss the matter with them or their representatives, even before the June conference. As for the agenda of the conference, I understand it has already been drawn up; only at the request of the premiers themselves could the Victoria conference agenda be changed or a new item added to it; the federal government is not the boss.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of his answer yesterday that officials of the federal government were discussing the agenda with provincial officials, can he tell us what these officials are discussing?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, they are discussing reform of the constitution.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING FREE VOTE FOR PEOPLE UNDER RUSSIAN DOMINATION—EXCHANGE OF CONSULS BETWEEN CANADA AND KIEV

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, as we do not seem to get any answers from the government regarding domestic problems, may I turn to foreign affairs and ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the Prime Minister while he is in Moscow will suggest to the government of the Kremlin the need for giving a free vote to the people of Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, the Ukraine and other captive peoples?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before I go any further may I refer to one subject that may or not be related to foreign policy. I certainly think I should mention in the House the great victory of the Montreal Canadiens in the Stanley Cup finals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: That's the only applause you will get.

Mr. Sharp: May I say in answer to the specific question that the Prime Minister is taking advantage of his visit to the Soviet Union to discuss all those matters which are of concern to the Canadian people, and the matter referred to by the right hon. member is certainly one of them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I only hope that the government of Canada in this connection will take some lessons from the Canadiens as to how to act effectively from now on. I might say that the interpolation by the minister on a subject on which he knows nothing impelled me to make that observation.

My further question is this. The CBC in its effulgent description of what is happening in Moscow has not dealt with the matter referred to a moment ago, nor has it referred to another important question. Is the Prime Minister asking the Kremlin to permit an exchange of consul-general representatives between Canada and Kiev so that Canadians of Ukrainian origin may not be delayed several years, in many cases, in their applications to visit the old land, and in order that Ukrainians desiring to come to Canada will be permitted to do so, which is now virtually impossible?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that the Prime Minister will be discussing this matter. It has been the subject of some discussion in the past. I do not know whether he will, considering the number of very urgent matters under discussion, raise it at this time, but certainly this matter has been under discussion between our two governments.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he considers a matter which affects hundreds of thousands of Canadians of Ukrainian descent as being unimportant compared to the generalities that are being discussed by the Prime Minister?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATO ACTION ON RUSSIAN INTIMATION CONCERNING BALANCED FORCE REDUCTIONS IN CENTRAL EUROPE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the importance to the security and peace of the world of balanced force reductions in central Europe, will the Canadian government at the next NATO meeting urge our NATO allies to take up seriously the intimation of Mr. Brezhnev that the USSR is willing to negotiate such reductions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say in reply that we are very pleased to see that after a long pause the Soviet Union is finally taking up the initiative of the NATO powers.

NATURE OF AGREEMENT SIGNED BY CANADA AND SOVIET UNION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might pursue the question a little further at the risk of another prideful reply such as the one given me yesterday. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he can shed some light on the nature of the particular agreement which either has been signed or is about to be signed today?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was in communication with our mission in Moscow and I understand that today an agreement will be signed between the governments of the Soviet Union and Canada dealing with the subject of consultations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East might allow me to recognize the hon. member for Sainte-Marie. I appreciate that the matter with which he is dealing is important and I will return to him in a moment.

[Translation]

URBAN AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the minister in charge of housing but in his absence I shall put it to the Acting Prime Minister.

In view of his recent statements concerning possible establishment of a department of urban affairs, can the minister specify what the explicit functions of such a department are to be? Should it be only a service, what limits will be set for it, since this is a field of provincial jurisdiction?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that, during the debate which has been taking place on the government reorganization bill, there has been a lengthy discussion of this subject and I doubt very much whether I should prolong it now. The government of Canada does recognize the limitations in this field and hence the policies it has been following which are having notable success at the moment.

[Traduction]

Mr. Valade: I wish to ask a supplementary question.

I inquired from the Acting Prime Minister because of the ambiguity of the statement made by the minister responsible for housing. Would the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to assure this House that the government will not decide on anything in this respect before having obtained the approval of the premiers at the Victoria conference?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, could the hon. gentleman repeat his question? I am not quite sure I caught all the subtleties of it.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might repeat it in English for the Acting Prime Minister. Can the Acting Prime Minister give us the assurance that no decisions will be taken in this regard before the Victoria conference and before the Prime Ministers at the conference have had a chance to discuss and agree to this proposal by the government?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in its housing policies the government of Canada does act within federal jurisdiction. So far as I know there has been no change to the contrary. If there were, this is a matter which could be settled, so I do not think I should give this undertaking.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East in a moment, but I suggest to hon. members that they might assist the Chair in relation to supplementaries because otherwise we will end up with many members being left with questions unasked, if not unanswered.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATURE OF AGREEMENT SIGNED BY CANADA AND SOVIET UNION—DISCUSSION OF MILITARY MATTERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): With all deference, Mr. Speaker, I was attempting to assist the Chair by asking the question I wanted to ask previously by way of a supplementary. In light of the Acting Prime Minister's indication that the protocol or agreement will deal with consultations, can he assure the House that such consultations will not extend into the field of military or strategic matters?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped the hon. member would agree with me that the subject of disarmament is one that could fruitfully be discussed between our two governments.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

INVESTIGATION OF CANADIAN AIRLINES' DOMESTIC OPERATING POLICIES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Could he tell the House whether the government is considering setting up a form of special inquiry or royal commission to look into the operating policies of Canada's airlines in so far as their domestic operations are concerned in contrast to their foreign operations, and also the position of the regional air carriers within these policies and the actions of the Department of Transport?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. There is a Canadian Transport Board which can deal with these questions. I do not see any reason for establishing a royal commission.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In light of the particular interest expressed in the statements of the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission vis-à-vis one of the air carriers, and his position in the past, surely the minister can think of something better than—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SASKATCHEWAN—GRANT FOR PULP MILL—POLLUTION CONTROL STANDARDS—SITE OF PROJECT

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the fact that an industrial incentive offer for a pulp mill in Saskatchewan has been made conditional on the mill meeting all federal requirements in respect of pollution control and environmental protection, could the minister indicate if these regulations or standards have been finalized, whether they have been made public and, if not, when they will be made public?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the standards have been developed in close consultation both with the provincial pollution boards and the pulp and paper industry across Canada. We hope they will be published in the near future. We have them in what we regard as final form and the Saskatchewan government is fully aware of the standards in their present form.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary arising out of the statement by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion before a committee of the House on Monday that the Department of Fisheries and Forestry had made a proposal to change the specific location of the pulp mill. Could the minister indicate whether his department's proposal has been adopted, and could he inform the House of the specific location of the proposed mill site?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the site of the mill, and particularly the clean-up facilities, are matters which are receiving careful attention by the Department of Fisheries and Forestry here in Ottawa.

* * *

FISHERIES

INTENTION RESPECTING SEASONAL INCOME SUPPORT PROGRAM FOR FISHERMEN

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In light of the statement made by the minister to the effect that he will be unable to introduce a special unemployment insurance program for fishermen by the time the new Unemployment Insurance Act is approved, can he say what the specific intention of the government is in respect of fishermen?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, our intention is to let a full year run under the new unemployment insurance legislation so that the fishermen are fully aware of the benefits under that scheme, and then we will bring in an even better one.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. In view of the fact that the minister has already said that the fishermen will not be removed from the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act until the seasonal income support program is acceptable to the fishermen, may I ask the minister what means he intends to use to determine that acceptability, what group will be consulted, and whether a plebiscite will be held or what other method he has in mind?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as a point of clarification may I say I have never said that this scheme must be acceptable to the fishermen. It has, of course, to be acceptable to my colleagues in the government and also to Parliament.

[Mr. Burton.]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, do I take it from the minister's reply that the government is now asking Parliament to give the government the right to take the fishermen out of the Unemployment Insurance Act without any assurance at all that they will be consulted concerning the kind of program they will come under when they are taken out of the unemployment insurance legislation?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the situation is that the fishermen will continue under the revised unemployment insurance legislation until such time as a better scheme comes along. We will certainly be consulting the fishermen in respect of the development of a better scheme to look after the long-term fluctuations in their income, closures as a result of mercury contamination, and so on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A few moments ago I invited the co-operation of hon. members in respect of supplementaries. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has had two supplementaries. I will recognize the hon. member for Lisgar.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REGULATION OF INTEREST-FREE LOANS BY MACHINERY COMPANIES TO FARMERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Now that the Barber Commission report has been tabled and recommends some regulation of the indiscriminate use of interest-free loans by machinery companies, which according to the report eventually raises farm machinery prices to the farmer between 5 per cent and 7 per cent, I should like to ask the minister whether the government plans any legislation to regulate this practice?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The report of the Barber Commission has just been received and is under study. My colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, like others who are absent today, is out of town on government business. I will bring the question to his attention when he returns.

* * *

YOUTH

OVERSEAS STUDENT EXCHANGE PROGRAM—APPLICATIONS RECEIVED AND APPROVED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration following a question I asked earlier in the week about the overseas exchange program for students. He indicated that the program has been oversubscribed in terms of applications, but he was unable to tell me how many positions have actually been filled. Can the minister now give that information?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I do have with me a fairly lengthy table in reply to the question. I said it had been oversubscribed with regard to most countries. The answer is rather lengthy. I might suggest, if there is general agreement, that it be printed in Hansard as though read.

Mr. Speaker: This is a rather unusual procedure. Perhaps the answer might be tabled by the minister. The information would then be available to the Leader of the Opposition and to other members in this way.

Mr. Stanfield: I am quite prepared to go along with the suggestion of the minister, although I asked a perfectly straightforward question which could have been answered in a simple way.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Did the minister table the information or did he not?

Mr. Speaker: I believe there was agreement that the document referred to by the minister be tabled.

* * *

POLLUTION

LAKE HURON BEACHES—DETECTION OF SHIPS DUMPING OIL

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that Lake Huron beaches have once again been polluted by oil dumped with bilge water from ships using the seaway, I should like to ask the minister whether this area is being patrolled or policed in an attempt to detect ships that are guilty of this practice?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, patrols of the type to which the hon. member refers have been carried out and are constantly carried out in that area both by Canadian vessels and also in conjunction with the United States coastguard.

Mr. Cullen: Have any ships been detected yet in the area which is being patrolled by both governments?

Mr. Jamieson: Very large numbers over the last couple of years, but I do not know of any in the current season which is only a couple of weeks old.

* * *

FINANCE

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF MORATORIUM ON REPAYMENT OF FARM LOANS IN BUDGET

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the continuing shortfall of agricultural income and its serious effects on our whole economy, can the minister indicate whether in his June budget he is prepared to declare a one-year moratorium on the repayment of farm improvement loans, Farm Credit Corporation loans and farm syndicate loans?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I think it would be quite improper for me to indicate what will be in the June budget.

* * *

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—PROCESSING OF ALL APPLICATIONS BY DEADLINE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a question for the Secretary of State. Since May 25, which is next Tuesday, is the deadline for the Opportunities for Youth program, can the minister assure the House that all applications will be processed by that time?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I gave an answer to that question last week, Mr. Speaker, when I said that we were doing everything in our power to observe this deadline but that we might have to ask for two or three days of grace.

[English]

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—RULES FOR OPERATION OF HOSTELS—MEDICAL FACILITIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Since there have been reports that the kiosks and hostels established under the transient youth program may become centres for traffic in drugs or, at the very least, centres for their frequent use, can the minister inform the House whether there will be any house rules with regard to the hostels and whether any proper medical facilities will be made available for individuals who may be suffering from infections or other problems related to the use and abuse of drugs?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, these rules have been established already and were made known to all those who have proposed as a project to set up youth hostels. The requirements that we laid down included those which the hon. member for Egmont has just mentioned.

[English]

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ISSUING OF RELEASES IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): My question is supplementary to the previous question to the Secretary of State. Since the minister is supposed to be one of the more enthusiastic proponents of bilingualism, would he agree to re-issue his four recent releases regarding approved projects under the Opportunities for Youth program in both languages and would he agree to have future releases of approved projects prepared in at least the two official languages so that unilingual Members of Parliament and unilingual Canadians may be able to read about the many varied and interesting projects under this program in all parts of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I do not know which list exactly the hon. member has in mind, Mr. Speaker, but I shall gladly inquire about this. However, I must warn him that a number of project titles made up by young people are just as untranslatable from French into English as from English to French. For instance, "Fun '71".

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

OPPORTUNITY FOR ALL PROVINCES TO STATION ORIENTATION OFFICERS IN FEDERAL OFFICES ABROAD

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): My question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It has to do with the press release yesterday which indicated that the Quebec government may place orientation officers in federal immigration offices abroad. I should like to ask the minister whether the same courtesy or opportunity will be afforded the other provinces?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it may be understood that other provinces would be given the same opportunity.

[Translation]

DUTIES OF QUEBEC ORIENTATION OFFICIALS IN FEDERAL OFFICES ABROAD

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Immigration; I wonder if the minister could tell us whether the Quebec orientation officer will be taken on strength by the federal immigration services abroad and whether he will be permitted to promote immigration to Quebec on cultural and language grounds of francophones seeking immigration in that province or if his responsibilities will merely be those of an office clerk?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The purpose of placing Quebec orientation officers in immigration offices abroad is to begin the orientation program which is quite customary in many provinces of this country and is ordinarily done after an immigrant comes here. In this it was thought advantageous to begin the program at an earlier stage when the future immigrant is still in the country of his origin.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that exactly two minutes are left before the end of the question period and there are still two or three supplementary questions. If we allow all these supplementary questions to be asked, we will of course have no other questions considered.

Mr. James A. McGrath: (St. John's East): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and I should like to paraphrase a report of his statement by the press. If counselling service was adequate in the immigration offices and if, as the minister stated, the present immigration service could adequately cope with the situation, why then did he find it necessary to enter into this agreement with the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is argument.

[Later:]

REASON FOR AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON STATIONING PROVINCIAL OFFICIALS IN FEDERAL OFFICES ABROAD

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since Ontario has had an immigration office in England and in other parts of the world for some time, why was it necessary to have a formal protocol or treaty between the province of Quebec and the federal government in this case?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The agreement which was signed was simply that, an agreement, and it was necessary because the particular officers involved in the agreement were going to be housed abroad in the immigration offices of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, whereas in the other cases, so far as I know, the people are housed in separate provincial offices.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

USE OF RADIO BANDS FOR TRANSMISSION OF LISTENING DEVICE SIGNALS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I wish to ask the Secretary of State a question concerning electronic eavesdropping which was referred to yesterday. Can the Secretary of State say whether or not, in view of his responsibility for communications, any specific frequency bands have been set aside for police or other persons using such listening devices?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am unable to answer the hon. member right away, Mr. Speaker, but I will get this information for him.

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING CLYNE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of a statement by Mr. Barnes, head of one of the civil service bargaining units, that acceptance of the recommendations of the Clyne report will set the bargaining process in the civil service back 40 years, will the minister say whether it is the intention of the government to accept and proceed with the recommendations of the Clyne report?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I heard the remarks of Mr. Barnes on television. I must say I was rather surprised to hear that he claimed the government had accepted in principle the recommendations of the Clyne report, which is quite true, that he was apparently unaware the Prime Minister made the following statement in the House:

> The advisory group recommends that the managerial group excluded from collective bargaining should be more clearly identified and enlarged, and the government is prepared to have this matter studied further in conjunction with the review of legislation affecting collective bargaining.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

STATIONING OF QUEBEC ORIENTATION OFFICIALS IN FEDERAL OFFICES ABROAD

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Is the minister in a position to state whether the government of Quebec has officially requested the appointment of a recruiting or orientation officer in federal immigration offices abroad?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the selection procedures and so on will still be fully the obligation of the immigration officers of the Department of Immigration, and the role of the immigration personnel from Quebec will begin when selection is completed and when it is known an immigrant is destined for the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley on a supplementary.

REASON FOR AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON STATIONING PROVINCIAL OFFICIALS IN FEDERAL OFFICES ABROAD

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that I may be trespassing on the time available to other hon. members for supplementaries, but since one of the independent members was recognized twice I am glad to have been recognized thrice. My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Since he has had long experience in external affairs, may I ask him if it is customary for the federal government and a province to sign a protocol or treaty, which implies a sovereign status for the province? Is this not a change in the federal attitude toward one Canada and other types of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this question might be answered briefly, but the question period expired about a minute ago.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to deny that there was any such purpose in the agreement we signed with the province of Quebec. As the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has said, this is purely for the purpose of facilitating the work of the Quebec immigration department which, under the constitution of Canada, is perfectly proper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Charlevoix is seeking the floor on a supplementary. I apologize to him, and particularly to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, but I hope with the consent of the House that the latter might be allowed to ask a question. I realize that, he being in the last row, it is difficult to reach him. I tried to do so today. The hon. member missed out during the last question period, and with the consent of the House the Chair would now like to recognize the hon. member.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your concern but I shall wait until tomorrow. My question was intended for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but the Acting Prime Minister opened up the subject of the NHL so I will wait until tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege respecting the rights and privileges of all Canadians living in the smaller communities of Canada. The question of privilege arises as the result of an information bulletin which I understand has been sent to householders across Canada outlining procedures in the 1971 census. The bulletin endeavours to assure Canadians that their answers to all questions will be treated with the strictest secrecy and will only be used by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for statistical purposes.

However, it indicates an unacceptable degree of discrimination against those living in the smaller communities because it says quite clearly that people living in the major urban areas will be supplied with self-addressed envelopes in which they will deposit their census returns for mailing to DBS, but anyone living in other than a major urban area will be required to return the census form to the local enumerator, and it will then be perused by either the enumerator or the census commissioner. I think the minister should look into this situation, give the House an explanation, and assure the people living in smaller communities that their rights and privileges will be respected.

Mr. Speaker: The matter raised by the hon. member may be one of importance, and he has suggested that it might be looked into by the minister, but certainly it is not a question of privilege by any means. Perhaps the people living in smaller communities might have a question of privilege, but not the hon. member. I think he might have had a legitimate question to ask during the question period but as the question period has expired it cannot be pursued at this time.

Orders of the day.

• (3:30 p.m.)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL SECURITY

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH EMERGENCIES CAUSED BY LAWLESSNESS OR VIOLENCE

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) (for the President of the Privy Council):

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to examine, inquire into and report upon the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future by reason of lawlessness or violence in Canadian society and that endanger the existence of government or the maintenance of the peace and public order;

That twelve members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the House at a later date, be members of the joint committee on the part of this House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House;

That the committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

And that a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

And on the amendment thereto of Mr. Woolliams (p. 5795)

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak on the motion and the amendment before us this afternoon, I feel that the discussion which might follow this afternoon and on other days might be effectively shortened if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) would indicate in more clear and precise terms than he did last Thursday what in fact the government is willing to accept by way of terms of reference for this joint parliamentary committee which is to be established. If indeed the Minister of Justice, speaking on behalf of his colleagues, can indicate that the government is prepared to accept the reasonable amendment put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), then I think that we could very effectively and efficiently move on to discuss other business in the House. I would be quite willing to yield the floor at this point to the Minister of Justice if he would indicate an acceptance of the amendment.

[Mr. Simpson.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will wait until you end your speech.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The minister says he will wait until the end of my speech. That is very charitable of him. He expects that I have something worthwhile to add to the debate and I appreciate that. Quite frankly, one of the difficulties we are faced with this afternoon, and one of the difficulties that created the amendment proposed last Thursday, is the fact that we are asked to accept a task, to answer certain basic questions, without having clearly defined for us the nature of the problem.

If the events of the October crisis can only be responded to at this distance in time, some half a year later, by the suggestion that we need new kinds of legislation to deal with lawlessness and violence, surely that proposal coming from the government represents a poverty of thought. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it indicates the degree to which the government has now become very unsure of the wisdom of the position it took last fall, and is unwilling at this point to go any further than to say let us have a parliamentary committee to bring in some kind of law that is not quite as nasty as the War Measures Act.

We were told as recently as last Sunday evening by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that, while the government does not want to suggest to the committee what it would like to see in terms of proposed legislation, the Prime Minister did suggest on this same television program that there were gaps in the law which must be filled. He said, in effect, "We have various alternatives for filling these gaps but we want Members of Parliament and the country at large to discuss this thing very freely." What does the Prime Minister mean by that? Is this to be a parliamentary game of blindman's buff in which the members of the committee try and discern what it is the government really has in mind, or are we invited to participate in some kind of shadow boxing exercise over one of the gravest events that has occurred in this country in recent times? Surely, neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of Justice can be that childish about an event of such major significance that they would play this kind of game with Members of Parliament and with the public.

Indeed, the position of members of this chamber may be worse than that, Mr. Speaker, because, along with the proposal for establishing this committee, it is suggested by the government that if the committee does not do its job properly or if a crisis occurs such as the one last fall—we have never really been told exactly what that means though we have been given various renditions of what it means—the government will not shrink from responding in a similar fashion. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on last Sunday's program "Weekend", said:

—if a new crisis like the October one breaks out, then we will introduce special laws very quickly—

We have not told what they might be, whether they will be a return to the public order bill or some other legislation. He continued:

—and if the violence is of such a nature that special laws are bogged down in such a way that we cannot meet the crisis, we will resort again to the War Measures Act. There's no ambiguity on that, and if people don't feel protected, let me just tell them that we will do as well in the future as we did in October—

One can almost imagine some of the Hallelujah choruses coming out of the background at that point. What we have here is some form of parliamentary blackmail. If the members of this chamber do not get on with the job, then the government implies they have the muscle, they have the tools to do the job and are prepared to go to bat again as they did last fall.

For those who are concerned about the present situation, as is the Premier of Quebec, both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) have tried to offer comfort by saying, "Of course, we still have the Criminal Code and we can still act under such sections as seditious conspiracy; we can certainly deal with people who would have the aims and approaches of those active in the FLQ." I really admire the intestinal fortitude of anybody who can make that statement now, in the month of May, when last October they were telling us how important it was to have other repressive laws to do the job. That kind of double thinking, however, does not seem to bother the members of this government to any degree.

In all the discussions that have surrounded the events of last October, both in this chamber and in the country, one of the real problems has been how to get at the basic issues. I suppose it is always the case that when a country's emotions are engaged, when it is faced with an event that its leaders describe as an insurrection and a crisis and when there is talk of revolutionary activity, then the people are inclined to respond to the most emotional aspects of the events. But surely one of the benefits of looking back with sober second thoughts at the events of last fall is that we can go to the heart of the basic issues, that we can ask basic questions, that we do not have to be mislead by requests for laws to cover events that we cannot look at. How can we frame laws in such a way that they will be appropriate for future situations which nobody has described? If the government feels itself caught in that trap, I believe that there are many reasonable and intelligent people in the country and in this Parliament who do not feel caught.

There are three main issues, Mr. Speaker, which I contend must be looked at soberly and rationally. I want to speak about these this afternoon because they should form the background for any committee activity if that committee is going to be responsible in the face of a crisis such as that of last fall and the actions of the government last fall.

The first is the issue of violence. For most people, this is where the discussion usually starts and ends because violence is such an irrational act, because violence is so unpredictable and because it so often dramatic and final. It has a kind of magnetic quality. It is no wonder that the written, visual and oral press give so much attention to violence. We sometimes accuse the press of paying too much attention to it, but I think any thoughtful pressman would reply that they pay attention to violence because people are fascinated by it. I do not know whether it is true to suggest, as many people have, that we live in a violent age—maybe it is just reported more extensively and effectively.

There is no doubt that our society, like most, is troubled by violence from time to time. In its preoccupation and concern with the violence of last October, the government has suggested that there are gaps in the law, that we really do not have the proper instruments in law to deal with violence, that when there is lawlessness and a government is endangered through violence we do not seem to have the appropriate means to combat it. Surely, the government has fallen into the classic trap of immediately jumping to consequences before examining the causes, Mr. Speaker. It might be suggested at this point, I suppose, that if someone is running down the street firing a machine gun one does not resort to a study to determine the cause of such irrational behaviour. Of course, this is true but if some violent event has occurred in the past in a variety of ways, and one has tried to deal with it on the short term, surely there then comes a time when it must be dealt with on the long term. Surely, if we now have this moment to reflect without the pressure of immediate events of a violent nature, one of the first questions to ask is what the roots of violence are and what the causes of violence are.

It has often been suggested in this chamber that the causes of violence in our society today are social and economic inequality. Last fall a number of people suggested that the very serious economic situation in the province of Quebec could well have formed the social fabric out of which arose the acts of violence associated with the FLQ. Last Sunday evening the Prime Minister suggested that there are other parts of the country where there has been exceptionally high unemployment. He referred to the Maritimes, the area that I know best, and he said that there has not been the same kind of violence there. There is some measure of truth in this, but only some because often the very fact of high unemployment merely represents a deeper malaise. I do not think it takes a very acute observer to realize that there have been some long term problems and social discontent in the province of Quebec. Those who have read some of the current literature emanating from Quebec realize the depth of agony and alienation that exists for far too many people in that province.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I am frankly shocked and surprised that the Prime Minister of this country, whose home is in that province, should so often give the impression that his first answer for some of these underlying causes of social discontent and violence is to face them only from the standpoint of repressive and restrictive laws. This seems to me to be almost a council of despair in which we are going to settle for a kind of heavy handed response to the most glaring facets of discontent in a part of this country rather than to root out those elements that give rise to alienation, to agony and to violence. If this government is not willing to engage itself in that area then, surely, it does not deserve to govern and to deal responsibly with the situation.

Secondly, in looking at the question of violence we must be prepared to ask this question: how can violence be prevented? It can be prevented, as I suggested, by going to the root of the long term and general ailments afflicting us, because those ailments alienate parts of society from communities in which they exist. The government itself said that shortly after the kidnappings there seemed to be a deterioration in the will of the people. Have we ever tried to ask why there was this deterioration in the will of the people?

First of all, is it true that there was this deterioration; and, if it is true, what caused it? Was their commitment to democratic institutions so slight and fragile as to collapse at the slightest pressure? I will say more later on about the fragility of our democracy. Why was there such a ready loss of will, if there was such a loss? We ought to attempt to deal with that serious question because, although the War Measures Act was proclaimed and although the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act was enacted, we have not solved the problem. I do not think that any member of the House, including the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice will suggest that we have solved it.

Speaking on the specific question of how violence can be prevented, I find it passing strange that a minister of this government such as the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) who has put some of his thoughts on record in his book, should be so little concerned to justify what was done last fall. Although he has been here almost six years, he has had little to say about a problem that has existed in Quebec for the better part of the last decade. Indeed, in his book the Secretary of State suggested that the government had to invoke the War Measures Act at that particular time because it knew that if it did not respond to that threat there would be another, and another after that. Surely, the government was not surprised at events? It had known about the existence of certain organized violence for the last seven or eight years. As we have heard again and again in this House, there was literally no response on the part of the government.

Speaking on the question of the roots of violence, may I say that if the government was concerned because there were basic gaps in the law, it ought to have said specifically what kind of legislation would be enacted to fill those gaps. It was humbug for the Prime Minister to suggest the other night that the government did not want in any way to predetermine what the committee would do. If this is the government's new modus operandi, one can assume that there will be general references to other bodies whenever it is necessary to do something important. The government will not attempt to bring legislation before the House without referring it first to a committee for study and consideration. It will say, "There is a problem in such and such an area." It might say, to be more specific, "There is a problem in foreign affairs on a certain question, or there is a problem regarding regional development in a certain area. Tell us what to do. Recommend some laws that we can enact in future."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That would be foolish, would it not?

An hon. Member: It would be.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The government is being equally foolish now by saying, on the one hand, that it will not predetermine what the committee will do and, on the other hand, by admitting that there are certain gaps in the law which need to be filled. When we want to know what laws will be introduced to fill the gaps, we are told that we must wait to find out.

The second main issue that occurs to me, and that is of basic importance with respect to events of last fall is this: Deliberate confusion was created and there was a blurring of some important aspects of the events that took place. If one thing disturbed me more than anything else last fall, it was the fact the government deliberately confused the distinction between political ideas and criminal activity. That was not done inadvertently by one minister on one occasion, but was done on a number of occasions by various ministers. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) made the point that the kind of sweeping action taken by the government would certainly deal a death blow to separatism. The implication was that there was strong support for the invoking of the War Measures Act because some people wanted to get rid, by that means, of this difficult question of separatism. It was thought that that kind of strong action on the part of the government would really show the country how serious we were about that situation.

By deliberately blurring the issue and confusing people, by implying that we would give the separatists a rough time through the kind of heavy handed response that was made, the government showed a kind of intolerance that is a long, long way from anything that we have known in this country. Furthermore, that kind of intolerance is not in the traditions of this country. One of the things that makes Canada unique in my estimation is that despite problems we have encountered during the 100 years of our history, we have been able to sit down and discuss these problems fact to face. Sometimes the discussions have been long and difficult and sometimes the results have not been totally satisfactory. Nevertheless, we have always felt a great measure of respect for each other and for our differences.

Last fall the government showed the kind of intolerance that suggested that when people espouse certain political ideas, the government will not hesitate to utilize its own form of reaction and repression. There might, therefore, even be a kind of state induced violence. Through its overwhelming actions last fall, the government told the separatists what it is prepared to do and how it is prepared to respond to one political front.

I wonder if our fellow Canadians have thought about the implications of that for other parts of the country. What if the people of western Canada should espouse some form of western separatism, as has been suggested on more than one occasion?

Mr. Francis: How? By the use of terror?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Say the three Maritime provinces decide they want to form a union? Would the government, by intimation, suggest that it might use some form of unilateral and repressive action in that situation? Perhaps it would wait until one or two individuals from that area who are not in the mainstream, perhaps, were willing to resort to criminal activity or terror. Would the government then respond and justify its actions on the ground that it is dealing with these specific events while, at the same time, dealing with the over-all problem of political differences? That is not in our tradition, Mr. Speaker. Quite obviously, if that should become part of our tradition, that tradition will be a most dangerous and degrading one. Are we to move away from our traditional posture of public tolerance to one of intolerance? In the field of the espousing of various political ideas, are we to move from tolerance to repression? Will we lose in some measure our right to dissent?

• (3:50 p.m.)

Not too long after the events of last October, the Prime Minister suggested in a television interview that one of the positive things that had happened was that he had polarized the situation. That is polarization all right, but not the kind of polarization one can associate with a democratic country. For all of this, surely there is the question of the government's own perception of social unrest, apprehended insurrections, crises, or call them what you will, and its responsibility to these people. At what point does the government decide it has the right to unilaterally suspend and suppress traditional freedoms, rights and judicial procedures? It has not been clearly defined at what point this must occur. To date, the government has been noticeably reluctant to openly engage in a discussion on that basic question.

There is a third main area that certainly must be examined by any committee that is to do its job responsibly. That is the question of the relationship between civil liberties and public order. Last Thursday, the Minister of Justice referred to this when he was speaking in the debate, because he wanted to point out the problems which seem to exist from time to time in a modern democratic state. When talking about the gaps in the law, he said:

> But, in eliminating those gaps, we must do everything that can be done to strike the proper balance between those sometimes conflicting and competing social goals of an orderly society on the one hand and of individual liberty on the other.

That statement has been made by a number of government apologists as a rationale for some time. In a kind of embarrassed way, the Prime Minister and others said "You know, we have a long history as active supporters of civil liberties in this country, but there comes a time when a difficult decision has to be made between maintaining some public order and allowing people to have individual liberties." As the Minister of Justice suggested, there is the tension, or what have you, between an orderly society and individual liberty. I hope people will look at that statement closely because it is a fraud. How can anyone think that there can be a genuine conflict between order in society and individual liberty? Surely, you cannot have one without the other. You cannot have any real sense of order in a society unless you have free men. If men are not free, that order rests totally on some kind of dictatorial suppression and enforcement. It is high time we stopped using these kinds of red herrings to distract from the main question.

Mr. Woolliams: And with mercury in them, too.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Another oft quoted favourite comment is that democracy is a weak and fragile instrument. If people are not watched very closely and situations arise that are the least bit abnormal, the state must intervene in some massive way or all of the democratic apparatus and procedures will collapse in a moment. Perhaps the members of this government, beginning with the Prime Minister, really do not have very much faith in democracy. I believe at times the Prime Minister has written quite fulsomely on what little faith he really has in the democratic process. Perhaps he does not trust people to exercise their own judgment in a responsible and accountable way, but speaking as one member of this House, I have a good deal of faith in the democratic process of this country even if the government does not.

A government which so willingly acted in the middle of the night to set aside democratic procedures, remove bills of rights, habeas corpus, freedom of association and a whole series of regularly accepted democratic institutions, all because democracy was endangered, has surely endangered democracy itself. If there is anything worse than a danger to democracy, it is that there are those who, through their own abilities, are too weak to defend it. By its actions, the government has indicated that it may not be trusted to protect the regularly accepted procedures and systems of democracy.

If we have learned anything from the events of last fall, even though on many occasions they have been deliberately clouded and obscured, it is that certain basic rights and legal procedures in this country are not negotiable. Any government that wishes to act in the future as this government has acted in the past will have to offer a great deal more in substance and confidence to the people before Parliament allows itself to so willingly accept the actions that were placed before it in the middle of October last.

The committee that is being established could do a very important and useful job. The work of the committee could make a major contribution to many facets of life in this country. Quite frankly, I am amazed and I hope that when I am finished speaking the Minister of Justice will dispel some of my amazement and worry.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That would be impossible.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): When the Minister of Justice spoke last Thursday on setting up this committee, he seemed totally inconsistent when referring to the background of the events of last fall.

Mr. Woolliams: Which is not unusual.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): At that point he seemed unwilling to allow any useful appraisal of the events of last fall. When the Prime Minister spoke over television last Sunday, he indicated that the events of last fall were the framework and basis for the sittings which would take place in this Parliamentary committee. Surely, any reasonable individual who has only thought briefly about the purpose of this Parliamentary committee would realize it would be an absolute necessity for this committee to examine the events of last fall.

It is impossible to proceed to the discussion of any kind of proposed legislation without first examining whether the legislation which was used was used in good faith and was really necessary. Surely, we have to learn that from the people who were chiefly involved in administering and executing this kind of legislation. The people of this country have a right now, at a time of relative peace, to a full statement of the facts in an objective form. The provinces, which may be faced with administering any new form of law in this regard, will wish to present their point of view.

Basically, and most important, the onus is on the government to prove the need for more repressive and more restrictive laws. It is not good enough for the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice to say "No, you cannot look at the events of last fall. We will not tell you what laws we have in mind. If you do not bring in a law and recommendation quickly, we still have the War Measures Act and other legislation at the ready." This is not the kind of atmosphere in which to proceed with the work of this important committee. The committee must get on with the job. The government ought to act responsibly by indicating its willingness to accept the amendment. Perhaps it should redraft the terms of reference in such a way as to enable the committee fully to satisfy the concern which is felt in the country. If this is done it may not be necessary to resort once again to a kind of response in an emergency which I believe in no way enobled Parliament or assisted the country.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege deriving from an incident which took place a few moments ago when our protective staff made the decision to throw a young lady out of the gallery. Apparently, persons visiting this Parliament, particularly students, are prevented from using the galleries if they are wearing shorts.

I have been observing, as I am sure have other hon. members, that there are much more brief costumes than shorts worn these days. Nevertheless, the decision has been made by someone that persons wearing shorts are not admitted into the galleries. I have no reason to discuss women's styles. I understand women can wear whatever they wish to wear. Everything is in order. Nothing is out of place any more. Shorts are permissible for evening wear as are other forms of attire. Last week a constituent from my riding was thrown out of the gallery with a great deal of publicity and I am sure her family were not in the least pleased about it.

I suggest that if we are to enforce this regulation concerning dress in the galleries we should at least supply the National Capital Commission and Members of Parliament with copies of these rules in order that visitors may be spared embarrassment. The type of dress objected to is worn on the street. It is perfectly acceptable in the high schools of our nation. Students do not realize that under our rules it is prohibited. I think they are offended by being thrown out, and if that is so, then I am offended on behalf of these constituents. In order to spare visitors this kind of publicity and embarrassment, I suggest the National Capital Commission, which helps Members of Parliament to conduct school tours, be supplied with information which could be passed on to students by the schools before they come here, outlining the regulations as to dress which apply in the galleries, restaurants and cafeteria.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Timiskaming for bringing this matter to the attention of the Chair and of other hon. members. I believe no new rule has been made. It is, rather, the style which has changed. There are new items of ladies' apparel which perhaps I should not refer to at this time. In any event, it appears it is this new style which causes some confusion as far as the application of the rules is concerned. The point is well taken. The Chair will discuss the matter with the Sergeant-at-Arms, who has the responsibility for applying the rules as to the style of dress to be worn in our galleries, and I am sure some kind of compromise can be reached which will prevent a recurrence of the unfortunate incidents to which the hon. member has just alluded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not want to become involved in the question of privilege, but I should like to assure the hon. member for Timiskaming that the young lady he mentioned is a great credit to him and to his constituency.

Mr. Peters: Perhaps that will help her with her family.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Speaking to the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), I regret to say that in our view the amendment is not designed for the purpose of ascertaining what the nation needs by way of additional legislation to deal with emergencies which may arise in the future but, rather, that it has been designed for the purpose of appraising, or adjudicating upon, what was done in the past.

Mr. Woolliams: That is not correct.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I ask the House this question: would it not turn the proceedings of this committee into a partisan, political exercise, possibly acrimonious, more concerned about whether the government was justified in proclaiming the War Measures Act last October than with the vital and potentially crucial question which forms the basis of the government's motion, namely, to examine, inquire into and report upon the kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies which may arise in the future endangering the existence of government or the maintenance of the peace and public order?

As I have already said, the government proclaimed the War Measures Act reluctantly. The government does, and must, accept full responsibility for doing so. When the government determined to invoke the act it was convinced it was a proper, necessary and justifiable course of action. This is still the position of the government as far as the events of October are concerned. In the last analysis, the government will have to answer for the exercise of that judgment to the electorate of Canada. The government recognizes this, and accepts it.

One of the things which has disturbed me, listening to the speeches of hon. members opposite on this motion and on the amendment is this: as I listened, I kept asking myself what they would have done had they borne the responsibility of government last October. The answer which came through was as disturbing as it was clear—they would have been incapable of taking the definite decisions necessary to cope with the challenge of the terrorists.

As far as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is concerned it is certain from his own words, as they appear at page 5796 of Hansard that he would have done absolutely nothing. This is what he said in his speech last Wednesday:

> I am opposed to any kind of special legislation and I am opposed to this motion because it underlines the need for special legislation, something which I do not accept.

Those were his words in the House. They are an interesting addition to the memorandum which was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on October 22 last year by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) to which the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands referred in the House on November 4 last, as reported at page 892 of Hansard. He wrote then—

Mr. Woolliams: On a question of privilege. I assume the minister intends to read those words now. This has nothing to do with our party but it affects the principles upon which we work in this House. The memorandum referred to was requested by the Prime Minister. Does the Minister of Justice now say there is no suggestion that whatever was written by the former leader of the New Democratic Party was confidential?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I see no objection to that correspondence being read, because it was public. We took the precaution of checking with the leader of the party concerned. Moreover, he himself referred to it in his speech on November 4 last. I believe the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) made his reply public, also.

Mr. Stanfield: I have forgotten.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In any event, the position set forth in the memorandum was that the hon. gentleman and his friends believed it desirable to pass a special statute providing necessary but limited powers to deal with a national crisis arising out of real or apprehended insurrection in peacetime. Then, a number of suggestions were made with respect to such legislation. The following suggestions are made with regard to such legislation under 11 headings dealing with what the new legislation should contain. I fail to understand why the change of mind and heart about the necessity for additional legislation in peacetime, as expressed by the new leader of the New Democratic Party, from that expressed by his former leader in response to a question posed to him by the Prime Minister of this country.

An hon. Member: We have learned a good deal.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It seems to me there is a bit of an opportunistic change of heart here.

After listening to arguments in the chamber, we find that a type of non sequitur is put forward, and we have heard it again today. The argument is that, since the government made a mistake in invoking the War Measures Act in October of 1970, this demonstrates there is no need for additional legislation to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future by reason of lawlessness or violence in Canadian society. That is the type of non sequitur that we have heard. This action was not needed in October; it is not needed now; therefore, this exercise is useless. It would be far better, so the argument goes, to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If the Minister of Justice is going to quote or paraphrase me I hope that he will do so properly.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I was not quoting you.

Mr. Woolliams: You referred to my amendment and what I said. Mr. Speaker, I intend to be brief. If we need any legislation that should be studied by a committee, in light of the words of the Minister of Justice the last time this subject was before the House when we brought in certain legislation to meet a crisis, the committee should be allowed to study it. I suggest that in light of that, the committee should deal with similar crises. It should be allowed to analyse the former crisis and the government's performance in order to decide whether we need new legislation and of what type. Since the minister began in this vein I hope he will paraphrase me properly, accurately and honestly.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will deal with that matter of privilege very quickly. I was neither paraphrasing nor quoting the hon. member. I was summarizing the arguments made in this chamber in respect of the amendment. I hope the hon. member will not be so sensitive as to think that I would direct every remark to a speech he made. I referred only to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North.

Another argument proposed was that there was no need for action in October of 1970 because nothing happened. That is the type of argument which is a subtle attempt to put the government in the position where it would have to prove a negative; that is, nothing happened therefore nothing was necessary. I have said before in this House that nothing happened because the government acted. It will avail hon. members on the other side nothing to attempt to invert the burden of proof by that type of argument.

Mr. Woolliams: You come before the committee and give evidence. Then, we can cross-examine you and find out how sincere that argument is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It would seem to the Chair that the Minister of Justice has the floor. With all respect to other hon. members, I think he should be allowed to complete his remarks. If hon. members have proper points of order or questions of privilege the Chair will hear them.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to assure the hon. member that I am not trembling in my boots over the possibility of undergoing cross-examination by the hon. member. I enjoy this type of intellectual exercise. He has cross-examined me for the last three years and it has been enjoyable for me. I do not know how profitable it has been for him, but it has been a useful exercise.

One fact that must not be lost sight of in this debate is that as soon as possible after the War Measures Act was proclaimed the government introduced the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act 1970, which reduced the scope of the law in effect under the regulations proclaimed under the War Measures Act. After a full and prolonged debate in this chamber, Parliament passed the public order measure. I submit that in so doing, this Parliament gave its stamp of approval to the invocation of the War Measures Act. I would remind hon. members that section 14 of the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act provides as follows:

> On, from and after the day this act is assented to, any offence committed under section 4, 5 or 6 respectively, of the Public Order regulations, 1970 made pursuant to the War Measures Act shall be deemed to be an offence committed under section 4, 5 or 6, as the case may be, of this act, and any investigation proceeding or other act or thing instituted, commenced or done under the authority or purported authority of those regulations shall be deemed to have been instituted, commenced or done under the authority or purported authority of this act and as though this act had come into force on October 16, 1970.

In other words, the operative sections of the regulations proclaimed under the War Measures Act were endorsed, ratified and confirmed by section 14 of the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act which received the approval of this Parliament. I am saying that this was not unilateral government action, but action endorsed by this Parliament and the party to which the hon. member who is interjecting belongs supported that action.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Under the circumstances, to ask the Standing Committee to sit in effect in judgment on the decision to proclaim the War Measures Act, would be to ask the committee not only to sit in judgment on what the government did, but also to sit in judgment on the decision of Parliament itself.

Mr. Woolliams: What are we going to study?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Surely this is manifestly an unacceptable attempt through the committee to review a decision of Parliament.

Mr. Woolliams: Even you must choke on those words.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I also want to remind hon. members that on October 17 this House approved a resolution seeking the confirmation of this House of the proclamation of the War Measures Act. We asked for an endorsement, and that was not necessary under the legislation, but the government felt it should come before the House to receive the endorsement of Parliament after the act had been proclaimed. After a two-day debate the House approved this resolution which reads:

> That the House approves the action of the government in invoking the powers of the War Measures Act to meet the state of apprehended insurrection in the province of Quebec—

That is not the entire resolution but those are the operative words. I am not suggesting for one moment that in order to decide upon the nature and kind of legislation that should be considered by Parliament the committee should not look at the history of terrorism and violent confrontation in this country. That would be as ridiculous as the non sequitur I referred to earlier. That history must be looked at, and it is largely a matter of public knowledge—the bombings, the murders and the riots. This must be brought into focus in order to enable the committee to discharge its responsibilities.

I would ask hon. members to bear in mind that there is a vast difference between looking at past events as an aid to guidance for the future on the one hand, and on the other adjudicating on past decisions taken and acted upon.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will be finished in a minute. The government takes the position that the duty of this Parliament, and the function of a committee of the two Houses, should be to evaluate the necessity for and the kind of additional legislation that may be necessary to meet emergencies of this type in the future, that is, when lawlessness or violence threatens government or the peace and public order. In order that this may be done in an impartial and non-partisan way, as calmly as possible, the burden of this committee must be directed toward the future and the situation as it exists in this country. The hearings should not be primarily an attempt to resurrect the past, going beyond decisions already taken by this Parliament. These are decisions for which this Parliament will take responsibility, and the government will take responsibility for their initiation, before the people of Canada.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question? Since he has indicated that the committee should be able to look at the various kinds of violent activity that occurred, bombings, terrorism and murder, does he also mean that the committee should be able to look at the causes which precipitated this activity, because that may be important in determining proper parliamentary response?

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to anticipate the decisions the co-chairmen may have to make in determining what is relevant under the resolution before Parliament if Parliament chooses to pass that resolution. The committee and its chairmen will have discretion under the resolution. I think it would be inappropriate for me to anticipate what the committee or the chairmen should do. They will be charged with the terms of reference and it will be up to them to decide what is relevant and discharge that discretion.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, surely the minister is sort of arguing against himself because a moment ago he did definitely suggest the kind of things they might look at. Since he has made these suggestions, which obviously will be taken into account by the committee, I am asking whether he also means that this removes any discussion of the events which precipitated these acts of violence. I ask this question because I think it has been indicated by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) that the invocation of the War Measures Act may have had an effect on and possibly precipitated the tragic death of Mr. Laporte, although I hope that is not the case. Therefore, it might be an important task of the committee to indeed consider the invocation of the War Measures Act.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am reminded quite often by hon. members that what ministers happen to say from time to time in the House of Commons does not bind the interpretation of a statute which may pass through this place. For the same reason the committee chairmen are not necessarily going to be bound by what any minister of the government says in discharging their own responsibility. I am sure the committee chairmen will listen to the hon. member's suggestions as well as mine, because we are talking about a parliamentary resolution and he has as much right to make suggestions as I have.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Justice be prepared to come before the committee and give evidence? When he speaks about the history of the various matters that would be helpful in shaping any future legislation, would he be prepared to answer questions and not hide under the formula that it would be against public policy to disclose anything that did happen in order to assist us in the future.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I cannot anticipate what questions the hon. member or members of the committee will put to me but I would certainly come before the committee if I am invited.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): You might be silent.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not think the hon. member would find me silent. I will be bound by the terms of reference of the committee and shall consider any questions which are properly allowed to be put to me. If some of those questions I am unable to answer, the hon. member will know the reason because I will give it to him.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this amendment and the main motion, until the last series of interjections by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and other members, my first observation is to the effect that the Minister of Justice was adopting a rather remarkably low profile in this very important debate. His introductory remarks certainly were very short, and I believe rather vague. I was somewhat surprised by that, and I shall deal with some of the things he said as I go through my remarks. I think perhaps the minister's remarks of last Thursday could be summarized in this way. I believe he said in essence, first, that we need some special powers beyond those of the present Criminal Code to deal with the new and growing phenomenon known as the urban guerilla. He insists, secondly, with a bow to civil libertarians, that the government moved reluctantly last October to invoke the massive powers in the War Measures Act to deal with what has been since sardonically described as the most poorly equipped insurrection we have ever apprehended. Finally, in his remarks the minister said that we must do everything in our power to "strike a proper balance between those sometimes competing and conflicting goals of an orderly society on the one hand and of individual liberty on the other".

But in seeking the balance, the Minister of Justice told the House that there are gaps in the criminal laws of the country in respect of facilitating effective law enforcement at times of serious crises. I have said that the minister assumed, up until today, a very low profile. I repeat this because in mentioning these so-called gaps he does not give the country any real idea or examples of what these gaps are. He is singularly reticent on this particular point, except to say that there are gaps. On the basis of these alleged gaps, the government has by resolution proposed the setting up of a committee. I might read the resolution at this point:

> That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to examine, inquire into and report upon the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future by reason of lawlessness or violence in Canadian society and that endanger the existence of government or the maintenance of the peace and public order.

If one reads this carefully, it will be seen that there is no mention whatsoever of two very important considerations. The first is that there is nothing in the terms of reference of the committee with regard to recommending to the government, as a result of its deliberations, whether or not special legislation is required to protect society from lawlessness. Apparently the minister has already decided this. The minister and the government have decided that special legislation is needed or else he is locked into his particular stance because the whole case for the invocation of the War Measures Act last fall rests entirely on the government's allegations that the Criminal Code was inadequate to deal with the alleged crisis at that time.

The second point—and I feel this is a considerable point—is that there is nothing in the resolution to indicate that the committee is to be instructed to take any special cognizance of individual freedom and personal liberty in bringing forward its ultimate recommendations. On the contrary, the whole thing is negative. It is a law and order resolution. I shall read the pertinent portion again:

> ... legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future by reason of lawlessness or violence in Canadian society and that endanger the existence of government or the maintenance of the peace and public order.

So, what we have is a resolution anticipating certain recommendations from a committee before it has even been set up. I would have been much more comfortable with this particular resolution if these two items had been included in it. After all, who could be against studying whether or not we need special legislation? The urban guerilla tactics are a relatively new feature and are not confined entirely to Canada and Quebec. Throughout the world people are fearful of this new phenomenon.

In the minister's opening statement, there is a brief and mild reference to individual liberties, but how can anyone support a resolution which makes no specific reference to the importance of individual rights in a free society at a time of crisis, a crisis the very existence and definition of which is decided by the government. According to the resolution, and by referring to gaps in the Criminal Code, the government has decided that special measures are indeed required. The resolution does not use the words, "such means as may be required". It states flatly that they are needed. As I said earlier, the whole case for the invocation of the War Measures Act rests on the particular assumption that the Criminal Code is inadequate. That is why the minister is reluctant to allow in this resolution a phrase concerning individual liberty. I believe then that it follows the minister knows in his own mind exactly where these gaps exist and has a pretty good idea of the kind of thing he wants to plug these gaps, the kind of legislation he needs to overcome these so-called gaps in the Criminal Code.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I do not think there is any doubt about it, but to date he has not told us, he has not given us any inkling at all. He wants to fob off the whole thing in a joint Senate-Commons committee. He wants to spread the guilt for the resulting recommendations and to evade the direct responsibility for the changes which he has decided upon already. I do not know whether he is gun-shy because of the flak he got from the so-called Turner law. I do not know what his motivation is, and it is not for me to impute motives, but I sincerely believe that he has a pretty good idea of what he wants included in this legislation, and setting up a parliamentary committee to recommend special measures without allowing it to look into the recent past which motivated the need for them is a mild diversion at best. That is what I think.

I assert that it is incumbent upon the minister to stand up and tell us—he has already responded to a number of other questions—what he has in mind to fill in these gaps, because we have been sucked into similar strategies before. The minister made reference to this in his own little intervention here a moment ago. Before tabling the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, or the so-called Turner law, each caucus was invited to participate in the legislative drafting by sending suggestions to the government. Our caucus felt that it was a serious search for multi-party legislation to deal with what we did or did not know about a crisis that was occurring at the time. Certainly everyone in the House, including the government, was rather anxious to get rid of the War Measures Act. Our caucus responded to the letter of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and spent considerable time drafting certain suggestions. We have been bludgeoned over the head with those suggestions today, but the point is that we saw the resulting legislation and we saw our suggestions ignored.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It was not permanent legislation.

Mr. Rose: I am speaking about the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act on which we were invited to submit suggestions.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The suggestions of the hon. member's party regarded permanent legislation. The Leader of the Opposition took the position at the time that it was not opportune to bring in permanent legislation without further public discussion, and the government agreed with that position. We then brought in the temporary bill which lasted until April 30. We are now dealing with the subject of permanent legislation to which the New Democratic Party addressed itself earlier.

Mr. Rose: Regardless of the clarification which the minister has given, our party spent a good deal of time considering the kind of legislation needed to cover a particular problem. But at that time no one really knew anything more about the situation than the information we received from the government or the press. Subsequent events and revelations placed us in an entirely different position on this question. The same thing was true with regard to the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act. We voted in favour of it on second reading because we felt there was a chance that a concerned government would accept certain amendments that we had to offer. It was hoped that, in order to get rid of the War Measures Act, although we did not particularly like the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, the government would not be impervious to certain amendments which were designed to protect civil liberties and to soften the more repressive provisions of the War Measures Act. But we learned that this was a mistake. The government repudiated even the most innocuous of our amendments. It is my belief that they had no intention at any time of accepting any amendments.

So much for our experiences, except to say that we have no intention of making the same mistakes again. Subsequently, on third reading we voted against the legislation because we felt that it was excessive and repressive. The problem boils down to whether or not the Criminal Code contains sufficient powers to deal with contemporary problems. That is the nub of the issue. I think it would be useful perhaps to deal with what powers the government of Quebec had at its disposal during the darkness of last October. Certainly, many people believe that the federal government and the Quebec government had all the powers they needed under the existing legislation to deal with the crisis and that the invocation of emergency powers had very little to do with the crisis. In fact, the feeling is that the government achieved nothing positive thereby. So we begin to wonder what was the real reason for invoking the act.

The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) touched upon this aspect. Was the invocation of emergency powers really designed to deal with the FLQ or was it a cover to suppress all leftist and separatist groups, particularly members of the Party Quebecois which had gained 24 per cent of the popular vote in a recent provincial election? Many of us are aware of the situation in Montreal, although we do not live there, and the fact that it is a volatile one is nothing new at all. We have heard of bombs in mailboxes and the excessive security needed during Her Majesty's visit to Quebec, as well as Saulnier's attempts at distraction by blaming the infiltration of the FLQ into the CYC at the time of the police strike. All these things are well known to many people. One does not have to live in Quebec to learn that welfare benefits in Montreal are probably two thirds or three quarters of those received in Toronto. We know that instead of building public housing in Montreal to ameliorate the desperate slum housing situation there were circus things like Expo, major league baseball teams and Olympics games given top priority to distract people from the real issues. We wonder if the War Measures Act was not a distraction also.

What is in the Criminal Code? It provides the power to deal with intimidating Parliament or a legislature and to deal with unlawful assembly. It can deal with treason, sedition, sabotage, riots, violence, crimes, kidnapping, and criminal conspiracy. That is a large bag full of powers. In addition, in Quebec there is the Quebec Coroner's Act of June 1967, which requires that every time there is a death caused by violence, negligence or culpable conduct, a hearing can be held in public or private as the coroner decrees, and he can order anyone arrested whose testimony he believes to be pertinent. The person arrested must be brought before the coroner within 24 hours or as soon after as possible, and the coroner can order him detained without bail for up to eight days, when the coroner can detain him another eight days, and so on, until the end of the inquest, unless a Superior Court judge orders otherwise. All this can be done without public knowledge. This is a further power they had.

In addition, in December of 1968 the Quebec legislature passed the Quebec fire investigations act. The act requires an investigation every time there is a fire or explosion which "does not appear to have resulted from mere negligence or to have been purely accidental". An inquiry must be held if the investigation commissioner has reason to believe that culpable conduct or design was involved. This inquiry also can be public or private. Witnesses can be arrested and detained without bail for 24 hours, and all this can be done without public knowledge.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Then, on June 14, 1970, there was passed the Quebec Explosives Act which sets up a licensing system and prohibits the unauthorized possession of explosives. Inspectors can search without warrant where they have reason to believe a breach of the act is occurring. Refusal to give information can earn suspects fines and prison sentences. In effect, they can be forced to testify against themselves by threat of imprisonment.

This is the legal arsenal that was in the hands of the Quebec Minister of Justice last October, a pretty profound and powerful arsenal. I suggest that there seem to be substantial powers in it. In addition to these powers, it should be remembered that the Canadian Forces were deployed in Quebec at the time the War Measures Act was implemented. The Canadian Forces were not deployed under the War Measures Act. I am sure the Minister of Justice remembers that full well. They had been in Quebec for some time. We should all recall also that the tragic death of Pierre Laporte was not averted by either the presence of the army nor the invocation of the War Measures Act some three days earlier. And so here we are, Mr. Speaker.

The government maintains it needs extra powers beyond those in the existing Criminal Code. The resolution does not say whether or not we need extra powers. It assumes we do, but there is a substantial body of opinion that the government does not need extra powers. There are a few portions of the brief of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, of March 19, 1971 worth quoting. It is a thoughtful, eloquent brief and deals with the topic that we have before us today, which is not the War Measures, son of War Measures, but the grandson of War Measures. The brief reads, in part:

> In our respectful opinion, nothing short of an imminent peril of war, invasion or insurrection could justify governmental abridgement of some basic liberties.

The brief further states:

> Presumably the proposed new legislation, being less awesome than the War Measures Act, could be invoked with less political repercussion than the War Measures Act. In our opinion, however, the invocation of emergency powers should be made less easy rather than more easy. The survival of free institutions requires that we aim in the direction of minimizing the use of emergency powers to deal with the problems that confront us.

Another part of the brief reads:

One way to minimize the use of emergency powers is to force the government that wishes them to sustain the political consequences of invoking the ultimate legal monster, the War Measures Act. For the very reason that it is so politically difficult to invoke it is preferable that a government should have to choose between the enforcement of existing criminal legislation and the invocation of the War Measures Act.

The quotation continues:

Almost nothing in the regular law prevents the police from infiltrating, spying, bribing, and even engaging in electronic eavesdropping. While a valid case might be made that some of these powers could be curtailed, particularly electronic eavesdropping, it is impossible to argue for their expansion. What could be urged—

And I think this is pertinent and appropriate to the city of Montreal

—of course, is the more skillful use of some of these techniques. But improved police techniques don't require additional legislation.

The brief concludes by saying:

In any event, the onus must be on those who seek the enactment of such additional legislation to demonstrate the size of the evil to be purged and the need for the means to be used.

That is what the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) suggests, because you cannot divorce the crisis of last October from this particular committee's concerns or the discussion here today. It is impossible to divorce these two. I believe it is up to the minister to prove to this House that special legislation is needed. So far he has not done that. He has been singularly silent on that. His resolution only implies that it is needed, but he has not proven it is needed.

It is not enough to say that, because most people supported the invocation of the War Measures Act at the height of the crisis its implementation was the right thing to do at the time, any more than it is to say now that if most people are in favour of this sort of half-way legislation, then more is either right or necessary. Isn't that what the committee should be deciding? It certainly appears to me that is what the committee should be deciding.

Sometimes it is very tiresome to listen to lengthy quotations, but I do not wish to be stopped from presenting the thoughts of others just because it might be tiresome. I would like to refer to the writings in the Montreal Star of a gentleman by the name of Dominique Clift, because some of the things that he has had to say about special amendments to the Criminal Code deal with the subject we are discussing.

The implication of course is that urban guerrillas and terrorism are viewed by the government as an almost permanent feature of our society, much like they are in the United States.

Parenthetically, I think that the Americans have never used an instrument as repressive and as massive as the War Measures Act, even though they have dealt with some tragedies, some insurrections of a size certainly magnified by many times the events in Montreal last October.

[Mr. Rose.]

Mr. Clift continued:

The definition of what constitutes an emergency belongs to the executive and remains a discretionary power of the government. The trouble with this is that information on emergencies is always derived from the police force which is essentially bureaucratic in the sense that its actions, its attitudes and even its methods usually escape public scrutiny . . .

Increasingly, police would be called upon to assess what would be essentially a political situation. The danger is that the cabinet would gradually abdicate its own political authority in favour of the police who already enjoy a monopoly of information on subversive activities. This inevitably leads to increased police activity based on wider surveillance, the accumulation of personal files and the issuing of identity cards.

I am rather fearful of the Solicitor General's (Mr. Goyer) recent suggestion that Members of Parliament should be treated in the same manner as anyone else, when responding to a question on whether or not there was surveillance or a file kept on certain Members of Parliament. Mr. Clift says:

In the realm of law and civil rights the dangers are even greater. The War Measures Act and the Public Order Act have instituted a new type of offence: the political crime. This is evident by the special provisions which affect the civil rights of persons under suspicion and detention, and which allow for wider and more discretionary use of police powers in times of emergencies. Greater protection should be afforded in such things as access to a lawyer, quick appearance before a judge, preventive detention and compensation when no charges are laid.

He closes by saying:

These are the reasons why the legislation which will succeed the Temporary Public Order Act becomes so important. It may well be necessary to foresee various measures to counter new incidents of terrorism, but as much as possible they should avoid eroding any existing rights. This is all the more important since civil rights are coming under pressure from many other directions, such as credit companies and electronic spying, for instance.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it seems to us the government has not proven its case that the invocation of the War Measures Act was justified in the first place, nor that this proposed resolution adequately protects the rights of the individual because it is biased in favour of law and order. Any special legislation can be used for the purposes for which it is passed, but it also can be used by irresponsible people merely to stamp out dissent, and we are very concerned about that. That is why I will vote in favour of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North. There is still far too much mystery surrounding all the events of last October. My attitude is based not merely on a desire to look back and see whether the government was right or wrong. That is history and people have already made their decision about it. I think the crucial point is that if the events of last fall had not taken place, we would not be dealing with any resolution today that interests itself in the urban guerilla problem.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: It is on that basis that the government must justify whatever legislation may come out of this committee. I repeat, I am not happy with the implication in the resolution that the committee is bound to come up with recommendations on legislation to deal with these problems. It is not allowed the responsibility of deciding whether we need such legislation, but the committee must examine all the facts thoroughly. We have to get at the facts as distinct from government fancy and whitewash before considering amendments to the Criminal Code or special legislation. The Woolliams amendment is worthy of support and I intend to support it.

Our dilemma is that every time we place further power in the hands of the executive we tend to create a potential abuse of such power. Therefore, if we give more power to a particular branch of the executive through special legislation, then reciprocally we may need more safeguards for individual rights and privileges. This protection is not covered in the resolution. In my view the resolution is deficient in two places and in voting for the Woolliams amendment I shall—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. Not much shocks me, but I would ask the hon. member to refer to the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Rose: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall certainly not call it the Woolliams amendment again. I am relieved to hear that Your Honour does not shock very easily.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North is worthy of support for the reasons I have given and, similarly, a non-amended form of the resolution before us is unacceptable for the reasons I have outlined. I think it is important that we look into the various implications of what we are doing here. A great deal of study has been given to this particular dilemma by Mr. Herbert Marx, in an article which appeared in the McGill Law Review. As far as I know he is no relation of either Harpo or Karl. In this article Professor Marx says:

> It is axiomatic that a sovereign state must have effective means at its disposal to deal with emergency situations. Some curtailment of civil liberties is perhaps also inevitable, depending on the gravity of the emergency. However, we must provide checks for unwarranted and excessive government interference with basic liberties. There are at least three such possible checks.
>
> (1) An entrenched or constitutional Canadian Bill of Rights would offer some guarantees. At least, it would prohibit Parliament or the government from automatically suspending civil liberties during an emergency.

I do not think I need elaborate on that or contrast it with what protection an American citizen has in a similar crisis.

> (2) Parliament can restrict the powers delegated to the government under the War Measures Act or under an analogous law. For example, it should be more clearly delineated under what conditions the government can invoke its emergency powers;—

We have never heard about these conditions, Mr. Speaker, from the government.

> —the government should not have the power to deport Canadian citizens; and, it should be specified under what circumstances and with what safeguards the writ of habeas corpus can be suspended.
>
> (3) Implementation of one or both of the above suggestions would permit our courts to be more vigorous and imaginative in checking abuses of our civil liberties.
>
> There is, however, no panacea for the maintenance of civil liberties during emergency. In the long run, as Harold Laski wrote in 1942, the crucial factor in the preservation of civil liberties "is the existence of a citizen body which is conscious that civil liberties matter, and is willing, if need be, to fight for them."

[Translation]

Mr. Paul-M. Gervais (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, in following the debate these last few days on the motion concerning the establishment of a special joint committee to consider legislation required to deal with emergencies arising from disorder and violence, I see that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) seems to have been designed to allow that committee or the House to appeal past decisions of the House.

I realize that the amendment seems to be conceived only to permit a revision of the past. And as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) mentioned a moment ago, what we must do now is look at the future. The people have judged the past and I am sure that they are satisfied and interested in the future.

Moreover, those decisions particularly and essentially drawn from that amendment were taken by a large majority vote in the House and were welcomed by the Canadian people and especially by the Quebec citizens, in spite of the statements made by intellectuals and so-called intellectuals.

Allow me to give a personal view and mention that the Quebec citizens are as much if not more competent and qualified, individually or through their elected representatives, to analyse current events while we are living in a quiet period and that the fear of disorder has been averted, at least temporarily. We hope that those conditions will become permanent.

On the other hand, as a result of some speeches delivered in the House, we feel that some members are far from understanding the reactions and thoughts of Quebecers, I do not blame them; I have no right to do so. This ignorance of the Quebec climate can evidently be ascribed to the distance between that province and others and to the misunderstanding and confusion created by various interpretations and slight differences of language for some whose mother tongue is not French.

• (5:00 p.m.)

However, a great many hon. members from other provinces have been trying to get the facts, both by reading objective reports and through discussions with colleagues who have had a very close knowledge of the October crisis. Let no one say that a bill has already been drafted and that this government is merely waiting for the right opportunity to introduce it. It is even suggested that the proposal to create a joint committee is but an indirect way of giving this matter a first-class funeral.

Perhaps these may be the reasons which have incited the hon. member for Calgary-North (Mr. Woolliams) to move his amendment.

If we were to believe certain hon. members who have participated in this debate, we would think, as a commentator put it quite recently, that of his own free will James Cross went into closed retreat for two months and that our good friend the late Pierre Laporte died of a heart attack. Let us be responsible.

The premier of Quebec the hon. Robert Bourassa feels that permanent legislation must be passed. He is supported by his government, his minister of Justice, municipal authorities, the Montreal police, the provincial police force and the majority of Quebecers.

To my mind, it was not necessary to extend the enforcement of the temporary legislation. The inclination of the opposition was obvious and pointed to an endless debate. Moreover it is my humble opinion that the population was then and still is anxious to have a permanent legislation.

It seems that at times members on the other side object to a legislation just because they are opposition members. Some voted for the War Measures Act and even suggested that, as a reprisal, 30 members of the FLQ should be shot for every public figure kidnapped or killed.

Later, their views underwent a change. Other opposition members blamed the government for acting too late and too impulsively or for not having acted quickly enough, since there had been bombints at irregular intervals for over seven years. Does the opposition want to go over the whole thing again? That is what I gather from the hon. member's amendment.

The establishment of this committee will provide hon. members who are concerned with urgent and vitally important problems with an opportunity to hear government representatives, as the Minister of Justice has just said, expressing at the same time his willingness to testify if invited to do so, as well as representatives of police forces and associations created for the protection of civil liberties. And I feel that many of these various associations in Canada will want to appear before this committee.

If we wish to participate objectively in these discussions and to listen to all the views expressed, I am sure that it will be possible to legislate while striking a proper balance between collective security and individual freedom.

I intend however to suggest a formula to the committee to be set up, whether I am a member of it or not. In any event, I want to say that my position is not rigid as I will always be happy to listen to the pros and cons of such a proposal.

Would it not be in order to enact legislation much along the lines of the 1970 act providing temporary emergency powers? However, such legislation enacted by the federal government under its jurisdiction, would be implemented through proclamation by provincial authorities only in exceptionally serious circumstances such as those which led this government to do so last fall.

This law would be recorded in the statutes and could be implemented only under very limited conditions, as I said earlier. In fact, it would be effective only in a passive manner, and it could become operative only in those circumstances I just mentioned.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Who decides?

Mr. Gervais: The provincial government.

Mr. Stanfield: Will there be any resort to the courts?

Mr. Gervais: The provincial government will make its own decison, being close to the situation.

[Translation]

As a matter of fact, this would be a passive law in the statutes only to be enforced by the government, as I said to the hon. Leader of the Opposition, in serious circumstances such as those that occurred last October.

Had this law been in force in Quebec during the October crisis, the Quebec authorities would have been fully justified in enforcing it by proclamation as the federal government did with the War Measures Act, a gesture that the whole Canadian society applauded.

At the present time, we are inclined to consider only the problems that Quebec has to cope with as a result of the unhappy experience that province has had. However we must not deceive ourselves. Unfortunately, I don't believe I am wrong when I say that other provinces may have similar trouble and that they will be visited with the same virus in the face of pernicious doctrines daily infiltrating all our institutions. I hope I am mistaken in saying that, but such is my opinion.

Anarchists are seeking a vehicle for their theories. They found one in Quebec. They could well establish another elsewhere in Canada or adopt one, making subtle and skillful use of it as they did in Quebec, subsequently stirring up a segment of the population, to achieve the purposes that are well known.

It would then be the responsibility of the province involved to look into the facts and take decision. Provinces have the juridiction, the awareness of facts and are perfectly able to assume that responsibility, just as Quebec did and proved a few months ago.

[English]

We have had in the past few months glaring examples showing that certain members from one part of the country do not know about the other parts of the country. It is not by spending a few months in St. Jean, Quebec, and studying French or by travelling as a tourist in Quebec for a few weeks, or in any other province for that matter, that we can really learn to feel the pulse and understand the frustration that subversive elements are continually feeding our people by various devices and subtle methods. I have faith and confidence in the competence and knowledge of my provincial government, as I am certain other hon. members of this House have in their own provincial governments. They are elected by the same process as we are in this House. They are elected by the same people. I have faith in the common sense of the electorate, as manifested in municipal, provincial or federal elections.

I do not feel that the constitutionality of such a proposal is in question. This would be federal legislation, be it an amendment to the Criminal Code or an isolated statute which would be applied by the provinces. This appears to me to be intra vires and not a delegation of powers. We have examples of such legislation. A recent amendment to the Criminal Code of Canada legalized lotteries, provided the provincial governments passed the necessary legislation and issued a licence to a body wishing to operate lotteries. The Riot Act can be read by a mayor or his alternate or substitute or someone in authority to declare that an assembly is unlawful. This is federal legislation applied by the provinces in a given set of circumstances.

I would not want hon. members or the population at large to think that such a proposal would exclude the intervention of the Armed Forces of Canada, if so requested by a province. This subject is correlated very intimately with recent events. This matter falls under an entirely different department. This intervention, however, would have to be and should be borne by the national treasury. The Canadian army, of which we are rightly proud, is the army of all Canadians. Its use, when and where required, should be provided by the Department of National Defence without any provisos whatsoever.

Such a suggestion would not exclude the establishment of a compensation board set up by the provinces in the event of unfair or prejudicial acts performed, perhaps, by over-zealous or inexperienced police authorities. Again, this being a matter of civil law, our provincial jurisdictions would apply. I have no doubt that some agreement could be reached. Would we, in this Parliament, not be over-paternalistic if we did not consider these different points "en bloc", as a package deal?

In the name of peace, order and good government I think that we should, regardless of party affiliations, seek a new definition in this new legislation of organizations deliberately planning to overthrow the established authority by force and violence. Whatever an association may be, whatever name it may use, if it is plotting to overthrow the established authority by extraordinary means, meaning by force and violence—it need not be one that forms part of the FLQ family—then I believe, Mr. Speaker, that adequate instruments must be given to the various police forces to enable them to function effectively under extreme circumstances and to protect the civil liberties we all cherish so much. That is the crux of this issue.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the hon. member who just took his seat. He is a learned member of the Quebec bar. Naturally, I was most interested in what he, as a member from Quebec, had to say on this subject. Your Honour will forgive me if I suggest to him that I do not believe the matter can be expressed in the simplistic terms he tried to outline to the House. This is a much more complex matter. It is one of vital concern to all Canadians, regardless of where they live in this country. To suggest that those of us who are not from the province of Quebec have no knowledge of the subject questions our right to make any comments or in any way participate in the debate which deals with a matter of concern, especially to the province of Quebec.

I wish I could also say that I have the same faith in my provincial government that he has. I suspect there are many in this House who could echo this sentiment. In my province of Newfoundland, there have been many occasions in the past few years to look with concern upon the government of our province because in the name of law and order, peace and good government, the civil rights in our province have been lightly tossed aside on more than one occasion. Perhaps the only way we will ever resolve this dilemma, which faces all of Canada, is to have a bill of rights entrenched in our constitution which will give equal rights to all Canadians regardless of where they live in this country.

We have a federal statute, the Bill of Rights. Unfortunately, it does not fully meet the need because it only covers the areas under federal jurisdiction. Under our constitution, property and civil rights come within the jurisdiction of the province. A bill of rights in this country can only be truly effective if it is ratified by all of the provinces and enshrined in our constitution. Then, and only then, will Canadians be assured of their rights, regardless of what province they are in, and where they may go in this country. As things stand at the present time, it is fair to say that there are 10 different standards of civil rights in this country, depending on the province you happen to be in at a given time.

I would like to say a few words in support of the amendment. I believe that the amendment is important and one which should commend itself to the House. In citing the need for a review of the events of last October in the committee, we are merely stressing that in order to establish whether fair and effective legislation is needed and what type of legislation is needed, we must look upon this task in light of the events that occurred in Quebec last October. We must examine the situation as it unfolded then in order to more properly determine the kind of legislation which is needed. That is what this amendment states. Otherwise, there is the danger that the committee will become nothing more than a useless vehicle, albeit one that is convenient to the government. Perhaps it might even get the government off the horns of this terrible dilemma. In my opinion, it would be utterly meaningless in coming to grips with the problems which generated and contributed to the situation last fall which shook the very foundations of this nation.

I supported the invocation of the War Measures Act, believing that my support was conditional on the government at some time in the future, when it felt it would be in the public interest to do so, to reveal to the House and hence to the public the need for invoking the War Measures Act in the first instance. This is another reason why I commend the amendment to the House. If this amendment is accepted by the House, it will enable Parliament to fulfil its obligation to the people, which it has not done to date. The House would then have the reasons why the government felt it had to take the measures it did to meet the situation last October.

I also supported the public order bill because it was the fulfilment of one of the undertakings of the government that it would replace the War Measures Act by such a bill. This party supported that move because, among other things, it helped to restore some degree of normalcy to the country at a time, and I do not think this is an exaggeration, when civil rights had been suspended across the country as a consequence of the invocation of the War Measures Act. With concern, I watched this legislation die and wither. I saw and heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) give his explanations in the House as to why the legislation was allowed to go the way it did. We are left with the feeling that we had a hypothetical crisis. We have not been given one concrete fact to back up the government's use of the most severe and repressive legislation this nation has ever had in peacetime, indeed, legislation which was never meant to be used in peacetime. By its very name, I am sure the legislation was only meant to be used when this nation was at war.

To this end, it would be invaluable to have members of the government, officers of the Crown and the Minister of Justice state to the committee their reasons for the action they took. In so doing, they might be able to convince the committee of the need to come up with new legislation. They could contribute to helping the committee determine the type of legislation that is needed. We can learn much if we are told of the events of last fall. Hopefully, if this kind of evidence is produced before the committee, we can produce legislation that will adequately safeguard civil liberties in this country, the civil liberties of those who are presumed innocent. Only in this way can this committee serve a useful function and adequately meet the responsibility with which this Parliament is about to charge it. I find it very difficult to understand why there would be any basic opposition to the amendment setting up the committee.

My basic belief is that the powers of search and detention employed during the October crisis are of prime importance and central to the whole issue. Important as that may be, we must not forget what I consider to be contributing factors to the events leading up to what took place in Quebec, the social conditions, unemployment and economic disparity. However unpardonable these actions were, there is no way that the government can escape the fact that economic conditions in the province of Quebec and other parts of the country last October and, indeed, now, are such as to be a cause of great concern.

• (5:20 p.m.)

By reviewing the crisis legislation of last October, the committee will be in a better position to evaluate incidents and procedures which resulted in the internment of many citizens whose rights were taken away. Most of them were subsequently released without charges having been preferred. I believe the committee should have the right to learn how the list of persons to be detained was arrived at. Were these arrests the result of arbitrary decisions or did the police follow a general blueprint in arresting people at all hours of the day and night? These are questions which are in the minds of many Canadians and they are questions which will be of concern to the committee as it discharges its responsibility to the House and to the country.

Because of the seemingly arbitrary nature of the police action during the October crisis, we as legislators, and the public at large, are left in the dark as to the reasons for which these actions were taken. These are questions which must be answered before we can usefully set about determining whether or not legislation is necessary to deal with certain situations in the future, and, if so, what type of legislation is necessary.

The facts as they appear at the present time and, indeed, as they have been admitted in the House, indicate that the events of October did not warrant or justify going beyond the powers contained in the present Criminal Code. It is with trepidation that I, as a layman, refer to the Criminal Code, since I am not versed in the criminal law. However, I have made it my business to learn something about the provisions of the Criminal Code as they affect the situation with which the committee will be dealing. Section 46 deals with treason. It covers the use of force for the purpose of violent overthrow of government. It also deals with conspiracy against the state such as to prejudice the safety or defence of Canada. Section 60 deals with sedition. It covers criminal conspiracy and seditious intention. It is specific in dealing with those who advocate the overthrow by violent means of a democratically elected government. Section 64 has to do with unlawful assembly. It is this section which could have been used in the case of public gatherings or meetings conducted by groups, against which action was considered desirable at that time. Furthermore, the effectiveness of those sections of the Code dealing with kidnapping and murder are obvious to anyone who has studied them.

In October, the government expressed the view that the reason for invoking the War Measures Act was the difficulty of obtaining warrants under which people could be arrested in respect of an apprehended crime in circumstances in which, in the view of the government, insurrection was apprehended. Sections 434-436 inclusive deal with the right of police officers to arrest without warrant, on certain grounds, those who in their opinion have committed or are about to commit an indictable offence. Other sections make reference to parties to an offence, persons counselling an offence, persons accessory after the fact, and persons intimidating Parliament or the legislature. These are sections 21, 22, 23 and 51. I should like the minister to tell us in what way sections 46, 51, 60, 64, 434, 435 and 436, dealing with the murder and kidnapping which unhappily took place in Quebec last fall, are inadequate?

It might also be useful to refer to a Quebec statute which gives wide and sweeping powers to the state, powers which are of great concern to many people. I refer to the Quebec Coroners Act which provides for the arrest and detention of persons whose testimony the coroner deems necessary in certain circumstances. The relevant sections of this act are sections 22 and 23. Obviously, the Quebec government had all the power it needed under the terms of this act. In my view, the federal government and the provincial government concerned had all the powers they needed under the Criminal Code.

It is easy to say that hindsight is infinitely better than foresight, but it appears to me that the use of the War

Measures Act last fall in relation to the final outcome of that unhappy crisis was neither profitable nor proper. The application of the War Measures Act is a matter for an executive order, and this being so I should like to see provision made for a judicial review of action taken under the regulations so that those who are detained without a charge being laid would have this recourse open to them.

For these and other reasons, the amendment should commend itself to the House. Perhaps the committee might discuss the whole area of civil rights in this country. In so doing it might assist governments of this country, both provincial and federal, as they pursue their task of trying to write a new constitution. Central to such a constitution would be a bill of rights which would ensure that Canadians shall have certain rights enshrined for all time.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, as we proceed to the formation of the new committee to consider the threat of violence and terror in society, we have the opportunity to run a circus act which could be the biggest show in town, if that is what we desire. The ingredients are here; intrigue, violence and murder. The full range of human emotions can be tapped; fear, hatred and racism. There are many brands of philosophy that are relevant; tyranny, facism, communism and totalitarianism. There could be opportunities for great partisan political gain. Every political party could play. There could be great gains and risks of great losses to all parties and individuals. All of us are on record. We can, each party at this committee, build an election campaign. The promises, the charges and the counter-charges can all be presented to the committee, but I do not think this is the job we were sent here to do. We were not sent to campaign. We were sent to try to solve Canada's problems, not to exploit them, and particularly not to exploit them for political gain. At another and more dangerous level we could emphasize differences in our work, religious differences, differences in development and in values. In this way, we could help to tear Canada apart. I submit that these are temptations to be resisted.

The government has to assume full responsibility for its role in the events which took place in and around Montreal last October. There should be no question or doubt about that. I was glad to hear the Minister of Justice again emphasize the acceptance by the government of its responsibilities. Likewise, the opposition parties will have to assume the responsibility for their positions. The facts and interpretations of the facts have been presented and will be presented in the next election campaign. It will be up to the voters to judge all of us. Beyond that, the issue will be judged by history; who were the heroes and who were the flim-flam men of the FLQ crisis. As I see it, the proposed committee should not beat these bushes. It has a more practical job and one of greater moment to look into.

I followed with interest the case put forward by the opposition spokesmen on the motion and on the amendment. The theme of their remarks was that the committee should uncover what they call the half-truths and distortions which were put forward to try to justify the implementation of crisis legislation and to prove that what the government did last fall was shameful. They hope, and they are quite right, that the amendment proposed would steer the committee to focus on an exercise in politics.

Organized violence and terror was not invented by the FLQ. Regretfully, I do not believe the threat of organized violence and terror will end with the end of the FLQ. I, personally, reject the amendment before us because it implies that the answer to the broad question of coping with violence lies in the events of last October in Montreal. I supported the government last October and voted with it. Obviously I, for one, do not concede that the government over-reacted then or that it was engaged in an adventure. To focus on this issue is to defeat the purpose of the committee.

Even if the allegations of the opposition were conceded, the proposed subject of discussion by this committee would still be justifiable and valid on the basis of developments which are visible elsewhere in the world and elsewhere in this country.

Mr. Stanfield: Such as what?

Mr. Kaplan: Elsewhere in the world there is this threat of active terrorism and violence.

Mr. Stanfield: The hon. member said "elsewhere in this country". I wonder if he would give us some examples?

Mr. Kaplan: I can give this example. My wife and I were tear-gassed at a public meeting in Toronto about five weeks ago by people who purported to be members of the Edmund Burke Society. We were tear-gassed in a campaign which the police stated had been carefully organized well in advance.

Mr. Stanfield: So, there should have been an emergency declared.

Mr. Kaplan: I am not saying that.

Mr. Stanfield: What are you saying?

Mr. Kaplan: I am making a point and I think it is a valid point. I am glad to have had the opportunity to illustrate it. Violence and terror are with us in this world and, whether we like it or not, they are not limited to the events that took place in Montreal.

Violence and terror have an ancient history, but their evolution in modern society involves something new. There are two new things happening on which I should like to focus. Firstly terror is increasingly becoming recognized as a legitimate political tactic. This legitimacy must be under-cut. In spite of the suggestion which the leader of the NDP made during the last day's debate on this motion, I believe we live in a society in Canada in which the will of the people is expressed in the institutions of government. We have not yet a truly just society. None the less, I believe there are no disadvantaged groups, regions or classes in Canada which have any right or reason to give up hope that the democratic process can work to their benefit. More and more these disadvantaged interests are learning to use democratic processes to achieve their ends.

But this is not true in every country of the world. In some other countries the just society is remote or non-existent. Disadvantaged groups and dissident minorities have no reason to believe that in these other countries their lot will improve within the given order. They have good reason to believe, on the contrary, that the social and political order is determined to exclude them and to defeat them. In these societies, revolution and the use of terror are understandable. They have become legitimate. We are political animals in this chamber and my guess is that some of us, if we were transplanted to some other society and felt the call to improve that society, would be terrorists. In other words, in some circumstances and in some societies, terror approaches legitimacy.

As we in Canada watch the evolution of remote societies in places both far away and near, we see terror and violence on television in our living rooms. For a small minority of us the difference in the Canadian setting is lost. In those countries the leaders of terrorists negotiate with heads of state. They settle treaties and their rights are established. The urban guerilla, the terrorist, the pirate and the kidnapper are gaining new international credibility. This is a credibility these people do not deserve in Canada. This is a new feature of terror and violence, and I believe it requires the considered attention of the committee.

A second factor which lends immediacy to our need for this study is the growing destructive capacity of the individual criminal or criminal group. In the state of technology of 200, 100 or even 50 years ago, throughout the period during which our values of civil liberties were defined and have flourished, there were rather narrow physical limits to the amount of damage and destruction that even the most violent and deranged killer or anarchistic group could do in society.

Along with the positive things technology and affluence have brought us, they have brought on the negative side the vastly increased power of destruction. For example, theoretical studies have been conducted by the Hudson Institute of New York of the ways by which a small group could kill most of the eight million inhabitants of New York City. There are evidently many ways in which this can be done in a matter of days. All of them involve a considerable amount of planning but none of them require very much in the way of resources.

• (5:40 p.m.)

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that thirty years ago even Hitler, with the power of a state behind him, took a considerable number of years to kill his first eight million victims. In the last 30 years the evolution in this power to wreak damage to society has been tremendous. I suggest that this new potency of terror must be borne in mind by the committee as another reason for giving careful consideration to the problem. The Minister of Justice has often referred to the delicate balance which exists between civil liberties on the one hand and the safety of the state on the other. I suggest that these new threats to the state have emerged which have not existed before in the history of civil liberties. It is valid, and indeed it is our responsibility to address ourselves to these dangers.

It should also be observed that the evolution of technology has produced a threat to civil liberties in addition to the threat to social order. We may now exercise the power of the state and of private interests in the state to gather information, to experience, to hear and to preserve. This situation and these powers created by technology demand our concern. Again, this is an area in which attention is required and in which the government is working.

The Committee will require the points of view, the attention and the participation of all the members of the House of all political parties. It is for this reason I particularly regret the decision announced, I hope tentatively, by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) that his party does not intend to participate in the work of the committee. He gave as a reason the suggestion that the government had not given his party sufficient time to make recommendations and that the government did not wait for their recommendations before introducing the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act. I have the record here, and I note it was indicated in the House that as of October 19 all parties had been asked to make suggestions concerning the form the legislation might take. It was not until November 2, almost two weeks later, that the public order act was introduced. Two weeks is not a tremendous period of time, but considering the circumstances it is perhaps unreasonable for the Social Credit party to assert that it should have had more time, bearing in mind as well that it was ample time for the Conservative party and the New Democratic Party to put forward their suggestions.

I suggest it is somewhat unfair for the Social Credit party to boycott the committee on the ground that it was not given sufficient time to make constructive suggestions. Aside from that, the members of the Social Credit party have a special interest in this legislation. It is of interest to them and to their supporters. It is true that their party is a minority party, but there are other concerned minority parties in the House. Certainly, the views of this party should be presented and taken into account by the committee in its consideration of the kind of legislation required in order to deal with violence.

I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I propose to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and also to vote against the original motion. I should like to express briefly my reasons for doing so. It seems to me it is quite impossible for the proposed committee to deal with the question of what legislation, if any, is required in the future to deal with the possibility of lawlessness and violence in the Canadian society endangering public order without the most careful review of the October crisis and the action taken in relation to it. The question inevitably arises concerning whether the War Measures Act was properly or improperly invoked and whether the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act adopted by Parliament was or was not necessary. The real question which will face the committee is whether the situation could not have been dealt with adequately by the firm and vigorous exercise by the police, with the assistance of the army, of the powers already conferred on them by the Criminal Code.

How can the committee advise concerning whether or not the War Measures Act requires amendment or partial replacement without determining whether its invocation in peacetime, at the time of the October crisis, was or was not necessary. It is my own firm conclusion that as a matter of fact there was no insurrection or apprehended insurrection which necessarily justified the invocation of the War Measures Act. This conclusion, if it is right, should be a guide to what is needed in the way of future legislation. My view on this matter may well not be accepted by others and the committee will perform a valuable role, if the resolution is passed, in reviewing the facts concerning the invocation of the War Measures Act. The War Measures Act, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) have acknowledged, confers almost absolute powers, sweeping powers, which were not appropriate to the circumstances of October. However, it was used, but it was inappropriate and I believe the committee should determine why it was considered by the government to be appropriate. I think the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice should be asked to give evidence before the committee to explain why they thought it was necessary then.

The vast powers conferred by the War Measures Act included temporary suspension of the constitution and of the constitutional rights of the provinces and of individuals. It enabled the complete abrogation of basic fundamental rights. It is clearly a measure which should be used only in time of clear imminent danger to the whole community. It is perfectly true, of course, that grave and serious events occurred in Quebec last October which required firm and perhaps drastic action, but they clearly did not amount to any insurrection or war. A handful of people amounting, so far as the information I have is concerned, to two cells of four or five members each were involved. This hardly constitutes an insurrection. I placed a question on the order paper asking what was the result of the searches conducted under the War Measures Act and the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act. The reply was that 33 firearms and 21 offensive weapons were seized as of October 23, 1970 including shotguns, rifles, revolvers, other firearms, four bayonets, four machetes, nine hunting knives, one sabre and three smoke grenades. This is hardly evidence of an insurrection. If an insurrection were planned it was the worst planned insurrection anyone could apprehend. It seems to me it would be ridiculous to discuss legislation needed to deal with breaches of public order without examining in detail the most recent and up-to-date incidents, and the measures required to deal with them, in order to determine whether or not such drastic action was needed and to what extent the present Criminal Code would have been adequate.

I am opposed to the motion for at least two reasons. In asking that the committee report on the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies which may occur in the future, there is the assumption that such legislation is necessary. This begs the question. The question with which the committee should deal is whether the present legislation is adequate and whether further legislation, which will evidently be restrictive in nature, is really needed.

• (5:50 p.m.)

There is a respectable body of legal opinion in Canada which the committee should hear. It asserts that the present Criminal Code, with its provisions as to conspiracy, is quite adequate for the purpose of assuring public order. If this is so, the committee should be free to state that it is so, and the issue should not be prejudged by the terms of reference. Additional legislation cannot help but be used, however good its intentions, as an instrument of repression of fundamental rights.

The other reason that I object to the motion is that its emphasis is on one aspect of the matter, namely, the protection of public order. The committee is not asked to determine what is necessary to protect the rights of individuals. As the minister said in opening the debate, these two things should be balanced one against the other, but the motion is not balanced. It is an inquiry into the steps necessary to preserve public order. It does not include an inquiry, which I think it should include, into how, in times of stress and strain, fundamental rights of individuals can be protected. I think that the committee should have the power to look at the War Measures Act and to determine whether its terms are too broad, whether the powers conferred by it are too sweeping, and whether the circumstances under which it can be invoked are too loosely and broadly stated.

Another related matter which the committee should consider is the relationship between the War Measures Act and the proposed constitutional bill of rights which I hope will, before too long, be entrenched in the fundamental law of Canada, namely, the constitution of Canada. The present Canadian Bill of Rights is, in my opinion, inadequate. It provides that any act done under the War Measures Act shall not be deemed to be an abrogation of the provisions of the Bill of Rights. In other words, when the War Measures Act is invoked, as it easily can be invoked at any time, the Bill of Rights goes out the window and is silenced.

The purpose of the committee should clearly be spelled out, and the committee should be instructed to consider, among other things, how the rights of the individual may be maintained even in time of stress and disorder. The committee should have the authority to recommend legislation and indeed, if need be, a constitutional amendment which emphasizes the rights of the individual as well as the rights of the community. The present motion seems to limit the committee in this regard. It is unbalanced and therefore dangerous to the liberties of Canadians, and we cannot support it.

In my view, the most important task of the committee would be to consider the relationship between the War Measures Act and the Bill of Rights, so that the public safety and individual rights may be reconciled as well as possible.

Royal Assent

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major Guay Vandelac, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (6:00 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to the release from custody of accused persons before trial or pending appeal,

An Act to establish the Textile and Clothing Board and to make certain amendments to other Acts in consequence thereof,

An Act to provide for the examination, publication and scrutiny of regulations and other statutory instruments.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, may I ask what will be the business of the House tomorrow?

Mr. Francis: I believe this will be communicated by the House leader through discussions. I understand there are some discussions intended.

Mr. Speaker: It being after six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair. This House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

It being seven minutes after six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 20, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Fourth and fifth reports of Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, in the two official languages—Mr. Lessard.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

MANPOWER

TABLING OF SUMMER EMPLOYMENT SURVEY OF POST-SECONDARY STUDENTS, 1970

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table under Standing Order 41(2) the summer employment survey of post-secondary students in Canada 1970, in both official languages.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

KINGSTON RIOT—ROLE OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I ask for unanimous consent to make a motion of urgent and pressing necessity based on statements about the Solicitor General made by law professor Desmond Morton and evidence of continuing disturbances at Millhaven and today at Dorchester. I move:

That the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered to inquire into the role of the Solicitor General in the recent disturbances at Kingston penitentiary.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put. Oral question period.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, did you call motions?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, motions were called a few minutes ago. We would require the consent of the House to revert to motions. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (2:10 p.m.)

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF U.S.S.R.—CANADA PROTOCOL ON CONSULTATIONS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and French of the U.S.S.R.-Canada Protocol on Consultations which was signed in Moscow on May 19 by the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. and the Prime Minister of Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO PROPOSAL FOR BALANCED FORCE REDUCTIONS IN CENTRAL EUROPE—NATURE OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND SOVIET GOVERNMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it may be understandable that the Acting Prime Minister forgot to table that document. I would like to ask him a question about the discussions regarding NATO going on in Moscow and specifically whether the subject being discussed is a reduction of troops or a reduction of troops within a certain area—in other words, a withdrawal of troops?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the NATO powers did make a proposal at their last meeting that there should be discussions on mutual and balanced force reductions, particularly in central Europe. The Soviet Union has now apparently indicated that it wishes to have negotiations on this question. The nature of these negotiations, of course, is very complex. The purpose is to try to reduce the confrontation now existing in central Europe without in any way affecting the balance of power.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government of Canada is actively considering a further reduction unilaterally in its NATO troops in Europe as opposed to a joint reduction, or joint withdrawal by the NATO organization?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada is neither actively nor otherwise discussing or considering any reduction beyond the point that was announced some months ago and that has now been accepted.

Mr. Stanfield: I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister in fact has undertaken to act as a mediator between the Warsaw Pact countries and the NATO countries with regard to achieving a balanced reduction of forces?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. As the Leader of the Opposition perhaps knows, the Prime Minister has indicated quite definitely that he is not intending to play any such role.

CANADIAN RESPONSE TO RUSSIAN INTIMATION REGARDING NEGOTIATION OF TROOP REDUCTIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he knows what was the basic answer of the Prime Minister to Mr. Brezhnev's alleged statement in order to test out the U.S.S.R. in regard to the seriousness of its proposals for troop reductions? Was there any answer from the representative of Canada or did it just pass off without answer?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we shall have to await until the Prime Minister's return, but I am quite sure he dealt with this question just as adequately, as enthusiastically and as successfully as he deals with answers to questions in Canada.

PROTOCOLS BETWEEN RUSSIA AND OTHER COUNTRIES ON CONSULTATION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON U.S.S.R.—CANADA AGREEMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he has any knowledge of what other countries have agreements similar to this protocol that Canada now has with the U.S.S.R.? Also, because of the importance or apparent importance of this agreement and its effect internationally so far as Canada is concerned, would he be prepared to make a statement in reference to the agreement in order to give us some fill-in on what actually took place?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that when the Prime Minister returns he will give the House a report. I have today tabled the text of the protocol which indicates the scope and nature of the consultations that we have undertaken to have between our two countries. In answer to the first question, I know of at least one country that has a similar agreement with the Soviet Union, and that is France.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Egmont rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of this document I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs would agree to have it appended to Hansard so that everyone will have an opportunity to read it, rather than just tabling it.

Mr. Sharp: If that is agreeable to the House, Mr. Speaker, have no objection. I think it is an historic and important agreement.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement that the document in question be appended to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of agreement referred to above, see appendix.]

POSSIBLE AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA RESPECTING CONSULTATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which is perhaps the converse of the question put to him by the hon. member for Calgary North. Other than the countries that Russia has such agreements with, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs know of any intention in his department to have protocols or agreements, similar to the one signed with Russia, with other countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the hon. member knows, we have much more extensive machinery for consultation with, for example, the United States, Japan and the United Kingdom. This protocol dealing with consultation does not, of course, go nearly as far as the existing understandings we have with our older friends and allies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley on a further supplementary and then go to the next subject and recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Nowlan: While I fully appreciate the minister's reply as far as countries like Great Britain and France are concerned, I am really thinking of China, a country which has recently been recognized by Canada and one of the newer countries on the world scene. Does the minister anticipate that Canada will make overtures to have such a protocol signed on the same terms as the one with Russia in order to get exchanges flowing back and forth?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. gentleman agrees that we have taken the first step in trying to bring about better relations between China and Canada and China and the rest of the world by entering into diplomatic relations with the Peking régime. What will happen in the future I am not sure, but I hope there will be the kind of improvement in relations between that country and Canada and the rest of the world that we all hope for.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

DORCHESTER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISTURBANCE—DEPARTMENTAL INQUIRY

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General if he has any report to make to the House on the disturbance which took place at Dorchester penitentiary today?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, order has been restored since ten o'clock this morning. All prisoners have returned to their cells and the situation is under control.

[English]

Mr. Peters: How many prisoners have been injured at Dorchester and what is their condition?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, during the troubles, a number of prisoners tried to escape and the guards fired shotguns to warn them that they would be penalized. A few pellets hit two inmates who were carried to the hospital, taken care of, and sent back to their cells. A third inmate came out on his own from the place where a fight had apparently broken out among prisoners. This prisoner was carried to the hospital outside the penitentiary so as to be X-rayed to check the extent of his wounds.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General if it is his intention to have a departmental inquiry into the reasons why prisoners from the assembly hall within the institution itself were wounded?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, we will follow standing practice under the Penitentiary Act. The Commissioner will appoint a board of inquiry to investigate the causes of those riots.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Solicitor General tell the House what causes brought about the riots in this penitentiary?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, there was no committee of inmates properly speaking, but some inmates handed us a document outlining their complaints. I could enumerate some of these, such as the fact that they had pork three times within the same week, that there are not enough classification offices, that salaries within the penitentiaries are inadequate, that clothing, and the type of clothing should be changed, that inmates do not get prompt replies to their applications for medical examinations, that they object to Parliament's having passed an act making probation compulsory.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Concerning clothing, would the Solicitor General be prepared to recommend tailcoats, for instance?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Egmont.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DORCHESTER PRISONERS' COMPLAINTS AND PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO CAUSES OF DISTURBANCES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Before I ask my supplementary question I wonder if the Solicitor General would agree to table the document containing all the requests outlined by this group of prisoners. My question is, in view of the alarming number of incidents that have taken place in federal institutions in the past few months of a similar nature, is the government or the minister's department now prepared to establish a full public inquiry into the nature of these problems so that their basic causes can be dealt with?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as for the prisoners' demands, I have listed them; there are a few other personal requests.

In answer to the hon. member's question, I will repeat what I have already stated in the House, that the government plans to carry out a systematic, progressive and dynamic program in the penitentiary field. This program will be set up, through the co-operation of the prisoners as well as that of the wardens and the people. As far as prisoners are concerned, they have nothing to gain by resorting to violence or by fostering disturbance, because it can only delay the implementation of essential reforms.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Does this mean that the Solicitor General is not planning any kind of public inquiry and that there will not be any information or public disclosure with respect to the serious problems in these federal institutions in order that there may be effective public discussion before decisions are taken by the government with regard to possible changes?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, we do not need disturbances or violence to know what to do. We are willing to meet with prisoners, to discuss with them and to inform them of our intentions. In fact, we took measures before the riots at Kingston and Dorchester, and we shall continue to take action. If the prisoners—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. Minister.

[English]

Order, please! It seems to me we are entering the field of debate at this point. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North on a supplementary. That will be the only supplementary allowed at this time and then the Chair will recognize the representative of the political group to my extreme left.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has stated that he has a list of complaints from the prisoners at Dorchester. Did he not have it two days ago when he told the members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that things in Dorchester were working out quite well?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I have never said anything of the kind. I have no crystal ball to predict what will happen in Canadian penitentiaries.

* * *

MANPOWER

QUEBEC—PURCHASE OF MANAGEMENT COURSE FOR FARMERS AND WIVES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Can the minister tell us whether or not agricultural training and management courses will be available to Quebec farmers next year, or whether negotiations are under way with the province of Quebec with regard to the purchase of courses for farmers?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, negotiations generally are going on with the various provinces in connection with the appropriate purchase of courses. I will be glad to ascertain for the hon. member whether these specific courses are now included in next year's set of courses to be purchased in that province.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question.

In order to allow these farmers' wives to contribute more to the success of the farm, would the Minister of Manpower and Immigration negotiate with the province of Quebec the purchase of training and farm management courses for the wives of farmers?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the standing practice has been that farm wives as well as farmers could be included in the management courses. The only rule upon which the department intends to operate is that two members of the same farm family should not be on a course as long as there are others who have not taken the courses, desire to do so and are capable of taking advantage of them.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I want to put another supplementary question.

Would the minister consider that on a farm, the farmer's wife takes part also in the management of the farm and that she should enjoy also the same advantages—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made a suggestion or a representation and he must take it for granted that it will be considered by the minister.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, as the minister said that it is not possible for two members of the same family to follow the same course, does he intend to bring changes to the legislation or to initiate discussions with the province of Quebec in order to enable two members of a family to follow the same course?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say once again that there is no rule against wives taking these courses. The only practical rule which is in place and which I think is perfectly appropriate is that under ordinary circumstances the course will be offered to one member of any farm family before it is offered to two members of the same farm family. That seems to me to make perfectly good sense. Whoever is doing the farm management work can take advantage of the course.

* * *

SPORTS

HOCKEY—RESEARCH ON PROTECTIVE HEADGEAR—ENFORCEMENT OF STANDARDS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the recent deaths that have occurred among hockey players because of inadequate protective headgear and the comments by Dr. Noble as the result of a recent death in Ontario, is the minister taking any action to encourage research, to establish headgear standards and to force compliance with these standards?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the hon. member is, of course, of great importance, but I wonder whether it should not normally be placed on the order paper. Perhaps the minister might reply quickly and we will then go on to the next subject. If the hon. member should wish to pursue the matter thereafter, he might give notice for consideration at the time of adjournment.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that a subcommittee met as late as last Friday and has been working on the matter for some time. A subcommittee of the Canadian Standards Association is testing the helmets of about five different manufacturers. They will be making a recommendation with regard to a particular helmet if it proves to be satisfactory. The other charges by the gentleman to whom the hon. member referred are completely inaccurate.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that young hockey players tend to emulate NHL players, is the minister going to meet with the NHL and the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association to discuss this problem and see if they will lead the way in the use of protective headgear?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, as soon as we are entirely satisfied as to the worth of the particular helmets to the degree that they have been scientifically approved, I think that matter could be referred to Hockey Canada to take up with the NHL.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADIAN POSITION IN INTERNATIONAL HOCKEY AND ROLE OF HOCKEY CANADA

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the excitement of the Stanley Cup series is now behind us, will the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions soon to clarify Canada's position in international hockey and certain major domestic issues such as the role of Hockey Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will be pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUSPENSION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS—OTHER ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the minister's statement outside the House yesterday that the $35 million needed to extend seasonal unemployment insurance benefits can be better used to help the unemployed, to what program of assistance to the unemployed does the government intend to apply this $35 million?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The point I made outside the House and inside the House, if the hon. member wants to read Hansard, was that if we extend seasonal benefits at a cost of $35 million we have no way of knowing precisely what portion of that $35 million will go to those unemployed people who are entitled to some extra help because, fortunately, we do not and never should include a means or needs test as one of the reasons for receiving unemployment insurance. So in extending seasonal benefits to everybody receiving unemployment insurance we would obviously be extending them to many people who do not need extra financial assistance. The hon. member cannot have it both ways. He cannot criticize the plan for not adhering to the insurance principle and simply being a welfare fund.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: As so often happens, the statement the minister made outside the House is different from the one he made inside the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: He knows that is so. In light of the statement he made outside the House to the effect that the $35 million could be better used for programs to help the unemployed, may I ask on what particular program the government intends to spend this sum?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, the minister was just on the point of rising.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair was just on the point of recognizing the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I trust your decision will prove to be a wise one, Mr. Speaker. I have a supplementary for the Minister of Labour. Would the minister mind explaining in greater detail the statement he just made?

He said that the $35 million might be wasted and yet the minister knows full well that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it seems to me, with respect to both the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, that they are inviting the minister to make a general statement of a kind which ought normally to be made on motions.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, I did not ask the minister to make a statement. I asked him to name the program that he wished to spend the $35 million on.

Some hon. Members: Order, please.

Mr. Mackasey: I rise on a point of order. What I said in the House yesterday—

Mr. Hees: I said "outside the House".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister should resume his seat. I suggest to him and to both hon. members who have been asking these questions that this is a matter of debate. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings may disagree, but as I interpret the matter they are inviting the minister to make a general statement which ought not to be made at this time. If the minister wishes to make a statement of this kind, I suggest he make it on motions. It is just as simple as that. There may be other supplementary questions in connection with this important matter and I have no intention of preventing hon. members from asking them. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: Given the fact that to be eligible for seasonal benefits people must meet certain specific criteria, can the minister explain what he means by saying that the $35 million that would be spent on such people if the benefits were extended would be wasted or not paid to people who actually need the money, if in fact they must meet certain criteria in order to get it?

Mr. Mackasey: On the contrary, there are no criteria. The condition they must meet is one which offers much more latitude than at any other time of the year. I hope the hon. member is not implying that seasonal benefits are extended only to those working in specific occupations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF ADDITIONAL FOREIGN AID UNTIL UNEMPLOYMENT IN CANADA DECREASES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the announcement yesterday that additional foreign aid is to be extended, I wonder whether the government would undertake not to extend any additional foreign aid until such time as unemployment in Canada begins to decrease?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to that question is a definite no.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I am surprised the hon. gentleman should take such a view. I thought the view of his party was that it is one of our responsibilities to increase the flow of international aid, but if that is not the case I am glad to know it.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a question of privilege, I simply asked the minister whether he would withhold such increases until our economic situation has begun to improve.

* * *

WELFARE

ONTARIO INTENTION TO TIGHTEN ADMINISTRATION AFFECTING YOUNG PEOPLE—CONSULTATION WITH FEDERAL MINISTER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Social and Family Services for Ontario, the Hon. Thomas Wells, to the effect that the Ontario government intends to tighten up its welfare administration particularly where young people are concerned, and in view of the fact that money for welfare purposes is paid in part by the federal government under the Canada Assistance Plan, may I ask whether there have been consultations between the minister and the Ontario authorities with respect to this matter?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): There has been no consultation with respect to the particular statement the hon. member has noted. I am not sure that every time a provincial minister wishes to make a statement of that kind he should have to consult with the federal government. We are more concerned with the practices under the Canada Assistance Plan as distinct from statements.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that Mr. Wells said in his statement that he intends to ask the federal government to amend the Canada Assistance Plan, may I ask whether the government has kept in touch with this aspect of the situation?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Munro: I saw Mr. Wells fairly recently and this matter was not raised at the time. If he wishes to talk it over with me he is free to do so at any time. He may raise it, if he desires, at the next meeting of the federal-provincial welfare ministers, which is not too far off.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

REFUSAL TO PAY RANSOM MONEY TO KIDNAPPERS OF LATE PIERRE LAPORTE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In light of the statement now made by Jacques Sauriol that some ransom money was paid to the kidnappers in the case of Mr. Cross, can the minister tell us whether the Prime Minister or any member of the government refused to take the same action in the case of the late Mr. Laporte?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I will have to take the question as notice. I have not seen that statement.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

INTEREST-FREE LOANS TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES—REQUEST FOR SIMILAR AID TO UNDERDEVELOPED REGIONS OF CANADA

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister.

He indicated in a previous answer that aid to underdeveloped countries would not be reduced despite the serious situation that now exists in Canada. I entirely approve of his attitude; nevertheless, I shall ask him the following question: Does the government intend to assist underdeveloped areas in Canada by granting them interest-free loans, as we do for underdeveloped countries of the third world?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): To that question, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, but of course all equalization grants which are made to the provinces and most of the assistance given to underdeveloped parts of the country carry no interest charge whatsoever.

AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION AFFECTING BUSINESS, FARM AND FISHING LOANS TO MAKE LOANS MORE EASILY AVAILABLE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether, in view of the negative reply by the Acting Pime Minister to the question asked by the leader of the party to my left, he has any plans to amend the three specific loan acts having to do with business, farming and fishing in order to make loans more easily available, bearing in mind the fact that in the slow growth areas of Canada they are least available at the moment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have received no complaints about these three acts in recent months from anyone, including the hon. member.

Mr. Lundrigan: A report issued by the minister's office only a few days ago indicates that only two or three loans per quarter were being made to one province and very few to the whole Atlantic region. In view of that report, which certainly is evidence that these acts are not being made use of, would the minister investigate and consult with his parliamentary secretary who is thoroughly familiar with the ineffectiveness of this program?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is inviting the minister to look into a situation and he has to assume the minister will do so.

[Translation]

SUGGESTED INTEREST-FREE LOAN TO QUEBEC BY BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Témiscamingue like to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Prime Minister has stated a while ago that in Canada gifts are given but no loans are made. Now, recently, the premier of Quebec went to the United States to borrow $75 million at 9¼ per cent interest and I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if the Canadian government is willing through the Bank of Canada to grant interest-free loans to Quebec?

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY—IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING MANUFACTURE IN CANADA—CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENTS ON COMPANY PROFITS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising from the Barber Commission report on farm machinery. One of the major recommendations in the report suggests that more encouragement should be given to the development and manufacture of farm machinery in Canada. I should like to ask the minister whether he has had consultations with the Minister of Agriculture on this important recommendation, and can he indicate what initiatives his department is taking in this regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned the report is being studied now. I have had no consultations on this particular topic, with the Minister of Agriculture but in due course I am certain I will.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture in regard to the Barber Commission report. In view of the fact that after obtaining all of the facts pertaining to the machinery industry the commission has seen fit to withdraw its charge that the machinery companies have been making handsome profits, is the minister taking any steps to have this misleading statement clarified since it has had an adverse reflection upon domestic manufacturers in Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that any member of the government made that statement, and I do not believe it is the responsibility of members of the government to ask other people to withdraw what may be their opinion.

* * *

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO RETURN TO PEGGED DOLLAR

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the growing number of nations either floating their currencies or considering doing so, and in view of the consequent fear of the breakdown of the present monetary safeguards that have been so laboriously built up, does the government now intend to return soon to a pegged dollar?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a question that I obviously cannot answer.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY—COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF RESEARCH FACILITIES IN OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Vegreville and it concerns research. In view of the suggestion made in the Barber Commission report that the Canadian International Development Agency might establish farm machinery research facilities in other countries where we are either selling or hoping to sell farm machinery, would the government also look at this possibility?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): May I repeat the statement that I made, Mr. Speaker, when I tabled the report, that we have already moved to enhance the activities of our research department respecting agricultural engineering.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

INQUIRY AS TO CLOSURE AND TRANSFER OF OTTAWA FACILITIES

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Is the Acting Prime Minister in a position to inform the House whether it is the intention of the federal government to close out the Royal Canadian Mint in Ottawa and to transfer its facilities to another area of Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have heard no such suggestion.

Mr. Coates: I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister would check into this and also inform the employees of the Royal Canadian Mint that their employment there will not be jeopardized?

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSITION OF SOVIET UNION RESPECTING TROOP WITHDRAWALS AND REDUCTIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return for a moment to the question of troop withdrawals. Can the Acting Prime Minister indicate very briefly the nature of the change that he suggests has taken place in the position taken by Russia regarding troop withdrawals, as it was my distinct impression last summer that at that time the government of Russia was prepared, indeed anxious, to discuss troop withdrawals but regarded troop reductions as a global rather than a European matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope the recent willingness of the Soviet Union to discuss mutual balanced force reductions means what it says, and that there has been an advance in the Soviet position.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, can the Acting Prime Minister indicate what he considers to be the nature of the change in the position of Russia, as I think this is important to all of us?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think it would take me some time to do this on questions. There will, of course, be an opportunity to discuss this matter at very great length at the forthcoming meetings of the NATO powers in Lisbon, when I am sure this will be one of the major topics of conversation. The question is a very difficult one. As I said earlier, what we have to ensure is that in the process of mutual balanced force reductions there is a maintenance of the present balance; otherwise, neither side would agree.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this question to the understanding of all of us, would the Acting Prime Minister take an early opportunity on motions simply to explain to us the change in position as he understands it? Certainly it is not clear to any of us at the moment.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will have a look at the statement made by the Soviet Union last year and their latest statement, and if possible in some way provide information to the House.

* * *

FISHERIES

PROTECTION OF CANADIAN VESSELS FROM HARASSMENT BY UNITED STATES COASTGUARD

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning certain activities of the United States coastguard, with whom we usually expect and normally enjoy very good co-operation. In light of the fact that a Canadian vessel and Canadian citizens were recently harassed by elements of the U.S. coastguard in Canadian territory and forced to flee for sanctuary to the port of Prince Rupert, and in light of the fact—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member would ask his question; we are running short of time.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of some delicacy internationally and I want to be sure that the Secretary of State for External Affairs understands exactly what I am asking. In light of the fact that the Minister of Fisheries, both in the House and in the committee this morning, said that Canadians can fish in these waters, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, if this vessel or others return to these waters, they can in fact be assured of enjoying adequate protection from Canadian patrols of one kind or another?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we claim that these are Canadian waters. Therefore we have told Canadian vessels that they can fish in these waters. We would assume that even though there is some dispute—the United States has not accepted this position—there will not be harassment of Canadians.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE ON ACTIVITIES IN CANADIAN WATERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT FOLLOWING CONCLUSION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At the present time there are important discussions being held between representatives of the French and Canadian governments on the question of Canada's right to exert authority over our fishing resources and the phasing out of fishing operations in waters coming within our jurisdiction, such as the Gulf of St. Lawrence. In view of the serious decline in our fishing resources, will the minister be making a statement on motions at the conclusion of these talks so that fishermen in Atlantic Canada will be made aware whether any progress has been made?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be possible to make a statement. I do not know how much progress may be made and what the nature of this statement might be but, as the hon. member says, we are now having discussions with representatives of the French government and I hope that we can make good progress.

* * *

INDUSTRY

MAINTENANCE OF OPERATION OF McBEAN COAL MINE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the by-election in Central Nova is only ten days away, can the Acting Prime Minister advise how soon an announcement will be made as to whether a grant will be made to keep the McBean mine in operation?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The hon. member will realize that he cannot ask a question in those terms.

Mr. Muir: Then may I rephrase it, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that these coal miners, 200 of them, have been waiting upon an announcement by this government in regard to a grant to continue this coal mine in operation, on which the livelihood of the miners, their wives and families depends, and since the announcement has not been made up to the present time, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it will be made prior to May 31, or after May 31?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I do not know, but I am sure my hon. friend would not want to suggest that we would make this announcement at a time that would be favourable to the government candidate.

Mr. Muir: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I bring to the attention of hon. members that the question period has just about expired. I should like to recognize the hon. member for St. John's East on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, but I would suggest this is all we have time for. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I would hope the foreign aid which is available and about which the minister spoke would be available to these coal miners. How long is this government going to play a political cat and mouse game with these 200 coal miners?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH

ALLEGED USE OF STALLING TACTICS TO PREVENT ABORTION APPLICATION BEING DEALT WITH

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fresh complaint of Dr. Byron Hyde of Riverside Hospital that stalling tactics are being consistently used to prevent abortion cases from coming before their review board, and in view of the fact that his applications on May 3 involving three young women, one of them 15 years of age, were delayed until May 19 and then cancelled, will the minister consult with the minister in charge of hospitals in Ontario to see what can be done about this dangerous and indefensible roadblock?

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

SHOES—QUEBEC—MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pépin).

Whereas last May 6 the Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce promised that he would come to Ottawa and discuss with his counterpart the closing down of shoe factories, would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce inform this House whether such a meeting has been held and if so, whether a solution to this problem has been developed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I myself went to Quebec City to accommodate my provincial colleague and we are now both working on possible measures which could help this industry.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE ON ACTIVITIES IN CANADIAN WATERS—LEVEL OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATION—SCOPE OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs at what level his department is represented in the talks today with the representatives of France regarding the phasing out of French fishing activities. Perhaps at the same time he might permit me to ask if our delegation is putting forward a position regarding the continental shelf and the jurisdiction of France over the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government is represented at a level comparable with the French delegation. The question of the continental shelf is not under discussion. This meeting relates purely to fishing.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a Thursday point of order, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council about the business for the rest of this week and for next week.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we shall begin today with the pilotage legislation and when that is completed we will continue the discussion on the Wheat Board Act amendments. Tomorrow will be an opposition day. On Tuesday and Wednesday next week I propose to call government legislation beginning with the government organization bill and, hopefully, the Judges Act. Thusday and Friday of next week will also be opposition days.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I draw to the attention of the President of the Privy Council the extreme difficulty some of the standing committees are having in dealing with the business assigned to them, much of which has to be dealt with by the end of the month. Therefore, may I ask whether consideration will be given to adjourning the House for one or two days between now and the end of May so that the committees may complete their important work?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to consider any change in practice that would assist in accelerating the business before the House and before the committees. I will be glad to discuss that further with the other House leaders.

Mr. Marshall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the President of the Privy Council would take particular note of the fact that both the chairman and vice-chairman of the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs were not in attendance this morning which meant that the National Capital Commission witnesses had to leave and therefore a lot of time was wasted. The minister should investigate this type of situation.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I was aware of the unfortunate occurrence because of the absence of the chairman and vice-chairman. I must say that the general attendance at the committee from all sides of the House was very impressive this morning.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, regarding the point of order I raised a few days ago perhaps this might be a good time to direct it to the government House leader and ask him whether he has taken up with the organization committee the question of whether or not it is legal for standing committees of the House to sit and hear witnesses without a quorum?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is not the job of the House leader to rule on points of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order arising out of the answer the Minister of Agriculture gave me this afternoon. The minister stated he had no intention of clarifying the conflicting statements which appeared in the two versions of the Barber Commission report, one of which referred to the machinery companies making handsome profits whereas the one in the final report suggested that the machinery companies were making merely moderate profits. I suggest that because this commission is a government appointed commission the minister certainly has a responsibility to clarify these misleading statements. I would ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order, I suggest with respect to the hon. member for Vegreville. It may be a good point of argument. I gather we will all be back here tomorrow and the hon. member might ask the question again then.

Mr. Mazankowski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not want to use up the time of the question period. I know how precious it is.

Mr. Speaker: This is not very helpful. If hon. members ask questions after the question period in order not to use up the time of the question period I am not sure where this will lead us. After the question period ends there should be no further questions asked unless by consent of the House. Orders of the day.

• (3:00 p.m.)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PILOTAGE ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PILOTAGE AUTHORITIES AS PROPRIETARY CORPORATIONS

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-246, respecting pilotage, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the objective of the bill is to provide the greatest possible degree of safety for ships which move through Canadian coastal and inland waters. In general, the recommendations made by the Royal Commission on Pilotage have been followed in the presentation of the act and while there is a considerable number of differences in regard to matters of detail, 36 of the 39 major recommendations made by the Royal Commission have been accepted.

By the establishment of four regional authorities, it is expected that the decentralization of the administration of pilotage services will be effected to the greatest possible degree. This is in keeping both with the recommendations of the Royal Commission and the wishes of the pilots and shipping interests of Canada as expressed over many years.

The bill replaces Part VI of the Canada Shipping Act which relates to pilotage in general and Part VIA which pertains specifically to pilotage in the Great Lakes. This bill is required because the accepted legislation, being of ancient origin, no longer corresponds to modern requirements. The Royal Commission found our present system to be essentially sound but suggested new legislation to give it proper legal authority. In decentralizing the powers and functions of pilotage in Canada, essentially as recommended by the commission, the ministry will no longer be burdened with unnecessary involvement in matters relating to the day to day administrative operations of pilotage nor in the establishment of tariffs which, to an increasing degree, has resulted in increasing government subsidies.

The new bill envisages pilotage services operated to a large degree by regional authority rather than referring to a central authority. The regional authorities will operate with a great deal of autonomy in both regulatory and financial matters. It is anticipated that they will become financially self-sufficient and that subsidization will be reduced to a minimum, partly as a result of our over-all policy that the cost of government services should be met by the users. In place of the present 29 pilotage districts, there will be four pilotage regions.

The Atlantic Pilotage Authority will include all Canadian waters about the Atlantic provinces, plus the Bay of Chaleur between New Brunswick and Quebec.

The Laurentian Authority will include the St. Lawrence waterway from the northern entrance of the St. Lambert lock by Montreal to the waters of the gulf north of Cap d'Espoir in Quebec.

The Great Lakes will run from the northern entrance of the St. Lambert lock to all Canadian waters in and around Ontario and Manitoba, including Hudson Bay.

The Pacific Authority will cover the waters of British Columbia.

The four authorities will each have a chairman and a maximum of six members, appointed by the cabinet. The Chairman of an authority will be the chief executive officer and will be employed full time. In the larger regions, a full time vice chairman may be appointed. Their salaries will be set by order in council, as will be per diem rates for other members.

The pilotage authorities will have the objects of establishing, operating, maintaining and administering an efficient and economic pilotage service. They will be proprietary corporations under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act and will not be agents of Her Majesty.

The pilotage authorities will have powers to own land, buildings, boats and equipment, to borrow money and to make investments. They will be subject to audit by the Auditor General and will report annually to the minister. They may make by-laws for their internal management and shall file copies with the minister. Assets and liabilities of existing pilotage authorities will vest in the new authorities.

Pilotage authorities will establish compulsory pilotage areas and determine which ships are subject to the compulsory pilotage. In the compulsory pilotage areas, the person having the conduct of the ship must be either a licensed pilot or an officer of the ship holding a pilotage certificate.

All of the existing pilots' licences will continue in force and pilotage authorities will issue new licences to persons who qualify under the regulations. There will be periodic examinations of pilots in order to maintain their licences in force.

Pilotage authorities will either employ pilots on salary or, if the majority of pilots in a particular area so elect, may contract with a corporation of which the pilots are members for the services of pilots, and no person may exercise the privileges of a licence except under such conditions. A pilot's licence will not be valid unless he is an employee of the authority or a member or shareholder of such a pilot corporation. Pilots who become employees will be entitled to superannuation under the Public Service Superannuation Act and may count as prior service under that act the time they spent as licenced pilots under the Canada Shipping Act.

A pilot's licence may be suspended or cancelled when a pilot ceases to meet the qualifications set by regulation or when he violates certain disciplinary provisions. If the suspension exceeds 15 days, the pilot is entitled to a hearing, as he also is if an authority refuses to issue a licence. The hearing will be by the authority and may be held in public, and there is provision for an appeal to the minister. Appeals may also be made to the federal court if the appellant so desires.

Pilotage authorities will be empowered to make the regulations necessary to carry out their functions. Besides establishing compulsory pilotage they may prescribe classes of licences and pilotage certificates, the examination procedures for applicants for such licences and certificates, and limit the number of licences. These regulations are subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and in the case of those establishing compulsory pilotage areas and prescribing qualifications for the holders of licences and pilotage certificates, prior notice must be published in the Canada Gazette. If any objection is made, the minister may direct that a hearing be held and may require the pilotage authority to vary the regulation before it is approved by order in council.

While pilotage authorities establish the qualifications respecting local knowledge, the Governor in Council will establish minimum qualifications respecting navigational certificates, sea time, age and health of applicants, and the examination respecting these matters. These regulations may also prescribe the forms of licences and certificates, the rules of procedure for hearings before a pilotage authority, and the establishment of compulsory pilotage areas where regional authorities fail to do so.

The charges for pilotage services will be established by regulations of the regional authorities with the approval of the Governor in Council. Every proposed tariff will be published in the Canada Gazette and any interested party may raise an objection with the Canadian Transport Commission. The commission will hold such investigations, including hearings, as it deems advisable, and pilotage authorities will be governed by its recommendations.

Because of the nature of pilotage in Canadian waters contiguous to waters of the United States, there will be a need for continuing consultation with the United States authorities in regard to the use of Canadian pilots in American waters and vice-versa. The bill provides for the promulgation of necessary regulations to continue the present Great Lakes pilotage arrangements and to make similar arrangements in other areas if necessary.

That, very briefly, is a summary of the objectives and the intent of the legislation now before the House. I may say that it is the result of exhaustive and lengthy consultation with various groups, including the pilots representing themselves, the shipping community and others who might conceivably be affected by this legislation.

I am aware that while, as I mentioned, there has been general agreement in principle with most of the provisions of this bill, certain reservations have been filed by interested parties, and I suggest that these can be discussed in detail when the bill is considered in committee. Certainly, I am disposed to hearing recommendations and to seeing what can be done to accommodate those who in the present circumstances feel that the bill should be strengthened or changed in certain respects.

At this point I might make reference to one matter in particular which I do know has concerned at least a small number of pilots and possibly a large group from whom I have not heard, and that is the possibility that in some instances their employment might be terminated prior to their having reached an age at which they could obtain full pension benefits. There is an ability within the legislation for such cases to be dealt with, and I certainly undertake here in the House to look at this particular provision and to ensure that there is no arbitrary abandonment of a man's work if the results or effects to him are very bad from a pension point of view.

Other representations have been passed along to me with regard to Bill C-246. Some of them are a reflection of the views of some of the more experienced pilots in the country, and to the extent that it is possible to implement these or to change the legislation in order to meet their suggestions, many of which I am sure are logical, we will be glad to consider them in committee.

I feel that what we have to do here is to bring the pilotage arrangements within Canada in line with modern conditions. As I mentioned in my earlier remarks, some of them are quite outdated. Indeed, one might even describe them as antiquated in terms of present circumstances. This is an effort on our part to meet the various representations that have been made over the years and also to comply with the proposals as set down in the royal commission report which was a very exhaustive, one might even say exhausting, exercise which has lasted for many years.

So with this I simply want to add that I will be appearing with the officials before the committee and at that time will deal with the specific matters that have been raised. Hopefully, we will arrive at a bill which can be reported back unanimously to the House in adequate time for it to take the place of the present more or less ad hoc arrangements which expire, I believe, at the end of June.

May I at this point express my apologies to the opposition speakers who will be commenting on this matter and ask their indulgence for not being in my place during that period. The fact is that a delegation from Calgary came down here before I knew that the legislation was going to be discussed in the House at this particular time, and I will be with them for a few moments but will try to get back in time to hear the conclusion of this debate.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, we accept the minister's regrets. At least he is one minister who apologizes for not being here. I hope it is a good sign for the future.

In the latter part of the minister's remarks he made reference to guarantees to pilots. This gives me a chance at the beginning of my remarks to join him in mentioning this very important aspect of our marine activity, that is the pilots who serve as our navigators in and out of our harbours. This is a very noble profession, and in peace and wartime these pilots have made a great contribution to our country.

• (3:10 p.m.)

The legislation is based, as the minister said, on the Pilotage Commission report. The Pilotage Commission was established in 1962, and its report, as I said, forms the main basis for this legislation.

I just want to mention a member of the original commission Mr. R. K. Smith, who performed great service to this country in marine activities and in the Pilotage Commission. Mr. Smith had a very unique career. He was three times elected as a Member of Parliament and then, by some happening that I doubt could ever occur today, became a deputy minister of marine and fisheries, then Chairman of the National Harbours Board. Later, he was appointed to the Pilotage Commission. As I say, his was a unique career and he made a tremendous contribution to the country. He is a wonderful person, and his imprint is evident in a lot of the recommendations of the Pilotage report.

Again as the minister has said, this bill is designed to replace a part of the Canada Shipping Act, I think from section 323 on, dealing with pilotage. That part is all out-dated, and this bill is to meet new requirements. The old legisation was drafted to deal with conditions obtaining over a century ago. In the case of Saint John, in which I have some interest, I found that the people there had some pilotage requirements immediately after the Loyalists landed in 1783. This piece of legislation is one of those which Parliament amended from time to time and, as a result became very complicated. In fact, that applies to the whole of the Shipping Act. This is a point we should keep in mind during discussions in committee. Certainly, this is one bill that should not receive too much discussion now but should go to committee for detailed hearings.

The former pilotage authorities or local commissions were gradually usurped by the Department of Transport.

I notice a former minister of transport sitting in front of me, and he knows the difficulties with respect to regulations and routine work that the department had with the local pilotage commissions. The recommendations of the Royal Commission on Pilotage were quite clear in this respect. The Commission felt that the responsibility for pilotage should be withdrawn from the Department of Transport and placed under separate local authorities. A quick glance at the bill convinces me that this is only partially being done. There are various shades and degrees of bureaucracy, and its tentacles on power are still showing here. In any event, that was one of the recommendations and I want to go on record as saying that the removal of responsibility for pilotage from the department, so far as it is possible and practicable, is desirable. Of course, I agree that the Department of Transport, with its new re-organization, has to be a factor in anything we do.

The new legislation should be simple and clear. In it we should set out our intentions as clearly as possible, so that the public servants who may be involved with its administration will have a guide that will give them enough leeway to do what is desirable with respect to the day-to-day requirements and problems of the different regions that make up our pilotage service. We will have to state our intentions as definitely as we can in the legislation, but there will be many regulations involved. The problem will be to determine just how much control can be put in the legislation and how much should remain in the regulations. The Royal Commission on Pilotage said that the legislation should include precise, statutory definitions, and that principles and values should be enunciated. The new act should deal objectively also with the new organizational structure.

I return to the point which is the theme of my caution with respect to the legislation. I am not sure whether this is a direct quote, but Parliament should retain exclusive legislative control over those sections of the act which are of general application, and the pilotage authorities should deal with the rest of the regulations, particularly those of a local nature. The question is whether the bill fully meets this intention of the Pilotage Commission.

Clause 3 deals with the fitting of the legislation into the re-organization plan of the department, and implies the desirability of removing pilotage from the Department of Transport as far as possible. The four new pilotage commissions or authorities have been mentioned by the minister—the Atlantic, the Laurentian, the Great Lakes and the Pacific Pilotage Authority. There is some question as to where Churchill will fit, but that can be asked in committee. The commission recommended the creation of a greater number of authorities. This is a matter we should deal with. I am not saying that I object to a smaller number of authorities being created, but this will mean a need for more appointments to these authorities from the different areas, so that they will have on-the-spot knowledge of the navigational problems of the various areas.

The minister dealt with the question of the appointment of the chairmen of the various authorities and, in accordance with that well known phrase, the Governor in Council will decide on the boundaries. This is something we may have to consider in committee.

Clause 4 deals with the Great Lakes Pilotage Authority which in some way is to be included in the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. We will want to know the reason for this. There may be administrative reasons, but I can see some difficulties since we know that the Seaway Authority has been losing money, and we would not want the Great Lakes Pilotage Authority to start out on a very pessimistic note.

Clause 6 deals with the question of appointments to the authorities. It does not state the conditions to be met by an appointee. Let us hope they will not be the usual political hacks, but people with a knowledge and experience of local navigation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: In clause 12 the language used in setting out the objectives of the authorities is not very colourful marine language. I would think we could improve on it. It talks high mindedly about the "safety of navigation," which is exactly what we have as an objective, but it appears to me that a landlubber wrote that phrase, or somebody in the department with a more technical problem in mind.

Later clauses deal with the matter of compulsory pilotage, the problem of the different types of licences, and the necessity to have pilots aboard ship. We should distinguish between pilotage licences and pilotage certificates. Anybody who has kicked around the waterfront knows that entirely different privileges are involved. I am not sure of the number of the clause which deals with regulations regarding United States pilots working in the seaway, but this and the clauses which deal with the matter of investigation are very important. We all know of the inquiry on the west coast into the case of a pilot who was under the weather during his working hours and although there are not many such examples, this is an extremely important matter.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Conditions governing licensing and suspension must be clearly stated in the act. Only Canadian citizens or landed immigrants are entitled to be licensed. If we are to encourage Canadians to go to sea and take up this aspect of marine activity, it is important that it be stated in the act as a definite requirement. Suspension of a licence is left in the hands of the chairman of one of the four authorities. My quick perusal discloses that the question of suspension and cancellation of licences by the pilotage commission is a very complicated one, and I think it should be dealt with extensively in committee.

Now, we come to the very important section dealing with the different tariffs for pilotage. The CTC is involved in this in some way which will be unfolded in committee. This is good or bad, depending on how you view the success of the Canadian Transport Commission, but at least there will be full publication and a formaliz-ing of the tariff. The next section of the bill subjects the entire financial aspect to the scrutiny of the Auditor General. Of course, this is desirable but since public funds are not actually involved there will be no control by Parliament. The Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee will not approve this I am sure, and indeed I think most of us would have hoped for something more in the way of parliamentary control than the annual tabling of the report. This is another aspect which can be unfolded in committee.

I do not expect the minister to reply in detail now, but if I am on the wrong track entirely I am sure he will straighten me out. I would close by saying that this is a very technical bill and it is extremely difficult for laymen to understand this type of legislation. It will have to be gone into very extensively and I hope we will have an opportunity to hear the views of the pilots and the shipping community. I am not sure that we should start a series of hearings to rival the pilotage commission itself. The hearings of that body were very extensive and should be our guide.

That is all I wish to say now, Mr. Speaker. I think this bill should be sent to committee for full review as soon as possible. This legislation has been a long time in coming but it is very necessary. If we bring back a good bill from committee it will help navigation in and out of our ports and Canada will become a greater shipping nation. Perhaps we will encourage our young people to follow this worth-while phase of seafaring life more than we have in the past.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the immense spectrum, the highly technical and complex activities that come under the umbrella of what is now described as the ministry of transportation is rather difficult for laymen to understand. I have always described it as one of the silent services which provides much of what makes it possible for Canadian citizens and their commerce to move with some degree of safety and regularity. Although I represent a coastal constituency and thus should perhaps know a little more of the current needs of the department than some other people, I confess my knowledge is rather fragmentary and rudimentary. So, it is with some diffidence that I rise to comment on this bill.

In his introductory statement, the minister largely confined himself to a description of the framework of the bill. He did not do much about putting it into perspective with the total picture that is emerging, I feel, about the changing requirements of the transportation of cargo by sea. Certainly, the operation of the pilotage services in the various parts of our country has an important relationship to the way in which that traffic moves. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that considering the leisurely pace of the Royal Commission on Pilotage it is rather startling to find this bill before us when we are being told that the final part of the pilotage report will not be available for some time.

If the introduction of the bill at this time means anything, I hope it means that there is recognition of a need to act more quickly on some of these matters than has been the case in the past. As we consider this bill in committee, we may find that it is a companion to Bill C-2 which we discussed recently. The latter bill was designed to cope with the changing pattern of traffic and in particular with the use of high-powered vessels carrying larger cargoes which are in some cases, increasingly dangerous. There may be some interrelationship between the amendments which were made in that new part of the shipping act with respect to the bulk carriage of oil and other contaminant cargoes and the fact that the government has decided to introduce the legislation now being considered.

• (3:30 p.m.)

One thing I should like to say, in agreeing immediately that this bill should be read a second time and be referred to the committee, is that I hope there will not be any disposition on the part of those on the government side who may be responsible for the arrangements with respect to the committee to rush the bill through the committee. From my observations it seems that the bill, in some respects, has caught the pilots themselves off guard. Although they have been aware of the recommendations made by the royal commission, it is my impression that the abrupt manner in which the government has put forward these proposals on a matter that very closely affects their future as components of the marine work force of Canada has been a bit of a shock to them. The provisions of the bill will affect them directly as individuals and as groups of individuals.

I think most hon. members will agree that some of the basic rights of the people who have been within the pilotage services of the various regions of the country ought to be upheld, that their interests should be respected and that their careers should not in any way be unnecessarily interrupted or adversely affected by the proposed terms of this new bill. Having said that, I find myself inclined to agree with the recognition in the bill of the need to establish regional authorities which, in many respects, will be self-regulating and self-operating. The need for these stems from the fact that traffic on the Pacific coast—by that I mean the way it moves and operates and the components of it, whether made up of deep sea traffic or coastal trade—is very different from the kind of traffic that operates in the Great Lakes regions or on the Atlantic coast. So, the idea of establishing regional authorities seems a fairly sound approach. I gather that it arises in large measure from some of the recommendations of the royal commission.

I am not sure whether I understood correctly the observations of the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell); from my understanding of the bill, recognition has been given for the necessity of some kind of co-ordination between the ways these various pilotage authorities will operate. This co-ordination necessarily must be exercised as a result of appropriate action here, in Ottawa, under the authority of the governor in council. It appears to me at first blush—and this matter ought to be examined and discussed in committee—that the bill as drafted preserves a fair balance between the idea of local and regional autonomy and the necessity of the exercise of essential co-ordination in order that we do not go off in all directions at once with respect to the uses and functions of pilots.

In several committees of this House recently, Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal of discussion about what is required in order to secure adequate safety of navigation along our coasts, in waters leading to our ports, on the seaway and on the inland waters of Canada. One matter very much to the fore when committee consideration was being given to the unfortunate Arrow accident in Chedabucto Bay was the question of whether some of our basic ideas and basic legislative authorities in the field of navigation are adequate in this day and age. As most hon. members probably will know as a result of reading the press or of having read the proceedings before that committee, Dr. Patrick McTaggart-Cowan, who headed that task force, emphasized that ships on the seas approaching our coasts ought to be controlled in much the same way as aircraft are controlled at our airports or in our air corridors. He suggested that there ought to be parallel types of control procedures. Some people have questioned that concept and wondered whether such control procedures would necessarily be parallel. May I point out to the House that other witnesses quite independently, witnesses who were unaware of the position taken by Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, have said that this type of control is a necessary consequence of developments that are taking place.

This point of view was expressed the other day in the committee considering the dangers inherent in the proposed establishment of an oil tanker route from Alaska to Puget Sound, the Strait of Georgia, and then farther south. A suggestion has arisen that these vessels will be under direct traffic control through the use of radar and other electronic means, throughout their entire trip, or, at least, during certain parts of their journey. Certainly, there will be close control of navigation in the Straits of Juan de Fuca and up through Hecate Strait or Rosario channel and in the lower part of the Strait of Georgia. I say at once that this suggestion, to me, makes sense.

It is being pointed out in these discussions, however, that that concept challenges some very ancient maritime traditions under which the master of a vessel is a king of his own little domaine. One can recognize that in days of old when sailing vessels were out of communication with their home ports for extended periods, it was necessary for the master of the vessel to have this ancient authority. Under that concept, as I understand it, the pilot on a vessel serves, basically, in an advisory capacity to the master and the decisions remain in the master's hands. However, if the traffic control for vessels is to be somewhat similar to the kind of control exercised by an air controller operating from the control tower of an airport, it seems to me that we shall need to clarify not only the role of a master of the vessel and the question of who has ultimate power and authority, but also, in this context, the question of the role and authority of a pilot.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The bill makes provision for compulsory pilotage areas to be drawn by the different pilotage authorities. I agree with this. In fact, the concept of allowing masters of ships and those managing them to pay pilotage fees in lieu of taking on a pilot, thereby leaving inexperienced masters, inexperienced at least in local areas, in complete control of their vessel without benefit of advice, is archaic. In any realistic appraisal, certainly in view of the kind of discussion we have been having about the proposed tanker route on the west coast, there may be no option of that kind allowed.

If we think of the total pattern of marine traffic in a waterway such as the Strait of Juan de Fuca, we have to recognize that this kind of control, with its resultant elimination of the former authority of the master, may have to be applied to the master in charge of a large supertanker and also to masters in charge of other forms of traffic in difficult waters, be they towboats in the coastal area or freighters that carry dry cargo. I am sure hon. members agree that no matter how perfectly a supertanker is operated, if a freighter, inadequately manned in so far as expert navigational personnel are concerned, rams into it, the damage may be just as great as if the tanker were at fault.

I raise some of these questions because, in considering this bill, we should consider it in the total perspective with regard to the necessary requirements for the safe, normal and regular passage of marine traffic to and from our shores. I wish to emphasize that arrangements should be made so that this bill can receive adequate study by the committee. There should be a bit of a time lag in order to enable the pilots to properly assess the full implications of it as far as they are concerned. Steps should be taken to alert all who may be interested in the shipping field and, indeed, those who are concerned with the impact of a bill such as this on the marine ecology in the areas adjacent to our shores. I am glad the minister indicated there is some flexibility in his mind with regard to the details. When this bill is passed, it should be in a form which will make it a large part of a developing pattern to not only ensure free transport of our commerce, but also full protection of the ecology of our coastal areas.

In the past few days I have discovered that certain people who are very much concerned about what this House does really have not been made aware of some of the legislation we have passed. I do not know whether this is our fault. It may, in part, be theirs. Yesterday, someone whom I would have expected to be fully acquainted with the implications of the Shipping Act, which we dealt with earlier this session, had to admit he had not yet seen a copy of it. When I stated in a committee that this pilotage bill had been given first reading in the House, there was immediate interest. As a result, one of our messengers took steps to procure copies of this bill for distribution. The bill was eagerly seized upon by witnesses before that committee because they recognized it was something in which they were directly concerned.

In one case this was navigation matters and ship design, and in another case it was a scientific concern in oceanography and the necessary steps that should be taken to protect the ecology. Having said that, I am happy to see the bill receive second reading and be referred to the committee.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Toward the end of his remarks, the minister referred to some aspects of the bill which are causing concern to pilots who feel their pension rights will be jeopardized by lack of protection when this bill becomes law. He stated that he will ensure that these matters will be thoroughly dealt with when the bill is before the committee. He also said he will guarantee that these pilots will receive protection under this legislation. With that kind of understanding, I will refrain from making any detailed remarks at this time.

I look forward to the response of the minister and his officials during the committee stage. The minister has received official representations from pilots who feel their pensions will be jeopardized. I want to express my appreciation on their behalf of any move by the department which will assure them of their pension rights under this legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DETERMINATION OF PAYMENT FOR WHEAT—EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO FLAXSEED, RYE AND RAPESEED

The House resumed, from Monday, May 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-238, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-238 is grouped with a number of grain bills which the government has brought before the House. Two of them are now receiving study by the Standing Committee on Agriculture. When one considers the plight of western grain farmers, it is interesting to note that a spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board stated quite clearly this morning that there are 46,675 farmers in default on their cash advance borrowings from the wheat board. This gives one some idea of the plight of western farmers. To my mind this is a shocking figure. Farmers and people generally have the right to ask why.

[Mr. Barnett.]

• (3:50 p.m.)

It was also pointed out that the Wheat Board had carried out a deliberate policy of refraining from filling space available in commercial storage. There are some 170 million bushels less in storage this spring than was the case a year ago. I see the minister scurrying to look up figures. The figure I just gave was for the end of March—the amount varies from week to week. It can be said that farmers have delivered more wheat than they did last year. They delivered more this year because grain sales have been better than they were last year, but it remains true that the Wheat Board has carried out a program of refraining from filling elevators. What does this mean in terms of cash returns to farmers? It means we are not allowing farmers to sell as much grain as they otherwise might.

Now the minister is asking us to approve an amended Wheat Board act giving the Board jurisdiction over flax, rye, rapeseed and other things. The Wheat Board Act has been on the statute books now for 35 or 36 years. In essence, it has been a sacred cow. Western Members of Parliament and people generally have been afraid to criticize it because their remarks are immediately misinterpreted as meaning they are against the Wheat Board. I am for the Wheat Board. I think the Board has served a very useful purpose in western Canada. Nevertheless, I feel changes should be made. The act ought not to be a sacred cow; we should examine it. The direction of change should, in my opinion, be toward greater flexibility rather than greater rigidity. The act now before us places the farmer in an inflexible situation. The whole quota system has been altered in such a way as to make the farmers' position more rigid. It might be argued that since the government is handling grain sales through the Wheat Board it is in the best position to decide what farmers should deliver. Has the government allowed the Wheat Board to take all the grain for which it could find commercial storage? Is has not. These elevators could be filled. Instead, they are not being filled. This means less money for the farmer, less money for the machinery companies, for the grocery stores and for circulation in the economy generally.

Why has the government decided on this policy? I come back to the straightforward answer I suggested earlier. The government is deliberately trying to get rid of a lot of the small farmers. Some might say I am making no more than what amounts to a political statement—that nobody really believes it. Actually, though, this is Liberal policy as enunciated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Winnipeg on June 2. He said on that occasion that a policy for small farms was necessary. Farmers would be kept on their land, but when they sold it, or moved, or retired, the land would have to go to a large scale farmer or else go back, to use the Prime Minister's phrase, into public hands. In other words, the government would own it. This is wrong. In my opinion, there will always be small farms. The government has the idea that once the operators of small farms have been got rid of the large scale farmers will be able to look after themselves, and no one in Ottawa will have to worry about them. This is a misleading line of thinking because the large scale farmer of today becomes the operator of a small farm tomorrow, if we carry out a policy of this kind. Indeed, carrying this theory to the extreme, we could end up having only one farm. The Prime Minister likes to explain himself in that manner, by carrying things to extremes.

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board comes from western Canada, from the Province of Saskatchewan. He should know what wheat has meant to the economy of that province. He should know how short of money the farmers are in that province. But either he does not care about the people there, or he has no authority. I like to think it is the latter, because I believe the minister must care. He would not have run for election to Parliament if he had not cared a little for his constituency. On coming here, though, he realized that the policies had already been laid down by the bureaucracy in Ottawa. His job was only to carry them out, to administer them and to pilot the necessary bills through the House.

When the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) was in charge of the Wheat Board he used to say he had nothing to do with the affairs of the Board. The Wheat Board sold wheat. Today, quite evidently, the Board does not run its own affairs. A representative of the Board, an able gentleman, was asked a number of questions in the committee this morning to which he replied: "I cannot supply the answers." He could not supply the answers because he knew the Wheat Board is now being directed from Ottawa. This is wrong. There should be an amendment to the Wheat Board Act giving the farmers the right to elect a member to the Wheat Board. The Board is composed of five members. I would think that two, or better still three of them, should be elected, one from each of the Prairie provinces, so that the farmers would have a representative on the Board who would be responsible to them. This is one provision that should be in the act and is not. For too long the Wheat Board has been accused of not making sales, of being reluctant to make sales or of adjusting the price of grain, and this has caused anxiety and concern. If the farmers had a voice on the Canadian Wheat Board, the Wheat Board would then be directly in touch with the farmers whose grain they are selling, and any anxiety in the country would immediately be reflected in the decisions of the Board.

• (4:00 p.m.)

This bill is asking for permission to put rapeseed, flaxseed and rye under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board. In a press release recently—the minister is the greatest fellow for press releases—he said he had no intention of putting these crops under the full control of the Canadian Wheat Board, that he would consult the producers first. This reminds me of the famous Bill C-176. The minister had no intention of taking the cattlemen into the bill, so he told the cattlemen. He said he would eliminate them from the bill, but he has not done so yet. The minister has stated that he has no intention of ever creating a cattle marketing agency.

Do you really think, Mr. Speaker, that the minister would consult the producers of rapeseed before placing rapeseed under the rigid control of the Canadian Wheat Board? Would he do that in view of the fact that he brought in this bill without even consulting them? The Western Producer carried an article recently in which it said that when the minister attended a meeting on the Prairies he was amazed to learn that the rapeseed growers did not come within the control of the Canadian Wheat Board. I see the minister is smiling at that, and I know he does not want me to read the article because it is slightly embarrassing. It goes on to say that the minister from Saskatoon put his head on the chopping block, and certainly I would not want to put his head on the chopping block.

Mr. Lang: You have had it there so often. My head, I mean.

Mr. Horner: I am sorry if I have left that impression because that is far from my mind. What I am asking is whether, as producers, we can believe that this government will consult us in view of the fact that it made no attempt to have prior consultation with the producers before introducing this bill to Parliament. The minister issues a press release in which he says these producers will never come under Canadian Wheat Board control or be included in the bill. This leads me to ask why they were put in the bill in the first place. This business of bringing in a piece of legislation, including provisions offering the producers, and then turning round and trying to reassure the producers that they will be unaffected by the bill just not good enough. Alarm has been expressed by our customers throughout the world at this measure. They want to retain their present flexible arrangement whereby they are able to buy rapeseed, in particular, without going through the Canadian Wheat Board. Rapeseed, flaxseed and rye are considered to be what are commonly known as cash crops; producers can grow these crops and sell them.

I should like to ask the minister whether it is his intention to pool the price of these grains when he does give control of them to the Canadian Wheat Board. He will probably consider the situation for some time, and if he does put them under the control of the Wheat Board perhaps he will pool the prices. I should like to know whether this is his intention, or whether he is doing this in order to make his grain stabilization program work and to enable him to keep accurate accounts of the cash received by the farmers.

I think it is a combination of both these two factors, but what is going to be the net result? Already alarm has been caused our customers. The farmers foresee it being slightly more difficult in the future to market their grains. For years we have had a surplus of wheat, and I think we should continue to have a surplus of wheat. I say this because we are entering a period of what I refer to as surge buying on the part of various countries. China and Russia have had crop failures I think three years out of the last ten and bought huge amounts of grain from Canada; we were fortunate to have that grain available. Under the program the minister is now carrying out, the amount of grain in commercial storage will be reduced.

In that case, unless he is very careful, he will be unable to assure Russia, China, or Japan, which is buying in volume, that we will be able to make such deliveries.

This is the difficulty foreseen by the farmers in marketing their crops. I think we need a clear cut statement from the minister assuring us he is going to make every attempt, before the end of this crop year, to fill up all available commercial storage. If he puts forward the argument that by following this course difficulties will be created in the throughput of the grain handling system, that argument will not stand up. We have had our commercial storage facilities filled before. In various crop years in the past we have delivered huge amounts of grain to Russia and China during periods of near capacity grain storage in our commercial facilities, and there has been no difficulty with the throughput.

I submit that the first purpose of this legislation is to eliminate the operator of the small farm. The government thinks that the large scale farmer will then be able to look after himself and there will be less load on the government. The second purpose is to reduce government spending on agriculture. The government must have commercial storage either empty or practically empty so that it does not become involved in any major expenditure. Thirdly, the government wants to create a situation where it knows exactly what is being produced by any and all of the farmers. The government wants more control.

In a speech I made earlier in this House, on the subject of agriculture I said that what the government wanted was power, that the government wants to control every facet of our society, that the government is power hungry. It is not just content with being in office; the government wants power to control every facet of our society. That is what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) wanted when he introduced his marketing bill, though I do not think he wants it any more. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board is searching for power. He is trying to build up an empire for himself so as to control and to manipulate agricultural products. Instead of letting the Wheat Board run its own business, directions will be given from Ottawa. Instead of bringing in a bill to allow the farmer to have some representation on the Wheat Board, there is to be more rigidity in the system.

• (4:10 p.m.)

If one carefully studied the agricultural situation during the past number of years, one would realize that the most successful farmer has been the farmer who has been most flexible, who has been able to shift his energy from one phase of the industry to another and therefore meet the market as it develops. The rigidity this government is bringing to the agricultural scene is wrong. It will prohibit the flexibility required in an individual farmer's operation. In my opinion, the whole concept goes back to the question of supply management. This government is firmly committed to supply management. The Operation Lift which the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board brought in last year was a direct attempt at supply management. Now, the minister throws out his chest and says that it was pretty successful because the amount of wheat was reduced. Yes, he reduced the amount of wheat because he introduced a program whereby if a farmer did seed wheat he could not deliver it. That was the way the quota system worked.

Canada is a small country in population but a country which is large in resources and ability. For a long time the farmers have listened to the government experts, the bureaucrats, say that greater efficiency is required in the agricultural industry. The farmers need more effectiveness from the government rather than greater efficiency. Now, the minister states that supply management will give this. Canada is a country which has the ability to produce something in the neighbourhood of less than 10 per cent of the world's wheat production and yet it has nearly 50 per cent of the world's surplus. We need sales. If we say we cannot sell it then, in effect, we are saying that all the people in the world go to bed with no more desire to have a greater supply of food. We all know this is wrong. We know there are many people throughout the world who require more food. To me, the concept of supply management is an example of negative thinking. We are opting out of competition throughout the world. We should be doing the direct opposite.

The Canadian Wheat Board should be adopting a system of selling agencies or if the Canadian Wheat Board does not wish to do this the government should do so. I asked the former chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board about this and he said he felt the board should be involved in a pricing, pooling and orderly marketing system. However, he would prefer not to have selling agencies under the board because the board must be impartial and must treat all the various selling agencies alike. If that is the opinion of the board, then the Canadian government should be giving financial assistance to the newly established selling agencies which the pools and the UGG have formed and which it is hoped will play an active part in the selling world. This government has not mentioned anything about this. There are many things which could be done which would be far more effective in helping the farmer than the three pieces of legislation the minister has brought in. Each piece of legislation creates more and more difficulty for the farmer in his attempt to remain in business.

The Canadian Wheat Board has been one of the major tools in assisting the farmer in respect of marketing his grain in the past number of years. However, the system should be changed. It should be made more flexible. The Canadian Wheat Board should be made more of a market-oriented board for Canada rather than a board which just controls the amount of grain produced by the farmers. Another thing I should like to mention is that in respect of the pricing system of the Canadian Wheat Board there should also be some changes. Last fall, because of the inflexibility of the Canadian Wheat Board we saw a situation in which Canadian barley sold at least 20 cents a bushel less than it should have for over a period of nearly two months. Because of the corn blight in the United States, the demand for feed grain in Europe and Japan increased. We made sales because we were removed from the pressure of the demand in the barley market. If barley, however, were under the Canadian Wheat Board the pricing system would be too rigid. The rapeseed growers are worried about the possibility of a similar situation developing in respect of rapeseed.

Rapeseed is in severe competition with other oil seeds. With the selling system we have today there is a demand for the product. We know the supply and we know the demand. The Canadian Wheat Board is aware of the supply situation. It knows how many million bushels are in the elevators across Canada, at the Lakehead, at Vancouver and at Churchill, but the board must be more sensitive to the demand. It knows the supply situation but sales cannot be made unless we have the two factors at work, supply and demand. The rapeseed producers fear, if rapeseed is placed under the Canadian Wheat Board, that because of the inflexibility of the board's structure there might be a tendency to hide the demand for their commodity. This commodity is in severe competition with other oil seeds. Surely every farmer in Western Canada knows this. Surely a person who comes from Saskatchewan University should know this because Saskatchewan University has done a great deal of work in developing various uses for rapeseed. They should be well aware that demand must be registered. Because of the structure of the Canadian Wheat Board there might be a slight tendency to hide the demand. Therefore there is a great reluctance on the part of the growers to have rapeseed come under the Canadian Wheat Board, with all the rigidity which is built into the system. I think perhaps this bill, along with the other two which are before the committee, will receive exhaustive study.

Before I conclude, may I say that this morning in the Agricultural Committee the spokesmen for the Canadian Wheat Board were very poorly prepared. When they were asked questions they did not have the ansnwers. They said that they really did not think the question were within the terms of reference of this bill and so on. It would seem to me—and I come back to where I started—when you have 46,675 farmers in default on payments in respect of cash advance loans, then the committee study should encompass the whole spectrum of farming. I have never seen the representatives of the Canadian Wheat Board appear before an Agriculture Committee as poorly prepared as they were this morning. I know these are capable men. Why then did we have this situation? It must have been because of pressure from the top to release only what had to be released and no more. That is what I believe. I believe there is this pressure because the government does not want to become involved in a big debate.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member is intimating there is some direction to the officials not to release information. I should like to make it perfectly clear that there was no such direction and that all the information which was available and relevant was certainly made available to members.

Mr. Olson: The wrong interpretation as usual, Jack.

Mr. Horner: The Minister of Agriculture suggests a wrong interpretation as usual. I was at the committee and was questioning the witnesses. How can the minister say all the information available was given and there was no direction from the top when he was not there? He does not know what information was requested. He does not know what information was not available. At one time the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board went before the Agriculture Committee and was given a thorough study section by section. This procedure has not been followed for the last two or three years. I wonder why. The Canadian Wheat Board hired a very able and capable writer. He can write and he can carry on a great public relations job for them. Surely, he should be able to write enough about what the Board is doing for the Canadian farmer. The minister can say that there was no direction from the top, but I am only trying to analyse why more information was not made available. As we get into the study of this bill and of the Grain Stabilization Act, all the facts must be laid on the table and must be made available. I was disappointed.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture for 13 years, and I was very disappointed. Officials of the Wheat Board have always been very able witnesses before that committee. They have always known their facts, and they always gave out their information clearly and freely. This morning nearly all the same men were there. I understand that the chairman is in the hospital, but I am not certain about that. However, his assistants were there. They have always been before the committee, but for some reason or other much of the information was not available. The minister said that enough pertinent information was available. That is his opinion, but surely before we pass the three bills all the information that is required regarding the operation of the Wheat Board and the sales that they are supposed to have made as well as those they have made should be made known.

In addition, the action the Canadian Wheat Board took to reduce the amount of grain in storage must be explained. I think the truth will come out that this was a direction from the top, a direction which resulted in empty elevators throughout western Canada and which forced farmers to store more grain on their farms, in this way depriving them of much ready cash. It seems to me that this Action will only force farmers off the land, and that is exactly what the government is doing.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I want to spend a few minutes making some remarks on Bill C-238. I will be brief as the House has had before it in the last few days several different farm bills and all of us have had an opportunity to express our thoughts. These bills will be before the House again.

The bill before us deals essentially with a whole series of matters. First of all, there is a series of housekeeping provisions on which I do not intend to comment. For example, the bill provides for the extension of the crop year. I think most of my constituents are pretty well unanimous on this provision. The bill also makes some alterations in terminology. It refers to Thunder Bay rather than to Port Arthur and Fort William. When I say housekeeping provisions I do not mean it in the negative sense, but a large part of the bill deals with housekeeping matters.

The main point about which I and many other members of the House are concerned relates to the provision which permits marketing of flax, rye and rapeseed under the Canadian Wheat Board. What we have essentially is enabling legislation. If the minister or the cabinet see fit to include these commodities under the Wheat Board at some time, they will do so. I should like to ask the minister when he rises to speak again why he does not move now to include these commodities under the Wheat Board. Why is he again at this time in the position of going half way and not all the way? Why is he just half pregnant? This is often all too typical of this government. They go a little way down the path but not all the way. This is another small example of their over-cautiousness and of the timidity of the minister.

My position on the matter is quite clear. I am in favour of the immediate inclusion of flax, rye and rapeseed under the Canadian Wheat Board. I know other members of my party suggested this on Monday when they spoke in the House. I am in favour of the orderly marketing of all grains by the Canadian Wheat Board, an agency that is responsible to the public and to the producers. This is what we must have if there is to be any type of income stability for the farmer. In this way, farm commodities will not be the subject of speculation on the market, as is the case at present. This is why I should like to see the minister move as rapidly as possible to include these three commodities under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Why do I say this? First of all, to be very brief, the major farm organizations and farmers unions, the wheat pools in the three provinces, and the Federation of Agriculture have all agreed that these commodities should be included under the Canadian Wheat Board. Since 1935, our party has passed resolutions at several conventions recommending the inclusion of these grains under the Wheat Board. I know that my constituents and the farmers in my area are in favour of such a move. I believe that this is the type of action which we should take, and we should not be pussyfooting around delaying it.

I am all the more convinced that we should take this action when I look at who is against the inclusion of these commodities under the Wheat Board. I see that, for example, the private grain trade is against such action, and so is the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. The other day one of the members in the House quoted a letter from James Richardson and Sons, a newsletter which was sent out on April 22. I do not have the letter here but I know that James Richardson and Sons are against the inclusion of these commodities under the Wheat Board. When I learn this, I am all the more convinced that we must do so immediately because companies, organizations and corporations such as this have been living off the farmers and exploiting them for all too many years. It is about time we did something about such exploitation. As I said, such organizations have been living off the farmers, but this is not their fault; it is only natural. They are private corporations, and their aim is to make the maximum amount of profit with the lowest amount of effort. Their aim is to have a handsome profit from the sale of grain and other commodities which the farmer raises or produces. This is why the government should take the lead now and should initiate action at this time to include these three products under the Wheat Board.

It is not only the Liberal government that is half pregnant. We also find that the Conservative party is in a similar position. On the other hand, some Conservative Members of Parliament are against the inclusion of these commodities under the Wheat Board. I think that this type of attitude is nothing but an extreme right wing attitude which hearkens back to the age of the dinosaur. It assumes that the farmer can go out on the open market and fight for himself. The other day the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said that the government is committed to a policy of economic genocide against the small scale farmer. I think he is right. I think the government in forcing small scale farmers off the land. This is their announced intention.

If some Conservative members vote against a piece of legislation such as this, then it can be assumed that there is certainly Conservative complicity in working against the operators of small farms. They want us to move even faster to force these farmers off the land. The hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), the two former cabinet ministers, left the cabinet because they thought the government was too cautious and too conservative. Now, we have some Conservative members saying that the government is not conservative enough. I think this speaks for itself. This is not the direction in which we must move. We must move in the other direction so that the farmer will have some protection and some bargaining power when he goes out into world markets. He must not be left to cope with the vagaries of the speculative market, but must be given some kind of stability. I think the minister knows this.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The minister is from Saskatchewan. I know he has been in contact with farm organizations. I hope he will act upon their recommendations as soon as possible because it is his duty to lead the way and to bring these commodities under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. He should listen to these organizations, and listen to them before the end of this crop year. If he does not, then perhaps there is some validity to the suggestion of some hon. members that a plebiscite be held. But that plebiscite would be a foregone conclusion because farmers are in favour of this legislation.

Mr. Schumacher: Where did you get that idea?

Mr. Nystrom: I think all the hon. member has to do is go out and talk to some of his own constituents.

Mr. Korchinski: Some organizations are not in favour of it.

Mr. Nystrom: The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) says that some of the organizations may not be in favour of it. If that is the case I suggest they are few and far between because most farmers are interested in strengthening the Wheat Board, and in orderly marketing. Of course, you do have people who are critical of some of the ways in which the Wheat Board acts. There are many who feel it should be more aggressive, that it should be permitted to sell grain in a much more vigorous way.

But this is not the fault of the Wheat Board. This is not the fault of the basic idea of the orderly marketing of grains. This is the fault of the government for not giving the Board enough money, enough leeway, and enough motivation to go out and pursue better markets. If these commodities are included under the Wheat Board there is a better chance of finding markets for them, and a much better chance of getting more stable prices for the farmers. After all, this is what we want. Since when did the private grain trade have the interests of the farmer at heart? When did they become the friend of the farmer? Their purpose is to make a profit, as large a profit as possible. This is why I urge the minister to act as soon as possible, and not leave the whole thing up in the air, as apparently is being done today. We must strengthen the Wheat Board, make it more vigorous, give it more power and influence. We must make it a more aggressive agency. This is what the overwhelming majority of farmers in western Canada want.

I do not want to repeat myself, Mr. Speaker, but I do want to say that western agriculture is in really serious danger today. Farmers are rapidly disappearing from the land. The net income of the farmer has gone down and his costs have gone up. If we do not do something soon to reverse this trend the small farms will disappear, we will have huge corporate impersonal farms; local towns will become ghost communities or remain just as service centres for the corporate farms. Just a few weeks ago the Dominion Bureau of Statistics showed that net farm income in Saskatchewan over the two year period from 1968 to 1970 fell by 56 per cent. This is a gigantic drop. It underlines the severity of the problem facing western agriculture. And it is not only the farmer who is suffering. The operators of small businesses are affected, the unemployed, and in fact the whole population. A drop in income of 56 per cent should make us all realize there is something drastically and fundamentally wrong.

The bill before us is only a small one, but it provides for a fundamental change that would give a little more stability to some suffering farmers in western Canada. I hope the minister acts as soon as possible to have rye, flax and rapeseed brought under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. Perhaps when he rises to reply he will elaborate a bit more, tell us that he intends to make a thorough, in-depth study of the matter, and indicate what his final decision will be. I have put forward what I find to be the general position of most people I talk to in rural Saskatchewan, and that is the position of the farm organizations also. It is about time that the farmer did have some bargaining power. It is about time that the farmer did have some protection. This is one little piece of legislation that would help the farmer in contending with forces which he cannot control by himself.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to my neighbour from Yorkton as he recited the dire conditions in which many western communities find themselves. He stated that there is a need for greater income in western Canada. He pointed out that some rural communities were depleted, and with all of this I agree entirely. I think he presented a good case showing there was a need for effective means to increase the income of the western farmers, and he also mentioned the needs of western businessmen.

Three of the major crops that western producers have been selling, wheat, oats and barley, have been under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board for some time. Mr. Speaker, it was the dynamic salesmanship of the Wheat Board that piled up the huge surpluses that we now have, and so the hon. member for Yorkton immediately refutes his own argument when he says we should put other grains under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. Even though the Wheat Board was not able to handle the situation with regard to wheat, oats and barley, the hon. member suggests that it be given control over three more grains. And he suggests that then we will have orderly marketing.

We have had orderly marketing, Mr. Speaker. As a result we have stacked our surpluses up so neatly and so high that the whole world can see them. It doesn't matter where you stand, you can see piles of wheat in Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: Do you want to abolish the Wheat Board?

Mr. Korchinski: I did not suggest that I wanted to abolish the Wheat Board, but I do not want it burdened with any more commodities since it has indicated it cannot handle the three commodities already under its control.

The one salvation western farmers have had was the fact that rapeseed and flaxseed were outside the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. It was not the Wheat Board's salesmanship that sold those commodities, to the point that we had no more rapeseed left to sell. In fact we had to increase our production of rapeseed, and we hope to increase it again. It was not the Wheat Board that did the work for us. It was the Rapeseed Association and the private trade which did the effective work. The hon. member may chastise the private trade, and suggest that it is living off the farmers, but I do not know how an elevator system can be maintained without deductions collected from the producer. As a producer I realize that, and what concerns me is that the elevator system may disappear if these other three grains come under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board because then the absolute control will be in the hands of that board, which ultimately means in the hands of the government.

I have before me the report of the Canadian Grain Marketing Committee submitted to the Canadian Wheat Board, and on page 6 I read that in the year 1969-70 Canada's percentage of the world wheat carry-over was 39.4. At the same time, of the world wheat acreage in production, Canada has only 4.9 per cent—5 per cent of the total production acreage in the world and 40 per cent of the surplus. And wheat was handled by the Wheat Board, if you please! Do hon. members want a similar situation to occur with regard to rapeseed? As a producer I believe in pooling many things but at the moment I do not believe that rapeseed should be included. Now that somebody else has done the work the Wheat Board wants to move in. This is typical socialist philosophy, as I know very well having lived under it. They do not want a man to think for himself nor do they want the individual to make a profit. Personally, I do not mind anybody making a profit, though I may mind the margin of profit. I am more concerned about the man who is losing money because we know that profit is a great incentive.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The rapeseed industry is in competition with peanut oil, soya bean oil, coconut oil—you name it and we have it, but we have managed to sell our rapeseed. Now, the Wheat Board says it has the answer. It did not have the answer when we had a surplus of wheat. And what is the situation in regard to feed grain? In a newspaper report of a paper written by Dr. George R. Winter of the University of British Columbia there is the following statement:

> Canada's share of world exports has fallen from nearly 30 per cent in 1963 (and a huge 40 per cent in war years) to less than 20 per cent in the last two years. On the other hand, Dr. Winter said, "We have only 3 per cent of world feed grain exports."

Only 3 per cent of world feed grain exports, Mr. Speaker! What about barley and oats? When we had a surplus of barley, farmers were moving it across provincial borders and doing everything to save themselves because the Wheat Board was not moving it. Then, there was a corn blight in the United States, although the Wheat Board did not realize this, and suddenly there was a windfall. However, the board sold barley at reduced prices. Before the Board caught on to what had happened they had committed themselves so far ahead at these reduced prices that the minister has had to up the ante by ten cents this year in order to encourage the delivery of barley. He established it low enough at first to protect himself, but now he has to deliver and he cannot do it because the farmers will not deliver at the reduced price. The minister has had to increase the price. That is the way the Wheat Board manipulates things; they up the ante and the elevators do not spot the cars. How do you get your barley into the elevator? There is no way you can operate a system that is obviously inefficient.

Mr. Lang: The cars are coming.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

Mr. Korchinski: Drag in some more dead cats if you like.

I believe that thorough discussion of this matter can only be obtained through the holding of a plebiscite. Let the trade explain its position if these profits are being made. However, at the same time we have to explain why we want rapeseed excluded. The farmers will be the judges. If the minister has any dilemma about who should participate in the plebiscite I suggest that any producer who has interested himself in the production of rapeseed over the last 10 or 20 years should be given a vote. I do not say every permit holder should be given a vote because if a permit holder were interested in producing he had the opportunity to do so over the years. Of course, he may be interested in the future, but then I may be interested in something else in the future. If you have a plebiscite of egg producers you only give a vote to those producers, not to the men who grow the grain that feeds the chickens that lay the eggs. The man who produces the particular grain which is the subject of the plebiscite should be the judge because he knows the situation.

The argument has been made that you need a pooling system because of the necessity to make long term sales. I reject that argument, Mr. Speaker, because we have a pooling arrangement in other commodities and it has not necessarily given us long term sales. In cases where it has, we have probably found out that some of the terms written in were not to our advantage. I can remember the U.K. agreement, a pooling arrangement which cost us $600 million. Western Canada was reeling for ten years after that and it was not just the farmer who lost, it was the whole western economy. When the rest of the world was making money we lost $600 million.

This question of averaging is an interesting one. If sales in the fall are low, then the quota itself establishes the price. You can only sell so much. For example, last fall we had some sales at $2.39 a bushel and then when the quota came up in January, we had some sales at $2.68 a bushel. There was a pooling effect, therefore, but there was no quota. The farmer is, therefore, necessarily restricted by the quota. The quota itself is a mechanism that will, in effect, balance off the average. That is what the Canadian Wheat Board is all about; it is a pooling arrangement, an averaging of prices through the mechanism of the quota.

We are told the pooling effect is needed for long term sales. But what is to stop an agency of the government or the Wheat Board from going into the world to find a market? They could ask potential buyers, "How much do you need and how much will you pay?" Then, they could come back to the producer and say, "We have a potential sale for X number of bushels, will you produce it at such and such a price?" The farmer could then be the judge and enter into a contract or take his chance elsewhere. This could be done right now. If they have their supersalesmen sitting waiting for the starting bell then I say to them, go to it. We have situations at the moment where, because of their yearly requirements, some processors guarantee the farmer a certain price, then work out the final details later. As a matter of fact, sometimes the processors give the producers an advance. This method is competitive and it works. It is the old auction mart method—"How much will you offer?" Many of us have been to auction marts and some of us have been sucked in on occasion, but there is nothing wrong with that method of selling. You establish a price; the buyer looks at the block which is for sale and says, "I do not have to hurry; I can pick up the goods whenever I am ready." As I said before, we were not indebted to the super-salesmanship of the Wheat Board.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I have a little clipping from the Country Guide in my hand. It is about one year old, but the article I wish to read is still very good. It would be worth the while of my socialist friends to my left to read it, study it and analyse it to see what can be done when people work for themselves independently, inspired by one thing only, the knowledge that they have a good commodity for sale. The rapeseed growers did not get the government to sell their rapeseed. Some people say to the government, "You must sell our product for us because you have the funds." Then, when the government does not sell enough those people raise Cain. That is done often enough, and you cannot lose your argument if you blame the government for your ills. My socialist friends have a lot to learn.

I am a producer of rapeseed and I have done fairly well. The only thing that kept my farm from going bankrupt was rapeseed; rapeseed sales saved us. We were able to pay our bills because we sold our rapeseed through private trading.

Mr. Nystrom: It was not sold by the Wheat Board.

Mr. Korchinski: Wheat Board sales did nothing for us. May I read from the article in my hand:

> Rapeseed is the brightest hope of surplus plagued Prairie Farmers. Exporters say it's the one crop farmers can grow with some hope of selling in the current crop year—
>
> Credit the Rapeseed Association of Canada for much of this optimism. The association, formed 2 years ago, set out to boost Canada's rapeseed sales—
>
> The association sent out teams of skilled commodity traders and research scientists to find new markets and prove the value of rapeseed and rapeseed products. It promoted rapeseed oil to consumers in Western Canada and it introduced it to home economist and dieticians in Eastern Canadian universities and institutions.
>
> It published a cookbook in two languages and an animal nutritionist's manual in three. It organized leading plant breeders, animal nutritionists and oil chemists into research teams to develop better varieties and products.

The article goes on to mention the activities of the rapeseed association:

> Its first trade mission went to Japan in May, 1968, J. M. Bell, University of Saskatchewan animal scientist, and Dr. R. K. Downey, oilseeds researcher, went along to explain to Japanese scientists the merits of rapeseed and rapeseed meal, and to help set up feeding trials there.
>
> Feeding trials results were convincing. Early in 1970 a major Japanese feed firm began using rapeseed meal.

The article then quotes what Mr. McAnsh, an official of the association, said:

> 'It was a breakthrough,'...'If rapeseed meal were to make up only 2% of formula feeds, Japan's need for rapeseed would be doubled.'

The Japanese need for rapeseed would be doubled if rapeseed meal, as the article points out, were to make up only 2 per cent of formula feeds. That article shows how rapeseed was sold. It was not sold through government intervention. People sold it by doing something for themselves. It was not the government or the Wheat Board that made those sales. The people who grew rapeseed paid a dollar or two into the association to create a fund and used that money to find a market for rapeseed. They knew what they wanted; they knew they had a good product and they knew it was needed by the rest of the world. Because it has been such a good crop everybody wants to get in on the act. The article continues quoting Mr. McAnsh:

> Our marketing system has some built-in bottlenecks, he says. For example, he claims that restrictions set by the Canadian Wheat Board on the size of rapeseed stocks that can be held at Vancouver are a threat to export sales. The limit is 1.5 million bushels, not enough to supply the market. Two or three large ocean vessels can clean out this stock.

That shows the effects of Wheat Board control. I hasten to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not object to the Wheat Board. Actually, it was a Conservative government that established the Wheat Board.

Mr. Nystrom: That was when the hon. member was progressive.

Mr. Korchinski: I do not know if I was out of the shell then. In any event, we must be very careful to make sure that we do not mess up a market that provides ready cash for producers at this time.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that a plebiscite is a good idea. Who are those who object to the plebiscite? Since when have we said in Canada that democracy should not be at work? Since when have a few almighty people who sit on plush cushions had the right to say that?

Mr. Nystrom: Who objects?

Mr. Korchinski: Who objects? I thought I heard the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) suggesting that it was not necessary to have a plebiscite. He suggested that we have enough information to know the answer. You see, there are some super-politicians here and they know everything in exactly the same way as the Wheat Board seems to suggest that it knows—

Mr. Nystrom: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I said that if the government feels a plesbiscite is necessary, they ought to have one. I had predicted that the outcome would be overwhelmingly one way. I did not say nor did I suggest that there should not be a plebiscite.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member suggested that there was enough information from various organizations to make a plebiscite unnecessary. I thought he said that since farm organizations, wheat pools and so on have already indicated their support, there was no necessity for a plebiscite. I thought the hon. member indicated that there was sufficient evidence to prove that everyone was in favour of it. I suggest that what a few elected representatives here and there say about the matter is not sufficient proof that it is so. I suggest that a plebiscite might be an interesting change. It might be refreshing. The Wheat Board might have to explain some of its actions. I have talked to some of my constituents, and they would welcome an opportunity for the Wheat Board to explain to some of them, personally, the basis for its actions. Wheat Board news releases are not enough. They are fine art jobs. The people want to know what the board is doing. Farmers want to make deliveries but deliveries are slow because of the lack of boxcars and because elevators are congested.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five o'clock.

[Translation]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. It is my duty at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Indian Affairs—Northwest Territories—Alleged bigotry of supervisors in not ensuring jobs for native people; the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Agriculture—Farm machinery—Implementation of commission recommendation respecting manufacture in Canada—Clarification of statements on company profits; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Use of radio bands for transmission of listening device signals.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions (papers).

[English]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR COPY OF STUDY REGARDING DEVELOPMENT OF GUIDELINES TO ESTABLISH CANADIAN EQUIVALENCE OF FOREIGN DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, Ottawa, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding 'Development of guidelines by which Canadian equivalence can be established for degrees and diplomas in foreign countries.'

[Mr. Korchinski.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, this country has carried on since the end of World War II an aggressive policy of immigration. Under that policy, every year since 1945, between 100,000 and 200,000 people from almost every country in the world have entered this country. For many years we traditionally attracted immigrants from western Europe, particularly Great Britain, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Germany and, in recent years from countries such as Italy, Spain, Portugal and Yugoslavia. We are now attracting immigrants from the West Indies and some Asian countries. We have been able to attract large numbers of highly educated and skilled people such as doctors, engineers, architects and accountants. We have been able to attract people from every field.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I welcome the entry of such people into Canada. However, some embarrassing and difficult situations have arisen. I do not intend to list them today. I will give a couple of illustrations. Speaking from memory, I will cite one situation which occurred three or four years ago. The Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons operates under Ontario law. It decided to restrict doctors who came here from India. They found it almost impossible to get licences to practice in the province of Ontario, so were faced with very difficult and time consuming training.

Many doctors who came here from India have received postgraduate training in countries such as Great Britain. They have worked in Ontario hospitals for years, filling positions which would normally have been filled by Canadian trained doctors. They do their job adequately, but receive a relatively low wage. Canadian taxpayers are subsidized because of that low wage while they are working in hospitals. Without an evaluation of their medical qualifications, in India, they are told that no doctors from India will be able to practice in the province of Ontario. This is despite the evidence that is adduced which indicates that they have written their medical council examinations. It has been conclusively proven that a higher percentage of doctors from India pass the Canadian Medical Council Examinations than doctors from European countries, such as France and Germany.

At the time of the difficulties in Czechoslovakia several years ago, a number of immigrants came to Canada from that country. They had worked full time in Czechoslovakia. As far as one could tell, their work was adequate and satisfactory. Despite the fact there was a tremendous shortage of dentists, particularly in the smaller towns and communities in northern Ontario, the Ontario Dental Association made it virtually impossible for these people to be given licences to practice dentistry. There have been similar cases in other provinces with regard to nurses.

In today's Toronto Star, there is a report of the appearance by Professor Grant Reuber of the University of Western Ontario before a Senate committee yesterday. I will summarize the article briefly. Professor Reuber stated that some labour unions impose undue labour restrictions on people with skills and crafts and make it difficult for them to work in this country as skilled tradesmen.

Parliament and the people of this country ought to look very carefully at any private agency which sets restrictions on people. The interests of a particular professional group or trade union may not be the same as the interests of the community as a whole. I do not say that in any critical way. I do not say this is so, but it may be that doctors feel it will be better for them if the number of doctors entering this country could be restricted. Dentists, architects and engineers may feel the same way. I can understand it if they feel that way, but what is good for them is not necessarily good for the country. The standards of skills in a particular profession ought to be closely supervised. They should be set in a general way by the government rather than by the group concerned.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration commissioned the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada to undertake a study regarding development of guidelines by which Canadian equivalence can be established for degrees and diplomas in foreign countries. I am sure this is a very valuable document. It can be of use to the government and other people. The people of Canada have a right to know who enters Canada, their qualifications, what they want to do, what they are permitted to do by private organizations and what they are not permitted to do.

I have frequently stated that I find it strange that a government which prides itself on participatory democracy should, on every possible occasion, tell Members of Parliament, the Canadian people and the press that information ought to be confidential and withheld from the public. I cannot understand why the government, with regard to the matter under discussion and almost every question, frequently says that the study is either private, confidential or interdepartmental, that they have made a commitment to those who have made the study that it will not be released, or that the department feels that it is not in the public interest.

It would take me an hour to relate the various excuses which have been given by one department or another as to why they cannot table a study or document which is prepared at the request of the government. All the excuses add up to the same thing. The government always gives the same answer. The answer can be expressed in one simple word. Nine times out of ten the answer is "No, you cannot have this information. No, the press cannot have this information. This is information restricted for government use and we say nobody else can have it."

• (5:10 p.m.)

I say, as I have said before, that there is no reason this particular study should not be made available to Members of Parliament, the press and the public generally. I say this without much hope the government will change its mind in the present case. Nevertheless, it is the provision of information of this kind which would help the people of Canada to reach decisions in the extremely complex society in which they live. Should we make it easier for doctors coming to Canada from foreign countries to practice? Should we make it easier for dentists, architects, nurses, physio-therapists to do so? Or, leaving the professions, should we make it easier for carpenters, millwrights, machinists, electricians to come to work here? Unless we know what kind of training they have received we cannot make reasoned judgments on these questions. One of the ways we could be assisted to do so would be by the government making public documents of the kind referred to in the motion before the House.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Once again the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is berating the government and, I would say, overstating his case. He is trying to give the impression that this is a secretive government, one which is not prepared to give out information, answer questions or accede to notices of motions for papers which are placed on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker, only today the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome) rose to indicate that certain notices of motion were acceptable to the government. Many of these notices of motion are, in fact, accepted. Only two or three days ago the same hon. member announced that of some 1,500 questions on the order paper this session alone, 85 per cent had been answered and action was being taken to see what could be done to answer the remaining 15 per cent. Hardly the mark of a secretive government. Then again, one of the highlights of the parliamentary day, both for members of the opposition and for the press gallery, is the question period. Day after day it has run beyond the time allotted for it in order that the government might answer the questions which are put forward. Hardly what one might expect from a secretive government.

There comes a time when a government has a good reason for not producing a particular document. The hon. member will, of course, approach all the reasons which will be given from this side of the House with suspicion and say they don't amount to a hill of beans, the government is really trying to hide under a veil of secrecy. This is simply not the case. There are occasions when the government, requesting certain information or studies, will say to the individuals concerned. We undertake that the information you give us, the opinions you express, the material you bring to our attention, will not be made a matter of public disclosure. This is done in order that a report may be a better one, a more honest one. I suppose that in many cases it would, quite frankly, be of little consequence whether they were published or not. But the undertaking with respect to confidentiality which has been given is still the reason that, in many cases, some of these papers cannot be made public.

There are areas in which an individual reporting to the government might express an opinion which could be considered as "way out" or reflecting 21st century thinking. Some of us might regard it as being a little weird. The government has then to decide in its own mind whether such a report should be released without it being accompanied by the release of five or six others taking, possibly, a different position, in order that the public might reach a conclusion as to whether or not it was too revolutionary in its thinking.

As to the particular motion before us, I had something to do with the Czechoslovak refugees who came over here. I think it is unfair of the hon. member to seize upon this group to highlight his case. We were faced with an emergency situation and Canada came to the fore, as we did on another occasion when dealing with people suffering from tuberculosis. The government provided a sanctuary to those who were seeking it, without making any commitments. Accordingly, men of various professions came to this country hoping they would be able to practice in their own fields—architecture, medicine, dentistry and so on. The hon. member suggested that the doctors, lawyers, dentists and engineers here were trying to restrict the numbers of qualified people entering their field in order that competition might not become too keen. I do not believe that is true of professional groups in Canada. Just the opposite, in fact. Perhaps I should speak of the profession I know best. Lawyers would welcome more graduates provided they had the capability and could practice law to the benefit of their clients. But I am unalterably opposed to the kind of degrees which can be obtained by studying at night or through correspondence courses. Anyone worth his salt in a profession should be opposed to practices which might lead to the public being defrauded because those acting on their behalf did not possess the necessary qualifications.

I am satisfied that one of the most important responsibilities of an immigration officer abroad is to exercise judgment about the qualification of a prospective immigrant to pursue the occupation he wishes to follow in Canada. To make such a judgment, an immigration officer needs to be familiar with the qualifications which govern a particular occupation in Canada. I would be very suspicious if any immigration officer were to say to an individual: Yes, we need you in Canada and you'll have no difficulty about being recognized in the particular profession you have chosen to practice. I do not think Canada employs immigration officers of that sort, or, if we do, I do not believe senior officials would allow them to keep their jobs for very long. It does not necessarily follow that workers in one part of the world perform the same tasks as their counterparts in different sociological and technological conditions.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Even in Canada we have this brought home to us daily. In Quebec the Civil Code governs civil law suits. The rest of the provinces use common law. To suggest that an individual who has studied the civil code in France, for example, could come to British Columbia and practise law would be fallacious. It just is not done, and I cannot see any immigration officer suggesting that it can be done because these gentlemen are knowledgeable in the work they perform.

I want to deal primarily with one area to show the kind of problem that would be faced by an immigration officer, and why the department commissioned a study of this particular matter. Although it is somewhat foreign to my own field, I want to talk about architects. I choose architecture because I had some experience studying the particular requirements in the field of architecture during a course of a study that I undertook at one time.

Architects in Canada, as we know, plan and design private residences, office buildings, theatres, public buildings, factories and other structures, and organize the services necessary for their construction. They consult with a client to determine size and space requirements, and provide information regarding costs, design, materials and equipment. Surely, this is a textbook definition of that which an architect does in this country. In addition to this, an immigration officer may point out to a prospective immigrant who is an architect from another part of the world that Canadian architects also prepare sketches of proposed projects for clients; they provide specifications, scale or full-size drawings, and other contract documents for the use of building contractors and craftsmen. Canadian architects may specialize in a particular type of structure or project and confer with other consultants in order to develop feasibility studies, make financial analyses and arrangements, and in regard to site selection and land assembly.

As I say, this seems to be a textbook definition of that which an architect in Canada does. But architects have other problems to meet, such as those caused by the changing seasons that we have in Canada. How could an architect from, say, the state of California, knowing nothing about winter conditions in Canada, claim he is in a position to plan the type of buildings that we need? I think all too often people fancy themselves as architects. They think about building homes, having looked into U.S. magazines and seen pictures of sunrooms, and think it is a good idea to build one, all too often only to find that they are no good in the cold weather with the 174 inches of snow that we have in Ottawa.

An immigration officer would surely have to tell a prospective immigrant that Canadian architects usually graduate with a degree or diploma in architecture that is acceptable to a legally constituted provincial association of architects in one or other of the provinces of Canada; that after graduation they gain experience in architectural practice under the supervision of a qualified architect for a period of time prescribed by an architects' association. An architect from another country who had graduated from a school but who did not have this kind of on the job training, similar to internship in medicine or working with a principal in the practice of law, obviously should not be allowed to participate in that form of activity in Canada.

What I have tried to point out is that persons seeking employment in Canada as architects must meet certain occupational qualifications. Canadian immigration counselling officers must supply information concerning the procedures connected with these formalities. If they are to do their job and do it well they must be as familiar with the requirements for practising architecture in this country as the architects themselves. For this reason, I am sure that the study the department has commissioned will prove beneficial to those who wish to come to Canada. It will give immigrants the ground rules and the basis upon which they can be permitted to practise architecture, or law, or to become licensed as an electrician for that matter.

In conclusion, under existing legislation there are many occupations in Canada that require compulsory licensing. By licensing, I mean the compulsory demonstration of the possession of a certain education, training, experience and other qualifications to the satisfaction of a provincial or municipal authority, or a professional association, before permission to practise a particular occupation is granted. The number of occupations subject to licensing varies from province to province. I understand that in Ontario there are something like 42 occupations on the compulsory list, ranging in alphabetical order from architects to welders. In addition, comprehensive information on the conditions that relate to the employment aspirations of a prospective immigrant, as well as a knowledge of suitable alternatives, is an essential prerequisite to realistic counselling, particularly by immigration officers.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, this is developing into something of a non-debate. It seems to me that the question we have to ask ourselves is why the government does not produce the report in question. It is quite obvious that the report itself is of extreme importance to many Canadians, be they members of professions, professional immigrants trying to become licensed in Canada, or the general public. I think that if this report has anything to tell us it should be released. On the other hand, if there is good reason for not releasing it, then we should be told. However, up to this point I have heard no such reason put forward.

I thought that perhaps the hon. member who spoke on the government side of the House would put forward some reason why the government does not intend to let the House see this report. It could be that the parliamentary secretary is going to use the last few minutes of the hour to explain why the government will not produce the report, and I am willing to wait and see what he is going to say. But if we receive no good reason for withholding this report, then I am going to vote for its production. The government could very easily tell the House that this report is not complete. They could tell us that the study is not complete, or that it would be premature to release the report at this time. Or the government could tell us that the report involves provincial rights to the extent that its release would only create dissension. If reasons such as these were given, then I might be inclined to agree that they had some substance.

I cannot agree with one statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who said he thought that the government should set professional standards. As a professional person I cannot think of anything worse than to have someone within the government regulate the professions. I think the professions have to regulate themselves, and I think they are most capable of doing so, regardless of all talk to the contrary. Perhaps some of the professions—and law is no exception—are inclined to get behind the times, to become sterile and stereotyped. I am sure this is the case in the legal profession as much as any other. But public opinion usually brings the members of such professions up to date and forces them to give the public the type of service that the public expects from them. So personally I should not like to see any change considered. We are wasting our breath, however, in talking about it here, because these are provincial matters. We have nothing to say about them in this House. The professions are licensed by the provinces. That situation is likely to continue.

• (5:30 p.m.)

But there is another problem which does concern the federal government. I refer to immigration. I believe it has been obvious for a number of years—I can think back at least ten years in this regard—that people have been brought into Canada who belonged to professions in their own countries and believed that after a short period of retraining and brushing up they would be working here in their professions. They believed this would occur in a matter of months, or a year at the most. I know personally of people who came to Canada with the belief that they would be accepted here after they learned to apply their knowledge to local conditions. After arriving here they found this was not the situation at all.

These people would move from province to province in the hope that in one province they would be accepted because there might be a shortage, or because the standards might be lower or might be altered. They had to move around this country to find where they might be accepted and where their qualifications would be considered adequate. So we have a federal agency bringing people into the country to carry on business in their professions, which are licensed by the provinces. There would seem to have been a complete absence of communication between the professions and the federal department of immigration. This situation has developed time after time in connection with doctors, dentists and other professional people who have come to Canada.

I admit that many licensed professionals who come to this country should not be practising their professions in Canada, for three or four reasons. One obvious reason is that the professional standards in the country from which such a person comes may be much lower than ours. In many countries a profession rates much lower than it does in Canada, and therefore the educational standards are lower. In many countries the need for professional persons is very great and urgent. Therefore, these people are admitted to practice in the professions, particularly in medicine, with less training than we consider necessary in this country.

Another problem is language. Many people who come to Canada are unable to carry on their business or profession in the language of the region in which they establish. Nothing is worse than misunderstanding between a professional person and his client. Also, local conditions in many cases are very different. I know, for example, that a great many professional planners are being brought into this country. These people hold degrees in land planning, municipal planning and urban planning. They are brought to Canada to assist us in planning and development although they come from countries where conditions are very different from ours and therefore they do not have the faintest idea about how to approach planning in this country. We see this situation in many areas. Even in the province of Ontario there are examples of it. So there are perfectly good reasons for the professions setting standards which they will not lower.

Having said this, I believe it is high time guidelines were established for the immigration department and professional associations. I think the development of guidelines by which Canadian equivalence can be established for degrees and diplomas in foreign countries is very much needed. I hope the study which has been made is of assistance to somebody; but, Mr. Speaker, it will not be of assistance to the general public if it is retained within one department of government and is not released. I think it will be a loss if the report is not released, especially if it can be of value in developing the lines of communication between the professions and the department of immigration. I believe it would be an excellent move if this report were made public.

As I said at the beginning, I would be willing to accept valid and convincing reasons for the report not being made public. There may be some. I recognize the difficulty, particularly the jurisdictional difficulties. However, I have not yet heard of any difficulties which convince me that the report should not be made public, and with a great deal of interest I am waiting for a better explanation than we have had so far.

Mr. Charles Turner (London East): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in speaking in this debate, not so much because of the content of notice of motion No. 30 but because my riding has benefited immensely from the knowledge and hard work of many new Canadians and because our great University of Western Ontario in London has been chosen by people of many lands as the university in which to increase their knowledge and obtain a higher education. The degrees and diplomas of Western are recognized across the world, and the citizens of London are proud to have the graduates of Western speak as ambassadors of our great city and our great nation. Many students return to their homeland to pass on to their citizens the knowledge they have worked hard to obtain. Many remain with us and become very successful in their chosen field of work. We welcome them all as citizens and students.

Canada's resources of highly qualified manpower are constantly increased or diminished by reason of a number of different flows into and out of the Canadian labour force. The magnitude and direction of these flows are affected by such diverse elements as the state of the labour market at home and abroad, immigration laws and investment in higher education. Some flows, such as immigration, are more readily adjustable in the short term, while others such as the output of the educational system can be altered only gradually.

Graduates from the domestic educational system and the inflow of professional and scientific personnel from other countries are our major sources of new manpower. General attrition—for example death, retirement and emigration of employed members of the labour force—causes the prime loss in the system. The importance of each flow has varied over the years as well as between occupations. Graduates from the domestic educational system provide the largest source of highly qualified manpower. While in some professions such as medicine the number of immigrants at times has exceeded the number of Canadian graduates, on the whole total graduations have exceeded the immigration of professionals into the country.

Immigration, as a proportion of graduations, has varied considerably over the years. In 1954, immigration of professionals was equal to 60 per cent of the number of people graduating from Canadian universities. Net recorded immigration of professionals, for example—immigration less emigration to the United States—was 35 per cent of domestic graduations. In 1961, the respective proportions were 29 per cent and 6 per cent. However, since 1961 immigration has increased considerably. In 1966, immigration was 53 per cent of graduations and net immigration was 44 per cent.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The growth of higher education has accelerated through the 1960s. University and college undergraduate degree courses have expanded at a remarkable rate as enrolments tripled from 73,000 in 1957 to 213,000 in the academic year 1966-67 and 237,000 in 1967-68. This expansion of enrolments foreshadowed a rapid increase in graduate output. For example, in 1950 18,000 students graduated from Canadian universities with a bachelor or first professional degree. In 1960, there were 21,000 graduates and in 1967 almost 44,000. There has been an even greater growth in post-graduate degrees. Masters degrees in 1967 were 268 per cent greater than they were in 1950, doctorate degrees exceeded those in 1950 by 249 per cent and BA degrees increased by 142 per cent.

The rapid rise of enrolments in higher education followed a wave of expansion in Canada's secondary schools, where enrolments more than tripled from the beginning of the 1950s to the 1965-66 school year. Part of this expansion can be explained by increases in the size of the relevant age group and part by rising participation rates. These two factors have been of about equal importance in the growth of secondary enrolments during the 1950s and 1960s, and it appears that they will be equally important during the next ten years.

At the university level, the largest portion of the increase is accounted for by increased participation rather than population increases in the relevant age group. Between 1956 and 1966, full time enrolment rose by 180 per cent, while the 18 to 24 age group only expanded by 30 per cent. This implies that less than one-fifth of the rise in the number of students can be explained by population growth, while over four-fifths was due to greater participation.

A marked characteristic of this expansion of higher education has been the difference in the growth rate of particular disciplines. The distribution of students a decade ago was quite different from today. Expansion in the fields of pure science and education has been striking. Enrolments in these fields increased by about 450 per cent between 1957 and 1967. Arts enrolments have also enlarged greatly, from 26,000 in 1957 to 94,000 in 1967.

Lack of growth, however, is apparent in the fields of medicine and engineering. Only 300 more students were enrolled in medicine in 1967 compared with 1957, an increase of 7 per cent. In engineering in 1967, enrolments were 18,498 compared with 13,050 ten years previously, an increase of 42 per cent. A similar trend in growth is found in the number of students receiving bachelor and first professional degrees.

A different pattern of growth emerges from an analysis of post-graduate degrees. The largest percentage increase from 1957 to 1967 in both masters and doctorate graduations has been in engineering. The former was 403 per cent greater in 1967 than in 1957, and the latter was 741 per cent greater. The proportion of engineering graduates to total graduates at the doctorate level increased from 4 per cent in 1957 to 13 per cent in 1967. This contrasts sharply with the very small growth in first degrees of engineering students.

The social sciences had the largest share of masters degrees, while the biological and physical sciences accounted for almost 60 per cent of all doctorates awarded in 1967. The smallest growth was exhibited in the biological sciences, where graduations in 1967 were not quite 100 per cent greater than those in 1957 compared with an average 170 per cent increase for all fields.

The new supply of highly qualified manpower will tend to follow this growth pattern. However, the number of graduates by no means represents the actual domestic inflow into the stock. There are a number of leakages from the system which will tend to decrease the number of new entrants. There are a large number of foreign students who after receiving education in Canada return to their home country to seek employment.

In 1967 there were 12,900 foreign students enrolled in Canadian universities. This represents approximately 5.6 per cent of total enrolments. While we know that many of these students emigrate after graduation, at present we have no data on just how large this group might be. Similarly, many Canadian students choose, rather than enter the Canadian labour force after graduation, to seek employment outside Canada. Others prefer to continue their studies either within the domestic system or outside the country.

Eventually some of these migrants return and add to the flow into the system. Again we have no estimates of the magnitude of these inflows. We do, however, have some idea of the stock from which this flow might come. In 1967 there were some 12,000 Canadians studying in universities in the United States, and 600 in Britain. Growth of enrolments at universities in the United States has not matched the rapid increase in enrolments at Canadian universities. In the former, enrolments in 1966-67 were 166 per cent greater than in 1952-53. In Canada, total enrolments were 266 per cent greater over the same period.

Interestingly enough, however, the pattern of growth by field of study was similar at home and abroad. For Canadians in the United States, as in Canada, the proportion studying engineering and health professions particularly medicine, declined. Growth in the social sciences was the most striking. Enrolments in the social sciences in 1968 were five times greater than in 1964. This rapid expansion most probably reflects a growing interest in the relatively new discipline of social science.

The flow of foreign, professional manpower into Canada has grown rapidly in the last decade at approximately the same rate as the domestic educational system. In 1950, 4.2 per cent of all immigrants were professional. By 1960, this percentage increased to 14 per cent, and in 1967 it was 26 per cent. Over this 17-year period the absolute number of professional immigrants increased from 1,686 in 1950 to 30,853 in 1967.

While there has been an ever-increasing inflow of highly qualified manpower both from the educational system and from abroad, the outflow of this type of manpower, at least to the United States, has been remarkably constant. The number of professionals emigrating to the U.S. has varied little in the last decade. In 1956, 5,277 professionals left Canada to take employment in the United States. In 1961, 5,285 left and in 1967 the number was 6,386. The net loss to Canada is probably less than the figures show because residents returning to Canada from the United States are not recorded.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the request made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) as to why this report cannot be tabled, may I say it is due to the fact that the study was provided by officials of a foreign government on a confidential basis. It was obtained after the commitment was given by our officials that at least part of the contents of the study would not be made public. Having given this commitment, it is obvious that it is not appropriate for the department or for the government to make public the contents of this document. It is perhaps regrettable but it is a fact. It is the respecting of an undertaking made in good faith. I think that any member of the House who had made such an undertaking would respect it.

• (5:50 p.m.)

It was a document prepared for the very good reasons that were put forward by the hon. member for Parry-Sound-Muskoka. It was designed to develop guidelines by which Canadian equivalence might be established for degrees and diplomas gained in other countries. It was an attempt to evaluate degrees obtained in certain foreign countries in terms of Canadian degrees in the same disciplines, and it covered arts and sciences and all licensed professions.

Evaluating the preparation which an applicant's education gives him for employment in a specialized field in Canada does pose a problem, and this evaluation plays a central role in the selection of immigrants. In the licensed professions, immigration officials can rely on the licensing bodies set up by those professions and so it is standard practice to advise applicants in licensed professions to write to professional licensing bodies in Canada so as to obtain their qualification equivalency. When it comes to non-licensed professions there is no parallel process for applicants who claim specialized competence. This is particularly true of foreign graduates in the humanities and social sciences, and a relatively large proportion of potential immigrants fall within this category.

The logical course of action has been to assume that the holder of a degree or of several degrees from a foreign university could be considered a specialist in the field of study in which he has concentrated. But the experience of some employers and of Canadian graduate schools has shown that this assumption is not always justified.

It may occur that immigrants on arrival in Canada encounter difficulties in getting their degrees or diplomas accepted. The non-acceptance of the degree then becomes a major obstacle to finding employment and results in understandable frustration. This may happen in spite of the fact that immigration officers abroad did tell the potential immigrant about the problem of recognition of foreign qualifications in Canada. The officers attempt to give applicants among the professions as realistic a picture as possible so as to dispel any misconception which an applicant might have about the opportunity of using his degree immediately after arrival here. The applicant's attention is drawn to the fact that he might be forced to take employment in other fields, at least initially, before working in his own profession. Language requirements and lack of familiarity with Canadian conditions also may play the role of delaying factor in this respect.

The department is always interested to find out what level of competence foreign degrees in arts and sciences provide and in establishing how these degrees compare with Canadian degrees. Research in this field is faced with the task of establishing equivalence between foreign degrees and various Canadian degrees. The problem of equivalence in non-licensed professions confronts the department with great difficulties because very little has been done in the past in this area of research. There does not exist any fund of knowledge as in the case of professional associations with regard to licensed professions.

The difficulty of establishing equivalence between foreign and Canadian degrees is illustrated by the fact that even in Canada two degrees received in the same field are not equivalent if they are granted by different universities. In the strict sense of the word, equivalence means that the courses of study and the contents of the courses are identical. As we know, programs of study vary across the country. However, a Canadian university will usually admit the holder of a degree other than its own to graduate work, and such admission can be taken as a judgment that the degree is equivalent to its own. One way, then, of determining what foreign degrees are equivalent to Canadian degrees is to find out whether Canadian universities usually accept those who hold them into graduate degree programs.

[Mr. Caccia.]

There are at least three levels of graduate studies at which a student can be admitted, each representing a different equivalence. If a student is admitted to a two year master's degree program he may be said to have the equivalent of an ordinary bachelor's degree. Admission to a one-year master's program or to a three-year PhD program requires the equivalent of an honours bachelor degree, and acceptance into a two-year PhD program requires the equivalent of a Canadian university master's degree. These three levels signify grades of specialization.

The holder of an ordinary bachelor's degree is considered to have no real specialist competence. He is admitted to the lowest level of apprenticeship. The honours bachelor's graduate is only an apprentice. In this sense he is merely further along in his apprenticeship. It is only the holder of the master's degree who is recognized as meeting the minimum requirements for a specialist. In Canada, such a degree usually demands 18 years of study and a heavy concentration of courses in his subject. In addition, the preparation of a thesis has familiarized the post-graduate with the availability of data sources and the application of methods and techniques of research.

It must be stressed that admission to a Canadian master's degree program does not mean that a person is a specialist. It signifies only that his background fits him to train to become one. Even in the admission to a two-year PhD program the university may be less rigorous in its definition of a specialist than an employer would be. In this connection it must be considered that a university is a training institution and therefore it can undertake to fill gaps in a student's knowledge.

It is, for example, not uncommon for a foreign PhD student to take one or more undergraduate courses in an area where training was deficient in his home university. An employer who hires a specialist does not ordinarily expect him to undertake training in skills usually learned at the undergraduate level. In the absence of other criteria, university graduate admission standards can provide a minimum definition of a specialist in arts and science areas—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I have been very good up to now this week, but due to the fact that one of my favourite poets, Ogden Nash, died this week—a man who was very popular, very human—I thought these lines that were published some years ago could have been written last Sunday:

Gently my eyelids close;
I'd rather be good than clever;
And I'd rather have my facts all wrong
Than have no facts whatever.
I didn't go to church today,
I trust the Lord to understand.
The surf was swirling blue and white,
The children swirling on the sand.
He knows, He knows how brief my stay,
How brief this spell of summer weather,
He knows when I am said and done
We'll have plenty of time together.

Isn't that appropriate?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DETERMINATION OF PAYMENT FOR WHEAT—EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO FLAXSEED, RYE AND RAPESEED

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-238, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned at five o'clock I was indicating that I was not happy to have rapeseed, in particular, included within the provisions of this bill under which certain grains will come under the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board. I do not understand how the minister could say that he had no intention of making the relevant clause of the bill operative unless certain conditions are met.

He tells us that there will be a plebiscite or a registration of intention in one form or another. He did not tell us what method he would select. However, the fact that Parliament will have passed the bill will give the government the right at any time, even in the dead of night as was the case with the War Measures Act, to implement its provisions without prior explanation. We shall merely see a press release the next day saying, "On the basis of our information, we had to do it this say." The government might claim that it had to act that way because of possible fluctuations in the stock market.

In any event, the producers will have no say in the implementation of these provisions. It is all very well for the minister to assure us that they will not be implemented unless certain conditions are met. I point out that he may not occupy his position one year from now, six months from now or even two days from now; perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will shift him to another position. So his assurances in that regard really are not very weighty.

I cannot understand the minister. The committee headed by Mr. Boden that was studying this question suggested that rapeseed should not at this time come under the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board, yet the minister went against that recommendation. The Rapeseed Growers' Association does not want rapeseed to come under the authority of the Wheat Board operations. An article which appeared recently in the Regina Leader-Post reads in part:

> Rapeseed producers' organizations in the prairie provinces will fight to have rapeseed excluded from the marketing jurisdiction of the Caandian Wheat Board, Ken Naber, president of the Saskatchewan Rapeseed Growers' Association, said Monday.
>
> Mr. Naber said the groups have requested a hearing before the Commons committee on agriculture to plead their case.

I know that Mr. Forrest Hetland, former head of the Rapeseed Growers' Association, felt that rapeseed should not be included under the Wheat Board's authority and that the present marketing system was satisfactory. If the rapeseed producers do not want rapeseed to come under the authority of the Wheat Board, surely we should not do it merely because the NDP want us to. I do not accept the NDP challenge and I throw it back in their teeth. They want this to be done merely because of something some of their members said 20 years ago. That is no reason for dragging rapeseed growers into this bill. They should not be manipulated by a group of people who do not understand rapeseed growers' interests. Surely the producers know what is best for them. I can visualize headlines in western newspapers pointing out what some Members of Parliament are advocating.

We know what has happened with our wheat sales; we know how much wheat has been sold. It has been piled up all over the Prairies. We know what has happened to our barley and oats. We have almost gone out of production in some cases. We grow just enough to satisfy our own requirements. Some farmers do not grow enough to fill a bowl of porridge. Why must the rapeseed growers be dragged into this situation? For years the industry fought toward its goal and it is now reaping the reward—but not in this bill.

I want to pay tribute to a former member of this House, a colleague of mine. He is now a constituent of the minister's. Reynold Rapp fought long and hard on behalf of the rapeseed people. He was instrumental in having rapeseed included in the definition of "grain", thus making it possible for it to be carried under the Crowsnest Pass arrangements. The work he did encouraged the production of this grain. Why drag it in now and put it under the authority of the Wheat Board, Mr. Speaker? As has been indicated, pooling arrangements and the quota system mean that there is an averaging in this regard. What will we gain by including rapeseed? Salesmen have enough trouble selling wheat. How on earth will they sell rapeseed? Will they switch from wheat to rapeseed? Will the board employ new men?

Let me point out that the rapeseed growers know their business and have contacts in the markets. In a newspaper clipping, which I do not have before me, Charles Gibbings said that putting all these commodities into one group, to be administered by the Wheat Board and having them serviced by one salesman, just will not work in future. The people who sell rapeseed must be interested in selling. Of course, if an unconscionable amount of profit were being made, perhaps there would be room for concern. But that is not the case. We have been successful in selling that commodity. The minister knows that the industry is trying to empty the elevators. That, as he said, is to our advantage.

There is another reason why I do not want rapeseed included within the ambit of the Wheat Board's authority. We do not know what will be the effect of the government's grain receipts stabilization policy, and if this bill is passed in its present form it will mean that the minister could implement certain of its provisions within six months, say, and include rapeseed under the authority of the Wheat Board. When the minister stabilizes grain receipts, what yardstick will he use? How will he determine how much is to be received and by whom? Although the minister has suggested that rapeseed will not be included, I am not reassured. I should like to know how that stabilization policy will affect the western elevator system.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) suggested that the elevator companies are making the money. He said that the elevator companies are the big birds we should watch for. Frankly, I am wondering how the elevator system will survive in the next year or two if we implement this stabilization program. What effect will removal of elevators have on the small communities? I can just imagine the sort of struggle that will go on between communities which want an elevator near them.

I have lived in small communities and I know how badly some of them want a little hospital or municipal office in their midst. They want something that will attract people. If you remove their elevators—and this is bound to happen—what will the farmers of the area say? If the elevators go, it will mean that costs will go up. I should like to see just how this master plan will work, the master plan that says we must include rapeseed, flax and rye under the authority of the Wheat Board. Is the Wheat Board to control everything we do? Theoretically, that may be the effect of this bill.

I am saying that this bill is an unholy mess and I am afraid of the effect it will have on our communities and on our producers. I know some people will say, "We were stymied with wheat, so why should we be stymied with rapeseed?" They will say, "We were in trouble when we tried to move wheat from province to province, let alone out of the country." I ask the minister why he must enter this area right now.

None of the growers support this bill. The Rapeseed Growers' Association do not want it. The committee which studied this matter does not want it. The only group that wants it is the group to my left—to satisfy their dream of Utopia, where the state has everything.

• (8:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: You are kidding.

Mr. Korchinski: I am not kidding. I either believe you or I do not. Either you tell me what you believe or there is no point saying it. I want to know how the minister will go about this. If the minister would hold a plebiscite and if the plebiscite indicated that the producers wanted in, there would be only a five-minute debate in the House. Who would oppose it if the plebiscite so indicated it was the producers' wish? If a plebiscite is held, every permit book holder should not be asked his opinion. As I pointed out, the egg producer is not the one who produces the grain that feeds the chickens that lay the eggs.

If the minister is serious with regard to flaxseed and rye, I am not greatly concerned. However, I am vitally concerned about the rapeseed industry. That industry has not been developed. It has a long way to go. As a matter of fact, western Canada is just tapping the eastern market. We want to be able to compete with the Soviet industry, the peanut oil industry, the coconut oil industry, and so on. Are we going to be successful, or are we going to be stymied by bureaucratic inertia? These people have a direct interest—their survival. This crop has been their only income for a long time. It is the only income for many people who produce rapeseed; that is why they went into production. Although they did not know anything about rapeseed, they saw that their neighbours were able to sell it. They sat and wondered what to do next. They talked to their bankers. While interest rates were going up and up, the rapeseed producers had a few dollars at their disposal.

I plead with the minister to withdraw this clause. If a plebiscite were held and its results were in the affirmative, I assure the minister that this bill would be passed in five minutes. Bills have been passed in short order, without contention. It does not require a lengthy procedure. We would have to go through the procedure just as we do on first reading of a bill.

Either the minister's words mean something or they do not. His master plan must mean something. There will be a link missing from it if this clause is not included; perhaps that is the reason he will not withdraw it. If the minister has a plan, I as a producer would like to know the details of the plan. I would like to be able to tell something to the producers in my area. I would like to know how many elevators will be left. I would like to know how we are to survive under this master plan that the master-mind has produced.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on Bill C-238, particularly as it relates to the inclusion of flax, rye and rapeseed. The other clauses of the bill are basically consequential and I find no fault with them.

In his original statement the minister again caused a great deal of confusion in the minds of many producers and saw fit to bring out press releases in order to try and alleviate some of the fears. Frankly, I do not know where the minister or the government stand on this measure. I do not know whether they favour the inclusion of flax, rye and rapeseed or whether they are leaving it to the whim of those who assert the most pressure. If the government is not firmly established in its position, I ask the minister why he has bothered bringing in the legislation at this time.

In his press release the minister stated:

> —these sections may never be used and certainly will not be used except after full support of the move is received from producers based on a thorough discussion of the issues.

Like the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), I ask how these consultations will be carried out. Will there be discussions? Will it be done in the form of a plebiscite? Will it be based on the reactions and representations of the various farm producer groups, or by way of plebiscite? If consultations are held, I hope they are better than those which were carried out before Operation Lift was instituted.

At page 6625 of Hansard for May 6, 1970, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart) asked what producer groups were consulted before Operation Lift was established. The minister replied that the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Manitoba pool elevators, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union had been consulted. The minister further stated:

> All consulted expressed support for the final version of Operation Lift as a necessary inventory reduction program to place the western grains industry on a solid footing for long-term industry policies and programs.

When talking to these producer groups they told me that they were presented with a fait accompli. This was the program, and there were to be no changes. It was "take it or leave it." If this is going to be the case with these pieces of enabling legislation, there is certainly cause for fear and apprehension among many producers who feel very strongly about the matter, particularly the question of rapeseed coming under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I ask the minister! If in the opinion of the government it is desirable to include these grains under the Wheat Board Act, will Parliament have an opportunity to deal with the matter? Will we have an opportunity to debate the proposal, or will it be invoked or introduced, as the hon. member for Mackenzie suggested, in the same manner as the War Measures Act?

The majority of producers are very concerned about the prospect of these grains being included. In fact, the prospect of inclusion has already had a detrimental effect on markets. The minister knows very well that rapeseed has provided one of the major cash crops in western Canada. Its growth has been phenomenal and its marketing program has been fantastic. In the past three years there has been a doubling of acreage and a doubling of production in each consecutive year. There have been no marketing problems. This is one of the few commodities produced in the western agricultural community that can readily be turned into cash. I might mention that cattle is another. These two commodities, rapeseed and cattle, have in large part been responsible for sustenance of the western farm economy during this time in which very serious problems confront the industry.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The measure before us gives the Governor in Council the option of bringing these grains, at will, under the government marketing agency. Of course, we know very well what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) would like to do with the cattle industry. He has not seen fit to bring in the appropriate amendment to exclude cattle. The desire far being included has spread to the hog industry as well. We know very well that these two commodities have been successful in the free market place and there has been no government interference. I believe the producers do not want government interference with these two commodities.

Certainly there have been problems in marketing, but not nearly the problems encountered with the marketing of grain under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. In many cases the decisions which are being made with respect to sales policy are not always those which relate to the economic considerations of the day. Rather, many of them are political decisions. We have enjoyed a fairly consistent market and the producers want no part of seeing rapeseed brought under the control of the Wheat Board.

This leads me to examine the minister's observations about the success of the efforts made to sell wheat. Introducing the bill, the hon. gentleman talked about the vigorous sales program in which the Wheat Board has been engaged, the resurgence of sales and the fantastic numbers of sales which have been made. It is clear to me that results have not been lived up to the optimistic forecasts which were contained, for example, in Outlook 1971 which indicated we would be marketing some 500 million bushels of wheat.

If we look at the mini-Outlook which is dated March, 1971, we find it stated that the continuation of the government's more competitive export policy in 1970-71 should result in sales of the order of 350 million to 400 million bushels. Taking the higher figure of 400 millions bushels, we note there has been a drop in the projected sales target of 100 million bushels. I need only remind you, Mr. Speaker, that last year we marketed 347 million bushels, and before that 306 million bushels. So when you look at Canada's surplus in relation to the amount of publicity that is being created, you find that the increased sales are not really significant and, of course, the increase which has taken place has not resulted in any great financial benefit to the farmers.

The opposition has constantly reminded the minister that all is not well with our marketing performance. It is interesting to note that it is not only the opposition which has taken this view. It is widely circulated in the western farm papers that the great wheat selling job we were led to believe is going on, has not in fact taken place. I refer to page 6 of the Free Press Weekly dated May 15. It is not normally my habit to quote at length, but in this case I feel justified in doing so. This article, entitled "A big selling job ahead", is of particular interest because the minister has accused opposition members of belittling a gigantic selling effort. I appreciate the fact that the minister has tried. He has done a great deal on his personal initiative. What I object to is some of the false optimism which has been created by misleading propaganda statements. The article begins by asking a question:

> Have the predictions of record exports of grain including wheat been substantiated by the first nine months of this crop year? The answer must be, no.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question? Can the hon. member show me where the minister, or anyone else on behalf of the government, predicted anything beyond a range of between 400 million bushels and some higher figure of bushels of wheat exported in the forecast 700 million bushels of export of grain? I do not take responsibility for what the press may have said. I am talking about what the minister or the government may have said.

Mr. Mazankowski: This was circulated very widely.

Mr. Lang: Give me the source.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sure the Free Press Weekly has a certain amount of credibility, perhaps more than the minister.

Mr. Lang: Give me the source. Where did I say it?

Mr. Mazankowski: I referred to Outlook 1971. There was the prediction that something in the order of 500 million bushels would be exported.

Mr. Lang: Wrong again.

Mr. Mazankowski: Then there is the Canadian Agriculture Outlook which is an official publication of the Department of Agriculture. I intend to deal with the question of statistics in a few moments, because it is covered in this article. The correspondent continues:

Exports of wheat and wheat in the form of flour from August 1, 1970, to April 14, 1971, amounted to 261 million bushels. The average weekly rate was about 7.4 million bushels. Based on this average, total exports to the end of the crop year would amount to about 385 million bushels. The minister was reported to have predicted exports of 700 million bushels of all grains of which he estimated 500 million bushels would be wheat.

The all-grain export figure to April 14 was estimated at 423 million bushels or an average of 12 million bushels per week. With 16 weeks to go in the crop year and based on the average to date, all grain exports would total around 600 million bushels of which approximately 400 million bushels would be wheat.

The article goes on to say that the estimated carry-over at the end of the crop year 1970-71 is 750 million bushels, a figure which has been exceeded only twice in the last ten years.

• (8:40 p.m.)

With an estimated 750 million bushels carry-over, it will be readily seen that Canada still has a big wheat selling job in its hands.

Once more Mr. Lang has been issuing figures which are not borne out by the facts. This policy may have a short-run political appeal, but even this is doubtful. Any figures issued by the Canadian government should carry cold, calculated considerations on what can be done, instead of optimistic guesses which do not pay off either with the western producer or Canada's buyers abroad. There is always the danger that a credibility gap will be established which may take years to live down.

It goes on to state—I believe this point has been made by hon. members who have spoken previously—that the board is not an autonomous organization any more. It continues:

—the board is now not a board controlled by the producers but, due to the financial position, must of necessity be under strict direction of a minister of the Crown.

As evidence of this, nearly all pronouncements on policy come from the government and not the board. It is essential that the board should operate in such a way that its autonmy should be restored and that the organized producers should know that the board is operating in a surplus position again. This is the intent and the meaning of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, which gave the board this autonomous position, so necessary for an efficient operation.

When we criticize the performance of the Canadian Wheat Board, the majority of us do not criticize its structure or its principles. What we criticize is the leadership it is given. As this article states, the Wheat Board's instructions come directly from the government. A look at the World Wheat Review reveals another interesting statistic. The number of bushels in commercial storage as of March 31, 1971, compared with the same period in 1970, was 170 million bushels of wheat less than the previous year. The Menzies committee recommended that the commercial stock of wheat should not exceed 250 million bushels. While this recommendatcon is not yet government policy, according to the World Wheat Review we find Canada has 252 million bushels in terminal positions and in elevator positions at the present time. This is down from 421 million bushels last year and 406 million bushels the year before.

What does this mean? It simply means there is less cash being distributed to the farmers. This morning in the agricultural committee, representatives from the Canadian Wheat Board dealt with this specific item and indicated that some 46,000 farmers have outstanding commitments under the provisions of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, and the low deliveries of wheat is the reason for this situation. More wheat is moving this year than last year, but the very fact that stocks in commercial positions are decreasing is playing havoc with the western Canadian economy; correspondingly, much less money is being distributed.

What does this mean in terms of dollars and cents? So far as marketings are concerned, the average yield from the year 1959-60 to 1968-69 as at March 31, was $278 million. So far this year the amount is $190 million, almost $100 million less than the long-term average flowing into the western farm economy. The government says it is pumping another $100 million into the farm economy under its stabilization program, and it is little wonder that the farmers are in such dire need of an injection of cash. While this is welcome, we are aware of the many additional ramifications to this measure.

The World Wheat Review also indicates that over-all sales throughout the world have increased by 30 per cent this year over previous years. So naturally Canada should be increasing its sales too. The question that we have to ask is whether Canada is increasing its market penetration. There is a great difference between sales volume and percentage of penetration in world markets. According to the Canadian Wheat Board report, at the beginning of the crop year 1969-70 the outlook for an improvement in international wheat trade was bleak. However, optimism grew in Canada as the crop year progressed for it became obvious that the U.S.S.R. and Argentina would harvest lower crop yields and that supplies of quality Australian wheat would be reduced. Naturally, this would have a greater impact on sales by Canada than previous years. But have we increased our market penetration. That is the point of significance here.

This leads me to another matter that I have raised in this House previously regarding the marketing policy of the Canadian Wheat Board. I refer to the various outstanding contracts now held by the Canadian Wheat Board. The minister has commented on these contracts and they are referred to at pages 14 and 15 of the annual Wheat Board report. The Canadian Wheat Board also issued a press release in which Mr. Treleaven, assistant chief commissioner of the board, said that with one exception all countries contracting to buy wheat from Canada had fully lived up to their agreements. There is an article entitled "Default charges denied" in the Manitoba Co-operator of May 13, 1971. When I raised the question in the House I was merely seeking clarification in asking the minister to comment on these various outstanding contracts. I did not use the word "default"; I used the word "outstanding", and I covered the majority of them.

I ask the minister this question: If these various countries have lived up to the terms of their agreement, why then in the case of the U.S.S.R. did we have to go through a renegotiation of the contract? Why was it, with respect to the People's Republic of China, that amendments were made to the long-term agreement? Why was it, with respect to Bulgaria, that the entire quantity contracted for remained outstanding and a new contract was written up? Why was it that a three-year agreement with Poland for 33.1 million bushels, which was due to expire on November 4, 1969, was extended to July 31, 1971? Why is a long-term agreement with the Democratic Republic of Germany still outstanding? Why was the contract with the Philippines, which was due to expire on August 30, 1969, extended to September 30, 1971? Why was it that the contract with the United Arab Republic was not entirely filled?

If it is true that these countries lived up to the terms of their agreements, one then must ask the minister to tell us whether it is because Canada has not been able to deliver in sufficient quantities the kind of grain that was bargained for. I am not playing politics; I am merely seeking clarification.

Mr. Lang: Read on.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, I have been quoting. These are some of the things we want the government to deal with. I see the minister shaking his head. I am merely quoting from the Canadian Wheat Board report. I hope it is clarified without any fanfare. We have a situation which I believe warrants clarification. The Canadian Wheat Board certainly is not to be treated as a sacred cow. I believe it has some blemishes and I think this is the place to air them.

Now I should like to turn to the question of rapeseed. The rapeseed industry in Canada has been one of the most successful and has contributed to the survival of the grains industry in western Canada. I believe its success is owed in great part to the ingenuity and talent of Mr. Jim McAnsh who is the executive director of the Rapeseed Association of Canada. I am sure the minister will be consulting this gentleman and the association because they have some very explicit fears about the inclusion of these grains under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I should like to quote from the Free Press Weekly of May 15 which quotes Mr. McAnsh as follows:

> He fears that the threat alone may have curtailed interest in the rapeseed market and could have contributed to recent depression of prices in Winnipeg futures.
>
> "We will not be assured that the spectacular growth and development of the rapeseed industry in Canada will continue until we are able to fully determine the scope and intent of the proposed changes," said Mr. McAnsh.

The article continues:

> "The Rapeseed Association of Canada, which was brought into existence four years ago to promote and expand markets for Canadian rapeseed, while comprising all segments of the industry, includes in its membership roster a preponderance of rapeseed producers.

I reiterate that there are a large number of rapeseed producers included in this association. I believe it has become abundantly clear that the Canadian Wheat Board is too far removed from the producers' interest at the present time. There is no direct producer representation other than though the advisory board. I think it is very important that the producers themselves become closer to the marketing facilities. The article reads further:

> By working shoulder to shoulder with the grain trade, processors, and grain handling companies, including the producer-owned companies, what was so recently a struggling industry has exploded into one of the most promising enterprises in western Canada," said Mr. McAnsh.

It continues:

> A number of Canada's overseas customers have registered their protests regarding the proposed changes and do not appear to be completely reassured by the repeated statements by the minister that no change in the marketing system for rapeseed is contemplated at this time. Some importers of Canadian rapeseed who have been making forward contracts into the first quarter of 1972, are believed to have withdrawn from the market," concluded Mr. McAnsh.

Then we find these words:

> As a cash crop that could be marketed and sold, rapeseed has been a lifesaver when other grain crops (primarily wheat) filled the producers' bins to the bursting point and apparently couldn't be marketed.

When asked whether governments should become involved in commodity promotion, Mr. McAnsh, the rapeseed executive, replied in a very definite and categorical way, "No". I believe we have been very successful in penetrating the market. Certainly I do not see any reason for trying to disrupt it at the present time. A number of producer groups feel very much the same way. I do not believe we should provoke any further apprehension. I think that before the legislation is proceeded with something firm must be stated by the minister concerning the manner in which he proposes to determine whether this measure has the support of the producers. We could then deal with the legislation in a much more expeditious manner.

I should like to quote a comment made by Mr. C. P. Kokott, secretary of the UGG local board in Lavoy, Alberta, which happens to be in my constituency. He refers to an annual meeting held on April 22 at which a resolution was passed demanding action and requesting that the information be forwarded to the attention of the minister. The quotation is as follows:

> I was directed to . . . present our local's strongest protest against the machinery that is in motion for the absorption of rape and flax to come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board—
>
> Our local feels that the board has made a mess of the wheat situation in the last number of years and we would sooner gamble with rape on the open market, than let them gum up the works—
>
> I would appreciate your passing our feelings to . . . the powers in Ottawa who seem determined to bury us in our summer-fallow.

Mr. Speaker, these are some of the fears the producers and producer groups have in my part of the country. Alberta is a significant producer of rapeseed. I would hope, as the hon. member for Mackenzie suggested, this portion of the bill would be withdrawn or amended in such a way that the producers, either through a plebiscite or some other form of referendum, could indicate their desire one way or the other.

The members of the New Democratic Party want this measure adopted. It meets with their approval. However, I say to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that the group lost its credibility long ago. We have only to look at the side they were on in the recent rail strike threat. In the course of the debate the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) suggested that the members of the Conservative party would have to make up their minds because they could not have it both ways. I say to those hon. members who allegedly support the western farm interest that it is they who will have to make up their minds, because they will have to establish themselves as either coming out on the side of the farmers or on the side of the unions. They cannot serve both; they cannot have it both ways.

I believe therein lies a conflict of interest. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre referred to parasites living off the backs of farmers. I would sooner have live parasites serving a useful purpose than half-dead ones living off the western farmer. The members of the New Democratic Party are in a position in which they are waffling in respect of where they stand with regard to Bill C-176. The basic philosophy is agreeable to them but they know the majority of producers are not with them.

It is interesting to note that the Barber commission also has a very interesting section on the matter of unions in respect of the difficulties many farmers have experienced in obtaining repair parts, particularly during the busy season and at weekends. A press release of the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery points out that farmers have encountered difficulties because of weekend interruption of parts supply and delivery services. Because of union agreements affecting assignment of staff duties and overtime pay the companies are sometimes unwilling to supply weekend service. The cost may run up to $45 to meet a single emergency. Union regulations of this kind appear to show an almost callous disregard on the part of the union for the welfare of farmer customers. So here again we have a very significant development. We know that the members of the New Democratic Party are largely supported by the labour unions...

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Thomson: The labour unions certainly did not elect me.

Mr. Mazankowski: If that is so, then I suggest to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) that he had better start looking after the farmers rather than the labour unions, or he will not be here the next time. It is only fair to say that you cannot serve two masters. I am sure the minister knows that these birds only speak for a few.

Having said that, I hope the minister in his wisdom—and I respect his intelligence—will see fit to withdraw that provision or will accept an amendment which I believe will be proposed, so that we have at least one segment of the grain trade free of the shackles of government impairment.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Boulanger: Here is another filibuster.

Mr. Schumacher: I do not know what the comments coming from the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) have to do with the subject at hand, but after all it is his side of the House that is proposing this legislation which even the minister who is proposing it says will probably not be used. The trouble is that the minister will not be around forever; somebody else might be slipped into his slot and might use the legislation. That is why we are taking this opportunity to oppose the legislation. I think the time of this House should be used for things that are necessary, and even the minister who is proposing the legislation says it is not necessary at this time. Therefore there is plenty of time to talk about it if the government insists upon calling it.

This bill, like its comrade Bills C-244, C-239 and C-176, is designed to make agriculture the most closely regulated segment of our economy. These four bills subject the producers of agricultural products to totalitarian control. The various agenices of government will be able to monitor the producer's every move. This legislation falls particularly heavily on western farmers. Perhaps the government is not aware of the feelings of western producers, which might be understandable because they do not have many members from that part of the country.

There used to be a time when there were no Liberal members from the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Of course, the cry at that time during an election was, "Give us some members so that we will know what you want". Well, that is not the case now. There is representation on the government side from every western province. However, we do not find that that representation is doing much to protect the interests of western Canadians, so I do not think that argument can be used any more.

We on this side of the House have to pay attention to what is happening because our electors recognize the forerunners of tyranny, especially when they take such blatant form. Western producers have no great desire to become indebted to the federal government nor to have their every move subjected to intense scrutiny by the deputies who will be set up following the passage of these four bills which constitute the government's answer to the agricultural problems of Canada.

I think it is quite clear that this approach is not working. We find that the electorate of Assiniboia have been unrepresented since the month of January. The government did not take the opportunity of calling a by-election in that constituency when it called by-elections in Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia. I understand there is a possibility that it may even be having difficulty in locating a candidate to bear the government's colours in that contest. I think this should be a hint to the government that its policies are not particularly pleasing to western electors.

The government does not seem prepared to back down in any way. I suggest that it takes courage to admit that a mistake has been made, but this government does not appear willing to display any such courage. It seems the government lacks courage in that respect. Rather, they seem intent on forcing a policy down the throats of those affected by the legislation and at the same time they have the gall to insist that it is good for them.

It is true that western farmers would like the aid of the government because as a result of old policies they find themselves in a state where aid is really necessary. They would like some assistance in marketing their produce but they do not want to be helped to death, because the type of help which the government is proposing will not improve the health of their economy. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said it was this government's policy to reduce the number of small farms. I agree that the type of legislation proposed under the four bills that I have mentioned, of which this is the principal bill, would have that result.

I ask whether it is sensible to include flax, rye and rapeseed under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. It certainly does not seem so. If these commodities are doing well—and I do not think there is any dispute in that regard—this does not seem necessary. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) have mentioned figures which show that this is a very successful crop.

When I spoke in the debate on the amendment to the cash advances legislation I referred to the rapeseed crop as being the Cinderella crop of western Canada. I think that it bears repeating that this crop has reached that stage with a minimum of regulation. I cannot say it is absolutely without regulation because as a result of amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act of 1962 it is considered a grain, and the Wheat Board interprets that as a mandate to regulate deliveries of the crop even though they have no control over its marketing. As I said previously, the government prohibits farmers from selling rapeseed in markets to which it could be delivered but for the regulations made by the Wheat Board.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Sometimes I wonder why they need this further amendment when they can control the movement of that grain, or would appear to be able to control it, under the existing legislation. It seems to me that the only logical explanation for the government's presentation of the bill at this time is the desire to have more power. I ask why it wishes this extra control. It can scarcely be because of need to improve the situation with respect to rapeseed, flaxseed and rye because that situation is fairly satisfactory at present.

The usual reason given for government intervention in the economy is that it is to correct some fault. But what are we to think if certain things are included in legislation which do not need correction or guidance? It is becoming increasingly apparent that the government seeks power for its own sake. Indeed, in the four bills that I have mentioned it has laid a plan to seize what amounts to absolute control over agriculture. Lord Acton said that absolute power tends to corrupt absolutely. We expect those who have the responsibility of power in the government to behave responsibly and to be true to their oftenstated principles.

Daily my colleagues and I on this side of the House receive letters of bitter complaint from our constituents, protesting in the strongest possible terms the government's mismanagement of their economy and of the economy in general. Lately I have received more letters relating to the government's misrepresentation and mismanagement of the Lift program than I have received about anything else. Many of my constituents are beginning to feel they were sold a bill of goods with respect to the Lift program. During the period leading up to the closing date, two or three pamphlets were issued by the department, but they did not say the same thing and some farmers had already made a decision on the basis of an earlier pamphlet. Later the rules were changed, but they were not informed of the change.

Some members of the New Democratic Party, in particular the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), have said that this legislation would be good for the grain industry. That hon. member said there was a demand for it, and when questioned he said the demand came from the producers' organizations. I suggest he is a little naïve if he thinks the producer organizations actually speak for their members. He would be well advised to consult his constituents instead of depending on the so-called farm leaders.

In February I sent a questionnaire to every farm home in my constituency and I received a 25 per cent response. Question No. 5 asked: Do you feel the Canadian Wheat Board is doing a satisfactory job? I think that is a fairly straightforward question, not loaded in any way. In response, 37 per cent thought it was, 55 per cent thought it was not and 8 per cent were undecided. As a result, I do not think anybody could say that the farmers in my constituency have a great deal of confidence in the Wheat Board.

Question No. 6 asked: Do you feel rye, flax and rapeseed should be brought under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board? In response, 32 per cent said yes, 57 per cent said no and 11 per cent were undecided. I feel that questionnaire has given me a certain amount of guidance. Even if those who replied thought that rapeseed and the other grains should be brought under the Wheat Board, in view of their replies to question No. 5 I could not go along with the proposal because they did not think the Wheat Board was doing a good job.

I would be interested to know if the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville made a similar inquiry of the people he represents, because he might find them holding an opinion different from his. He shakes his head. I gather he has not made such a study.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, I have.

Mr. Schumacher: He says he has.

Mr. Nystrom: And found very strong support for the Wheat Board.

Mr. Schumacher: During his remarks he did not make any reference to what that study revealed. This evening the hon. member for Vegreville referred to the performance of the Wheat Board in selling wheat. I suggest that until that board can produce some evidence that it is effective in marketing our major crop, there is little reason why we should give it more responsibility.

Mr. Nystrom: Would the hon. member be willing to accept a question?

Mr. Schumacher: Yes.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the survey the hon. member has conducted in his constituency, can he say whether or not he is in favour of abolishing the Wheat Board, since in his opinion it is obviously doing such a bad job?

Mr. Schumacher: I do not think we should abolish the Wheat Board, but serious consideration could be given to reforming it. This kind of question strikes me as the type the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is so fond of asking people who are supposed to be asking him questions. I do not think it is useful in getting at the facts of the matter. I certainly would not be opposed to abolishing the Wheat Board, but I think there are certain positive steps that could be taken to make it an effective body. However, until those things are done no consideration should be given to increasing its jurisdiction.

Mr. Nystrom: May I ask the hon. member if I heard him correctly when he said he would not be opposed to abolishing the Wheat Board?

Mr. Schumacher: I think you did. I was attempting to say that I felt the Wheat Board should be retained, but that it should be reformed so that it could do the job it is supposed to do; and until it is reformed, rapeseed has no place under its jurisdiction. To use one of the government's favourite words, would it not be more reasonable to leave the Wheat Board to concentrate on selling wheat, hopefully with renewed vigour, rather than encumbering it with commodities that private individuals can handle to their own satisfaction, and here I mean the producers?

I am at a loss to discover what valid explanation the government can give to justify this intrusion. The government itself says that this legislation is not necessary and probably will not be used. It is this "probably" business that bothers me. The government has not found one yet and I am not sure it is even trying to find a bona fide reason to explain why we need to bring rapeseed under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board.

• (9:20 p.m.)

On Friday, May 7, the minister told the House that he was trying to maintain farming as a viable and effective way of life. If this is so—and I must take the minister's word that this is the government's intention although it is rather difficult at times to see concrete evidence of it, then they are certainly going about it in the wrong way. As reported at page 5603 of Hansard, the minister had this to say:

> It is very true that it is our belief that we should try to assure that the total system, where the government has any control, should be made as effective as possible to maximize returns to those involved in farming. I want to state, as a fundamental matter of our philosophy, that we do not in any way have the view that anyone should be made to move off a farm if he chooses to live on it.

Perhaps this is an admirable philosophy but I can only remark again that the government is not going about it in the right way. If people are making a success of growing rapeseed, why not leave them alone? They have entered a profitable market on their own initiative. What could be more discouraging and calculated to drive people off the farm than this unwarranted intrusion which is fated to reduce their freedom and to impose quotas on their crops? If they can now sell all they can grow, then I say all power to them—the economy needs more success stories like this. But this government cannot seem to leave well enough alone.

I note with interest that the minister said "where the government has any control". It would seem that the government does not want "any" power; it wants "all" the power. It seems that the government is intent on giving assistance to the farming community. The catch is, it does not matter whether they want it or not. The government wants to standardize and stabilize. Do they want to standardize our freedoms so that the farming community is completely under their thumb?

It must be obvious what they want to do. While the minister said that he did not want to see farmers leaving the land unless they wanted to, the government's program seemed to state that while people may be able to stay on the land, it will be at a very reduced standard of living. Offering support to those who have not made a success of farming, on condition that after they have gone the farm will be forced to become part of a larger unit or to become Crown land again, does not seem to give people a choice. Unless the government can establish policies that would make their stay on the farm economically worth while, then the government has failed in its job.

Mr. Speaker, this bill leads to uncertainty because it gives a discretion to the government. I would suggest that uncertainty and ambiguity are the hallmark of all four of these bills dealing with the subjugation of agriculture to the whims of the Liberal cabinet. Powers are handed out with wild abandon; powers which are poorly defined and with no check on their use. This hardly seems to be a step to promote democracy—but has the government ever been concerned with the system on which our government is based?

Contempt is piled on this chamber in many different ways. I would say the simple reason for this is that we sometimes impede the progress of some people who think they belong to the elite and who happen to have progressed to the treasury benches. Apparently when they sit there they think they should be making the decisions for everybody in this country. Our system of government is representative and this government will not last much longer if it continues on its course.

I noticed an item in today's news to the effect that one of the government's former supporters—I guess he is a former supporter since he took the liberty of resigning his seat—a member from that great metropolitan area of Toronto, has decided that he cannot with any enthusiasm continue to sit here. I think this is symptomatic of what the government is doing. It is not able to keep up the morale of its own people.

The government accuses the opposition of being obstructionist. I do not accept that charge, Mr. Speaker, because I do not think it is our duty to follow what the government in its wisdom thinks are the best solutions to our problems without indicating that they may have made a mistake. This bill is a classic example of where the government has made a mistake. The minister had to issue a press release to reassure the industry that the Wheat Board probably will not be taking it over immediately. We are still forced, however, to spend time debating a matter that the government itself says is unnecessary. This makes one very suspicious, because the government says it has many other things to do. If that is the case, why are they taking time to more or less push this bill and its companion pieces of legislation through the House?

I think the accusation of obstructionism is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. We base our opposition on the strongest possible foundation—the desires of our constituents. They are united in repulsion from this plot of the government's to seize what freedoms are left in our agricultural economy. Our opposition is the expression of the disgust of our electors, and we dare not ignore them. We are not so arrogant as to place ourselves above the interest and demands of those who entrusted us to speak for them in this chamber. To suggest for one moment that the opposition has no basis of support for its position on this and the other three bills is, in my submission, an insult. I believe that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has received some 47,000 communications relating to another part of the package with which we are dealing tonight. We would be very remiss in our duty if we did not continue discussion of this matter. After all, the government has come to think of itself as infallible.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the minister piloting this bill through the House says it is not necessary legislation. Since the sponsor of the bill says it is not necessary, we feel that the government is imposing on this chamber by proceeding with the bill. The supporters of the bill, according to their statements, are clearly at odds with one another. For example, in his statement of October 29, 1970, the minister said that policies and programs to assist the farming industry must strengthen rather than blunt the commercial aggressiveness of each part of the industry. My constituents believe that the bill will have the opposite effect. The minister also suggested that the quantity of rapeseed that can be successfully marketed has not yet been determined. Will not the legislation do just that: will it not bring in the Wheat Board as the regulatory body to regulate the quantities to be sold before sufficient time has elapsed to permit us to determine just how big that market is?

I think this legislation overlooks the need in western Canada for the maintenance of cash crops. As is well known, rapeseed, flax and rye are probably the major cash crops. Other crops are being developed all the time, crops such as buckwheat, sunflower seeds and other commodities. Because of the government's failure in marketing wheat, a major crop, the western agricultural community is faced with the need for raising what are known as cash crops which can be marketed outside the control of the Canadian Wheat Board at market prices. As the hon. member for Mackenzie pointed out, rapeseed, a cash crop, saved the economic viability of his farm. He sold the crop and was able to obtain cash when he needed it most. If that grain is subject to control by the Canadian Wheat Board, it will no longer remain a cash crop in the sense that we understand that term and one of our largest cash crops will be removed from the western grain economy.

I also think it is improper to proceed with the legislation at this time because it will further weaken the existing futures market for grain. That market has grown up primarily because of the existence of rapeseed. Obviously, such a market is necessary. Last fall we encountered serious difficulty with barley because we did not have a futures market in that commodity, and the Wheat Board was unable to keep in touch with the actual value of barley. I think we lost the sale of a great many million bushels of barley last fall because our price was too high and because the government could not properly estimate what the price should have been. It could not do so because no futures market had been established.

Again, because the Wheat Board had jurisdiction over that commodity and did not know what its price ought to be, the price per bushel was cut by 20 cents in one fell swoop. It has been revealed that this was too large a reduction. The result was lost income that will never be recovered by the producers of barley.

In its four-pronged attack on western Canadian agriculture, one prong being the stabilization bill, C-244, we find that the government is withdrawing financial support for western agriculture and, as in this bill, substituting straight control of the industry. I suggest, Mr. Speaker that this is not the right way to approach the problems of western agriculture. Since the minister has said that this legislation is not urgent and he does not know when, if ever, rapeseed will be brought under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board even if the bill is passed, I think the producers of rapeseed ought to be consulted.

The hon. member for Mackenzie and the hon. member for Vegreville also support this view. I agree that not all permit holders under the Canadian Wheat Board should take part in that consultation. Only those who, as the hon. member for Mackenzie suggested, have taken an interest in the crop by growing it should be consulted. I feel that everybody who has taken the trouble to grow this crop ought to be consulted. A plebiscite should be held in that way.

Since the legislation is not urgent at this time, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack):

That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Bill C-238 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Canadian Wheat Board to determine by way of producer plebiscite whether the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act that may by regulation apply to oats or barley should be extended to include rye, flax seed or rapeseed or any or all of them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair must consider the procedural acceptability of the motion moved by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher), seconded by the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack). I must say to hon. members that I have some doubt as to whether the Chair can accept the amendment from a procedural standpoint. I have two preliminary doubts. The hon. member wishes to refer the matter to an outside agency. I think there is probably some jurisprudence to indicate that he cannot do that. He can refer the subject matter to a standing committee, but whether he can refer it to an agency that is outside Parliament is a matter, I think, that must be considered. I am aware that there is a precedent with respect to the transport commission. Hon. members may wish to assist the Chair on that point.

The other point that occurs to the Chair initially—and I invite the assistance of hon. members in this respect—is that the motion does not seem to oppose the principle of the bill. It refers to an outside agency, without opposing the principle of the bill. The Chair's mind is open to argument on the matter. If hon. members wish to assist the Chair, I will be pleased to hear them.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I believe it was the thought of the mover and seconder of this motion that they were assisting the minister in his endeavour to get the bill through the House. I am sure that we want to accommodate the assistant whip of the government party rather than be accused of filibustering. We felt that this was a reasoned amendment which would help the minister to give the people of this country what he has been promising. We accept the bill. Every speaker on this side of the House has said that, with one exception.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

• (9:40 p.m.)

We do not think this amendment takes anything away from the bill. It does not in any way deter the minister from getting the bill through. The minister said that the subject of including rapeseed, flax and rye under the Wheat Board will not be used immediately—in fact, not as long as he is minister.

The minister seemed to accept the principle that a referendum should be called. We made suggestions with regard to a referendum. We suggested that only those who produced rapeseed be asked whether they are in favour of having rapeseed included in the bill. Therefore, we say it is a reasoned amendment. As the assistant whip has suggested time and again, the purpose is to get this legislation through the House as fast as possible for the benefit of the farmers. The minister is very anxious to get the grading part of the bill passed. We approve of that; every speaker has said so.

To cite a precedent I wish to refer to page 400 of Beauchesne's. This refers to a similar amendment. I will only read part of it:

"That all the words after the word 'That' in the said motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

'the further consideration of this bill be referred until the principle thereof has, by means of a referendum, been submitted to and approved of by the electors of Canada'."

In the case of this amendment, rather than the electors of Canada it is the people who are concerned with this particular grain. I do not want to go into the arguments why it should or should not be placed under the control of the Wheat Board. The minister said it is not immediately necessary to have this provision, and we agree.

If the referendum indicates that the rapeseed producers want this grain under the control of the Wheat Board, as the Socialists to my left would like it, we will agree to it. We know that they do not all want this because we have had communications from a large number of rapeseed producers indicating that they do not want to be included in the legislation. It is the only cash crop they have at the present time. This is what we in western Canada are concerned about, a cash crop at the present time.

I could state what we think about the efforts of the Wheat Board in selling wheat at this time. The minister said there is a record movement of grain under the Canadian Wheat Board. In spite of that, the economy of western Canada is at its lowest ebb ever. There is something wrong. This is what we are concerned about. Rapeseed is the biggest cash crop they have. It is the only thing that is keeping them going. That is why I say this is a reasoned amendment. There should be no hesitation on the part of the minister to accept the amendment. I hope the assistant whip of the government will vote for this amendment so that we will not have to talk any more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the amendment, and even more so from the words we have just heard, that hon. members do not oppose the principle of the bill. Indeed, their remarks have been related to one small section of it, something which could be dealt with in committee. The amendment falls on that ground alone. It also falls on the second ground to which I have referred that the matter can be adequately dealt with in committee.

On a number of occasions I have indicated the need to consult with producers. I hinted in my opening remarks and stated on a number of occasions that a plebiscite might be the appropriate technique. An amendment in that regard could certainly be made in committee. If we can work out the right terms for a plebiscite at this stage, I will welcome them. In other words, we would be anticipating here what could be done in committee. Certainly the amendment is not opposed to the principle of the bill.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I did not rise earlier because I thought the minister would spring to his feet and indicate with alacrity his desire to accept the amendment offered, in view of his alleged fondness for participatory democracy. However, that probably does not apply to the farmers of the west.

There are a number of reasons for approving this amendment. The first is that it was moved by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher). I am sure the hon. member would not move an amendment that was not in order. Second, it comes from this party. As Your Honour knows, we attempt to comply with the rules. Sometimes there are differences of opinion between the Chair and this party with regard to our amendments, but the fact that we move an amendment indicates that it should be considered to be in order.

The terms of the amendment indicate that members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition have dash and verve. We attempt to not be bound by the ironclad traditions of the past. We are prepared to move into new fields while at the same time clinging to the sound principles of previous decisions of this House. The hon. member has been successful in combining in one motion two principles which have been accepted in the past. That should be a tribute to this ingenuity and his amendment should be accepted by the Chair.

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) quoted Beauchesne. He indicated that in the past the House accepted an amendment moved by the very great and distinguished Canadian, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was a liberal when it meant something to be a Liberal.

Mr. Francis: It always does.

Mr. Boulanger: It always does; don't forget that.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member quoted Beauchesne as follows:

—'the further consideration of this bill be referred until the principle thereof has, by means of a referendum, been submitted to and approved of by the electors of Canada'.

That was accepted as a valid amendment. In other words, that "further consideration of the bill be left until the principle has, by means of a referendum, been submitted to and approved of by the electors of Canada." That is acceptable as a reasoned amendment. The wording here is not quite the same but there is the clear intent that there not be further consideration of Bill C-238 and that it not now be read the second time. That is an indication of disapproval of the principle of the bill.

To indicate how unprepared I am, I only have a copy of Beauchesne's third edition with me. I wish to quote from page 499. This amendment was offered on April 17, 1934:

Amendment that bill be not now read a second time but that the subject-matter thereof be referred to a Board of Commissioners is in order.

The amendment was moved by Mr. Barber, seconded by Mr. Plunkett. Mr. Mackenzie raised a question as to whether the amendment was in order. Argument proceeded at that time. Mr. Gray quoted rule 755. Mr. Speaker stated:

• (9:50 p.m.)

I am of the opinion that the amendment referring the subject matter of the bill to the Board of Commissioners is in order.

The ruling was challenged but the House sustained Mr. Speaker. This was in the bad days when Speakers' rulings could be appealed. We have progressed beyond that now. What my learned friend from Palliser has done is to put the two principles into one motion—that the bill not be read the second time until a referendum has been conducted among those directly affected. I believe his ingenuity should be rewarded by Your Honour ruling that the proposed amendment is in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If no other hon. members wish to address the Chair I think I can give a ruling on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher). I wish to thank hon. members who have assisted the Chair by arguing the procedural points at issue, I indicated initially that there was some doubt in my mind whether it would be in order to refer the subject matter, as the amendment purports to do, to an outside agency. Hon. members know, of course, that the subject matter of a bill may be referred to a committee of this House, but there is some doubt whether it is an order for an amendment purporting to be a reasoned amendment to seek to refer the subject matter to an agency outside the confines or jurisdicion of Parliament.

The hon. members for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) argued very persuasively and fluently in favour of the proposed amendment being accepted, using the precedent of the reference to the Board of Transport Commissioners. I appreciate the argument he advanced; I think it is a good and valid one. However, in reaching a decision I believe a distinction must be made, because in the particular case cited the amendment was a declaratory one adverse to the principles of the bill. Reading the amendment moved by the hon. member for Palliser, I find some difficulty in bringing myself to believe that the amendment is declaratory in opposition to the principle of the bill. It might be helpful if at this juncture I were to read the proposed amendment. It is as follows:

That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Bill C-238 be not now read the second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Canadian Wheat Board to determine by way of producer plebiscite whether the provisions of the Canada Wheat Board Act which may by regulation apply to oats or barley should be extended to include rye, flaxseed or rapeseed or any or all of them.

The Chair has this reservation in mind and it is an important one. The factor which seems to me to be the determining factor, and the one upon which the Chair would like to base its ruling, is the well established principle that a reasoned amendment is not in order if it purports to do something which could be done by the committee considering the bill after it had passed second reading.

Clause 5 of the bill deals with the authority of the Governor in Council to bring flax, rapeseed and rye under the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board. Since authority to legislate is vested in members of this chamber and not in the Canadian Wheat Board or other agencies, it seems to me the hon. member could, if he wished, ask his fellow members on the committee, by moving an amendment, to make the decisions called for in his amendment: this could be done by moving an amendment to delete or amend clause 5 of Bill C-238 which is before us.

For these two reasons, and particularly for the second reason that the bill could be amended in committee along the lines suggested, the Chair regretfully cannot accept the proposed amendment from the procedural standpoint.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, there are a few observations I should like to make with reference to Bill C-238. First, I should like to make it clear that I agree heartily with what has been said by some of my hon. friends, particularly by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher), the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) who have drawn attention to the satisfaction felt by rapeseed growers over the past few years in being able to produce a cash crop. I can say from experience that the growers I represent feel the same way.

We heard the minister say a few moments ago that during the committee stage an amendment could be moved which, if approved, would allow a plebiscite to be taken. But we cannot always take messages of this sort at their face value. Not long ago we heard a report that wheat exports from Canada would be in the neighbourhood of 500 million bushels during the 1970-71 crop year, compared with 347 million bushels last year.

An hon. Member: With 374 million bushels.

Mr. Simpson: Since then we have heard the minister say that wheat exports may amount to 400 million bushels. So it is a little difficult to accept statements coming from the minister. I am interested in one or two aspects of this bill particularly as they pertain to exports from the port of Churchill. I should like to draw attention to the fact that up to the present the Wheat Board has not seen fit to indicate what quantity of wheat is to be exported from Churchill in the year ahead. Each year we experience difficulty in getting the board to make an announcement. I asked the Wheat Board to make an announcement that some 30 million bushels would be shipped out of the port for sale abroad; however, the Board has not seen fit to do this.

The bill before us seeks authority to enable the Wheat Board to assume responsibility for the marketing of rye, flaxseed and rapeseed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In accordance with Standing Order 40, a motion to ajourn the House is deemed to have been moved and seconded at this time.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER AS TO DISPOSITION OF BILL C-207

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the consent of the House to revert to motions to put forward an order which I have discussed with my colleagues on all sides of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister has asked for consent to revert to motions. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: We have held discussions with respect to the further progress of Bill C-207 and we have reached certain conclusions. After I have read the order they will be revealed as being the result of painstaking discussions over a period of time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Results painfully reached.

Mr. MacEachen: They involved change in positions by all persons concerned in the discussions. However, I hope the order will be acceptable to members of the House generally. It reads as follows:

• (10:00 p.m.)

That the order for resuming consideration of Bill C-207, an act respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, shall be the first order of government business called on Tuesday, May 25, 1971, and on Wednesday, May 26, 1971, and that the consideration of private members' business on Tuesday, May 25, 1971, shall be suspended so that consideration of Bill C-207 may be continued between 5 o'clock p.m. and 6 o'clock p.m. that day, and that not later than 5 o'clock p.m. on Wednesday, May 26, 1971, every question necessary to dispose of the bill in Committee of the Whole shall be forthwith and successively put without further debate or amendment, and that the House shall immediately thereafter proceed to its consideration of all remaining stages of the bill, and that the House shall not adjourn that day at 6 o'clock p.m. and that, not later than 7 o'clock p.m. in the sitting, every question necessary to dispose of all remaining stages of the bill shall be forthwith and successively put without further debate or amendment;

That, in Committee of the Whole on the said bill, a minister shall propose amendments to provide

(a) that the Minister of the Environment is also the Minister of Fisheries;

(b) that clause 17 be deleted; and

(c) that the establishment of a Ministry of State shall be subject to the adoption of a resolution of the House, which shall be decided upon after not more than a specific period of debate;

And that, in relation to the proposed establishment of Ministries of State for Urban Affairs and Housing and for Science and Technology, no more than one spokesman from each party shall participate in the deabte on each of the said proposed resolutions notwithstanding general provisions relating to the approval of such ministries in Bill C-207.

An hon. Member: What a retreat!

Mr. MacEachen: I may say I have never enjoyed any retreat so much.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, this was not a retreat but a great victory for Parliament. I am glad to say that we are agreeable to the general principles. As far as paragraph (c) is concerned, I will not ask the minister to indicate the terms of the various amendments that will be moved, but there has been an understanding between all the parties involved as to what the purport of the amendment in question will be. We are all agreed on what the amendment will be. Apart from that, may I say we are very pleased to resolve this problem. I think it shows that Prime Ministers may come and Prime Ministers may go, but Parliament goes on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, rather than use such words as "retreat" or "victory", may I say this is another demonstration of the value of collective bargaining. We have had some lengthy sessions at the bargaining table and there has been give and take on all sides. The document that the minister has just read represents the position at which we arrived, and we agree with it.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has just announced, we held discussions in order to come to an agreement to resume consideration of Bill C-207. Our party therefore supports the motion to resume consideration of this bill, so that it can be put through the House as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and I think there would be unanimous agreement that the House would not want the Chair to repeat the terms of the suggestion proposed by the minister and agreed to by the House leaders. Subject to the small reservation of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), is it agreed that a special order shall be made in the terms of the order read by the President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—ALLEGED BIGOTRY OF SUPERVISORS IN NOT ENSURING JOBS FOR NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on February 9 I directed two questions to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). First of all, I asked whether he would look into the charge made at a meeting of the Northwest Territories Council that the minister's department was hiring supervisors who were bigots and ill-disposed to the Eskimo people of the Northwest Territories. I must say that the charge was actually levelled against supervisors working for the Department of Transport.

Then I asked a supplementary question of the minister, whether he would investigate the claim that a very high percentage of those employed on drilling crews, for which not much skill is required, are being recruited in southern Canada instead of from the native people in the territory. The minister replied simply that a trade school was established at Edmonton several years ago and that as more people are trained they would be hired.

My questions arose from a report which appeared in the Globe and Mail of February 9 which referred to a speech made by Weldy Phipps, a member of the Northwest Territories Council, in which Mr. Phipps asked the council to support a brief which he proposed to submit to the federal Advisory Committee on Northern Development "detailing the lack of employment of local labor". The report says that the motion was passed unanimously. What Mr. Phipps said is a pretty damning piece of information. The article reads:

The department often hired supervisors who were "thinly disguised bigots who scorn the Eskimo," said Mr. Phipps, elected member of the council for the High Arctic.

The article points out that Mr. Phipps told the council that the federal government, and to some extent the territorial government, contribute to high unemployment in the High Arctic. Mr. Phipps stated:

Its deficiencies in hiring Eskimos, Indians and Metis are not ones of a few unrelated incidents, but almost seem to be the government's practice.

Mr. Phipps said, further, that blame for unemployment and hiring practices should not be directed chiefly at the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but at other departments. He said other federal departments obviously had not thought about their responsibility to hire local labour. He told the council that unemployment ran as high as 90 per cent in some areas of the High Arctic. He went on to give illustrations. He said he has seen survey crews come through Resolute with every man on the team from southern Canada.

He claimed that the only person who needed special training was the kind of person the minister referred to in his reply to me; this was the instrument man. The others were hired to carry surveyor's rods and pound stakes. Mr. Phipps points out that these people draw big salaries for three or four months and then return to the south. He states that if the money were paid to the Eskimos they would probably earn enough that they would not require support through the provision of welfare. He claims that the territorial government continues to import people from southern Canada for administrative and technical jobs in the settlements when these jobs could be handled by the local population.

Mr. Phipps said that the base at Resolute has a staff of about 60 people, and that of these 60 jobs only four or five are held by Eskimos. These include such positions as janitor, kitchen worker, bartender, clerk, heavy equipment operator and carpenter. Surely these positions are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport. One could blame that department, but I hope and expect that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would take its responsibility for trying to improve conditions for Eskimo and Indian peoples and keep the pressure on employers, whether they be other government departments or private employers, to fill as many of these positions as possible now, and as quickly as possible in the future, with native people.

• (10:10 p.m.)

I believe Mr. Phipps, a person who lives in the north, who represents a northern area on the Northwest Territories Council, when he berates all government departments for failure to do what I have suggested should be done. I urge the government and the department to redouble and quadruple its efforts to ensure that the native people are given every opportunity to fill the jobs they can handle, so that their lives can be brought up to something like the standard which we are fortunate enough to enjoy in southern Canada.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as has been suggested, my minister was asked to investigate a charge contained in a resolution passed by the Northwest Territories Council to the effect that the department is hiring as supervisors bigots who are doing little to ensure that native people are hired for anything but unskilled positions.

The facts have been investigated and it has been found that no such resolution was passed by the Northwest Territories Council. A motion was introduced in the council that a brief be prepared and submitted to the Advisory Committee on Northern Development detailing a lack of employment of local labour by federal departments and agencies and recommending steps by which the situation could be improved. An additional motion was to the effect that the possibility of establishing a program to appoint officers to act as liaison between local labour and private business be studied.

I wish to state that it is already the policy of our department to employ northern residents in all northern positions for which they can qualify. In the wider context, an interdepartmental committee is now studying ways of speeding up this process for the employment of northern people in all the other government departments.

Also, the department already has an employment liaison program in operation and is currently recruiting additional staff who will be stationed in the north to act as liaison between local labour and employers with main responsibility for employment of northern residents. This staff will be responsible for ensuring that resource development firms and other companies contemplating activities in the north are aware of the available labour force, their skills and the training programs that exist.

A committee composed of representatives of the federal and territorial governments and the petroleum and related industries has been established to bring about an increase in the training and employment of local workers in the northern operations of the oil and gas industry.

In addition, last August, in a joint statement by the minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) guidelines were set out for the construction and operation of northern oil and gas pipelines. It was noted that many benefits would accrue to northern residents because one condition of approval for a pipeline project is that industry would be required to ensure appropriate training and employment programs for Indian, Eskimo and Métis people in the north. Agreements have been made with some of the major mining companies operating in the north. These agreements guarantee the same rights and privileges to northerners as are enjoyed by the companies' employees elsewhere.

I might mention that last week when I was up in Old Crow we were told, when we were querying the residents on how the muskrat catch was going this year, that virtually none of the Indians in Old Crow were out catching muskrats but in fact all of those who so desired were working on the various seismic crews for the oil companies operating in the Old Crow area.

I can assure the hon. member that we are continuing to seek and to expand employment for northern residents through a continuing review of our existing programs.

AGRICULTURE—FARM MACHINERY—IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING MANUFACTURE IN CANADA—CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENTS ON COMPANY PROFITS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, today I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) whether any steps were being taken to clarify the conflicting statements emanating from the Barber commission investigating prices of farm machinery respecting profits achieved by the manufacturing companies. In its interim report it says that the farm machinery companies were making "handsome profits". In the final report it has watered this statement down to read "moderate profits". It seems to me incredible that the commission would entirely reverse its stand on such an important issue as profits in the farm machinery industry. The assumption, rightly or wrongly, has bothered the consumers who in this case are mainly farmers. So far as I am concerned, the credibility of the commission has been entirely destroyed.

During the controversy which developed after the commission released its interim report, Massey-Ferguson and other manufacturers operating in Canada were accused of making handsome profits and words such as "conspiracy" and "confiscation" were freely used. Massey-Ferguson elected to challenge this statement and in press releases and in direct submissions to the royal commission the company denied it was making the handsome profits alleged by the commission chairman.

The company challenged the commission to take another responsible look at the figures which it had shown to the commission when it first appeared before it. Clearly, from that point onward the battle-lines were drawn and it was a royal commission against one of the giant conglomerates. It now appears from the final report that the victor has been Massey-Ferguson. If this is not the case, then I suggest that the government owes an immediate and direct apology and retraction to Massey-Ferguson and to all other producers of farm machinery in Canada—certainly, if not from the government at least from the chairman of the commission.

The royal commission, and by inference the government, are not strengthening the investor's or the public's faith in the Canadian economy by making suggestions of this nature. The Credibility of the commission has been badly damaged. The situation must receive clarification if the government expects the people of this country to have any faith in the policy proposals which will flow from the contents of this report.

If this matter is not cleared up, the people of Canada have produced and paid for a stale, outdated $1.5 million whitewash job which they can sorely afford at this time. I am using the figure $1.5 million because that was the cost of the commission inquiry as of last December. It is probably reasonable to assume that the cost has been increased since the writing of the final report, so probably we are dealing with a figure in the order of $2 million.

If the government is going to appoint a body to prepare a report for the country, particularly the farmers, to digest and consider it has a responsibility both to the commission and, in this particular case, to the farm machinery interests to clarify the statements that have been made. If the first assertion was hastily conceived, the report should say so. If the strength of the Massey-Ferguson case has caused a rearrangement of the figures, then the whole report is worthless.

The government is charged with the grave and weighty responsibility of running the affairs of the country. If it fails to set the record straight and establish some facts, it is derelict, perhaps even negligent in its duty to the country's corporate and private citizens. During these times of economic and social strife it would behoove the government to set a pattern which the country can effectively follow. The whole country has been cast adrift by statements and misinformation of this nature. The government has left it to wallow in a sea of mud mixed by confused chefs across the way. Hopefully, when the maître d' returns the people of Canada will be able to get answers to some of these problems.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) asked a two-part question today, the first part directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and the second part to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). I came prepared to discuss it this evening on the basis of the part directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

I was rather surprised at the strong words used in the member's statement this evening, condemning the government on its stand on a report when the report has only just come out: it just arrived on my desk yesterday. It is a very thick volume and I must confess that I have not yet had time to read it from cover to cover. I am a little surprised that the hon. member has had time to read and digest it thoroughly. There is a brief summary of the report—

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Mazankowski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is no provision for a point of order at this time.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Before the hon. member seeks the headlines, I think he would want to study the matter thoroughly.

Mr. Mazankowski: Read the press release.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that a brief summary is not the same as the whole report.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is pretty concise.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I have read some parts of the chapter on pricing and I find it most interesting that the report does not say that the farm machinery companies make excessive profits, but it does say that perhaps the market strategy used in placing the machinery on sales floors for periods of a year and a half to two years was an expensive one. It points out very clearly, however, that their net profit at the end of the year does not appear to be excessive. I think these factors have to be examined.

The preliminary report indicated some opinions on the subject and the final report indicates some further opinions. I think it would be reasonable to examine all these opinions very carefully before seeking to blacken the reputation of the farm machinery industry.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is exactly what the commission tried to do.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): The commission was selected as an independent body to make a report to the government, Mr. Speaker. It is not a report made by government; it is a report for government. There is a vast difference. No one in the government has made these statements. This is an independent body and I think we have to respect the opinions of these people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary's time has expired.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—USE OF RADIO BANDS FOR TRANSMISSION OF LISTENING DEVICE SIGNALS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in the last couple of days I have raised questions, first with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and later with the Minister of Communications concerning the alleged use of electronic eavesdropping devices for the purpose of obtaining information about certain groups and individuals in our society.

Concern for individual privacy and the implications of electronic spying are neither new nor are they limited to Canada. In the United States it was reported that a sixth circuit court judge ruled the FBI must first obtain a warrant to tap phones of domestic groups suspected of subversion. The FBI, of course, was somewhat less than enchanted with this ruling. Much controversy, too, has surrounded the U.S. army's snooping on civilians and a U.S. Court of Appeal has ordered a full-dress hearing by a federal court into the constitutionality of the army's spying on civilians.

In our own country, too, there is widespread concern. In tonight's Ottawa Citizen under the headline "Bugging ban bill due before summer" there is the report that the great defender of civil liberties, our own Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) emotes equal concern and plans to make electronic invasion of privacy a criminal offence.

So much for the background. What prompted my question was the allegation of the movement for the defence of political prisoners that their meeting May 15 in Montreal had been subjected to furtive electronic scrutiny. This is the very thing that the Minister of Justice's proposed bill is supposed to guard against. If this surveillance were conducted by the RCMP, the Montreal police or any other body there is nothing in present law which forbids it except—and this is a big exception—that under section 3 of the Radio Act any radio transmission requires a licence to operate on a designated frequency except under certain exceptions granted under part 2 of the same section. Under section 11 of the Radio Act it is illegal for any person to establish or instal a radio station contrary to the act, and if one does he is liable to a fine of $25 or a 12-month prison term.

Mr. Speaker, this raises some interesting questions. The Department of Communications issue licences to operate radio transmitters on prescribed frequencies. Therefore I asked in the House, have certain frequencies been assigned to the police and, if so, what are they? If the answer is that police have not been assigned frequencies, and if they have been using them as is alleged in the Montreal case, then the police are acting illegally. That raises some interesting questions about the admissability of any evidence gained thereby—or do the police, like the FBI, feel they can do as they please?

A second point is that the frequency used by the bugging device was very close to that assigned—I have learned this from the Department of Communications—to aeronautical radio navigation signals. Yet no one in the Ottawa communications headquarters would answer whether or not the police had applied to use this band. The whole thing is extremely woolly, Mr. Speaker. As you can see, there was a noticeable lack of candour in respect of my efforts to gain information.

I am moved, in conclusion, to ask some questions. First, do commercial bands for taxis, businesses, the police, etc., include implicit permission to employ electronic eavesdropping devices? Second, what effort is the Department of Communications making to effectively administer assigned frequencies so that invasions of privacy are not encouraged.

We are told that there are 5,000 radio transmitters in Ottawa and 25,000 in both Montreal and Toronto. So this is a serious matter. It seems to me, from my brief immersion into the Radio Act, that if the act and its regulations were enforced to the fullest extent there would be little need for the Minister of Justice—Mr. Clean himself—to move for more legislation in this very personal area.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will be aware that the allocation of radio frequencies is no longer the responsibility of the Department of Transport. It was transferred some time ago to the Department of Communications. I have been provided with the following information which may shed some light on the subject.

One of the important responsibilities of the Minister of Communications is the management of a public resource, the radio frequency spectrum. To do this the minister has the authority to assign frequencies in the spectrum and to issue licences or technical certificates to persons or organizations wishing to use radio. The purpose of the minister's management function in the use of the spectrum is to ensure the most effective development and use of this resource. To do this the government of Canada not only enters into agreements with foreign countries on the allocation of frequencies, but maintains monitoring services throughout the country whose main task is to make certain that there is not unauthorized interference with the licensed users either inadvertently or by design.

There are some 260,000 authorized stations operating in Canada. A number of these operate on the general broadcast bands used by radio and television, out the vast majority are used for private communications systems serving more than 300 industries, and operate on frequencies not used by broadcasting. To assure that equipment operates on assigned frequencies and that the spectrum is not polluted by stray signals, either from radio equipment or a wide variety of electrical equipment, the department maintains over 250 radio inspectors across the country.

Consequently, the role of the department in this area is largely a technical one. The policing services that the department maintains are analogous to those of a traffic control department in a police force. The department is not primarily concerned with the content of information transmitted through the electromagnetic spectrum. It is concerned that signals are transmitted on assigned frequencies.

In relation to the particular case of electronic surveillance, or what is more commonly called electronic eavesdropping, it is a fact that the department has not assigned any specific frequency for this sort of use of the spectrum. Furthermore, the department has not issued any licences or certificates for equipment designed specifically for this purpose.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

APPENDIX

USSR-CANADA
PROTOCOL ON CONSULTATIONS

Inspired by a desire to develop and strengthen relations of friendship, good neighbourliness and mutual confidence between the two countries.

Expressing a desire for co-operation in the interests of maintaining international peace and security in accordance with the purposes and principles of the charter of the United Nations, and

Conscious of the responsibilities of the Soviet Union and Canada as members of the United Nations to promote the preservation of peace,

Believing that the Soviet Union and Canada can contribute toward the above goals by acting in a spirit of co-operation, mutual respect and reciprocal benefit,

Endeavouring to improve and further develop relations between the two countries by means of high-level contacts, expanding ties and exchanges in the fields of economy, trade, science, technology, culture and northern development,

Noting with satisfaction the conclusion of the Soviet-Canadian agreement on Co-operation in the Industrial Application of Science and Technology, and the development of trade on the basis of the 1956 Trade Agreement,

Conscious of the responsibility of the two sides to preserve and protect the environment of the Arctic and the sub-Arctic areas,

Fully determined to go on developing political and economic co-operation,

The Chairman of the U.S.S.R. Council of Ministers and the Prime Minister of Canada have agreed on the following:

1. The Soviet Union and Canada shall enlarge and deepen consultations on important international problems of mutual interest and on questions of bilateral relations by means of periodic meetings. Such consultations will embrace:

—questions of a political, economic and cultural nature, environmental questions and other subjects concerning relations between the two countries;

—international questions, including situations causing tension in various parts of the world, with a view to promoting détente, furthering co-operation and strengthening security;

—problems which are the subjects of multilateral talks, including those considered at the United Nations;

—any other subjects in respect of which the parties may find it useful to have an exchange of views.

2. In the event of the a situation arising which, in the opinion of the two governments, endangers the maintenance of peace or involves a breach of the peace, the two governments will make contact without delay in order to exchange views on what might be done to improve the situation.

3. The provisions set forth in paragraphs 1 and 2 above do not affect obligations previously assumed by the parties in respect of third states and are not directed against any of them.

4. The conduct of such consultations between the Soviet Union and Canada is designed not only to promote the welfare of their peoples and develop relations between them but also to contribute towards better relations among all countries.

5. These consultations, at levels to be determined by mutual agreement, will have a regular character. The Ministers of Foreign Affairs or their representatives will meet whenever the need arises and, in principle, at least once a year. Either party is free to recommend the holding of such consultations, including the time and level at which they should be held.

Moscow, May 19, 1971

Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R.

Prime Minister of Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 21, 1971

The House met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF HONOURABLE TUN TAN SIEW SIN

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I draw the attention of hon. members to the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a distinguished visitor from Malaysia, the Honourable Tun Tan Siew Sin. Tun Tan is Minister of Finance in the government of Malaysia, but he is visiting Ottawa today not solely in that important capacity. Tun Tan is also Chairman of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, and in that capacity he is the honoured guest today of the Canadian Parliament.

Tun Tan is proceeding tomorrow to Halifax and Charlottetown where he will be the guest of the legislatures of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and preside at the meeting of the General Council of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. I know that hon. members will want me to welcome him on their behalf and express the hope that his stay in Canada will be interesting and rewarding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. HELLYER—DESIGNATION AS INDEPENDENT LIBERAL

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege affecting my standing in the House of Commons. It is with profound regret that I find myself increasingly out of sympathy with the government's philosophy, its policies and its performance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: In consequence, Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully request Your Honour to change my designation in this House of Commons to that of Independent Liberal.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. Paul's.

An hon. Member: Oh, another one.

An hon. Member: You too.

Mr. Wahn: I hope I heard you correctly, Mr. Speaker, and that we have proceeded to reports of standing committees.

Mr. Bell: We would have taken you.

Mr. Baldwin: A pretty mixed bag is left over there.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

Second report of Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence—Mr. Wahn.

[Translation]

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Sixteenth report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, in the two official languages—Mr. Noël.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

TABLING OF REPORT ON COASTING TRADE

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table in English and French the report of an inquiry into the coasting trade of Canada and related matters of marine activity by H. J. Darling.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION OF GENERAL TRADE AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS AND GRAIN SALES BY PRIME MINISTER WITH SOVIET GOVERNMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he can advise the House whether any discussions took place between the Prime Minister and the Kremlin leaders with regard to trading and commercial relations. In particular, did the Prime Minister obtain any commitment with regard to firm grain sales arrangements which would prevent the state trading agency of the U.S.S.R. from being in apparent default as is the case now?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not had any report directly in detail on the subjects covered by the Prime Minister. I do know that in general he dealt with commercial relations between Canada and the Soviet Union; indeed, this was one of the main subjects of discussion. I think we will have to wait until there is a further report to learn how far he raised this particular point, or indeed even until the Prime Minister returns.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER TO SOVIET GOVERNMENT CONCERNING CZECHOSLOVAKIA AND POSITION OF JEWS IN RUSSIA

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister may know the answer to this question or he may have to acquire the information. As the discussions were no doubt frank and fruitful, can the Acting Prime Minister report whether the Prime Minister advised the Kremlin leaders of the objection of the Canadian people to Soviet action in Czechoslovakia? Did the Prime Minister also discuss with the U.S.S.R. the position of the Jewish people in Russia and did this discussion take place before the recent severe sentences imposed on Jewish people who attempted to leave Russia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know the Prime Minister had all these matters on his agenda to take up with the Soviet government and I am sure he did. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the arrangements that have been made for regular consultation will enable us to forward our interests more effectively than at any time in the past.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with respect to one aspect of the question just asked by the hon. member for Peace River, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the assurance the Secretary of State for External Affairs gave on Monday that the Prime Minister would speak to the Soviet authorities about the trials of Jewish citizens in that country and in view of what has happened since, will the Acting Prime Minister ask the Prime Minister to express the concern of the Canadian people over the decisions handed down yesterday?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I will ensure also that the remarks made here in the House of Commons are conveyed directly to the Prime Minister so that the Prime Minister may be aware of the views of hon. members on this subject.

DELIVERY OF GRAIN TO RUSSIA UNDER AGREEMENT—REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER TO SOVIET GOVERNMENT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister, while in Russia, might not take up the question of the wheat agreement that was signed since the Russian authorities are now several years behind in picking up the grain that they committed themselves to buy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought that was implied in the question of the hon. member for Peace River. These are subjects that the Prime Minister has on his agenda.

REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER TO SOVIET GOVERNMENT ON HUMAN RIGHTS OF RUSSIAN CITIZENS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister, while he is in Russia, will, as requested by the Ukranian Canadian Committee, take up the matter of human rights on behalf of individual citizens within the Soviet Union, in particular those of Mr. Moroz and Mr. Karavanskyi, who are now in prison for political and cultural reasons?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, even though the Prime Minister had many hours of discussion with Soviet leaders on a wide variety of subjects, I do not know whether he would be able to press every point that is of interest to the Canadian people. That is why I think, Mr. Speaker, that a very wise decision has been taken by the leaders of our two countries in providing for regular consultations on these kinds of matters.

PURPOSE OF AGREEMENT WITH SOVIET UNION ON CONSULTATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Acting Prime Minister. Since the Prime Minister has often expressed the point of view that it is very uncomfortable living next to the American elephant, I wonder if the cultural agreement signed in the last few days and especially the press conference that the Prime Minister is alleged to have held in Moscow last night are a substitute for the American elephant? Will familiarity with the Russian bear be that much more comfortable for us, or is this a positive attempt to extend and supplement Canadian foreign policy and not just a negative step because of our reaction to the American elephant?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the Prime Minister, in putting forward this proposal for the establishment of regular consultation, is trying to reinforce good relations with both of our great neighbours and, as he himself said, to reinforce an independent foreign policy for Canada.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO MEMBERS TO VISIT COLLINS BAY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would have directed my question to the Solicitor General if he had been here today as scheduled, but perhaps I might ask the Acting Prime Minister. My question relates to the statement yesterday by the Solicitor General before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that henceforth communications between inmates in federal institutions and the Commissioner of Penitentiaries and between inmates and Members of Parliament would be confidential and no longer be looked at by censors or any of the officials in the institutions, and that the reverse would be true as well. In view of that statement by the Solicitor General to the committee yesterday, would the Acting Prime Minister look into the situation which saw this morning the Commissioner of Penitentiaries overrule the minister and refuse permission to Members of Parliament to visit Collins Bay Penitentiary and talk with some of the inmates there on a confidential basis?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to discuss this situation with the Solicitor General.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Inasmuch, also, as the Solicitor General seems intent on keeping a lid of secrecy on all of these activities—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): —would the Acting Prime Minister mind looking into the reasons for maintaining the element of secrecy and ascertain whether in fact it is not just an attempt to cover up the blundering by the Solicitor General that has taken place?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, I suggest to the hon. member for Skeena is more a speech than a question.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

AYERS LIMITED—MEASURES TO PREVENT LAY-OFF OF 250 EMPLOYEES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

He is no doubt aware that the Ayers Co. of Lachute is now dismissing 250 workers and I would like to ask him whether the government is taking some steps to enable the Ayers Co. to carry on its operations and avoid the dismissal of those workers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The answer is yes to both questions, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of the matter and my officials are now co-operating with the company to determine whether some of our programs could be useful under the circumstances.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF GOVERNMENT TO INTRODUCE PRICE AND WAGE CONTROLS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In light of recent statements by the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that the government has an option with regard to compulsory price and wage controls, is it the view of the government that it has the normal constitutional powers in this area or is the government only justified in introducing such controls in the case of a national emergency? Also, are we now going to have a declaration of national emergency in regard to inflation?

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubts as to the procedural acceptability of the first part of the hon. member's question, but perhaps someone on behalf of the government might reply to the last part of the question.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member has asked is really a legal question about which there are conflicting views. It is our view, and this is why we have been looking at the possible options for enforcing mandatory price and wage controls if it becomes necessary, that under the circumstances then existing we would have that authority. Otherwise, the exercise that we are undertaking would be futile.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If there is some legal doubt as to the constitutional powers of the government to institute such compulsory price and wage controls, why is this option being conveyed to the Canadian public by ministers of the Crown as a possible solution unless there is going to be some specific attempt to gain acceptance of such a program by the provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Again I hesitate to interrupt the Acting Prime Minister before he replies to the question, but I think that the supplementary is rather in the form of an argument.

* * *

POLLUTION

OTTAWA RIVER—STEPS TO CLEAN UP AREA ADJACENT TO PARLIAMENT HILL

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry in his capacity as minister in charge of the anti-pollution efforts of the government. Has the minister noticed the massive pollution floating on top of the once pure and clean Ottawa River and clearly visible from Parliament Hill? Will the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House and the country what steps the government has taken in the past year and is now taking under the Canada Water Act passed by Parliament a year ago in order to clean up the pollution on its own doorstep and thereby set an example to the rest of the country?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members are aware of the pollution problem which we have on our doorstep, as the hon. member phrased it. Yesterday I discussed this and other problems with the responsible minister from the province of Quebec. I expect to discuss the same problem with the responsible minister from Ontario next week.

Mr. Hees: As I directed the same question a year ago to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who at that time was responsible for anti-pollution measures, and received the same kind of answer, will the minister take it upon himself to see that some action is taken now so that we will not have massive pollution of our rivers continuing year after year without anything being done by this government?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Will the minister get up early some morning and take a walk with the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings and view this mess personally?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I would be very pleased indeed.

Mr. Jerome: That's no way to talk about George. He is not that big a mess.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RELIEF OF REFUGEES FROM EAST PAKISTAN—CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION THROUGH UNITED NATIONS IN LIGHT OF REPORTED BRITISH OFFER

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of reports that the United Kingdom is contemplating making a very substantial contribution—I think a figure of one million pounds sterling was mentioned—for the relief of refugees from East Pakistan through the United Nations, is the Canadian government considering or will it consider making a contribution of similar proportion through the same channels?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): We are now in receipt of information from the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees concerning the extent of the problem and we are beginning to receive general requests for assistance. This matter is under study and I hope to be in a position to make an announcement very soon.

MASSING OF TROOPS ON INDIA-PAKISTAN BORDER—CANADIAN ACTION THROUGH UNITED NATIONS TO AVERT CONFLICT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): In view of the fact that there has been a massing of troops on both sides of the border between India and Pakistan and bearing in mind the explosive situation which exists there, will the Canadian government invoke the good offices of the United Nations to seek a mutual withdrawal which would minimize the danger of conflict in that area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I do not know whether that would be the most effective means of achieving a purpose, with which we all agree, but we are doing everything we can to avoid an exacerbation of the situation and to avoid a conflict which I agree with the hon. member would be a most tragic affair.

HOUSING

DECISION RESPECTING ROCHDALE COLLEGE, TORONTO

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): My question is for the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing and it concerns the CMHC mortgage on Rochdale College in Toronto. Would the minister tell us whether he has made a decision as to the disposition of the Rochdale situation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): When that decision is made I will announce it in the House. It is not available at this moment.

Mr. Scott: Since the minister has given this answer repeatedly for the last six weeks or two months, I give notice I shall raise the matter at the time of the adjournment.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—AVAILABILITY OF WHITE PAPER IN CONJUNCTION WITH BUDGET

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): My question is for the Minister of National Revenue. In consideration of the particular necessity at this time for the government to make known its policies on all matters affecting investment in Canada, especially foreign investment, will the minister assure the House that the priority of the white paper on foreign ownership will be upgraded so that it may be available at the same time as the budget is presented next month?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): I am not in a position to give any such assurance.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

INQUIRY AS TO RELOCATION IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): My question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Are negotiations taking place to relocate the Royal Canadian Mint in Winnipeg and, if so, what is the present position of those negotiations?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me this question was asked yesterday.

* * *

TRADE

REPORTED REPRESENTATIONS BY UNITED STATES CONCERNING COMPOSITION OF BEEF EXPORTS FROM CANADA

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of news reports that the United States Department of Agriculture is planning to make representations to Canada with regard to Canada's rising exports of beef to that country, and the concern of the United States that some of the beef may have come from third countries, can the minister tell the House whether representations have been received in this connection from the United States or whether any discussions are planned on the subject in the near future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have not heard of any but I will look into the matter.

[Later:]

Mr. Gleave: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of the concern expressed by the United States authorities, is the Department of Agriculture taking the matter under consideration, and is it prepared to meet with its U.S. counterparts?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure the hon. member is aware that there was a complete cessation of any trans-shipment of beef through Canada to the United States last summer. I will check to make sure it has not resumed. If it has, then we have under our arrangement with the United States an obligation to see that it is discontinued.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

DEPARTMENTAL INFORMATION CAMPAIGN—MEASURES TO ASSIST CERTAIN QUEBEC INDUSTRIES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since the Quebec section of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will initiate an information campaign in September, I should like to ask the minister whether this is only an information program, or does he intend to suggest certain supplementary grants to keep already existing industries?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I have not heard this question very well. Perhaps the hon. member could repeat it in other terms.

Mr. La Salle: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the information campaign which the Quebec section of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will run in September, could the hon. minister tell us if this campaign will be only for information purposes or if the hon. minister intends to recommend additional grants for the maintenance of already existing industries?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce does not have a Quebec section. We operate on the national level, but at the present time we are making a special effort to help certain industries in the secondary sector, and this is done with the entire co-operation of the provincial Department of Industry and Commerce. If there is further information which I may give the hon. member, I will pass it on to him behind the curtains in a moment.

[English]

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—DISCOURAGEMENT OF STYLE CHANGES—INCREASED SAFETY AND DURABILITY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of recent statements out of Detroit to the effect that United States car manufacturers are considering the limiting of style changes in the future, can the minister inform the House whether his department has taken a position, either publicly or privately, on discouraging exorbitant expenditures on style changes and replacing such efforts with more concern about consumer protection in terms of safety and durability?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the automobile safety act is under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of Transport. Naturally my department has taken a lively interest in the cost of motor vehicles and any steps that the manufacturers can take to reduce and keep down the price of cars. If this can be done by eliminating some of the needless style changes, it would be encouraging and very helpful to the consumer.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am not sure the minister heard my question correctly. I asked him whether any representations have in fact been made or steps taken regarding what is obviously a very high cost factor. Has the minister had any direct contact with the automobile industry?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the question was related to the application of those savings to safety devices which are under the administration of my colleague the Minister of Transport.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Perhaps I could direct my question to the Minister of Transport and ask him whether his department has made such representations. More specifically, in view of the new safety bumper presently under discussion by the United States Senate commerce committee, has the minister anything to report with regard to the co-operation of the Department of Transport on a similar study to be undertaken in this country into this prototype bumper?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to the second part of the question the answer is yes. I have had direct contacts with the automotive industry and also with my counterpart in the United States, the Secretary of Transportation. We have an understanding regarding the exchange of information on safety matters and an agreement that we will, to the maximum extent that appears possible and also desirable, at least attempt to get whatever new innovations are introduced in the United States introduced in Canada, and vice versa.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary Centre.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Calgary Centre. I realize that he has sought the floor for some time now, but the hon. member for Egmont is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would respond to the first part of my question about style changes which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was unable to answer.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, in the sense that style changes, or a great many of them, do have an effect on safety, yes, there have been representations made. However, there is some difficulty with regard to applying safety regulations per se to the matters the hon. member has referred to, that is, in terms of the extra cost of style changes.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has a supplementary but the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Calgary Centre and will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby next.

* * *

TRADE

POSSIBLE ADMISSION OF UNITED KINGDOM INTO EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—POSITION OF CANADIAN AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS TO GREAT BRITAIN

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, either of whom may be in a position to answer it. In view of the reported imminence of the entry of the United Kingdom into the European Common Market, has the Canadian government now received any definite assurances that Canadian agricultural products will continue to have entry into the United Kingdom market on favourable terms?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the situation is very fluid at this time. We have intervened on a number of occasions, both in Brussels and in London, in order to safeguard as much as we can our grain exports to the United Kingdom. On the previous occasion we obtained a number of concessions when the British introduce the levy system. We hope that the transitional period will be as long as possible—it appears it is going to be five years—so as to permit our exporters to adjust progressively to the situation that will be created.

Mr. Harkness: As far as other agricultural products in addition to grain are concerned, have we received any assurances that they will continue to be able to enter on competitive terms?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I think the best thing for me to do is to provide the hon. member, and possibly the House, with a detailed assessment of the situation. It would be difficult to answer for every product since the situation varies from one to another.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Harkness: Would the minister provide this detailed statement in the form of a statement on motions or otherwise so that the information will be in the hands of the entire House?

Mr. Pepin: It is perhaps dangerous to do so, Mr. Speaker, since these negotiations are going on now and, as I have said, the situation is fluid. I was volunteering in fact to have a very friendly conversation with my hon. friend.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—SUGGESTED IMPROVEMENT OF CANADIAN SAFETY STANDARDS—EFFECT ON NORTH AMERICAN PRODUCTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked the Minister of Transport. In the past Canadian automotive safety standards have tended simply to duplicate those in the United States since the larger part of the market is south of the border. Given the fact that the percentage of cars now being produced in Canada does constitute a major segment of the total North American market, is the minister now considering improving safety standard regulations in Canada and thereby influencing in a significant way what happens in terms of the production of automobiles on the whole continent?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that I held discussions as recently as two weeks ago with one of the major auto manufacturers in which I indicated to them in general terms our desire to move independently regarding the introduction of certain safety standards that have particular applicability in Canada. I think I can say I received a positive response in this regard from the auto manufacturers. Perhaps more than most the hon. member will know the complexity of this subject in that many of the cars manufactured in Canada are destined for the United States, and vice versa. But, in short, we are trying to do precisely what the hon. member asks.

* * *

AIRPORTS

CALGARY INTERNATIONAL—PROVISION OF NEW TERMINAL BUILDING

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that international airports are so important to our resource industries, as we were told today in the committee, I wonder whether the minister, having now seen the mayor of Calgary and discussed the question with the Minister of Highways of the province of Alberta, can make a clearcut statement on the development of the international airport at Calgary?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I would be pleased to, Mr. Speaker. I did meet with the mayor and representatives of Calgary yesterday and I undertook at that time to proceed without delay with the construction of a new terminal building at Calgary international airport.

* * *

FISHERIES

RECOVERY OF GEAR FOLLOWING INTERCEPTION OF CANADIAN VESSEL BY UNITED STATES COASTGUARD

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. What action is being taken to recover from Canadian waters Canadian fishing gear which was abandoned as a result of interception by the United States coastguard during the recent incident involving a Canadian fishing vessel?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian fisheries research vessel G. B. Reid is on the spot now picking up the gear.

INQUIRY AS TO DESTRUCTION OF GEAR BY SOVIET VESSELS OFF EAST COAST

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate whether there is any evidence on the east coast of Canada to indicate there has been an incident between the Soviet Union and Canadian fishermen similar to the one between the United States and the U.S.S.R.?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we have received no evidence that Russian fishing vessels are picking up Canadian lobsters off our continental shelf.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Acting Prime Minister having in mind the presence in Ottawa today of the Minister of Finance of Malaysia who was introduced to the House this morning. What consideration is the government giving to an attempt to retain that gentleman in the capital to advise it on its many financial problems?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. visitor's services have been retained for parliamentary matters.

* * *

FISHERIES

SWORDFISH—ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN BECAUSE OF CONTAMINATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that unemployment insurance benefits for some swordfishermen have terminated and they are unable to go swordfishing because of present food regulations, has the minister formulated a policy or program to assist these fishermen and, if so, when will this program be announced?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, a program has been developed in close co-operation with the province of Nova Scotia and we expect momentarily to be able to announce the details of this program in respect of the swordfishermen in question.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TIMETABLE FOR ACHIEVEMENT OF FULL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister this question. In light of the statement made by the Minister of Finance that the government is committed to full employment, can he inform the House whether the government now has a timetable set for the achievement of full employment in Canada, and what year is it?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that any time other than as soon as possible would be unacceptable.

* * *

INDUSTRY

PAUL MANEY LABORATORIES—ACTION TO PREVENT SALE TO FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has his attention been drawn to the situation in respect of Paul Maney Laboratories, one of the largest independent drug companies in Canada, and the danger of it being sold to foreign investors? Does the minister intend to take some action to assist this company and prevent such a sale?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I cannot answer that question in detail at this moment, Mr. Speaker, but I will check further and try to answer on Tuesday.

* * *

TRANSPORT

REQUEST BY MEMBER OF ARGENTIA TASK FORCE THAT CHAIRMAN RESIGN

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will he tell the House whether he received a representation from a member of the Argentia task force in Newfoundland requesting that the chairman resign on the basis that the task force has failed to fulfil its objectives and the chairman misled a committee of the House of Commons with regard to employment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the question might be rephrased. The hon. member is simply asking whether the minister has received a communication and in these terms the question is not in order. The hon. member might like to complement the question to make it procedurally acceptable.

Mr. Carter: What action has the minister taken on the recommendation of a member of the Argentia task force that the chairman resign?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have acknowledged the representation and I have sent the full text of the hearing to the gentleman concerned to see whether he will change his mind.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am just now beginning to understand the background of the question and I would not think it should be directed to the Minister of Transport.

* * *

THE CENSUS

OPPORTUNITY TO INDICATE UKRAINIAN AS MOTHER TONGUE

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the government made a decision to downgrade the Ukrainian heritage in Canada by removing reference to the Ukrainian language in the 1971 census and, if so, has this been done in order to please the U.S.S.R. as has been alleged?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, as often happens, has been mischievous on this subject and I should like to state the facts. There is no such situation. All mother tongues will be recorded in the coming census. This is very important, Mr. Speaker, so would you kindly allow me read two paragraphs from DBS to set the record straight because the record has been deformed.

On form 2A, which goes to two-thirds of all households—this is the short nine-question form—space limitation permitted provision of separate marking positions only for those mother tongues anticipated to be the four numerically largest in the country. Persons with mother tongues other than these four will write in their specific mother tongues, such as Ukrainian, Polish and others, in the space provided on the document. These write-in entries for mother tongues will be coded and separate statistics provided for them in the 1971 census publications.

It should also be noted that on form 2B, the long questionnaire which goes to one-third of all households, space limitations are not as stringent and separate marking positions are provided for a number of additional origins and languages including Ukrainian in question 15 on "ethnic origin" and in question 17 on "language most often spoken at home." So the rumour is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Carter.]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—ACTION TO BE TAKEN BY PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As the minister has had ample opportunity to discuss with the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission what steps the commission intends to take to fight what the chairman has described as Canada's No. 1 economic enemy, inflation, will the minister outline to the House what steps the commission is going to take to fight this No. 1 enemy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the importance of the question asked by the hon. member, but he will appreciate that he is inviting the minister to make a rather lengthy statement of a type that normally should be made on motions.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I was just getting to that part of my question. I was going to ask the minister whether he would take the first opportunity on motions to outline what steps the Prices and Incomes Commission intends to take to fight this No. 1 economic enemy as described by the chairman?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, any changes in government policy from what is now a rather successful fight against inflation will, of course, be announced in the normal way. No doubt my colleague the Minister of Finance will have a good deal to say about this in the budget speech to be presented next month.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether hon. members would allow me to go to the next question. We are running short of time and the hon. member for Huron in particular has been trying to ask a question.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY—COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION OF CENTRAL TESTING AND EVALUATION AGENCY—SUBSIDIZING OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and has to do with the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery. Does the government intend to set up a central testing and evaluation agency for farm machinery as the report recommended?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a decision has not been made on that but, as I indicated yesterday, this is one of the recommendations in which we are keenly interested.

Mr. McKinley: Will the government give consideration to subsidizing interest rates for the purchase of farm machinery in order to assist the farm machinery manufacturers and the farmers?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, while this does not amount to subsidization, there is a very satisfactory and lower than commercial rate of interest now charged to farmers through the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Farm Credit Corporation. To extend that to cover the credit required by dealers would require a change in the act. We will have a look at that suggestion as well.

FARM MACHINERY—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL DEPARTMENTS ON IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, will the minister say whether he is consulting with the provincial Departments of Agriculture in order to ascertain which parts of the royal commission report can be implemented as soon as possible?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): We will do so, Mr. Speaker. In fact there is a meeting of all Ministers of Agriculture in Canada slated for July 20, I believe. I am sure this is one of the subjects that will be on the agenda.

FARM MACHINERY—MEETING WITH INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister when he proposes to meet with representatives of the industry?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I will be meeting with some representatives of the farm machinery manufacturing industry this afternoon.

FARM MACHINERY PRICES—EXAMINATION BY COMBINES INVESTIGATION BRANCH

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On May 4 I asked the Minister of Agriculture whether an investigation into farm machinery prices would be undertaken by the combines investigation branch. The response by the Minister of Agriculture was that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had considered that course months ago. Will the minister now indicate whether such a course is still being considered and, if so, when can we expect such an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The interim report from Professor Barber indicated that there were certain aspects of the farm machinery industry that should be examined by the combines branch. It can be taken as said that any such direction would be attended to by the Director of Research and Investigation.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

DISCRIMINATION IN FARES AGAINST DOMESTIC TRAVEL

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Is he going to inquire into and make a statement on the increasing complaints that air fares are becoming biased toward travel outside rather than within Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the board of Air Canada appeared before the Committee on Transport and Communications yesterday and I understand he is returning next week. Since to a great extent this is a matter for the airlines it might be appropriate for committee members to ask him these questions. In a general way I might say I am keeping a watching brief on the situation. I would expect that international fares are likely to go up in the near future if all the current reports are correct.

INVESTIGATION OF INCREASE IN CHARTER RATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the Prices and Incomes Commission looking into the spontaneous decision of three Canadian carriers to raise charter rates by as much as 10 per cent now and 30 per cent next year and, if so, when will a statement be made on this matter?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I will have to determine that from the chairman.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is supplementary to some asked earlier of the Acting Prime Minister. Could the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the announced resignation of the hon. member for York West last night and the question of privilege raised in the House of Commons today had any reference or relationship to the activities in Moscow in the last two or three days?

* * *

NATIONAL PARKS

LAKE TIMISKAMING AREA—NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I had intended to ask a question of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but I see he has left. Perhaps his parliamentary secretary would take notice of the question. Some time ago the minister indicated that negotiations were taking place between the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec toward the development of a large national park in the Lake Timiskaming area. I wonder whether these negotiations have now been concluded and, if so, with what result?

Mr. Speaker: I assume the hon. member's question has been noted.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, a short time ago a book was published in the United States alleging that Mr. Pearson and Mr. Bryce gave improper information to IT and T in connection with a project known as "Deep Freeze" in about 1954. Has the government taken any steps or is it contemplating any steps to investigate this serious allegation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that this question might be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency, I am sure that many hon. members would want to return at the time of adjournment to hear the hon. member expound on the matter and ask the question in a more detailed form.

* * *

TRADE

PROVISION OF MARKETS FOR PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY PRODUCTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of lay-offs in the pulp and paper industry because of marketing and monetary circumstances, can the minister advise what initiatives his department or the government is taking to firm up these markets and stabilize the industry's future?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question can be allowed only if the minister will reply briefly. Normally a reply to such a question should be given in the form of a statement on motions.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Following representations made by the industry and the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself to EEC countries some very important developments took place a few days ago following negotiations concerning pulp and newsprint. On pulp, the 3 per cent tariff on entry will be suspended. On newsprint, there will be a free entry quota which will permit Canadian pulp and paper producers to continue competing on the British market. The industry will also have a free entry quota on plywood on the continent, whereas in the past they had to pay a 13 per cent tariff.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): In view of the fact that the largest market for Canadian pulp and paper is the United States, has any initiative been taken at that level to try to improve the marketing conditions at present?

Mr. Pepin: I have no special development to report on that front.

SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON FEDERAL GRANTS FOR NEW PAPER MILLS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Is the minister prepared to recommend to his colleagues, especially to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, that a moratorium be placed on federal grants for new paper mills in Canada until the paper market has had a chance to improve?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Every project is studied on its own merit.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

KINGSTON RIOT—REQUEST THAT INQUIRY BE HELD IN PUBLIC

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the concern expressed by John Hodgson, vice-president of the Ontario Bar Association, that the integrity of the proceedings of the Swackhammer Commission investigating the riot at Kingston may be questioned if the proceedings are held in camera rather than in public, would the minister reconsider his decision and have the hearings held in public and at the same time protect the names and reputations of the witnesses?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to judge the credibility a lawyer attributes to the remarks of the chairman of a commission.

[English]

DISCIPLINING OF INMATES MOVED FROM MILLHAVEN TO COLLINS BAY OR KINGSTON—LAYING OF CHARGES—RIGHT TO COUNSEL

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Can the Solicitor General say whether the inmates moved from Millhaven to isolation in Collins Bay and/or Kingston are being disciplined? Can he also say whether they have been charged and, if they have, whether they have been given the right to counsel?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, no disciplinary action has been taken. None will be taken before the inquiry commission reports. To my knowledge, there have been no criminal proceedings. Of course, it is up to the Attorney General of Ontario to decide when to prosecute, if it is necessary.

[English]

PERMISSION FOR MEMBERS TO VISIT INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In light of recent problems in penitentiaries, would the Solicitor General now change his mind with regard to the situation and the position he and all other Liberals on the committee took about Members of Parliament visiting the institutions to determine what is going on with regard to the mistreatment of prisoners in Canada at this time?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I have said already. Inquiries are under way. I should like to complete my previous reply to the hon. member by saying that if legal proceedings are instituted against the prisoners, I trust the provincial authorities who are directly responsible will provide them with legal counsel, or that the Law Society of Upper Canada will attend to it. If, on the other hand,—not that I expect it to be the case—the prisoners are without legal counsel, we will take all the necessary steps to ensure that their rights are respected in court.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow the hon. member for Skeena to ask the last supplementary question. The question period expired four minutes ago but we have gone beyond our time because of supplementary questions.

DETENTION OF INMATES IN ISOLATION AT COLLINS BAY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): The supplementary question I wish to ask the Solicitor General relates to his statement a moment ago that no disciplinary action is being taken against any of the inmates who were presumably involved in the riot at Kingston. With respect to the seven inmates who were transferred from Millhaven on the night of May 12, I believe, to Collins Bay penitentiary, where they are now being held in isolation or, in other words, in the hole or in the dungeon, does the minister not consider that to be a form of punishment?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that, immediately after the disturbances in Kingston, there was not enough room for some inmates and we had to make use of all other premises available. The choice was not ours, but that of the inmates. Up to now, no disciplinary action has been taken against the inmates and, recently, considering further disturbances were expected—

[English]

Mr. Peters: You are not allowed to be dishonest.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Peters: Just because you are a minister, you cannot lie here.

Mr. Hees: Just watch him try.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

• (12 noon)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED NEED OF DEFENCE POLICY TO DEMONSTRATE WILLINGNESS AND CAPACITY OF CANADA TO CONTRIBUTE TO WORLD PEACE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the government, having reduced our defence capacity by erosion of our NATO commitment, reduction of our active and reserve forces, and mismanagement of our material and supply requirements, has downgraded our armed forces and led to a questioning of our credibility by our allies.

This House therefore urges the government to declare a defence policy that will clarify the role of our armed forces at home—with particular reference to our north and aid to the civil power—and which will demonstrate our willingness and capacity to contribute to world peace by honouring our alliances.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes available to me today, virtually on the eve of the production of the first white paper on defence policy in some years, I wish at the outset to pay some tribute and compliment to the members of the Canadian Armed Forces, particularly in light of the role they played in our society in the communities of Quebec City and Montreal, and in our nation's capital, during the crisis last fall. It was a tangible thing which brought them to the attention of the Canadian people more than did any other single event in recent years.

While that was a tremendous job I also wish to pay tribute to the normal work they do and which Canadians, by and large, never hear about. I wish to pay tribute to their professionalism, dedication and skill. As long as we are served by men of the skill, competency and professionalism that I have noticed in our Armed Forces, Canada will be well served, and our Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) will be well served. Having said that, I wish to put as quickly as possible some basic and general comments on the record.

When talking about a defence policy or structure for Canada, the basic consideration we must keep in mind is that a threat does exist. The setting up of Nato and of our other alliances was in response to a recognition of that threat. Today, simply because time has passed, and because the nature of society has changed to some degree, it would be unwise for us to conclude that the nature of the threat has changed to such a degree that we might consider it no longer exists.

This period of apathy, stemming from familiarization with peace at home and the non-inolvement of Canadian forces in active warfare, could lead us into a state where perhaps many would not consider the threat to be as real as I continue to believe it is. The white paper is going to be produced against the background of a defence budget freeze, without any indication that the freeze will be lifted. Indeed, there are acceptable levels of argument to indicate that the freeze will not be lifted.

It must be remembered that Canada has made certain commitments to its allies. These must be given very serious consideration by the minister during the final drafting of his white paper, which I presume will take place on his return from the spring meetings of the NATO Council of Ministers, to which he will be travelling next week. In this atmosphere of complacency stemming from the non-involvement of Canadian forces in active warfare, we must be careful not to ignore the perception evident in the views of our allies with respect to the threat, and the changing nature of the threat. The image that the Department of National Defence conveys is important to the many Canadians who are interested in the Armed Forces, and here I refer to both civilians and servicemen. I bring no new light to bear on the problem when I say that the morale of the forces is not at a level it could be at, or a level it should be at. I am concerned, as are many servicemen and civilians, that the forces have been downgraded through a series of events, none of which were within their control.

I hope the government fully understands that reductions, continuation of the budget freeze, and the insecurity and uncertainty caused by these two factors, erode even further the present shakey morale in the Armed Forces. To meet this threat, we hope the government will come to grips with the points I have enumerated, the questions of concern, the questions of realism, the question of a budget freeze, the question of commitments to our allies, the question of morale in the forces. While there may be ample wisdom in the Minister of National Defence reflecting in his white paper what appears to be the clear national will against expanding defence forces at this time, it is to be hoped that he will not so restrict the forces that we will slip even further down the ladder of credibility in the eyes of our own people, in the eyes of our neighbours to the south, and indeed in the eyes of our allies in the western world.

We see the problem in several ways. Today in 1971, on the eve of a white paper, we see the problem as being one brought about by the total absence of a clear, well defined national defence policy. Since the government came to power we have had ad hoc, irrelevant and inconsistent measures taken, and we still have to hear the minister's grand design. Mind you, he has taken advantage of many opportunities to elaborate it for us item by item, but we still have to see it all put together.

This vacillation, indecision and delay have brought about some degree of suspicion, which I think is justified, on the part of some of our allies. I think we have encouraged some potential enemies to look upon us askance and wonder whether or not we are credible about anything. Again, and more important, this beating around the bush, this delay and procrastination have contributed even more to lowering the morale of the men in the forces. Instead of a logically developed plan we have had the former minister's troubled dream of unification, arising out of the white paper of 1964-65. Here, I refer to the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). We had an extensive cutback in our NATO commitment just two years ago, to the point where we now have only 5,000 or 6,000 men in Europe. I might add they are poorly equipped, there has been no firm decision as to what we are going to do with respect to replacing them.

We have had a reduction in our Armed Forces from about 120,000 in 1964 to the rapidly approaching 80,000 mark of today. We see the reduction of the militia to some 17,200 men from a figure much closer to 30,000. In the beginning of 1970, we were told that the defence budget would be frozen at least for the next three years. We have seen the errors which resulted in the dropping of the Bonaventure, and the failure to find a use for our brand new CF-5 aircraft. The list is almost endless.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Sometimes I wonder whether or not the white paper will be developed on the basis of non-availability of dollars and manpower resources or the philosophy upon which it should be based, our perception of the nature of the threat and acceptance of the fact that it is a real threat rather than an imagined one. A close look at defence expenditures over the last ten years reveals, parallel to the reduction in forces, a steady decline in Government expenditures on defence and in the priorities which have been established for the department. In 1960 the defence budget was $1,537 billion or 26.9 per cent of the total government budget. In 1966 this percentage dropped to 20.6. Since 1968 the defence budget has been effectively frozen at around $1.8 billion and by 1973 it will represent an insignificant portion of the Canadian commitment of its total budget.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Forrestall: This has meant a steady and steep decline in defence expenditures as a percentage of the total government program, from approximately 20 per cent in 1967 to slightly over 12 per cent during the fiscal year 1971-72. Furthermore, the freeze will continue through 1973, meaning a further decline in defence as a government spending item.

How much are we really investing here? On a per capita basis in 1970-71 defence cost us about $88, a decrease from the Korean peak of $132 in 1952-53. I do not have to mention the increase in government spending or the increase in the gross national product in this country in the years that have intervened. Even if you add atomic energy, which might be considered as part of our defence establishment, the budget per capita only comes to $91, compared with the United States per capita cost of $360. This gives us some measure of the understanding that we should bring to the contribution being made by the United States military forces to world peace and to the defence of North America. The latter is a role with which I think we just play around.

In 1969-70 Canada's total defence outlay was 2.3 per cent of the gross national product. Belgium, a country of nine or ten million people with an armed force of 70,000 spent 3.3 per cent in the same year, an indication that they take the matter of defence structure more seriously than we do. Canada with a population of 21 million has 80,000 or 85,000 people in the armed forces and who knows what the number will be by 1972? In 1964 when the last defence white paper was published, the Canadian forces numbered about 120,000 and today we are on our way to 80,000. What will this mean to our new defence posture? We will have to wait and see. I hope the minister will be able to be more precise when he presents his white paper.

A few things are clear. Four or five years ago with a substantially larger armed force we were scarcely able to meet our multiple tasking assignments, so how can we expect to do it with 80,000 people or probably less in 1972? Where will the minister find the resources and dollars for national sovereignty? Will he turn to the priority established by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1969? Will he return to the area of defence of Canada for national sovereignty? If the minister is to lend substance to the posture of the Prime Minister on the question of the defence structure for the '70s he must find the resources and dollars to do it.

Then, we come to the question of NATO. The Prime Minister, our great national dove, is flitting around Russia and I do not know who is putting on the greater show, the Prime Minister or Charlie Lynch in his writings. Time will tell. From the minister's recent comments, it does not seem that we are going to find additional manpower or dollars for NATO. I can anticipate the minister's white paper. If that is his posture I would congratulate him on it. One might think that on an annual review basis we were going to honour our commitment to our NATO allies. I do not see any ground there for getting the resources required for lending effect to the white paper.

The joint US-Soviet statement of intent respecting the desire of those two great nations to arrive at an understanding with respect to the deployment of the ABM's some time this year, will have to lead to a very serious look at our NORAD position. I think the minister's options are now whether we are going to actively participate or whether, in exchange for active participation or a non-capital participation role, we will give to our American allies the advance staging requirements they need with respect to air fields for the AWAC plane carrier and the over the horizon radar program. His options are now more clear but I cannot perceive of the minister, in the next two years, walking away from our NORAD commitment. I can only see a changing emphasis and changing role but not much hope of finding the necessary resources.

If the minister touches Maritime Command, except to expand it, I will shoot him. He must find the manpower and dollars necessary for this area. He must do it not solely on the basis of expanding a paramilitary role to other departmental facilities and capabilities but rather in terms of the capabilities and facilities which continue to come under the direct control of Maritime Command. The problem of ground forces and Mobile Command is well illustrated by the desperate logistics situation we faced during the crisis last fall. What would we have done if there had been another call on Mobile Command then? As with Maritime Command this is an area where the minister must expand to change the impact on the direction of forces of training, so that is not a fertile ground either.

The minister needs resources and dollars and cents for a weapons system. I cannot see any way that he can cut back there unless we are to withdraw completely, and I cannot imagine that happening. We have to meet desperately needed weapon requirements. I do not find any great support in cabinet for such programs. Indeed, as I have already indicated, I think there is an inclination toward further retrenchment. In short, I wonder if the white paper will reflect any substantial changes. It should. Surely the world has changed in the last six years and surely the white paper ought to reflect some changes. I am not sure how they will be reflected.

• (12:20 p.m.)

The four broad directives the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) laid down two years ago need implementing. It is the "how" that concerns us at this time. How will we defend our country? Indeed, against whom will we defend it? There is some confusion about that. I wonder how we will participate in NORAD. I wonder how we will participate in NATO with respect to equipment and what will be the thrust of our direction. What will result from an allegedly casual comment by American Secretary of Defence Laird with respect to the $500 million deficit in our defence productions sharing arrangements? I doubt very much that Defence Secretary Laird made such a comment casually. I doubt whether he made any casual comment during the minister's entire visit. You just do not make casual comments on occasions like that. When my banker says casually that I am overdrawn, he is not being casual; he is being polite and telling me in a nice way to get behind the ball and do something about my overdraft. I wonder to what extent that $500 million deficit will result in parts of the white paper being written in Washington. For instance, will we buy more Boeing 707's? Will we phase in the 707 to replace the Argus as a long range maritime and northern patrol aircraft? Will we buy that aircraft because it may be the best piece of equipment we can obtain? If it is, let us buy it for that reason and not simply because we happen to enjoy a favourable trade balance with the Americans.

I wonder how the minister, through the medium of the white paper, will deal with the future of the CF-5. Why does he not keep the House and the country advised with respect to the sale of these aircraft? Are the Norwegians interested in it? Are the Venezuelans interested? How will they be used in Canada? Will they be kept for training purposes or will they form part of our commitment to NATO for the defence of the northern flank? I hope that the minister will answer those questions.

I am also wondering what is to happen to our Hydrofoil. What plans are there for building these vessels and selling them? It is a tremendous piece of Canadian equipment that was designed and developed here. I think we ought to be more proud of it and we ought to capitalize more on the research and development dollars we have invested in it. I hope the minister will be able to sell it. The Germans might be interested in it. I wish the minister well in his negotiations with them.

I wonder how the minister will de-emphasize the anti-submarine warfare role of maritime command. That has been its traditional role. How will he de-emphasize it? I know that the minister has not been happy with the DDH-280 program. He must find the money to pay for the vessels. One of the great psychological blocks to changing the role of maritime command stems from the names that we give to that role. Surely we must recognize that the role of maritime command in recent years has changed. Its role now is preponderantly one of surveillance, monitoring and detection, as opposed to its former role which involved anti-submarine warfare. The terminology used in connection with anti-submarine warfare dates back to the 1914-18 war, which was before my time and before the minister's time. I know that terminology was used in the Second World War. The term "anti-submarine warfare" no longer reflects the role of maritime command today. We should drop the term "anti-submarine warfare" denoted by the letters ASW. The role of the command involves surveillance, monitoring and detection, and "SMD" sounds much nicer than "ASW". These changes involve questions of psychology. I think the minister would find it much easier to sell his ideas to cabinet if he used new terminology and dropped the archaic terms that have been used to describe maritime command in the past.

We need a true submersible if we are to maintain, as the Prime Minister has suggested we should, our national sovereignty. We need a submarine. We need a nuclear submarine to be exact. We need three or four of them at least if we are not to pay mere lip service to the control of the north.

What substantial changes can be anticipated with respect to the size of our forces? Surely the white paper will deal, as well, with the widespread disquiet within the forces resulting from the continuing application of what may be described as archaic labour-management practices. On a number of occasions the minister has indicated clearly that there would not be an expansion of the forces but that there would be, rather, a realignment of trades. We must make certain that we can meet our external commitments.

The development of policy solely on the basis of our willingness to make available resources seems to me to be dangerous. If the threat is not real, then the government has the responsibility of saying so and of acting accordingly. On the other hand if, as I believe, it is real, then we must adopt a policy that will reflect honour on our country and the wisdom of the professionals in the Canadian forces. The white paper should say to our friends that we stand with them in the interests of preserving world peace and that we will play our role to the full. We will play the fullest role that our resources will permit in the preservation of those principles within which, and only within which, peace can be achieved and sustained. I urge the minister, in the final dotting of the "i's" and the crossing of the "t's", to show some concern for the professionals who serve our country so well.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the official opposition for introducing this important subject for debate. Having said that, I must also say that as far as this party is concerned we do not agree with the motion and we do not agree with the emphasis of the speech of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

Of course the subject is important, Mr. Speaker. The future security of Canada depends upon our armed services and our defence measures. Our contribution to the security and peace of the world depends upon our defence measures and the actions that we take for defence. We spend about $2 billion yearly of the taxpayers' money on defence. The function of Parliament in this field, as I see it, is not to attempt to discuss the details of hardware to use the jargon of those involved with defence; rather, it is to determine what shall be the essential roles to be served by the Canadian forces and to distinguish between those roles which are essential to the peace and security of Canada and those which are unproductive and wasteful and which lead to inflation and dissipation of the resources of the Canadian people in useless and obsolete systems.

I wish to ask some questions, and I think all hon. members of the House in debating the subject of defence ought always to ask these questions. I hope the forthcoming white paper will consider what roles the Canadian Armed Forces should play. I suggest that the first of these is the preservation of internal order in aid of the civil power. We know very well that the army played a big part in the disturbances of last October. We know that we live in an insecure world—it is insecure internally as well as externally—and the army has a back-up role to play of great importance in that particular field.

• (12:30 p.m.)

Second, the most functional role of our armed services is the defence of Canadian sovereignty against incidental attack or invasion of our territory or territorial waters by the forces of other countries. Precisely what that involves, I do not know, but I hope we will learn from the white paper and perhaps hear from the minister a definition of what he thinks is essential to the defence of Canadian sovereignty. I think all Canadians agree that the armed forces have a part to play in that defence.

The third aspect of defence which I regard as absolutely essential is a contribution by Canada to international order, building a world community, strengthening the United Nations and making forces available for peacekeeping. At the present time, it is fashionable for people to say that peacekeeping is a thing of the past and did not work. That is not true. We now have a peacekeeping force in Cyprus which may still be helping to preserve a measure of peace in a very disturbed part of the world, the Middle East. Every time there is a disturbance in the world, it is proposed that United Nations forces should act. Sometimes this is not acceptable and they do not act.

The Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence had a subcommittee which discussed the matter of peacekeeping. Among other things, we visited the United Nations. We discussed this matter with representatives of the United Nations, representatives of the great powers including France, the U.S.S.R. and the United States. Without exception, they said there was a future role for peacekeeping and that Canadian forces, by reason of their expertise, training and background of their country, might well be needed as a crucial component of a peacekeeping force to preserve the peace and security of the world.

These three functions, internal order, defence of sovereignty and aid to international order are all essential. We in this party approve of them. We believe our armed forces should be geared to perform these particular functions and trained and armed for these purposes. We do not think that Canada has much part to play in the major, strategic over-all defence of the North American continent. We are the neighbour of a superpower. Whether we like it or not, we are under the umbrella of that superforce as far as strategic power is concerned. We are not asked and do not need to make a contribution to that.

We in this party welcome the apparent move toward a limitation of the antiballistic missile system which appears to have been arrived in the SALT discussions between the United States and the U.S.S.R. We have stated many times in this House that multiplication of the antiballistic missile systems is another step in the mad momentum of the nuclear arms race, to be followed by further steps of escalation which would in turn minimize the changes made by the installation of the ABM system and leaves the parties exactly where they were before. We warmly welcome what appears to be a move in this direction as announced yesterday by the President of the United States.

I want to deal with some of our other roles. I want to deal with one role which we should now discard as obsolete. That is our participation in the NORAD system. I have said this before and I say it again. As everyone knows, that is a system of defence against manned bombers. It costs us at least $200 million a year. The estimates show this directly. We are not against co-operation in principle with our American friends, but we say that this particular defence is long obsolete. In the missile age of today, it is absolutely useless. A couple of well placed missiles could destroy the main bases in Canada which are used by NORAD.

As long ago as 1964, Mr. McNamara, the secretary of defence of the United States, said the only useful purpose of the NORAD system that existed at that time, and still exists today, was as a target for missiles which the U.S.S.R. had in limited numbers at that time. Since then there has been an increase in the number of U.S.S.R. missiles. One thousand high powered missiles would be a low estimate of what they actually have available. This defence, which was installed at great expense—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) would like to ask the hon. member a question on this point.

Mr. Roberts: Does the hon. member recall that Mr. McNamara's statement was perhaps referring to the skybolt missiles and not to the NORAD detection and warning system in its entirety?

Mr. Brewin: I may stand corrected. There certainly was the missile system involved in NORAD. He may not have been referring to NORAD as a whole. I am trying to point out that even that usefulness has now disappeared.

In 1964, General Simonds, a very distinguished Canadian soldier, pointed out to the committee on defence the reasons that this system was obsolete and should be scrapped. One of the reasons he gave was that the major defence against any attack by armed bombers was the fact that they could be detected shortly after they left their bases. We had detection systems on the North American continent to detect incoming bombers within a two hour duration of those bombers leaving their bases in their own territory and arriving at their targets in North America. Within two hours, the target planes could leave the ground and immense retaliation would be poured on the country that launched the attack. General Simonds said the Russians would have to be crazy to launch such an attack with manned bombers. What he said then applies today. Can anyone suggest, particularly at this time when our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is discussing protocols of friendship with the Russians, that their government would be crazy enough to launch destruction on themselves and the world by a manned bomber attack?

Once you have a system installed, it is easy to carry on with it regardless of whether it makes sense. There is a self-perpetuating tendency within military systems. I urge this government to have the courage to negotiate with our American friends and say to them that we are prepared to continue co-operating with them in detection systems, but anti-manned attack systems have not made sense for a long time, do not make sense now and regardless of what the Americans can afford, we cannot afford hundreds of thousands of dollars on something unproductive and useless.

My colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), is going to discuss the question of NATO. It is well known that this party has expressed a desire to withdraw from NATO. I do not propose to discuss this except to deal with one aspect. I do not know how NATO can have credibility in the world when the principles which it proclaims in its charter are clearly flouted by the members of NATO. I refer to Greece and Portugal. The purpose of NATO is supposed to be to protect human rights, yet in these two countries and in the colonies of one of them, these human rights are disregarded by military dictatorships. If NATO is essential to the defence of the so-called free world, some steps should be taken to ensure that its members respect the basic principles. Instead of that, the United States has recently rearmed the colonels in control of Greece.

Mr. Nowlan: How about Czechoslovakia?

National Security Measures

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: Canada, through its defence services, has a special role to play in helping to build a world community. We are free to do this because of our geographical position. If we were in a position such as Israel, which is more or less surrounded by hostile neighbours, we would have to devote a tremendous amount of effort to the actual defence of our territory. But because we are part of the North American continent, certain consequences follow. We are neighbour to a super-power against which we could not possibly contemplate defending ourselves successfully. Then again, since it is a super-power, we ourselves can scarcely imagine being attacked from any country outside. In these circumstances Canada can concentrate on doing what it can do well, and upon what it has done well, namely the roles I mentioned at the beginning of my speech.

The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East began his remarks by complimenting the Canadian Armed Forces. I want to compliment them, too. I do not wish my compliments to lessen in any way the force of my plea to the government to squeeze out the waste resulting from the unnecessary roles now being played by the armed services. This is not the fault of the armed services but of the civilian administration. From my experience, and I have travelled with the defence committee through Europe as well as on this continent, I would say that our armed services are a highly professional, highly skilled force which does credit to Canada wherever it happens to be. I was in Cyprus and I saw what they were doing there. They are highly respected on the island. I was in Europe, and whatever we might think of our NATO role we cannot complain of the efficiency of our forces and the high regard in which Canadians are held there. If it is true, as I assert it is, that we are wasting hundreds of millions of dollars on an obsolete system which should be discarded it is up to the government to have the courage to say so and to get out of that particular system.

I have said we have a highly skilled professional armed service. I hope this will always be the case and that they will be well paid for doing their job. This brings me to a point. I would ask the minister to disregard some of the traditional advice he is probably getting and proceed toward conceding to the armed forces of this country the right to collective bargaining with regard to the conditions of their employment. I see no reason why this skilled and responsible group of people should not have the same right as others to present its claims. This has been permitted in other countries, in the Scandinavian countries and, I believe, in West Germany. It is very proper that a highly trained and, I would say, intelligent group of people should be shown this kind of consideration.

The idea is a new one. It sends chills down the spines of certain people with traditional attitudes. They immediately begin to ridicule it by asking: How can you bargain collectively in the middle of a battle? Of course, this is not intended to be suggested. What we are dealing with are peacetime activities and conditions of work of those who from day to day are carrying the burden of service in the military forces. If they do not want to be represented collectively there is no reason why they should be so represented, but if they want to be represented like others who work for the Canadian community they should not be treated as an inferior class. I think I have seen expressions of opinion by the minister in which he appeared to frown upon this idea but I hope he will reconsider it, because an up-to-date force deserves this sort of treatment from the community which employs it.

I began by saying I welcomed the introduction of the subject of national defence into this debate. It is not a subject which has great appeal to those outside, but it is one of tremendous importance to the security of the country and to the taxpayers of the nation. I am looking forward, as all members must be, to the white paper on defence because we as parliamentarians have a responsibility to review carefully the roles and tasks imposed upon our armed services, to provide them with the means to carry out those tasks, and to take away from them tasks which are useless and outmoded.

Mr. John Roberts (York-Simcoe): I, like the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), was delighted when I saw the Official Opposition had placed this motion on the order paper. I thought, as did the hon. member for Greenwood, that it meant the Official Opposition was seizing the opportunity on the eve of the white paper to present to the House of Commons a series of considered views on what it believed the white paper should contain. I thought it would seize this debate as an opportunity to present the Conservative view as to what our national defence policies should be.

I was somewhat surprised, therefore, to find that while the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) did say we should make great changes, and—rather than simply formulate a defence policy with financial limitations in mind—that we should begin with an analysis of the threat facing Canada and on that basis arrive at an appropriate defence policy, he made no analysis of what constituted the threat to Canada in the course of his speech. What he gave us was a rambling survey of certain decisions which had been taken in the past. He wondered about a lot of things. He wondered where we were going to find the resources. He wondered whether our priorities were those which had been outlined on one occasion by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He wondered what we were going to do about NORAD. He wondered what we were going to do about maritime defence. He wondered about our readiness for anti-submarine warfare. In short, there never was a speech more full of wonderment.

On the basis of all this wonderment, what did he produce? Well, he produced some suspicions. He suspected the government was going to do something or, rather, that it was not going to do something. On the basis of suspicion of what the government was not going to do, he attacked the government for not doing what it was not going to do. Instead of a constructive analysis we heard a series of hypotheses, the construction of straw men which the hon. member then tried to knock down. I found myself asking why the hon. member had not waited until the white paper was before the House. At least, he would then have been able to criticize on the basis of definite programs and proposals. But instead of seizing the opportunity to give advice to the minister—and the minister is a reasonable man open to advice, ready, almost to a fault, to accept criticism and constructive comments—the hon. member allowed it to pass by. Here was a chance for the Official Opposition to put in its oar and assist in the consideration of a more sensible and rational defence policy for Canada. I regret the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, a man who is capable of giving this kind of help, chose not to do so. I trust that when the white paper is presented we shall be given a full description of what the Conservative party would present as a defence policy.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I was, however, pleased to hear one point that was made by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, who together with myself was involved in the report of the external affairs committee dealing with maritime affairs. At that time we found ourselves in some disagreement about the approach taken by the Canadian government to maritime defence, particularly in relation to anti-submarine warfare. In one place in his speech to-day he said change indicated that we should take a sceptical look at some of the things we have been doing, particularly in relation to anti-submarine warfare. I was delighted to hear that because that was the view which I presented to the external affairs committee, a view which was attacked specifically at that time by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

Mr. Forrestall: It is the other way round: you attacked my view.

Mr. Roberts: Well, we were in disagreement at that time and I am delighted to see that things have now reached the stage where the hon. member is supporting the position that I took.

On the other hand, I must say that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) presented the kind of speech that in a way I had hoped the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East would present, because he did outline a set of priorities which he felt should determine Canadian policy. While I would not say that he necessarily presented them in the proper order of importance, the priorities that he expressed are the right priorities.

I was particularly pleased with the reference he made to the peacekeeping role. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I was honoured to be chairman of a sub-committee of the external affairs committee which examined in considerable detail this whole problem of peacekeeping. I would like to associate myself entirely with the remarks of the hon. member. I came to exactly the same conclusions as he did; that the peacekeeping role that the Canadian forces have performed with so much distinction in the past is one which is greatly appreciated at the United Nations and by our allies in the western alliance.

This is something that we should continue to do. We have some unique qualifications, both in terms of technical expertise and in terms of a political position, which make us an acceptable peacekeeper in most countries in the world. It would be a very regrettable day if any government ever decided to diminish the emphasis we now place on the maintenance of a peacekeeping capacity for the Canadian Armed Forces.

One of the hon. members taking part in today's debate emphasized that there is still a threat to Canda. If we harken back to the days when NATO was established in the late forties and early fifties, there was then a clear and evident military threat which the countries of the western alliance perceived and came together to defend themselves against. It would be a mistake to consider that the threat is unchanging and that the world has not changed. Perhaps it would be a very conservative view of history, a conservative approach to our forces, if we always concerned ourselves with the threats of yesterday and not with the threats of today. The world has evolved in the 20 years that NATO has existed, and while there is undoubtedly still a threat, the nature of the threat has changed considerably. What has changed even more is the capacity of other western nations to confront that threat.

In the late forties and early fifties Europe was still recovering from the effects of the last war. It had a shattered economy and in some ways a shattered morale, and the kind of participation that we in Canada then undertook in NATO was exceedingly important. In the past 20 years, however, there has been a revival of the European economy. We have seen in relation, for instance, to the freeing of the German mark the enormous present economic strength of Europe. There has been a rebuilding and a revitalization of Europe. We are now in the position, one we were not in in the early 1950's, where the countries of Europe themselves can play a much greater role in sharing the burden of our common defence than they were able to do.

In the passing years Canada, too, has changed. Our perspectives have changed. We have new domestic problems and we also have new interests in foreign affairs, not only the same ones that we had 20 years ago. So our perspective has changed just as at the same time the capacity of Europe to defend itself has changed. Therefore, it is not surprising that after 20 years we should have reassessed our role in NATO.

The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East criticizes us for ignoring the view of our allies. That is not what we did, Mr. Speaker. We consulted with our allies and we talked to them about our problems. We discussed the change in perspective. Of course, they were not exactly joyful at the fact we made a relatively minor reduction in our forces; they were not joyful that they would have to take a bigger share of the burden. But there were consultations and discussions about how these reductions should take place. If we were not to take the position that, after all, the final determining voice in what Canada's defence policy should be is our own assessment of what our interests are, then what kind of defence policy or foreign policy would we have?

Is the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East suggesting that we should never implement a policy that we think to be right simply because our allies are in disagreement with part of it? I suggest that we must be the final determinant of what our defence policy should be. Having come to that decision, it was only right to do what we did, namely to consult our allies on how these force reductions should be implemented, in what area and in what sector.

Mr. Forrestall: There are only two minutes left for you to enlighten us.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says that I have only two minutes remaining in which to enlighten him, and I regret that very much because it would take a lot more than two minutes to enlighten the hon. member. Given the impossibility of the task I will not even try. What I will do instead is to come back to one remark made by the hon. member for Greenwood when he discussed NORAD bomber defence. I agree to some considerable extent with what he said. There has certainly been a diminishment of the bomber threat. At one time I shared his view completely that we could dismantle our protection and defence system; but I also feel that while it is wrong to over-emphasize its role there is still the necessity to maintain a detection and surveillance system, if only to make sure that the bomber threat is a second strike threat and not a first strike threat. At the moment we are in an era where there are considerable technological developments taking place in this particular area, for example, in AWACS—airborne warning and control system—and in over-the-horizon detection systems. I think in view of the uncertainty over what this technology is likely to produce it is best at this time to make no dramatically new decision in the NORAD area.

Where I hope the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) will take a searching look at our commitments is in the realm of anti-submarine warfare. The present concept of strategy that we in the west and the Russians accept is that we should both have a guaranteed second strike capacity. The nuclear balance depends upon both sides knowing that they have the capacity, no matter what comes in the worst way from their point of view, to be able so significantly to destroy the other side that neither party would voluntarily launch an attack upon the other. Within the design of that strategy it is enormously important that the basis for that guaranteed destructive capacity on both sides is the missile attack capacity presently held by submarines. I think it is extremely dangerous for us to try to implement policies that would destroy the credibility of a guaranteed response as a second strike weapon by nuclear submarines. We have not reached that stage yet, and I hope we never will.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it is one o'clock. I gather that before the Chair calls it one o'clock the President of the Privy Council, after having had consultations, would like the consent of the House to revert to motions. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Roberts.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DESIGNATION OF DAY FOR COMMITTEE WORK

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to request a short order to the effect that the House adjourn next Thursday so that the standing committees can make progress with their work and that Thursday, May 27, 1971 be deemed to have been one of the days referred to in standing order 52(5). May I read the order:

That in order to permit the Standing Committee of the House to make progress with their work, when the House adjourns on Wednesday, May 26, 1971, it shall stand adjourned until Friday, May 28, 1971 at 11 o'clock a.m.; and that Thursday, May 27, shall be deemed to have been one of the days referred to in Standing Order 58(1).

• (1:00 p.m.)

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, we agree to this, but I want to say that shutting down the chamber is a serious matter to us. There are many of us on this side of the House, including myself, who do not like this idea as a matter of principle. We tried it before and it did not really accomplish much. This time there is a fairly good mood of co-operation and we have a lot of work to do, some in respect of very contentious bills. We will try it again, without any prejudice to the future. I hope it will serve to concentrate attention on the committees and we can really get down to business. I hope the minister will watch the scheduling on Thursday so there will not be any serious conflicts, and so that some unnecessary committee work can be reduced or eliminated.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) has said, we are reluctant to give up a day's sitting of the House, but I think it is fair to say that all of us who have been involved in the negotiations about this matter agree that we need a few days for important committee work. As for this one day, to which we have already agreed, we support the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Anything else, while the mood is so agreeable?

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED NEED OF DEFENCE POLICY TO DEMONSTRATE WILLINGNESS AND CAPACITY OF CANADA TO CONTRIBUTE TO WORLD PEACE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Forrestall:

That in the opinion of this House the government, having reduced our defence capacity by erosion of our NATO commitment, reduction of our active and reserve forces, and mismanagement of our material and supply requirements, has downgraded our armed forces and led to a questioning of our credibility by our allies.

This House therefore urges the government to declare a defence policy that will clarify the role of our armed forces at home—with particular reference to our north and aid to the civil power—and which will demonstrate our willingness and capacity to contribute to world peace by honouring our alliances.

Mr. Roberts: When I was speaking just before the luncheon break I was trying, at the end of my speech, to give a short sketch of the situation in which Canada finds itself, and to do so in a constructive way. I spoke of how the threat to Canada has evolved, and on the basis of that I attempted to indicate what kind of priorities we should give to our defence policy. The world of the 1970's is very different from the world of the early 1950's when the NATO alliance was established. The defence of Canada has changed and the nature of our perspective has changed. In the post second-world-war period there was the cold war rigidity. We are now in a world which appears much more flexible, a world which is sometimes described as multi-polarized.

Even in the last few weeks we saw dramatic steps forward in adopting a less rigid, more flexible international world perspective. There has been the announcement by Mr. Nixon regarding some hopeful perspectives with regard to ABM. There has been the visit of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to Russia, and a signing there of agreements which will open up channels of communications between our two countries. There has been the entry of the Chinese into world affairs, demonstrating their desire to participate more closely in the international community than has been evidenced in the past. In our own case, there is our interest in internal order, which we did not emphasize so strongly in the 1950's, a concern regrettably made necessary by recent events. There is the whole problem of sovereignty in relation to the Arctic, and a concern over our strong economic interdependence with some of our allies.

In that changed perspective I suggested that the emphasis we should give to our defence policy was as the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) said, a continuing dedication to the concept of peacekeeping and a continuing dedication of our armed forces to maintain their capacity to serve in that way. Our concern should be not to fundamentally revise our NORAD commitments but to wait and see, certainly not to make great expenditures on equipment in the NORAD area. With regard to NATO, we should continue our policy of reduced commitment which is designed, in a flexible way, to use our capacity for things other than simply our participation in NATO defence.

But, more particularly at the end of my remarks I was trying through you, Mr. Speaker, to suggest to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) that we should examine very carefully our role in anti-submarine warfare. I say this for two reasons, the first being that the technology of anti-submarine warfare, with the use of nuclear powered submarines, has entered a new level of research and development, one so costly that in my view it would be doubtful if we could participate in it and bear the financial burden for very long without rethinking our role. My second doubt is related to the basic strategy of mutual deterrence.

• (2:10 p.m.)

This strategy is that both we in the west and Russia depend on having a second strike capacity which can inflict such damage on any potential attacker that that attacker would be effectively discouraged from launching an attack. An important basis for that second strike capacity is the maintenance of a relatively invulnerable submarine launched ballistic missile. If we, through our efforts in anti-submarine warfare, could reach a stage where we could threaten that second strike capacity on the other side, we would have reached a very unstable level of deterence. Therefore, it seems to me inappropriate for us to spend vast sums of money on making effective our anti-submarine warfare capability because success would be contrary to our interests. We should not be seeking to undermine the Russian second strike capacity because of the danger involved that their consequent insecurity could lead to pre-emptive acts destructive to peace.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in the maritime field, instead of concentrating our efforts on anti-submarine warfare we should be making our maritime forces into a "super Canadian Coast Guard." I believe this is the role they should play, and it will become one of increasing importance in view of the new developments in the Arctic. It is a role which would fit in well with what the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) described as the maintenance of Canadian sovereignty.

In the new climate of international affairs Canada has a great opportunity to play a useful role through both its foreign and defence policies. Our defence policy should provide us with flexible military capability adequate to maintain our society at home and to participate in peacekeeping operations through the United Nations and, more moderately but still effectively, be sufficient to support our allies in the western alliance in the maintenance of our mutual security interests.

National Security Measures

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part in this debate which, I think, is most important since it deals with current events. In fact, the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) is now on a visit to the Soviet Union and it seems that discussions are under way regarding NATO, of which Canada is a member, and the Warsaw Pact, of which Russia is the most important member.

Mr. Speaker, the motion before us allows us to question the whole defence system as well as the unity of the countries which take part in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, not only as regards defence but also political and economic co-operation.

Therefore, I think that it would be advisable to ask ourselves whether it was necessary for us to belong to NATO. A group of countries does not join in such a treaty without motives. And I think that what motivated this decision by democratic countries resulted from the action of a country which is considered as an enemy and wants to have its totalitarian communist ideology applied throughout the world.

It is the success of the communist block which induced several countries, including Canada, to get together in order to defend themselves against the encroachments of the Soviet Union. Mr. Speaker, as World War II brought about the defeat of two big military and industrial powers, Germany and Japan, as well as the weakening of several others, Russia decided to take advantage of the situation to extend its control over Europe.

The Soviet territorial expansion had begun during the war with the annexation of Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania and certain parts of Finland, Poland, Rumania, North-East Germany and East Czechoslovakia, a total of 500,000 square kilometers of land inhabited by more than 23 million people.

This is why Paul-Henri Spaak was saying in 1948 that only one large country had emerged from the war with conquests, that is the Soviet Union. This territorial expansion was pursued after the defeat of Germany and completed by a control policy over the East European countries.

The presence of victorious Russian armies at the core of Europe and the communist infiltration in the so-called governments of "national front" subjected Albania, Bulgaria, Rumania, East Germany, Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia to Russian domination, a total area of some 1,020,000 square kilometers, with over 90 million inhabitants.

How was this conquest achieved without war? From early 1947, the communist party launched a violent campaign in Hungary against the party of small land-holders and denunciations and other methods resulted in a great number of arrests.

The Nagy government resigned on May 29 and while the new elections did not give the communist party majority it did become the party with most members in the House. The government, thus infiltrated, proclaimed the dissolution of opposition parties on November 21, 1947.

In Bulgaria, the operation was conducted in a similar fashion. Nicolas Pethov, head of the agrarian party and a member of the opposition, was accused of having fostered a military coup d'état. He was indicted, condemned on August 16, 1947 and died by hanging on September 23.

The peasant party, accused of fascism, had been dissolved on August 26. On November 22, the administration of the country was reorganized on the Soviet model. On December 11, 1947, Dinvetrov formed a predominantly communist cabinet.

In Rumania, following an election whose results the Anglo-Saxons did not recognize, members of the opposition were accused of having tried to overturn the democratic system. The peasant party was dissolved on October 10, 1947 and its leader, Dr. Manier, was sentenced to life imprisonment on October 29.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mrs. Anna Pauker, who had prepared herself for the job in Moscow during the war, succeeded Mr. Tataresco, and King Michael had to resign on January 1, 1948.

In Poland, peasant party leader Mikolayezyk, had to resign because of threats to his life. He had to leave his country in November 1947. The communists then took over completely.

In Czechoslovakia the government in Prague which had welcomed the Marshall plan had to change its mind and reconsider its decision after Mr. Gottwald and Mr. Masaryk made an hurried trip to Moscow in July 1947. By intrigues and false accusations they forced Benes to resign in order to set up a communist regime.

Thus, in less than a year, Moscow had managed to bring into subjection the governments of Budapest, Bucharest, Sofia, Warsaw and Prague. The communist party had absolute or almost absolute power in all those capitals where opposition had been swept away. All the Kremlin had to do was to co-ordinate on the international level the action of these governments and to set up a satellite block under Moscow's rule.

Besides, strong pressures were exerted directly and indirectly by the Soviet Union in several other parts of the world, especially in Northern Iran, in Turkey, in Greece, where guerilla warfare which had started in 1944 turned out in 1946 to be a genuine war in which the rebels were getting their reinforcements from bases located in neighbouring communist states, in Asia where the Soviet Union greatly increased its influence in 1945 with the occupation of the greater part of Manchuria and North Korea.

Furthermore, communist agitation was felt in the whole of South-East Asia, in Indochina, in Malaysia, in Burma and in the Philippines where strikes and disorder were stirred up to the point of actual guerilla warfare. Everywhere the local communist parties under orders from Moscow, managed to strengthen Soviet policies by means of well-organized propaganda and steady opposition to any western positions which opposed Soviet objectives. These local communist parties could well be regarded as the fifth column in this cold war.

On Russia's instigation, the communist countries even created in 1947 the Kominform, a communist replica of the Marshall plan, but for a contrary purpose. By late 1947, agitation and strikes intensified a concerted and virulent form of opposition. There were also persistent efforts to infiltrate all branches of activity in western countries, particularly trade unions in France and Italy.

Was this not sufficient to incite countries which did not want communist rule to seek a means of curbing this hunger for domination and subversion? This is why the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was created on April 4, 1949, in Washington.

Originally, NATO was composed of Belgium, Canada, Denmark, the United States, France, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, the Netherlands, Portugal and the United Kingdom. Greece and Turkey joined the alliance in February 1952, whereas West Germany officially became a member on May 9, 1955.

In 1963, the alliance covered an area of 1,112,633 square miles in Europe and over 7 million square miles in North America, for a total of 8,579,659 square miles with a population of 493 million people.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization is not only a military alliance to prevent or repel aggression, but also the establishement of permanent co-operation in the political, economic and social fields.

The signatory countries were therefore committing themselves, pursuant to the United Nations Charter, to maintain international peace and security and develop stability and welfare in the North Atlantic area.

Article 1 of the United Nations Charter provides indeed that the purposes of the alliance are to maintain peace, develop friendly relations among nations and achieve international co-operation in solving international economic and social problems.

The 1949 alliance made it possible for some small European countries which were still in a state of economic and military weakness to get together in the interest of common defence with the help of the United States and Canada. Without these two partners, NATO would not have been born or would have been left helpless, especially on the economic side. Indeed, the United States made quite a contribution with their shipments of materiel and by setting up a procurement system for the various European countries, thus giving assistance to the industrial development of western Europe. NATO's efforts were mainly aimed at establishing a deterrent to make it clear to its possible enemies that an attack against any member of the alliance would turn out to be a losing proposition. This policy has proved successful so far and the U.S.S.R. has been retained within its boundaries.

I think NATO should be maintained. In Europe, there is no question about it since political stability is still a long way from having been achieved.

Hon. members will no doubt remember the 1968 events when Czechoslovakia, a Warsaw Pact member state, expressed its wish to withdraw and to democratize its institution, to "desocialize" so to speak; Russia did not hesitate to restore order in the country and bring the lost sheep back to the herd.

We must now ask ourselves whether the reasons which urged us to set the NATO alliance back in 1949 are still valid today, whether the threat of aggression or extended domination of the world by the U.S.S.R. has ceased to exist and whether we can now consider the possibility of reducing or even withdrawing our involvement in the NATO forces. In my mind, the threat is still very real and we must be careful in our behaviour within NATO. We knew what we were doing and we had very specific reasons when we joined the alliance. I suggest that no decrease in our armed forces and no drastic changes should take place without previous consultations with the other NATO members.

We should also closely watch the implementation of the Warsaw Pact, particularly the actions of its main proponents. Witnessing the Russians' armament development, both marine and nuclear, is enough to make us wonder about their objectives. No country would arm itself as Russia does presently without a precise purpose. Armament is as costly in Russia as in the United States, in Canada or in any European country. For instance, in 1968-1969 Russian nuclear armament was inferior to American weaponry and we know now that by mid-70 Russia had not only caught up with the United States in the nuclear armament race but had actually overtaken them.

We know about the growing atomic submarine force of Russia. I will repeat what Camilien Houde said when he was Montreal's mayor at the beginning of the 1939-45 war: "Armament is not made for Christmas trees". Russians are not getting armed for decorating purposes: they have a precise objective.

Because of this, we should be careful about our decisions regarding NATO and Canada, as a member country, should respect its commitments, even if certain changes should be made in several areas.

A French general was saying to us when the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence visited France that in days of yore, when peple used to fight with spears and swords, the only thing that could not be done with such weapons was to sit on them. Now the only thing one can do with nuclear arms is to sit on them.

According to a news report, the nuclear stock accumulated by the two camps facing each other in this cold war is equal to 15 tons of TNT for each and every human being, quite enough to destroy the whole world.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should try to find out the position we should take in such circumstances. I believe we should try to convince politicians from all countries, especially those of the great camps facing each other, to come to a peaceful agreement. Not so long ago, there were two great camps: one directed by the United States and the other by Russia. And now, communist China is also playing an important part among the military powers. The ideal would be to be able to convince the leaders of those countries to give less attention to the development of destructive weapons and put their minds more to the means enabling all the people under their rule to live and reach their full development.

It is said that two thirds of the people suffer from hunger and lack the bare necessities of life. Instead of spending so much money, taxing people and putting them to work to manufacture nuclear armaments, we should increase grants for the development of natural resources to be put at the disposal of all those claiming a right to live.

In conclusion, I shall recall comments that were published in a bulletin that Catholics find a church every Sunday. In fact, the "Sunday Missal" in 1968 reported as follows:

"We do spend $6 billion each year for development projects, and this reluctantly. We earmark $150 billion per year for weapons and we find that normal", said Barbara Ward concerning thhe 1967 budget. Since then, such expenses have increased.

Such spiralling figures are astounding. Let us simplify them: They mean that we spend 25 times as much for armaments as for development. On this planet, we make in a single day $411 million worth of weaponry.

And this happens every day.

While in Bombay in 1964 as well as in his Encyclical on the Development of Humanity, Paul VI denounced this "unbearable scandal" and requested the establishment of a world fund that would be supported by part of the military expenses. But the race continued.

Mr. Speaker, much more attention should be given to development. We should promote the rewarding aspects of life instead of the development of means of destruction. As long as men do not decide to amend their ways, to reduce armament designed to achieve destruction or prevent aggression, we must be on our guard.

• (2:30 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion in over one year that defence matters have been discussed in the House of Commons itself. This debate is particularly appropriate in view of developments of the last few days and headlines which have appeared in today's newspapers.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) complained that the lead-off speaker for our party, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) had not produced a white paper for the guidance of the government. I think it is expecting rather much of an hon. member to do that in half an hour when that task has taken the government upwards of two years. The government has not succeeded in bringing that white paper forward yet. I will not outline again, as I have done several times in past years, my own views with regard to what Canada's general policy might be in this field. In the few minutes at my disposal I intend, rather, to deal with two or three specific matters, which are about all that time will allow. First, I should like to say that the present trip of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to Russia, the statements he has made there and the protocol on consultations which was signed two days ago in Moscow are all of great significance in the discussion of Canadian defence policy. The preamble to that agreement, as it appears in the appendix to yesterday's Hansard, is in terms to which no one can take objection. Matters such as promoting the preservation of peace, endeavouring to improve relations in the fields of economy, trade, science, technology, culture and northern development and protecting the environment of the Arctic and the subArctic areas are matters to which no exception can be taken. I think everyone will agree with that. However, when you come to the actual terms of the protocol itself, important questions arise. One wonders what will be the effect of some of the conditions laid down. I refer in particular to condition No. 3 which reads:

The provisions set forth in paragraphs 1 and 2 above do not affect obligations previously assumed by the parties in respect of third states and are not directed against any of them.

One wonders whether that paragraph refers to actions which may be directed against NATO. It may be that it refers to actions on the part of Russia directed against China. I do not know. It is difficult to tell what the meaning of that is. I think we need an explanation of that paragraph.

Generally, however, I would say this: This cosying up to Russia at the present time, when one considers the implications that that may have so far as defence arrangements and the national security of Canada are concerned, could have very far reaching effects indeed. High sounding declarations such as are contained in the preamble to the protocol on consultations are all very well and sound good, I suppose, to almost everybody. However, in my view the basic facts of the world situation must be the ones that we must primarily keep in our minds. The question immediately arises, what are those basic world considerations, particularly as far as our defence and security are concerned.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the first and most important of these considerations is that the only real threat to Canadian security or to the security of all countries of the western world at present comes from the Soviet Union. That is the only real threat to our independence, security and so forth. China may be a threat in future; she is not too much of a threat at present. Since the nuclear capability and very large armed forces of the Soviet Union constitute the only real threat to the security of the western world, the inescapable conclusion is that the NATO alliance of the western world, which has been the chief deterrent to aggressive actions on the part of the Soviet Union towards western countries, must be maintained in a state of strength. Any actions which are taken—and this may be one of them—which will weaken that alliance I think are directly contrary to the interests of this country and the interests of the western world as a whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harkness: I see no indication whatever that the intentions of the Soviet Union have changed. Their announced intentions have been to spread communism throughout the world. Their actions since the second world war have demonstrated their determination to do this, and they have the military capability for doing it as far as eastern Europe is concerned. The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) outlined some of the aggressive activities of the Soviet Union since the end of the second world war. The moves in Hungary and Czechoslovakia and the general tight control exercised over all the countries of eastern Europe are some of the examples he mentioned.

• (2:40 p.m.)

In addition, there is the failure of the Soviet Union to grant any measure of independence to the countries of Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and the Ukraine. In recent years, there has been a supply of weapons, military and expert personnel in large measure to Egypt and the Arab countries. There has been expanding naval strength in the Mediterranean, the Arabian Sea and into the Indian Ocean. These are not activities which indicate peaceful intentions or the desire, as is frequently expressed, for detente and a movement toward more peaceful relations in the world. These are indications that the Soviet Union is still determined to expand its power and influence.

These are the facts which we must bear in mind. We must not lull ourselves into a state of euphoria over such things as the announcement of the president of the United States yesterday that the Soviet Union and the United States are going to discuss limiting the construction of ABM systems. I think nearly everybody applauds that intention and hopes it will be successful. However, we must bear in mind that disarmament talks have been going on for the past 15 to 20 years, and the actual results have been rather limited. In fact, the only real result which I can think of is discontinuing above ground nuclear testing. In spite of the disarmament talks that have been taking place over this long period of time, the nuclear strength of the two opposing sides has continued to increase. There has been no decrease in the conventional forces of the Warsaw pact countries of which I am aware.

In view of these facts, I find it very disturbing to read the following headlines in today's Globe and Mail:

PM feels protocol with Russia will aid Canada's independence.

The headline in today's Gazette reads:

'Because of overpowering presence of the U.S.'

PM vows solid Soviet links

Must diversify relations to save Canadian culture

The article reads:

Prime Minister Trudeau yesterday made clear the full extent to which he plans to change the direction of Canadian foreign policy and said Canada has much to learn from the Soviet Union.

He placed the new entente between Canada and the U.S.S.R. in the context of Canada's quest for independence from the United States,—

When you read these things, you begin to wonder who the Prime Minister thinks our friends are and who are our enemies. If things continue this way, we will have to get a new program to find out where we stand or what is the situation. Who thinks that closer contact with the Soviet Union is going to save and improve Canadian culture? That country is extending its armed might into the Middle East at the present time. It is keeping the Middle East conflict alive and holding down the population of eastern Europe. Is that the kind of culture we want to absorb into this country? It is ridiculous to see headlines along the lines of "Canada has much to learn". What do we have to learn from Russia in relation to the things I have just mentioned? As a matter of fact, I think the Russians have a great deal to learn from us from the point of view of man's humanity to man, civil rights and things like that. We have very little to learn from them, particularly from those points of view.

Believing that the greatest threat to Canada comes from the United States and that we can counteract that with closer links with Russia is completely contrary to the facts of life. The United States' nuclear strategic deterrent is our greatest protection against Russian aggressiveness and will undoubtedly continue to be so. It is certainly in our interest to maintain the best of relations with the United States and not make statements which tend to make the people of the United States think that we believe they are our enemies. Surely, we must know that they are not our enemies. They are our closest neighbour and greatest friend. We are not only dependent on them to a large extent for our defence, but, to a large extent, economically.

It may be that many people think that there has been such an influence on Canadian thinking and culture generally by United States publications, television, radio and so forth and because there has been a considerable amount of investment of American funds in Canada. However, that investment of American funds in Canada is, to quite an extent, the reason we have the standard of living which we have at the present time, as well as the amount of development which has actually taken place in Canada. To confuse the issue by giving the general impression abroad that the greatest threat to Canada is from the United States is the opposite of the truth. In my opinion, it is the height of nonsense. So much for those particular matters.

There is one other matter I should like to mention. Yesterday, questions were asked in the House as to whether the statements by the Prime Minister and the protocol mean a further withdrawal from NATO by Canada. The Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) said it did not. I certainly hope that proves to be the case. Headlines along these lines only give rise to serious fears that that will be the situation and, I am sure, have disturbed all of our allies in NATO.

I might point out, to speak more directly to the terms of the motion, that our unilateral reduction in our forces in NATO has already had quite a serious effect along these lines. Some of our allies in NATO wonder how sincere we are and to what extent we are going to play a meaningful part in that alliance. Although the actual number of men in the Canadian forces was cut to about half of what it was before, the actual reduction in the contribution we were making to NATO was cut down much closer to 1/10th or 1/20th of what it had been. We had a heavy brigade. It was equipped with an Honest John battery and a tank regiment. Its fire power, effectiveness and so on was much greater than twice the capability of the new lightly armed combat group which we are supposed to have there. At the same time, the air division which we had in a strike-reconnaissance role had a very considerable fire power. It had a considerable deterrent effect and a considerable potential in the event of hostilities actually breaking out. I suppose we shall have two squadrons of reconnaissance planes. The minister says three. But if there are three they will be small squadrons, considerably smaller than those we had been maintaining in the air division. No fighting power, merely reconnaissance planes to take pictures and so on. Instead of being cut down to half, those squadrons have been cut down to a tenth or a twentieth of what they were in terms of effectiveness. This is what disturbs our allies. It leaves us very far from playing the part we should be playing in NATO at the present time. I certainly hope there will be no further reductions. This whole business of the agreement with the Russians and so on causes one to believe that what Russia is doing is using this as a means of weakening NATO, which has always been one of her long term objectives. It is a question we cannot help asking.

• (2:50 p.m.)

To turn to another matter, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) urged the minister to agree to our servicemen being allowed to join some form of union. I hope very strongly that the minister and the government will give no consideration whatever to that idea. On the basis of a fair amount of military experience, both in peace and in war, I cannot conceive of anything which would be more likely to lead to a breakdown in discipline and to difficulties of all kinds than for military forces to be unionized and become part of the Public Service Alliance of Canada. I certainly hope the government will pay no attention to these pleas from Mr. Edwards, I think it is, and others who support his ideas along that line. The maintenance of good discipline and morale is the basis of effective action on the part of any military unit. These qualities are difficult enough to maintain in peacetime as it is, and the introduction of an element such as was proposed by the hon. member would make it even harder to sustain discipline, keep up morale and maintain effective units. I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are rising to your feet.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): First, I should like to express my appreciation to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) on behalf of the Canadian Armed Forces for their kind remarks complimentary to the forces on their excellent work during the period October, November and December last.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I also, on a personal note, express appreciation to those hon. members and to the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), as well as to the representative of the Creditiste party for the amicable relationship which we have enjoyed since I assumed this portfolio? I think this establishes that it is possible to express effective and searching opposition on these questions without any personal animus. I certainly appreciate the spirit with which we have been able to conduct this relationship between each other. May I also express my appreciation to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East for having provided an occasion, the first since I have been Minister of National Defence, upon which to talk about defence matters on the floor of the House.

In the course of his remarks, the hon. member enumerated the problems which he foresaw on the defence scene and suggested these should be dealt with in the white paper. I am obliged to him for doing so. We agree to a substantial extent as to what the problems are, even if we do not agree as to what the solutions may be. I hope to be able to answer his questions more effectively when the white paper is made public. The white paper is now before the cabinet. From my standpoint it would have been easier, I suppose,—I hope it would have been easier—if it had been possible to make the white paper public in time for this debate, but such is the volume of business before my colleagues that I regret it has not been possible to finalize consideration of that document. I hope it will be done shortly.

May I take the occasion to comment on the study of military questions in the House? During the first three sessions of this Parliament, with regard to questions on national defence and related matters of foreign policy, I believe the opportunities which members have had for studying these matters and for seeking information and advice on them, and for arriving at appropriate conclusions, have been unexampled. It is perfectly obvious from the value of the reports which the committee has delivered, for example the extremely valuable one on peacekeeping, the report on Maritime Command and those on NATO and NORAD, that this work has been of great assistance to me in the discharge of my functions as Minister of National Defence, particularly in helping to crystalize some of the defence policy issues which are outstanding for decision at this time. I think it is only fair to take the occasion to compliment the members of the Parliamentary Centre for Foreign Affairs and Foreign Trade, Mr. Dobell, Mrs. Seaborn, Mr. Payne and their colleagues, who for the last several years have been of such assistance in bringing before the committee informed persons from this country and other parts of the world to discuss questions of defence policy.

In the course of today's debate a number of hon. members have made observations on defence policy and asked questions to which it is reasonable to expect some response. As to the general tenor and presentation of the speech made by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, I really cannot improve on the comments which were made by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) who dealt in an effective manner with what the hon. member had to say. I would suggest, though, that there is a further serious defect in the hon. member's remarks, that is, his failure to come to terms with the serious financial questions which are involved in the political exercise of balancing defence expenditure against expenditure on other aspects of the economy.

Mr. Forrestall: That is your problem.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): He advocates the spending of millions of dollars more on the enhancement of Maritime Command. But he gave no reason for doing so. One suspects they might not be unrelated to the fact that a great many of his electors are associated with that command. It might have been good politics but there was a total absence of policy in what he had to say. He suggested that millions of dollars ought to be spent in a number of defence areas but he failed completely to come to grips with the serious question which arises at the political level—how much of a national budget should be allocated to defence and how much to other needs. Indeed, I was left wondering whether he was advocating a tax increase, a reduction in other programs unspecified, or some other solution. Where is the money to come from which would be needed to carry out the virtual doubling of defence spending which he suggests?

The hon. member referred to a defence budget of nearly $2 billion as representing an insignificant amount. Well, it impresses me as being a very substantial sum to have to provide. I really cannot agree with the approach he has taken here. I am sure we would have been interested to have heard from the hon. member about the priorities in respect of which substantial additional sums ought to be expended, and the way in which they would be provided.

Mr. Forrestall: We want to know what you have to say.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member says he and his friends want to know what I have to say. Our priorities were set out in the statement of April 3, 1969. Again I would remind the hon. member that the first priority in terms of Canada's defence forces is to provide for the protection of Canadian sovereignty and the maintenance of Canada's internal security. In effect, these are the priorities that were set out by the hon. member for Greenwood in his speech.

• (3:00 p.m.)

At some stage there seemed to be a lingering opinion, even among official opposition members, that somehow this should not be the first priority of Canadian defence policy. We are talking about protecting our own territory, maintaining surveillance and control over our own territory, maintaining our internal security and doing these things ourselves. If we do not do these things ourselves, we cannot ask anybody else to do them for us. Therefore, this must be our first priority and any state should plan its defence policy on that basis.

I found the statement of the hon. member for Greenwood helpful in the sense that he set out to state priorities. I found myself in total agreement with his first two, as I have said—namely, the preservation of internal order and the defence of Canadian sovereignty. I also found myself in substantial agreement with his general statement of a third priority, contribution to international order, though I would disagree in regard to some aspects. In his remarks I think he disagreed with the notion that Canada can still play a role in protecting the deterrent so that a stable nuclear balance results. Obviously we disagree with his opinion in this regard, though we agree with the essential proposition that he put forward, namely, that the best way of ensuring the defence of Canada ultimately is by making an effective contribution to international order.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness) who preceded me gave us a first-class flashback to vintage 1950 "cold war" days. The thrust of his speech was: Who thinks that the west has anything to gain from opening negotiations with the U.S.S.R.? Well, Richard Nixon thinks so. Willi Brandt thinks so. The NATO alliance thinks so. But apparently the hon. member for Calgary Centre does not think so, and presumably he was speaking for his party in this regard. I would remind the hon. gentleman, and his colleagues, of the statement made by Sir Winston Churchill, that in the question of international security it is far better to jaw, jaw, jaw, than to have war, war, war.

Mr. Harkness: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I object very much to the attempt of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) to put into my mouth words that were not there. To start with, I said that trying to work toward peace, to increase trade and the other matters contained in the preamble of this protocol, everybody could agree with and that I agreed with them.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman can interpret his speech any way he wants, but the fact of the matter is—

Mr. Harkness: Hansard has the report of my speech.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Hansard may well have it—but in fact he was deprecating the opening of negotiations, whether bilateral or otherwise, with the Soviet Union. I think Hansard will establish that whatever he may say now, that is what he said at the time. The hon. member asked: Who thinks that the west has anything to gain from these negotiations? I put it to him again, Richard Nixon thinks so. Flashing back to the hon. member's vintage speech of the 1950s, it will be recalled that Richard Nixon at that time was not exactly a flaming left winger. During the period of time that these negotiations have been carried on, the United States has pressed forward with the strategic arms limitation talks. However, the hon. gentleman seemed to deprecate progress there, though I think we all stand to gain from those talks.

Mr. Harkness: I said I hoped we would gain from them.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Then he deprecated progress at the disarmament meetings and asked what they had established. We have established the treaty banning atmospheric testing. I would also remind him of the treaty prohibiting the use of the seabed for military purposes, as well as the treaty against the use of nuclear weapons in outer space. Then there is the forthcoming treaty, we hope, regarding bacteriological warfare. I agree that progress in the disarmament meetings has not been as great as we would have liked, but I think the hon. member does a disservice to the progress already made in deprecating it in the way he did.

I would also refer to the initiatives taken by President Nixon bilaterally with the Soviet Union, not only in regard to SALT but with regard to the Middle East, as well as the negotiations being conducted by the three occupying powers in Berlin and the Soviet Union.

I should also like to say something about Willi Brandt, who after all is not notoriously pro-communist either. If the hon. member will recall the vintage years from which he springs, Willi Brandt was the leading spokesman for Berlin at the time of the Berlin blockade. Willi Brandt and his Ostpolitik recognized that if there is to be a solution to the question of security in Europe, negotiations have to be opened bilaterally with the east.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And he is in real trouble with it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member says he is in real trouble. I suppose that if I were asked to form a judgment as to who knows better the affairs of West Germany, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) or Willi Brandt, the answer would be obvious. Let me also remind the hon. member for Calgary Centre that the parties to NATO have decided on mutual and balanced force reductions as a desirable step, and that it should be an initiative taken by the alliance. The NATO countries have been in close co-operation in the development of a plan to bring about a European security conference. Virtually everyone on the international scene is in favour of negotiations with the Soviet Union to try to lower the temperature of international crises, with the possible exception of the official opposition in this Parliament.

Mr. Harkness: I myself said nothing to the contrary. Forget the red herrings and come to the thrust of my argument.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am always concerned that I might be dull, but I am at least glad to have attracted the attention of the hon. member.

There are a few further points I should like to make about the motion itself. I refer to the second paragraph of this rather rambling grab-bag of criticisms expressed in the somewhat ungrammatical terms of the motion. The hon. member refers to the north and aid to the civil power and argues that the role of the armed forces requires clarification, and that they are ineffective. I would suggest to him that having been in the north with me last weekend, and he having had the advantage that I have not yet had of taking a northern surveillance flight, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East should know better than to make that particular reference. Let me remind him of the great change during the last several years in government policy in regard to the involvement of the armed forces in Canada's north.

Mr. Forrestall: Do you consider 59 people in the north to be our commitment there?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member knows better than that. He was in the north during an operation under the control of those 59 people and he knows that the full resources of the Canadian armed forces are available at the direction of northern headquarters as and when they are needed in the north.

Mr. Forrestall: Why don't you give us the real facts?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member made his speech this morning, and although he may feel it was not a good one he should at least let me make mine. He and I have just returned from the opening of the northern region headquarters which will be the co-ordination centre for Canadian armed forces who go to the north. These activities have been much intensified over the last several years. For example, there are Arctic surveillance flights on a regular basis now from Canadian Forces Base Comox and from Greenwood to provide for continuous aerial surveillance of the Arctic.

There has also been intensified training in the north, both summer and winter, for mobile command land forces in the New Viking exercises, so that in course of time all Canadian land forces and combat troops will have experience of exercises of this kind in the north.

• (3:10 p.m.)

There has been an involvement of the Corps of Engineers from Chilliwack in the construction of the Ogilvie River bridge on the Dempster highway. So we have been giving some attention and interest to other proposals put forward to us to have further use made of talents, particularly of the engineers, in connection with work in the north. There is the suggestion, for example, of Mayor Paul Kaeser of Fort Smith that DND assistance might be forthcoming in the construction of a highway program through Wood Buffalo National Park, to which we have been giving some study. There has been the construction of six new airstrips in conjunction with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I think one of my colleagues will be commenting on that in due course.

Last year the Maritime Command held the first anti-submarine exercise in far northern waters since 1961. That squadron operated into Hudson Bay. The operation will be repeated this year both as a training exercise and, with the fleet support ship involved, to re-supply ports and civil installations along the west coast of Hudson Bay. CF-5 aircraft have been operating in the north in connection with trials at Frobisher Bay and land forces operations there. In other words, the northern region headquarters is a headquarters control centre which has assigned to it the responsibility of tasking a large number of units and personnel from other commands of the Canadian armed forces in the north for the purpose of carrying out operations there and creating an effective Canadian presence, particularly in the northernmost part.

With regard to the suggestion that the forces have been downgraded and have become less effective, this is an echo of the remarks I recall being made in this House at the time of the armed forces unification debate. They are remarks which have emanated particularly from the official opposition and from certain spokesmen outside the House in recent years.

I suppose the best answer to the arguments that the forces are less effective and incapable of carrying forward their tasks are the words of congratulation which the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forestall) used when speaking of the forces' performance last fall. Perhaps the best answer to all these criticisms that the forces are no longer effective or capable of doing their job is the fact that they are not only capable of doing it, but have done it very effectively before the eyes of 22 million Canadians. They have done so not only in the past year at home, but also abroad.

Let me point out as an example the involvement of the officers and men of Air Transport Command during the Peruvian operation in which Canadian Caribou and Buffalo aircraft were the only aircraft capable of operating under these difficult conditions. They won the respect and regard of all governments involved, particularly the Peruvian government which decorated the officers. I might mention the similarly effective and quick support given by Air Transport Command in assisting flood victims of East Pakistan. This is a very effective force and one that is extremely capable, upon short notice, to turn its hand to any one of many tasks planned for it and for which it has been trained.

An hon. Member: What if they had to do two things at the same time?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Let me point out to the hon. member that they have been doing two things at the same time. As a matter of fact, they have been doing many things at the same time. Let me point out, with regard to the land forces role in Canada and elsewhere, that the troops were involved in the events in Quebec, which the hon. member may not have noticed but which was noticed by everybody else in the country, while at the same time they were involved in a peacekeeping operation in Cyprus and in the NATO role in Europe. In other words, they were not only doing two things at the same time, but three—and doing them very well in each case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I suppose hon. members think they are helping their case by deprecating their forces, but I think the actions of the forces speak much more vividly than hon. members' words.

Mr. Marshall: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Marshall: I think the minister should be a little more statesmanlike. Perhaps he should join the forces and learn something about—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to get into a parliamentary debate, he should be tough enough to accept the give and take of it. I would point out that the hon. members has questioned the effectiveness of the forces, not only in respect of their training but also of their equipment. Perhaps I should remind him again of the evolution of the forces.

An hon. Member: Not training equipment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will speak in terms of the equipment and point out, for example, with regard to Maritime Command, an area in respect of which he knows something, we have four new destroyers in the service and three new operational support ships. He has suggested that we need a submarine. Let me remind him that we have four now. He said we needed a submersible, and I remind him that we have one. Our equipment is very well suited for the roles we have to play. One interesting thing in connection with anti-submarine operations and the development of helicopter destroyers—Canada is taking a lead among NATO countries in this regard. As he knows, the devices which have been developed by Maritime Command for the purpose of operating helicopters from ships at sea are really among the most interesting aspects of our forces to other navies. The United States navy in particular is following closely this Canadian lead in establishing helicopter destroyers as a principal anti-submarine weapon.

I think it is fair, in regard to land forces, to point out how infinitely better off we are than we were, for example, in 1963. The infantry battalions in 1963 were mounted exclusively in wheeled vehicles with very limited cross-country mobility. We had no amphibious capability and we were without any night-time fighting aids whatsoever. Today, battalions have one company mounted in amphibious armoured personnel carriers which are equipped with infrared night driving and fighting aids. There are also night surveillance services in all battalions. Equipment and personnel weapons have improved as well. So the hon. member is not quite as current on Canadian armament and mechanism as he should be.

I have already referred to the very considerable achievements of the Canadian armed forces in the air. Let me compare the situation of 1960 with 10 years later. At that time, as the hon. member for Calgary Centre will recall, we had no operational close-support aircraft. We only had 25 light, two-man observation helicopters, no appropriate practical airlift and a strategic lift of 12 Yukons, 23 flying boxcars and four Hercules. Today we have two squadrons of CF-5 tactical fighter bombers and we have taken delivery of the first of 50 utility, 14-passenger helicopters. We have 16 large 28-passenger helicopters and we are getting 74 new observation helicopters. We have 15 Buffalo aircraft and 23 Hercules as well as five 707 jet transports.

The hon. member, in saying that the forces are less effective and not equipped to carry out their role, is not being at all factual. Our forces are very well equipped. It is precisely because of the advanced and carefully planned nature of this equipment that we have been able in the last several years to perform so superlatively the tasks we have undertaken.

Mr. Nowlan: Were the F-5 and the Bonaventure planned operations?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would agree with the hon. member in respect of the Bonaventure, but he and his colleagues think we should still retain an aircraft carrier in service.

Mr. Nowlan: Were they planned?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It was a bad plan. The difference is, we have learned from that bad plan and the hon. member apparently has not. Whether you are talking about the United States or the United Kingdom, the fact of the matter is that it is recognized that the day of the aircraft carrier has passed. This is recognized by other states, but apparently not by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues.

Mr. Nowlan: Was the F-5 well planned, or is that another white elephant?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Let me point out to the hon. member that he is not correct. In other states, for example in the Netherlands, which have bought the F-5 aircraft, the NF-5, which is constructed in this country, it has been decided that this close-tactical aircraft is eminently suited for the task for which it was acquired.

• (3:20 p.m.)

In summary, I appreciate the opportunity to set out in a general way the response to some of the points which have been made in this debate. What the hon. member pointed out is hardly significant at this time unless the hon. member who moved the motion is prepared to crystallize some of the issues in the debate, which he did not. I hope to be able to deal with some of the issues again when we bring forth the white paper.

Mr. Brewin: Before the minister resumes his seat, would he be willing to answer a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Brewin: Is there intention to raise in the white paper the subject which I raised that of the continuance of Canada in NORAD and the possibility of saving up to $200 million a year if we are able to get out of what we think is an obsolete commitment?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The white paper does intend to deal with that matter. However, I think I have to correct the figures mentioned by the hon. member. As I recall, the expenditure for Air Defence Command is somewhere in the nature of $105 million. I acknowledge that this is a lot of money and I do not regard it as insignificant, as does, apparently, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. We intend to deal with that question. How we will deal with it, I cannot say to the hon. member, but this is really one of the central questions in Canadian defence policy to which we will have to address ourselves at this time.

I would like to thank the House again for the opportunity to exchange views on some of these points. I will follow with interest comments which other hon. members make so that we may perhaps be able to continue this debate at a future time when we have before us the forthcoming statement on defence policy.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I point out that the minister has one minute left of the time permitted him. If the hon. member's question goes beyond that time the consent of the House will have to be obtained.

Mr. Forrestall: I am sure we will give consent to the minister if he will answer this question. Would he indicate to us briefly, since most of us anticipated that he would, when we might expect the white paper? While I am on my feet may I remind him that I never said the amount was insignificant. I said that it reflected the insignificant thought and attention paid to it by the government.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I say, on the latter point, that I noted very carefully what the hon. gentleman said. We will see what appears in Hansard. With regard to the timing of the white paper, as I indicated it is now before cabinet. I hope that before the House rises for the summer it will be available, but of course it depends on the dispatch of other business, in particular the preparation for the constitutional conference and the taxation bill. But I hope we might have it available prior to the summer recess.

Mr. Nowlan: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member but first of all, as I have indicated, may I point out that the minister's time has just expired. Is there consent of the House to allow the minister extended time for the purpose of receiving a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: I thank members of the House. My question is on the point which I tried to raise during the minister's interesting remarks. He said the government had learned from past errors and mistakes, and he admitted that the Bonaventure was a mistake. I would ask the minister directly if the present plan for the implementation of the DDH program involving several hundred million dollars—I have heard an estimate of around $280 million as well as some pessimistic estimates of $300 million or $400 million—is the result of learning from past mistakes, and what does he plan to do if the figures go awry as did those for the Bonaventure?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is evident that the hon. member does not follow questions very closely, nor was he listening very carefully. The fact is that my remark about Bonaventure was that the mistake was in keeping an aircraft carrier in the service. I concede that perhaps this is wisdom after the event. In 1964, when the refit was being considered—and that was the general opinion of the navy—it was considered that an aircraft carrier was an effective weapon. In the fullness of time it became increasingly apparent that aircraft carriers are not effective weapons to keep in service, particularly with the kind of responsibilities that we have.

If we had to do it over again we would probably have retired it from service at the time and concentrated our efforts on the helicopter-destroyer program. The hon. member is not a member of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and was not able to participate in the discussion which we had there on the DDH program. I made it perfectly clear to the committee at that time that I was not happy with the cost overrun.

Mr. Nowlan: There is slippage, such as for the Bonaventure.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) said that he had difficulty in communicating a significant thought to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East in the limited time available. I think that even with unlimited time one could not communicate anything to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan).

The fact remains that I have not been happy with the management of that program and I hope we can have an examination of the manner in which it was carried out. However, there does not seem to be any disagreement basically, and I take it that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East does not disagree that these are good ships and that they will perform well the service for which they were designed.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I support the motion which is now before the House. Indeed, I would go beyond what it states, namely, that the government's defence policy has merely led to a questioning of our credibility by our allies. I have not the least doubt that they have already ceased to question our credibility as a reliable partner in our international alliances because we have made it manifestly clear that our armed service is to be nothing more than a glorified domestic police force with some additional minor responsibilities for defending our coastal territory, particularly our fishing grounds, against foreign invaders, provided that these invaders are from countries not larger in size than Denmark or Norway.

In the Winnipeg Free Press of March 8, 1971, there appeared an editorial entitled "Defence—the last priority". I should like to quote at length from that editorial, not only because it appeared in a newspaper which has such a long tradition of supporting the Liberal party but because it states in language which is abundantly clear to anyone just how misguided are this government's defence policies. The editorial reads:

> The contradictions in Canada's foreign and defence policies have become so glaring that it hardly requires an example, such as is contained in the British statement on defence estimates, to illuminate the Ottawa authorities' cavalier attitude toward defence. We still seem desperately bothered about the stupidity of unification and what colour of uniform our officers and non commissioned officers will wear. Fortunately, our planners do not have to bother about soldiers, an insignificant minority in our defence establishment—17,850 privates as against 68,155 officers and non-commissioned officers. In the polychrome slick brochures that are to explain Canada's foreign policies, the government tells us grandly about the need to find a more stable and mutually acceptable balance of power in the Pacific. But we tell the Commonwealth nations in Singapore that Canada really does not care if somebody pulls the plug out of the Indian Ocean.
>
> Where the British government "firmly believes that its intention to restore the armed forces to their rightful place in the life of the nation and to keep defence in the front rank of its priorities will in itself provide a direct encouragement to recruitment", Canada has relegated defence to the bottom of her priorities.
>
> Yet defence is not a pipe dream of some military industrial complex, as is often imputed to those who watch with anxiety the growing power of the Soviet Union. "Western security", says the British document, "remains under the shadow of the present and potential threat of the vast military resources of the Soviet Union. The threat is not restricted to the NATO area"—an area upon which Canada is turning her back. "Backed by its still growing strategic nuclear capability, its large and modern conventional forces and its rapidly expanding navy and merchant marine, the Soviet Union is engaged in enhancing its power and influence across the world".

At a time when the western world, and Canada among the foremost, has been freezing or cutting its defence spending, the Warsaw pact nations have been increasing theirs at the rate of 6 per cent a year over the past five years. The new strategic situation of the nine Soviet divisions stationed in Czechoslovakia since 1968 has not been altered despite the talk about detente. Closer to home, the North Atlantic in April, 1970, witnessed the largest ever concentration of Soviet ships engaged in a major maritime exercise. The Caribbean is also an area of increasing activity for the Soviet navy. The situation in the Mediterranean is particularly alarming.

● (3.30 p.m.)

> Five years ago the maximum number of Soviet naval vessels in the Mediterranean was five surface ships, five submarines and ten auxiliaries. In 1970, on the latest assessment, this has risen to 30 surface ships, ten submarines, and 25 auxiliaries.

Under its government, Canada is going through the process of shrugging off its old and tried friends, particularly Great Britain and other European Common Market members, in favour of social and political alliances with countries with whom in the past we have not shared common interests or with whom we have not had any substantial contact. There is a great deal of concern being expressed at present that the Soviet Union is finding the sympathetic ear of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to weaken even further NATO's critical role in the defence of the free world.

Undoubtedly there are people who believe that the phrase "free world" is simply another cliché used by the western military alliance and its supporters, of whom I am one, to play on the emotional sympathies of people to oppose what they like to term American imperialism. Let me merely say to those people that while our western societies are not without their defects, our citizens are free to leave their countries when they wish to do so, unlike Jews in the Soviet Union, the people of the Ukraine, the Estonians, Latvians and Lithuanians.

We do not have any Berlin walls and we have not shot people whose only wish was to leave their country. However unpleasant these harsh realities may be to the soft ears of our diplomats, who seem to wish us to form alliances or enter into understandings with countries whose present governments are among the most repressive in the world, the fact is that the world has not yet reached the state where sheep are safe from wolves.

Does anyone seriously believe that the Communists have fundamentally altered their belief in the necessity for a communist-governed world? It is all very well to speak of the attractions of disarmament, particularly when we all agree that there are great, urgent economic and social problems here in Canada and abroad which require vast additional sums of money, which money in the view of some people should be coming from the funds which are now expended for defence purposes, but I would hope that the lesson given the world in the 1930s would still remain obvious. It is not the weak who preserve peace. On the contrary, given the world situation and the appetites of certain nations, the weak unwittingly invite aggression.

The government has all but destroyed the attractiveness of a military career in the Canadian armed services. This retrograde situation began with the unification of the armed services, the destruction of old and glorious regiments and the declining percentage of our national budget which has been allocated for defence purposes in recent years. Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press of May 7, 1971, entitled "Disappearing defences":

> We are a wealthy middle power, but we pretend we are in the clan of the underdeveloped nations, another Tanzania on the North American continent. Nobody takes this pretence very seriously, probably not even our government that plays at running—though not very fast—with the third world hares while at the same time hunting, though without much conviction, with the superpower hounds. We have a definite task, and it is sheer folly to abandon it at a time when the western Mediterranean is being turned into a Red Lake, when the eastern Mediterranean is bristling with Soviet air power, a sophisticated array that is aimed at neutralizing the sixth fleet rather than protecting Egypt against Israel, and when the Berlin problem remains far from settled.

In 1951, Canada allocated 27 per cent of its budget to defence expenditures. In 1971, it allocated 14.6 per cent of its budget to the same purpose. Can anyone seriously argue that the world situation has altered so clearly in the interests of long-term peace that such a reduction is justified? Canada, under its present administration, is in the awkward and contradictory position of relying upon the United States for its defence in the event of any major external threat, while at the same time attempting to use every opportunity to criticize American military preparedness, choosing to ignore the fact that our sovereignty over this, the second largest country in the world, is not assured by our own pitiful military might but by that of our ally to the south, whom so many pseudo Liberals in this country wish to use as a whipping-boy for our national deficiencies as well as for most of the world's economic and social problems.

I believe that the government must reverse its erroneous path and make it abundantly clear to everyone, including our closest allies, that we are prepared to resume a befitting role in our military commitments, and that the government is prepared to begin immediately by restructuring and refitting our armed services so that once again Canadians will seek to serve in our military units and our allies will again take seriously our military commitments. With the Soviet Union's increasing maritime power and its intrusion for military purposes into international waters not previously used by it for such purposes, we ought surely to be developing our capacities, particularly our anti-submarine search and surveillance effectiveness.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I also urge that the government expand the armed services so that it would be possible to maintain a significant number of Canadian troops in the far north, both to establish quite clearly our sovereignty in that area and to discourage any question as to that sovereignty, as well as to give our troops lengthy and actual experience in operating under Arctic conditions. I urge those who believe that we can remain both free and militarily unprepared to examine at once, even in recent history, what has happened to countries which have attempted this fallacy.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the motion makes reference to the "role of our armed forces at home—with particular reference to our north." I would like to discuss some of the ways in which the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of National Defence are working together in our north.

As hon. members know, the Department of National Defence has had a presence in the north for some time, and its experience has been put to use in a number of ways. The special problems of communications in the north are being researched at a $325,000 operations' building located four miles north of Inuvik. I think some of us in the south are very prone to take for granted the communications systems which we have readily available to us, but one has only to spend a limited amount of time in some of the more remote settlements of the north to realize how fundamental and essential proper communications are to their existence.

Other more mundane but vital developments have taken place in clothing and equipment for the Arctic. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of National Defence are co-operating to build airstrips in the north. The aim is to promote communication to the various outposts for year-round administration and health services. To allow the landing of Hercules aircraft, four airstrips are being extended at Chesterfield Inlet, Pond Inlet, Whale Cove and Cape Dorset. Two others are being constructed at Igloolik and Pangnirtung. The construction of these airstrips over the next five years will utilize as much local civilian labour as possible.

This summer, work will begin on a 360-foot steel and concrete bridge across the Ogilvie River in the Yukon Territory. This bridge is being built for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by the Department of National Defence. In addition to hiring natives on construction sites, the Department of National Defence has been actively recruiting northern people for the armed forces. CFB Borden has offered an aerospace and engineering course. This training program is sponsored by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is designed to meet the demand for civilian pilots in Canada's north and to involve native peoples in the development of the north. The Department of National Defence has special programs for the native youth. Many young men have participated in many youth programs such as the Young Voyageurs, Sea Scouts and cadets. The feeling is that the broadening of their horizons through such activity will be a vital factor in helping the native youth to adapt to changes in their environment.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The Department of National Defence has a special role in Arctic search and rescue operations. As members are well aware, Canadian forces planes are often called upon to aid in rescue operations and to transport emergency hospital cases. Plans are being laid for the Department of National Defence to provide emergency airlift operations for disasters in our north such as the one which occurred recently when there was a gas blow-out on King Christian Island.

Arctic research is a vital area for co-operation in the north. Consideration is being given to having the Department of National Defence help in the aerial surveillance of mineral surveys, seismic activity and on underwater equipment, particularly during its installation. Transportation is often provided for departmental personnel by DND. The Department of National Defence is providing vocational training programs for the native peoples of the north and is doing a great deal to involve them directly in its development.

I know that my colleague the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) has some observations to make in this area, and other hon. members opposite. I shall close now, having listed the areas where there is a substantial amount of co-operation between the Department of National Defence and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the motion proposed by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and supported by the Conservative party, in essence criticizes the government for reducing our defence capacity by erosion of our NATO commitment and reduction of our armed forces, etc. At the outset I must say that I am very much opposed to this resolution. It is pretty well the opposite of what I would have recommended to the government, and it is the antithesis of what I and many people of my ideological belief stand for.

I am very much dismayed when I listen to speeches made in this debate by members of the Conservative party, and in particular their remarks about the things that have happened in regard to the Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union. I think we should all be applauding agreements such as that signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Soviet government. It is the type of contact and communication we need and the type of bridge that should be built.

I am very happy to see the government reduce our commitment to NATO and reduce our forces in Europe. I would like to see them go much further and get out of NATO completely, as I suggested in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence the other day. As I say, I am dismayed when I hear the views of members to my right whose ideas are neanderthal and reactionary and are not doing anything to make Canada a country which would contribute to world peace and international development.

It is a very good thing that Canada is starting to move on the international scene. It is good that we have recognized that China exists, and that we now have an embassy in Peking. I hope we move as rapidly as possible to make more arrangements between Canada and China. The people in my constituency would be happy if we could increase trade in potash and wheat with countries such as China. This is the type of thing we should be doing instead of following the reactionary and outdated advice of some members of the Conservative party. I feel sorry for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) when I hear some members of his party speak on this motion. Perhaps that is why the debate is taking place when he is not here.

I realize the position that I am about to take may be unpopular in this House, but I think it is gaining increasing support among the younger people of this country especially and, indeed, among other citizens as well. I come from a generation that was born after the end of the Second World War. We were born into an age of scientific revolution—a revolution that has transplanted hearts, flown men to the moon and provided us with such sophisticated technology that we can now dream of doing almost anything. We have developed weapons that make the bombs of Nagasaki and Hiroshima look like children's toys. That is why I am concerned about some of the priorities the world has, as evidenced by a motion such as this one.

We are the first generation that goes to bed at night with the knowledge that the pressing of a button could destroy the world because of the tremendous stockpile of sophisticated weapons and the delivery systems of the United States and the Soviet Union. This is the type of world we live in, but still we hear calls for a further escalation in defence spending and a polarization of the world community. Motions like this are doing precisely that, instead of going in the opposite direction.

In the United States this week there was a motion by Senator Mansfield, which was defeated, which called for a cutback of U.S. troop commitment in Europe. We see a continuation of the war in Indochina and a continuation of the burden of poverty and starvation in many countries. People of my generation are challenging some of the fundamental and traditional beliefs that this society has practised for so many years. However, we do not seem to get many answers.

We seem to live in a world that is more interested in money and in trying to kill each other than in spending money for peaceful means of developing the world around us. We are now in a new age and need new solutions to old problems, but instead we rely on old solutions. We have a world community which is really a community of anarchy. We live by the balance of terror. If you have a big bomb on one side, you must have a bigger one on the other side as a deterrent. This is the goal and objective that all of us seem to pursue, instead of pursuing the goals of reducing tension and trying to disarm.

We live by the philosophy of the law of the jungle and survival of the fittest. This is the kind of thing we cannot risk in this world of sophisticated weapons. We live by the philosophy: My country, right or wrong. But if everybody lives by that philosophy the result is likely to be devasting.

We must have a new approach, not only in Canada but around the world. When I see a motion like the one before us, I am disappointed, when so many people around the world are trying to reach better understanding. Here we have a Conservative party which is saying, "We should escalate tensions and spend more money on defence, more on NATO and such organizations". I suggest that we should do exactly the opposite, Mr. Speaker. As a middle power nation, Canada should lead the way in trying to make this a better world.

What should be Canada's role? Have our interests changed? I think they have changed considerably in the last 20 years. I think the scene of activity has shifted away from Europe to the undeveloped countries of the third world. We have seen the growing gap between the have and have-not countries of this world, and we have not seen as much emphasis on international development as we should have. Canada should take the lead in many of these areas, as a respected middle power and a nation trusted by many peoples of different ideologies. I do not see things as black and white as do some Tories. I think there is a central ground, and Canada can lead the middle power nations in pursuing goals with countries such as Sweden, Switzerland, Tanzania and Zambia.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I think Canada could make a real contribution if we joined some of these other countries in seeking a third way toward peace and international development. You see more and more of this happening among nations of the third world. I hope that Canada can take the lead in that area, instead of dragging behind. That is why I welcome what the Prime Minister has done in the Soviet Union. That is why I welcome our diplomatic recognition of China. We ought to be doing things like these, but at an even faster rate.

Secondly, I think that Canada should concentrate on strengthening the United Nations as an international body, instead of putting so much effort into NATO, NORAD and other regional military pacts. I know that my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), spent several minutes talking about NORAD. I will not repeat what he said. I agree that NORAD is not only obsolete but that it detracts from world security and prevents or deters the possibility of peace. By contributing to NORAD we are building up tensions instead of de-escalating them. We could save all that money and spend it much more constructively, as others have suggested, on the world community if we did not spend it on defence pacts or in supporting regional organizations.

I am one of those—and the group is growing ever larger—who believe that Canada should withdraw from NATO immediately. For many years NATO has been strictly a military alliance which has been dominated by the United States in a way similar to that in which the Warsaw pact has been dominated by the Soviet Union. If Canada is to pursue an independent foreign policy, we must get out of NATO; otherwise we shall not be able to develop the position that we ought to enjoy in the world community.

On looking at some of the objectives of the NATO alliance, I think it is rather ironic to see that one of its basic objectives is the strengthening and safeguarding of democracy by embracing such authoritarian régimes. alliance there are countries like Greece and Portugal which are autocratic and authoritarian, which are not democratic and which do not have elected parliaments. If that is what NATO is all about, I do not want any part of it for Canada. You cannot save, preserve or develop democracy by embracing such authoritarian régimes. Those countries are in NATO, and that is another reason why we can make a more effective contribution to world peace and development by getting out of this regional organization.

Thirdly, I think that NATO today only increases world tensions. It only polarizes the world community. If Canada were to withdraw from that organization, we could contribute to a de-escalation of tensions both in NATO countries and in Warsaw pact countries. I think that Canada should take the lead here. I am happy that we have de-escalated our role in NATO. We should go all the way and get out altogether. That is one of the greatest contributions we could make to world peace and development.

Mr. Aiken: Surely the hon. member does not believe that.

Mr. Nystrom: I believe that, although I am not surprised that the hon. member of the Conservative party does not. His party is so out of touch with the realities of the world around us that it has put on the order paper a motion such as the one we are discussing.

Mr. Crouse: The hon. member would not now be making his speech if it were not for the protection given to Canada by NATO. If the hon. member believes what he is saying, I feel sorry for him.

Mr. Nystrom: I believe it, otherwise I would not be saying it. More and more people are saying what I am saying, with the exception of a few reactionary Tories who, like dinosaurs, are living far in the past. There is so much trouble in the world because some people believe what the hon. member believes. Nothing is ever totally black or white in this world. There are not only the free enterprise, capitalist countries on the one hand and communist countries on the other: there is a third alternative that countries such as Canada should be pursuing. I could make other remarks about NATO, but time will not permit. I have given a few reasons to support my contention that we should withdraw from that organization.

As I said before, I think Canada should develop an independent foreign policy. In doing that, we should concentrate much more on international development and on peacekeeping. In that way we could make a real contribution to world peace. I think, also, that we should try to strengthen the United Nations and make the world a more harmonious place for all of us to live in, regardless of where we live or the colour of our skin. We must try to communicate more with one another. If we do not communicate there will not be any central agency for the exchange of ideas. As a result, we cannot expect anything but trouble. That is why I welcome any move that will open up a world community and make this one world. After all, in many ways international boundaries do not exist any more. They do not exist in many ways for finance or for modern communications. We must realize that the world community is rapidly becoming a global community and we should be formulating our policies with that in mind.

As I said, I think the motion before us puts emphasis on the wrong priorities and points in the wrong direction. It suggests policies that are the opposite of those that Canada should be pursuing today. Instead of pursuing those policies, we should be trying to get out of NORAD and NATO. We should concentrate on strengthening the United Nations, on peacekeeping and on international development. The policies suggested by the motion will not do us much good because, if adopted, we shall be contributing to the polarization in the world. When that happens you may have, suddenly, a nuclear war. That is what will happen if on these questions we support the narrow-minded, anachronistic views that have prevailed in the past.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, before giving my few thoughts may I comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Although I respect his thoughts and his youth, I feel that if he would read history and learn what happened particularly after the First World War and in the 25 years after the end of that war and the beginning of the Second World War, he would probably make a new assessment of what the protection of our country means.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I have read history.

Mr. Marshall: Previous speakers have covered very well some important factors with regard to the direction that our defence policy might be taking, and it is only left to me to make some general comments about my thoughts regarding defence policy over the years. Canada's defence policy, to my mind, has been a series of short-term stabs in the dark, depending on the whims and fancies of whoever was Minister of National Defence at the appropriate time. There is only one exception to this rule. The only time we had a clearcut defence policy was when the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness) was Minister of National Defence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: At the present time we are waiting with some anxiety to see what the minister will produce in the way of a directive on the course we are to take in the future. This will be the second white paper that I will have seen in the three years that I have been in politics here.

Let us consider the present state of our forces. The worst blunder that can be made is reducing our forces to 82,000, as we are doing. It will be interesting to hear, in my humble opinion, what some of our retired generals and other senior officers who left the forces in recent years in disgust over our integration and unification policies—whichever came first at the time—have to say about this reduction in strength to 82,000. It would also be interesting if we could be behind closed doors with the chiefs of staff and senior officers at other levels of command and learn their opinions on the question of how we can fulfil our commitments, even according to our last set of priorities, with 82,000 officers and men.

• (4:00 p.m.)

If we were to break down the strength of our Canadian forces, which include 42,000 administrative and support personnel, I am sure we would find that with the 40,000 fighting troops left our strength could not be committed to any exercise larger than the one we unfortunately faced last October in Quebec. Without trying to sound too alarming, I ask: How would our forces have been able to react if a similar incident had sprung up in another part of our country? Thank God, Mr. Speaker, that we were not faced with that situation, because it would have been very embarrassing.

When the minister says that we do not respect the capability and efficiency of our forces, surely he is being very childish. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the reduction of our forces to 82,000 will reduce them to a state of ineffectiveness. I am not looking for any massive force just for the sake of competing with other nations. I realize that most of our efforts as peace-loving Canadians should be directed toward peaceful missions. I also realize that our funds are not limitless. Canada is not a warlike nation. We have no history of military aggression, and our proud military achievements have been directed toward helping other friendly nations combat aggression by other nations with a greed for power. Some of these nations are friendly today. By visiting the war graves in Europe we are reminded of the cost of past wars. We need only visit the war memorials to see the scars left by wars.

We spend money on insurance policies for protection in the event of accidents, fire and sickness, even though we hope they will not strike. Canadians who are charged with the protection of our citizens must be prepared to spend money to defend our country, not only from outside aggression but from internal strife. We must be prepared to protect our sovereignty and to contribute toward the maintenance of world peace. We must recognize our total commitment. Our involvement must be limited to our capacity to pay for such commitments. We do not become proficient by introducing policies without a fundamental appreciation of our aims and objectives or just for the sake of change. This change reminds me of the sensational unification policy of the then Minister of National Defence.

It is not my intention to labour this point of the responsibility for evolving Canada's present role in the over-all spectrum of defence. However, I want to make it clear to those who are responsible for reviewing current policy that it was not a military decision to unify the forces. The responsibility was beyond them. It is a pity that there were not more resolute hearts among the ranks of the admirals, generals and air marshalls who retired in disgust, or that there were not fewer opportunists. It was an exercise in sensationalism for the sake of being sensational, and an exercise in drama for the sake of being dramatic. It was as expert a public relations job as we will ever see.

The results are well known. Those left with straightening out the mess over the past few years have been belaboured with trying to resolve a breakdown in morale and efficiency. However, I have no doubt that the remaining military-oriented and experienced commanders will resolve the travesty. Will the cost ever be known as well as the waste of manpower? Those who brought our fighting troops to victory and glory were cast aside. In their retirement, they must sit and wonder why this happened. I realize that reminding us of the past is an exercise in futility, but I think it is as worth while as the lessons we learned in military schools to study the battles which we have lost in order that we do not lose again.

In the last white paper on national defence, our military roles were listed as maintaining Canadian sovereignty, aid to the civil power, contributing to deterring war and even to aid in economic development. It will be interesting to read what our new strategy will be in defining our role under the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald). I sincerely hope that a clearly defined policy will be produced which will last beyond a couple of years, because it is embarrassingly obvious that we have had more changes in the past few years than should normally be expected with clear, military thinking.

We have had integration and continuous cutbacks in our naval forces, army and overseas commitments. We must have a sensible appreciation once and for all with regard to our aims and objectives, commensurate with what we can spend in the next few years. We must make up our mind whether we will stand up and take our place with an adequate armed force or depend on the American capability to defend North America.

With regard to the future role of our forces, if we cannot maintain a large enough force to react to all emergencies we should seriously study the role of our reserve forces which are being reduced to a state of ineffectiveness. Since World War II the role of the militia has been almost an annual exercise in futility, with changing roles. The support of the reserve forces has been passive, to say the least. I suggest to the minister that our reserve forces should be considered with much more realization of their value in terms of being prepared in case of need and to realistically support the parent, regular forces. I can assure the minister that the 17,000 individuals in our reserve force and militia are dedicated. From the standard of officers whom the minister meets at the conference of defence associations, I am sure he has seen that these part-time soldiers want to play a role on behalf of their country.

The ability of our forces to react in situations such as the Quebec incident emphasizes that training in the militia could be directed to realistic support of our regular forces in aid to the civil power. It is worth asking what would have happened last October if the forces had had to react to more than one such incident. Given encouragement, logistic support and proper training, militia men would be ideal for such duty. Their local, on the spot familiarization gives them the opportunity to train in co-operations with police, firemen and emergency measures organizations. The example of tasking elements of militia units to regular force counterparts and periodically exercising personnel in Europe was successful beyond expectations. This emphasizes the ability of our Canadian youth to quickly adapt by exposing them to the expert training ability of our regular forces.

Another failure on the part of our experts in the role of the militia was to ignore, other than by passing motion, the participation of the conference of defence associations. This always ended in asking them to ratify a plan which was already decided upon. I hope the minister will correct this error and remember our new philosophy of involvement at every level of our society.

If our budget does not permit the maintenance of an adequate force, we must build up our reserves to meet our requirements. In order to accomplish this we must be prepared to provide a sensible nucleus of regular force staff to direct and ensure efficiency in training and in logistic support. The most serious problem in the reserves today is the turnover of personnel. This is due to a lack of training in administrative cadre across the country.

Some years ago the department initiated a series of six-week special militia training courses to provide our young citizens with a basic exposure to the requirements of civil defence. This was an important issue at that time. It was also initiated to overcome a lack of employment which existed. I remind the minister that the cabinet could give serious consideration to reviving such a program. It would be very timely in facing our unemployment crisis. The basic concept of our militia should be that we can produce efficiency and a proud and dedicated back-up for our regular forces in the case of need and in aid to the civil power. It could form the nucleus in leadership in solid and productive programs for the youth of our country.

We must continue to support what is probably the best program ever sponsored by the Department of National Defence, the cadet services of Canada. It is unfortunate that we have not kept a record of the results of this training in connection with our school systems and under sponsorship of service organizations. If this had been done we could have seen the results of such programs in producing better citizens. I hope the government will continue to support such a program across our nation and, more important, to allow more participation in it.

I give full marks to the minister for providing a more wide-ranging program in the area of special militia training and providing civilian employment for students and others up to the age of 24 years. The broadening of this program to include research and engineering products, food services and physical education programs deserves merit. I am in favour of the program of six weeks' instruction at mobile command bases across Canada in first-aid, hunter safety, bush survival search and rescue, water safety, citizenship, adventure training, leadership and instructional techniques. However, such courses should be provided on a much larger scale because never have we needed more to provide our youth with a sense of purpose, especially in the fields of physical fitness and leadership training.

In our apparent desire to involve our youth and to invite them to confront our government leaders in a sense of participation, we should use basic common sense and allow them to participate in a meaningful way with the proper leadership training which they can pass on to others and at the same time earn enough to complete their education. On the one hand the minister tells us that the numbers must be restricted because of lack of funds; on the other hand the government is prepared to pay students to hitchhike across the country because we want them to see Canada. We have come up with a pretty good Canada as it is, Mr. Speaker, and I wonder what Member of Parliament would have thought, as a youth, that he deserved a government-sponsored tour to make a better country.

• (4:10 p.m.)

We became a better country by hard work and pride in being independent, by suffering through world wars. No one wants to hear the word "war" any longer. So let us put the expertise in military training to a more useful goal as part of their future role—to provide leadership and training to others by healthy and useful participation and direct the energies of our youth to make a useful contribution, and not by inviting them to become militant against those who govern.

Let our youth prepare themselves to provide better government in the future by an over-all plan of instilling a sense of responsibility to show how much we need their energies to make a better Canada. We can show them Canada on television in their leisure hours, but they will become better Canadians if they expend some effort through their healthy minds and bodies.

The motion before us today is timely in that it urges the government to declare a defence policy which will indicate that we can and will define a clear and purposeful role for our armed forces, and I hope we will see proof of that in the near future.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I will leave to the experts of the defence committee the question whether we should be moving our armed forces into or out of Europe. I intend to direct my remarks today to what I believe to be the role of the armed forces in the Canadian north.

Historically, the first appearance of the Canadian armed forces in the Canadian north was back in the Klondyke days, the days of the Yukon gold rush. In 1898, a regular force officer, Colonel Evans, led the Yukon field force into the Yukon to work with the Northwest Mounted Police to maintain order and discipline in that unruly era. The field force remained in the Yukon for many years before moving on.

During the course of the years the communications system of the Yukon and the Mackenzie was manned by the northwest signal system of the signal corps. When it became apparent that the private sector was able to take over communications in the territories, the signal corps left. After the Second World War, when the United States army moved out of the Yukon, responsibility for maintaining the Alaska highway, the northwest highway system, was left with the military.

With the growth of civilian services in the area this arrangement, too, passed from the scene and for a number of years the presence of the military in the Canadian north was limited to a number of installations, primarily communications stations at Frobisher Bay, Alert and Inuvik. Exercises were occasionally held in the north to measure the effectiveness of equipment, supplies and communications.

Last year, however, on May 15, the then Minister of National Defence announced the establishment of a northern region command. When Mr. Cadieux made his announcement he indicated that one of the purposes of establishing a northern headquarters was to strengthen Canada's military presence north of the sixtieth parallel. A small aircraft-servicing detachment was established at Frobisher and increased air surveillance coverage was provided.

Together with some of my hon. friends in the House I had the opportunity of joining the committee on national defence and the minister last week in Yellowknife to celebrate Northern Command's first year and to dedicate Colonel Evans' headquarters' building in Yellowknife. In the past year we have seen the development of a reasonably effective plan for the presence of the armed forces north of the sixtieth parallel. Reasonably enough, the size of the permanent force at this stage is limited. They are responsible for logistic and technical support for all commands as they go north of the sixtieth parallel. These commands, whether their forces are seaborne or ground forces, have a responsibility to work with the northern region command so as to carry out an effective exercise in any part of the territories.

In the past year a considerable number of exercises have taken place in various parts of the north to determine the ability of our forces to move and survive in various parts of the Arctic in both summer and winter conditions, to develop new techniques of search and rescue, and so on. So we have seen a start on the infrastructure. I think I can say that northern people welcome this initiative, not only in terms of the national scene but because they are delighted to have a military presence back again north of the sixtieth parallel.

Other hon. members, especially the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), have indicated there were many areas in which a military presence could play an effective role in helping develop the Canadian north. My hon. friend made reference to a joint program of building airstrips in co-operation with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. A program for building these airstrips has been set out for seven or eight years based on the availability of funds to be provided by one department, the Department of Northern Affairs. However, because of the military involvement this program can now be completed much earlier and many northern communities will be served by adequate airstrips much sooner than would have been the case under the old arrangements.

The engineering corps has undertaken the responsibility of building a bridge across the Ogilvie River. This is a bridge which would have been completed eventually by the civil authority, but because the military were able to undertake this task, funds were released enabling the highway approaches to be completed, incidently opening access to the Arctic Ocean from the Yukon territory. There are many other areas in which military forces could make a positive contribution.

The minister referred to his visit to Fort Smith last Sunday when the mayor of that community, Mr. Paul Kaeser, directed his attention to a proposal to use the services of the young people in the north who are undergoing vocational training, in co-operation with the technical abilities of the armed forces, to complete a stretch of road which is so low on the list of priorities for northern development that I doubt it will be completed in the seventies.

• (4:20 p.m.)

However, a program is now being worked out between various government departments to use the skills of young northerners, under supervision of experts in the armed forces, to complete one other step in the process of northern development and thus fulfil the dream and the hope of many people in that area. When we had the opportunity of introducing the minister last Sunday, and following the mayor's eloquent plea for the building of this road, I could not help but think that if the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) were able to pull it off, this highway should be named after him.

We must also look at the relationship between the military and the civilian community in the north. I have already indicated that this particular road is low in the order of priorities and probably would not be completed during this decade. However, I think that the military have the responsibility for ensuring that their activities, be they in the field of engineering, search and rescue or something else, do not conflict with the interests of civilian operators and people engaged in private enterprise. I believe the military are conscious of that and are making a serious attempt to ensure that there is no such conflict. However, we cannot repeat too often that we must keep close surveillance of and observation of the relationships between the military and the civilian community.

In the field of search and rescue, Northern Command will be setting up a small aircraft fleet in Yellowknife. From time to time there will be pressure to provide services that are normally provided by the civilian operators, and I believe we should insist that there be no conflict here. There will be cases, as happened last week, when a civilian operator is unable to provide the service. Since the military had available the equipment to meet a very serious situation facing one mining community, the mining community, the management, the military and the civilian operators were able to work out a mutual arrangement satisfactory to all and at the same time meet an emergency situation.

With regard to airstrips, by and large there are no communities in the north with civilian operators who can provide equipment to build airstrips. However, in one particular community, Igloolik, it is proposed to go ahead with the development of an airstrip. At the same time, there is an Eskimo community with the necessary equipment to build the airstrip and I think all concerned have agreed it would be better to move this project to another community rather than to conflict with the interests of the Eskimos at Igloolik.

There are still many areas in the north with which the Department of National Defence can concern itself. Last week, during his stop in Yellowknife, the Minister of National Defence announced an exciting new program of recruitement to interest young northerners in a career in the armed forces. The minister indicated that an attempt will be made to recruit 100 men and women for training in the administrative, transportation, supply, food services and communications fields. He went on to say that on completion of their training these young people from the north will be qualified to serve in any armed forces unit; however, particular emphasis will be placed on locating them in the north.

The minister indicated that opportunities were manifold for northerners, but possibly most important of all was that with increased activity of armed forces personnel in the north and by arrangement with northern headquarters a requirement has developed in the north for people with a special knowledge of local working and living conditions and the terrain in the north, to kick off this program. Recruiting teams from various parts of southern Canada are planning to visit the major communities of Yellowknife, Inuvik, Whitehorse, Frobisher Bay, Fort Smith, Hay River and Churchill within the next month to meet and talk with young people coming out of the high schools.

Under this program, initially these young people will go to Cornwallis in Nova Scotia to follow whatever trade they choose. They will be trained in groups and ultimately will move back to the north if they so wish. I believe this is an exciting program that will accomplish a lot of things and will provide an opportunity to develop expertise on the north within the armed forces. It also gives the young people of the north an opportunity to have a career in the armed forces. Following their training and service, many of them may leave the armed forces and use their skills in some other capacity in the north.

There are also other areas in which the armed forces can participate. For example, over the years the Ranger Corps has been a very successful operation. It was developed at the end of World War II and has been kept together primarily by a number of very dedicated officers of the armed forces. However, with Northern Command it seems to me the Ranger Corps should be expanded so as to use the talents and knowledge of northerners for surveillance purposes and to assist the military.

Another area that I hope the minister will take a look at is the use in years to come of young Canadians from the south as part of the armed forces team working during the summer months in the Canadian north carrying out a number of projects. For example, following the end of World War II the United States government abandoned all of its equipment along the Canol pipeline. This has been a disaster in terms of the amount of debris that is scattered along the line. I do not think that at this stage the civilian authority is in a position to divert funds to employ people to clear the area, but this might well provide an opportunity for a number of young Canadians to work on such a project over a period of time. It would enable them to see something of the north while providing a very useful service.

Development of canoe routes and preservation of historical sites are two more endeavours for our young people, under the direction and supervision of the military forces, which would enable them to perform a very useful and functional role in the north in years to come. I suggest that the talents of our young people could also be used in the building of emergency airstrips along, for example, the Mackenzie River valley.

• (4:30 p.m.)

At the present time there are landing strips at certain villages near mining or oil developments. It seems to me that with the increase in tourism in the north, particularly those coming in small aircraft, it is desirable that we have these emergency strips along the Mackenzie River so that in the event of trouble aircraft operators will know they are not far from a landing strip. This could be accomplished in a very simple way by employing groups of young people to work on these airstrips after being trained in the south. It would provide young Canadians with an opportunity of seeing something of the Canadian north, and at the same time allow them to serve a useful purpose.

I have indicated that we welcome the armed forces presence in the north. In certain areas there can be a conflict with civil services in terms of engineering projects or aircraft services in relation to search and rescue work. I believe the Canadian north will be a much richer place because of the presence of members of the Canadian armed forces and their families. I am personally very happy to have had the opportunity of participating in this debate, and I wish the armed forces great success north of the sixtieth parallel.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have great pleasure in taking part in this debate and in seconding the motion of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). This motion will give us a brief opportunity on this Friday afternoon to bring attention to our armed forces and some of the problems the minister faces as we move into the 1970s.

Without re-reading the motion we have before us, let me say to the minister—who is in the House at the moment, although he may not stay until the end of the debate—that had I spoken before him during this debate I would have suggested that many men in the armed services who have experienced many internal battles, including the battle of unification and others, were apprehensive about the appointment of this minister. They were apprehensive because of statements he made about the armed forces before he became Minister of National Defence.

Many of these armed forces personnel know the history of other ministers of national defence, some of whom, it can be suggested, manipulated the role of the armed services. The climate has not been too healthy or constructive. Since the minister assumed the portfolio these apprehensions and concerns have been diluted. Members of the forces, along with parliamentarians, are prepared to give the minister more time before making a decision. We will wait until we see the white paper on defence which was supposed to be placed before Parliament before now.

The minister said earlier that he had some difficulty in communicating any thoughts to myself. I can readily understand that, because at times I think the minister has difficulty in formulating an original thought, let alone communicating it to any hon. member, even this member who always has a receptive ear. I have always been in support of most service operations and I am waiting to see what this new Minister of National Defence is prepared to do.

The purpose of this motion is to articulate some of the concern felt by members on all sides of the House about the emphasis to be placed on defence policy as we head into the 1970s. It was suggested that during this debate the opposition would have an opportunity to put forward a blueprint on national defence. I think this is a rather naïve suggestion. The minister seems to take some satisfaction from the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), who put forward generalized national defence policies. I really cannot see what help he gets from them. The hon. member for York-Simcoe commented on the remarks of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

Mr. Macdonald: And he is not in the House.

Mr. Nowlan: He is not in the House, and the hon. member for York-Simcoe is not here. I suspect the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East is behind the curtain trying to figure out what the minister said earlier. The hon. member for York-Simcoe was critical of the remarks of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

I agree with the contribution of the hon. member for Greenwood in respect of priorities. I do not think there is a member of this House who would disagree with his suggested priorities. We must have a force to look after internal order, to maintain surveillance over Canadian sovereignty and to contribute to world peace. These are pious, motherhood platitudes which do not help solve the minister's problem or, getting down to the nitty-gritty, do not suggest how we should implement this type of general policy. The minister will have to balance these general principles with the limited budget he now has.

Without being facetious, let me suggest that at whatever stage the white paper on defence is, perhaps it will have to be revised because of certain events that have taken place in Moscow in the past few days. If the letter of protocol which has been made part of Hansard means anything, it means we will experience an adverse feeling about our NATO and NORAD agreements. Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will come back from his wanderings in the Soviet Union and amplify this statement on protocol.

Whatever the members of this House think about the function of NATO, whether those hon. members be young, old, or old with young minds, their attitude has been affected by the successful history of our NATO alliance up to this point. World conditions have changed and we must change our attitude accordingly. One hon. member who spoke during the debate was misguided in respect of his ideas about trade arrangements as related to NATO. Let me point out that both Sweden and Switzerland, the examples he used, have higher per capita defence costs than Canada and many other countries in the western world. We have listened to the words of members of the NDP who, I suggest, suffer from a schizophrenic mentality. As the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) has pointed out, no one wants to pay dollars for defence. We have more humanitarian things to look after. No one wants to pay money for insurance but, like defence, insurance is protection.

It is time the government took a hard look at some of the old treaty arrangements and came forward with a new defence policy. We must have a policy that is more flexible. I am not suggesting that any member is a warmonger, but certainly members of the NDP have a schizophrenic mentality. They are passionately anti-war, anti-fighting, anti-treaty and anti-everything else having to do with defence. Some members of the NDP are passionately anti-war, anti-fight, anti-treaty—which we all are in theory. We are pro-God, with certain restrictions. We are for motherhood. We are for milk and honey. We do not want the ravages of war. But it is those people who have not spoken out clearly and critically about a state of unpreparedness who have produced and stimulated more war than those of us who have tried to suggest that we need some type of defence arrangements.

• (4:40 p.m.)

When considering Sweden and Switzerland one must remember, first, that they pay a higher per capita cost for defence and, second—what is more important—both those countries are doing something against which this country has literally fought bloody battles and political battles, that is, the total mobilization of citizens between the ages of 18 and 58. They can be called up and put in the reserve forces. I would like to see any major party seriously advocate such a move in the House of Commons, in view of some of our political battles in the First World War, let alone differences of opinion in the Second World War.

On the one hand, some friends of the NDP say that you have to follow Sweden and Switzerland, keep Simon Pure and keep your head in the sand; and on the other hand, when you look at those countries you see they have mobilization in their defence arrangements which this country has not bought, and their cost for defence is one that this country does not begin to come close to. But enough about this schizophrenic viewpoint of hon. members to my left.

I do not want to be misinterpreted or misrepresented by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) because I may be critical of him politically or because I may be most critical of this government in my apprehension about the way in which we are going. Let him not think that I lack confidence in the members of our armed forces who, in spite of the many political machinations of members opposite and of the government, have survived and will survive and have fought battles in the unification and integration of the forces and are now fighting the battle of the implementation of the report of the B and B Commission. Perhaps they are temporarily concerned, but all these problems can be partially resolved if they feel they have a real part to play, a plan to follow and purpose in the general defence policy for which they have been waiting for several years.

Hopefully, the white paper which the minister is supposed to produce will give them guidelines so that they may obtain some inner satisfaction in contributing in a meaningful way to the security arrangements for Canada and an assurance that they will not be left in limbo, where I suggest they have been for too long due to the machinations and manipulations of the procession of ministers through the defence ministry that has been the hallmark of this government.

In a general way, so far as the question of defence is concerned I think any member of Parliament must look with interest, and perhaps trepidation and apprehension, at some of the activity which has taken place in Moscow in the last two or three days. Do we, or do we not, have a new detente? Are we not fooling ourselves, because our Prime Minister with a tulip between his teeth can parade through Red Square, that this will make any more doves of peace fly through the world?

Does the fact that the Bolshoi ballet may be one of the better ballets in the world remove the Berlin wall? I think not. I say with some hesitation that I have no confidence whatsoever in the international dialogue, monologue or prescience of the Prime Minister who not so many years ago thought the Second World War was a war of imperialism. It is that type of theoretical, idealistic philosophy which was wrong then and which, if it means anything to the Soviet Union, could get us into a lot of trouble.

In saying this I do not want to fall into the same trap in which the Minister of National Defence tried to put the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness) earlier, when he said that the hon. member was against discussion, against consultation and against negotiation. The minister used a word which the hon. member for Calgary Centre did not even use, in trying to paraphrase what the hon. member said about the words of Mr. Nixon and Mr. Brandt—that we have things to gain in talking to our Russian friends the same as we have things to gain in communicating with the Chinese. We have things to gain in communicating with the Hungarians, the Czechoslovakians and many other people under the suppression of the Russian bear. Of course there should be discussion and communication on technology, on science and on the development of the north. There should be more bilateral arrangements and discussions. The hon. member for Calgary Centre did not use the word "gain".

Of course Mr. Nixon knows that to achieve world peace one has to talk to the big superpower; and that is why Mr. Nixon might want to do what we have done in recognizing China, because it is unreal to have one of the largest countries in the world outside the community of nations. There is a difference between what the hon. member for Calgary Centre said and what I am trying to say and the interpretation by the Minister of National Defence or his misrepresentation.

It is not that we disagree that we should have communication and discussion with the Soviet Union or be receptive to any overture from them. But how should we interpret what was evidently said by our Prime Minister yesterday in a press conference, after signing the protocol, that it was necessary to further develop agreements with Russia to maintain our own culture? Those are the words which I read in the press and which may have been misquoted.

Apparently we have much to learn from the Russians in a cultural or political way. I could ask many rhetorical questions such as, what do we have to learn from the Russians in a political or economic way? One could follow that through further than I intend today, but I suggest that their whole economic infrastructure and their whole economic philosophy leaves little for us to emulate. Quite the opposite, they could learn something from this society, even though questions might be put regarding how "just" it is from time to time. We know it is not always pure, but at least it is more open than some other societies.

I do not know who has more to learn about freedom. One could talk to people in Hungary and Czechoslovakia who could tell us a lot about freedom. I suggest that while Canadians should be receptive and have a positive frame of mind regarding bilateral arrangements in areas of science and technology and some other things mentioned in the protocol tabled in Hansard of Thursday, we should be most concerned and on guard and not misled by this new detente that seems to have sprung out of nowhere.

Let us not forget that another Prime Minister in the Liberal party went to Germany in 1938 and thought that Mr. Hitler was a rather interesting individual. That was Mackenzie King. And a British Prime Minister, Mr. Chamberlain, had a similar attitude. I am not suggesting that the Soviet Union is necessarily like Mr. Hitler's Germany, but there are some aspects of it which certainly should not receive universal acclaim from Members of Parliament, regardless of the party to which they belong.

For this reason we should be careful and cautious not to let the euphoria of tulips in the springtime in Moscow affect our readiness to participate in a meaningful way in the defence arrangements which have allowed us liberty, licence and sometimes excesses in this country. Anyone who suggests that you can lie down and play dead, be unentangled and uninvolved, should look at such countries as Russia, Sweden or Switzerland to find out that there is little involvement there.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Why should we be neutral? Why should we be a vacuum? In fact, we cannot be a vacuum living next to the United States. This is the part I am most suspicious about, that a Prime Minister who has travelled more through Russia and China than he has travelled in the United States thinks things are so odious to the south of us that he has to counterbalance them with entanglements and arrangements with Russia. It is that type of philosophy that produces this type of reasoning. However theoretical or idealistic it may be, it just does not work out in the world of reality and we must remember our history and the many things that we have shared with the people to the south of us. But with that general caveat applied to the question of the protocol on consultations, when the Prime Minister returns I would like him to explain paragraph 2, which reads:

> In the event of a situation arising which, in the opinion of the two governments, endangers the maintenance of peace or involves a breach of the peace—

—there are to be consultations. When our Prime Minister is talking to Brezhnev and President Kosygin, would he find out if that is going to apply in the case of Hungary, of Czechoslovakia, of Korea and Viet Nam? And if it would apply, is it the case that the Russian bear would just open one ear and then go on to do what he was going to do anyway, and are we just fooling ourselves?

I suggest that a country like Canada, that could have participated in a meaningful way in the Southeast Asia situation under the auspices of the International Control Commission but found it was practically useless to participate with countries so directly involved in the east-west conflict, is only fooling itself if we, its people, think we can participate in a meaningful way as an honest broker—which the Prime Minister says we are not—or in any other consultative way with the Soviet Union.

I am amazed that my time has expired and that I have not dealt with Maritime Command.

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I find that there are only a few minutes left in which to take part in this debate. I realize that I am following some very knowledgeable speakers from all corners of the House on the matter of defence. I want to discuss one aspect of the motion presented by our party, that dealing with the reduction in our active and reserve forces. I ask, why should our forces not be up to strength? Is there dissatisfaction in our forces today? Very briefly I wish to discuss a survey done within the last three months covering a cross-section of our armed forces.

The reason for the survey was a suggestion made by the Public Service Alliance of Canada to the government that in some way the armed forces might be organized along union lines. When I read the suggestion I had grave misgivings that the forces could be unionized, having had some experience in the active forces in the last war and in the reserve forces. However, many of us felt that we should ask the members of the armed forces what their feelings were on this subject. We chose a number of military bases in Canada, including Base Gagetown which is in my constituency and is one of the finest military bases in the British Commonwealth.

An hon. Member: Next to Greenwood.

Mr. MacRae: I would dispute that. Some 25 per cent of those who were questioned responded. Was there much opposition to the survey? Rather surprisingly, there was not, although some may have felt that they should not have been written to and a few wrote back to say so. One reply that I remember in particular was that we should keep the army out of politics, and politics out of the army. But of course, Mr. Speaker, at head of the Department of National Defence we have a man who first of all must be elected to the House of Commons.

I would like to put on the record a brief summary respecting the response to the questions we asked. If the minister does not already know about this, I think he will find it of considerable interest. From an analysis of the replies of those who responded we were able to ascertain the following: There appears to be a substantial degree of disenchantment among armed forces personnel about the decision-making process concerning their working conditions.

On the whole, army respondents and non-commissioned respondents have expressed a higher degree of disenchantment than navy and commissioned respondents. A majority of the respondents appear to be ready to accept the application of the principle of negotiation to the armed forces. However, although this principle of negotiation might not be applicable to all aspects of the armed forces, certain aspects of their working conditions are undoubtedly negotiable. These are pay and allowances, retirement and pension conditions and grievance procedures.

There is a definite lack of consensus among the respondents as to the necessity or even desirability of organizing armed forces personnel along union lines. However, it was felt there should be some mechanism established whereby negotiations with the government are conducted in a collective manner. This negotiating body should be formed within the armed forces, and definitely should not be in the hands of an outside group such as the Public Service Alliance.

Finally—and I concur emphatically in this—the armed forces should not, even in time of peace, have the right to strike. That is as it must be.

I find that I have only a moment or two left, Mr. Speaker, and what I have to say may not be very popular with one or two of my colleagues. I wish to thank the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) for the assistance he has rendered to me in dealing with armed forces personnel problems. This debate has centred mainly on policy. I am more interested in trying to help with the personal problems of the men in the armed forces and their families. The Minister of National Defence is in the chamber, and I wish to say that I appreciate the consideration he has extended to me in the cases that I have brought to his attention.

I remember one particular case last fall. I do not know if the minister noticed at the time but I was very critical of him one day. The following day I went to him about a problem concerning a gentleman who was formerly in the forces. The minister's response was most generous to this ex-serviceman and it was something he and I appreciated. I wish to thank the minister publicly on the floor of the House for this.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I thank the hon. gentleman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It being five o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) proceedings on the motion before the House have expired.

A long weekend in the glorious month of May is a great opportunity to reassess our attitudes and to formulate our judgments on the critical issues that are before us. I hope hon. members will enjoy and share the bountiful gifts of a provident Mother Nature. May her sons learn from her example to be just and good-natured.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 25, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

Third report of Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry—Mr. Goode.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

THE CENSUS

OMISSIONS IN QUESTIONNAIRES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, there is a first time for everything and in my 31 years in this House this will be the first time I have moved a motion for adjournment. Under Standing Order 43 I wish to ask for leave to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It has to do with the census to be taken shortly and the glaring and flagrant omissions in the questions on both the short and long forms of the questionnaire.

In 1961, during my period of office as Prime Minister, I felt strongly at the time of the last census when the form was being approved that there should be provision for those who wished to describe themselves as Canadians to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: A section to that effect was accordingly included which read as follows: "Country of Citizenship: Are you a Canadian? If not, of what country are you a national or a citizen?" That question has now been deleted and a retrogressive step has been taken which will have the effect of putting off for ten years at least the right of Canadians to so describe themselves.

Second, according to the 1961 census the numerical order according to population on the basis of racial origin was as follows: English, French, German, Ukrainian and Italian. However, under section 5 of the present questionnaire, which is entitled "Mother Tongue, Language First Spoken and Still Understood", English, French, German and Italian are set out, with others to be specified. The explanation given by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) on Friday at page 6036 of Hansard is that the reason, if I can understand the mischievous parade of facetious fatuities, is that on form 2A, the short one which goes to two-thirds of all households, the space limits special provision to only four racial origins whose mother tongues are numerically the largest according to the views of DBS, not according to the 1961 census.

• (2:10 p.m.)

There can be no question that the government has deliberately decided to omit those whose language is Ukrainian from the questionnaire. The reason given by the minister is that limitation of space prevented it being done. That is not a valid excuse, since there is ample space to include Ukrainian. Those of Ukrainian origin will fall to a lower category according to population, he believes, than in 1961. That explanation is untenable and unfair.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate very much to interrupt the right hon. gentleman but he will appreciate that under the Standing Order he must indicate what the motion is. There are a number of precedents and rulings from the Chair to indicate that there should be no debate at this point. I have suggested to the House from time to time that, since Standing Order 43 does not make it possible for another hon. member or for someone on behalf of the government to reply to an argument in connection with a motion such as this one, it might not be according to the spirit of the Standing Order to have argument. So I invite the right hon. gentleman to indicate as soon as possible what the motion is for which he seeks the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry that I have transgressed but I had to give an explanation; otherwise the motion would have been meaningless. The omission I have spoken about with reference to people of Ukrainian origin has been strongly objected to. The Ukrainian Canadian Committee and others have raised their objection to the Acting Prime Minister and to others because of the discriminatory nature of this omission. Again section 16 of the questionnaire asks, "What is your religion", and although the Ukrainian Greek Orthodox Church is the largest Greek Orthodox denomination in Canada, it has been specifically omitted from the questionnaire. I wish, Sir, pursuant to Standing Order 43, to ask for leave to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be authorized to look into the changes and omissions above stated and be empowered to make such recommendations for changes in the census forms to meet the objections I have referred to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. This motion has been submitted for the consideration of the House under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. The Chair will therefore inquire whether there is unanimous consent for the putting of the motion that has been proposed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was opposed by Liberal party members and only by Liberals.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID FOR REFUGEES FROM EAST PAKISTAN—TENSION ON INDIA-PAKISTAN BORDER—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING PAKISTAN

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us about any arrangement regarding aid for the refugees from East Pakistan now in West Bengal? Is anything effective being arranged to assist these refugees who are now reported by the government of India to number in the millions? What is Canada doing in this connection?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said in reply to a similar question at the end of last week, the government is giving sympathetic consideration to the request that has been received for international aid for the Pakistan refugees who are in India. This effort is being co-ordinated through the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees, and we are now in the process of deciding what sum of money it would be appropriate for Canada to contribute.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs anything to report with regard to the possibility of tension along the border between India and Pakistan? Is the government taking any position with regard to this situation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government recognizes that the movement of refugees across the border from Pakistan into India is in itself a cause of very great tension. We have been advising both the Indian and Pakistani governments to do everything they can to avoid an escalation of this conflict. The problem, however, is extremely serious and we recognize it as such. For the time being at least we feel that the most effective thing we can do is provide some aid to the refugees who are there.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what the position of the government is toward the government of Pakistan. For example, does the government of Canada believe that pressure should be put on the government of Pakistan to achieve a settlement through the World Bank, for example, refusing to give any additional time with regard to payments that are due? Does the government of Canada believe it should become involved in pressure of this sort or, on the other hand, does it feel it should remain aloof and keep its hands off as far as Pakistan is concerned?

Mr. Sharp: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the situation is that the government of Pakistan has unilaterally declared a moratorium. The various countries concerned have been studying this situation and deciding how best to cope with what appears to be the bankruptcy of the Pakistan government. As far as aid is concerned, it is a very difficult question of judgment how far to go in providing aid under these circumstances. Like Canada, I think that most countries of the world are operating very carefully. We certainly do not want to cause additional hardship to any of the people of Pakistan, in the east or west, by denying projects that can be of immediate assistance. Nevertheless, it is recognized that the aid must be seen to be going toward helping the people on both sides.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is an effort being made to assure that Canadian aid is not used to bolster the military repression of East Pakistan?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REDUCTION OF EMPLOYEES' AND PENSIONERS' PASS PRIVILEGES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway has reduced, almost to the point of elimination, the pass privileges accorded its employees and pensioners, and in view of the fact that these privileges have been regarded as part of the earnings of Canadian Pacific employees, will the minister take up this matter with either the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canadian Transport Commission in the hope that this situation can be rectified?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will. I was not aware that this situation had occurred. I quite agree with the hon. member that the very least a pensioner can have is the ability to travel on the railway which he served for so long.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the answer of the minister, but will he take note of the fact that the reduction of pass privileges applies to employees as well as to pensioners?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should have also indicated that I would think it is not a matter for the Canadian Transport Commission. It is a matter of appealing to the good sense, if you like, of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I will try to do that.

[Translation]

HARBOURS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS RESPECTING MONTREAL

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works a question resulting from his statement as reported in this morning's papers and which I consider very detrimental to the best interests of the port of Montreal.

In order to clarify the situation, will the minister make a full statement in the House today or in the next few days so that hon. members be informed of the measures which the government is considering in this area?

[English]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I was speaking in the Maritimes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: That is no excuse.

Mr. Laing: —when I made reference to—

An hon. Member: Why didn't you go to Assiniboia?

Mr. Laing: —a report in the possession of my department. I never at any time made any reference to the port of Montreal, directly, indirectly or in any way whatsoever. If it is the desire of the media and other organizations to editorialize on the basis of a statement I made, that is their right, and of course they will have to take the responsibility in doing so.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member for Sainte-Marie want to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Valade: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Minister of Public Works table the statement he made in Newfoundland and have it published as an appendix to today's Hansard?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Marie on a point of order.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, with deference to the Chair, I believe the minister was about to give a reply when you gave the floor to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

Inquiries of the Ministry

MONTREAL—PRIORITY IN DEVELOPMENT OF PORTS POLICY

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Would the minister assure the House that he will not give priority to other ports over the port of Montreal in the development of our ports policy?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laprairie.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Laprairie on a supplementary and will recognize the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster in a moment, also on a supplementary.

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Can the minister tell us whether the report to which he is said to have referred was prepared by his department alone or in collaboration with the Department of Transport?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is not in order. I would think that the question originally asked by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie was in order. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat? I suggest to the hon. member and to all hon. members that the only way in which hon. members can ask questions about a statement made outside the House is, of course, the traditional and well-known way, by inquiring whether what was said by a minister outside the House represents government policy. Hon. members may, of course, refer to the substance of the matter without necessarily alluding to the speech made outside the House. In this light the question originally asked was in order, but the supplementary asked by the hon. member for Laprairie is not in order from a procedural point of view.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Having heard the minister deal with the port of Montreal and knowing he loves all the ports of the Maritimes equally as much and is fearlessly returning there this week may I ask whether he will assure the House that all ports in the Maritimes will be treated equally in this matter?

PRINCE RUPERT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. When will he be in a position to make an announcement about the most important west coast port and its development, namely, Prince Rupert?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I hope an announcement or some progress report can be made within a matter of weeks. I have today dispatched a letter to the premier of British Columbia inviting him to meet with me to discuss this matter at a date of his choosing.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF GOVERNMENT TO INTRODUCE PRICE AND WAGE CONTROLS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question in light of the growing danger of inflation and the doubts with respect to what the government's policy is. Has the government sought legal advice—I am not asking what the advice is—as to the jurisdiction of the Federal government with regard to the imposition of wage and price controls?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated the other day in the House it is our view that in the kind of circumstances which would justify wage and price controls we would have jurisdiction.

Mr. Baldwin: Has the government discussed with the provincial governments the question of whether they would delegate their rights and co-operate with the federal government? I am asking for information purposes.

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Prices and Incomes Commission at one time discussed with the provinces whether they wished to exercise restraint or to impose controls under their jurisdiction, but as I recall it the response was negative.

* * *

INDUSTRY

PAUL MANEY LABORATORIES—ACTION TO PREVENT SALE TO FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, if I can get his attention. Is he in a position today to reply to the question I asked him on Friday regarding the Paul Maney Laboratories and the extent to which his department is providing some assistance in order to prevent the company being sold to foreign interests?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, two points only. The company has recently submitted an application for a PIDA loan which is being processed as rapidly as possible. I also understand that a United States based company in Canada is considering making an offer to purchase this company.

Mr. Saltsman: Would the minister indicate whether it is his intention to ensure that this company remains in Canadian hands as one of the few remaining Canadian drug companies not under foreign ownership?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the programs of my department can be used for that purpose, yes, but there are other things that cannot be corrected by programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, however good they are.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—REVIEW OF POLICY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to direct to the Minister of Agriculture.

Following the announcement on March 30, 1971, of a new policy with regard to the dairy industry for the current year, the minister suggested that improvements could be brought up during the forthcoming months. Is he now in a position to tell us whether such improvements with respect to prices, will be made for the benefit of industrial milk producers?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to announce any changes, but I am in a position to report that improvements in the dairy situation, both in Canada and in international markets have been going on very satisfactorily.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I accept the minister's answer but this is what I want to know: How soon will the industrial milk producers benefit from it?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The date is not particularly important because any immediate improvement could be realized at the level of the holdback. Whether or not a change is made during the next few weeks or at some later time, this improvement will accrue to the producers anyway.

SUPPLY OF MILK FOR MANUFACTURE OF CHEESE

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that the supply of milk for the manufacture of cheese is drying up fast, and is the minister going to do anything about it?

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression that this question was asked a few days ago but I am not sure whether it was replied to by the hon. minister. It is my impression that it was, but if it was not the minister could reply to the hon. member for Huron.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, may I say that neither the minister nor the dairy commission has control over the allocation of milk to cheese factories or other processors.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—CANADA PROTOCOL ON CONSULTATION—REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER ON RUSSIAN FISHING PRACTICES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister has stated in Moscow that the protocol between Canada and Russia was necessary in face of the overpowering presence of the United States of America which is a danger to our national identity. I want to dissociate myself as a Canadian from the Prime Minister's views—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows very well that he cannot make a statement at this time. If hon. members took the opportunity of the question period to make statements such as the one the hon. member is making now, I suggest that that would be the end of the question period. The hon. member has the floor not for the purpose of making a statement but for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister which country initiated the idea of a Russia-Canada protocol, and in talks with the Russians has the Prime Minister raised the position that Russian fishing practices off our coast are presently a danger to our fish resources and asked for immediate Russian co-operation in this area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are two questions here. The protocol, which as I said the other day seems to me to be a useful supplement to the consultations going on between our two countries, was mutually agreed upon as a very useful thing to do at this time. I do not know who suggested it first. I think it arose out of discussion about the importance of the mission of the Prime Minister, and it was agreed that regular consultation would enable Canada and the Russians to make their views known to the other country on such questions as the one the hon. member has raised, namely, fishing and the conservation of fishery resources. Otherwise we would have to wait until the visits of prime ministers or foreign ministers, when there could be regular consultation between their officials and ours whenever we felt this was desirable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is our ambassador there for, decoration?

ICNAF CONFERENCE—CANADIAN POSITION—EFFECT OF U.S.S.R.—CANADA PROTOCOL ON CONSULTATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries. Will he inform the House what position Canada will take at the ICNAF meetings which are about to take place in Halifax, and what effect the new Soviet-Canadian protocol will have on our position at those meetings since Russia is one of the chief offenders in the overexploitation of our fisheries resources?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, conservation will be the main theme for discussion at these meetings. The Russian government will be represented there by its top officials, and I am sure these representatives of the U.S.S.R. will continue to participate very effectively in ICNAF.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER TO SOVIET GOVERNMENT RESPECTING CATCHING OF SALMON IN NORTH PACIFIC

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Acting Prime Minister. During the time the Prime Minister has been in Russia has he had any conversation with the government of the Soviet Union, or does he intend to, about bringing that nation into the North Pacific convention in respect of salmon, halibut and herring off the Pacific coast in order that that nation as well will cease taking salmon on the high seas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister will be at home at the end of this week. There will be an opportunity then for members to hear his report and to question him on the matters he has raised in Moscow.

REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER TO SOVIET GOVERNMENT ON EXPORT OF RUSSIAN TRACTORS TO CANADA

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. While the Prime Minister is in Russia will he take up the question of the possible expansion of the shipment of Russian tractors to Canada, which would help the Russians in their balance of payments position as well as helping Canadian farmers to get cheaper tractors?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Prime Minister posed that question in such specific terms, but it is known that the Soviet Union has been exporting tractors to Canada and that they have been selling them. If they want to sell more they are welcome.

* * *

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF PACIFIC GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY TO PRUDHOE BAY TO MOVE OIL

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In order to avoid the use of tankers for the transportation of oil on the west coast and the ecological problems that might be created by a pipeline, has the government of Canada given consideration to discussing with the government of British Columbia and the government of Alaska the extension of the Pacific Great Eastern railway to Prudhoe Bay in order that unit trains could be used in place of a pipeline for the transportation of oil?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer as quickly as I can. We have had a study under way for several months in respect of the extension of rail line services into northern British Columbia and the Yukon. So far as I am aware we have not had representations from either the United States government or the government of Alaska about any further extension, but I am sure we would be very pleased to talk to them if any such overtures were made.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

AGENDA OF JUNE MEETING—DISCUSSION OF INTERPROVINCIAL FREE TRADE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Is there any disagreement over the agenda for the forthcoming constitutional conference in June and, if not, will the Acting Prime Minister table the tentative agenda in the House in order that there can be a focus for public discussion?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is now agreement on the agenda. I will check to be quite sure and see whether it would be possible to obtain agreement of all the parties to the conference to release it.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, will constitutional clarification in respect of free trade between provinces be considered at the conference?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the principal purpose of the conference will be to carry forward the work that was so well begun in the hope that we will be able to agree on a package proposal for constitutional reform. It was agreed previously that the division of powers between the provinces and the federal government should not be the main part of that package. The practical question of these restraints is one that is, of course, under consideration at all times. It is before the courts and we have put forward a bill which I think would go some distance in helping to solve the immediate problem.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING FORMULA TO AMEND CONSTITUTION

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, would the Acting Prime Minister clarify for the benefit of the House one point he raised in his answer: will the federal government refuse to discuss any subject other than the formula for amending the Constitution, or does it intend to consider the substance of the amendments?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course we cannot refuse to discuss anything the provinces insist upon discussing, but I do hope we can make progress along the general lines that were agreed to by all governments at the last conference. I am sure hon. members of the House would like to see progress made in order that we can bring our constitution to Canada and deal with practical questions here among ourselves without having to depend upon another legislature.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—DISCUSSION OF PRICE SUPPORT WITH PROVINCES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether during his discussions with the provinces he took up the question of support prices for hogs in view of the fact that two provinces are now subsidizing their hog producers? Has he discussed the possibility of price support under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, and how this could be done effectively?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have had a review made of prices in this current year and compared them with the ten-year moving average on which they are based. They were still above 80 per cent of that ten-year average. As I pointed out to the hon. member a few days ago, we want to be helpful in this situation, if we can change the effective dates of the hog marketing year. But I can also report that indications are that hog prices will start to move up in late July or August.

[Later:]

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister to inform the House as to the basis of his forecast that hog prices will increase in August. Would he tell us whose crystal ball he was using?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I am using no one's crystal ball. I am basing this forecast on the statistics we have from both Canada and the United States which indicate that farrowings started a very sharp downward trend about two and a half months ago.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID FOR REFUGEES FROM EAST PAKISTAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING PAKISTAN

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the problem of Pakistan and India and the refugees. The Secretary of State for External Affairs seemed to be a little general in his previous replies. I should like to ask particularly about the refugees who are apparently there now in large numbers. When does the government of Canada propose to make a decision as to what aid it will render these refugees?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under discussion at the moment among the various departments and I am hoping that within the next few days we will make a decision as to the amount.

Mr. Stanfield: I have one further supplementary question regarding Pakistan which I understood the minister to suggest was bankrupt because it had declared a moratorium. Is it the policy of the government to continue simply to watch the situation, in which event the government of Pakistan might just disintegrate, or does the government of Canada propose to participate in the taking of some decisions? In other words, is it the policy of the minister simply to let nature take its course in the hope that somehow the thing will work out, or has he a policy?

Mr. Sharp: We have had a number of discussions recently with the body that has been co-ordinating this problem, namely, the World Bank. It is an extremely difficult problem, and if the hon. member knows of any simple solution to it I would be very happy to hear it. No one else in the world seems to have an easy solution. We are all doing our best to meet two problems, that of the refugees in India and also the condition of Pakistan itself and the conflicts that now separate the two parts. This is one of the most serious international issues the world has been faced with; we are doing our best in an attempt to arrive at reasonable solutions, and that is the best we can do.

* * *

AIR CANADA

SERVICE FROM EASTERN CANADA TO SASKATOON—REPLACEMENT BY ANOTHER CARRIER

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that Air Canada is downgrading service from eastern Canada to Saskatoon, does the minister intend to take immediate steps to provide adequate service by another airline?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would need to know the specific routes in question to see whether they in effect come within what might be described as the regional air policy, but the objective is to get better air service for all parts of the country.

Mr. Cadieu: Does the Minister of Transport intend to introduce regulations to prohibit the Prime Minister and other politicians from flying planes that have captive passengers aboard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

THE CENSUS

METHOD OF SENDING RETURNS TO BUREAU OF STATISTICS

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It has to do with a question raised as a question of privilege by the hon. member for Churchill last week. In connection with the census which begins on June 1 can he explain to the House and to the people of Canada why all Canadians will not be allowed to send their returns directly to the department as will be done in cities?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have a note from DBS which says that either the mail-back or pick-up system by census representatives assures confidentiality, but the pick-up system is employed in localities where, for instance, the mail service is insufficient or telephone lines are shared, proving unsatisfactory for telephone follow-up when difficulties are experienced when completing the questionnaire before mailing it back. So the system is justified by very practical considerations and there is no discrimination here against any group in the process.

Mr. Howe: When these rules and regulations were drawn up did the minister have a discussion with his colleague in the next seat, the Postmaster General.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE MILITARY THREAT FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister if he foresees any military threat from the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would enlighten me.

Mr. MacInnis: Gladly, Mr. Speaker, and I must do it on a point of order in order to keep myself in order. I would suggest that the Acting Prime Minister keep up with the statement made by the Prime Minister while visiting Russia when he lumped together the cultural threat, the economic threat and the military threat from the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

POLLUTION

ARSENIC—TESTING OF WATERWAYS—PERMISSIBLE LEVEL IN FOOD AND EFFLUENT

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of recent reports that research in the United States on arsenic indicates it could be a highly dangerous pollutant if allowed to escape into lakes and rivers, could the minister indicate whether any department of government has undertaken any testing of our waterways for possible arsenic pollution and its effect on fish?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, some research work has been undertaken and the program is being stepped up.

Mr. Harding: Has the government set a schedule of permissible levels of arsenic in food for human consumption and have arsenic content standards been set for any effluent discharged into any of our waterways?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly think so but I will make inquiries from the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CENSUS

FAILURE TO INCLUDE "CANADIAN" AS DESIGNATION OF ORIGIN

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. How does a Canadian answer the census question about his origin, and how many generations does it take for one to become a Canadian for statistical purposes?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, a number of things—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question as asked is in order. The hon. member is asking the minister how many generations it takes to become a Canadian. I doubt whether a question asked in those terms is in order.

* * *

FISHERIES

SALMON FISHING REGULATIONS—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE—DISCUSSION WITH NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he has had any protest from the government of Newfoundland over the new salmon regulations, and in view of the invitation by Premier Smallwood to the Newfoundland fishermen to test the new regulations by defying the law with the support of the Newfoundland government, does the government propose to change the regulations or enter into some discussions with the Newfoundland government?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the new regulations were discussed with the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland. I had a personal telephone conversation with the Premier of Newfoundland last week about the regulations. I stressed to him that they were reasonable, that they would be enforced, that there were some misunderstandings, and that there are local appeal committees to deal with individual cases. I think the whole question is being exaggerated.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Justice. Is the Acting Minister of Justice considering reinvoking the temporary public order act to accommodate for the pseudo-violence of the premier as the election approaches in the province in Newfoundland in view of his statement that the fishermen of the province are advised to break the law and that legal counsel would be provided for them in the event they did so, despite the fact that this is sort of a ridiculous statement from a public official?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Davis.]

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY—PROSPECT OF MORE EQUITABLE PRICING FOLLOWING MEETING WITH MANUFACTURERS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the meeting held between the minister and representatives of the farm machinery companies last Friday relative to the Barber Commission report, can the minister indicate whether there may be any hope of a move toward more equitable pricing of farm machinery as a result of the Friday meeting?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could say it would be directly as a result of Friday's meeting, but it was a useful meeting in that there were additional explanations given from both sides of the table respecting some of the findings and recommendations in the report.

* * *

[Translation]

NATIONAL PARKS

MONT TREMBLANT—DISCUSSION RESPECTING POSSIBLE TRANSFER TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

As a petition is circulating in the areas surrounding Mont Tremblant Park in the province of Quebec requesting the nationalization of this park and as the member for Labelle approves of such an initiative, could the minister tell us if his department or himself are favourable to such a move and whether he has had discussions with his Quebec counterpart on the transfer of this park to the federal government?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have discussed with provincial authorities several possibilities in the province of Quebec. As to this particular project or any other, we are not in a position to reveal their characteristics at the present time.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. Can the minister specifically tell us whether he has discussed that project?

Mr. Chrétien: I cannot say so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the minister.

Since Mrs. Kirkland-Casgrain, the Quebec Minister of Tourism, has rejected that proposal, at least if we are to believe the newspaper reports, is the minister in a position to tell us whether it is a definite and official position of the Quebec government?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have not recently communicated with Mrs. Casgrain to discuss her statement.

[English]

THE CENSUS

METHOD OF SENDING RETURNS TO BUREAU OF STATISTICS—EFFICIENCY OF POST OFFICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A moment ago he explained there were large areas across Canada where the Post Office is so inefficient and ineffective that the census questionnaires could not be entrusted to it for delivery. Would he let the House and also the Postmaster General know what proportion of Canada is in that category.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was not saying that. I was saying that each return must be checked by regional officials of DBS and that the officials who are checking must be in a position to ask further questions and seek clarification very rapidly. If they have to wait for mail deliveries to be made, however fast they may be, in rural areas or if they have to use telephones which more than one person are using, it would be very difficult to maintain the confidentiality and have the returns on time. I was trying to provide a reasonable explanation, but I see my hon. friend does not want to be reasonable today, or at any other time for that matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have heard the reinterpretation of a statement that was capable of only one meaning, namely, that a large part of the Post Office service in Canada is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the minister has stated that these returns will have to be checked by the staff of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. How can he account for the information put out to householders who do not have to mail their returns to DBS but have to return them to the census commissioners for perusal by the census commissioner in each of the small localities?

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SUSPENSION OF DEVELOPMENT AID TO PAKISTAN

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and is really supplementary to a question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Have Great Britain and the United States suspended their development aid to Pakistan and has Canada considered the same course of action?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that any of the main donor countries have suspended their aid to Pakistan.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. In a recent letter to the minister in charge of the Post Office the minister stated that no compensation would be paid for parcels stolen from postal boxes in the Riverside and Walkley Road areas in Ottawa during the Christmas season. I want to ask the minister if he thinks the people of Canada should use the federal mail to send Christmas gifts, or is it the attitude of the government that it does not give a damn about the poor people in senior citizens' homes who are still waiting for some of their gifts?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, is not a question.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INCLUSION OF UNEMPLOYMENT ON AGENDA OF JUNE MEETING

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in order to find out what the government's priorities may be. In view of the fact that before he left on his Russian visit the Prime Minister indicated that perhaps some arrangement could be reached between the provinces and the federal government to terminate the high unemployment that the country now faces, is this item now on the agenda, and has the federal government been involved with each province in order to use its influence to see that this matter is discussed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question was rather obscure. I think the hon. gentleman was asking whether this matter was on the agenda of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference. I believe the Prime Minister made it quite clear that if the provinces wished these matters to be discussed they could be added to the agenda, at the end of the agenda, so as not to supplant the discussion of constitutional reform which has made such great progress in recent months.

Mr. Alexander: Has the Acting Prime Minister received any direction from the provinces on whether or not this would be a proper course to follow and that because of its importance unemployment should be on the agenda?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have not had any direct answer to this question yet. The Minister of Justice is just about to make a tour of all the provincial capitals to discuss preparations for the conference, and perhaps this will provide another opportunity for the matter to be discussed. But, as I say, the federal government is quite happy to have a discussion at the forthcoming conference on these matters, and I am sure they will be discussed. However, I hope the hon. gentleman will agree with me that constitutional reform, on which we have made quite extraordinary progress, should not be supplanted by any other subject.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Does the government have any projects on the planning board to provide 100,000 jobs in the north?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, a question of privilege, or in whatever way this may be acceptable. During his visit to Russia the Prime Minister has made a statement to the effect that he is prepared to send 100,000 young Canadians north. I ask the Acting Prime Minister, on what projects?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo.

* * *

INDUSTRY

ELECTRICAL AND RADIO—RECOMMENDATION BY UNION OF REGULATORY BODY

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has he had an opportunity to conclude his examination of the brief of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, and can he say whether he is prepared to accept the union recommendation for the establishment of a regulatory body for that industry?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I met with the gentlemen referred to in the question and we had a discussion on these matters. I suggested that that particular recommendation would mark a very substantial change in the political and administrative set-up of the country, and I personally was not in a position that day to make a decision on that matter.

Mr. Saltsman: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have gone beyond the end of the question period, but perhaps with consent the Leader of the Opposition might be allowed to ask a question.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSITION OF SOVIET UNION RESPECTING BALANCED REDUCTION OF ARMED FORCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question, one that I asked him last week following an indication that the position of Russia with regard to a balanced reduction of forces had changed in recent months. I asked the minister if he could indicate to the House what change there had been in the Russian position. He did not seem to know at that time. I wonder if he has since had an opportunity to find out, and is he now prepared to indicate briefly, in answer to this very important question, how and to what extent the Russian position with regard to a reduction of forces has changed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the Soviet Union has changed. I regret I did not follow this up to get a sample of the kind of statements that were being made some months ago and those that are being made today to show the extent to which the position has changed, but indeed I think it is fair to say that there has been a notable advance in this field on both sides, and I do hope we can have some very fruitful discussions in Lisbon.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1970

PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION, MINISTRIES OF STATE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES, ETC.

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 7, consideration in committee of Bill C-207, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose on Wednesday, April 7, 1971, clause 14 of the bill, with an amendment proposed by the President of the Treasury Board, was being considered. The amendment is as follows:

That Bill C-207 be amended by striking out lines 22 and 23 on page 9 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"the Governor in Council may, by proclamation, subject to negative resolution of the House of Commons, establish a Ministry of State for that"

Shall the amendment carry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment has been the subject of discussion between the house leaders of the various parties and has resulted in an order of the House, which was adopted last week, providing for a rather different dispensation than is indicated in this particular amendment. With the permission of the committee I would withdraw the amendment and propose another one in its place.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the President of the Treasury Board has permission to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: It is so ordered.

Amendment withdrawn.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move then, in lieu of that particular amendment, the following:

That Bill C-207 be amended

(a) by striking out clause 17 on page 6;

(b) by renumbering clause 18 as clause 17; and

(c) by adding thereto immediately after clause 17, as so renumbered, the following clause:

18 (1) An order in council authorizing the issuance of a proclamation under section 14 or 16 shall not be made until the proposed text of the order in council has been laid before the House of Commons by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and the making of the order in council has been approved by a resolution of the House of Commons.

(2) Where the proposed text of an order in council has been laid before the House of Commons pursuant to subsection (1), a motion in the House of Commons proposed by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada in accordance with the rules of the House, praying that the making of the order in council be approved, shall be debated in the House for not more than seven hours, after which time the question shall be decided in accordance with the rules of the House.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could have a copy of the amendment?

Mr. Drury: I apologize for the absence of copies, Mr. Chairman. They should have been here and I am sure they will be along in a moment. The proposed wording I hope does give effect to the order the House adopted last week.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Chairman, having listened to it I think it does give effect to an understanding reached through the usual channels with regard to the terms of various amendments which were to be made. For the sake of facilitating debate, because I am sure there will be a little discussion on these matters on clause 14, and since the amendment deals with the deletion of clause 17 and the substitution of another clause, I hope that we might be allowed to deal with Part IV in total. We were following this course at the time of adjournment, and I am just asking for a continuation of that practice.

We opposed this bill for a number of reasons, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend from the Atlantic provinces opposed the part of it which dealt with the deletion of the word "fisheries" but I will not go into that now. We opposed those parts of the bill which gave the right to create a large number of newly minted and paid officials of the government who would be drawn from this House, because we felt this would create difficulties which I will go into later when discussing another part of the bill.

We also, and this is most important, opposed the right of the government to create ministries of state at their own free will, to change those ministries, to abolish them and create new ministries in their place. It was our view, and one which resulted in this party providing substantial opposition to the proposal, that this did away with what must be one of the most important aspects of the continuance of democratic government, that of parliamentary supremacy. To a large extent this amendment does away with this repugnant feature of the bill. While it is not perfect, I think we can accept it on the basis on which it is offered. We never get everything we want, but we felt that the discussions which took place were on a very fair level and an opportunity was given to all parties to express their viewpoint.

These negotiations carried on from April 7, the last day on which this bill was before the House and, in spite of what the Prime Minister had to say on some other occasions in this House, they were genuine, continuing discussions and negotiations in an attempt to work out a compromise. It was felt that the opposition should not be compelled to give up something which in our opinion was exceedingly important, that is, the right of Parliament to be supreme on issues of this kind but there was also the need of any government from time to time to rearrange its various portfolios and ministries as it should feel them best adapted to the needs of the day.

This illustrates the course which the opposition can take; it can oppose reasonably and vote against certain measures. As a matter of fact, before this bill is through it is our intention, in the limited time left, to oppose and vote against certain aspects of the bill. It is inherent in the opposition, and in fact it is part of its duty, to oppose measures which are repugnant, especially measures which strike at the heart of parliamentary democracy, namely the right of Parliament to be supreme. It should oppose measures of that kind to an extent and, if necessary, for a period which would permit the people of the country to be aroused and alarmed at what any government could attempt to do.

There is no doubt that the very first speech made from this side of the House by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants and the first speech that I made in this House on this matter, made it absolutely clear that with respect to this aspect of the bill there would be the most formidable and the most pertinacious opposition. I refer to that part of the bill which gave to the government the right to make those changes, to create new ministries and new departments without recourse to Parliament. When the government proceeded, therefore, they knew what they were facing. I am glad that we have reached this sort of arrangement. It is essential for those who criticize and claim that Parliament is failing, that it is not doing its job, to realize that, as a result of honest discussion, an accommodation was reached whereby the opposition parties where able to find a way to secure acceptance of the principle of parliamentary supremacy. The government, in due course, will be able to secure passage of those parts of the bill which it considers necessary for proper functioning and administrative efficiency. The order made provides for this.

We had some very difficult discussions and some compromises all the way around. I give full credit to my hon. colleagues the President of the Privy Council, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Lotbinière, as well as those who have been associated with reaching this compromise. It might have been difficult with another person as government House leader, but in this case it worked out quite effectively.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Before concluding and giving others an opportunity to present their points of view, I wish to say something else. Over the last few days we have heard quite a lot about the defects of parliamentary government. We have heard something of the failure of the opposition to do its duty resulting in the necessity for backbenchers on the government side of the House to fill in and do the job. That suggestion bears right on this issue, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Trinity, the hon. member for Duvernay, the hon. member for York West—I think it is—and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich have been extremely vocal on this particular matter. I have examined the record of the debate on this bill and those hon. gentlemen who have had much to say about the defects of the Opposition have been silent on some matters. Not one of them stood up to defend the right to parliamentary government and the necessity for this chamber to be supreme. Not one of them, and these remarks apply to other bills that have come before the House, stood up in this chamber and defended the need for an auditor general who would be free and independent and report to this House as a free and independent agent. Not one of them stood up when amendments were moved in an attempt to secure passage of the statutory instruments legislation. I just mention these facts in passing, Mr. Chairman. It is about time some of those hon. gentlemen who are so vocal put their votes where their mouths are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: When hon. gentlemen see fit to oppose the role of the opposition, they ought to bear in mind that the opposition brought about a reasonable termination of a difficult debate on a difficult bill. I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will bear that well in mind in future. That is all I have to say about that.

We accept the amendment. The amendment offered now is a good amendment. It has been offered in the proper form, and not in the form originally offered by the minister. Our problem is, as the Chair will realize, that at present there is not in our Standing Orders a definition of affirmative and negative resolutions. Ultimately, when the regulations of the statutory instruments Act and the terms of reference of the scrutiny committee are agreed to, there will be those definitions.

At present the amendment provides that there shall not be established a ministry of state unless and until a proclamation has been laid on the table of the House and there has been opportunity to debate of some seven hours or less. That, I hope, will permit hon. members who feel that the department should not be created, or that it should be created in terms other than those proposed in the proclamation, to express their point of view. Then, if they feel that the proposal should be changed, they can urge changes upon the government. The amendment provides, in the final analysis, that the initiation ministries of state is the responsibility of the government, but their final creation is the responsibility of parliament. I think the amendment is good.

I do not object to the other amendment with regard to the deletion of that clause limiting the number of such ministries to five. The government has that power now. If the government wishes to create any number of new departments, it has the right to do so. It must do so by bringing in legislation. Perhaps this is a simpler and more efficient way of dealing with the matter, provided that it is done by proclamation and that the proclamation is laid on the table of the House. It is true that if this were done by legislative proposal there would be the usual opportunity for hon. members in opposition to propose changes and alterations and to move amendments.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, after this amendment has been passed, as I assume it will be, that if at some time in future ministries of state are created, apart from the two which are the subject of the House order, there will be full discussion and debate when the matters come into the House and that the Chair will look with some leniency upon any attempt by opposition members to amend motions of this kind. I know that the Chair cannot decide in advance what course of action it will take, be just as hon. members of the House do not know what their course of action will be. I hope, however, that a proclamation setting up in some detail establishment of a ministry of state will be susceptible to reasonable debate in this House and to reasonable amendment. That would take the place of a statute. Its terms of reference may be fairly difficult and complex and those hon. members who want to make suggestions and alterations should have an opportunity of doing so. I simply file that as a caveat. Perhaps we shall have to wait for one or two years before we have an opportunity to test this.

Having said that, I repeat that I am glad to see this amendment. I am glad to see it introduced through cooperation and understanding, and I am glad to see that it underlines the fundamental principle which we in this House should never forget: that, since we are the representatives of the people of Canada, the final say on matters of this kind should always lie in this House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, as I read this amendment, it implements to the letter the agreement worked out by the House leaders with respect to this phase of the bill. We, therefore, are happy to indicate our support of the amendment and will vote for the clause as amended in this respect.

I do not wish to engage in any contest with my good friend the hon. member for Peace River as to who fought the hardest against the unlimited powers that were contained in this bill before the amendment was proposed. May I just say that the record is clear that members of this party made it equally clear that we could not accept an arrangement that would have added, as this bill did, to the enormous powers of the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. member for Selkirk spoke on this matter, and so did I in the course of my remarks on second reading. We made our position very clear. We said that one of the things wrong with Parliament at present is that too much power is being put into the hands of one man, and we simply could not countenance this addition to that enormous power. Statements about the power of the Prime Minister have been made in recent days by hon. members sitting to the right of the Chair and, indeed, by one or two who have been pretty close to the citadels of power and who were aware of what they were saying.

Before this amendment was proposed, this bill gave the Prime Minister complete power to set up ministries of state with ministers presiding over them, in other words new departments of government, without any reference to Parliament whatsoever. Under this amendment that situation has now been changed. Any new departments, which is after all what there would be if we set up ministries of state with ministers presiding over them, can be established only after there has been the explicit approval of Parliament after debate on the floor of the House of Commons.

I am glad that the amendment refers not only to proclamations under clause 14 but also to proclamations under clause 16. Clause 14 is the one under which a new minister and ministry of state can be established. Clause 16 is the clause under which the name of a minister or ministry of state can be varied. It would have been unfortunate if clause 16 had not been included. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, there is no need to spin out this debate. We support the amendment.

• (3:20 p.m.)

We on this side are being very modest. This could be a time when we could jump around and say how we have won the battle which the opposition has waged. The fact is we are pleased. I think there will go down in history the words that the President of the Privy Council used when he referred the other day to the retreat that had been made on his side. He said it was a retreat that he enjoyed. We are all happy. We have reached agreement. That is fine. Let us support the amendment and get on to the other clauses of the bill.

There was one statement by the hon. member for Peace River that I would like to amend slightly. He spoke of this amendment giving to those in opposition the right to have the last word as to whether the government sets up a new ministry of state. May I just say that this amendment places that right where it ought to be, not just in the hands of the opposition, but in the hands of Parliament. We are pleased to note the growing uneasiness among members who sit to Your Honour's right over the power of the government. I think members on that side are as happy as we are that the battle was sustained and that the House leaders got together and reached an accord so that we now have a provision under which this attempt by the Prime Minister to add to his enormous powers has been clipped. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we welcome the amendment. It will have our support.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I inadvertently referred to the hon. member for York Centre. I want to give credit to all members by correctly stating their constituencies. It was the hon. member for York West I had in mind when I referred to members who should put their votes where their mouths are.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Clauses 17 and 18, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the committee revert to clause 14 under this Part?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The committee now has for consideration clause 14.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 15 and 16 agreed to.

Clauses 19 to 22 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 23—Other Ministers of State

Mr. McCutcheon: I wish to direct one or two questions to the minister in connection with clause 23. In all of this discussion, there has been no mention of the tremendous increase in cost for these extra ministers. I would like to throw out one or two thoughts that I have on this subject. Possibly the minister can comment on these.

At this moment there is a proposition before the House with regard to increased salaries of Members of Parliament. Why is so much weight given to the suggestion that another minister is going to be appointed? Why is this necessary as far as the salary range is concerned? If the increase in the salaries of Members of Parliament is approved, this should be adequate. The government might take a lead from industry in this regard and give these individuals the title and authority without the additional salary. These ministries could be used as a training ground. If the individuals can cut the mustard, they could be advanced to full status. Here is an opportunity for the government to save a little money and at the same time recognize budding talent, but that budding talent should prove itself in the same way as is done in business. I just throw out this suggestion for the minister's comments. Why would something of that order not be favoured by the government? Why should a person be more important just because he is drawing an extra salary?

Mr. Drury: In answer to the last question, which I understand to be why should a man have greater importance just because he is drawing extra salary, I think it is generally acknowledged in both the private and public sectors that remuneration should be provided adequate to the responsibilities which a man is being asked to discharge. In our kind of social economic environment, we normally measure by differential in salary, the difference in responsibilities and the onerousness of the duties the man is going to have to carry out.

I do not think the hon. member will argue that the responsibilities which the nominated ministers of state will be called upon to perform are greater than those of the ordinary otherwise not specially rewarded Member of Parliament. Therefore, there should be some supplementary stipend over and above that of an ordinary member of the House of Commons. Undoubtedly, one could say that although they will have additional responsibilities, they will also have additional dignity and this additional dignity should be adequate compensation. I am not sure that this is in line with our general philosophy of rewarding a man in monetary terms commensurate with his responsibilities. Therefore, I cannot accept the suggestion that we would save money by merely suggesting to the ministers who are appointed that they should accept the additional responsibilities and regard the added dignity which is attached to the position as adequate compensation.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board one or two questions on this issue. I will probably have more to say after the minister answers. I do not mean that as a threat. I would like to know just what the intentions of the government are with regard to the cabinet structure. At the present time there are ministers who are responsible for a department and who report to the House accordingly. There are also ministers without portfolio. In future there are to be two new positions, ministers of state who will be responsible for a ministry of state and ministers of state who will be responsible for assisting other ministers. In other words, four classes of minister will be on the executive council. To what extent will each share in the decision-making process? Is it the intention to adopt a new cabinet structure making provision for a small, inner cabinet?

• (3:30 p.m.)

I have in mind, of course, the remarks made by the hon. member for Trinity who is most concerned about this aspect. Some of the rest of us are concerned about it as well. What will be the ranking of the cabinet in future? What is the general intention? These are questions of some consequence, because I do not think it can be said that the administrative competence of the government has been so high that the House can afford to pass a measure of this kind without inquiring in detail as to the government's intentions. I am particularly interested in the ranking and duties of these ministers. I know that these duties are to some extent outlined in the legislation. But what are the government's intentions? Are they strictly honourable?

Mr. Drury: With regard to the last question, I can answer it very shortly and very positively. Yes. There has probably been sufficient indication given concerning the functions and the place of these new ministers to enable me to answer the other questions.

As far as ranking is concerned, they will all be members of the Queen's Privy Council when appointed and will rank according to the rules of precedence of that body. They will, in accordance with our current convention, be members of the cabinet as are all ministers. To the best of my knowledge there has been no plan announced to form different levels or tiers of cabinet. As I believe the House is aware, the Prime Minister has endeavoured to decentralize the work of the cabinet and make it more effective by providing for particular consideration of most areas by small groups of ministers, cabinet committees, prior to decision-taking or resolution by the cabinet as a whole. The ministers to be appointed ministers of state with a ministry, or ministers of state without a ministry, or ministers without portfolio will fit into that pattern and it is not proposed to establish different levels of cabinet.

The duties of these ministers are outlined fairly well in a general way in the proposed legislation. In the case of ministers of state, they will be appointed to preside over a ministry of state and they will fulfil duties similar to those of ministers with departments for whose supervision they are responsible. The nature of those responsibilities will be indicated either in the form of a draft bill in the case of a department or by way of a draft order in council in the case if ministers of state.

I hope this explanation will enlighten the hon. gentleman sufficiently for him to be able to see that there is no new revolutionary process contemplated here.

Mr. Baldwin: I shudder at the words "revolutionary process" used by the President of the Treasury Board because I must say, honestly and objectively, that the cabinet changes so far introduced by the Prime Minister have been nothing less than a complete disaster.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Baldwin: When we look at the results, it is. I am not talking about the personnel, those who have been promoted, or who have kept their positions. I am talking about the administrative incompetence we have observed from this side of the House. I do not know about hon. members sitting on the back rows opposite. Since they see only the backs of the ministers perhaps they do not observe what we observe over here. But as far as we are concerned, the changes have been nothing short of disastrous and I intend to prove this statement beyond a shadow of a doubt. The blundering, the stumbling, the over rigidity of the cabinet committee structure, the examples of ministers falling over each other's feet, the duplication, triplication and quadruplication of ministers' responsibilities, the lack of liaison, and so on have been astonishing. It is necessary for me to establish this statement because the intentions of the government are still in doubt. The President of the Treasury Board told us he did not know how many new ministers would be appointed. My guess is that there will be quite a number.

When the apologists for the government start on their work they talk, because there is nothing else for them to say, about the marvellous efficiency of the present administration. That is absolute nonsense. When this session opened on October 8 last year His Excellency referred to a number of measures which the government intended to put forward. These were subsequently outlined in greater detail by the Prime Minister when he gave a list in the House of some 68 measures which were to be the subject of legislation. Some would necessitate more than one bill. In addition to this list, which can be found in Hansard of October 8 or 9, a number of further measures were mentioned. So at least 75 legislative proposals were, probably, to be dealt with by Parliament.

What has happened? I have compiled a list of the legislation which has been dealt with in the House from October 8, 1970 to April 7, 1971, when the Easter recess began. I have chosen these dates because an examination of the period they comprise will support beyond doubt my allegation of gross administrative ineptness on the part of the government. I have looked up the length of time taken on each bill. There were two measures which took considerable time. One is the bill before us today. I shall not go into that now; we have had our debates on that subject and the reasons have been clearly set forth. I see the Postmaster General nodding his head. He agrees with me, I think, that there are good reasons for the length of time our discussions have taken. Another measure upon which a great deal of time was spent was the public order emergency legislation. I will simply remind hon. members that the Minister of Justice, introducing the bill, launched an attack of considerable severity against the New Democratic Party. It was his right to do so, but he exercised it in such a way as to ensure there would likely be a long and bitter debate, as in fact was the case.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Excepting those two bills, what has been the situation? From October 8 to April 7, 16 bills were passed which took approximately one day or less. Six bills took approximately two days or less, two bills took between three and five days and then, of course, there were the other two bills I have dealt with, the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act and this particular bill. So this House did its job on the measures which it received.

What has happened to the rest of the bills? Some were introduced in the other place and some here, but by April 7 to my recollection there were at least 20 measures which it had been indicated by the government, through the lips of His Excellency, were essential to the proper social and economic progress of this country but which had not yet seen the light of day in this House. Some were important bills that have not yet been introduced. However, over 20 had not been introduced into this House at that time, including the established programs (interim arrangements) act, the pilotage legislation, a bill respecting the maritime code, a bill to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the resource administration legislation, a bill to amend section 51 of the British North America Act, the computer facilities ownership legislation, a bill to amend the Immigration Appeal Board Act, a bill to amend the Criminal Code (right to privacy), a bill respecting the security review board, a bill to amend the Citizenship Act, a bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act, a bill to amend the National Parks Act, a bill respecting cigarette advertising, a bill amending the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act, a bill to amend the Representation Commission Act, and the ports legislation, which may have been introduced in the other place, though I do not think so.

An hon. Member: What about Bill C-176, the marketing act?

Mr. Baldwin: But for the stupidity and obstinacy of members on the other side of the House, this bill has not got as far as it should. Because of confusion among the members of the cabinet and divisions of opinion, because of the proliferation of cabinet committees, and because of all these other things that can be characterized as nothing but gross administrative incompetency, none of these measures that I have mentioned had seen the light of day by April 7. Surely, any reasonable body of hon. gentlemen charged with the administration of this country should introduce on the first day of any session those measures which they say are necessary, in their opinion, for the well-being of this country. Each bill should be prepared and available in printed form. It is not as if many of these were new measures. I have heard the need for some of these bills kicked around the halls of this place for several years.

I suggest to the Prime Minister that when he takes advantage of this legislation to establish new ministries of state and to appoint new ministers of state he should look very carefully at the system he has created, one which as far as this House is concerned is a nightmare. I also think it is about time that the Prime Minister and his friends took a look at the cabinet structure and called in some parliamentary, government and efficiency experts to revise these procedures so as to produce a simple legislative form, and to have available on the first day of any session all bills they needed for the session. Then Parliament will have ample time to study the measures in question.

I think we can take parliamentary notice of the fact that owing to the house committee system there are problems in this House. I am not going into this subject any more; enough has been said and it will probably be brought forward again on other occasions, hopefully in the procedure committee. But as a result of the committee structure that is inflicted upon us and a lot of other difficulties that have been created, it is absolutely essential for the effective administration of this country and for the handling of the affairs of Parliament that bills be ready for presentation on the first day of every session and be introduced and given first reading at that time. This will give members of the opposition as well as members of the public, who after all are far more interested in them than anybody else, ample opportunity to examine and consider them and to promote public debate upon them.

If this is one, then after these bills are introduced in the House there will be adequate opportunity for reflection, for consideration to be given to them, thus enabling the kind of debate that should take place. I say this in all kindliness. Although there are some members of the cabinet and in the government party who believe this, I know the trouble stems from the office of the Prime Minister itself. I am in good company; some members on the other side of the House have in recent weeks seen fit to support our views in this regard. The problem lies with the rigid approach of the Prime Minister to the question of securing parliamentary approval of the legislation that is required in operating the affairs of this country.

I hope these remarks will be considered by the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues. Let me say the government has a sorry record in its dealing with this House and Parliament and in its attempts to secure the approval that it should have, after adequate debate and discussion, of measures because they have not been exposed in ample time to enable everyone to be well informed about them. This has not been the case ever since this Parliament met, and it certainly has not been the case during the course of this last session.

I now take my seat, having uttered those words in the spirit of utmost kindness and I hope they will be taken into account and heeded by the govenment. If there are some hon. members on the government side who are anxious to spring to the defence of the government as a model of administrative efficiency, then let them do so. If they do not, we must take it that they have some of the same doubts that I have.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 24 agreed to.

Clause 13 agreed to.

The Chairman: I might ask the committee for advice at this point. We have completed Part IV. We could now go to Part V or revert to section 2, to which an amendment is outstanding. Is it the consensus of the committee that we deal with Part V?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 25—Maximum numbers.

The Chairman: Shall clause 25 carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, you really did not think that clause 25 was going to carry as easily as all that, did you?

Mr. McCleave: Why not? Hope springs eternal around here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The present arrangement is that the number of parliamentary secretaries in existence at any one time shall not exceed 16, which I think is pretty generous. I do not see why we should extend this number to a number that is even beyond what we think it might be. If clause 25 passes we may well be authorizing 28 or even 30 parliamentary secretaries. I suppose there will be that many votes for the clause on the other side of the committee, but nevertheless we think that the legislation should stay the way it is. Therefore, when debate on clause 25 has concluded we should like a vote on the clause so that all those who want to maintain efficiency in government and to keep down expense will be able to vote against the clause.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said succinctly what I would have said in much more extended terms. There is, of course, a place for parliamentary secretaries, and I see the hopeful looks and gleams in the eyes of hon. members sitting opposite. I would judge that the discipline of the Whip was not needed this afternoon in view of the number of hon. members sitting opposite hopefully awaiting an accolate. I see hon. members there who might well grace the offices of parliamentary secretary. I only repeat what I have said before. There now can be by the Act 28 parliamentary secretaries.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If this passes there might be 28 or 30.

Mr. Baldwin: There might be 28 or 30, but there are 28 now. There are 28 existing ornaments of the Privy Council, with two more appointments possible, plus an unknown number of ministers of state who will be operating in assisting capacities. I must say that I shudder for the future of this country.

Mr. MacEachen: This is an "exparticipatory" democracy.

Mr. Baldwin: I simply want to file a caveat so that at the commencement of the next session when I get up and say I told you so, and there will be opportunity to do that with the action or the lack of it on the part of this government, I will have at least laid my cards on the table. Under the circumstances, I think we have no alternative but to vote against this particular measure.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River lead me to ask whether the government will give an assurance that we can expect a little more from these parliamentary secretaries than we have been getting. I have been in opposition for quite a while, and I am tired of this silly and subservient attitude of some of these parliamentary secretaries. They should be given more responsibility in order to force them into action, or they should be told that if they are to continue in their jobs Parliament expects more from them.

I speak with a great deal of authority on this matter of parliamentary secretaries. I was appointed a parliamentary secretary in 1958 when a certain other government took over, and in 1962 I was still a parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Baldwin: And a good one, too.

Mr. Bell: I know it is very hard to get a promotion as a parliamentary secretary, and unless we do a little more for these positions we will all suffer here in Parliament. As everybody knows, we are having difficulty manning committees. I do not see why some of these parliamentary secretaries could not be induced to take the 18 minute walk to the West Block to attend some of these committee meetings. I know they would not contribute very much, but at least their bodies would be there and could be counted in order to make up a quorum. If we press on with this measure, I think some responsible member of the government should give us full assurance that a real effort is going to be made to get these parliamentary secretaries moving. I have in mind the existing ones, those who will probably be removed and those who will be promoted.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped I might be enlightened here this afternoon about something that has intrigued me. The Prime Minister, when talking in Kiev, referred to the similarity between the system of government in that country and in Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what bothers us.

Mr. Stanfield: I rather imagined that as a result of that, this bill might have been held up until the Prime Minister returned to suggest certain amendments in light of his experience.

An hon. Member: Do you want to go to Siberia?

Mr. Stanfield: I must say that the Prime Minister's remarks were a little obscure. I had hoped the Acting Prime Minister, with his great precision and facility for enlightenment on questions of this sort, would have risen in his place this afternoon and explained what this was all about, and whether in fact the Prime Minister has made a great discovery while abroad, and whether this bill, if passed in its present form, will be satisfactory to the right hon. gentleman when he returns.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support the contentions voiced by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster in respect of committees. I should like to draw to the attention of the committee, especially the government House leader, that while we are discussing this important clause dealing with parliamentary secretaries, there is a meeting taking place of more than one standing committee of the House which would naturally require the attendance of parliamentary secretaries since they are supposed to be exemplary members of the House. They, being dedicated members of the House, I imagine want to support the committee.

Today's Votes and Proceedings indicates that the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was to meet today at 3.30 p.m. One of the hon. members to appear before that committee is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. This is regrettable because I am sure he would like to be in the House during the discussion of this important clause of a bill which deals with parliamentary secretaries.

The Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration was to meet today at 3.30 p.m. I am sure the presence of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour, who is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, is required at that meeting. I am sure there are other committees meeting today. Some met this morning, and I am sure they are continuing those meetings this afternoon.

I have raised this point before and I do so again. Obviously, some action must be initiated by the government House leader to assure the proper organization of committees so that they do not sit while the House is sitting. If committees must sit while the House is in session they should only sit for a very good reason. In other words, there should be an urgent or pressing matter, or a very important bill to be discussed. These should be the only reasons for granting permission to committees to sit while the House is in session.

Let me suggest also to the government House leader that it is about time we defined the rules of the House for the benefit of standing committees. Committees are governed by the rules of the House of Commons, and in my view this must preclude standing committees of this House sitting and hearing evidence without a quorum. This practice has crept into our standing committees and it is one which should be stopped. On many occasions witnesses have been heard when only four members of a standing committee were in attendance. This is a ridiculous situation, and under these circumstances the committee is not legally in session. I note that Your Honour is about to rise. I have just about concluded this part of my remarks and I ask your indulgence for any transgression on your patience and charity.

In dealing with this clause of the bill, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether it is the intention of the government to continue the practice whereby parliamentary secretaries are appointed for only one year. I should like to see a return to the practice under which parliamentary secretaries are appointed at pleasure, the same as members of the cabinet.

Mr. Baldwin: You should say at leisure.

Mr. McGrath: I say that out of the very high regard, respect and sympathy I have for some former parliamentary secretaries who are outstanding members of this House, many of whom are good friends of mine. I think the fact that most of their appointments were not renewed by the government will place them in a very difficult position in their constituencies, as, it has in this House. Off the top of my head, I can think of members of the House such as the hon. member for Essex, who was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries, the hon. member for York Centre, who did such an outstanding job as Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, and the hon. member for Victoria who did such a fine job as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence. We wonder why it was necessary to make these changes. Perhaps it is about time we seriously considered the proposition of reverting to the original system whereby parliamentary secretaries were appointed at pleasure in order to avoid members of the House being embarrassed by not having their appointments renewed by the government. I ask this question of the President of the Treasury Board in the hope that perhaps he can enlighten the committee on it.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, while the President of the Treasury Board is reflecting on that—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising to ask a question?

Mr. Baldwin: No. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I yield.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the debate and since I receive answers every time I ask questions of the minister, I should like to impose again on his good nature. We are now to have regular ministers as we know them today. Then, we are to have ministers of state and parliamentary secretaries. How many persons will this involve; how many government members will be involved? Will there be 65 or 70 people, or how many? We do not have that answer. Another question which came to my mind was alluded to by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East. It concerns the appointment of these people for a full term. Although it would depend on the minister's answer, I can see difficulties in the future. It seems to me the government is making its decision on the basis of the present membership in the House of Commons. If as I suspect there will be 65 or 70 people on whom hands are laid, this will mean there will be 80 to 85 left out. In 1963, and again in 1965, the government members numbered only 133 or 134.

If a similar situation were to develop—and I believe it could develop pretty rapidly—will we still play musical chairs? The point is this that in a House in which the government party had fewer members there will not be much choice after the cream has been taken off the top; not much material will remain. So, I am led to believe the government is really not looking for talent particularly but for a possible means of rewarding the faithful. I wonder if the minister, in his good natured way, would answer the question I threw out at the start of my remarks.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, there are two questions to be answered. First, the hon. member for St. John's East suggested that henceforth we should, as he put it, revert to the old practice of appointing at pleasure and that in some fashion this would relieve an assumed embarrassment to the parliamentary secretary whose pleasure, if I might put it that way, was not continued. At the present time the appointments are by the administration at pleasure for no statutory or fixed term. As the Prime Minister indicated when the most recent changes were made, rather than attempt what might be invidious judgment as between one group or class of parliamentary secretary, none of those who had served for a full year's term would be re-appointed and consequently failure to re-appoint could carry with it no connotation of unsatisfactory performance which might otherwise be the case if there were selections or choices made.

The Prime Minister indicated quite clearly that the reason for doing it in this way was to provide more experience for those Members of Parliament who, if they had to continue throughout the entire session as backbenchers without specific responsibility, perhaps would be denied both further experience and training and also an opportunity, if one can use the term, to prove their worth. In addition, judgment could be made of their likely potential. While the present system does result in some unuse of undoubtedly demonstrated talent, I think on balance it would probably be better to provide a wider range for experience than would be the case in respect of the appointment of a parliamentary secretary in an onward and upward fashion irreversibly.

One might also suggest that the govenment of Canada might profit from what has been the practice in the United Kingdom, and indeed in France, of members entering the ministry or the cabinet for a period, leaving the cabinet for a period and then coming back again. In our country, for some curious reason, it has been assumed that once a man leaves the cabinet there is the likelihood or practice that he will never come back. Perhaps more movement in this direction would be good in the general interest. The fact of the matter is we have not come around to accepting this idea. It is still the case that ministers leave the cabinet if they wish by way of resignation either because this is evidence of disagreement with the government or because they are getting out of the field of Parliament altogether.

The hon. member for Lambton-Kent wanted to know how many members on the government side would be involved in the provisions of the proposed legislation in parts IV and V. The answer to that is imprecise. We now have a number of ministers, some of whom preside over departments and some who are without portfolio. The number presiding over departments is now limited by legislation to the number of departments decided on by legislation and this will continue to be the case in the future. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is asking me to forecast how many more or how many new departments the government might be desirous of putting forward in the interests of better administration, and at the same time to forecast how many existing departments will be either amalgamated or discontinued altogether. It is rather difficult to forecast that until we know a little better how the country as a whole is going to evolve.

• (4:10 p.m.)

There is now no limit on the number of ministers without portfolio. The number of ministers appointed to this category depends on the needs of the government in responding to the particular needs of the country at the moment, and this will continue to be so, the difference perhaps being that in addition to departments of government established by formal legislation there will also be ministries of state established from time to time, also subject to parliamentary approval, according to the amendment we have been discussing today.

In addition to Ministers without Portfolio, which hitherto have been a prerogative of the Crown, there will be a new and rather more specific class of ministers, but in other respects essentially the same, namely ministers of state without designated ministries over which they preside. The number will depend on the administrative needs of the country from time to time. I am afraid that I cannot really be any more precise than that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For just a moment, Mr. Chairman, may I pursue the arithmetic that has been the subject of discussion in the last little while, by pointing out that we would be buying a pig in poke if we were to endorse a clause which says that the number of parliamentary secretaries can be the equal of the number of ministers who hold offices for which salaries are provided in section 4 of the Salaries Act. We do not know how many there will be. It could be quite large if that number increases. However, the point I wanted to raise is in the form of a question I would like to put to the President of the Treasury Board.

I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether there has been any study—and I have in mind an academic, philosophical study, not just a legalistic approach—into the question of what this does to the concept of the independence of Parliament? As I am sure the President of the Treasury Board is aware, there are a number of sections in the Senate and House of Commons Act which have over them that title "Independence of Parliament." The general theme of the sections that come under that heading is that persons cannot hold offices of emolument under the Crown and sit as members of the House of Commons, and there are parallel provisions for members of the Senate. We have amended the legislation a dozen times to meet this principle.

Once upon a time when a member was appointed to the cabinet following a general election, he had to resign his seat and go back and get elected again in the constituency that elected him on general election day. We abolished that by putting a specific section in the Senate and House of Commons Act which says that nothing in this act renders ineligible any persons who hold certain cabinet posts, and they are all listed. We have other provisions to make it legal for persons to be Ministers without Portfolio, or to be ministers of state, or to be parliamentary secretaries, despite the general rule that Members of Parliament should not be getting additional money by the holding of an office of emolument under the Crown. As I say, I would not even try to make a legalistic point. I would not try to raise a point of order and say that this connot be done because it has been taken care of in so many ways. But surely there was some foundation for the original concept that led to this group of sections entitled "Independence of Parliament". Surely, the idea was that people who sit in this house and have to make decisions and cast votes should not be influenced by the fact that some of them are getting additional money from the government.

I have had correspondence with one or two professors of political science who are quite worried about this. I will not name them publicly, although I would be glad to give the names to the minister. In this correspondence I have played the role of Devil's Advocate. I have pointed out that so long as somewhere in the act there is a clause that says, notwithstanding the other provisions this is legal, that legalizes the situation. But back come letters from my professorial friends saying that surely the whole idea of the independence of Parliament is that people should not be in a position where they are, in a sense, obligated to the government.

If you have a House of Commons in which there is a majority party of 150 or so—I believe that is the number at the present time—and if up to 60 of them are on the extra payroll of the government, and if about 25 or 30 of them are there for a couple of years and another 25 or 30 take their place, aren't we getting into a situation where the whole idea that members should not be influenced in a monetary way is somewhat shattered? I am not simply asking the minister did he check with the Department of Justice, is this legal, and have all the loopholes been plugged? I am asking whether there has been a philosophical or academic consideration of this question, bearing in mind what I am sure is the desire of the President of the Treasury Board, that there be no weakening of the independence of Parliament?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, to the best of my knowledge there has been no such specific study in depth although a number of people have thought about this particular problem from time to time, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indicates, some of them within the government as well as those he has knowledge of outside. However, if there has been a formal study I am unaware of it, but as a matter of interest might make inquiry.

I am rather at a loss to understand his suggestion that because a man gets paid for doing a job this in some way threatens his independence of judgment. Basically what I think the hon. gentleman is looking at is what is known as a conflict of interest, that is where the public interest which is supposed to be predominant and to pre-occupy Members of Parliament—and I am glad to say in most cases does—would be in conflict with the individual's private interest, and he would be tempted at least to opt, when casting his vote, in favour of his private interest. However, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see how an arrangement to compensate members of the government side who are appointed as parliamentary secretaries, and consequently have increased duties, in any way will subvert their independence or give rise to a conflict of interest.

• (4:20 p.m.)

In the ordinary course of events a member of the party supporting the government will want to see that its views get the kind of support that they undoubtedly merit. Whether he is paid or not he will wish to provide that kind of support, and this particular influence is neither increased nor decreased by reward. I am not too sure what particular conflicts gave rise to this general provision, unless it was felt that Members of Parliament should not at the same time be public servants or what is known as civil servants, in effect directing themselves from a seat in the House of Commons. Perhaps there is also a disinclination to allow, as is provided by other sections, public servants of Canada to receive rewards from the Crown while at the same time passing judgment on the validity of its actions. We have severely restrictive clauses on the relationship of Members of Parliament to the general handling of contracts and I think this is because of a desire to avoid conflict of interest.

In this particular case, however, compensating Members of Parliament who undertake special duties no more falls afoul of the conflict of interest rule than, perhaps, compensating Members of Parliament. I could use the argument of the hon. member to observe, in philosophical terms, that hon. members should serve gratis. I am not sure that in our present context this suggestion would be a very useful one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the attention the President of the Treasury Board has given to my observations. I was interested in his statement that there had been no in-depth study made of this matter. I hope that one of these new ministers of state or new parliamentary secretaries for whom there might not be other work, might be assigned to this interesting study.

I do not quarrel with the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board that in terms of the ordinary definition of words, "conflict of interest" and "independence of Members of Parliament" may seem to be the same thing. I want to emphasize, however, that in the context of these discussions conflict of interest usually refers to the situation where a Member of Parliament is paid an indemnity for serving the people generally and has an outside interest as a director of a company—in other words, has an interest with a profit-making organization outside Parliament. There have been studies in depth of this question and copies of such a study were tabled a year or two ago by the present Minister of National Defence who then held another portfolio.

Under the heading of "Members of Parliament" as it appears in the Senate and House of Commons Act, the reference is not to a conflict between what one does here and what one does in private business, but rather to a conflict between one's position as a person of complete independence on the floor of Parliament and yet having income given to him as an extra by the government.

I appreciate the fact that the President of the Treasury Board engaged in a bit of a philosophical discussion, as did I, but we did not end with the same conclusion. I do not take it so easily that this does not influence members on the government side of the House. I think when the government has 50 or 60 members on its pay roll in the course of a couple of years or 75 or 90 members on its payroll in the course of a Parliament, it may make the boys on that side feel a little more like supporting the government, although in their better judgment they know that they should not do so.

We shall not get anywhere on this discussion, so I would just suggest that as there has been a study of the question of conflict of interest, which is the conflict between what one does here and what one does in the private business world, there should also be a study on the independence of Parliament, making sure that there is no conflict between what one does here as a Member of Parliament and one's obligations to the government that gives the extra job.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I disagree with so much of what has been said on both sides that I am tempted to get into the debate this afternoon. I used to be a parliamentary secretary so I know some of the problems of that particular breed. I think parliamentary secretaries are useful if they can serve a minister without tripping over the deputy minister's cat and have a willingness to work. Some ministers can profit from having a parliamentary secretary. I was attached to an outstanding minister, the Hon. E. Davey Fulton when he was minister of public works and spokesman in this House for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and he allowed me to work.

Looking at the other side of the House I can see that a parliamentary secretary would be very useful to the Minister of Finance, particularly if he knew anything about finance, because the minister does not. A parliamentary secretary would be useful to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as is the present parliamentary secretary because we can ask him questions and get short answers that we understand. There are other ministers, however, to whom parliamentary secretaries would not be of much value and so I have to support the amendment because I do not think we should give this government carte blanche with regard to the number appointed.

I think this would hurt committee attendance to some degree, particularly when a parliamentary secretary has finished his term, is pushed back into the shadows and no longer has much interest in this place. This is what has happened to a few former parliamentary secretaries, despite the Prime Minister's intention to give everyone on his side a whirl at a job which provides additional pay.

I disagree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he says that preaching for these calls may unduly inhibit Members of Parliament. There are a few who will today for such appointments, and I have seen them do it in the past but their number is few. When the hon. member suggests that there should be some examination on the effect of conflict of interest on parliamentary secretaries, I wonder how such an examination could be carried out. Would it be done with lie detectors or some sort of instrument that could peer into whatever brains Members of Parliament have to find out what motivates them? I think this is an insult and as such is not worthy of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In other words, I think that we as Members of Parliament are not so easily seduced.

Those members who can perform a useful function for a minister should be appointed and given an opportunity to fit into the work of the department. A parliamentary secretary can be of use. If he is not to be given some kind of authority, if he is not to be given some kind of welcome and if he is to be treated as someone the minister would rather see walking down the other side of the street, then I say to the Prime Minister, for God's sake and for the sake of the treasury, keep those parliamentary secretaries away from that type of minister. In looking at some of the ministers opposite, and quite a number of them are present this afternoon, perhaps assessing the talent that they may wish to see serving them, I say, take this seriously. I think also, Sir, that appointments of that kind should be made from both sides of the House. I know that the whip of the official opposition is in the position of a parliamentary secretary in that he, along with the government whip, enjoys some special advantages.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Bell: Explain.

Mr. McCleave: Monetary advantages. I think those advantages should be given to others. The House leaders for the official opposition, for the New Democratic Party and for the Créditistes perform special functions in this House, and I think they should be given special rewards. Otherwise, when they come up against that formidable fellow, the President of the Privy Council, they will find that he outpecks them by $10,000 a year. In the scheme of things money means something in the operation of Parliament and the status of people. So Sir, I submit that we need to take a fresh look at this. Assuming that the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is Parliament and the status of people. So, Sir, I submit that the Prime Minister will not run hog wild with this power and that he will use it with discretion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I just asked for a vote against the clause.

Mr. McCleave: I beg your pardon. I am advised that it is simply a matter of voting against the clause. I assume that the hon. member's suggestion will be defeated. I hope that the Prime Minister will exercise discretion and not go right to the limit in appointing the numbers that he is entitled to appoint. I hope, when the next reorganization bill comes around, and they seem to come around about every two years and more often than Halley's comet, that the government will consider some of the appointments in the areas I have suggested.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I make a few comments and give a little advice. I know advice is something the government does not like getting and does not take. I see ministers sitting on the government side of the House to whom I have given advice. If they had taken it, the advice would have had beneficial effects for both the ministry and the country. My first piece of advice is this. In bringing about these interesting rearrangements and proposals which the President of the Treasury Board has in mind, I point out that the government has a limited amount of time in which to engage in that experiment. They should make the most of that time. An interesting event will probably take place next year which will terminate the capacity of the government for making appointments of any kind.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is wishful thinking and not a prophesy.

Mr. Baldwin: I suggest to the President of the Treasury Board that he appoint as many members as possible to those positions. We recognize that most backbenchers on the government side of the House have not been useful to Parliament as backbenchers. It may be that the extra knowledge they will gain from being parliamentary secretaries or ministers of state will permit them, when they come to this side of the House, to play a much more effective and efficient part than they play at present.

My second piece of advice is this: The government should try to appoint to those positions backbenchers who are independent minded. I know it is exceedingly difficult for the government to find backbenchers who are truly independent.

An hon. Member: There are a few.

Mr. Baldwin: There are a few who voiced their views at one time but, like good little Liberal lambs, they went bleating back to the fold. They have not been independent for very long. It is essential for backbenchers to be independent. If there is anything this government needs, it is a fair amount of independence on the part of its backbenchers as well as in the executive. It needs independence among cabinet ministers and parliamentary secretaries.

I see ministers sitting opposite me who have expressed individual and distinct opinions. They did not do that because they were independent minded but because they did not know what the others in the cabinet were doing. They were confused, as the Leader of the Opposition has suggested. So, I suggest to the President of the Treasury Board, to the President of the Privy Council and to the Prime Minister, that they should search diligently and see if they cannot find members among the backbenchers on the government side who are independent and who will retain that independence. I am sure that that would make for better government. There is lots of room for improvement. I offer this advice and criticism in the hope that it will be accepted.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask a question and do a little reminiscing. I wonder if the minister could verify this story. When the present government leader in the Senate was a parliamentary secretary, he put out so many statements and did so much work that he completely overshadowed his minister and embarrassed the government of the day. When they discovered that it would be difficult to remove him, they decided that the best thing to do was to appoint him to the cabinet.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Clause 25 agreed to: Yeas, 35: nays, 21.

On clause 28

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, before clause 28 carries may I ask the President of the Treasury Board why, in the construction of this bill, one amendment to the Salaries Act is that which is before us in clause 28, whereas there is another amendment to the Salaries Act in Schedule B, page 18 of the bill. Why could not all amendments to the Salaries Act have been put in one place?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think the answer it that it is a matter of drafting convenience in that clause 28 of the current bill provides a substantive new section in the Salaries Act, which did not exist before, whereas the schedules are amendments that do not represent substantial changes but represent changes in nomenclature, and so forth.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 29: Appropriations based on 1970-71 Estimates.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I indicated last time we were considering this bill that, by reason of the amendments made to the interim supply bill, it would be necessary to amend clause 29 of this bill and make provision for supply during the interim period until June 30 for the ministry of fisheries and forestry. After that, supply would have to be provided, as this bill intends, for the new department of the environment. Consequently, I move:

• (4:40 p.m.)

That Bill C-207 be amended by striking out lines 20 and 21 on page 12 and substituting the following:

"31st day of March, 1972, based on Estimates 1971-72 to defray the expenses of the"

The new clause, as amended, will read:

The provisions made by any Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending the 31st day of March, 1972, based on Estimates 1971-72 to defray the expenses of the public service of Canada within any department, branch or other part of the public service—

As I indicated, the purpose of this will be to make provisional supply consequent with the new department of the environment as now contained in the main estimates as amended by the interim supply bill.

Mr. McGrath: I have some general remarks to make. This is probably the appropriate time to make them. Two of my colleagues also want to make some remarks on this general subject. I wonder if it might be more expeditious to do so when we revert to Part I, clause 2. I make that suggestion. I hope that when we revert to that, I will be given an opportunity to say a few words.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair is in agreement with the hon. member that he make his remarks when we revert to clause 2.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 29, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 30 to 33 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 34—Commencement

Mr. McCleave: May I ask the minister a question? When is it proposed to proclaim this measure?

Mr. Drury: In the interest of efficient administration, Mr. Chairman, the answer is as quickly as possible. For some time the government has been arguing that bringing this act into operation is a matter of considerable public importance. We want to do it as rapidly as possible. After consideration of this bill by the Senate, which I hope will not be long, it will be proclaimed as soon as possible.

In connection with the proclamation provided in clause 34, another item mentioned related to the effective date of discharge from the public service in order to enable public servants to qualify for early retirement, particularly with the changes in organization contemplated at defence forces bases in Manitoba. We wish to have clause 27 of the bill given effect from the end of the fiscal year rather than from some date in May or June of the current year. In order to give effect to that desire, and I think this arrangement has the support of the House, I move:

That Bill C-207 be amended by striking out lines 14 and 15 on page 15 and substituting the following:

Commencement "34. (1) This Act, except section 27, shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation.

Idem (2) Section 27 shall come into force on April 30, 1971."

If this amendment is passed along with the bill, Mr. Chairman, it will be possible for the employment of those at these bases which I have in mind to terminate in accordance with the plan shortly after the end of the fiscal year and for them to qualify for the early retirement provisions which they otherwise would not be able to do.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few comments at this stage. The formula used by the minister is acceptable. It is certainly much more acceptable than one used on another occasion when we gave permission to have parts of a bill proclaimed and then found that little snippets were taken out of the breathalyser law and other snippets were left. In this instance, the minister has stated his case frankly. For that he is to be thanked.

The minister made this request of some of us before. We are not surprised that it is now coming forth. Generally speaking. I think it can be accepted by the official opposition. At some stage before we vote on this amendment, will the minister indicate whether any other classes of people will or could be affected by what we are being asked to do with regard to clause 27.

Mr. Drury: There is no specific class or group of people in mind other than those I have mentioned. When the bill was originally drafted, a plan to close some armed forces bases in the Prairie provinces was approved on the understanding that the people who are going to be released according to the timetable of this plan would be able to avail themselves of the provisions of these amendments. Obviously, there are other persons in the government who, if the amendments were not made, would have left the government service between March 31, 1971 and the date of proclamation, whenever that is in the future, who would not be able to take advantage of these early retirement provisions. I do not know who they might be but now they will be able to retire as a consequence of what has been specifically made necessary in order to enable us, in all justice, to proceed with the closures in western Canada at the end of the fiscal year.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The amendment which the President of the Treasury Board has moved is of course in keeping with the commitment he made on April 7 as reported in Hansard at page 5013. But I wonder whether it would not also be necessary to make an amendment to clause 27(3), bearing in mind that according to clause 34, section 27 shall come into force on April 30, 1971. Clause 27(3) still reads "after the coming into force of this Act." Is there not a conflict which will have to be resolved by making a consequential change in subclause (3) of clause 27? Otherwise, you will have two different dates. You have clause 34 saying section 27 shall come into force on April 30, 1971, but over on page 12 in lines 3 to 10 you have a clause which reads that these benefits shall apply only in respect to persons who cease to be employed in the Public Service after the coming into force of this act. Do you not want that to read "after the coming into force of this section" as provided in clause 34? I seem to be having trouble getting my point across to the minister, though it is a simple one. I want to be sure that his commitment is to be carried into law.

Mr. Drury: I should like to be sure, too. But I have been assured by the drafters in the Department of Justice that the purpose we are trying to accomplish, namely, making available these early retirement provisions to those who would have retired before the date of the proclamation of the act as a whole, and subsequent to March 30—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): April 30.

Mr. Drury: —will, in fact, be accomplished. Sorry if I got the date wrong. Yes, that is correct, April 30. I do not claim to be an expert drafter, but I am told it is not necessary to change the wording in subclause (3) to achieve this purpose.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since I last rose I have done what I should have done earlier,—that is—I have looked at the second page of the document which was handed to us after the minister had moved his amendment to clause 34. I find the amendment to clause 27 is already there for the minister to move, that the bill be amended by striking out line 10 on page 12, and so on. I was more correct than I realized.

Mr. Drury: I stand corrected.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I take it, then that after we have dealt with clause 34 we shall revert to clause 27 and that the minister will move the other amendment which he has in his hands after all.

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCutcheon: Today we heard the shocking revelation that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has no faith in the operation of the Post Office. This situation was brought about by letting a minister of communications look after its affairs. Clause 26 of the bill before us provides for a full time Postmaster General. Since the minister who is piloting this bill through the House is now prepared to amend clause 27, making it retroactive until April 30, I would ask him this question: why in the world cannot the government include provision for retroactivity in the case of the Postmaster General?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. McCutcheon: I put that forward as a serious proposition because I have great respect for this minister's ability. He should be in that job and on it fulltime. I think the least the government could do for him would be to make his appointment retroactive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Drury: I share the views of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken in relation to the abilities of my colleague who has been carrying out the duties of Postmaster General. I, too, would like to see this appointment made retroactive. The fact of the matter is that the government feels, perhaps, it has greater obligation to those of its public servants who are being let out of work as a consequence of internal reorganization than it has to one of our own members in relation to retroactivity. I am not sure what date one would select for retroactive purposes. If we were to do this for a minister there might be suggestions in relation to those so close to the ministry that we were looking after ourselves and not doing so well for those for whom we are perhaps responsible. I should like to take advice, which I shall do, as to whether the kind of amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman would be possible without a further message from His Excellency. I will inquire about this.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 34, as amended, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: It is the understanding of the Chair that it might be desirable to revert, now, to clause 27, if I correctly understood the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Does the committee agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 27

Mr. Drury: I move:

That Bill C-207 be amended by striking out line 10 on page 12 and substituting the following: "force of this section".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Once again, I should like to say that I welcome the amendment. It is now clear that between this clause, as amended, and clause 34, as amended, the provisions for early retirement on immediate annuities will apply to public servants who were on strength up to and including April 30.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I was glad to hear the minister say that, although the particular groups that the government had in mind when it sought this change were the groups of civilian employees who were dismissed from certain bases in Manitoba on April 30, nevertheless it is so worded that it will cover anyone in the public service who was on strength on April 30. The minister must be aware that there are a number of individuals who, when they saw this legislation coming many months ago, began to make their plans accordingly. I know of a number of who, on the strength of the minister's announcement on April 7, arranged to make their retirement on April 30, and they will be glad when this amendment has been carried and the legislation put through all its stages so they can get the benefit of the early retirement set out in this bill.

When we were debating clause 27 some weeks ago the minister dealt with a number of subjects that had been raised. We had a vote on a matter on which we did not see eye to eye and we lost the vote. Nevertheless, there was one aspect of the whole matter concerning which the minister was kind enough to say my arguments had impressed him. That admission from him is to be found on page 4748 of Hansard, where he said:

> I cannot help but be moved by the eloquent plea of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

One has to watch out when something like that is said, but the plea I made on that occasion had to do with the escalation of the pensions of members of the armed forces and Royal Canadian Mounted Police who retire before the age of 60. I am going to be as brief as I can and I am not going to rehash the whole debate on Bill C-194 of last session. The fact is that the major argument that the government used on that occasion for not permitting the escalation of the pensions of these two groups who took their pensions prior to age 60 was that 60 was the earliest age at which a public servant could have his pension escalated. There are a few exceptions to that, such as persons on pension because of ill health; but the general rule was that public servants could not and would not get their pensions escalated until they reached age 60, and that therefore RCMP and armed forces personnel must not ask for their pensions to be escalated prior to age 60.

Now, however, Mr. Chairman, under the terms of this bill, Bill C-207, we are providing that certain public servants who retire before the age of 60 can get their pensions escalated annually starting right away. We make this provision by a combination of clauses in Bill C-207, in Bill C-194 of last session and the Public Service Superannuation Act. Therefore, I contend that if by breaking this barrier we have now decided it is possible for public servants who retire before age 60 to enjoy the benefit of having their pensions escalated right away, there is no longer any moral ground for denying the same right to retired members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

I made this argument at some length when we debated this matter on March 30 and the minister, as I have already said, was kind enough not only to listen to my argument but to say that he was impressed by it. He ended his statement with these words:

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

> It would be my hope that any imbalance that the passage of these amendments might bring about the relationship of pensioners in the public service and the two forces could be rectified.

The two forces referred to by the minister are, of course, the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

My purpose in rising at this moment, since we are back on clause 27, is to ask the minister whether, since his commitment on March 30, he has come up with any formula to redress this imbalance. One of the things the minister said to me on March 30 was that that legislation was not before us at the present time. I would draw to his attention the fact that in the present bill, on page 17 of schedule B, we are in fact correcting something that was done in last year's Bill C-194. We have corrected an oversight which had to do with certain Members of Parliament who hold positions as parliamentary secretaries, second deputy speakers or what-have-you.

My point is that in Bill C-207 we are correcting an oversight in last year's Bill C-194. It is precisely that same Bill C-194 that denied these escalations of pensions to members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Therefore, I suggest that a parallel correction be made in the schedule of this bill. The legislation is before us; the matter is in front of us right now. Since, as I say, the government has broken the 60 year age barrier and made provision that some public servants who retire early under the provisions of this bill will enjoy an escalation of their pensions beginning right away, I contend the same should be done for members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In light of the commitment that the President of the Treasury Board gave me on March 30 that it was his hope that any imbalance could be rectified, can he now say whether he is in a position to do this job of rectification today?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. gentleman quoted my remarks when we last discussed this bill, may I point out that I said that I was moved rather than impressed by his point. I make a subtle distinction between these two words. I would prefer the term "moved" to "impressed", in that while I can accept the logic of his point I am not entirely sure of the premise on which it is based. At the moment, the ministers concerned, namely the Solicitor General and the Minister of National Defence, are looking at the question of whether in fact an imbalance will be created as the hon. gentleman suggests, or whether there is some other explanation and, if so, what is the best way of proceeding to correct the imbalance. I am told that answers to these questions will not be available for some time.

• (5:10 p.m.)

As the hon. gentleman knows, some of the most complicated pieces of legislation on the statute books are legislative enactments relating to superannuation and pensions. Unfortunately, we have relatively few experts in the government service, even though they are extremely highly qualified, and so perhaps a study of these particular problems does not move as rapidly as we would like. It is "in train", and certainly I am not in a position today, nor will I be in the next couple of weeks, to give an adequate answer to the hon. gentleman's representation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I say I readily accept the minister's correction of the word I used. He had not said I impressed him, he had said I moved him. I am only too happy to accept the correction so as to be not only literally correct, but also because that is what I wanted to do. It really does not matter to me whether I impress him, but I should like to move him.

Perhaps I can take some consolation from what the President of the Treasury Board has now said, namely that a study of this matter is "in train". I know how complicated these pension matters are, as I have been working in this field as an amateur on the floor of this House for quite a few years. I know that every piece of pension legislation is extremely complicated and one has to look at the relations between any one piece of legislation and several others. But I do not think this problem is quite as complicated as the minister makes out.

If the minister will go back and read the statements he made when he announced the increase in pensions to retired civil servants, and I think the date was December 19, 1969, and if he will read all the debates that have taken place since, he will see that the one main argument advanced for not escalating the pensions of armed forces and RCMP personnel prior to age 60 was that this was not being done for public servants until age 60.

I have to say that in those days, although I made a case, I could not go very far with it because there was a certain logic to his position. Now, he has broken that position. It is no longer true that healthy civil servants retiring prior to age 60 do not get the escalation. It has been true right along that a public servant who is retired because of ill health and put on immediate pension gets the escalation. It is also true that an RCMP officer or a person from the armed forces who has to retire early because of ill health can get the escalation. We have a parallelism there.

Let us consider the superannuation of the healthy. A deputy minister or a public servant at any level can, under the provisions of this bill, retire between ages 55 and 60, and in certain other cases between 50 and 55. When that happens those people, despite their younger age, being under 60, qualify for annual escalation. All I am asking is that we be consistent and say that since we have changed the rules in respect of healthy public servants, let us change the same rule in respect of healthy members of the RCMP and the armed forces.

I have used the word "healthy" simply to imply, as I must, that those who are retired because of ill health have already been looked after. Let me say there are many instances in respect of these people where they have retired in good health but who cannot get other work, sometimes because of health or because of an unemployment situation such as exists today. Letters I receive indicate there are a good many examples of suffering in this area. I know the general philosophy has been that these special provisions to enable RCMP and armed forces people to retire early presented a different story. They can retire at 50 or 51, or even under 50 if they have the right number of years of service, and since they were so young they could go back to work. Try to go back to work today.

My argument in the main rests on the principle of consistency, which I hope appeals to the President of the Treasury Board. We have changed the rules so far as public servants are concerned. I do not think the minister now has any leg to stand on if he does not change the rules for the others as well. I am glad this is "in train" as I suppose this is an accomplishment to have achieved that since March 30. I just hope that the train does not move too slowly.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, during the initial debate on this clause of the bill I drew the minister's attention to the plight of certain federal civil servants in the province of Newfoundland who came under the jurisdiction of the government of Canada as a consequence of the union of Newfoundland with Canada in 1949. Those people are covered under a special clause or term of union, I think clause 39.

When I brought the matter to the minister's attention originally he pointed out that this would require, under the terms of this clause, special action on the part of the government of Newfoundland. The minister said the initiative had to come from the province. He was sympathetic and said he would look into the situation.

Since that time the matter has been raised in the Newfoundland legislature. The government of that province quite properly responded by indicating it did not know of the new provisions of this act or the amendments now before the committee because they were still before the House of Commons. I should like the government, and particularly the President of the Treasury Board, to give us an assurance that when we pass this bill and it becomes law he will transmit this information to the government of Newfoundland with a view to correcting this anomalous situation which exists at the present time in that certain federal civil servants are excluded from the provisions of this bill as a consequence of term 39 of the union of Newfoundland with Canada.

There are a number of civil servants who are affected by this, and they are naturally quite concerned. They want equal rights with their fellow civil servants. They are concerned more particularly because the tenure of the government of Newfoundland has reached a constitutional limitation. The government has only until December of this year before there must be an election. I am afraid that this matter might get lost in the shuffle. I, therefore, ask the President of the Treasury Board if he is prepared to give this commitment to the committee and to those civil servants affected? I hope the minister or one of his officers will get in touch with the Newfoundland government to advise it of the changes in the Superannuation Act, suggesting that the Newfoundland government take the necessary action in order that these civil servants can be brought within the provisions of the amended act.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I asked for a commitment from the minister as this is a very important matter. There are a number of senior people involved. These are people who would be entitled to the benefits of this provision but are now at the mercy of the government of Newfoundland. I should like to feel that the minister will officially inform the government of Newfoundland of amendments to the Superannuation Act, advising that government what action should be taken to bring these civil servants under it.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. gentleman will understand that I would be glad to transmit officially and, if you like, formally not only the proclamation of this act, when that occurs, but also all the provisions of the new statute for whatever action by the government of Newfoundland might be appropriate.

I think, however, I would have some hesitancy in attempting to tell that government how to behave in matters which, under the terms of the Act of Union, are within their jurisdiction rather than ours. Perhaps it ill becomes one government to give lectures to another. We seek to proceed on the basis of co-operation on the assumption that in joint matters each government will behave responsibly and intelligently.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if my remarks are completely appropriate, following the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East, but there are a number of public servants in the province who were employed by the provincial government prior to 1949, or at least in the employ of organizations other than the federal government. Recently, I wrote the President of the Treasury Board asking for the names of people who would be affected by any amendments to the Superannuation Act so that these people could buy back their time prior to 1949 as full fledged members of the public service. Many of these people went to work as public servants in 1939 and right down through 1940 to 1949. Not being classified as fully fledged members of the public service until after 1949, they lost out severely in respect of superannuation. I understand that efforts are being made or that an agreement is being arrived at whereby they can buy back their time prior to 1949 and thus enhance their position.

I contacted the Treasury Board and was informed by the Acting President a few weeks ago that the names of the individuals affected could not be made available to me. I receive letters from these people, basically from Gander where there are 500 people with the Department of Transport or other departments which serve the aviation needs of that airport. They ask me to advise them of their present status in view of the fact that they went to work in 1939, 1943, 1946, or whatever the case may be. In order to communicate their wishes to the Treasury Board, I need to know the names and status of these people. I wonder whether the minister could have an official of his department make available the names of public servants who would be affected by such a change in their status. I understand that already a good deal of good work has been done. I think it would be useful to public servants—it is of no interest to me personally—if we could know where they stand and how the Treasury Board and the provincial authorities combined are able to help them in respect of their problems.

Mr. Drury: The request to provide a list of public servants who would be affected by this legislation is rather a difficult one to answer. I think perhaps the government has an obligation to see that all those on whom this new legislation will have an impact are advised of their new rights and options. We are undertaking to do this or will undertake to do it internally. What the hon. member in effect is asking for, however, is a list of the public service voters in his constituency.

Public servants in the employ of the federal government, whether they were transferred from the Public Service of Newfoundland or have entered the Public Service of Canada in other ways, will all be affected but in different ways. As I suggested, I think that rather than providing the hon. member with a list of all public servants in Newfoundland, the government has an obligation to advise the individuals directly and precisely of his rights and obligations.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, the President of the Treasury Board obviously is pretty knowledgeable in this area and I am sure knows what he is talking about. However, I believe the number of people involved would be 150 public employees of the federal government in the province of Newfoundland. I understand that is the number, although it might be more or less. The problem to which I am referring does not involved every public servant in the Public Service of Canada. These people qualify under the specific terms of the union of the province with Canada which was consummated in 1949. There are only a handful of people involved. Certainly, the Treasury Board could make available their names. These names should be made available if we are to make representation on their behalf. I am wondering if we cannot get this information because the matter is considered to be very complex, whether there is a written agreement or whether there is some idiosyncrasy involved. What is the reason we cannot obtain the names of these people? I want to know.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think any member may inquire on behalf of a member of the public service what the general provisions are. But I am not sure it would be appropriate for the government to release information regarding the financial status of any public servant in response to a general demand for an analysis of the individual's financial circumstances. Now, if the hon. gentleman is asking for a list of those individuals who were in the Public Service of Newfoundland and who transferred to the service of Canada, which involves only about 150 in number, then if it would help him to have such a list I will see if this can be provided although I am not quite sure how it would help him to have the names of those people. If the representations are of a general nature, he could make the appropriate representations on their behalf without knowing their names. If the representations are of a particular nature relating to an individual's circumstances, then obviously he must know the name and the individual's particular circumstances. I suggest it would be wrong for the government to divulge from its records, on a gratuitous basis, the particular financial circumstances of someone in the public service.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, the minister is certainly misrepresenting my request. I am not looking for the financial status of the individual. I am not looking for information concerning his income or how much pension he has accumulated. I am sure the minister understands what I am trying to say. Let us assume there are 150, 300 or 350 people who are in a position where they could buy back their time previous to 1949 on some sort of a federal or provincial pension basis. Is the Treasury Board going to make all these people aware of their position, which is not part of the government's philosophy at the moment? For instance, is John Doe to be told that he went to work in 1943 and that the new scheme permits him for X number of dollars from him and for X number of dollars from the federal treasury and X number of dollars from the provincial treasury to buy back those years which will give him a pension of such and such?

Does the President of the Treasury Board intend to do this? This is the information I request. I want to make sure that all the people affected will be made aware of their rights. I want to know whether a person has the right to buy back his time and how many years he can buy back. I am not interested in how much he owes IAC or how much he will receive from the treasury if he should retire in a year or so.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, is this information available?

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member wish the floor again?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, having now clarified the type of information I am looking for, which involves the pensionable status and the number of years these people can buy back in the event they can buy back their time, I am asking whether this information can be made available to the federal representatives of the people of the province.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps the easiest thing is for me to have a private discussion with the hon. member. What he wants is a list of names of people and also their pension status. I suggest that this is private information. Perhaps we can come to some kind of agreement as to what the government can properly provide to him without at the same time violating the privacy of those in the public service of Canada.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The question is on the amendment, moved by the President of the Treasury Board, to clause 27. Does the committee wish me to read the amendment again?

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I suggest that you read it, because it is an important amendment. We have had a good deal of discussion since it was moved, and I think people who read Hansard would like to know what we are voting on.

The Deputy Chairman: Then I have pleasure in reading it again. Moved by the President of the Treasury Board:

That Bill C-207 be amended by striking out line 10 on page 12 and substituting the following:
"force of this section."

Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 27 as amended carry?

Some hon. members: Carried.

Clause 27 as amended agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that we revert to clause 2 before discussing schedule A and schedule B? The Chair feels that it would be proper to return to clause 2.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: On February 16 when the committee was studying clause 2 an amendment was proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East. The Chair feels that the amendment should be read at this time for the benefit of hon. members. It was as follows:

That clause 2 of Bill C-207 be amended by striking out the words "Department of the Environment" where they first appear, immediately after clause 1 on page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor the words "Department of Fisheries and the Environment".

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, in accordance with the discussions leading up to the order of the House to which I referred earlier, the government gave an undertaking to provide an amendment to give effect to the representations made by the hon. member for St. John's East, supported by others, which resulted in this amendment to clause 2.

We have already considered and passed clause 3, but with the consent of the committee I would like to reopen clause 3 and propose an amendment thereto which I think will give effect to the representations of the hon. member for St. John's East and enable him to withdraw his amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree to stand clause 2 and the amendment thereto at this time and revert to clause 3?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Clause 2 stood.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now study clause 3.

On clause 3—Department established.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, for the reasons I have indicated, and in accordance with the order of the House, I would like to move:

That Bill C-207 be amended by adding thereto immediately after subclause (2) of clause 3 on page 1 the following subclause: "(3) The Minister of the Environment is the Minister of Fisheries for Canada."

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, before I put forward my arguments I wish to suggest to the President of the Treasury Board that in order to be consistent it will be necessary to bring in an additional amendment to clause 4, because otherwise we will have a Minister of Fisheries and no Deputy Minister of Fisheries. Is he prepared to take that into consideration?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, it was not proposed, as I understand it that we should have a Deputy Minister of Fisheries, and in order to have a Deputy Minister of Fisheries it is necessary to have a Department of Fisheries. This does provide for a minister, but not for a Deputy Minister of Fisheries as such. If one amends clause 4, then I suggest it would be necessary to have a Department of Fisheries.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, that is really the crux of the matter. That is what prompted me to move my amendment back on February 16. An amendment had been moved earlier by my colleague from South Shore asking for two deputy ministers and it was subsequently defeated by the committee. It seems to me that if there is to be a Minister of Fisheries, as the amendment calls for, it follows that there should be a consequential amendment to clause 4 stating:

The Governor in Council may appoint an officer called the Deputy Minister of Fisheries . . . to hold office during pleasure.

The minister says there will be no Department of Fisheries. As I understand it, the department shall be known as the department of the environment. But there shall be a Minister of Fisheries, and surely he must preside over something. He must be a Minister of Fisheries not in name only; he must be a Minister of Fisheries presiding over a Department of Fisheries. I am not trying to be difficult, Mr. Chairman, and all I am suggesting is that one follows on the other. If by this amendment you are going to create the office of Minister of Fisheries, then it follows that the Deputy Minister of the Environment shall also be known as the Deputy Minister of Fisheries.

Our reasons for putting this forward have been outlined. They are a matter of record but it might be worth while to bring the question into focus by referring to the events that have transpired since the amendment was first introduced back on February 16. What we have experienced since that time has caused us to be concerned over the direction of the government with respect to the fishing industry. For example, I think it is logical to raise the question: What is to become of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry? Does the nomenclature of that committee change to the "Standing Committee on the Environment"? Is this House to be deprived of a Standing Committee on Fisheries, something it has had for the past 100 years? That is particularly important, Mr. Chairman because we have been occupied in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for the last few weeks with a bill which has absolutely nothing to do with fisheries. The committee has been engaged in a clause by clause study of the clean air bill, a very important bill but one which properly should have been referred to the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution.

• (5:40 p.m.)

We find ourselves today in the position of having had only one full day in which to examine the estimates of the department. Under the new rules we will probably get only one more day, and we have been told that it is unlikely we will have an opportunity to examine the estimates. Under the new rules they must be referred back to the House, therefore without proper examination and debate.

If this is what we can expect in future, Mr. Chairman, then I am afraid our fears are well-founded and that this industry which faces so many problems today will not get the attention it deserves. Granted, we will have an opportunity as a consequence of this amendment to direct questions to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry in the House and there shall continue to be in Canada a Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, albeit one who wears two hats. He will be preoccupied with his responsibilities as minister of the environment. By virtue of that preoccupation and the responsibilities that the new department has taken unto itself, I suggest that very little time will be given to the fishing industry.

Before passage of this bill I hope we can extract from the government House leader an undertaking that there will be no changes in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and that it will continue to exist and have responsibility for examining the estimates, that it will continue to have the privilege of having before it the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry in order to examine fisheries policy.

The question is, who will look after the interests of the fishing industry with respect to the International Commission on the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries? The minister will be involved in matters of pollution, he will be involved in the clean air bill, he will be involved in responsibility for the meteorological service of Canada and a number of other things. Have his responsibilities as Minister of Fisheries and Forestry not been sufficient for a full-time job? Why has this ministry simply become a division of the new department? What about the 13,000 employees and the $200 million budget?

As I have already said, the primary responsibility of the minister of the environment will be to deal with matters of the environment, to combat water, air and soil pollution. There are so many policy decisions to be taken with respect to the fishing industry that I repeat the question, will the minister be so preoccupied with his vast new responsibilities that these decisions will be further postponed?

We are on the eve of the ICNAF conference which this year will take place in Halifax. Very important decisions will have to be made and, hopefully, consequential policy decisions will have to be made following that conference. The minister has assured us today that Canada's position at the conference will primarily be concerned with conservation, as very well it should be. Because of our lack of concern in this important area, the fishing industry is facing a crisis as serious as any in its long history. Many species of fish are threatened with extinction. My colleague the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has been actively involved in this matter and probably will have more to say about it.

This morning in committee we heard evidence to the effect that if action is not taken soon, thousands of jobs will be lost because of Canada's failure to conclude a satisfactory conservation agreement with the countries which fish off our shores. The question of our position within ICNAF was raised. Obviously, we are one of the leading members of that body since we have a greater stake in the North Atlantic fisheries than any other country.

In order to try to obtain an agreement with the Danes, however, with respect to their overfishing of Atlantic salmon off Greenland, the minister has to go hat in hand to Denmark in June. Yet he tells us that Canada will be preoccupied with matters of conservation at the ICNAF meeting. We cannot seem to resolve within ICNAF this question of the Danes. Why is it necessary to go outside that body to get the Danes to agree to measures to preserve this Canadian resource? I say "Canadian resource" because the North Atlantic salmon, generally speaking, spawns in Canadian rivers, enjoys the protection of the Canadian government and is supported by substantial funds from the Canadian taxpayer—but it is exploited by the Danes before returning to our rivers.

The minister recently promulgated new regulations with respect to the conservation of the North Atlantic salmon, yet we are told there was no consultation with the government of Newfoundland. We have this on the admission of the Premier himself and from evidence presented in the committee. Where did the minister get his advice when he drew up these regulations which are now being challenged by the government of Newfoundland?

We have the spectacle of the Premier of Newfoundland standing in the legislature telling the fishermen of that province to defy this law because it is not in the best interests of Newfoundland's industry—"If you defy this law we will provide you with counsel and will support you if the department dares bring you before the courts." That is the consequence of lack of consultation with the government and the industry concerned. If that situation prevails now, what can we expect in a few years' time when the minister is totally involved with matters of the environment?

To come back to where I started, Mr. Chairman, up to this time the Department of Fisheries and Forestry has been a full-time job and has required all the attention of the present minister. It has required all the attention of his officials and of thousands of employees within the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. There are some 13,000 in all. What, Mr. Chairman, can we expect in future?

• (5:50 p.m.)

We have good reason to be concerned. We are told that we approach the ICNAF meeting in a mood of concern about matters relating to conservation. We are doing so at a time when the Prime Minister of our country is in the Soviet Union, and at a time when a protocol has been signed with that country. Yet when I asked the minister in the House today what would be the effect of this protocol on our attempts to get the Russians to agree on measures of conservation in the Northwest Atlantic, he refused to answer the question: at least, he did not reply to that part of the question. I suggest he did not because he could not.

Is it not fair to ask why, if our Prime Minister could obtain from the Soviet Union agreement to the signing of that protocol which will have great propaganda value no doubt, he could not obtain within the umbrella of that agreement some meaningful accord with the Soviet Union, the country which is the chief offender in the over-fishing off our east coast? Why was that not done? Yet we will go to the ICNAF meeting in Halifax, the Russians will provide us with the same misleading statistics and we shall be no farther ahead. The time has come, Mr. Chairman, for us to question our membership in ICNAF. The organization does not seem to be serving us and seems to be serving no useful purpose for us.

We were told this morning that when our fisheries officers go aboard Soviet bloc vessels to examine gear or the size of their mesh, those officers are not allowed to go below and see what is in the holds of the ships. There is a very good reason for that. This great Soviet fleet has no regard for our conservation concerns. They move into an area and sweep all the fish off the bottom without any regard to what they might be doing to spawning grounds. These are matters of continuing concern and are all the more reason why we should have a Minister of Fisheries supported by a deputy minister.

Then we must consider the Law of the Sea Conference which is to be held in 1973. Presumably we are now preparing ourselves for that conference. We are concerned, and have been concerned over what appears to be lack of support or co-operation on the part of the Department of External Affairs in supporting the efforts of the Department of Fisheries. We have asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs in this House questions relating to our international fisheries agreements. He has demonstrated such an abysmal ignorance of the subject that at times it is embarrassing.

For example, I asked if the discussions that were taking place in Ottawa between the French delegation and the Canadian delegation regarding the phasing-out of French treaty rights off Canada's east coast included the continental shelf and the difficulties that resulted from French jurisdiction over the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. The minister replied that the discussions were solely concerned with fishing and not with the continental shelf. Mr. Chairman, we could not ask further questions because the Secretary of State for External Affairs showed such complete ignorance of the whole subject. There was no point in pursuing the matter. Obviously, if we were concerned about this renewable resource we were concerned about the continental shelf where the resource exists. If you talk about the continental shelf you are talking about the Grand Banks; they are one and the same. Obviously the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not know that.

This kind of ignorance illustrates to us that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has not received the kind of support he ought to be receiving from the Secretary of State for External Affairs and from the Department of External Affairs. Why should our Minister of Fisheries have to go to Denmark, hat in hand, and try to get the Danes to agree upon meaningful conservation? Unless the minister has the full, announced support of the government of Canada, and unless the Secretary of State for External Affairs is prepared to back the minister by saying in this House that we reserve the right to take whatever action is necessary if the Danes do not agree to our proposals, I say that the efforts of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, commendable though they are, in going to Denmark will once again prove fruitless.

Who is to take full responsibility for preparing Canada's case for the Law of the Sea Conference? Certainly we cannot expect the Department of External Affairs to involve itself in this matter because it has indicated that it does not share our concern. They do not have the necessary knowledge of the subject. By 1973 the minister will be so involved with matters relating to the environment that our case at the Law of the Sea Conference in 1973 will be a feeble one.

The result of these changes, I submit, will bring no real, discernible advantages with respect to fisheries administration. On the other hand, I can foresee and point out some of the possible disadvantages. I think it is also fair to repeat that we are concerned that there may be cases where there will be a conflict—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Mr. McGrath.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the matters to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler)—Inquiry of the Ministry; the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand)—Harbours—Montreal—Priority in development of ports policy.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1970

PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION, MINISTRIES OF STATE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES, ETC.

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-207, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at six o'clock, an amendment to clause 3 by the President of the Treasury Board was under consideration.

On clause 3—Department established

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, my time has almost expired. With the consent of hon. members I hope I shall be given an additional few minutes in which to conclude my remarks.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With pleasure.

Mr. McGrath: Prior to the adjournment at six o'clock I put on record some of the fears we have about the future of the fishing industry under the new departmental set-up. These fears are well-grounded and well-founded. I feel that we have made some progress. The progress that has been made is testimony of the usefulness of this institution as a legislative and debating forum. As a result of the arguments that have been advanced and placed on the record in the spirit of compromise that has characterized the development of this country, we have arrived at a point where we can say that by being prepared to give a little we can arrive at agreement. We can draw some consolation from the fact that from here on there shall continue to be—

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member when he is speaking in a spirit of compromise, but I must advise him that his time has expired. The hon. member may continue only if there is unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the same spirit I thank the committee for permitting me to continue. From here on we shall continue to have a Minister of Fisheries. This is part of the reason we put forward the proposition on February 16 in the form of an amendment, which is still before the committee, that the name of the new department be changed from the department of the environment to the department of fisheries and the environment. Having said that, I realize that the Department of Fisheries will disappear. I was reminded of that today by the President of the Treasury Board. I regret that very much, for the reasons I outlined to the committee this afternoon. However, notwithstanding the fact that the department as we know it will disappear, the present incumbent who has been Minister of Fisheries for the past three years will continue to give the fishing industry the attention it will require to meet the demands of the next few years.

• (8:10 p.m.)

If the present minister has retired, gone to another place or assumed another portfolio, we shall still have the consolation of knowing that no matter who succeeds him there will continue to be a Minister of Fisheries by the law of this Parliament. The hon. member who succeeds the present minister might be an environmental engineer from the city of Toronto, like the new deputy minister who is an engineer with no experience whatever of the fishing industry. But at least we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that because reasonable men met here and debated the issue of the fishing industry, an industry so important to Canada, particularly to British Columbia and the Atlantic provinces, the subject will be sure of receiving attention because the minister of the environment has been designated the Minister of Fisheries.

Hon. members of this House who represent constituencies in the Atlantic provinces, British Columbia and parts of Ontario will continue to enjoy the privilege of being able to direct questions in the House to the Minister of Fisheries. Whoever happens to be minister of the environment will be called upon to respond as Minister of Fisheries. That situation, I submit, is a great credit to Parliament—that in the give and take of debate we have been able to arrive at a compromise. After all, that is what has made our nation possible, this type of compromise which I suggest is particularly Canadian.

This is not to say that the fears I sought to express this afternoon are groundless. We have yet to receive an assurance that, for example, there will continue to be a Standing Committee on Fisheries. We would like the government to be consistent by proposing a consequential amendment to clause 4 designating the deputy minister of the environment as the deputy minister of fisheries. However, I am reminded, by signs of renewed attention on the part of the President of the Treasury Board, that you cannot have a deputy minister if you do not have a department over which he can preside. Perhaps this is the most unfortunate aspect of the legislation before us. We shall lose the Department of Fisheries, but at least we shall be able to retain a minister known in Parliament and throughout the nation as the Minister of Fisheries.

For these reasons I reluctantly ask the committee, through you, Mr. Chairman, for unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment to clause 2. In so doing I express the hope that this industry which is so important to my province, where 100,000 people are directly dependent upon it, will be assured in the future of the attention which it deserves from the department. At least it will receive the attention of a minister designated by law as Minister of Fisheries, notwithstanding any other responsibilities he may have by virtue of the bill presently before the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I should like to assure the House that I have not become an instant expert on fisheries, at least not in the sense that I intend to speak all evening on the subject. However, my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni has had to go away on public business. There is a point which concerns him very greatly—it already has been expressed by the previous speaker—and I wish to place it again before the committee at this time.

We welcome the amendment which the President of the Treasury Board has moved, placing in clause 3 of the bill a subclause which reads: "The Minister of the Environment is the Minister of Fisheries for Canada". I do not think I would be accused of speaking out of school if I said I proposed something like this at one of the meetings of the House leaders when we were trying to resolve this problem. Pride of paternity is obvious. I think it is a good solution.

Members of my party who are particularly interested in the subject of fisheries are happy to accept this amendment and do not feel badly about the fact that the word "Fisheries" will not appear in the name of the department itself. Nevertheless, my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni and others still feel a way should be found to keep alive the designation "deputy minister of fisheries." I realize it is difficult to have a deputy minister if there is not a department over which he can preside. This is what the President of the Treasury Board has told us. However, let me reverse the table for him. I understand that under the new structure there is to be an assistant deputy minister of fisheries. So I direct the question back to him: How can you have an assistant deputy minister of fisheries if there is no deputy minister of fisheries to whom he reports?

We are to have a Minister of Fisheries who by statute will be minister of the environment. We are to have an assistant deputy minister of fisheries. There is a cog missing, and I think it would be perfectly consistent and perfectly proper to accept an amendment which would designate the deputy minister of the environment as being also the deputy minister of fisheries.

I am not reneging on the agreement we made when we met as House leaders. I am not asking that the department should be re-established. I see a broad smile on the face of the President of the Privy Council and I am free to admit we fought this out in our meetings. The minister was not prepared to agree with us but he knew, of course, that the subject would be raised again on the floor of the House. I should like to indicate that when we reach clause 4, if a more prominent fisheries member does not beat me to it I intend to move an amendment.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I should like to suggest that Bill C-207 be amended by designating clause 4 as subclause 1 of clause 4 and by inserting immediately thereafter a subclause 2, which would provide that the deputy minister of the environment, when appointed under the provisions of subclause 1, is the deputy minister of fisheries. This does not call for an additional person or body; it simply provides that as we already have a minister of the environment who is also called the minister of fisheries, we should at the same time also have a deputy minister of the environment who is called the deputy minister of fisheries and to whom the assistant deputy minister of fisheries would report.

I suppose I should send this amendment to the table even though it is not possible to move it while we are on clause 3. However, I hope that even though we were not able to win this as part of the package that was agreed to by the House leaders, the government may yet see fit to accept it. It would certainly please the members of my party who are particularly interested in fisheries, and I think members representing fisheries constituencies from all parts of the country would also feel better if this step were taken.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has moved this in the form of an amendment, or is it just a suggestion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am giving notice that when we get to clause 4 I should like to move it, if my hon. friend does not beat me to it.

Mr. McGrath: But clause 4 has been passed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Have we not reopened the whole question?

Mr. McGrath: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think that if by consent we reopened clause 3, it carries with it consent to reopen clause 4.

The Chairman: I think the debate may be academic at this time, but clause 4 has been passed. Perhaps we should confine ourselves to the amendment before the House, and when it has been dealt with the Chair will hear other members who wish to present argument.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I rise to join my colleague for St. John's East, who is eminently aware of the problems of the Atlantic fishery, as well as the newly-emerged expert on fisheries matters from Winnipeg North Centre, and to make a few comments which are relevant to the bill and to the fisheries of the east coast of Canada. I commend my colleagues, especially the hon. member for St. John's East, for proposing the amendment which, if we can judge from the amendment proposed by the President of the Treasury Board, has been accepted in other words. I also commend the suggestion of the creation of a fully-fledged deputy minister of fisheries, or at least a person with that designation in the new department, a proposal that was even accepted by the New Democratic Party. Even if we accept the amendment proposed by the President of the Treasury Board who is trying to accommodate our earlier request and the one suggested by the House leader of the New Democratic Party, I wonder whether we will accomplish what we as members representing the east coast of Canada are asking for.

I have just finished attending the fisheries committee which heard a presentation by the vice-chairman of the Frozen Fish Trades Association of Newfoundland, a gentleman by the name of Mr. Gus Etchegary. He is as knowledgeable as anybody I know on the Atlantic coast of the problems relating to the fisheries. This gentleman's association has prepared a document entitled "The Newfoundland Trawling Industry and Groundfish Resources". Basically, the document identifies the problems of the offshore industry on the Atlantic coast, not the inshore fishery. One of the conclusions to be found at pages 16 and 17 of the document is as follows:

> What is at stake is not just rising costs that constantly press upon market returns, but the spectre of no resource at all.

This, Mr. Chairman, is one of the conclusions reached by the Newfoundland Frozen Fish Trades Association in their most recent document which contains a marvellously-researched inquiry into the state of the Atlantic fishing industry at the present time. If you thumb through the pages of this document, Mr. Chairman, and read the presentation made to the fisheries committee, I doubt whether you will find any evidence that has not been presented previously to the House of Commons.

We in Canada are going through a stage where the people are becoming increasingly disillusioned with their institutions of government. The Canadian people are becoming increasingly disillusioned with their municipal governments as well as with their provincial and federal legislatures. And no wonder! The elected representatives of Canada in this House and those people elected to other institutions simply do not pay enough attention to the responses they are receiving from the grass roots of the population.

We who live on the east coast are saying that we are in danger of losing one of the prime resources not only of the east coast but of all Canada. Through this House of Commons we have been telling the people of Canada, the Minister of Fisheries, the Prime Minister and the minister of external affairs that at the moment we are in very serious difficulties as a result of overfishing on the part of foreign nationals. Yet the response we have received has been manifested in Bill C-207, whereby the government is moving to eliminate altogether the Department of Fisheries.

Only as a result of a deliberate and determined effort on the part of members from the Atlantic region in this House did we get the government to respond with this compromise of letting the Minister of Fisheries wear two hats. Only because we threatened to sit here and talk about the bill until October did we get this minimum response of letting the minister of the environment also act as Minister of Fisheries.

I have before me an organizational chart which was presented by the Minister of Fisheries to the fisheries committee and to which I wish to refer in a moment. Before I do so I want to reiterate the comment of my colleague from St. John's East that already there is a good bit of evidence that can pointed to that the government is deliberately downgrading the role of the fisheries and marine resources of this country. Other nations, such as the Soviet Union, the Germans, the French, the Americans and the British are renewing their efforts with vigour and determination in the area of marine resource development. At the same time we are downgrading our efforts. The people on the east coast of Canada want an intensification of the efforts of the federal government in the field of marine resources, yet it responds by downgrading its role. What is the trouble? What is happening?

We have already seen a good bit evidence that there is a downgrading of the role of the fisheries. I would be quite satisfied for the purpose of the record to state that I am not getting the same response to my correspondence from the Department of Fisheries that I used to get. This afternoon the hon. member for St. John's East referred to the efforts made by the fisheries committee. Since I have been a member here I have been a member of that committee. This committee has met day after day after day to deal with every bill and item of estimates that has come before it. The committee has called many witnesses. The Canadian public was becoming educated on the subject of the marine resources of this country, even to the point where there have been programs on national television about marine resources. The people were becoming enlightened about our east coast resources. They were realizing that here was a frontier of resources that needed Canada's attention, that needed cultivating, managing and controlling.

Last year we sat every Tuesday and Thursday for five or six weeks talking about the fisheries estimates. We talked about fisheries estimates and became involved in all the details of expenditures and what they meant, what the implications were, why they were cut back, why they were increased, and the need for further attention. This year we have the fisheries estimates coming before the committee, but the only thing referred to the committee to date is the clean air bill. That was before the committee day after day and we spent all our time studying that matter when we could have been considering the estimates.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The air we have today is the same as the air we had the day the minister came into the committee. He was late getting there because of a cabinet meeting. Through no fault of his we spent only one hour and a half of committee time on estimates, just time enough for him to give us bits and pieces thrown together in an opening statement. There were two or three questions asked by members of the committee, and that was the end of it.

Today we received a response to a request made several weeks ago to have representatives of the fishing industry appear before us to discuss conservation. We started today at ten minutes after eleven and finished at one o'clock—less than two hours on conservation! Dr. Weir, the newly-appointed adviser on renewable resources development, was on the record for about ten seconds. He had a chance to respond briefly to one or two questions. These estimates have to be back in the House at the end of the month. We cannot get a room in which to hold another meeting; we are not sure we will have another meeting on fisheries estimates. This is an example of what is happening to fisheries—and we have not even got this legislation yet.

I have in my hand an organizational chart which formed part of the statement the minister presented to the House of Commons. I am not an expert on management, but there is definitely something wrong with this chart. If there is nothing wrong with the chart, there is something wrong with the government or the department. We have a department of the environment, with a minister. At the second level we have a deputy minister. At the third level we have a special senior assistant deputy minister. At the fourth level we have a number of assistant deputy ministers. If we take the minister away, we have a number of assistant deputy ministers at the third level of this department. This is the situation at the third rung of this administrative ladder.

We have an assistant deputy minister of finance, an assistant deputy minister of atmospheric environment, an assistant deputy minister of lands, forests and wildlife, an assistant deputy minister of water management, an assistant deputy minister of environmental protection and an assistant deputy minister of finance and administration. He does not come directly under the other deputy ministers but bypasses the senior deputy and reports directly to the deputy. We have a director general of policy planning, a director general of research and a director general of intergovernmental affairs. We have nine people at the same level, and among all these we have a deputy official of fisheries.

The Minister of Fisheries has said our fisheries are declining rapidly and our resources are becoming so depleted there will come a time when fisheries administration will not be necessary. If that is so, the government is wrong and the minister is doing away with what little we have left. This is what is happening. I do not know what we have to do to dramatize this problem. Certainly we have gone on record often enough. There is not a member on this side of the House from the Atlantic region who has not stood in his place and talked about fisheries problems. We have all talked about the depletion of our resources. The only response we have received is a downgrading of the role of fisheries. I do not understand the reason for this.

I can understand the need for a special effort in respect of the environment. No one is silly enough to stand in the House of Commons and deny the importance of special initiatives to solve pollution and protect the total environment. When we are creating new ministers of state for urban affairs, and affairs of women—whatever they are going to do with women—and all this kind of thing, why should we throw out the fisheries? I should like the minister to tell me honestly whether, if this bill becomes law, fisheries will have any status at all in the federal government. I contend it will have practically no status.

Today we received a presentation from the Frozen Fish Trades Association regarding the decline of our resources. We are gravely concerned about what is happening to Atlantic fisheries resources. Approximately one-quarter of our people are directly affected by the fisheries. Some 20,000 fishermen get their livelihood directly from this resource. If you multiply that number by the members of the families supported by these fishermen, you come to the conclusion that one-quarter of our people are directly affected. The largest number of people involved in any industry in our province is involved in fishing. A sizeable proportion of the populations of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are involved in fishing. In the province of Newfoundland the export of fish products ranks third among all the exports from the province. I do not see how our economy can survive without special effort to protect this resource, giving it long-term protection.

Some years ago we received evidence from fish research people to the effect that haddock stocks on Georges Bank had declined. As a result, Georges Bank had to be temporarily closed. Today we were told by representatives of the fish trades who appeared before the committee—and this was not denied by the scientific people present—that the haddock stocks on Georges Bank have become so depleted it is impossible for the stock to replenish itself through natural processes. In other words, by the time the Department of Fisheries, acting under the minister, got around to imposing quotas or taking remedial or corrective action, the whole stock was depleted. Individuals representing the Frozen Fish Trades Association told our committee that back in 1961-62-63 the Russians launched a naval war against the haddock stocks.

Mr. Davis: 1961-62.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister corrected me: it was 1961-62. We had one of the richest haddock resources in the world, and it has now become almost totally depleted at the Flemish Cap which is east of the Grand Bank. This is the kind of thing that has been happening to our resources.

We did have a Labrador fisheries. Unfortunately, in the House of Commons we do not have maps, diagrams and pencils to point things out to those members who do not know about such things as the Labrador fisheries. This fishing area is approximately 100,000 square miles. It lies east of Quebec and northwest of Newfoundland. It was one of the great fishing areas. Many hundreds of families would leave Newfoundland with their fishing gear during the fishing season and land on the shores of Labrador. Sometimes they would fish from their schooners. They would fish off the Labrador coast in a fisheries resource fed by the Hamilton Inlet Bank. This lies 250 miles off the Labrador coast. The area near Groswater Bay was a great spawning ground for the Labrador fisheries. Each year the fish would swim in when the warm water arrived. They would move along the shores of Labrador and the inshore fishermen would make great catches.

The most intensive fishing in the history of the Hamilton Inlet Bank fisheries took place in 1968. The greatest culprit was the Soviet Union. That year there was one billion pounds of fish taken off the Hamilton Inlet Bank, one-quarter of which was taken by the Soviet Union. Let me give hon. members an example of the amount of fish this involves. In my riding, the largest fish plant is situated in the community of Twillingate. It employs 350 people during the height of the fishing season. The amount of fish taken off the Hamilton Inlet Bank was enough to keep that plant operating for 100 years. As a result, the Labrador fisheries have been totally depleted. The Minister of Fisheries is aware of this.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I will give an example of the effectiveness of our research staff and facilities. It took three years before the researchers in the federal Department of Fisheries came to the conclusion that the salmon fishery at Hamilton Inlet Banks was being destroyed. The attitude of the fisheries research people, like that of most scientists, is that there must be significance at the .05 level and positive correlation. They must have everything so well defined that there is no possibility of their being wrong before they reach a conclusion. As I have said, with this kind of kick-back from the research people our fishery is being destroyed.

People may wonder why I refer to the Labrador fishery. I suppose it is sentimentality on my part, because this is the traditional period in which preparations are made for the Labrador fishery and it seems this year there will be no fishery there. This year the fishing facilities, the boats, the fishing gear, and so on, will be allowed to warp, decay and disappear because the fishermen will no longer be active. The Labrador Fishery is being destroyed by the Soviet Union right under the nose of the Department of Fisheries. The federal government is not responding fully to the needs of that fishery. It will not respond. This is evidenced now by the move from the Department of Fisheries to the department of the environment.

Neither are they responding at the level of initiative in respect of the governments of other countries. The Prime Minister is visiting the Soviet Union at the moment. Last October we asked that when he visited the Soviet Union he raise the subject of fishing. However, such a subject is too down to earth for the Prime Minister of our country. This is a real issue, affecting real people, but the Prime Minister does not have time for issues affecting real people. He is too concerned with the environment in the Soviet Union to worry about this problem. He is too content to enjoy a frivolous life than to get down to the real, gut issues facing these people.

I doubt if the Prime Minister during his visit will have the courage to mention the four-letter word "fish". He will certainly mention a four-letter word, but I doubt very much if he will mention the four-letter word "fish" to the sophisticates of the Soviet Union who are our greatest enemies in respect of destroying the fishery.

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I do so to advise him and the committee that his time has expired.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, would the committee be disposed to allow the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate to conclude his remarks?

The Chairman: The hon. member may, of course, continue if there is unanimous consent by the committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, is it not right that since the hon. member for St. John's East has now spoken, I am all right again?

The Chairman: I do not think the hon. member can assume that.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will try, anyway, Mr. Chairman, and see if my assumption is correct. Last summer, when we ran into a lot of problems in respect of our Pacific coast fishery, the Minister of Fisheries came under a lot of pressure from British Columbia because of the action of the Soviet Union and its involvement with some of the local fishermen, their gear, and so on. As a result, the minister properly took the initiative of convening a meeting with the Soviet people. They sat around a table and resolved the matter.

Our problem is not quite the same. However, we were annoyed that the Minister of Fisheries neglected to include in the negotiations representatives from the east coast of Canada. We continued to pressure the minister to bring about such a meeting. Over and above such meetings at an administrative level, there is a great area in respect of bilateral discussions, and so on, with France and other countries involved in our fishery which is not being pursued. The minister responded that if given the opportunity he would raise the matter with the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister was also made aware of this. He was supposed to go to the Soviet Union last October, and as we know he had to postpone that trip because of the situation here. He arranged his visit for this month. We told the Prime Minister of the need to raise the question of our marine resources when he visited the Soviet Union. We did not receive a very good response from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I do not criticize him for that because he really does not understand fishery problems; he is like a fish out of water. I am not referring to his personal ability as a minister, but he is certainly not in his field when talking about conservation of marine resources.

In any event, as a result of our representations we anticipated that the Prime Minister would be briefed for his visit to the Soviet Union. He was supposed to leave on Sunday. Late in that week no information was available to indicate that he had been briefed on the Atlantic fishery. Consequently, before his departure on Friday members of our party made representations to the Prime Minister's office asking that the Prime Minister include the conservation of marine resources on his agenda. We asked that he also include the question of the well-being of the people of the Atlantic region, and this great resource of Canada, in discussions with the greatest offender in respect of the harvesting of our resource.

We received a response of one sentence saying that our letter had been received in the Prime Minister's office. We assumed that the mail has not deteriorated to the extent that they did not receive the letter. We received no assurance that the Prime Minister agreed to take up this subject or indeed, what subject he would take up with the Soviet people. We approached the Secretary of State for External Affairs about this in the House and the minister acknowledged that the topic of marine resources would be on the Prime Minister's agenda. That is the last we heard of it. Perhaps he will talk about it during cocktails in the evening and while sampling caviar. Caviar is the type of thing which might have some relevance to marine resources, so perhaps it is on the agenda. Since caviar is a marine resource, which reminds us of the plight of the fishery, it ought to find its way into some of the discussions. However, I have not heard anything to indicate that the Prime Minister has made the Canadian position known in respect of our marine resources.

Tomorrow there is to be a meeting of ICNAF. The meeting is to be held in the Atlantic region. It is to be attended by representatives of the countries involved in the Atlantic region of ICNAF. These meetings have been taking place since 1949—for the same number of years we have been part of the confederation of Canada. The meetings are attended by, I believe, the representatives of 12 countries. They talk about the resources. They supposedly share data which has been accumulated. They make presentations and recommendations. These recommendations have been made since 1949 and practically none of them have been acted on. The data is so insufficient it is ludicrous to try to draw conclusions from it. One of the most informed members of ICNAF said that at these meetings they do not have sufficient data from which to draw conclusions.

• (8:50 p.m.)

The Minister of Fisheries is prepared to tell this House and the Canadian people that the government is satisfied it is making representations to ICNAF, and tomorrow the minister leaves to make a presentation as well. Over and above the ICNAF meetings we have suggested that there be a continuation of bilateral discussions with the nations involved, with a clear, definitive statement issued on the Canadian position with respect to marine resources. We have suggested that this be presented to the countries involved and that Canada show some aggression and leadership.

I think it was in 1958 that article VII, agreed to by the Geneva conference on the Law of the Sea, gave Canada the right to impose, unilaterally, conservation and management controls in the event that Canada was not able, bilaterally or multilaterally, to bring about agreement on the necessity of such controls. But Canada has never taken any initiative along those lines.

The Minister of Fisheries has referred to the fact that an international conference on the Law of the Sea is supposed to be held in 1973. He may recall that two years ago he indicated that such a conference would be held in 1971. Now he says it will be held in 1973. However, we can generalize from the meeting two weeks ago of the Fisheries Council of Canada that there is not likely to be a conference held until 1975. As a matter of fact, I think it is pretty well public knowledge that the countries of South America are no longer interested in discussing matters of conservation at an international conference on the Law of the Sea. This is because they have nothing to negotiate. They have extended their territorial waters for a distance of up to 200 miles off their shores. Neither do we expect the Soviet Union to support conservation measures since its fishermen have been harvesting our resources day after day.

As I understand it, there is almost no agreement on a date for the holding of a conference on the Law of the Sea and almost no agreement on the agenda for such a conference. Certain countries have been trying to prepare an agenda, and have been making representations to the UN body which is charged with the responsibility of administering preparations for an agenda. In fact, I understand it will take up to two years for all countries to agree even on the agenda. It is this kind of thing which is frustrating to Maritimers. We are convinced that the federal government is not going to reverse the trend it has started to downgrade the fisheries.

I do not know what the government's next answer will be for the east coast of Canada.

An hon. Member: You don't know anything.

Mr. Lundrigan: If I could have the ear of the Minister of Fisheries for a moment, I want to draw his attention to some recommendations that came before the fisheries committee today. I will only briefly mention them.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are slipping, John.

Mr. Lundrigan: The hon. member for St. Boniface is contributing some air pollution to the gathering. Would he like to make public what he is saying? I can't understand his interruption; and his colleague to the right is making some kind of queer, growling sound.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You wouldn't understand anyway.

Mr. Lundrigan: It is something that has nothing to do with fisheries.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): In fact, you don't understand anything.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, if the posterior of the hon. member for St. Boniface had anything more constructive to say than he is now saying, he should place his head where his posterior presently is.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Careful, John.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has the floor.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, this is a manifestation of the kind of attitude that emanates from the government side, and it is the kind of thing that will cause a great deal more frustration on the east coast of Canada. Two years ago we fought for the hon. member for St. Boniface to get a fresh fish marketing board. The government did not want representatives of his fishermen on that board and we had to fight like the dickens to get them included. He was there in his seat and he couldn't very well fight the government benches, because that is treason. On television, on Sunday night, the hon. member for Trinity said that this is a form of treason, and when you commit this sort of treason you have to start your own party. But the hon. member for St. Boniface isn't ready for that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would ask whether the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate is speaking on the bill in question, or is he trying to question me? If he would like to question me I would be quite willing to answer his questions at any time. But I would like to know if he is speaking on the point in question. If that is the case, then I want to know what the point is.

An hon. Member: You are the point of order.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface is speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am, Mr. Chairman, because I want to know whether the hon. member would like to question me or whether he would like to speak to the bill that is before us.

Mr. Reid: Good God; he doesn't want to speak to the bill. He doesn't want to ruin the House of Commons.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for St. Boniface has risen on a point of order. I think the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate was in fact in order. He was dealing in general with the subject matter of the clause and of the amendment before the committee. If the hon. member for St. Boniface wishes to take the floor later, he may do so and I will recognize him.

Mr. Lundrigan: I was hoping that the hon. member could continue his point of order for another four or five minutes while I leafed through my notes. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to apologize to my colleague from St. Boniface, who is one of the greatest members of the House. I guess he got carried away a little in the heat of debate and so evoked that kind of response. I would not like to leave it that way on the record.

Seriously, Mr. Chairman, the fish trade has made several recommendations to which I would like to draw the minister's attention. They are on the official records of the committee, and rather than repeat them in full I would like the minister to take heed of them. One of their recommendations centred on the need for the immediate creation of a special task force to consider Canada's fishery problems and to determine a policy which would best serve the needs of Canada while considering the collective interests of the fishing nations operating in the northwest Atlantic on the continental shelf.

The association spelled out terms of reference for such a task force so that Canada may move very aggressively toward the achievement of some concrete results in the area of management and conservation of our fishery resources. I think the suggestion is a commendable one. Whether it could be accepted as presently recommended or not, I do not know, but the principle is one I would commend to the minister.

The Newfoundland association also recommended the closing of certain areas of the east coast fisheries for the purposes of conservation. For example, it recommended the closure of all fishing activity on the haddock spawning grounds of the southern Grand Banks for the period June to September, which is the spawning period for the haddock fishery. It also recommended—this is related to my remarks on Hamilton Inlet Banks—the closure of all fishing activity on the Labrador-Hamilton Inlet Banks from January to April, which is the cod spawning period.

I point out that this is one of the main industries in the Atlantic region. It has millions of dollars invested in it, yet it is recommended that the federal government cut off fishing altogether for certain periods of the year in certain regions of the continental shelf off Newfoundland. When a body which is dependent on harvesting these resources, to an extent that one would tend to think it would be greedy enough to want to grab all the resources it could, recommends this kind of conservation, I say that the government must pay attention to it. Those engaged in the industry are not being unselfish. They realize that unless some of these moves are made, within a decade there will not be enough money, even in the pockets of highly paid Members of Parliament, to buy a good codfish meal in the Atlantic region.

• (9:00 p.m.)

In the codfish industry I know of one plant which in 1962 processed 12,000 pounds of fish, 94 per cent of which was cod. Last year the percentage of cod was about 30. I have checked with a number of communities in Newfoundland and found that this time last year fishermen were returning with half a voyage of fish and this year there is no sign of fish. A "voyage of fish" is a Newfoundland expression which means a good catch; a man would be able to pay his expenses and have enough money to feed his family. The traps are out in the water around the coast of Newfoundland, but day after day they have to water-haul the traps and there is nothing in them. Years ago the fishermen could not get a boat big enough for all the big, black, beautiful codfish and today you cannot get a fish to eat. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry knows this.

I have no quarrel with the new initiatives or with the creation of the department of the environment. I admire the minister for his efforts. His academic qualifications and his experience make him well suited to play a role in this department. But would he not consider going back to the Prime Minister with the recommendation that the fisheries not be downgraded? If we ever needed special initiatives and new directions in fisheries, we need them now. The minister has been paying attention and I have seen him making notes, so I am sure he intends to make a few remarks. I hope he responds to our statement. Aside from his expertise in the fields of environment and fisheries, he is well qualified in the area of management. Is it not a fact that once this bill becomes accepted, fisheries will play a minor role in the new department? That is a step in the wrong direction if it is assumed that fisheries are important.

There are nine people in the new department, and the senior official with regard to fisheries ranks fourth. If the minister could explain to an ordinary fellow like myself how our fisheries can continue to occupy a position of importance in the federal hierarchy, I would be satisfied not only to sit down but to strike certain of my remarks from the record. However, I am afraid that unless some sanity is built into this matter now, there is not much hope for the Atlantic region. If we do not get new initiatives in the area of marine resource management and control, there will be an increase in regional disparity. In 1968 the Prime Minister said that he was going to eliminate regional disparities, but if we do not get more initiative in the area of marine resources there will be an increase in regional disparity in the Atlantic region.

If this charge is fair, then I contend that the Prime Minister has the onerous task of bringing some sanity to the decision-making process of his government. I feel so strongly about this that if some action is not taken to correct the down trend, I do not feel any urge to be part of a system that leaves our people out on a limb. People from Newfoundland cannot come here to express their feelings, nor can people from Nova Scotia, Quebec, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island. I am not exaggerating when I say that there has never been such frustration felt by the people of Newfoundland regarding the response from the federal government.

If the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and the Prime Minister allow this situation to continue, I do not know what we can advise our people. I would not want to go as far as the Premier of Newfoundland, who yesterday advised the people to break the law. I don't know what the law says on the question of sedition, or seditious conspiracy but I do not want to advocate that people break the law.

If the federal government is not prepared to listen to what members from the east coast have to say, we may have to start leading some movements to get action. We cannot bring the fishing boats on Parliament Hill, as the farmers did the tractors, but when the Prime Minister returns from the Soviet Union we will have plenty to say. We may have to amend some of the rules of the House of Commons.

I should like to continue for another five or six hours, Mr. Chairman, but I do not think I could make much impression on some of the members from western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Lundrigan: The freshwater fish industry was declining there and we worked hard for the westerners to get fresh fish marketing through the House. I hope western and central Canadians realize that we are not asking for a hand-out but just for some protection. Our fisheries resources, from shellfish to kelp to Irish moss, require proper policies and management in order to develop them to make a contribution to this nation.

We are frustrated because somebody has designed a model for our development based on Montreal. It has to be big, have tall buildings, great smokestacks and pollution and all the characteristics of the feasibility study, the input of data and the feed-out, giving all kinds of anticipated returns on the investment. It must have all these before we get the ear of the Prime Minister. We want the federal government to exercise more initiative with our marine resources so we can pay attention to the real needs and potential of our people.

Why can we not get a positive response? Are we going about it the wrong way, talking too much and not giving enough evidence? There is no sense our continuing and trying to be enthusiastic about contributing to the Canadian nation if the Canadian nation does not want our contribution. Before this bill goes through I should like the minister to expound on how we might get the initiatives for which we are asking.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I do not want him to tell us that they met this week with the French and had a brief discussion, that the Prime Minister ate caviar in the Soviet Union, that there is to be an international Law of the Sea conference in 1973, that ICNAF people are to meet tomorrow—that is not the answer—or that we will phase out the traditional rights of traditional fishing nations over the next decade in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. By the time they phase out those rights the Gulf will be a dead sea; there will be only salt in it. That is not the kind of initiative we want.

I hope my ramblings are reflecting my frustration as an elected member representing 75,000 people who are almost totally dependent on the fishing industry and whose unemployment rate reached 16.4 per cent in April. Is there any Canadian in the House of Commons or in Canada today who cannot appreciate our frustrations? Would any representative from Quebec, and the people from Quebec, not be dissatisfied with a 16.4 per cent unemployment rate? What would happen to hon. members from Ontario, who are resigning day after day, if unemployment in their province reached 16.4 per cent and if a great resource industry such as fisheries were to disappear? It is disappearing from the east coast and from the House of Commons, so to speak.

I see that my colleague from Vegreville has just entered the chamber. What would happen if there were a 16.4 per cent unemployment rate in Alberta or in British Columbia, which have great resources? What would they do in those provinces if they suffered that kind of unemployment rate? Do you think that there would not be a revolution, uprisings and broken windows? Do you think the Prime Minister would not be presented with bologna sandwiches if he visited those provinces?

We are a peace-loving people and therein lies our problem. We think justice will be done because it deserves to be done and because we need justice. The fact is, though, that we are not getting justice. We are not getting a square deal out of confederation and we are not getting the response from the federal government that we deserve. So I say to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to the Prime Minister that they had better talk about more than the Constitution in Victoria when the conference takes place next month. There is a very sad state of affairs in this country. We are out of touch with the people and there is growing frustration on the part of many about the response they are getting from elected governments. We must respond to them if Canada is to continue as a viable, economic unit and as a country with ambitious and energetic people. My plea is not only on behalf of the fisheries; it is generalized for the whole Canadian nation.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity to speak briefly on the proposal made by the President of the Treasury Board which seeks to amend clause 3 of Bill C-207. This amendment is in keeping with the proposals that were put forward by the hon. member for St. John's East. The amendment states that the Minister of the Environment is the Minister of Fisheries for Canada. That, of course, is a step in the right direction but it is only a step.

Anyone who listened carefully to the remarks just made by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate will have, I am sure, a better appreciation of the situation existing in Atlantic Canada regarding its fishing industry. He covered many of the points at issue and put them forcefully before the government. What is needed now is action by the government. The hon. member covered many of the points to which I intended referring.

It is evident to those of us who live in Atlantic Canada that the fishing industry faces many serious problems. It is also evident to us that the government is downgrading this industry. I say that for several reasons. I am not quite sure what the minister will be called if the amendment is accepted. Will he be

Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries? At any rate, apart from the minister there are to be a deputy minister, a senior assistant deputy minister and nine assistant deputy ministers and directors general, of whom one will be the assistant deputy minister of fisheries. In our opinion and in the opinion of those who have studied the legislation and this division of authority, it is difficult for anyone to believe that the government realizes the importance of this industry to Atlantic Canada or to the nation as a whole. Under this division of authority we cannot help asking who will be taking the initiative in helping to solve some of the many problems which were so adequately described only a moment ago by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Ever since 1964—that is going back a long way, Mr. Chairman—when the Liberal party was rich in promises we have heard about great policies and programs for the fishing industry. We heard the then Secretary of State for External Affairs promise that the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act would be implemented immediately. Mr. Chairman, this is 1971 and only now is that legislation in the process of being implemented. For that I give marks to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: At least he is working on it. But he has a long way to go. As yet we have no idea of the length of time that will be required for the phasing-out of fishing operations of certain countries which claim they have territorial treaty rights in our waters. It is obvious that we have entered into international agreements but there is no provision for international enforcement. That is where we have fallen down. I have read books and books about meetings which have been held and steps which have been taken. We reach agreements but it is obvious that there is no provision for international enforcement.

For example, the Law of the Sea conference in 1958 approved certain conventions. Article VII provides that a coastal state may adopt conservation measures unilaterally, provided negotiations with affected states are not concluded within a six-month period. This convention is known to the government. It was known in 1964. Fishing interests in Atlantic Canada are still asking: Why did the government not implement article VII? It is interesting to read the article. I will not burden the committee with the entire report which that conference adopted.

There were 86 nations which considered 73 articles of the International Law Commission. In all, they adopted 75 articles and produced international conventions on the continental shelf, on territorial seas and contiguous zones, on the high seas, on fishing and conservation of the living resources of the high seas, and so on. The report states that the convention can be judged to have been an outstanding success. Some of the things that were passed by this conference I believe should be put on the record tonight. They relate to the high seas and, of course, in part to our problems in Atlantic Canada.

One of the articles provides that when conservation measures have been adopted on the high seas by any coastal state, those measures must be observed by fishermen from other countries. That was one of the conventions adopted by the international Law of the Sea conference. Another article provides that in emergency situations the coastal state may unilaterally enact necessary conservation measures on the high seas. And so it goes.

We wonder, Mr. Chairman, why these conventions approved at the 1958 conference, many of them having been moved by Canada, have not been acted upon by this government. Their inactivity has resulted in some of the problems that were put on the record tonight by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. We are now facing serious problems in the depletion of our fisheries resources through overfishing and high seas' pollution due to oil spills and mercury. One area of concern in pollution has to do with swordfish and tuna. I wonder why we devote our arguments and powers of persuasion to the subject of standards for mercury levels in fish. We know that mercury is a poison. It may not be present in quantities sufficient to kill or disable the average meat and fish-eating North American; however, we know from the Japanese experience that the people of fish-eating nations may be severely affected.

• (9:20 p.m.)

For years we in Atlantic Canada have based our hope for the future of the commercial fishing industry on the fact that it would not be much longer before the pressures of population in this country forced us to depend more and more on the resources of the oceans. Therefore, it makes no sense to quibble over a few parts per million of mercury, even though there may be honest doubts as to the correct tolerable levels. These arguments may suffice to extend economical fishing for a few years, but they will do little for future generations which may be faced with the inability of making their living from the sea. I submit there are two courses of action open to this government. We can continue to demand research in the toxicology of pollutants: we can make a plea to the source of the pollution because we cannot continue to tolerate thoughtless disregard of our sea resources.

I ask the minister what progress had been made in determining the source of mercury pollution. This is an important matter. I would like to know what efforts he has made to terminate mercury pollution in the high seas. What steps are we taking to encourage aquaculture in Canada? We are trying to clean up our Great Lakes, but I wonder whether Pacific salmon production techniques can be applied to the Great Lakes with any degree of success. I know that experiments have been carried out, but the minister is so busy—and will be even more busy—that we have not had a paper on the progress which has been made in establishing salmon in the Great Lakes and in some areas of Atlantic Canada.

Sea farming needs acreage, if it is to succeed, especially for the raising of shellfish, the most promising seafood for cultivation. Fish, lobsters and shrimp could well prove to be feasible crops. Considering present technology, clams, oysters and mussels offer the best choices. Sea worms and sea moss are two other promising non-food crops. If the minister has time to answer some of our questions, I would like to know whether any progress has been made in aquaculture.

Today's commercial fishermen face though going. We have pollution, which takes up a lot of the minister's time, foreign fleets, depleted stocks, aging boats, rising costs and rising competition in our markets. The prospect of a whole new arm of the fishing industry in coastal towns means strength and support where it is needed and would be helpful—right at home.

What steps is the government taking to encourage and develop aquaculture? What are we doing to increase stocks of salmon for both commercial and sport fishing? What steps are we taking to protect our existing salmon stocks from overfishing in the high seas? This point was thoroughly dealt with by the hon. member for St. John's East. It bears repeating. We have learned that the Minister of Fisheries is required to go to Denmark in order to discuss overfishing of Atlantic salmon by that country while only this week the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries is meeting in Halifax. I wonder why this move is necessary. Why can this problem not be adequately dealt with by the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries?

I would like to have some information about the 1973 Law of the Sea conference. The first meeting preliminary to the 1973 Geneva conference ended on March 31 with the formation of a subcommittee instructed to prepare a preliminary agenda for the 1973 convention. The next preliminary meeting is scheduled for July and August of this year. It is my understanding that the subcommittees working to reach agreement with the 86 nations participating in the convention are probably the key to success or failure of the convention.

What is the policy to be proposed by the United States at the convention, especially with regard to coastal jurisdiction over fisheries resources? This is a very important point, especially to Canada. Are the Soviet Union and Japan lobbying for or against coastal jurisdiction? If they are lobbying against it, what are we going to do about it? This morning a representative of the Newfoundland Fish Trade Council, Mr. Gus Etchegary, appeared before the committee. He told us that in his opinion there were doubts whether the 1973 international convention of the Law of the Sea would be held. We have been told that some Latin American countries are working against holding the conference. The reason is quite understandable. They have already established their territorial seas as being 200 miles from their coastlines. They certainly are not interested in negotiating a 12-mile limit.

What is Canada doing to obtain agreement on our proposals on coastal jurisdiction? Whenever we ask these questions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, whom I am glad to see in his seat tonight, or the Minister of Fisheries, we only get vague answers. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has a pleasing personality. I do not dislike him. However, I submit that as Minister of Finance he was a failure. He has won the distinction of being a failure in his own time as Secretary of State for External Affairs. I say this because the Prime Minister is travelling in Russia and announcing a foreign policy for Canada, the details of which are unknown to the hon. member for Eglinton.

This was evident today when the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond asked him a question about the threat to our national identity as posed by the United States. Evidently the Secretary of State for External Affairs does not know that his leader has claimed in Moscow that we as Canadians must affirm an independent foreign policy in the face of "the over-powering presence of the United States of America". What rubbish! What rot!

It is obvious that we are no longer held in high regard or esteem by our former European allies, because the Secretary of State for External Affairs, according to reports, is unable to obtain agreement from these fishing nations to respect our laws dealing with fisheries conservation and management. As a result of waffling and wavering, we have seen our inshore industry destroyed and the offshore fishery resource seriously decimated. Stocks of haddock are almost extinct. Our stocks of herring are down to something like 75 per cent of their abundance of 10 years ago. Redfish, yellowtail and hake are three other species which are showing signs of complete depletion.

It is obvious that the minister of the environment who will also be Minister of Fisheries, with approximately 13,000 workers under him, will have more than enough work cut out for the next few years, if he is there that long. We need an international fisheries branch within the fisheries department which has as members of its senior staff a number of experts on international matters. I hope the minister will give this matter urgent consideration in view of the obvious need and complete neglect of the fisheries problem by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and in view of the serious international negotiations which must be undertaken by fisheries officials in order to salvage this important basic industry.

Finally, I want to point out that we do not need another study of our problems. We have had studies at the provincial level, the federal level, the federal-provincial level, the industry level and the international level. What we are now hoping and asking for is some action. I am concerned that the government, instead of upgrading the fisheries department has now placed it some 40 fathoms down on its administrative ladder.

One other point is with regard to the estimates of the department of the environment which total approximately $73,465,000. I serve on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. From time to time witnesses appear before that committee. When we question an expenditure they are trained to tell us that it was approved by Parliament. I want to state this evening that, as a member of the fisheries committee, the estimates of that department have not been approved by the committee. We simply have not had an opportunity to deal with them. We have been dealing with clean air, clean water and everything else under the sun, but the estimates of the Department of Fisheries have not been scrutinized by the members of the committee. As has already been pointed out, we are not certain we can even get another half day to study the departmental expenditures, with the result that they will come back to the House at the end of this month without a thorough scrutiny by the members of that committee. That is not good management nor is it good housekeeping.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I want it on record that we have never had an opportunity to examine these estimates thoroughly in order to point out to the minister and his officials where they are going wrong and what ought to be done to make the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada a viable and prosperous one, as we who live in that area believe it could be.

Mr. Lundrigan: Does no one on the opposite side intend to get up and make a few remarks? From New Brunswick alone there are five members, as I understand it, who have fisheries—

Mr. Mahoney: Which clause are you on?

Mr. Lundrigan: Never mind which clause. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance over there—

An hon. Member: What is his riding?

Mr. Lundrigan: Calgary, somewhere or other. Perhaps he should listen once in a while and try to learn something.

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: What about you?

Mr. Lundrigan: There are five members from New Brunswick. There is a serious issue here. Our fisheries are being downgraded. We are not talking for the sake of talking.

Mr. McGrath: He wouldn't understand.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair has tried to be lenient but it is difficult for the Chair to press members to take part in the debate. I do not think the hon. member can pursue that line unless he addresses himself to clause 3 which is now before the committee.

Mr. McGrath: Before the question is put I should like to reinforce the suggestion made to the committee by my hon. friend from Gander-Twillingate. We feel we are entitled to some kind of response from the minister to the arguments we have placed before the committee, particularly since there has been so little time to deal with this matter in the estimates. There is an amendment which affects the minister's status. Surely it is not too much to expect some reaction from him.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Hurrah!

Mr. Davis: First, I should like to say that the amendment before the House is a good amendment, certainly one which I can support. I should like to comment on the words of some hon. members opposite. Basically, they have been claiming that the government has been downgrading the fisheries. Well, if actions speak louder than words, we have been upgarding the fisheries in the last two or three years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Davis: Certainly we have passed far more legislation relating to the fisheries than was passed in several other Parliaments. In addition, we have passed several notable pieces of legislation dealing with pollution—in other words, with the environment of living things in water. I might remind hon. members opposite of some of these pieces of legislation. We have gone into the market, in effect, and bid up the prices of fish exported from Canada. At the moment, the price fishermen receive for their products is far higher than it has ever been in the nation's history. That is No. 1.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Davis: Then, again, we have drawn a fisheries map of Canada around our shores and we are in the process of phasing-out the operations of a number of nations which have been fishing particularly on the east coast for hundreds of years. That is No. 2; and it is, I believe, another substantial accomplishment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Davis: It is also a fact that for the first time in the history of the fishery—I am dealing now particularly with the North Atlantic, though it applies to both coasts—we are establishing quotas which can be sustained for the indefinite future, quotas in respect of the total catch which will be observed by all nations fishing in the West Atlantic. Within the total quota we shall establish national quotas as well. Nothing could do more to sustain the incomes of commercial fishermen than this.

I would be the first to admit we have problems in connection with a number of fish species, particularly on the east coast. We shall have to do our utmost to arrest what has been a decline in the volume of catches by our inshore fishermen. This is a top priority problem and one to which the government must continue to address itself. It is one which the new department of the environment must rate ahead of any that it faces, and our organization, I think, will reflect this.

Mr. Yewchuk: Would the minister permit a question? The minister indicated that the action of his department raised the price of fish. Is he aware that the fishermen around Lac La Biche have been getting less for their fish since the establishment of the marketing board than they did before?

Mr. Davis: That is not true. When the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was set up, prices were roughly those of 20 years earlier. In the first year we achieved a rise in price amounting to more than 33 per cent. We have had the same experience with respect to the Saltfish Corporation on the east coast. In other words, there has been a marked improvement in the price paid to the fishermen. Also, they have known in advance what the price would be and are in a far better position now than they have ever been.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Davis: I should like to deal more particularly with the charge that by creating a department of the environment, by making the fisheries element part of a larger department, we are downgrading the fisheries. The biggest single problem the fisheries have faced over the years, in addition to depletion of stocks through overfishing, has been the effects of pollution, the damage to fish runs in all our major rivers by big industries and chemical processes.

From now on I expect this problem, if not tackled properly, will be problem No. 1. But we intend to tackle it and we can do so more effectively in the context of the department which is concerned with the quality of water and air. Air pollution can effect water, too; note the fact that the oil pollution of the ocean derives far more from the air than it does from spills into the water. We are concerned about water and air pollution and these are also important factors to be taken into account when considering the value of the fishery.

Some pessimism has been expressed about the state of our international negotiations. Canada will be one of the principal nations at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Human Health, in Stockholm in 1972. My understanding is that in 1973 there will be a United Nations-sponsored Law of the Sea conference. We have already developed a policy with respect to that conference, one which we believe we can sell to the majority of nations attending. No fishing for salmon on the high seas: we should be able to put that one over this time around. We did not succeed in the late fifties; perhaps we shall do so in the early seventies. If we do, we shall be able to rebuild Atlantic salmon stocks by establishing hatcheries and spawning grounds on the east coast. We have maintained salmon stock on the west coast. We should be able to more than maintain them on the east coast with that kind of international understanding.

There are meetings in Halifax shortly of the 14 Northwest Atlantic nations. The basic theme, as I have mentioned, is conservation, not only the preservation of existing stocks but the rebuilding of stocks to develop a basis for quotas which each country will know it can safely take. I am confident we must show leadership in these fields.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Certainly I am committed to showing leadership, leadership in respect of preservation of resources not only well out in the high seas but particularly over our own continental shelf. It is the biggest continental shelf in the world, in fishing terms, and one of the most productive on the face of the earth. Therefore, it has to be a very important priority both of this new department and of the government.

I think I can say that the record in recent months has been a good one. We have achieved a great deal in terms of price and income to fishermen. We have a great deal more to do with respect to conservation, much of which can only be done in close co-operation with other nations. We are working with them as effectively as we know how and are certainly taking initiatives. The new department has been structured to allow us to do this, and we intend to press on with a number of other matters we have started, with some clear indication of future success.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question. A moment ago he mentioned his concern about environmental pollution and referred to the action which would be taken under the new measures to control pollution. Would he not agree that the government had the authority to control environmental pollution under the Fisheries Act, which did not allow any deleterious substance to be placed in the water? The problem was that the government was not able to implement the provisions of the act. Is that not correct?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I think in a very general way that was true. The Fisheries Act as it stood a year or more ago was not implemented, for the same reason that the Conservative government that preceded the Liberal government did not implement it either.

Mr. Crouse: That is not good enough.

Mr. Davis: This legislation, which was drawn over 100 years ago, provided that nothing shall be dumped into our waters, but it proved impossible effectively to prosecute offenders under that act. We amended the act last year so that we could prosecute offenders effectively. So the answer is that we had to improve the act to make it work, and that is what we did.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the minister? Does he propose to bring to the ICNAF meeting in Halifax the Canadian proposal to ban salmon fishing on the high seas, or is this merely to be the subject of bilateral talks with the Danes?

Mr. Davis: We will bring it up again, Mr. Chairman. As the hon. member may recall, last year we raised it quite specifically at the ICNAF meeting but were unable to get unanimous agreement. We are raising it again, of course, and we will be raising it bilaterally with Denmark and with West Germany, which are the two real holdouts in this area. There are not many nations in that category which at a world conference would be against the proposal, and that is why I am optimistic about 1973 and getting United Nations support to ban salmon fishing on the high seas.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I know the minister has had meetings with and is getting some co-operation from the commercial salmon fishermen in regard to the new salmon regulations. Will the minister say whether the new regulations will be on a year to year basis and that the regulations this year will not automatically continue into next year? In other words, will the minister take a new look at them on an annual basis?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I hope that in matters of this kind I will always have an open mind. I am sure that the department is not bound from year to year in regard to the regulations. We have put forward regulations which we think are workable. We will modify them as occasion requires. We have laid them out and hope that they will be debated very seriously. Possibly further changes are necessary, but I hope not.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, a few sentences in response to the statement of the minister. If the minister of external affairs wishes to make a comment about the present position of the Canadian government on foreign overfishing, I will sit down for the next 15 minutes.

The Minister of Fisheries has made a puny and puerile statement in defence of the charges that were made this afternoon as he has tried to justify the position taken by this department. The first matter he referred to was that of prices on the American market. If the minister wants to take credit for this, I will give him all the credit he wants, but he knows that prices on the American market today have very little to do with anything that the Canadian government has done. Iceland and other nations trading into the U.S. market are having the same experience as Canada. As a matter of fact, the highest price for fish blocks on the U.S. market was 42 cents, and Iceland is exporting one pound fillets for 69 cents. It is really a firmed-up market. As the minister knows, the price of salt fish results largely from the decline in stocks. There will never be a problem in selling Newfoundland salt fish again in any part of the world, because there has been such a decline in production that we will not have much to sell.

The minister did get applause from his colleagues on one point and I am sure this is a reflection of the lack of understanding—I was going to say "ignorance" but that might give a wrong impression—of the action that he has taken on the east coast in keeping other nations out of the Gulf. The minister talks of the Gulf of St. Lawrence as being an exclusive Canadian fishing zone. I was in the House on the day he got up and bragged about the Gulf being an exclusive Canadian fishing zone. Yet in the very next breath he talked about having to negotiate the phasing-out of other nations. If this is our pond, then is the minister going to put a great big net across the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Strait of Belle Isle so that fishing vessels from other nations cannot get in? This is how the minister talks. He says it is going to take ten years to phase out these nations with traditional fishing rights.

The minister placed a 12-mile limit around the southwestern part of my province. The French came to our very doorstep, and the minister says we do not want to offend the French. I do not know whether it is the minister of external affairs who does not wish to offend the French or the Minister of Fisheries, but the fact is we are pussyfooting around with this problem and the government is showing no leadership.

The minister talked about quotas, which was the third great strike in his favour. He said we have established certain quotas and would take action toward establishing national quotas. As far as the quota on haddock is concerned, our stocks of haddock have declined to the point where they cannot be replenished. By the time we establish closed fishing zones on Georges Bank the stock will be completely decimated. So why talk about quotas in this sort of situation?

The minister then claimed that the reason he is paying so much attention to the environment department is that we have to control pollution in order to save the fisheries. I say that is absolute nonsense. The minister says that we have to control smoke coming from the smokestacks in Montreal, and control the sewage from the Prime Minister's residence in order to save our fishing industry. How is this going to save the fishing industry on the Grand Bank 400 miles off the east coast of Canada? I suggest to the minister that his statement in this regard is absolute gobbledygook and nonsense. Let me tell the minister that there is more to the fisheries of Canada than the fish that swim in the polluted waters of the Fraser River. The minister himself, coming from British Columbia, should recognize that.

The minister says we have to play diplomatic games; that we have to court the French, the South Americans, the Japanese, the Danes and all the other countries who are going to attend the Law of the Sea conference. Is there no room at all for Canadian initiative and aggression? After all, we are talking about our resource. We own the bottom of the ocean on the continental shelf as well as all the minerals and oil, even the crabs and the lobsters that are there. The minister agrees that these resources are ours, even out to the Grand Bank and the Flemish Cap 400 miles off the east coast of Canada. If any plane flies across that area, it must be by bilateral agreement. We have 55 or 60 bilateral agreements in this regard. The resource that lies within this area is fish.

• (9:50 p.m.)

At the Law of the Sea conference in 1958 we were told to take unilateral action if we could not obtain bilateral or multilateral agreement. Is there any initiative on Canada's part in this regard? Do we have to continue pussyfooting with France, Germany, Russia and other countries, getting nowhere? This is what I would like to know. Why does the Minister of External Affairs not get up and tell us whether he is prepared to trade anything for our fisheries resources? Surely he will tell us that Canada will not trade one single ounce of diplomatic or international good will or relationship for our fisheries. Is this true? Let us have the truth here in the House of Commons.

Is the Minister of Fisheries prepared to go to France and state we are not satisfied with the action they are taking in respect of fisheries on the east coast of Canada, and we intend to do something about it? Will he say that, or will he go over and kiss the back of the hand of whoever is sent from France and say they are a great bunch of fellows and we want them to buy whatever it is they are buying from us—culture, or whatever else—and we are not prepared to talk fisheries?

Is the Prime Minister going to talk hard-nosed facts to the Soviet Union? Is he going to tell them they are the greatest predators, raping our resources and hurting many thousands of our families? Is that what the Prime Minister is going to say?

Mr. Sharp: You should be the foreign minister; you would be wonderful.

Mr. Lundrigan: If I were the foreign minister I would have a little more backbone than the minister sitting over there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: We get about as much direction from him as we would get from a ripe watermelon. He gives no direction. I do not believe the minister is sincere, because whenever he does give an answer it is calculated for its political impact. Every time he does give an answer he has a grin or he is laughing at us as he is laughing tonight. This is the kind of thing that gets under the skin of Newfoundlanders. I would suggest that the minister is not welcome in our province with that kind of attitude.

An hon. Member: Oh, come off it.

Mr. Lundrigan: Why does the minister not stand in his place and tell us the Canadian government's position in respect of our marine resources? What is our position? The minister is going to present something to the Law of the Sea conference. What is our position? Are we going to take action? If the Russians say they are not going to move off and they are not going to restrict their technology, are we going to take aggressive action?

The Minister of Fisheries was told something in the committee today. To be honest, I did not know this and apparently it was not known by the minister's people. This department has no surveillance. The only surveillance it gets is tidbits of information supplied by the air force which deviates from its normal flights. We have been told that the Russians send over mother ships or factory ships and that a number of small vessels are disembowelled from the ships in order to prosecute our fisheries. Apparently the 60 to 70-foot long boats are disembowelled from the great mother ships. This is a concept similar to one used by the Portuguese; they send out fleets of small boats. This is how our resources are being depleted.

Let me inform the Minister of External Affairs that the result of all this is being felt in the homes of many of our people. They are forced to endure a type of poverty and hardship as a direct result of over-fishing by foreign nations. This is what is happening. We all know that thousands of families which used to depend on the Labrador fisheries have had to resort to welfare this year. They can no longer go down to the sea because the Russians cleaned out all the resources on the Hamilton Inlet Bank.

The minister expects the fishermen and members of the House to sit back and take this kind of thing. I hope if there is any backbone or spine attached to office of external affairs in this nation the minister will stand in his place and give us some idea of Canada's position regarding overfishing by foreign nationals off our shores. If we cannot get that, we must assume we are being sold down the drain by this minister. We have to assume this is a form of treason against our people and our country. If the minister is not willing to take this kind of aggressive action, that is the conclusion I must come to as a member from the Atlantic region.

I should like to hear a better rebuttal of the charges we have made. I should like to hear some better rebuttal of the presentation to the committee on fisheries than we have heard from the minister. If we do not hear such a rebuttal we will have to manifest our aggression here. We cannot sit back and take this kind of nonsense any longer.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lundrigan: Are we not going to get some response from the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Let him talk.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to continue with a few remarks, and I am sure some of my colleagues would want to make further remarks tomorrow on this problem.

An hon. Member: You have already made three speeches today.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps I will make five more speeches before this is all over. We have several hours left before the hour of the guillotine at seven o'clock tomorrow. There is plenty of time. We in Newfoundland have existed since 1497. We have hung on for a long number of years and we are prepared to hang on for a little longer. I should like to challenge the minister, not tonight at two minutes to ten but tomorrow when the bill comes up again for further debate, to give us at least a brief resumé of Canada's position in respect of marine resources.

I should like him to tell us the nature of the discussions between the Prime Minister and representatives of the Soviet Union. I am sure this is a matter that keeps him so uptight he is not able to sleep properly when he retires after his busy day's work. I am sure he is concerned about the Atlantic fisheries. I should like the minister to give us some idea of what he has prepared to present to the Law of the Sea conference in 1973. The minister said tonight Canada has already decided its position. Could we at least have some inkling of our attitude toward ICNAF?

The hon. member for St. John's East was wondering if in fact it is necessary for us to continue allegiance to ICNAF when we are not getting co-operation from member nations such as Denmark, which is harvesting our salmon on the high seas in spite of years and years of protestation. Is it worth while seriously considering a continuation of our association with this international commission when we are not getting co-operation?

We want to know whether the Canadian government plans to invest any more funds in practical research on Atlantic fisheries. We were told today that charts used by an Atlantic fish firm, whose representatives appeared before the committee, were made in 1856. These were the latest charts to be used in respect of the Grand Bank off Newfoundland.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We have heard some excellent speeches tonight and I am wondering if it is possible for the committee to continue for a few minutes in order to conclude the committee stage. We could then go on to third reading tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee can only sit beyond ten o'clock by unanimous consent.

Mr. Baldwin: That is what I am suggesting.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree that I do not see the clock at this time, for the purpose of completing committee of the whole stage on this bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, the fact is that this can only be done on the understanding that we will have a further opportunity to make some remarks, and that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will reply at some stage.

An hon. Member: Oh, sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: That is the only condition on which I will give unanimous consent.

The Deputy Chairman: There has to be unanimous consent on the general proposition, without any condition. It is difficult for the Chair to judge whether the minister will speak, so if there is unanimous consent the committee must definitely make up its mind at this time. If that is the case, I will not see the clock and we can carry on.

Mr. Lundrigan: Will the Chair indicate when this matter will be before the House again following conclusion of the committee stage? Will there be an opportunity for further debate?

The Deputy Chairman: There will be third reading stage when all members can again speak and ask questions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

• (10:00 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment of Mr. Drury to subclause 2 of Clause 3. Does the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that there has been consent to reconsider some aspects of the departmental situation, I wonder whether there might also be consent to the reopening of clause 4 so that my amendment could be called in respect of the naming of the deputy minister of the environment as the deputy minister of fisheries. In speaking for this group I can say that if consent is given and the amendment allowed, it could be voted on without any debate.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee has heard the proposal of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Is there consent to revert to clause 4 for the purpose of allowing the hon. member to move an amendment.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I understand that if we open it up, the amendment will be moved and the question put immediately.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So far as we are concerned, that would be the situation. No debate would be held on the amendment.

Mr. McGrath: No. Mr. Chairman. I think there should be provision for at least one response from the official opposition, because when I started my remarks on this stage of our proceedings I suggested to the minister that there should be a consequential amendment to clause 4. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that he should receive consent to move his amendment now and that remarks should be confined to his amendment, is most unsatisfactory.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We will agree to that. I thought the hon. member had made the point and that we had also done so earlier in this debate. Even so, if an opportunity is given to the hon. member to speak we will not ask to do so. We just wish to move the amendment.

Mr. Drury: What we had hoped was that in a relatively short time we could deal with the balance of the bill, which is basically schedules and so on. Earlier I indicated the government's position in relation to an amendment relating to the deputy minister of fisheries in response to the hon. member for St. John's East. While the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is very persuasive, I do not think he has succeeded in persuading me that we should reverse our position. If there should be a question on it, I think the government would vote against it. If it is a matter of seeking unanimous consent and then having an adverse vote, perhaps we should without unanimous consent and not proceed.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair finds itself in a somewhat confusing position at this time, because it is difficult to establish whether or not there has been unanimous agreement to the proposition the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has put forward. Some members on the opposition side wish to have an opportunity to say a few words on the amendment. If this is not to be allowed, the Chair can only interpret it as a denial of permission to revert to clause 4, for which unanimous consent is required. So I shall ask the question again. Does the committee agree to revert to clause 4 for the purpose of allowing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to propose an amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 4—Deputy Minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-207 be amended by designating clause 4 as sub-clause (1) of clause 4, and by inserting immediately thereafter the following sub-clause:

"(2) The deputy minister of the environment, when appointed under the provisions of subsection (1), is the deputy minister of fisheries."

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, this is virtually right back to where we started today and I re-submit the arguments I presented earlier to the President of the Treasury Board and the government. This amendment is consequential to the amendment we just voted on. If we are going to designate, as we have done, that the Minister of the Environment shall be the Minister of Fisheries, then it follows under clause 4 that the deputy minister of the environment shall also be the deputy minister of fisheries. One follows on the other and I think one is just as important as the other.

This afternoon the President of the Treasury Board indicated that the reason he would not accept this amendment was that there was no Department of Fisheries, that this new department of the environment would eliminate the Department of Fisheries. Be that as it may, the fact is that notwithstanding the provisions of this bill, which would eliminate the Department of Fisheries, under the provisions of the amendment we have just passed there is a Minister of Fisheries. Consequently, it follows that if there is a Minister of Fisheries he should have a deputy minister, and the deputy minister of the environment should be the deputy minister of fisheries. To me it is very logical. I submit that the government should be consistent and accept the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If the government does not see fit to accept the amendment now, I serve notice that the first opportunity I certainly will move the amendment on third reading.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) negatived: yeas, 13; nays, 35.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. The committee will now revert to the study of clause 2.

On clause 2—Short Title.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee was considering clause 2, the hon. member for St. John's East presented an amendment which I think should be read at this time to the committee. It was moved by Mr. McGrath:

That clause 2 of Bill C-207 be amended by striking out the words "Department of the Environment" where they first appear immediately after clause 1 on page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor the words "Department of Fisheries and the Environment".

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the committee, in the spirit of compromise that has been prevalent here tonight, would be agreeable to granting me unanimous consent to withdraw this amendment?

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree to give permission to the hon. member to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. McGrath) withdrawn.

• (10:10 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Clause agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall schedule A carry?

Schedule agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall schedule B carry?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, schedule B should carry, but I wish to say that it is a terrible practice to place in a schedule such as schedule B amendments not only repealing existing legislation but putting in amendments that do not deal with the legislation that is being amended. This is sloppy practice and I just want to warn the government not to do it again.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The member for Peace River has expressed my sentiments exactly.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall schedule B carry?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Schedule agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Some hon. Members: Next sitting of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): At the next sitting of the House.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. E. B. Olser (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I could take five seconds of the time of the House, not my own, I should like to say how much we all welcome you back and how great it is to see the agility you are showing tonight by climbing into the throne. I do not know whether there is a lesson there for skiers, but there is a great lesson in perseverance for non-skiers like myself.

Mr. Speaker, there have been charges that Mr. Pearson and Mr. Bryce gave improper information to a subsidiary of IT&T in 1954. I raised the question in the House because I felt the quickest and cleanest way to "scotch" such allegations is to put the government on the spot and get their reaction. I first noticed this allegation in a story published in the Montreal Star on May 19. Since then I have had a chance to peruse a copy of the source-document. This is a book entitled "America Inc.: Who Owns and Operates the U.S.A.?" by Morton Minz and Gerry S. Cohen, with an introduction by Ralph Nadar.

In chapter 11, entitled "Foreign Affairs", the authors attempt to document the manner in which international corporations exploit connections and friendships in an effort to influence government decisions. They examine a project they call operation "Deep Freeze", which was a submarine cable system proposed by the Commercial Cable Company, a subsidiary of IT&T, to stretch from the U.S. via Canada, Greenland and Iceland to the United Kingdom. It was to cost $25 million and the U.S. air force had agreed to lease 11 per cent of the system's original capacity.

The authors claimed that negotiations to secure so-called "cable landing sites" began in the autumn of 1954, involving discussions with the governments of the United Kingdom, Denmark, Iceland, Canada and the United States of America. Subsequently, the whole project fell through. The Commercial Cable filed a suit in the Court of Claims, charging the U.S. with a breach of contract and asking $804,000 in damages. On April 5, 1968, the complaint was dismissed. The company made no appeal.

The points that interest me and prompted my question are as follows: (a) On page 331, the U.S. Justice Department sums up IT&T's campaign to win the requisite government approvals for landing rights. It said IT&T "had occasion to engage in discussions at the highest levels of a number of foreign governments, to make use of, and benefit from, personal friendships with some of the highest officials of these governments, and to seek out—and receive—confidential information about the internal deliberations of these governments and the probable actions which they would take". The phrases "highest levels" and "highest officials" referred, among others, to Lester B. Pearson who was then Canada's minister of external affairs.

Then (b), on page 335 the authors claimed that "on September 14th, 1954, Forest Henderson met with Lester Pearson in Ottawa". The authors then go on to say, "Pearson provided ITT with "information of a confidential nature", the Justice Department said. "The information related to the status of the Canadian government's position, the possible participation by NATO, and the impact of NATO participation". In addition, "ITT's representative had numerous conversations with Mr. Pearson and other Canadian officials relating to the negotiations". The department also said that R. B. Bryce, who was Clerk of the Privy Council in Ottawa and co-ordinated the various cabinet departments, provided ITT "reports on the positions of high Canadian officials".

Then (c), on the same page it is disclosed that the Ottawa law firm of Maclaren, Laidlaw, Corlett and Sherwood were retained by the Commercial Cable Company and sent in a 38-page itemized bill for services. Mr. Pearson is alleged to have called this law firm on November 25, 1954, and agreed to try and "stir things up and let us in on the great difficulty they had run into and bring us into the picture if possible".

Also (d), on the following page it is alleged that Mr. Pearson told Commercial Cable's representative in Canada that "the United Kingdom was opposing our application at this time and that it might be desirable for Canada to hold off making an immediate decision pending further exchanges between the two governments". Also that "NATO was now involved and that various countries within NATO were going to consider it", which would add considerably to delay.

Then (e), on the same page Mr. Bryce is alleged to have said he would "consult immediately with various ministries involved and would give Mr. Martin—of Commercial Cable—a report"; (f), on page 337 the authors alleged that the Ottawa law firm claimed that by May 20, 1955 Mr. Pearson advised that "the British will not give us outlets there under any circumstances". I understand that Canada ultimately agreed to grant landing sites to the company but imposed certain restrictions which the company would not consent to. Therefore there was no "deal" in the end and this, it would seem to me, speaks for itself. It would seem to me that the law firm did a good job of trying to uphold its client's interests and that Canadian government officials and the Canadian cabinet did an equally good job of upholding the public interest as they saw it.

Therefore, I would welcome an answer to the question that I posed in the House of Commons last Friday:

Has the government taken any steps or is it contemplating any steps to investigate this serious allegation?

• (10:20 p.m.)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having asked this question because I agree with him that it is desirable that the air should be cleared as quickly as possible.

After reviewing our files in this matter and discussing it with Mr. Pearson and Mr. Bryce, we find no reason to believe that they told the representatives of the Commercial Cable Company anything that they were not properly entitled to know concerning their application for landing rights in Canada for a cable to be used partly for defence purposes and partly for commercial purposes. The consideration of their application extended over several months and involved a number of questions of law and policy. Numerous representations were made by the company that their legal rights made such delay unnecessary. They did not succeed in their endeavours to receive unconditional approval of their application.

HARBOURS—MONTREAL—PRIORITY IN DEVELOPMENT OF PORTS POLICY

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the minister a question regarding a special report prepared by his department which allegedly recommends priority attention for development of the ports of Halifax, Quebec City and Vancouver. Similar questions were asked by the hon. members for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) and Laprairie (Mr. Watson). We are all representatives from the Montreal area. We asked these questions because we are very concerned about the port of Montreal. We would like to know more about this special report.

Does it, in fact, state that priority development will be given to the ports of Halifax, Quebec and Vancouver in preference to Montreal and other ports? Does it mean that the government intends to concentrate on the development of these three ports to the exclusion of Montreal? What, in fact, are the details of this report and has it been accepted as government policy?

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the port of Montreal is one of the most important keys to the entire Montreal economy. Historically, Montreal developed as a great commercial centre due to its port and the transportation network fanning out from it. The principal industry in Montreal is transportation. At the base of the transportation industry is the port and shipping business. If the port business should continue to decline, or if it is downgraded in any way, we would be striking at the core of the Montreal economy.

For years Montreal has been the most important port in Canada. It had the greatest tonnage and the most traffic. From 1936 to 1967 the port of Montreal accounted for 75 per cent of the revenue of the National Harbours Board. In 1969 Montreal had a total cargo of 20,538,174 tons of traffic, compared with 10,553,997 tons in Halifax and 7,439,871 tons in Quebec City. Montreal had assets worth $186 million, compared with $46 million in Halifax and $46 million in Quebec City. The port of Montreal contributes $150 million a year to the local economy.

I cannot understand why anyone would want to bypass the great facilities which already exist in Montreal, facilities which are close to a large market and industrial centre, facilities which are well served by supplementary transport, and with a great record in the past.

It is true that there have been troubles in the port of Montreal with labour, productivity and theft but many of these problems are now being resolved. There has been a great improvement in the campaign against theft. It has diminished considerably. Action has been taken to resolve the labour problem. With the recent establishment of the Maritime Employees Association, we expect further improvements.

Now is the time when we need an act of faith in the port of Montreal, not a statement of doubt. Most of all, we need a positive act of faith by the government which is supposed to represent the public interest. As I have already pointed out, the port of Montreal is the base of the Montreal economy. If it is to succeed, we will need the co-operative efforts of all parties involved. We are very concerned about the special report produced by the Department of Public Works. I would like the minister to answer my questions about it this evening.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): The question raised by my hon. friend pertains to a statement I made in the province of Nova Scotia in which I expressed an optimistic outlook, one which I possess very firmly, about the prospects of the ports on the Atlantic coast drawing and maintaining an increasing amount of Canadian freight. I base this view on two grounds, first of all, the Kennedy Round tariff reductions which I believe will open new markets for us in the United States through the Maritimes and, second, the fact that we are an exporting nation, marketing abroad about 29 per cent of all our products. We have to go into the European Economic Community whatever its form. I believe the Atlantic ports will benefit from this.

I was optimistic about the port of Halifax and made reference to the improving position of Saint John, New Brunswick. This has been considered in some quarters, and apparently by my hon. friend also, as less than encouraging to Montreal. The hon. member says that Montreal needs encouragement, not a statement of doubt. Mr. Speaker, in all the time I spoke in Nova Scotia I never mentioned Montreal once. I made no reference to the St. Lawrence River, and to suggest I made a statement of doubt reflecting on Montreal is surely an exaggeration.

Is it not possible for me to look with enthusiasm upon the development of certain ports, some of which we have built ourselves, for example, Port Hawkesbury which can accommodate some of the biggest ships in the world, without at the same time being accused of denigrating other ports which I did not mention? If one singles out certain ports as the subject of comment, is it necessary at the same time to give a list of all the other ports so that they will be specifically mentioned too?

There has been editorializing by the media and others concerning the reflection I am supposed to have made on Montreal. I made no reflection whatsoever. The report to which I referred was made to my department in 1969 by the firm of Gibb, Albery and Partners of Toronto. It dealt with the immense revolution in transportation they saw at that time and which has been developing since to a tremendous degree both at sea and on land.

We have to stand in awe before the remarkable technological development which has taken place whereby ships are racing across the seas to deliver to unit crates which are racing across the land. This will alter our shipping requirements, and we in Canada want to be modern. I would like to see this report released, though we would be obliged to remove from it certain information given in confidence by firms concerned.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 26, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

LABOUR, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Third report of Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration—Mr. Portelance.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

DRUGS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF QUALITY ASSURANCE PROGRAM

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to outline a significant extension to my department's drug quality assurance program which I anticipate will be a major step toward the government's goal of reducing the cost of drugs to the public. When operational on a full fiscal year basis, this extended program will cost an additional $2,355,000 per annum. This amount will be in addition to funds currently being expended in the drug quality assurance area.

The drug quality assurance program will be operated by the Food and Drug Directorate of my department, in co-operation with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This program is being built on four cornerstones: drug analysis; intensive inspection of manufacturing facilities; assessment of the effectiveness of drugs on the Canadian market; and provision of information concerning results, along with information on comparative prices, to the health professions, provincial drug purchasing agencies, and the general public.

Provision of information on drug quality and comparative prices will allow physicians and pharmacists to prescribe and dispense lowest-priced drug products of assured high quality. It should also encourage the general public, and other drug purchasers including the provinces, to buy lowest-priced drug products of assured quality, by comparative shopping.

I will not attempt at this time to say more about the program. However, because of the interest of the House in this subject, in accordance with Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table in both official languages a document which outlines the program in more detail.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition welcomes the announcement of a federal government program aimed at reducing drug costs to Canadians by guaranteeing the effectiveness of lower-cost brand name and generic drugs. There are certain aspects of the extended federal drug quality assurance program just announced that are of merit. For example, the provision of comparative information on drug quality and prices will be important.

However, the program is inadequate in two ways. It is inadequate to deal with the costs of drugs in the present and the immediate future, and it is inadequate to deal with the larger problems of prescription drugs.

First of all, let us look at the problem of when the impact of the program will be felt. The time frame during which this program is to become fully operational is worrisome. For example, the annual inspection of manufacturing and distributing firms will not commence until 1973. The inevitable lag in publishing results of such inspections means that the information gained from this part of the program alone will not reach the Canadian consumer for several years. Therefore the reduction of drug costs is not an immediate prospect but merely a long-term possibility.

• (2:10 p.m.)

The timing and amount of the financial resources to be expended on this extended program also point to its inadequacy. Only slightly more than 2 million dollars is to be added to the annual budget for the extension of the program, a drop in the bucket compared to the 271 million spent by Canadians buying retail prescription drugs in 1970. The additional allocation will not be fully used until the program is in full operation. The minister does not state when that will be, although my estimate from reading this document is that the full amount will not be utilized at least until 1973 and perhaps later.

For the immediate future, then, the additional funds to be spent can hardly be termed significant for accomplishing the minister's stated aim of reducing drug costs to the public. Many Canadians need a reduction in drug costs now, not in 1975 or 1977. As I stated in the House on March 15, 1971:

> —the government should give immediate consideration to the provision of free drugs for all persons in receipt of social services and for graded payments for those on limited incomes who are now covered by medicare.

As I stated then, certain disadvantaged persons such as welfare recipients and old age pensioners suffer most from present high drug costs. Older people have limited incomes but are subject to more medical and drug costs at that time of life than younger age groups.

The second major inadequacy of the proposed extended drug quality scheme is the failure of the government to include this proposal in a larger program to attack the problems of prescription drugs. The government is introducing reforms on a piecemeal basis. As the minister and the government well know, this was part and parcel of the national health plan. As Emmett Hall said when he brought in his report, this must be included and be complementary to the plan.

The Progressive Conservatives have long advocated the need for paramedical staff to supplement the offices of the nation's physicians. Such staff could reduce the workload of doctors and allow them to treat more thoroughly patients requiring attention for problems now being treated by an excessive reliance on mood-modifying drugs or tranquilizers. According to the Canadian Medical Association, one-third of all prescriptions issued by Canadian physicians during a recent survey were for mood-modifying drugs such as amphetamines, barbituates, tranquilizers and anti-depressants, and over half of such prescriptions for mood-modifying drugs were repeat prescriptions.

To deal with the cost of these drugs is tangential to the major issue, I submit, Mr. Speaker. What is needed is a policy to increase paramedical aid to physicians so that they can deal more thoroughly with their patients, thereby reducing the degree to which mood-modifying drugs are needed as treatment in such cases. To eliminate the need for costly drugs is better than to merely reduce drug costs.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will act shortly to give free drugs to the disadvantaged Canadians and to institute a program of paramedical aid for doctors. Such measures are necessary to fill the gap left by the extended drug quality assurance program he announced today. Only then can the federal government hope to achieve its stated aim of reducing the cost of drugs to the public.

I hope that the minister is not setting up guidelines that later can be used in a compulsive way to make the doctor prescribe only drugs which appear on the Food and Drug Directorate's list.

Again, I appreciate the minister's motive for taking a very timid step. I note that the minister speaks about the clinical efficacy of drugs. I am sure that his department realizes that the therapeutic equivalency of a drug is much more difficult to determine than the analysis or inspection of manufacturing facilities.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada have been concerned about the price of prescription drugs for a dozen or more years. They have been calling on governments, federal and provincial, to take action to bring about a sharp reduction in the cost of prescription drugs. From the studies that have been made it is obvious that the substitution of generic drugs could go a long way toward reducing the cost of prescription drugs.

Prescription drugs are unlike any other consumer item; the consumer has no choice as to the prescription he gets. Almost exclusively it is the doctor who decides what particular drug shall be used. Doctors have felt, with a good deal of justification, that they could not take a chance on substituting a generic drug for a well known brand name drug because they had no assurance that the substitute drug would be as safe and as useful as the brand name product.

[Mr. Rynard.]

When the special committee set up to examine this question met five or six years ago, we suggested that unless the federal government would implement a system of widespread testing and communicate the results to the doctors and the pharmacists, it would be impossible to reduce substantially the price of prescription drugs to consumers. Events have proven that we were right. Therefore we welcome this move by the government to set up a testing organization and information service so that doctors will be in a position to know, when they prescribe a generic product costing perhaps one-half or even one-fifth as much as the brand name drug would cost the patient, that the patient is getting a prescription which is equally efficient in doing the job it is intended to do. We welcome this move. We are sorry it has taken so long and that it will take another two years to get into operation. I still do not believe this program will do the whole job which is required to bring the cost of prescription drugs down.

I still believe we shall reach a point in the not too distant future when the federal government will see the necessity for setting up a Crown corporation to manufacture certain small percentages of the most important and frequently used drugs, so that a reliable price yardstick can be established enabling doctors and patients to know what the price should really be instead of what they are having to pay at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, the drug quality assurance program the minister has just announced deserves special attention, and I trust it will allow the achievement of its objectives, namely the sustained quality of drugs and lower prices for the general public.

Those are worthy objectives. The Canadian people are certainly entitled to drugs of the best possible quality at a reasonable cost.

The program rests on four points; to my mind, it is a start, and should receive much more attention on the part of the department.

The minister mentioned the fact that retail sales of prescription drugs amounted to over $271 million in 1970. The volume of sales itself indicates the great importance of adequate surveillance by the Food and Drug Directorate and the Department of National Health and Welfare so that the Canadian people may be well protected.

I am amazed to hear that the Food and Drug Directorate does not inspect the 104 firms more than once every three years and that it will only be from 1973 on that the inspections will be made once a year. This demonstrates without any doubt the inefficiency of the inspection department. This failure could have been corrected a long time ago. Having noted this failure, the minister states that inspections will be carried out once a year, from 1973 on. Here is another proof of the inefficiency of certain departments which seem lost, unable to correct an unbearable situation. Where a decison has been made to improve the situation, they only proceed at turtle pace.

The minister also mentions the necessity of reassessing some of the products which have been available to the public for a number of years. This, to me, is a superfluous statement since the Food and Drug Directorate has the responsibility of controlling the different drugs made available to the public. It would mean that the directorate was not regularly performing its surveillance task.

It is highly necessary that the results of the drug quality control program be made available to health specialists.

The population has long been calling for a reduction of the price of drugs which, unfortunately, has recently increased again in some areas.

I therefore trust the new program will indirectly contribute to the reduction of costs of drugs to Canadians.

* * *

• (2:20 p.m.)

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ROLLED STEEL PRICE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of pressing necessity and of immediate concern to every Canadian. I am referring to the announcement today of the substantial and alarming increase in the price of 80 per cent of Canada's rolled steel products which will have widespread and extremely damaging effects on the level of prices for consumers and on the confidence and growth of the Canadian economy at this most critical time.

Therefore, with unanimous consent I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House urges the government immediately to outline the government's inflation and unemployment projections and goals for 1971; and that the government make a clear, definitive statement on the consequences and causes of this increase, as well as on what action the government plans to take in the remedial sense.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. The motion is moved under the terms of Standing Order 43 and therefore requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put at this time.

* * *

TELESAT CANADA

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1970

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table copies, in English and in French, of the Telesat annual report for 1970.

Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY

Question No. 415—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. On what date or dates did the Governor in Council, or any authority designated by the Governor in Council, order the Blue Water Bridge Authority to make its cost records and its cash receipt and disbursement records available, pursuant to section 19(1) of the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act which was enacted 21st May 1964?

2. On what date or dates did the Blue Water Bridge Authority provide the Governor in Council, or his designee with itemized, detailed and verified reports of the Authority's receipts and disbursements under section 19(2) (a) of the Act?

3. Commencing with 1964, in what year or years were the accounts of the Blue Water Bridge Authority audited by persons designated by the Governor in Council, or his designee, under section 19(2) (b) of the Act?

4. Has the Auditor General recently required from the appropriate department information, reports and explanations concerning the operations of the Blue Water Bridge Authority?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. In accordance with the requirements and responsibilities of the Canadian Government, certain financial information, mainly with respect to tolls, has been submitted to the government by the Blue Water Bridge Authority under the provision of the Railway Act. No additional request for financial information has been made to date under the enabling authority contained in the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act, section 19 (1)(a).

2. Not applicable.

3. No persons have been so designated.

4. No.

STEPS TAKEN TO OBTAIN ESTIMATES OF NUMBER OF RESIDENTS WHO HAD NOT BECOME CANADIAN CITIZENS BY JANUARY 1, 1970

Question No. 642—Mr. Nowlan:

With respect to the answer to Question Number 1 on October 26, 1970, what steps has the Department of the Secretary of State taken to obtain estimates of the number of individuals, by country of citizenship, normally resident in Canada who had not become Canadian citizens by January 1, 1970, of an accuracy sufficient to permit the intelligent planning of government activities and programs relating to those individuals.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Estimates of the number of individuals, by country of citizenship, normally resident in Canada who had not become Canadian citizens by January 1, 1970, are impossible to obtain with any degree of accuracy short of requiring the non-citizen immigrant population to register. Such a requirement would single out a particular group of residents and impose a special burden on them quite apart from the administrative costs to government. Intelligent planning of government activities and programs relating to these individuals is based upon sufficient and satisfactory data drawn from a combination of alternative sources such as the Department of Manpower and Immigration, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, existing citizenship registration statistics, etc.

Questions

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—MOVEMENT OF PRESENT QUARTERS TO PLACE DE VILLE TOWER "C"

Question No. 974—Mr. Coates:

1. Is it the intention of the Department of Transport to move from its present quarters to new quarters at Tower "C", Place de Ville and 330 River Road, Vanier and, if so (a) on what date will such moves take place (b) for what reason?

2. (a) What sections of the Department of Transport will be located at Tower "C", Place de Ville and what sections will be located at 330 River Road, Vanier (b) for what reason were the services of the Department separated?

3. How much floor space is to be leased in each of the buildings (a) from whom (b) for what period of time (c) what is the dollar value annually for each of the leases?

4. Will new furnishings be provided in the new quarters and, if so, (a) on what basis will these furnishings be provided (b) at what cost (c) what action will be taken to dispose of the office furnishings that are presently in use by the personnel of the Department of Transport?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the departments of Public Works and Transport as follows: 1. The Ministry of Transport will move to Tower "C", Place de Ville but no elements of the Ministry will move to 330 River Road, Vanier. (a) September 1971. (b) to provide the Ministry of Transport with more suitable accommodation in a single location.

2. (a) and (b) It is planned to locate the Ministry Headquarters; the Canadian Air Transportation Administration; the Canadian Marine Transportation Administration, including the headquarters of the National Harbours Board and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority; and the Canadian Surface Transportation Administration in Tower "C", Place de Ville.

3. Place de Ville, Tower "C", 467,581 square feet (approximately). (a) Campeau Corporation Limited; (b) Ten years with a five year option; (c) $2,656,472.37.

4. (a) and (b) It is intended to equip the new quarters with new office furnishings to the extent existing furnishings need to be replaced because of condition, obsolete-ness and incompatibility with modern office arrangements. Extensive use will be made of Canadian Government designed modular type furniture. Cost of the new office furnishings is estimated at approximately $1,000,000. (c) Normal disposal action will be taken through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

TRADE COMMISSIONER SERVICE—ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN FIRMS

Question No. 1,029—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. How many private firms in Canada required the assistance of the Trade Commissioners in finding markets or sources of supply in other countries for the years 1968 and 1969?

2. In each of those years, how many succeeded in finding a market abroad to export their commodities or services?

3. In what countries did they succeed in selling their products?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1 and 2. Available information indicates that in both 1968 and 1969 the Trade Commissioner Services Posts around the world handled over 20,000 export enquiries from Canadian firms. This total includes cases where firms have addressed the same enquiry to a number of posts abroad. A registry of individual firms making such enquiries is not maintained. In 1968 the Trade Commissioner Service assisted in the establishment abroad of 1,400 new buying connections and 650 new sales agencies connections. In 1969 these figures were 1,200 new buying connections and 1,400 new sales agencies connections.

3. In 1968 and 1969 Canadian sales rose in all countries where trade offices are maintained.

NARCOTICS CONTROL ACT AND FOOD AND DRUGS ACT—JAIL SENTENCES

Question No. 1,032—Mr. Yewchuk:

For the years 1969 and 1970, how many persons between the ages of 16 and 24 received jail sentences under the Narcotics Control Act and the Food and Drugs Act for (a) possession for the purpose of trafficking in drugs (b) the trafficking in these (c) illegal importation or exportation of drugs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): See following table.

Number of Persons who Received Jail Sentences in 1969 and 1970 under the Narcotics Control Act and the Food and Drugs Act for Trafficking, Possession for the Purpose of Trafficking, and Illegal Importation of Narcotics, Controlled, and Restricted Drugs

Age Range	Narcotic Control Act						Part III, Food and Drugs Act (Controlled Drugs)				Part IV, Food and Drugs Act (Restricted Drugs)
	Trafficking		Possession for the Purpose of Trafficking		Illegal Importation		Trafficking*		Possession for the Purpose of Trafficking		Trafficking*		Possession for the Purpose of Trafficking
	1969	1970	1969	1970	1969	1970	1969	1970	1969	1970	1969	1970	1969	1970
under 18.....	19	34	10	11	1	—	—	2	—	2		24		26
18-20.....	145	147	51	96	—	4	4	7	3	14	not available	108	not available	83
21-24.....	128	175	55	131	2	18	7	11	5	16		60		68
Total.....	292	356	116	238	3	22	11	20	8	32		192		177

*Trafficking includes illegal importation or exportation.

Part IV of the Food and Drugs Act did not come into force until August 1970.

[Mr. Stanbury.]

COMPENSATION TO CANADIANS LIVING ABROAD

Question No. 1,085—Mr. Fortin:

1. To the knowledge of the government, during each of the past five years, how many Canadians were living abroad?

2. During the past five years, was the government held responsible for damages sustained by its nationals living abroad and, if so (a) in how many cases (b) what was the total amount of such damges?

3. How many Canadian technical assistants are living abroad?

4. Has the government compensated Canadians whose assets were nationalized by foreign governments and, if so, in what cases?

5. Does the government provide for compensation to its nationals for damages sustained by them abroad and, if so, in what manner?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of External Affairs and the Canadian International Development Agency as follows: 1. This information is not available. There is no annual census or world-wide registration of Canadian citizens resident abroad. In many countries abroad Canadian citizens making a prolonged stay there are invited in their own interests to register with the appropriate diplomatic or consular post; they are, however, under no obligation to do so and experience has shown that many do not register. The total of those who have so registered as of March 1, 1971 is approximately 37,000. This figure does not include any Canadians who are resident in countries where registration records are not maintained, among which are the United States and the United Kingdom.

2. To our knowledge, no.

3. 1,096, CIDA; 1,157, CUSO.

4. The Government does not of itself compensate Canadian citizens whose assets have been nationalized by foreign governments. The government has however, concluded claims agreements with foreign governments and has distributed the proceeds received among Canadian citizens whose property has been nationalized by those governments. Particulars of claims agreements concluded are set out hereunder. (a) On June 30, 1966 a claims agreement was signed with the People's Republic of Bulgaria under which the Canadian Government received a payment of $40,000. The payment was in respect of property rights, interests and debts of the Canadian Government, Canadian citizens and Canadian Juridical persons which had been affected directly or indirectly by Bulgarian measures of nationalization, expropriation or other similar measures which had taken effect before the date of agreement. The proceeds of the settlement have been distributed by the appropriate ministers amongst claimants on the recommendation of an adviser on claims. (b) On June 1, 1970 a claims agreement was signed with the Hungarian People's Republic under which the Canadian Government will receive a payment of 1.1 million dollars in five annual equal installments, the first of which has been received. The payment was in respect to the property rights and interests including debts other than bonded debts of the Canadian Government and Canadian citizens affected directly or indirectly by Hungarian measures of nationalization, expropriation, state administration and other similar measures arising out of structural changes in the Hungarian economy and regulations made or administrative action taken thereunder which have taken effect before the date of the agreement. The settlement includes debts arising out of contracts of insurance concluded before December 21, 1941, shares in Hungarian banking companies affected by the Hungarian Law XXX of December 1, 1947 which were continuously owned by Canadian citizens, obligations arising out of Articles 24 and 26 of the Treaty of Peace with Hungary of February 10, 1947 and obligations arising out of Articles 231 and 232 of the Treaty of Trianon of June 4, 1920. A Chief Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner have been appointed, known by the title of the Foreign Claims Commission, for the purposes of adjudicating the claims and recommending to the appropriate ministers the distribution of the proceeds of the settlement amongst Canadian claimants.

5. The government does not provide compensation for damages sustained abroad by its nationals by reason of the wrongful acts of persons other than servants or agents of the Crown in the right of Canada.

CNR BONDS

Question No. 1,117—Mr. Gauthier:

1. Who, other than the federal government, hold CNR bonds?

2. Are the bonds issued by CNR in repayment of loans contracted by the railway?

3. What are the rates paid on such bonds?

4. What means are taken to repay them when due?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. As CNR bonds are widely held and negotiated by private and commercial investors, it is not possible to answer specifically the question in the form asked.

2. and 3. No bond issues have been made by the company since 1960. Details of the outstanding issues may be found on page 40 of the company's printed annual report for the year 1969.

4. By government loans under authority of the Canadian National Railways Refunding Act 1955 and/or through the Purchase Funds operated under the conditions of each issue. Details of the latter transactions are also shown on page 40 of the company's 1969 annual report.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—LEGAL RESEARCH AND PLANNING SECTION

Question No. 1,287—Mr. Fortin:

1. On what date and in what manner was the Legal Research and Planning Section of the Department of Justice established?

2. How many people are employed in this Section and how many are trained in (a) civil law (b) common law?

3. How hany employees in this Section (a) are bilingual (b) speak French only (c) speak English only?

Questions

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1. The creation of the Legal Research and Planning Section of the Department of Justice was announced on April 28, 1970 before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and the appointment of the Director was announced on July 2, 1970.

2. Twelve persons are employed in the section. One is trained in civil law and six are trained in common law.

3. Five employees in the section are bilingual; none speak French only; seven speak English only.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—STUDY OF LEGAL AID SYSTEMS

Question No. 1,288—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has the Department of Justice had a study made on legal aid systems and, if so, will the Department publish the report?

2. Is it the intention of the government to ensure that all persons have access to legal services and, if so, what steps are contemplated?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1. Yes, but the study was not made for the purpose of publishing a report and the notes and other material in relation thereto are not in a suitable form for publication.

2. The Government recognizes the desirability for legal aid to be available to persons in need of it and consideration is currently being given to what the federal role should be in this field.

*CBC—COVERAGE OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY CONVENTION

Question No. 1,326—Mr. Deakon:

1. How many staff and other personnel were employed by the CBC for coverage of the New Democratic Party Convention?

2. What was the total cost to the CBC for this coverage?

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Approximately 150 people were assigned to provide live coverage of the NDP leadership convention in April for the English and French radio and television services; and

2. It has not been customary to require the corporation to disclose individual programming costs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was worth every dollar.

RCMP—PARLIAMENT HILL DETACHMENT

Question No. 1,328—Mr. Peddle:

1. How many RCMP officers are normally assigned to duty on Parliamentary Hill?

2. How many of these officers are fluently bilingual?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): 1. Thirty-one.

2. Twenty-five of these are sufficiently competent in both official languages to enable them to efficiently carry out their assigned duties in either language.

[Mr. Fortin.]

NUMBER OF THERAPEUTIC ABORTIONS AND LIVE BIRTHS, 1970

Question No. 1,329—Mr. Peddle:

1. How many therapeutic abortions were performed at hospitals in each province and the Yukon during 1970?

2. What was the number of live births in each province and the Yukon during 1970?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada (Dominion Bureau of Statistics) reports that: 1. and 2. The following table shows the number of therapeutic abortions performed in hospitals for the provinces and the Yukon for 1970, and the number of live births for the provinces and the Yukon for 1969. Final figures of live births for the year 1970 are not available yet.

Reporting Province/Area	Total Therapeutic Abortions (1970)	Live Births Registered (1969)
All reporting areas	11,200	368,431
Newfoundland	25	13,000
Prince Edward Island	18	2,009
Nova Scotia	263	13,618
New Brunswick	72	11,695
Quebec	541	95,610
Ontario	5,657	130,398
Manitoba	248	17,809
Saskatchewan	217	17,592
Alberta	1,172	30,855
British Columbia	2,981	35,383
Yukon	6	462

COME-BY-CHANCE, NEWFOUNDLAND—REPAYMENT OF MONEYS EXPENDED ON CONSTRUCTION OF WHARF FACILITIES

Question No. 1,344—Mr. Carter:

1. Has the federal government requested the Government of Newfoundland, or any of its agencies and Crown corporations, to guarantee repayment to the Government of Canada of moneys to be expended by it in the construction of wharf and dock facilities at Come-by-Chance, Newfoundland and, if so (a) on what date was the request made (b) what has been the response?

2. Has Mr. John Shaheen, Shaheen Natural Resources Inc. or Newfoundland Refining Company Limited been requested by the Government of Canada to give such a guarantee and, if so, what has been the response?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. The draft agreement now in the hands of the Crown Corporations of the province of Newfoundland requires a repayment to the Federal Government of the full cost of the wharf, plus interest, over a 25-year period. This has been the position of the Federal Government in all negotiations, and is accepted by the Crown Corporations.

2. The ownership of the refinery may not be transferred to the Newfoundland Refining Company Limited unless they assume the obligation to repay the balance owing on the wharf. This, again, is a condition of the agreement. The agreement has not as yet been signed, but the only outstanding issues under discussion are of a technical nature, and have nothing to do with the provision to repay the Federal Government all costs, plus interest.

CANADA MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 1,353—Mr. Nystrom:

Are all trainees under the program of Occupational Training for Adults (OTA) referred and encouraged to participate in all occupational training programs available and, if so, how many (a) male (b) female, applicants are enrolled in each of the fields of training offered?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No. Individuals are referred for training in those courses which are best suited to their needs and the needs of the labour market, and which will help them to increase their opportunities for employment or their earning capacity. (a) and (b). Of the persons who were authorized to receive full-time occupational training, approximately 75 per cent were male and 25 per cent female. Of those who were authorized to receive apprentice training during this period 88 per cent were male, 2 per cent female while the gender of the remaining 10 per cent is not recorded in training records.

PUBLIC SERVICE CONCURRENT COMPETITIONS

Question No. 1,355—Mr. Aiken:

1. With respect to the reply to Question Number 1,104 at page 4990 of Hansard, April 7, 1971, is it customary to have concurrent competitions for the same position in the Public Service and, if so, under what authority?

2. What distribution was made of the circular for Competition No. 70-430-27?

3. Were all persons who applied for Competition No. 70-ID-4301 notified that Competition No. 70-430-27 was being held?

4. How many other concurrent competitions have been held which would permit exclusion of certain applicants?

5. What selection standards were set for Competitions No. 70-ID-4301 and No. 70-430-27 and, how did they differ?

6. Would the successful candidate for Competition No. 70-430-27 have been eligible for appointment under Competition No. 70-ID-4301?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. Section 11(1) of the Public Service Employment Regulations authorizes the responsible staffing officer, where he has reason to believe that there are insufficient number of persons employed in the Public Service who are qualified for appointment to existing or anticipated vacancies, to conduct simultaneously a closed competition and a competition that is open to persons who are not employed in the Public Service.

2. Canada wide.

3. Persons who applied in Competition 70-ID-4301 were not personally notified of Competition 70-430-27. However, ten thousand posters were circulated as per (2).

4. Commission records are maintained in such a manner that this information cannot be extracted.

Questions

5. Selection Standards for the Economics, Sociology and Statistics Group approved and published by the Public Service Commission with effect from May 1970. Those used in Competitions 70-ID-4301 and 70-430-27 did not differ.

6. No—because 70-ID-4301 was a closed competition and was restricted to employees of the Public Service.

[English]

PUBLIC WORKS—PROJECTS IN CUMBERLAND-COLCHESTER NORTH, 1971-72

Question No. 1,370—Mr. Coates:

1. What projects will the Department of Public Works initiate in Cumberland-Colchester North during the fiscal year 1971-72, in the field of (a) public buildings (b) harbour and wharf improvements?

2. What repairs will be effected by the Department of Public Works in Cumberland-Colchester North to existing structures?

3. In each instance, what is the estimated cost of the proposed work and what is the estimated completion date of either new projects or repairs to existing structures?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a)

Location	Project	Completion Date
Amherst	New Federal Building	Fall of 1972
Pugwash	Extension to Post Office	October 1971
Parrsboro	New building for Post Office and Fisheries and Forestry Departments	February 1972

(b) Nil.

Note: It is not customary to give estimated cost before a contract is awarded.

2.

Location	Project	Completion Date
Amherst	Dominion Public Building—Interior painting	July 1971
Truro	Federal Building—Waterproofing—Window Coverings	August 1971 July 1971
Brookfield	Post Office Buildings—
Maccan Port Howe Malagash Joggins	Improvements to paving	September 1971
Advocate	Wharf repairs	September 1971
Malagash	Approach repairs	September 1971
Barrachois	Approach repairs	August 1971
Port Philip	Wharf repairs	July 1971
Parrsboro	Breakwater repairs	September 1971

In addition regular ongoing repairs and maintenance to small buildings and marine facilities, involving minor expenditures, will be carried out.

Note: It is not customary to give estimated cost before a contract is awarded.

3. Answered in parts 1 and 2, above.

Order for Return

QUEBEC—RENEWAL OF ARDA AGREEMENT

Question No. 1,389—Mr. Rodrigue:

Has the ARDA agreement between the Government of Canada nd the Government of the Province of Quebec been renewed and, if not, are discussions under way on the renewal of the agreement?

[Translation]

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Discussions are virtually complete and it is expected that a new agreement will be signed shortly.

[English]

HUNTING OF POLAR BEARS

Question No. 1,401—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. For each of the past five years, how many licences for hunting of polar bears have been issued to (a) Canadian hunters (b) foreign hunters?

2. During each year, how many polar bears have been shot by (a) Canadian hunters (b) foreign hunters by country of origin?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. 1969-70 (a) six, (b) none. 1970-71 (a) one; (b) nine.

2. 1969-70 (a) six, (b) none. 1970-71 (a) none. (b) three bears taken by foreign hunters with two hunters still in the field. Country of origin of these foreign hunters is United States.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—STUDIES CONDUCTED BY DEVELOPMENT ANALYSIS SECTION

Question No. 1,409—Mr. Barnett:

With respect to the answer to Question Number 1,221 at page 5519 of Hansard, May 5, 1971, has an analysis been made for any other fiscal year or years subsequent to July 22, 1964 and (a) if so, for which fiscal year or years (b) if not, when will such an analysis be made and for what fiscal year or years?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Another such analysis has not been undertaken since July, 1964 and it is uncertain when manpower resources could be made available to carry out a similar comprehensive study.

* * *

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

VALUE OF GOVERNMENT'S REAL PROPERTY

Question No. 358—Mr. Fortin:

1. What is the value of the government's real property excluding public lands?

2. During each of the past five years, what was the value of new investments?

3. Does the management of real property come exclusively under the Department of Public Works?

4. Is there a complete inventory of government properties?

Return tabled.

[Mr. Laing.]

• (2:25 p.m.)

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

STUDY BY TIM RYAN FOR DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Motion No. 37—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by Tim Ryan, Port Arthur, Ontario, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding "Evaluation on the activities of the CNR-ILA Joint Committee at North Sydney, Nova Scotia".

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 37 is acceptable to the government.

Motion agreed to.

COMPTON CONSTITUENCY—CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO BUILDING OF POST OFFICES, ETC.

Question No. 230—Mr. Latulippe:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency, praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all briefs, correspondence and other documents exchanged between the Government of Canada and the constituency of Compton (municipalities, individuals and agencies) with respect to the building of post offices or any federal building in the said constituency since January 1, 1968 to date.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 230 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the conditions laid down by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of this House that notice of motion No. 230 be deemed to have been agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, may I ask that the remaining Notices of Motion for Papers be allowed to stand?

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining Notices of Motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order in respect of Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers Nos. 3 and 7 which have stood in my name on the order paper since October 8, 1970. I should like to inquire as to what progress, if any, is being made in the production of these documents? Surely after this length of time there should be some indication of ability to produce them.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I have made a note of the numbers and I will look into them and communicate personally with the hon. member as to our progress in this regard.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.-CANADA PROTOCOL ON CONSULTATION—CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in connection with the treaty, misnamed protocol, negotiated by the Prime Minister and the Soviet Union. Is it the intention of the government as a condition precedent to final acceptance to have this document brought before the House for discussion, debate and decision?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the agreement has not been misnamed; it is a protocol, not a treaty. I have tabled it in the House and so far as I can see it is being debated during the question period.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, will the government take the first opportunity to set aside a government day in order that this document can in fact be considered by the House?

Mr. Sharp: As I recall the situation, Mr. Speaker, there are many opposition days available on which the opposition would have plenty of time, if it wished, to discuss this or any other matter on which we would like to hear their views.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, am I to take it from the Acting Prime Minister that he is inviting the opposition to take the first opportunity on an opposition day to bring forward this matter?

Mr. Sharp: I would be delighted to hear the views of the opposition, which apparently are opposed to opening consultations with the Soviet Union on matters that have been raised in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that a debate is under way. The Chair will now recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

INQUIRY AS TO SUSPENSION OF DEVELOPMENT AID TO PAKISTAN

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the answer he gave to a question yesterday when he said that the United Kingdom and the United States of America have not suspended economic aid to Pakistan, I should like to ask whether the United Kingdom and the United States have ceased to make new commitments for economic aid to Pakistan pending a solution of the crisis in East Pakistan, and what is the Canadian government's attitude toward this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian position is that we are not entering into any new commitments but we are carrying on with those that have been made. I understand that this is more or less the general policy of all donor countries.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AID FOR REFUGEES FROM EAST PAKISTAN

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he tell us whether the government is making or planning to make any direct donation in respect of the refugees from East Pakistan now in India?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I said in answer to a question yesterday, I hope before the week is out to be able to announce the amount of our contribution.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ACTION TO RESTRAIN ROLLED STEEL PRICE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Can he inform the House whether the government had any prior information in respect of the rolled steel price increases announced today, and can he indicate whether any effort was made a priori to bring about some restraint on this increase which I believe amounts to over 4 per cent?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was personally not informed and so far as I know my colleagues were not. I would have to check, however, to ascertain whether I can speak for all my colleagues in this regard.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance or some other member of the cabinet can indicate whether any representation has been made as of today by way of a formal response from the government to the companies—I believe three major Canadian companies are involved—concerning whether the increases are justified? Also, has the government taken a position on the announced increases?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the information just came to my attention this morning that there were proposals for increases in July. At present my department is taking a look at the matter, and I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, will also be taking a look at it.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will make tomorrow or on Friday a statement in the House giving the official response of the government toward these increases?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Prices and Incomes Commission has a general responsibility to look at price increases of this kind. I will ascertain from my colleague, when he returns from the consumers' conference he is attending today, whether he would like to supplement the answer that has been given in the House today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

PURPOSE OF TRIP BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE TO LONDON

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Could he advise the House whether the Justice Minister's trip to London is designed to have the Westminster government accept a Canadian resolution concerning the repatriation of our constitution?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I could answer that question with a simple yes or no, but I can confirm that the Minister of Justice is in London to talk about the procedure which would be followed in bringing the Canadian constitution to Canada, which I hope will be accomplished.

* * *

[Translation]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

STUDY OF FORMULA TO AMEND CONSTITUTION—UNANIMITY OF PROVINCES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I wish to direct to the Acting Prime Minister.

Could he tell this House, considering a lack of consensus on the part of the provinces on the new amending formula, whether the federal government has decided to delete from the Victoria conference agenda any consideration of the amending formula, in such a way that the discussions would deal only with the repatriation of the Canadian constitution?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not my understanding that the differences among the provinces and the federal government are such that they would interfere with the accomplishment of a fundamental reform of the constitution. The Canadian government is proceeding on the basis that there is a wish and, indeed, a desire to accomplish this fundamental reform that was discussed at the last meeting.

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN DATE BECAUSE OF SASKATCHEWAN ELECTION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, will the announcement that an election is to take place in Saskatchewan on June 23 mean a change in the date of the meeting to discuss constitutional amendment which is scheduled for Victoria on June 14?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I think the conference will proceed as planned.

[Mr. Sharp.]

DRUGS

DISPENSING OF VITAMIN PREPARATIONS BY PRESCRIPTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare based upon his statement earlier on motions that his department seeks to reduce the cost of prescription drugs. Are any plans afoot within his department to place vitamin preparations on a prescription basis?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not that I am aware of, Mr. Speaker, but I will check into it.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): When the minister is checking into that, will he also check to see whether any representations have been made to that end and inform us from whom representations have been received?

* * *

[Translation]

GRAIN

BARLEY—ALLEGED HIGHER PRICE TO EASTERN FARMERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The Canadian Wheat Board is said to have recently sold for export 100,000 tons of feed barley at a price of 93 cents a bushel, F.O.B. Churchill, and my question is: Why do Eastern Canada cattle farmers always have to buy their feed barley at a price higher than that set by the Canadian Wheat Board for export purposes?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would want to take that question as notice to ascertain the facts. It is not normal to comment on the sale price of a particular sale of barley. Of course, from time to time prices do vary on the basis of different ports and destinations, and transportation costs to the interior of Canada are certainly different from those simply out of Churchill.

* * *

INDUSTRY

FOREST PRODUCTS, CHEMICALS—DETERIORATING FINANCIAL POSITION—BUDGET ACTION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister become aware, and, if so, has he advised his fellow cabinet members, of the worsening position in the Canadian forest products industry which this year has seen a further decline in profits of some 90 per cent, the position of lumber firms and the chemical industry, and the tremendous decline in Canada's basic industries, all contributing to unemployment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had representations from the Canadian forest industry, particularly the pulp and paper industry which is having a very difficult time at present as is the pulp and paper industry thoughout the world. The profits of the United States pulp and paper industry went down by one-third in the first quarter of this year.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, concerning Canadian industry and Canadian employment, is the minister going to take positive measures in his budget to reverse this particular trend?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say what action I intend to take in the budget. I can say I have had representations from the pulp and paper industry.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

REFUSAL TO PAY RANSOM MONEY TO KIDNAPPERS OF LATE PIERRE LAPORTE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice who has been away a number of days—I make nothing of that—I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Last week I asked a question of the Minister of Justice in reference to an alleged statement by Jacques Sauriol that the Canadian government had knowledge that a ransom was paid for the release of Mr. Cross and that the federal government acquiesced and knew about it but at the same time refused the same kind of remedy in reference to the late Mr. Laporte. I have a letter to that effect and since allegations have been made at a press conference by Mr. Sauriol I would hope the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity of Secretary of State for External Affairs would now set the record straight.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to set the record straight. If the hon. gentleman could let me look at the letter I would endeavour to have an answer for him as soon as possible.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been hanging around for the last six or seven days and I am sure it has been brought to the attention of the Acting Prime Minister. Surely he can answer the question now. Did the government have knowledge that a ransom was paid for the release of Mr. Cross by any power or group of people and the same action was refused on behalf of the late Mr. Laporte?

Mr. Sharp: The answer to the question is no, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

PAUL MANEY LABORATORIES—ACTION TO PREVENT SALE TO FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It arises from the welcome statement he made today about the availability of generic drugs in Canada. In view of the minister's program and the need to maintain a viable, healthy Canadian generic drug industry, is it his intention to look into the situation of Paul Maney Laboratories and prevent its sale to foreign interests?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not consider that aspect of the problem to be a direct responsibility of my department but rather a problem to be looked at by the entire government.

Mr. Saltsman: Is the minister giving consideration to the establishment of a Crown corporation for the manufacture of drugs in Canada?

Mr. Munro: Not at this time, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

POST OFFICE

LAST DAILY PICK-UP OF MAIL IN CITIES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is addressed to the Postmaster General soon to be. I have given him notice of it. Does the Post Office intend to continue the 3 p.m. pick-up of mail in major cities as the latest hour of daily pick-up, or will this controversial program be dropped?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the time of mail pick-up has been changed in several important cities in order that we may ensure a better delivery service. We are also asking our clients to put their mail in the boxes earlier in order to improve the service.

[English]

SUGGESTED LOWER POSTAL RATES FOR CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): I should like to ask the minister responsible for the Post Office whether he has received representations and whether he is giving any thought to lowering postage rates for charitable organizations in view of the many representations that have been made in this regard?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have received only one request on behalf of three different organizations and although we are considering it now, I must say that I am not very optimistic.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEWSTART PROGRAM, THE PAS, MANITOBA—APPOINTMENT OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS AND ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It relates to the Newstart program at The Pas, Manitoba. In view of the reported $1 million budget for this project and in view of the fact that little or nothing is being done for lack of a mandate, can the minister say when the board of directors will be appointed and moneys allotted in order that projects can be commenced?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, will you allow me to take at least part of this question as notice and I will give an answer to the hon. member. It is sufficient for me to say at this time that the Newstart program is also under the jurisdiction of the provincial government and that from now on the latter will have to be requested to make appointments.

* * *

NATIONAL DISASTERS

SAINT JEAN-VIANNEY—FEDERAL AID TO VICTIMS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, could the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the government intends to take any action in order to help the victims of Saint Jean-Vianney, Lac-Saint-Jean, and what will be its contribution?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): My colleagues have informed me that we are now in touch with the provincial government and discussing how best the federal government can help.

* * *

GRAIN

WHEAT—EXPORT POSITION IF GREAT BRITAIN ENTERS EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I would like him to let the farmers of Canada know, particularly the wheat farmers, what the situation is expected to be in reference to the reduction of wheat exports if Great Britain enters the European Common Market?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Not only is the question a hypothetical one but it is obviously highly speculative as well. The British Minister of Agriculture indicated a year ago in conversation with me that he expected no significant diminution in the requirements of Great Britain for the quality of wheat which is grown by Canada and can be supplied by Canada and several of its competitors, and therefore our access for that particular grain should be relatively assured. However, the broader question of the implications for coarse grains is quite a different matter since they are available within the Common Market itself on occasion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My question is directed to the subject matter of wheat and it is no longer a speculative situation. Has the Wheat Board made any estimate as to the reduction in wheat exports to the United Kingdom should Britain enter the Common Market as is now apparently beyond question?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it will continue to be the Wheat Board's objective to maximize our exports of wheat by maintaining the best of relations with customers such as the United Kingdom and also such as the Soviet Union, if I may mention it in passing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder whether the minister would give Parliament the information that is apparently available outside. Does he know that Mr. Gibbings, his friend and supporter who is now on the Wheat Board, has said within the last few days that there will be substantial reduction in exports of wheat to the United Kingdom? Has he not told the minister that?

Mr. Lang: I believe I have read the same press reports as the right hon. gentleman. I notice that the press reports referred to coarse grains without very much specification.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am speaking of wheat. So that there will be no misunderstanding, I am asking about wheat. I am not asking about flaxseed or any other seeds or grains. What about wheat? Let us have an answer from the minister.

Mr. Lang: I think it is true that I have answered very fully both with regard to wheat and to other things about which the right hon. gentleman chose not to ask.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister did not answer about wheat. The minister does not know; the Wheat Board does not tell him.

[Later:]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Is it not a fact that if Great Britain enters the European Common Market the tariff on grain going into that country from Canada will be increased from $68 a ton?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member has put his question in an argumentative manner when he says "is it not a fact" that such and such will result from an action. I do not think that a question asked in those terms is in order. He might wish to rephrase the question.

Mr. Horner: Indeed, I would like to rephrase my question. Will there be an increase in the tariff on grain going into Great Britain if that country joins the European Common Market, and how much will that increase be?

Mr. Lang: The situation as it may develop in future years is of course not known at this point. The situation at present in so far as it is known at this time was indicated clearly in the statement I made to the House some time ago. I will send the hon. member the page reference in Hansard in a moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He does not know.

[Later:]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): In light of the reply the minister in charge of the Wheat Board made earlier to the right hon. member for Prince Albert about the conversations he had with the British Minister of Agriculture and the assurance that there would be no reduction in high grade wheat exports to the United Kingdom, I should like to ask the minister two things: first, can he get that in writing or has he got it in writing and, second, what if any negotiations or meetings are going on now between the government or the Canadian Wheat Board with the British government in terms of maintaining or protecting not only wheat but all grain sales when Britain joins the Common Market?

Mr. Lang: The shortest answer is that two of the commissioners of the Canadian Wheat Board have recently been in London discussing our wheat market with our principal buyers there en route to discussing markets with other people in other places in Europe.

INQUIRY AS TO SALES TO JAPAN

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, can the minister responsible for the Wheat Board tell the House whether Canada was successful in making any sales in response to the bids that Japan opened on May 19?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I believe that we were in regard to both wheat and barley, although I must say that my recollection of the information may be with regard to a different date and I will want to check that to be certain.

SALE OF LOW-GRADE WHEAT TO UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I should like to ask the minister responsible for the Wheat Board whether, in view of a report in the Winnipeg Free Press that Canada did not have quantities of low-grade wheat so that it could make sales to the United Arab Republic, a survey was made of the quantities of low-grade wheat on the farms which would justify this statement?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I can give the flat assurance to the hon. member that no sale to the U.A.R. was lost because of any lack of low-grade wheat, and I can assure the hon. member that that report in the Winnipeg Free Press is about equivalent to the other kinds of reports they are giving these days such as in regard to C-176—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROPOSED RATIONALIZATION—POSITION OF DE HAVILLAND COMPANY AND WORKERS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My question is for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. In view of the proposed rationalization of the aircraft industry and its importance to Canada, will the minister consider giving the House a progress report on this subject?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that at the earliest possible moment. Talks are going on now and I hope to undertake others in London and Paris within the next few days. Perhaps upon my return from those I shall be able to say something definitive.

Mr. Ryan: In view of the unemployment situation in Toronto would the minister give an undertaking that the work force at de Havilland will not be reduced as a result of this proposed rationalization and that the undertaking at de Havilland will not be removed from the province of Ontario?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the whole objective of the program and the exercise is to ensure the viability of all elements within the aerospace industry. Certainly my objective is not to have one element of it improve at the expense of another.

* * *

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—ESTABLISHMENT OF PORT AUTHORITY

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): My question is for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. In view of some questions raised in the public mind about the future of the port of Montreal I should like to ask the minister whether he could inform the House when a port authority for Montreal will be established?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): It is my intention to consult with the various bodies within the port of Montreal during the next couple of weeks, Mr. Speaker, and to name the port authority for it and for other major ports in Canada hopefully before the end of June.

[Later:]

Mr. Watson: I wonder if the minister could also assure the House that the port authority which he announced will be created soon will be empowered to take local initiatives such as a cargo flow study and a land use study for the port of Montreal?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We would propose to give it the maximum amount of autonomy consistent with the act. One of the main objectives for Montreal, as elsewhere, would be not only to undertake forecasts but the promotion of the port to maintain Montreal as one of the most vital elements in our port system.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH

POSSIBLE DANGER FROM USE OF AEROSOL UNDERARM SPRAYS—ACTION TO BAN PRODUCTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement recently made at a meeting of the American Thoracic Society that the use of aerosol-type sprays as underarm deodorants may cause lung lesions and may be potentially dangerous to patients with cardiac or respiratory diseases, what steps is the government taking to ban the two commercial brands that have been identified by researchers?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that the Food and Drug Directorate is looking into this matter and I shall advise the House of the results of the study.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXTENSION OF SERVICE FOR SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): My question is for the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether, as a result of representations that have been made, any decision has been taken yet on a further extension of service by unemployment insurance offices in southwestern Ontario? If so, could we be furnished with a list of the locations?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his question and would ask that I be permitted to table the answer or perhaps have it printed as an answer to a written question as it is rather detailed. I am prepared to outline all the specific locations across the country.

* * *

[Translation]

SPORTS

MONTREAL—OLYMPIC GAMES—DISCUSSION BETWEEN MINISTER AND MAYOR OF MONTREAL

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Could he tell us what was the subject of the talks he had yesterday with the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Drapeau? Were there any mention of decisions about the 1976 Olympic Games and what were these decisions?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that no decisions were taken. It was more a question of exploring the avenues of what the mayor and his organizing committee were doing relative to the Olympic Games in Montreal in 1976, and how some of these activities would relate to the fitness and amateur sport program, set out in a document which I forwarded to all members some time ago, in terms of the sports activities that the federal government is encouraging.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the minister.

I would like to ask him, since he intends to intervene in the matter of sports and recreation, whether before taking a decision he has or will ask the advice of the provincial authorities in order not to interfere in a provincial jurisdictional field, while providing some assistance to the City of Montreal as far as the Olympic Games are concerned?

[English]

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, all the activities undertaken by the fitness and amateur sports directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare are co-ordinated very well, and have been on an ongoing basis since the program's inception, with the provinces. That co-ordination takes place with the province of Quebec as it does with other provinces.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of National Health and Welfare just spoke of the performance of the physical fitness and amateur sport branch since its inception. Is the minister aware that this program was initiated in 1960, almost 11 years ago and not the two or three years he mentioned yesterday when the administrative centre was being opened?

* * *

POLLUTION

ENFORCEMENT OF LIMITATION ON PHOSPHATE CONTENT IN DETERGENTS—COMPLETE ABOLITION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker. In view of the recent relaxation of similar legislation in the United States, is the Canadian law limiting phosphate content to 20 per cent in detergents and household cleaners being strictly enforced to keep products containing above the percentage off the grocery shelves?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this responsibility is now being administered by the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, soon to be minister of the environment. To the best of my knowledge the Canadian regulations made effective last August are being strictly enforced, but I undertake to check and if that is not correct I shall let the House know.

Mrs. MacInnis: May I ask the minister what date has been set for the complete ban from the market in Canada of detergents and household cleaners containing phosphates?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the date was originally January 1, 1972, but I will undertake again to confirm that for the hon. member.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Now that the provincial election has been announced in Saskatchewan, has Premier Thatcher given permission to the federal government to call a by-election in the federal constituency of Assiniboia?

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING COMPANY AND EMPLOYEES—STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is there any break in the strike at the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company at Flin Flon? Has the Department of Labour a representative on the scene or are they, like the maid at the ball, sitting around waiting to be asked?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): We have had a mediator involved for several months, Mr. Speaker. There is no break in the strike, but I understand that negotiations or discussions are going on at this moment between the various unions involved.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CENSUS

NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED ENGAGED FOR CENSUS-TAKING

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since 42,000 persons have been hired for the census, could the Acting Prime Minister tell us how many among them were really unemployed?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking the minister concerned to give some statistics. I think that the question could easily be put on the order paper.

* * *

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST BY MEMBER OF ARGENTIA TASK FORCE THAT CHAIRMAN RESIGN

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): My question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House what action he has taken in response to representations made to his department and the Minister of Transport that the chairman of the Argentia task force be asked to resign on the basis that he misled the committee and that he has failed to function?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Unfortunately I did not get the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Carter: I will repeat it. I am asking the minister what action he has taken on the representations made to his department and to the Department of Transport requesting that the chairman of the Argentia task force be asked to resign?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

TRANSPORT

IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT ON COASTING TRADE—FEDERALLY SPONSORED MARINE INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Now that we have had a chance to digest the very comprehensive Darling report on shipping, will the minister take this opportunity to express his determination to proceed with this very well received report, and what does he envisage as the government's timetable for parts of it?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the object in tabling the report was to invite comment. I welcome the opportunity to indicate that I will be glad to hear representations from anyone with an interest in the report. I agree that it is a "Darling" report. We will do our very best to implement as quickly as possible those parts of it which seem to have public favour.

Mr. Bell: As one old dear to another, will the minister say what he is going to do about a federally sponsored marine insurance program, which is mentioned as something the government should proceed with as soon as possible?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, in anticipation of the report and prior to its publication I had already made representations to the insurance industry, particularly in the United Kingdom. One of the alternatives we put before them was the possibility of some form of sponsored insurance in the event that their rates did not become more reasonable. I hope that we will be able to work out one or other of these alternatives.

* * *

OIL

PROPOSED TANKER ROUTE BETWEEN ALASKA AND STATE OF WASHINGTON—OFFICIAL EXPRESSION OF CANADIAN OPPOSITION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of information that the United States government will bring down a decision in the near future regarding the trans-Alaska pipeline, will this government take a firm, official stand now and express to the United States government our opposition to any proposed oil tanker route which might be set up off our west coast from Alaska to the state of Washington?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I have said many times in the House, officials of the government met with officials of the United States government to express our concern about the ecological dangers of this route. I expect to have another opportunity on June 10 of making the same point to my opposite number in the United States.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to try to flush out the Acting Prime Minister on this question. Would he tell us the reaction of the United States to this submission, and on what studies was his submission based? We have gone into this matter previously. Upon what study was the submission based, and what was the reaction of the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we are as expert as anyone else in the world on the ecological dangers of oil spills in the ocean. We have had to clean some up.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, if we have to rely on this expert, God help us!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Flush again.

* * *

HEALTH

ABNORMAL TURNOVER OF STAFF AT CHARLES CAMSELL HOSPITAL ALLEGEDLY CAUSED BY DEPARTMENTAL INTERFERENCE IN OPERATION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the interference by the minister and his department in the operation of the Charles Camsell Hospital in Edmonton, is the minister aware that this has caused a wholesale hiring and firing of staff and has reduced the efficiency of qualified personnel in fulfilling their duties?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not aware, Mr. Speaker, that it has had that type of result at all. In fact, I disagree with many of the conclusions of the hon. member.

Mr. Paproski: Are you disclaiming responsibility for your department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I point out to the hon. member that questions should be addressed to the Chair.

[Mr. Harding.]

* * *

[Translation]

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—TIME REQUIRED TO APPROVE PROJECTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State.

Following many requests made by young people who submitted projects under the Opportunities for Youth program, may I ask the parliamentary secretary how much time is needed between the submission of a project and its approval?

[English]

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, probably a more relevant piece of information that I might offer to the House is that all projects which are approved will be notified before the end of this week.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

As time is of the essence, are the interested parties notified by telegram or by telephone?

[English]

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, they will get the answer by telegram.

* * *

HEALTH

CURTAILMENT OF SHARED-COST PROGRAM EXPENDITURES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the federal government be putting forward concrete proposals at the current dominion-provincial health ministers conference designed to curtail the rising costs of shared-cost programs, especially hospitalization and medical care, which in the view of Premier Thatcher are impairing his province's ability to finance other necessary expenditures?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

FINANCE

PROVINCIAL BORROWING IN UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It deals with the provinces going to the United States in order to borrow money. I ask the minister whether he accepts the accusation that federal policies are forcing the provinces to increase their borrowings in United States money markets? If so, is it the policy of the government to encourage further provincial borrowings in the United States?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the question. We are certainly not encouraging the provinces to borrow in the United States.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the concern expressed by the treasurer of Ontario that federal borrowing policies are now leaving little room for the provinces and municipalities to borrow in the Canadian market, is the minister prepared to meet the other two levels of government and agree upon a co-operative use of the Canadian money market?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think the treasurer of Ontario did not fully understand the situation when he made that remark.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the confusion with respect to priorities in this country regarding the constitution or economic policies, would the minister use his influence to flip-flop what the Acting Prime Minister has said in order to make certain that economic policies are dealt with at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference?

An hon. Member: That is mostly a flop.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

* * *

POST OFFICE

EXTENSION OF NEW POSTAL CODE SYSTEM TO OTHER AREAS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the soon-to-be Postmaster General.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the hon. gentleman say how soon the new postal code system will be extended to other areas in Canada so that those who receive letters from us will not be mystified by the six-character code that we put on our letters?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we had to start with one city. We started with Ottawa. Studies are being conducted throughout the country and soon all cities will be codified.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRESENCE OF JAPANESE VESSELS FISHING FOR SALMON OFF GREENLAND

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he say whether the department has any evidence that at the moment a number of Japanese vessels are fishing for salmon off Greenland on the high seas, along with the Danes, and that this is the first evidence of the presence of fishing vessels of Japan in that part of the world?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the intelligence.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister has acquired some intelligence because he is in dire need of it. Would he take the question under advisement, no matter where the intelligence came from? Would he investigate the probability of the presence of Japanese fishing vessels and seriously and sensibly make an official Canadian response to this very serious and chronic problem?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I always consider very carefully what the hon. gentleman says.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1970

PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION, MINISTRIES OF STATE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES, ETC.

On the order:

May 25, 1971—Third reading of Bill C-207, an act respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.—the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Mr. Mackasey, for Mr. Drury, seconded by Mr. Richardson, moves that Bill C-207, an act respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be now read the third time and do pass.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the minister is in the House, why was the motion not moved in his name?

Mr. Speaker: The point is well taken. The Chair did not notice the presence of the learned and distinguished minister. Perhaps the record might be amended to indicate that the motion is put in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), seconded by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, speaking to the same point of order, perhaps the record ought to show that the bill stands in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Speaker: I am sure hon. members recognize that the bill stands in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and not in the name of the minister moving the motion.

Government Organization Act, 1970

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-207, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the third time and do pass.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, when the bill was in committee of the whole a number of amendments were moved which resulted in fairly extensive debate. One of these amendments was subsequently withdrawn because the government decided to meet us part way with regard to the clause dealing with the new department of the environment.

We expressed fears that the downgrading of the Department of Fisheries in this manner would have very serious consequences on the fishing industry in Canada, particularly the thousands of Canadians who are dependent upon that industry for their livelihood. To give meaning to our fears we moved a number of amendments, one of which was to set up two deputy ministers under the new department of the environment, one of whom would have responsibility for the fishing industry: he would be designated as the deputy minister of fisheries in the same way as the two deputy ministers in the Department of National Health and Welfare—one is designated as the deputy minister of health and the other is designated as the deputy minister of welfare.

This amendment was rejected by the government and subsequently debated in committee of the whole. However, the government decided to bring in an amendment indicating that the Minister of the Environment shall be the Minister of Fisheries; in other words, designating that there shall continue to be a Minister of Fisheries. A clause to this effect was inserted in the bill by the committee.

At that time I argued, as did the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that if you are to have a Minister of Fisheries it is necessary to have a consequential amendment to clause 4 of the bill to provide for a deputy minister of fisheries. It would be virtually the same amendment. In other words, we would indicate that the deputy minister of the environment would be the deputy minister of fisheries.

I find it difficult to understand why the government would reject this suggestion or why they did not incorporate it in their amendment in the first instance. It seems logical that one follows the other. It would help substantially to alleviate our fears for the future of the fishing industry, particularly with regard to the attention the industry will receive under the new departmental set-up.

We believe the bill now before the House is an improved bill. It is a better bill as a result of the debate which took place in committee of the whole. It is not nearly as repugnant to us in so far as the fishing industry is concerned. We would have liked "Fisheries" incorporated in the title of the department. This is what we set out to do by our amendment. Our amendment sought to change the proposed title from "Department of the Environment" to "Department of Fisheries and the Environment." However, we are reasonably happy that there will continue to be a Minister of Fisheries.

For the same reasons we believe there should continue to be a deputy minister of fisheries. I reject out of hand the argument put forward by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), that in order for there to be a deputy minister of fisheries there has to be a department of fisheries. This is not so, because the bill which sets up new ministers of state will also set up the equivalent of deputy ministers. They will be called secretaries, but they will be deputy ministers. They will not have the responsibility of presiding over a department of government in the traditional sense. I do not think that argument holds water.

When you examine the new departmental organization of the proposed department of the environment, the idea of having a deputy minister of fisheries makes all the more sense. Under the new departmental set-up the department will be presided over by a minister. Under him will be a deputy minister who will presumably be the deputy minister of the environment. Under him will be a senior assistant deputy minister. Under him will be seven assistant deputy ministers. One of these seven assistant deputy ministers will have responsibility for what will henceforth be known as the fisheries division. He is not even the first among equals.

Under the departmental set-up the first assistant deputy will be the assistant deputy minister in charge of atmospheric environment, then the assistant deputy minister of fisheries, who will be chairman of the fisheries research board, then the assistant deputy minister of lands, forests and wildlife, the assistant deputy minister of water management, the assistant deputy minister of environmental protection, the assistant deputy minister of finance and administration, and the assistant deputy minister of policy planning and research. We do not think that is good enough. We believe that heretofore the Department of Fisheries and Forestry has been a full-time job. It required the attention of a full-time minister, deputy minister, assistant deputy ministers, the services of approximately 13,000 civil servants and a budget in excess of $200 million.

Surely the government would be the last to suggest that because of this change in organization and the establishment of this new department the importance of the present Department of Fisheries and Forestry will diminish. However, that is what is implied by the refusal of the government to accept our argument that in addition to continuing to have a minister designated as Minister the same argument can be applied to continuing to have a deputy minister of fisheries. It is a simple matter of accepting the same principle. In committee of the whole we accepted and embodied that principle by an amendment to the bill providing that the Minister of the Environment shall be the Minister of Fisheries. It is logical and consequential that the deputy minister of the environment shall be the deputy minister of fisheries.

Why the government refused to accept that suggestion is difficult, if not impossible to understand, especially in light of the importance of this department and the fact that it has existed as a department of government since 1868. As a matter of fact, the department of marine and fisheries, as it was then known, was established on May 22, 1868. It has continued to exist as a vital and important part of government ever since.

• (3:20 p.m.)

It is interesting to reflect that if there had not been a department of marine and fisheries, confederation would probably not have taken place: New Brunswick and Nova Scotia would have been reluctant to join the new federation without grounds for believing that this important industry would be protected by an established department.

There have been a number of occasions on which the department has been changed as a result of organizational bills put forward by governments. Changes were made in the thirties, and during the fifties under the distinguished government of my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Changes were made under the government of Mr. Lester Pearson. But none of these changes affected the basic structure of the department, which had as its primary responsibility jurisdiction over the fishing industry in Canada. This has always been implied in the name of the department.

Therefore we feel a sound argument can be put forward in favour of the government accepting the proposition that the deputy minister of the environment should be known as the deputy minister of fisheries, just as hon. members opposite accepted the argument that the Minister of the Environment should also be designated by statute as the Minister of Fisheries. For these reasons I intend to move the following amendment:

That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Bill C-207 be not now read a third time but be referred back to committee of the whole with an instruction to amend clause 4 thereof by adding thereto, next after line 3 on page 2 thereof, the following:

"(2) Upon appointment, the deputy minister of the Environment shall be the deputy minister of fisheries."

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the amendment moved by my hon. friend from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) in the firm belief that the substance of the amendment should be accepted by those on the government side if they wish to be consistent in their thinking. They have already accepted an amendment that the Minister of the Environment shall also be the Minister of Fisheries, and it seems obvious to me that the deputy minister of the environment should also be the deputy minister of fisheries.

According to a memorandum which was submitted to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, the fishing industry will now come under the authority of an assistant deputy minister—one of six assistant deputy ministers responsible to a senior assistant deputy minister and a deputy minister. My hon. friend from St. John's East gave a complete resumé of the way in which authority is divided. It is evident to those of us who have studied this memorandum that fisheries problems are way down the ladder. We are too low on the totem pole. We think the rating now contemplated is not good enough. I submit that the present rating of importance attached to the fishing industry by the government is not in keeping with the importance of the industry to Atlantic Canada and to the nation as a whole.

Some may wonder why we who represent constituencies in Atlantic Canada have taken such a strong position on this matter. The answer is, of course, that our Atlantic and, for that matter, our Pacific coastal areas contain some of the world's most prolific fishing grounds. A significant part of our national development has been associated with fisheries and as a result fisheries considerations have always been important in the formulation of Canada's international and domestic policies. Canada is a party to nine international fisheries conventions aimed at the study and management of various fisheries on both our coasts and in the Great Lakes. In addition, we have signed bilateral agreements with the United States and the U.S.S.R. concerning the fishing activities of those nations off our shores.

Unfortunately, the development of international law has failed to keep pace with the realities of the operations of modern fishing fleets. The prolific fishing grounds which first attracted European settlers to our shores have since proved a magnet for the modern fishing fleets of the world to a point at which some species have been fished beyond their maximum sustainable yield and others are, unfortunately, past the point of recovery. This is the situation on the extensive fishing grounds off our east coast.

Our experience in multination fisheries management has shown that the fewer nations involved in the management of a fishery, the better are the chances of good management. We also know that the fewer nations involved, the better are our chances of meeting the needs of our fishermen and of our fishing industry. It is for these reasons we have advocated that the coastal state should possess jurisdiction over the living resources of the continental shelf. We can support this claim because most of the commercially valuable species are associated with the continental shelf, and because the ownership of resources on and under the seabed of the continental shelf is accepted by international law as residing in the coastal state. So what I propose would be a logical extension of international law.

I realize that jurisdiction over these living resources would carry with it responsibility for management. Whenever these resources were under exploited or not exploited at all by the coastal state, other nations could be permitted to exploit them; but they would always be subject to the conservation regulations of the coastal state. A policy of this type would serve the interests of Canada's fishing industry, with one important exception. This exception involves the anadromous species—those which spend part of their life at sea and part in fresh water. In respect of this species, especially Atlantic and Pacific salmon, we must secure universal agreement on the proposition that salmon, for instance, belong to the nation in whose territory they spend their freshwater stage. We must also secure agreement not to fish for salmon on the high seas.

I believe most of these problems can be worked out, especially between Canada and the United States with whom we share similar views in respect to the conservation and ownership of fisheries resources. But these matters call for greater attention from the Canadian government than is presently being given to them. They call for action by the Department of External Affairs, which to date has not shown the required interest in our thorny fishing problems.

In fact, I believe that the international aspect of the fishing industry will in the next few years become more complicated, more demanding of both government and industry, than has been the case in the past.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Canada, for example, puts great stock in the next Law of the Sea conference. I hope—and I know I express the hope of the entire fishing industry of Canada—that this conference will result in agreement that the coastal states should have jurisdiction over and responsibility for the management of the fisheries resources of the continental shelf and slope. I also hope that the conference will produce agreement to ban high seas fishing for salmon.

There will be a considerable time lag between the Law of the Sea conference meetings and the time its decisions will be accepted into international law, and during that time there will be bilateral and multilateral discussions and agreements which will be absolutely necessary in order to deal with the urgent problems of conservation and national interest.

Some of our stocks, as I mentioned previously, are already in trouble—stocks of groundfish such as haddock, herring, hake, yellowtail and redfish. To lose these species due to government delay in implementing conservation measures at the international level is frustrating and frightening to our fishermen. Even more frustrating is the known fact that our salmon stocks are wide open to foreign exploitation on the high seas.

I believe that we must have a thoughtful and coordinated approach to international fisheries matters. I believe this calls for planning, for expertise in fisheries and in carrying out negotiations. I believe these problems call for the full-time attention of an adequate number of highly trained people. At the moment we have a three-man international section in the fisheries department which I understand is fully occupied representing Canada in some of the nine international conventions to which we belong and in handling the day to day paper work relating to international agreements. We have a deputy minister and an assistant deputy minister in that department who devote part of their time to international commissions. The Department of External Affairs has a three-man team in its legal section assigned to fisheries matters, but not all their time is devoted to this subject. Obviously, this is not enough. The field being covered has grown so fast that the limited number of personnel cannot do justice to their work.

[Mr. Crouse.]

It is for these reasons that the hon. member for St. John's East has moved his amendment, and it is for these reasons that I support the amendment. If in the past, the staffs of the fisheries department and the Department of External Affairs have not been able to bring about agreement or to bring to fruition some of the conventions established by the 1958 Law of the Sea conference; they have not been able to establish the regulations drawn up in the 1964 Fishing Zones and Territorial Sea regulations passed by this House. We have been unable to get any action from the existing staffs of the Department of External Affairs and the fisheries department. Therefore, I ask the minister how we can expect to have any action taken at this time, having regard to the law of diminishing returns with which we are faced in this regard. We are seeing less attention given to the fishing industry at a time when its problems are mounting and it requires more, not less, attention.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge the minister to give careful consideration to the amendment that has been moved, for I believe that by accepting it this government will be consistent in its thinking on this bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, for the main remarks that I wish to make on third reading of this bill I prefer to wait until the present amendment has been dealt with. However, since the amendment is before us I should like to indicate our support for it. It may be that what we are requesting is just a bit of tokenism, but sometimes even tokenism can be significant.

The amendment before us asks, in slightly different words, for the same thing that we asked for in our amendment at committee of the whole stage last night. The government has agreed to designate the Minister of the Environment as Minister of Fisheries for Canada. It is understood that there is to be an assistant deputy minister of fisheries. We think there is a missing link and that things ought not to stay that way. We think there ought to be a deputy minister of fisheries and that it is appropriate also to designate the deputy minister of the environment as deputy minister of fisheries. Therefore, when the vote is called on this amendment we shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly to support the amendment put forward by my colleague for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I support it basically for the same reason as he. The fishing industry is vital to a large segment of our population. Indeed, in the province of Newfoundland alone, approximately 25 per cent of the population are directly affected by the fishing industry. Therefore I commend my colleague and support his endeavour to have a deputy minister named for the new department.

I realize that a concession has been made in that in the first instance it was not the government's intention to have a Minister of Fisheries in the new department. However, I am not quite satisfied thus far. Like my colleagues, I fear that by passing this bill the fishing industry of Canada, especially of eastern Canada, will lose a lot of its importance in the eyes of the government.

The fishing industry of Newfoundland, indeed of eastern Canada, is facing a very severe crisis. Yesterday we had the privilege of listening to an official from the Newfoundland Fish Trade Council who was appearing before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and presenting a report both alarming and frightening, especially to those of us who realize the importance of the fishing industry to this part of Canada. In fact, the fishing industry is in very serious danger of becoming depleted to the point where it will become uneconomic and it will not be a feasible proposition to engage in the industry.

With a full-time minister in the present department a number of blunders have been made that have reflected on the fishermen of eastern Canada; and I am wondering what will happen when the affairs of the fishing industry are administered just by an assistant deputy minister who at the same time will have other responsibilities. I fear that the importance of the industry will be pushed into the background to such an extent that it will be only a matter of time before the fishing industry will not have too much say in government.

It is for this reason that I support the amendment moved by my colleague. I repeat that the fishing industry is important to Canada, especially to eastern Canada, and we are concerned that a deputy minister of fisheries be appointed to look after the affairs of the industry.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, we endorse the principal point of the amendment and indeed tried to do the same thing during committee stage last evening. I think it should be realized that to those members interested in fisheries matters, the question of giving some emphasis to fisheries is just as important as grain growing is to members who come from the Prairies, and their interests should be given equal consideration and legislative reflection.

• (3:40 p.m.)

We are going to move the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) to the new position of Minister of the Environment. In considering that move I do not think any of us can escape flavouring our views with consideration of the actions of the person who now holds the office of Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. I for one, along with many fishermen, have very grave doubts about the true concerns of the minister. We have grave doubts about the ability of the minister because he has certain blind spots in his make-up which prevent him from properly dealing with fisheries problems as they arise from time to time. The experience we have gained since he has been minister lead us to doubt whether he will be able to represent the interests of fisheries and fishermen in the years to come, particularly when we realize that this obligation on the part of the minister is to become secondary to his obligations as Minister of the Environment.

The minister has left the impression of having a high degree of arrogance in his make-up. He tends to be dictatorial in his position, rather than democratic. He tends to give the impression of not caring too much about the effects of the policy he advocates on individual fishermen and communities. He has tried to substitute propaganda and press releases for action itself.

In the Prince Rupert Daily News of May 17 there is a reproduction of parts of a letter the minister sent to the diocesan Bishop of Caledonia, the Reverend Hambidge of Prince Rupert, who had written the minister expressing concern about the institution by the department of a program in Prince Rupert, and in a number of small communities around there, briefly referred to as the "Licence limitations program in the salmon fisheries". Reverend Bishop Hambidge in his letter condemned the minister's plans for overhauling the fishing industry as one which would ruin the small fisherman and benefit big business. We must remember that Bishop Hambidge was relating his remarks to his concern for people who live their lives in the fishing industry and provide for their families as a result of the industry. Part of the minister's response was as follows:

> Apparently you are ignorant of many of the facts involved in this case.

Then he stated, as quoted in the article:

> As it is, it is so full of inaccuracies and rumours that I am tempted to ignore it entirely. I cannot do this because it contains several untruths.

The minister then proceeded in a rather arrogant way to lecture the bishop on the content of his letter. All the bishop did was reflect the concern individual fishermen have about the effect of this proposed licensing limitation program. If this were an isolated incident, perhaps one could overlook it; one might think that in the spirit of the moment and out of frustration the bishop dashed off such a letter without consideration. This is not the only letter that has been sent to the minister.

On April 7 the Prince Rupert Fishermen's Co-operative Association wrote the minister a 2½-page letter pleading with him to engage in what they classified as a "sociological study to complement the economic studies made by Professor Sinclair some years ago into a licence limitation program." This letter complained about the licence limitation program in respect of both the manner which was used to attempt to put it into effect and the consequences of such a program.

Again the minister, under the date April 27 in his reply to the Prince Rupert Fishermen's Co-operative Association, by extracting quotations out of context and in distortion of the over-all point of view said that the Fishermen's Co-operative Association in its differences was simply trying to refer the minister to the concern of fishermen about the licence limitation program. The minister said in his letter that he believed in measures of forward-planning and that the association did not. That is arrogance to the nth degree. It is presumptuous on the part of the minister. It manifests the minister's lack of knowledge of the progress of the fisheries co-operative movement, particularly in the area of Prince Rupert. This is the sort of attitude that engineers will adopt in respect of a specific problem without regard to the co-operative effort these associations play in forward-planning for the future generation and mankind itself.

The assumption by the minister of the role of determining the function and philosophy of co-operative associations is an indication that he is not really interested in listening to common sense and reason, but only in imposing upon the fishing industry a particular idea and a particular program whether or not it works. This is a minister who believes in change by experimentation rather than by experience He went on to take extracts from the co-operative's letter and distort the meaning. In this way he manifests his arrogance which I suggest is inherent in his letter to the fishermen.

The minister went on to state, in his letter of the 27th, that the association had ignored any reference to the heavy subsidies which individual fishermen received by way of unemployment insurance. Let me point out a few facts about unemployment insurance for fishermen. Unemployment insurance came into effect for fishermen as a Liberal party election gambit a few years ago when Jimmy Sinclair, father of the Prime Minister's wife, was Minister of Fisheries. That minister was attempting to meet the desires of fishermen on the west coast in order to be elected. This was not done with any real purpose of providing unemployment insurance benefits for fishermen that was meaningful or worth-while.

In addition to that, the present Minister of Fisheries is a member of a cabinet which has endorsed this program. The unemployment insurance bill currently before the House contains a provision similar to the earlier provision: it is to be applied to fishermen and continued. There has been no attempt on the part of the government to work out a program which might be successful, reasonable or helpful so far as fishermen are concerned in terms of group insurance, price stability or anything of that sort. The Minister of Fisheries has referred to a sort of inherent fisheries subsidy. Of course, this cannot properly be referred to as such.

• (3:50 p.m.)

There is no need to read further from this correspondence, but the whole tenure of the minister's letter, I submit, casts grave doubt in the minds of many fishermen that he is really concerned about human beings in this program of licence limitation. I point out that the idea and concept of a licence limitation program as conceived by the minister—this is where a great deal of objection and confusion comes in—was never introduced by way of formal regulation by Order in Council; it was instituted and announced to the fishermen a few years ago by a press release of the minister. Then various alterations, refinements and adjustments to the original plan were announced simply by press releases and statements of the minister. Every time the fishermen on the west coast who are engaged in the salmon industry understood what the minister was proposing in terms of a licence limitation program, and began to appreciate what he was trying to get at in order to see whether or not they wanted to fit within it at all, he changed it by another press release.

It is that sort of arrogant, dictatorial attitude which has contributed to the confusion and the problems of the fishermen as well as the concern they have in respect of their livelihood being tampered and experimented with to suit some concept of the minister. Within the Fisheries Act there is a section—I presume it is the section under which the minister operates, section 7—which provides that the minister in his absolute discretion can issue licences for fisheries for any period not exceeding nine years. I have quickly referred to the provision without reading the whole section. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) has a bill on the Order Paper at the moment to repeal that section and to indicate that the issuance of licences should be done in the normal way by Order in Council, by regulation, so that people in the fishing industry would have an opportunity to get to the government and see that things are done in an orderly fashion, and so that the minister's absolute discretion to issue licences as he sees fit is abolished.

Last session when the Fisheries Act was being amended an attempt was made to remove that particular section. The minister objected to this and the government objected to removing this power of the minister to deal with the lives of the fishermen as he decided proper on the basis of some thought in the minister's mind when he arose in the morning, based on whether he had a good or a bad preceding evening. On a number of occasions we have asked that the licence program idea of the minister be referred to the standing committee for examination, so that fishermen could come to the committee and express their views about. The minister, in response to a question in the House, was guilty of a barefaced falsehood when he said, "Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will gladly refer that to the committee". Then he sat down and did nothing more about it, in an attempt to cover up and—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Morison) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Morison: Mr. Speaker, it is all very well to make personal attacks within parliamentary language, but I submit the hon. member has taken very great latitude in saying that another member has been guilty of a barefaced fabrication of the facts. I respectfully submit that those remarks should be withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to speak to the point of order? If not, the Chair is prepared to rule on it.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I have no intention of speaking to the point of order. I would not dignify it as such.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would only say, in respect of the point of order, that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) did not, as I understood him, impute any motives to the minister. He did not suggest that the minister had said anything in a deliberate manner. While the words may have been very strong, he did not indicate any deliberateness to convey wrong information to hon. members or to the public.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, if it will please the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Morison), I will gladly include the words "deliberate and conscious", because I think that is what it was. In any event, the minister told us he would gladly refer this subject matter to the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for examination so that the fishermen could come and present their ideas, complaints and objections about the plan. He never carried forward that commitment or did anything about it.

We have on the coast of British Columbia entire communities, many of them small, many of them comprising solely native Indian people, who have a difficult enough time as it is. The people in these communities can see their entire community being wiped out and the sole base of their economy disappearing if these programs—and this particular program—is put into effect. I submit that that sort of activity, coupled with the fact that there is a continuation of the practice of permitting fish-packing companies to engage in and control to a certain extent the fishing industry, militates against the individual fisherman and prevents his being able to prosecute an industry fully and engage in it for purposes of his income and personal satisfaction.

There is no point in reciting the names of many of these communities. I am sure the minister knows which communities they are because he has received communications about them. I believe it behooves us to have serious doubts, and to reflect them here, about establishing a czar of the environment who so far has not done anything in a real sense to attempt to clean up the environment and who has had a pretty dismal record in terms of doing anything worth while and helpful for the fishermen of our nation.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be very short. I wish to deal primarily with what I suppose really involves the title and power of the minister and deputy minister. It seems to me the purport of the amendment is reasonable. There are many other departments in which there are, shall I say, not joint but separate responsibilities. The Department of National Revenue, for instance, has a deputy minister for customs and excise and a deputy minister for income tax. In the Department of National Health and Welfare there is a deputy minister for health and a deputy minister for welfare.

In this instance there is more than adequate precedent and more than adequate reason, if it is felt there should be a deputy minister in charge of the environment—and that has been the purpose of the exercise in setting up this new ministry—that the Department of Fisheries and Forestry and the deputy minister of fisheries should not be downgraded. It is not a question of its costing very much, although the salaries of these eminent people are quite considerable. It is only a transition from the proposal to have an assistant deputy minister to the proposal to have a deputy minister. I believe the request is eminently reasonable.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Why should the assistant deputy minister of fisheries, charged with a particular responsibility, have to report through the deputy minister of the environment? I will not criticize the personality of the deputy minister of the environment who was formerly a construction engineer, an administrator, but whose bent is toward the engineering field; but I presume he was hired for the particular purpose, after his successful career in other places, of dealing with the environment. Now he would be told that he will also have to deal with fisheries. If there is a wrong way to do it, you can trust the so-called slick operators of this government to find it. It seems to me that they are persisting in their error in a stiff-necked manner.

I support the amendment now before the House and ask all government members who want to take a reasonable approach to this matter to also support it.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have much to add to the remarks I made yesterday, but I would like to say that the government recognizes the importance to Canada of the fishing industry. To use the words of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) yesterday, it is our feeling that actions speak louder than words. Certainly, the actions taken in the fisheries field under the aegis of the minister-designate of the environment and, incidentally, of the deputy minister-designate of the environment are an impressive recognition not only of the importance but of the need for action in the fisheries field.

There have been representations and arguments put forward that the effect of this bill will be to downgrade in one way or another the fisheries in Canada. I cannot support this thesis at all. I think that grading is a matter of approach and not, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) described it, a further example of tokenism. He described the proposed amendment as pure and simple tokenism and thought that perhaps it would be good. I think that fisheries in Canada and its problems are too serious to be dealt with by tokenism.

A case was made some time ago for an amendment to the act to provide for a man in the House of Commons who could respond as Minister of Fisheries to questions relating to fisheries. I think that in terms of communication within the House, in order to enable the question and answer period to be conducted more satisfactorily, a case can be made for appointing someone to be officially designated as Minister of Fisheries, and this amendment has been agreed to. However, when one wishes to extend this down to the deputy minister level, it might give rise to objection.

It is customary—I include in this the Department of National Revenue—to have deputy ministers presiding over a department of the same name. We will not have, as such, a Department of Fisheries and a man described as deputy minister of fisheries would be the chief executive officer of a non-existent department. We have a deputy minister of national revenue, customs and excise, and a deputy minister of national revenue, taxation. But there is no deputy minister of taxation and there is no deputy minister of customs and excise. I suggest that in terms other than purely nonsensical ones, designating a deputy minister of fisheries can only indicate that the government is trying to fob off fisheries problems with a bow and a meaningless token. The significance of fisheries to Canada is greater than that.

So, both on the grounds of justice to the fishing industry and in terms of the logic of government organization, I am afraid we will have to go along with the agreement that was reached some time ago by the House leaders, and vote against the amendment.

Mr. Crouse: Would the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) permit a question? Would he advise the House what will be the status of the present Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry? As the minister is aware, we have a committee which goes by the name of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and to which the estimates of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, which now becomes part of the department of the environment, are sent for scrutiny. This has been the case certainly since I came here in 1957. To what committee will the estimates of the department of the environment be now referred, and what will be that committee's name?

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: I regret to say that I cannot answer that question. I do know that standing committees of the House are named and organized on a functional rather than on a departmental-name basis. For example, there is no standing committee on the Treasury Board, yet nevertheless we do not have much trouble in finding a committee, which is prepared to industriously scrutinize the estimates of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Bell: You aren't kidding!

Mr. Drury: How the introduction of a bill creating a new department of government will affect the naming of standing committees is more a question for those who are charged with the organization of the House than for the executive branch.

Mr. Crouse: Perhaps I could redirect my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis). This is an important point since the duties of committees are to examine and study the estimates of various departments. We understand that in the House of Commons committees are ordered to sit at certain times and estimates are referred to them to be studied and passed, unless the committee system is merely a mockery of the work to be carried out by this House and it is just a ruse and something to be sloughed off by the government to make members of the house of Commons believe that they are important when they are literally like a dog chasing his tail around a tree.

I think this question is important because a very basic change is being made in procedure. I maintain that there is a downgrading of the importance of the fisheries industry, and I hope that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, who has had an opportunity to consult the President of the Treasury Board, will indicate to the House what the standing of the fisheries and forestry committee will be in the future and to what committee the estimates of the department will be referred.

Mr. Davis: My understanding is that the standing committee will continue. However, it is up to the House to decide whether a standing committee is to be replaced by another one. This is not a matter on which I would like to comment at present. As things now stand, the present Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry will continue. I understand that the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution will terminate with this session, so that there will not be a committee on environment control at the beginning of the next session. However, this again is a matter for the House to determine, presumably through the government House leader in consultation with his opposite numbers around the chamber.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would move that the intervention by the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis), when he was being asked a question, not break the sequence of the speech of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). The Department of National Revenue has a taxation division and a customs and excise division, each headed by a deputy minister. Following that example one could press the argument, with some justice, that there should be in this new department a deputy minister of the fisheries division. The example is right there in the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, obviously the argument could be pressed, but it is really a measure of what kind of organization is most likely to efficaciously accomplish the general purpose. It is the view of the executive branch that the over-all purpose of the department of the environment, which includes adequately dealing with the problems of fisheries and forestry, can be better achieved by the organization proposed than by the rather more curious and less conventional one suggested on the floor today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, or under Standing Order 37 (1), to make a brief comment if I may. In the concluding portion of his remarks, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) said the government would have to stand by the agreement reached by the House leaders. I think it should be made clear that the House leaders, and I happen to be one of them, agreed that the bill would be amended to provide that the Minister of the Environment would also be the Minister of Fisheries. There was no agreement on the part of the government to have a deputy minister of fisheries, but it was understood at meetings of the House leaders that from this side of the House we would still press our case on the floor of the House. I would not want the words of the President of the Treasury Board to suggest that somehow we had broken the agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment to the main motion. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. McGrath) which was negatived on the following division:

• (4:20 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Alexander
Asselin
Baldwin
Beaudoin
Bell
Benjamin
Bigg
Brewin
Burton
Cadieu
Carter
Code
Comeau
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dionne
Downey
Fairweather
Fortin
Gauthier
Gilbert
Gleave
Godin
Grills
Gundlock
Hales
Harding
Harkness
Horner
Howard (Skeena)
Howe
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
Latulippe
Lundrigan
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
MacInnis (Mrs.)
MacLean
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McGrath
McIntosh
McKinley
Mather
Mazankowski
Monteith
Moore
Noble
Nystrom
Orlikow
Paproski
Ricard
Ritchie
Rodrigue
Ryan
Rynard
Simpson
Skoberg
Southam
Stewart (Marquette)
Thomas (Moncton)
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)
Valade
Winch
Woolliams
Yewchuk—73.

NAYS

Messrs:

Allmand
Badanai
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Benson
Blair
Boulanger
Breau
Buchanan
Caccia
Chappell
Chrétien
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Longueuil)
Crossman
Cullen
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
De Bané
Drury
Dubé
Dupras
Duquet
Émard
Faulkner
Forest
Forget
Foster
Francis
Gendron
Gervais
Gibson
Gillespie
Goode
Goyer
Gray
Greene
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guilbault
Harries
Hogarth
Hopkins
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Jamieson
Jerome
Kaplan
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing (Vancouver South)
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Laniel
La Salle
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Lind
Loiselle
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
McBride
McNulty
Mahoney
Major
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Morison
Munro
Noël
Orange
Osler
Otto
Penner
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Reid
Richardson
Roberts
Robinson
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart (Cochrane)
Sulatycky
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Tolmie
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Watson
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Yanakis—108.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the motion for third reading of this bill is put and a final decision is taken, there are a few additional words I should like to say and there is another amendment which I should like to move.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hansard has developed an interesting mechanism. When there is laughter, Hansard says "Oh, oh!" When there is applause, Hansard says "Hear, hear!" I think Hansard should develop a means of indicating a groan, such as we have just heard.

This bill was given first reading in the House of Commons on December 9, 1970, so it has been in the parliamentary mill for quite a while. By the time it gets through the other place almost six months will have gone by. The government does a good deal of complaining about that. Perhaps it is a considerable period of time for one piece of legislation to be before Parliament, but I am sure it will be said by those who write about this institution that this is a bill which has demonstrated the value of the parliamentary process.

Whether we entirely agree with the bill in its present form or not, the fact is it is considerably better than it was when it was introduced. This is true in particular with respect to the provisions for the appointment by the government of ministers and ministries of state. This is no time to use such words as "victory" or "defeat." The fact is that as a result of debate and consideration, as a result of collective bargaining among the representatives of the parties, that portion of the bill was changed so that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will not possess the unquestioned right to name ministers of state and give them departments without first obtaining parliamentary approval. This is an improvement which we welcome. There are two or three other improvements as well, so all told the bill is better than it was when it was first introduced.

However, there is one portion of the bill—and like so many of the pieces of legislation which this government brings in, it has both its good side and its bad side—concerning which I should like to say a few additional words. I refer, as hon. members would expect, to the portion of the bill which deals with changes in the Public Service Superannuation Act.

May I say, as I have said on previous occasions, that we welcome the provision for early retirement of public servants on a voluntary basis. We believe that in some cases the provision made for the pensions to be drawn by public servants who retire early is good. In other cases the provision is not very generous. At least, though, we are getting started on the practice of public servants retiring at an early age with the right to start drawing pensions from the time of their retirement. To this extent we welcome the provision which has been made.

However, the bill also makes it possible for public servants to be retired compulsorily and as a consequence to be obliged to take a reduced pension. May I qualify what I have said to this extent: it is not the bill before us which makes it possible for the government to retire public servants compulsorily; the government already has that power. During times of squeeze the government has been known to dismiss public servants who have been in its employ for many years. What this bill does is to say that persons over 50 years of age who in future are retired compulsorily may receive pensions, and this makes it easier for the government to retire them. But their pensions are subject to a severe reduction.

In the course of the debate I have drawn attention to the extreme case, a case in which it would be posible for a person to find the pension he would otherwise have enjoyed reduced by 50 per cent. This is the case of a person who is 50 years of age who has put in 20 years of service. Normally he would receive a pension equal to 40 per cent of the average of his salary during his six best years. But under the provisions of this bill, that 40 per cent pension would be reduced by 50 per cent. In other words, it would be a 20 per cent pension, only 20 per cent of his six year average salary. I submit that to impose such a reduction on a public servant who is retired compulsorily because the government is carrying out some reorganization, or squeezing out certain employees, is quite unfair. There are those who think it is unfair for such people to be required to accept a reduction in their pensions even if they retire voluntarily, and I agree. But at least those people are free to make a decision.

In the case of those who do not enjoy the freedom to make such a decision, in the case of those who are fired for reasons of public policy, it is altogether unfair that there should be any reduction in the amount of the pension they would otherwise be entitled to receive. Let it be clear that we are not now talking about persons who are dismissed because of misconduct. There are already provisions in the legislation to deal with that situation. A person retired for misconduct receives only the return of his pension contributions—no pension of any sort. But there are times in its history when the government has resorted to the dismissing of public servants in rather large numbers, and this may well happen again. It is true that it is better that they get a reduced pension than no pension at all, but we think that to force a reduction in the pension is quite unfair.

This brings me immediately to the amendment I wish to move. It is not necessary to spin out this debate since we have argued this point on second reading and two or three times in committee of the whole. I move my amendment at this time because I believe that this House would like to do the fair thing and to have the bill altered so that it will not provide that the pensions of those who are compulsorily retired are to be severely reduced. I point out that the matter was dealt with in committee of the whole. In particular, on March 30, 1971, as reported at page 4739 of Hansard I moved an amendment to clause 27 of the bill; it was debated at some length but when the vote was called the amendment was defeated.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I have drafted my amendment for today in words that are not exactly those which would be put into the bill itself. Rather, it is in general terms that would achieve the same purpose, once the bill is referred back to committee. I hope hon. members have done some thinking about this since March 30 and that although they voted against the request for fair play and justice on that date, they will vote for this amendment today. Therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), I move:

That Bill C-207 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering the provisions of subclause 1 of clause 27 in so far as they relate to employees who do not retire voluntarily from the public service.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Alexander
Asselin
Baldwin
Beaudoin
Bell
Benjamin
Bigg
Brewin
Burton
Cadieu
Code
Comeau
Crouse
Diefenbaker
Downey
Fairweather
Fortin
Gauthier
Gilbert
Gleave
Godin
Grills
Hales
Harding
Harkness
Horner
Howard (Skeena)
Howe
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
Latulippe
Lundrigan
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
MacInnis (Mrs.)
MacLean
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McGrath
McIntosh
McKinley
Mather
Mazankowski
Monteith
Moore
Noble
Orlikow
Paproski
Ricard
Ritchie
Rodrigue
Rynard
Simpson
Skoberg
Southam
Stewart (Marquette)
Thomas (Moncton)
Thompson (Red Deer)
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)
Winch
Woolliams
Yewchuk—(67).

NAYS

Messrs:

Allmand
Badanai
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Benson
Blair
Boulanger
Breau
Buchanan
Caccia
Chappell
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Longueuil)
Crossman
Cullen
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
De Bané

Division

Messrs:

Drury
Dubé
Dupras
Duquet
Émard
Faulkner
Forest Forget
Foster
Francis
Gendron
Gervais
Gibson
Gillespie
Goode
Goyer
Gray
Greene
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guilbault
Hogarth
Hopkins
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Jamieson
Jerome
Kaplan
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing (Vancouver South)
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Laniel
La Salle
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Lind
Loiselle
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
McBride
McNulty
Mahoney
Major
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Morison
Munro
Noël
Orange
Osler
Otto
Penner
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Reid
Richardson
Roberts
Robinson
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stafford
Stewart (Cochrane)
Sulatycky
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Tolmie
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Watson
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Yanakis—(105).

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to apologize to the House for taking a few moments to introduce an amendment to the bill now before us. The subject of this amendment is of importance to every member of the House no matter in which province his riding might be located. It is of particular interest to me as mover of the amendment.

The amendment is based on the fact that the minister of the environment is now responsible for the administration of the Canada Water Act. The Canada Water Act has taken the place of the Canada Conservation Assistance Act. Under the Canada Conservation Assistance Act, when any municipality or area in this country wished to build a dam or set up a conservation program a federal formula was laid down whereby the federal government would pay 37½ per cent, the provincial government 37½ per cent and the municipality 25 per cent.

When the Canada Conservation Assistance Act was repealed and replaced by the Canada Water Act, this formula disappeared. Now no arrangements are made for the federal government to contribute to any such project wherever it might be in Canada. As the minister stated on previous occasions, the cost will be negotiated. This means the federal government may or may not contribute toward the cost of a project. There is no set formula. This creates a very great hardship on the municipalities in respect of their conservation programs, because they do not know whether or not they will receive federal assistance.

I do not wish to take any more time of the House, so with that very brief introduction I shall put forward the following amendment. I have pleasure in moving this amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Howe):

That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Bill C-207 be not now read a third time but be referred back to the committee of the whole with an instruction to consider the advisability of amending the bill by inserting therein, next after clause 5 on page 2 thereof, the following:

"6. (1) With the approval of the Governor in Council the minister may enter into an agreement with any province providing for contributions by Canada in respect of the cost of projects for the construction of dams and other works for the conservation and control of sea coast and inland water resources and, in accordance with such agreement, pay contributions to the province out of money to be appropriated by Parliament for the purpose.

(2) The contributions paid by Canada in respect of an agreement with a province shall not exceed the amount paid by the province in respect of the project referred to in the agreement, and in no case shall the contributions paid by Canada exceed thirty-seven and one-half per cent of the cost of the project, as determined by the Governor in Council.

(3) No contributions shall be paid in respect of an agreement with a province unless all other agreements under this section with that province are being carried out in a manner acceptable to the minister.

(4) Where revenue-producing works are part of a project, the revenues that may be derived from such works shall be taken into consideration in determining the amount of the contribution by Canada.

(5) Contributions under this section shall be limited to projects that in the opinion of the Governor in Council are of a major character."

and, where the committee reports in favour of so amending the bill, then be it a further instruction to the committee to recommend that an humble address, in form prepared by the committee, be presented to His Excellency praying that he be pleased to recommend by message to this House an appropriation out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the purpose of the amendment so proposed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales), seconded by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Howe). I must advise the House I have most serious reservations about this amendment. To my mind it clearly affects the financial initiative of the Crown. I am quite satisfied to listen to argument in this respect and will make a formal ruling after having heard argument, but I think it would take quite a bit of imagination to convince the Chair that the proposed amendment does not affect Her Majesty's prerogative in relation to financial matters.

[Mr. Hales.]

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of my colleague who proposed this amendment. For many years in this House I have been talking about conservation measures because in my riding there are some very important dams—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wishes to make a contribution now, it should be related to the procedural aspect of the proposed amendment. There is nothing to prevent the hon. member, if he wishes to make the speech which he now proposes to make, making it after a ruling has been handed down by the Chair. The hon. member has not yet spoken at the third reading stage of the bill and he has the right to take the floor to make whatever representations he wishes in relation to the point made by the hon. member for Wellington even if the amendment is ruled out of order. However, I think any contribution at this time should be related strictly to the procedural aspect of the matter.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: With regard to your comments, Mr. Speaker, I will leave the ruling entirely in your hands. I wish to say simply that the formula that was used in the previous act was within the jurisdiction of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think hon. members would want me to go into the matter in considerable detail. I suggest to the hon. member who proposed this amendment, and to the House, that the amendment would clearly impose a call on the treasury. I do not think it is sufficient to say that whatever moneys are required to give effect to the proposal envisaged by this amendment would be voted by Parliament.

I believe that it is part of subclause 1 of the proposed amendment that the hon. member suggests that in accordance with the agreement, contributions to the province will be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament for the purpose. It is not a sufficient answer to the procedural objection to say that any money required to give effect to the amendment would be voted in due course by Parliament. I must rule that the proposed amendment is not, therefore, acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DETERMINATION OF PAYMENT FOR WHEAT—EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO FLAXSEED, RYE AND RAPESEED

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-238, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, when speaking on this measure on May 20 I indicated that there were one or two points I wanted to make regarding some strong objections to Bill C-238. First of all, I pointed out that I was appalled at the impropriety of the government bringing in this type of legislation. I pointed out, as did many other speakers on this side of the House, that the producers of rapeseed in western Canada in particular had been quite satisfied over the years with the opportunity they had had to produce rapeseed and to avail themselves of the cash profit. Many members on our side of the House pointed this out very clearly to the government.

There was one other point that I wanted to bring before the House in relation to the exports of grain through the port of Churchill. As I mentioned briefly on May 20, for many years people interested in exporting grain through the port of Churchill have been extremely concerned about the small amount of grain which they have been able to export through this very important port. On many occasions when we have requested the Wheat Board to announce larger shipments of grain available in Churchill, we have found that the Wheat Board in their wisdom have decided, in some cases arbitrarily I believe, that 23 million to 24 million bushels of wheat was the full amount they could allow through the port of Churchill in any given season.

They have come up with many reasons for this. However, from many investigations it has appeared to me that these decisions were reached as a result of a great deal of pressure being put upon the Wheat Board by representatives of other Canadian ports. We have seen many statements over the years by port authorities, in Montreal in particular, who have openly stated that they would strongly oppose further expenditures in relation to added facilities at the port of Churchill. Anyone who has been interested in shipping through the port of Churchill knows full well that many of the facilities that have been requested over the years are lacking at Churchill and are badly needed.

Now the government, under Bill C-238, proposes that the Wheat Board assume responsibility for the marketing of rye, flaxseed and rapeseed. I would like to bring to the attention of the government the fact that at present at the port of Churchill there are no facilities whatsoever for the handling of grains such as rapeseed, and I think the government has a responsibility to advise the House whether or not there were full consultations between it and the Wheat Board before this legislation was drawn up.

It is easy for anyone to see what the effect of the passage of this bill will be on the port of Churchilll. Up to the present the Wheat Board has not been in a position to announce just how much wheat it will have available for export from Churchill. I was told by the board that this is a result of the policy adopted in Great Britain, which is a protective policy so far as Canadian wheat is concerned. The board is therefore reluctant to give us any information on how much wheat will be available for export.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I understand that recently an announcement was made that some four million bushels of barley would be available for export from Churchill. We would like to know how much wheat we can expect to send through that port this year. Anyone who has had experience in exporting wheat through the port of Churchill realizes the tremendous savings which can accrue to the purchasers and the advantages which can accrue to the permit holders who are shipping wheat through any port in Canada. Regardless of where wheat is exported from, the amount shipped through Churchill shows an additional profit which is divided amongst all permit holders in Canada.

The government should find it easy to understand the concern felt by people who are interested in the port of Churchill for a measure which would give the Wheat Board jurisdiction over the marketing and exporting of rye, flaxseed and rapeseed. No facilities are available for the handling of rapeseed at the port of Churchill. One must conclude, therefore, that this measure will not only be detrimental to the port of Churchill but will cause further concern because it is not known how much, if any, wheat will be going through that port.

So many members on this side of the House have taken exception to Bill C-238 that I am sure the government must now realize it is not an appropriate bill to bring before the House at this time. We would like to know, for instance, if there was full discussion with the National Harbours Board and the Canadian Wheat Board regarding the lack of facilities at one of Canada's major ports. We would also like to know whether all the other ports in Canada which handle grain are also in a position to handle flaxseed, rapeseed and rye.

There have been recent difficulties with shipment through the Great Lakes. Every time difficulties arise at Vancouver, at the St. Lawrence ports or at the Lakehead, people interested in the port of Churchill are concerned to know why the facilities of Churchill are not used. When this question is brought before the House or the Wheat Board, the answer is that it is because of the relatively short shipping season and that only 23 million or 24 million bushels can be handled. This is not a valid reason because it must be realized that the shipping season could be extended.

One of the main reasons for shipping more or less coming to an end at Churchill by October 25 may be the marine insurance rates. Recently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) said that senior executives in the insurance field had visited Canada to look at the facilities of the St. Lawrence, and they would be invited back later this summer to visit our Arctic waters. It was hoped that they would visit Churchill and inspect the facilities there: this might convince them that the shipping season could be safely extended. Later we were told, however, that there is no assurance that they can come back this summer and it may be another year before we see them in Churchill. The record shows that over the last 100 years the safe shipping season at the port of Churchill is some months longer than in other places.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I am greatly disturbed that this legislation is brought before us when apparently no plans have been made to ensure that all Canadian ports have the proper facilities to handle these new grains which the Wheat Board will be obliged to handle. I therefore oppose the bill on these grounds. Before the legislation is passed I hope the minister will be in a position to advise the House that there has been full consultation among members of the government, officials of the National Harbours Board and the Canadian Wheat Board on the matters which I have raised.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-238 represents one step toward the reduction of the number of small farmers in Canada. I can only interpret it as having the goal of the complete socialism of agriculture in Canada, and as a Conservative and an advocate of free enterprise I am unalterably opposed to anything which moves in this direction.

There is a very good reason for improving Canada's image as a producer of the finest wheat in the world, stringently graded as to content and value. We should be able to sell more than we have in the past few years. The ideal of $2 wheat, a solemn Liberal promise, has never materialized because of lack of attention to agriculture. I shall elaborate on this later. Two years ago the going price for wheat in western Canada was $1.70 a bushel; last year it was $1.50 and this year it is $1.46½. Some people might say that it is not a great reduction, but 3½ cents a bushel means a lot to the farmers of Canada. Three-and-a-half cents a bushel less in the pockets of the farmers of Canada represents a lot of money when you are dealing with half a billion bushels. That represents a great loss to the western farmer, particularly in view of the inflation we are suffering. The price of farm machinery is still rocketing. Sales are dwindling. Even if the farmer were to obtain $1.70, it would be difficult for him, with tight quotas, to meet current expenses let alone repay loans on farm stored grain, pay taxes, pay hired help and gasoline and meet all the expenses which are entailed in the running of a modern farm.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I claim—not without cause, since no less a person than the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has suggested it—that it is the avowed policy of this government to get the small farmer off the farm.

[Mr. Simpson.]

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Bigg: The government is following that policy. It is true that piecemeal legislation has been brought in to help the small farmer. The government has helped him in many cases to go deeper into debt. It has increased the ceiling on his loans. The ceiling is now up to $75,000 for a so-called small farmer.

What is the good of lending a small or even medium-sized farmer $75,000 when he has little or no hope of paying it back? This is a very poorly thought-out idea of kindness. Why put a man into debt that way? If he cannot repay it he will be dispossessed by the government or his operation will be taken over by the people to whom he owes the money.

Just last week I attended the sort of hearing that I never expected to attend. It was an eviction hearing. It was not brought by the banks, the trust companies, the loan companies or any loan sharks. These organizations did not bring an action because the farmer had bought too much machinery. The action was brought by the government agency. It was foreclosing. That was an unusual action and I attended the hearing. It involved a small farmer who owned a half section of land. He had been asked by the Farm Credit Corporation to increase the size of his farm in order to obtain a loan. He asked his blood-brother to deed over to him, for loan purposes, his quarter section of land. In other words, his brother backed his loan and the farmer needed the extra land to make the farm viable. The corporation then lent him $8,000. That happened ten years ago, and they are surprised that he has not been able to pay back the money. He could not do so because he had lost his markets and could not deliver grain. The corporation foreclosed.

Many people say that if he had wanted to work he could have kept his farm. Well, Mr. Speaker, his wife is a janitor at the local school. She has put every cent of her wages, as well as all the money earned from farm produce, into the farm in an attempt to keep the family unit together. The man and wife have nine children. I am only bringing these facts forward to show people that any policy designed to force small farmers off the farm can do no good to this country. Here was a farmer with a wife and nine children. His wife was willing to be a janitor at the local school where their children were being educated. She brought home every cent of her pay cheque to keep the farm afloat. Five years ago they were burned out. The farmer went to the bank and borrowed $6,000. He and his wife paid off the debt on the house; the $6,000 was put into the house. It was worth $12,000. He built it himself. The family hammered in all the nails. It was a project for the whole family. The finishing of the house was paid for partly by the wife's wages.

Today this family of 11 people is being put off the land for the simple reason that they have not repaid their farm loan. They paid off the bank. I wonder, as may any farmer within hearing distance of my voice or any farmer who may read my remarks in Hansard, how in the world any farmer could possibly pay off a debt of $6,000 let alone keep 11 people on the family farm. Of course, he could not do it unless he and the other ten people on the farm were working very hard. Yet the best answer we can come up with now is to take these people off the farm and put them in the city. The only thing that family knows, apart from how to be good Canadians, is how to run a farm. That is what they have done.

Now, because they have got into difficulties with an agency of the federal government, they are to go on relief. Not one of those 11 people had ever been on relief. Now they will all go on welfare. Imagine that—11 people will go on welfare! Does that represent any well thought-out policy by any well-thinking government, let alone one that calls itself Liberal, or left wing? This sort of thing is occurring all the time.

How do these remarks relate to this bill? They relate to it in this way: The government are not the best people to run farms or to tell farmers how to run farms. The government's job is to find us the markets for our grain, markets for our livestock and to create the climate in which small farmers can operate on their own. No system of government would have made those 11 people co-operate among themselves more than they have done. You could not keep 11 people like that living in fresh, rural surroundings, happy and healthy and working together, by legislating. The government has adopted a heartless attitude to people like these whose only crime is that they paid off the bank ahead of paying off the federal government.

I asked an official appearing before the Standing Committee on Agriculture what would have happened if these people had paid the government off instead of the bank. The answer was, of course, that the bank would have foreclosed. The farm is worth $45,000 or $50,000, and the bank would have acquired it for $6,000. It seems that if the government agency does not receive its money, it will do exactly as the bank would have done. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? You must believe me when I say that the agency never sent an agent out to find out why this family of 11 people working together could not pay the debt. They merely looked at the papers without investingating the matter and said, "We want our money or you must get out." That is the kind of heartless interference with the workings of agriculture in this country that I find hard to understand. I am against it.

This bill pertains to the responsibilities of the Wheat Board. I hasten to say that the Wheat Board over the years has operated well. Perhaps only a government agency could handle, in international trade, a product so important to western agriculture as wheat. As I say, the board has operated reasonably well—but it has not in the last few years kept the farmers' bins empty. Sometimes I wonder whether the Wheat Board knows what the railroads are doing. I wonder whether the railroads know what the elevator companies are doing. I wonder whether any of these organizations know what the farmers' problems are.

I sat on the Public Accounts Committee just last week and heard officials of the Wheat Board discuss the elevator situation in Vancouver. There are several grain elevators in Vancouver and two or three of them at least are empty. So far as I could make out from questioning, the National Harbours Board looks after these elevators. They do not know what the Wheat Board intends to do about them and the Wheat Board does not know what the Harbours Board intends to do about them. Sometimes when we want to sell grain to the Orient we are incapable of delivering that grain.

• (5:50 p.m.)

It is difficult enough to sell it in a glutted world wheat market. We understand that. However, with the wheat piled up on the Prairies and the railroads operating when there is not a strike, surely it is possible for the wheat board, railroads and harbour people to get together so that any time 10 or 20 ships are waiting to be loaded in Vancouver the facilities are available to load them.

I raise this matter because the bill purports to include rye, flaxseed and rapeseed under the Wheat Board in addition to wheat, oats and barley. If the Wheat Board is so busy that it cannot properly handle wheat, oats and barley, how can we expect it to handle three additional grains, rye, flaxseed and rapeseed? Are these three grains to be put into the same category as wheat? At the present time the farmers in my district use rapeseed as a cash crop. I presume that when Bill C-238 is passed, rapeseed will be handled the same as wheat. It will no longer be a cash crop. The farmers will either have to wait or take a down payment on wheat. They will never know what their final payments will be. Instead of having a cash crop, they will have to wait. The opportunity of getting cash to pay their day to day debts will be gone.

I understand that if the elevators in Vancouver were renovated to a small degree, they could be used for storing rapeseed. Would the Wheat Board be in any better position to use these elevators to store rapeseed than to store grain? They are not used to store wheat at the present time. The Harbours Board people to whom I have spoken do not know what the Wheat Board intends to do. I do not know whether the Wheat Board checks with them to have the ships load grain for export.

We should take a good look at agriculture. This industry should be co-ordinated. There should be someone in the Department of Agriculture who can pull the different branches of the industry together. If the farmers are going to grow wheat, there should be some indication whether it can be sold. If they are going to change from wheat to rapeseed, they should know whether it will be sold. A great deal more should be done by way of research. We now have rigidity; we do not need more. Perhaps the Wheat Board should have more power and opportunities to find world markets. On more than one occasion in this House it has been said that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) or the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) feel they are responsible for sales. If sales are made, the Wheat Board likes to say that it made them. If the wheat is not sold, the Wheat Board says it is stymied by the government. When wheat sales are made, the government says that it made them and the Wheat Board is incidental. Whose responsibility is it to sell grain?

The Canadian Wheat Board Act should be amended in other ways than those outlined in Bill C-238. I hope this bill will receive a good working over before it becomes law From correspondence I have received, I understand that putting rye, flaxseed and rapeseed under the Wheat Board is not universally welcomed by the farmers. It is true that some farmers are very vociferous in wanting these grains under the Wheat Board. This depends on their location and whether they are specialists in these grains. However, many farmers do not want this legislation.

I suggest that Bill C-238 be discussed with the farmers before it becomes law. We wanted Bill C-197 discussed with the farmers before it was made law. The correspondence which I received a year ago indicated that Bill C-197 should be passed as quickly as possible.

An hon. Member: Bill C-176.

Mr. Bigg: It is now Bill C-176; a year ago it was Bill C-197. In any event, it is practically the same bill; it has not changed very much. Some newspaper articles blamed the opposition for holding up the bill. The same people who wanted Bill C-197 passed a year ago now want Bill C-176 passed. However, they always include a rider which would provide that the bill be amended in line with what the farmers want. The same could be said of this bill.

I warned the government not to have Bill C-238 passed until it finds out what the farmers want. We cannot believe the farm unions. There are four operating in my district. They do not get together, but they have a right to vote on it. I suggest that there be a plebiscite. Whenever there is a touchy problem such as whether rapeseed should be included under the Wheat Board, the people who grow rapeseed should be consulted. They are in the best position to know whether it should be included under the Wheat Board. If the farmers lose money by not being under the Wheat Board, that is their right. I nail my colours to the mast. It is even their right to go broke. They do not ask the government to always be saving them. The government should make it possible for farmers to make the sales they want. They should have the first, second, third and final say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I must interrupt the hon. member. The Chair has been informed that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) seeks permission of the House to revert to motions. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Bigg.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANT TO THE ARTS

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORT OF CANADA RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for allowing me to revert to motions. I move:

That the annual report of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission for the year ended March 31, 1970, be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Downey: Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO STUDY OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY AND VISIT VARIOUS PARTS OF CANADA FOR THIS PURPOSE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): With Your Honour's permission, I have another motion I would like to put before the House. I move:

That the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works be authorized to study the oil and gas industry in Canada with particular reference to the ecological implications of various modes of transporting the product; and that in the conduct of such a study, the committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada during the week beginning June 13, 1971, and during the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). As far as the principle of the motion is concerned, we are in agreement with it. This is a good committee and we think it is the appropriate committee to deal with this matter. At this stage, we are not prepared to agree to that aspect of the motion which provides that the committee leave this city and miss the parliamentary session during the week of June 13. In our view this is an exceptionally busy time. We have problems and we feel that the committee should remain here. I have said this to the minister. He realizes our position. We think that this involves not only travelling within Canada but visiting such places as Russia to see what that country is doing. Rather than just having frost and foam coming out of there, the committee could make an objective study.

I must say, with regret, that we cannot accept the motion in its present form. If the aspect which deals with travelling during the week of June 13 were deleted, we would be happy to accept the motion.

• (6:00 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House accept the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), with the reservation mentioned by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin)?

Oil and Gas Industry Studies

Mr. MacEachen: I think I would defer putting the motion for the moment, pending further consultation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The motion is withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant Special Order until Friday May 28.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 28, 1971

The House met at 11 a.m.

MESSAGES FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-180, an act respecting the packaging, labelling, sale, importation and advertising of prepackaged and certain other products, with amendments, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

Also, a message has been received informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill S-21, an act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD (SKEENA)—STATEMENT BY SOLICITOR GENERAL RESPECTING PLACING OF CERTAIN INMATES IN COLLINS BAY DISSOCIATION CELLS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege relates to a statement which the Solicitor General made in the House a few days ago and the effects of that statement upon the lives of a certain number of individuals.

On May 21 I posed the following question to the Solicitor General:

> With respect to the seven inmates who were transferred from Millhaven on the night of May 12, I believe, to Collins Bay Penitentiary where they are now being held in isolation, or, in other words, in the hole or in the dungeon, does the minister not consider that to be a form of punishment?

The minister, in his response, made some reference to the disturbance at Kingston and then added:

> The choice was not ours, but that of the inmates. Up till now, no disciplinary action has been taken against the inmates and, recently, considering that further disturbances were expected—

Then he sat down without saying anything further. My question of privilege relates to the declaration by the Solicitor General that the seven men themselves chose to be placed in the dissociation cells at Collins Bay. The carelessness of that statement on the part of the Solicitor General should in itself have been sufficient to prevent his becoming Solicitor General in the first place, because it was irresponsible and destructive. The effect of that sort of looseness with the truth, if it is nothing else, has been reflected in the fear which exists in the minds of probably 30 to 35 inmates at Collins Bay, Kingston penitentiary and Millhaven who are in dissociation cells. I have two or three letters from inmates in support of this statement. Perhaps I could quote one of them to indicate the degree of fear which exists and the damage which has been done by this carelessness on the part of the Solicitor General. One letter says:

> It has come to my attention that Mr. Goyer has made a frightening statement. He said that we have asked to be locked up for protection. If taken seriously by other inmates we may genuinely need that protection.

Another says:

> • (11:10 a.m.)
>
> Now we hear that Mr. Goyer says we "asked" to be locked up for our own protection. This is an outright lie and in so stating he has placed the lives of 33 men in dire danger. He has in effect called us "stool pigeons".

Anyone who is the least bit familiar with these matters, as obviously the Solicitor General is not, anyone who knows what goes on in a penitentiary will realize that this sort of accusation is the worst sort that can be made and does actually place the lives of these men in dire danger. Another letter says—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member indicated he would quote from one letter and now he is about to read from the third. I suggest that he indicate what his question of privilege is.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I was trying to point out that this was not an isolated instance and the view of one individual alone but the view of a number of people. On the basis of that view, if you find that there is a prima facie case of privilege in that the Solicitor General, to be generous, was careless and irresponsible in making a statement to the House that was not in accordance with the truth, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

> That this House express its dissatisfaction of the manner in which the Solicitor General has dealt with the disturbance at Kingston penitentiary and developments subsequent thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena gave the Chair the required notice of his intention to bring the matter to which he has alluded, and which he would like the House to consider, before the House by way of a question of privilege. I should like to refer the hon. member to citation 133 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which clearly states that circumstances such as those now before the House cannot be debated by way of breach of parliamentary privilege. Substantially, the matter involves a dispute as to facts, and that cannot be the basis or foundation of a question of privilege.

I might add that the motion proposed by the hon. member is a substantive motion. On the basis of well accepted precedents, that kind of motion, as the hon. member knows, can only be moved by way of a clear condemnation of the minister involving a substantive privilege motion. There is, of course, a procedure well established if the hon. member wishes to pursue the matter on that basis. However, on the basis of what is before the Chair at the present time I have to rule that there is no prima facie case of privilege and the motion therefore cannot be put to the House for debate at this time.

[Translation]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Seventeenth report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, in the two official languages.—Mr. Clermont.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Sixth report on Standing Committee on Agriculture—Mr. Beer.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Second and third reports of Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development—Mr. Watson.

NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

Sixth report of Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works—Mr. Hopkins.

[Later:]

[Translation]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Third report of Standing Committee on Regional Development, in the two official languages—Mr. Béchard.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF JOINT COMMUNIQUÉ ON VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER TO SOVIET UNION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and French of the joint communiqué on the visit to the Soviet Union of the Prime Minister of Canada.

STATEMENT ON AID TO REFUGEES FROM EAST PAKISTAN

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement I promised to make the other day about aid to the refugees from Pakistan now in India.

During the past several days a number of questions have been raised with regard to the nature of the government's response to requests from the government of India and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for assistance in providing relief for refugees from East Pakistan. The House will recall that on May 18 the Secretary General of the United Nations issued an appeal calling for urgent, humanitarian assistance to relieve the plight of these refugees and sought the co-operation of governments and private organizations in a co-ordinated effort through the United Nations to alleviate their suffering.

The government accepts without hesitation that the financial burden of providing relief cannot be borne by India alone. To help meet the urgent human needs in West Bengal and other border states, the government is providing $2 million in relief supplies including foodstuffs, medicines, medical supplies and cash contributions. This $2 million is a supplementary contribution to the international emergency relief appropriation and will not affect the bilateral development assistance program for India.

It is most important that relief be provided in as effectively co-ordinated a manner as is possible. We are consulting closely with the United Nations in order to ensure that Canada's contribution will complement the contributions of other governmental and private donors who have indicated their willingness to contribute.

The longer-term needs arising out of the presence of the refugees in India are not yet known. This contribution is designed to help meet the immediate needs of the situation.

The government shares with members on all sides of the House and Canadians generally the urgent wish to help bring relief to the suffering in East Pakistan. Adequate funds, needed supplies, means of transportation and the right kind of experts are all available. We are continuing, through the World Bank and other international organizations, to seek a way to deal with the problem. Our High Commissioner in Islamabad is urging upon the government of Pakistan the need to admit relief supplies under proper international supervision and control. I regret that I cannot at this time report any significant progress.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, we have been asking the minister to make a statement of this kind, and I would be less than courteous if I did not say we thank him for it. I can also say that we approve of what has been announced today. We are glad that something has been done and would have welcomed it sooner. I am in no position to judge as to the adequacy of the amount of $2 million and how it relates to the magnitude of the problem which exists in that troubled part of the world.

I agree with the minister that the government of India cannot, of course, be expected to bear alone the high cost of meeting the problem which has been forced upon it across its frontiers. This is a very difficult situation. Surely we have reached a stage of civilization where the victims of a war, which is not an international conflict but is designated as a civil war, should not be insulated from the kind of humanitarian help which people outside that country seek to provide. It is obvious there has been terrible suffering in this area and I am sure this contribution is just one step along the road toward offering the kind of assistance needed for the restoration of the many people suffering in that land.

I note that the minister's statement concluded on a note of sadness. He indicated that no significant progress has been made in urging upon the government of Pakistan the need to admit relief supplies under proper international supervision and control. I should like to say, through him, to the government of Pakistan that I implore it to do everything possible to open the situation to international scrutiny, because it is not at all pleasing that one of our Commonwealth fellow members should have such a very poor image, as seems to be the case throughout the world. I do hope that the Canadian government will do everything possible through its friendly relations with this sister Commonwealth state to urge upon it the kind of a course set out in the minister's final paragraph.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), speaking on behalf of this party, has been urging upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) that a statement such as this be made in the House of Commons. Speaking for this party I want to say that we welcome this announcement most warmly. We are sure that the people of Canada will approve of this contribution of $2 million. As the previous speaker has said, we here on the floor of the House are not in a position to judge the adequacy of that amount, but we trust that if events prove that an even larger contribution from Canada is required, the government will give favourable consideration to it.

I join with the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) in urging on behalf of members of this House that the government of Pakistan appreciate the world concern over this situation and that it find a way to permit these supplies to reach the people who need them, under proper supervision.

• (11:20 a.m.)

The only other comment I would like to make is that we feel the government of Canada should be studying very carefully the appeal of Prime Minister Ghandi of India to the nations of the world to realize that this situation in Pakistan or Bangla Desh, in that subcontinent, will have to be resolved by the finding of a political solution. The nations of the world will have to be involved and we think Canada should be giving its best thought to this important and pressing problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, surely the government could not remain indifferent to the current situation in Pakistan and to the refugees from western Pakistan.

My colleagues and myself welcome the announcement made in this House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the effect that Canada is prepared to provide $2 million in relief supplies including food, pharmaceuticals, medical supplies and cash contributions.

We also welcome the fact that the government is acting to ask our High Commissioner to urge the Pakistan government to allow the access of relief under appropriate international control.

We must obviously help ease the hardships of these refugees and we commend the government for taking steps for this purpose.

[English]

TRANSPORT

FERRY FARE INCREASE, NORTH SYDNEY-PORT AUX BASQUES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter concerns the 60 per cent increase in passenger and motor car fares on the government ferry service between North Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Port aux Basques, Newfoundland. This rate increase violates term 32 of the terms of confederation between Canada and Newfoundland. It is an unprecedented breach of the government guidelines against inflation and a foul blow to the Newfoundland tourist industry at a time when 25 per cent of the Newfoundland labour force are unemployed. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas):

"That this House resolves that the fare increase on the Nova Scotia-Newfoundland ferry service be suspended and that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's West. This motion requires unanimous consent of the House by virtue of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

* * *

[Translation]

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

REFERRAL OF PETITIONS AND REPORTS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Victor Forget (Saint-Michel), seconded by Mr. Antonio Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont), moved:

That the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and Royal Victoria Hospital petitions tabled after the delay prescribed by Standing Order 90 be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, with the fourth report of the Clerk of petitions submitted to the House on Friday, May 28, 1971, in order that the Committee be in a position to make the proper recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICIES RESPECTING INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have the honour to present a motion under Standing Order 43, subject to the unanimous consent of the House. The urgent and pressing necessity compelling the motion lies in the fact that, present unemployment-creating policies having failed to cope with inflation, there is an absolute requirement for Canadians to be informed as to the future intentions, if any, of the government in this regard. I would therefore ask unanimous consent to put the following motion:

That in order to restore confidence in the public and to apprise industry and labour of its policies and intentions with regard to establishing a predictable and suitable price structure, the government should forthwith indicate with clarity and precision its target in this connection and the steps it intends to take to achieve it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). It requires unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

FINANCE

SALARY OF MINISTER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion which I should like to offer under Standing Order 43. May I say to hon. members opposite that before they get ready their chorus of no's they listen to the motion because I am sure they will agree with it. In view of certain objections raised by members of the Liberal party, in particular the stand taken by the hon. member for Cochrane to the effect that government funds should not be made available to persons not acting in the national interest, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That the salary of the Minister of Finance be reduced to one dollar.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—INTRODUCTION OF WAGE AND PRICE GUIDELINES—USE OF MANDATORY WAGE AND PRICE CONTROLS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement last night by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission that "present moderation in inflation will not be enough, and some form of direct pressure on wage and price increases will be called for", is it the intention of the government, either itself or through the Prices and Incomes Commission, to announce in the immediate future price and wage guidelines to be adhered to by industry and labour, and is it also the intention of the government at the same time to announce that it is prepared to introduce mandatory price and wage controls if it becomes apparent that these guidelines are being ignored as they were a year ago?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that was a very complicated question. Perhaps I should deal with it piece by piece. It is not the government's intention to introduce wage and price guidelines at the present time. Circumstances may change, but this is not our present intention. As for mandatory wage and price controls, as has been said many times in the House, the government has been looking at contingency plans which might be necessary, but in view of the fact that we have been among the most successful countries in the world in controlling inflation I doubt very much whether they will be needed immediately.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: In view of the fact that the index of industrial production shows a marked drop this week, confirming the high and rising unemployment figures of which we were made aware a short time ago, does the government not believe that now is the time to start giving serious consideration, as the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission has indicated we should, to taking definite steps to face up to these twin problems of high unemployment and high inflation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

BUDGET ACTION TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT AND PRODUCTIVITY RATHER THAN INFLATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Following the submission by Professor Clarence Barber, Chairman of the Department of Economics at the University of Manitoba and past chairman of the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery, to the Senate yesterday to the effect that we are losing $5 billion in production annually because of the high level of unemployment, will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that in his new budget the Minister of Finance will come forward with a program to deal primarily with unemployment and productivity, and not with inflation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is pressing an opposition which is not justified. I do not think it is possible to improve the employment situation by following inflationary policies, and the government does not intend to follow them. What it is following now is a sound expansionary policy. I only wish we had as much support for this as we should have.

Mr. Broadbent: Is the Acting Prime Minister aware that virtually 70 per cent to 80 per cent of the economists in this country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert on a supplementary.

SUGGESTED REPEGGING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR AT FIXED EXCHANGE RATE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I preface my question by saying that under no circumstances would I support a move to reduce the salary of the Minister of Finance to $1. I do not want to see him made a goat, even though he has been made a sheep in following some of the government's policies. I want to ask the minister whether, having regard to all the circumstances set out by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, and this being the first anniversary of the ending of the peg on the dollar, the government is giving consideration now to the restoration of the peg?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I really could not answer that question in the House at this time. If the government made a decision in this regard it would be announced in the normal manner.

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF PROPOSALS FOR CONTROL UNDER STUDY

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the admission of the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission that they are studying a variety of control systems, is the government going to table these proposals and provide them to the provinces for their consideration?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. If it became necessary to apply price and wage controls I should think it would be under circumstances in which the government would act in an emergency, and under such circumstances I do not think one could call one's shots very far in advance.

Mr. Ryan: Does the Acting Prime Minister share the view of the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission that the Canadian economy is now not manageable and—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is not in order. I will recognize a few additional questions on this subject, but I suggest that following that we shoud move to the next subject. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East.

INFLATION—FERRY FARE INCREASE, NORTH SYDNEY-PORT AUX BASQUES—APPROVAL BY GOVERNMENT OR PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, and I ask it of him in the absence of the Minister of Transport. Has the government approved the substantial and extravagant increases in the ferry rates between Newfoundland and the mainland, which will have such a detrimental effect on the already critical economy of Newfoundland?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question that should be directed to the Minister of Transport who has primary responsibility. He will be in the House early next week.

Mr. McGrath: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Perhaps I might have a little more luck with him. The matter certainly falls within his area of responsibility. Has the Prices and Incomes Commission approved the extravagant increases in ferry rates on CNR ferries operating between Newfoundland and the mainland and, if not, will the minister assure the House that he will refer this matter to the commission?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not the purpose of the Prices and Incomes Commission to approve rate increases or rate structures. Whether they are examining these particular rates or increases is something I will have to determine.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION—EVIDENCE OF EMERGENCY—IMPLEMENTATION OF CONTINGENCY PLANS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the government has any early predictions for the level of unemployment during the month of May, whether it has made any calculations itself, whether it can give the House an indication of its expectations, and whether in fact the government has evidence that the economy is in an emergency state of affairs and as a result of this fact, and because of the facts mentioned by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, whether the government will introduce price and wage controls during the budget statement on June 17 or June 18?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the unemployment survey is being taken this week and will not be reported until the second week or third week in June. With respect to what is going to be in the budget, of course the hon. member will have to wait until the budget comes.

Mr. Lundrigan: As a supplementary—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate for one last supplementary on this subject, and then recognize the hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that there is continuous reference to a number of contingency plans and control systems being studied by the government, and also by the gentleman running interference for the government, has the government evidence that the economy has reached a crisis situation of emergency proportions, in terms of unemployment and inflation, sufficient to justify this kind of talk, and does the government in fact plan to introduce these kinds of emergency measures?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear from the very words used by the hon. member that these are contingency plans. They are prepared for a contingency that may or may not arise. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that if circumstances should justify it we should have plans for this purpose, but we do not think these circumstances exist now.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

CHARGES AGAINST INMATES FOLLOWING KINGSTON RIOT —PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES BY MILLHAVEN GUARDS CHARGED WITH OFFENCES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Have charges been laid against any of the inmates of Millhaven institution with regard to alleged offences committed at Kingston penitentiary?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Are the guards against whom charges have been laid still performing their duties at Millhaven institution?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, no disciplinary action has been taken against the guards in the light of the well known basic rule in criminal law to the effect that an individual is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

Besides, upon consultations with the local unit of the Public Service Alliance, we agreed that the guards would have no direct contact with the inmates of Millhaven.

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Why would inmates at Millhaven who have not been charged be transferred to another institution and the guards who have been charged with offences be retained at Millhaven institution?

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that no criminal charges have as yet been laid against the inmates. I am still waiting for the Ontario Provincial Police to finish their investigation into the death of two inmates and the case of the ten wounded in Kingston when the inmates were in full control of the cell-block and of the dome.

We have taken no disciplinary action following the events at Kingston penitentiary.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Solicitor General whether, in view of the fact that he talks about a presumption of innocence so far as the guards are concerned, he is following that same presumption of law so far as the inmates are concerned? In light of his answer may I put this to him: is he going to make a statement to explain his warning or threat that there will be no prison reforms unless the prisoners act responsibly? What kind of threats is he making, and what response does he expect?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked quite a few questions, but I would think that basically he is asking whether a statement will be made by the Solicitor General. Perhaps the Solicitor General might reply to that question.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, what I have said is that if reforms are in order, they will be undertaken. There is no other way to proceed. That is what I have said. It is very simple: to make reforms, we need the co-operation of the inmates, of the guards and of the public in general.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: In view of the statement by the Solicitor General about the presumption of innocence which he applies to the guards, does he apply that same rule of law to the prisoners and inmates of the penitentiaries particularly in light of the threats he has made to them?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, we certainly respect the law and we do not intend deviating from total respect of the law as was done outside penitentiaries. In the penitentiaries we are subject to the law and respect it.

This having been said, I would mention that I have made my remarks on reforms after the events which took place in Dorchester, namely after the second outbreak of troubles and violence. And I am saying again that it is not possible to effect reforms amidst disorder.

[English]

KINGSTON RIOT—DISCIPLINARY ACTION AGAINST INMATES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. In light of the minister's statement that no disciplinary action has been taken, would he kindly explain to the House how PSR 230, which I presume is Prison Service Regulation 230, has resulted in disciplinary action in the case of 30 prisoners as a result of the riot and to which the minister has alluded?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker. I have never avoided answering the question. What I said is reported on page 6039 of Hansard and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that, immediately after the disturbances in Kingston, there was not enough room for some inmates and we had to make use of all other premises available. The choice was not ours, but that of the inmates. Up till now, no disciplinary action has been taken against the inmates and, recently, considering that further disturbances were expected—

And then I was unable to go on with my remarks.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we are entering into a debate over what was said and what was not said.

Mr. Woolliams: He should resign.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not the time or occasion for such debate. The hon. member for Témiscamingue. I shall return to the hon. member for Skeena in a moment.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC RESPECTING PURCHASE OF CL-215 AIRCRAFT FROM CANADAIR

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Due to the rather difficult conditions prevailing at Canadair Limited in Montreal which has dismissed 5,000 workers, has the government or the department been approached by the Quebec authorities concerning the purchase of CL-215 aircraft to help control forest fires, since the building of ten aircraft or an order therefor would enable Canadair to hire 1,500 men for a year and a half? Has the minister been approached by the provincial government in this connection?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the situation is somewhat different. The Quebec government has already bought 15 such aircraft and apparently has more than needed. Quebec has been asked not to put its surplus CL-215 aircraft on the market at the present time in order not to endanger the production opportunities of the company.

However Canadair did ask the federal government to finance the production of additional aircraft and the request is under study.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena had a supplementary to the previous question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENITENTIARIES

RIGHT OF INMATES TO COMMUNICATE WITH MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Solicitor General. With respect to the statements which the minister and Commissioner Faguy made before the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee to the effect that inmates would have the right to communicate directly with the commissioner, with Members of Parliament, and with the minister of course, on a confidential basis, can the minister say whether any change has been made in that situation? Do all inmates still have that right?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I think the Commissioner's statement dealt with written communications between an inmate and his member of Parliament or vice versa. We have changed the policy so that from now on, inmates may send their members of Parliament sealed letters which will not be submitted to the control of penitentiary authorities.

Besides, the measure was taken to answer a request by several members of Parliament. On the other hand, there has been no change to the practice of letting hon. members visit penitentiaries and talk with inmates. There is only one reservation; because of exceptional circumstances, visits to Ontario penitentiaries will not be allowed for the reasons I have already outlined, until the situation is back to normal.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Would the Solicitor General mind checking into an allegation that on Friday, May 21, certain inmates at Collins Bay penitentiary were advised that they could engage in this sort of confidential communication which the minister has committed himself to accept and on Tuesday of this week, May 25, letters that had been written were returned to them by the administration, having been opened, and the prisoners were told that the policy had been changed?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I will surely investigate the matter. It may well be that the instructions have not yet been received by penitentiary wardens and that the Commissioner has not had the opportunity to give instructions. However, I will certainly see to it that the situation is corrected.

[English]

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF OMBUDSMAN TO INVESTIGATE PRISONERS' COMPLAINTS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. In view of the recent riots in Kingston penitentiary and in Millhaven and in view of the unrest and unsettled state of affairs in other penitentiaries and penal institutions across Canada, would the minister consider appointing an ombudsman who would articulate the prisoners' reactions not only to administrative control but also to inappropriate programs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have already announced the steps which we have taken in that respect: they are different. There is no question of an ombudsman because I think that one man alone cannot handle that job. Our system and our means of communication with the prisoners must be improved, and it is to that end that our efforts are now being made.

* * *

[English]

WELFARE

ADDITIONAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES BECAUSE OF LAPSE OF SEASONAL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Since seasonal unemployment benefits will run out as of next Monday, does the government have any plans to provide financial assistance to the provinces to the tune of at least $40 million as the provinces will in effect have to pay these benefits in welfare measures?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the hypothesis upon which this question is based. The government is now paying 50 per cent of these costs through the plans already in effect.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Acting Prime Minister as he does not accept the previous one. Has the government any plans to extend seasonal benefits so that people will not be on relief or do they plan to give more money for the benefit of pregnant elephants in Malaysia?

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a supplementary or related question for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister two budgets prepared and is it his intention to introduce budget one if the government wins the by-elections and budget two if they do not?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

AIR CANADA

PROVISION OF SEPARATE SEATING AREA ON PLANES FOR NON-SMOKERS

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I had a question for the Minister of Transport but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government given any consideration to providing separate seating areas on Air Canada planes for non-smokers in view of the fact that these facilities are available on most other types of travel accommodation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder how urgent this question is. I suggest to the hon. member that it is the type of question which would normally be placed on the order paper.

[Mr. Paproski.]

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES ON USE OF FOREIGN CAPITAL

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in connection with a statement he made about the $6 billion James Bay hydro project. The minister is reported to have said that "massive inflows of foreign capital" to finance power projects and other resource developments could disrupt the rest of the Canadian economy. May I ask the minister whether he has made these views known to the province of Quebec and, if so, what was the reply?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, where my hon. friend is getting these views of mine, but what I have said is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is acceptable only to the extent that the hon. member is inviting the minister to make a statement, but I suggest that he cannot comment or refer to a statement made outside the House. The rule is well known that such statements can be referred to only to the extent that a member may inquire whether the statement represents government policy.

Mr. Saltsman: May I direct the same question to the Acting Prime Minister and ask whether the statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the danger of massive capital inflows in case the James Bay hydro project is proceeded with reflects government policy?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member is alleging that I made some statement of which he has no evidence. I do not think he is entitled to do that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Saltsman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member will resume his seat, I will suggest to him and to the minister that this is obviously not a question of privilege. I had the opportunity earlier today to indicate to hon. members that a dispute over facts cannot give rise to a question of privilege. This is a dispute between the member and the minister as to what was or was not said outside the House, and that should not be the subject of debate at this time.

Mr. Saltsman: In view of the report I have before me, which I presume is accurate unless proven otherwise, is the Acting Prime Minister in a position to answer the question I put to him?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it all rests upon whether or not the statement is accurate. The minister has denied he made such a statement; therefore I have nothing to say.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order. I apologize to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. I will return to him in a brief moment, I hope.

Mr. Saltsman: I wonder whether I might ask the question directly of the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government taken a position regarding the development of the $6 billion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

* * *

OIL

PROPOSED TAPS TANKER ROUTE—GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING STRAIT OF GEORGIA—FORMAL EXPRESSION TO UNITED STATES OF OPPOSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I will try the Acting Prime Minister on government policy. Was the minister responsible for the environment speaking for himself or was he enunciating government policy when he recently said it will be necessary to "prevent oil companies coming into the Strait of Georgia?" If so, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs going to express Canada's formal opposition to the TAPS route at his meeting in Washington on June 10?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I join with the Minister of Fisheries, who will be responsible for the environment, in saying that our particular concern about the movement of oil down the Pacific coast relates to those narrow waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca and the Strait of Georgia. This is the area about which we have the most concern and on which we will be making the strongest representations to the United States government.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister or the minister who will be in charge of the environment if this means that they are going to stop the present oil tankers carrying oil to the city of Victoria?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of tankers taking crude oil to the city of Victoria. There are no refineries there.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EAST PAKISTAN—REQUESTS FOR POLITICAL ASYLUM IN CANADA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government has received requests from political exiles in East Pakistan for political asylum in this country? If so, what has been the response thereto?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer is not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will make inquiries and report.

* * *

GRAIN

RESUMPTION OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT AND PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT TO INCREASE FARM INCOME

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the general decrease in farm income in 1970, with the major part of that decline occurring in the Prairie provinces, will the government reconsider its proposal to discontinue payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act at least for this year or until the farm economy has a chance to recover from the present serious income decline?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to move ahead with the legislation to replace these measures. I think it will be much more valuable than anything that has been done in the past.

Mr. Gleave: My supplementary question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister give some assurance to the House that he will press the government to consider the very serious situation of agriculture in the prairie region?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I have been doing that for many months.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BIRTHDAY CONGRATULATIONS TO MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): May I through you, Mr. Speaker, wish the Minister of Finance a happy birthday—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: —and an extremely prosperous economy in the years ahead.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRESENCE OF JAPANESE VESSELS FISHING FOR SALMON OFF GREENLAND

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a serious question for the Acting Prime Minister. Can he report on the questions raised in the House on Wednesday with regard to the report of the presence of Japanese vessels off the coast of Greenland engaged in the harvesting of Atlantic salmon?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I have not had any reports to this effect, Mr. Speaker, but I will certainly look into the matter.

Mr. Lundrigan: This matter was drawn to the attention of the Acting Prime Minister on Wednesday. I am sure he has had time to investigate it. Can we have his report?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have my personal spies in the area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have personal spies?

Mr. Sharp: I generally depend, with reason, upon the Minister of Fisheries who is doing an excellent job of supervising our fisheries and seeing that our resources are conserved.

* * *

INCOME TAX

REMOVAL OF EXEMPTION GRANTED UNITED STATES PROFESSORS AT CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): My question is for the Minister of Finance. I join my colleague in wishing a happy birthday to "gentle Ben". Has the government reached a decision on whether to remove the present tax concession to American academics? Will the minister make a statement in that regard now or do we, as he states, have to wait until the presentation of the budget?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have stated previously, for example, in the white paper proposals, that the exemption could be lifted; the particular advantage that is given to foreign teachers coming to Canada should be lifted. This will, of course, necessitate renegotiation of treaties in due course. I cannot say whether this remains our opinion until the budget is produced.

* * *

THE CENSUS

COST OF PENCILS PROVIDED WITH FORMS

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and it concerns the census. It is true that the pencils provided with the census forms cost the taxpayers of Canada between $100,000 and $200,000 and, if so, how does the government justify such an expenditure?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question could well be placed on the order paper in writing, with a pencil.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRESENCE OF JAPANESE VESSELS FISHING FOR SALMON OFF GREENLAND

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether any investigation was carried out with regard to the charge made in the House on Wednesday that there were Japanese involved in the salmon fishery off Greenland? The minister has treated this question very lightly. He gave a very negative response to a matter which is of grave concern in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister might reply to the first part of the question.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, at the present time our officials are meeting in Halifax with the Japanese and representatives of other countries. They should be able to provide us with up to date information. I am personally asking for a report on the matter.

[Later:]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday an urgent matter was raised in the House regarding a foreign nation involving itself in the salmon fishery operation, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I understand, undertook to make an investigation. I charge there has been a dereliction of duty on his part. If we continue to receive this kind of response from the Secretary of State for External Affairs he should get to heck out of it altogether.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should resume his seat.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FISHERIES QUOTAS AT ICNAF MEETING

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): In view of the importance of maintaining our fisheries resources off our Atlantic coast, have quotas been established among the 15 nations of ICNAF, at the meeting in Halifax? If so, how many ICNAF countries have agreed to maintain national fishing quotas and how many have indicated they will not maintain fishing quotas?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Some quotas have been established for some species of fish in certain areas. Negotiations are continuing throughout this current week and into next week in the hope of extending quotas to other species in more areas.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question. Has Canada's position regarding a total ban on salmon fishing on the high seas met with support at the ICNAF meeting, apart from Denmark?

Mr. Davis: The subject of Atlantic salmon comes up next Wednesday. Our position continues to be that of a total ban of fishing for salmon on the high seas.

THE CENSUS

DECLARATION OF HEAD OF HOUSEHOLD

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the declaration contained in the census questionnaire that the head of the household is the husband rather than the wife is inaccurate, misleading and undemocratic—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis: —to the point of insulting large numbers of people who must complete the form, would the minister say whether such an antediluvian description was made with his approval?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Bureau of Statistics has to go by appearances most of the time, and this is one such occasion. May I, however, invite members of the House who have any problems respecting the census to come to room 112-N this afternoon at 1.30 where their questions will be answered by officials of the Bureau of Statistics.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In connection with the meeting which is to take place this afternoon—and for which an invitation has been warmly given by the minister—does it mean that changes will be made and that, for instance, religion will be included in the short form from which it has now been omitted?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker, but some of the mistakes made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert will be corrected at that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, the minister says he is going to correct some mistakes that I made. Let me point out that there is no reference to the fourth largest ethnic group in Canada, the Ukrainian, in the short form, despite the falsification in which he participated in my absence last Friday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the right hon. member that what he has raised is not a question of privilege but a matter of debate.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

PLACING OF CERTAIN INMATES IN COLLINS BAY DISSOCIATION CELLS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. As his statement of May 21 about inmates being transferred at their own request from Millhaven to dissociation cells in Collins Bay and Kingston penitentiaries has resulted, to say the least, in misunderstanding and in a cloud of suspicion being placed over the heads of these people, would the hon. gentleman care to qualify that observation or apologize for the distortion which has taken place, if that is what did take place, in the statement he made?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have never said that the prisoners had chosen to be transferred from Millhaven to another place. I said that, as a result of the events in Kingston, we were short of accommodation, that the prisoners had chosen to destroy the buildings in Kingston. That is what I said.

While the prisoners were in Millhaven, the commissioner was advised that trouble was brewing; as a precautionary measure, we chose to transfer some of the Millhaven prisoners to other institutions.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

ASSISTANCE TO MANITOBA FISHERMEN BECAUSE OF POLLUTION OF CERTAIN LAKES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Can he tell the House whether the government has considered supporting the creation of a special compensation program and an early retirement program for some 207 fishermen who have lost their jobs through no fault of their own because of mercury pollution of Lake Winnipeg and surrounding lakes in Manitoba?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): A program has been under discussion with the government of Manitoba and the details will be announced shortly.

* * *

EDUCATION

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION COURSES

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): May I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It is further to a question I asked him last week, which he may recall, respecting the decline in enrolment in business administration courses at our universities. Will the government now give consideration to the recommendation of the Economic Council that joint programs in this area be developed with industry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In general, the government is sympathetic to the need for more graduates in business in this country and we have been assisting indirectly in a number of ways, as well as directly, of course, by paying 50 per cent of the operating costs of all higher education. So I can give a positive answer to that question.

Mr. McCutcheon: Will the government consult with the provinces on this matter as well as on the suggestion by the Economic Council that business administration programs, for instance, should be extended to such fields as public health, recreation and consumer protection?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member' supplementary is in the form of a proposition or suggestion to the government and he has to assume it will be considered.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED SUBSIDIZATION OF WAGES PAID TO STUDENTS WORKING ON FARMS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. When the government is considering programs related to students, would it also give consideration to subsidizing the wages of students who wish to work on farms during the summer months? Many jobs are available on farms, but the agricultural industry cannot pay the rates which students feel they should be paid. Would the government consider a subsidy program in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I do not think we have any program under discussion now which would involve the subsidization of wages. This is a principle which has many implications and some of them, as the hon. member can see for himself, are rather undesirable.

* * *

POLLUTION

OTTAWA-HULL AREA—ESTABLISHMENT OF WATER QUALITY MANAGEMENT AGENCY

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): May I address a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Has a water quality management agency been set up for the Ottawa-Hull area under the Canada Water Act and, if not, are arrangements being made for the establishment of such an agency?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps while the matter is being pondered the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West.

* * *

FINANCE

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT MONETARY POLICY IN LOWERING INTEREST RATES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the average interest on long-term government obligations, as announced by the Bank of Canada today, has increased by half a point compared with the low of a few weeks ago, will the minister advise the House whether he feels that the present monetary policy of the government is having the effect of lowering interest rates?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): It certainly has with respect to short-term interest rates. The treasury bill rate 18 months ago was 8 per cent. It is now less than 3 per cent. Long-term rates have not reacted to the same degree either here or in the United States; although they have declined somewhat, the decline has not been nearly as great.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In view of the fact that there has been an increase of over half a point on long-term obligations in general, and in view of the fact that mortgage rates under CMHC and other loan programs of the government are related to this long-term rate, how can the minister say that the monetary policy of the government—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a matter for debate between the hon. member and the minister.

* * *

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDRO-ELECTRIC PROJECT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FEDERAL POSITION

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the wide-ranging financial aspects of the James Bay power project, would the Acting Prime Minister be prepared to make a statement on motions as to the position of the federal government on this very interesting subject?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not expect to be Acting Prime Minister for more than a few minutes.

* * *

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING ROCHDALE COLLEGE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the future minister of state in charge of housing and urban affairs. In light of the revealing information he gave the standing committee yesterday about Rochdale and the rather messy situation there, solutions for which are not readily available, and in light of the fact that the taxes are approximately two years in arrears and the mortgage—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. Perhaps the hon. member would ask his question.

Mr. Alexander: In view of the fact that the preamble has been given, would the minister indicate what is the government's intention with respect to what he calls a very messy affair?

Mr. Speaker: The minister's reply should be as brief as possible. If it is to be a general statement it should be made on motions. The minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I appreciated knowing that the hon. member, speaking yesterday for his party, indicated his party's wish to see an immediate foreclosure on Rochdale. Since we have not reached that decision yet, I will not be in a position to give him a complete answer for another short time, anyway.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the minister could come to such a conclusion. If he asked me personally, in view of the situation involving this very messy affair, I would suggest that perhaps he should think of foreclosing and give the place to senior citizens who could put it to better use.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, the usual Thursday afternoon point of order, which is being put on Friday. Could the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is acting as government House leader, say what is the intention with regard to government legislation for next week.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it is a great thrill for me to be acting as House leader.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: It is a great honour too. On Monday, the order will be, first, the Wheat Board amendment; second, the Post Office Act amendment and, third, the Clean Air Act. On Tuesday and for the remainder of the week the order will be, first, the Senate and House of Commons Act amendment; second, the Official Residences Act; third, the Post Office Act amendments, if not completed on Monday, and fourth, the Judges Act amendments. In any case Thursday and Friday will be opposition days.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister does a better job as house leader than as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

* * *

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REGULARITY OF TABLING OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE TO HOUSE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope Your Honour will hear my point of order because it is very important. It relates to the tabling today of the third report of the Standing Committee on Regional Development. The Standing Committee on Regional Development held its last meeting on Friday, May 21. The committee was called together at 10 a.m. and did not have a quorum until approximately 10.25 a.m. Immediately a quorum was present, Mr. Speaker, I presented a motion to the chair asking that the salary of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion be reduced to $1. I did that as a result of the evidence that had been presented to the committee during the course of the examination of the estimates. Members of the committee, in my view, were not satisfied with the policies that the minister was pursuing. The evidence to which I referred had been presented to the committee by expert witnesses and supported this point of view.

Immediately that motion was put, one of the Liberal members of the committee left the meeting, thereby depriving the committee of a quorum. Hence it was not possible to proceed with my motion. Shortly afterwards, Mr. Speaker, approximately four members of the Liberal party arrived, including the hon. member who had left. I questioned the propriety of these hon. members having been placed on the committee under the terms of Standing Order 65(4)(b) after the committee had been called together. In other words, after my motion had been placed before the committee, these members were placed on it with a view to having the Liberal party maintain its majority on the committee and, hence, to defeat my motion.

An hon. Member: Surely not.

Mr. McGrath: I claimed at that time that this was clearly an abuse of Standing Order 65(4)(b). If Your Honour will examine the Standing Order, I hope that Your Honour will agree with that contention. In any event, debate proceeded on the contention that Standing Order 65(4)(b) was being abused as a result of members being placed on the Standing Committee after it had been called together and after my motion had been placed before the committee.

The debate continued, Mr. Speaker, until approximately eleven o'clock, at which time the bells started to ring to call the House together. At that time the six members of the official opposition who were on the committee quite properly rose and left the committee, because the bells were calling them to their place in the House. Consequently, the motion, in our view, was still before the committee. In our view no vote had been taken on the estimates and, indeed, a vote could not properly be taken on the estimates because the bells had begun ringing to call members to the House for the day's sitting. I therefore contend that the third report of the committee should be withdrawn because it is not, in my view, properly before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: The third report states that votes 1, 5, 10, L15, L20, L25 and L30 relating to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and vote 35 relating to the Cape Breton Development Corporation were passed. The report states that, "your committee commends them to the House". That is not so. The committee did not commend those estimates to the House. The committee did not vote on the estimates. I would, therefore, ask you to direct that this report be withdrawn and properly drafted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will look at the matter brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. The hon. member may have another point of order but the hon. member for St. John's East has submitted his point and I said I would look into the matter. I can assure all hon. members that I will look into the matter in all its details and give a ruling as quickly as I can.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REFUSAL OF GOVERNMENT TO HAVE U.S.S.R.-CANADA PROTOCOL CONSIDERED BY HOUSE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough) moved:

That this House regrets the refusal of the government to bring before the House for consideration and decision the U.S.S.R.-Canada protocol in order that all aspects of this relationship can be considered before implementation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have accepted the invitation of the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) which was delivered yesterday to devote an opposition day to the discussion of the Soviet-Canada protocol. I can tell him that we did not choose this topic because there was any shortage of items on which we could criticize the present government. Indeed, the shelf which contains our potential and future motions of criticism is larger than that which contains the white papers, task forces and letters of resignation from the present government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: So, Mr. Speaker, we are not short of topics. Although, Sir, we are bringing this matter to the attention of the House, and glad to do so in the performance of our duty, we should not be the ones to do this. The government itself should have brought this matter to this chamber. It should have brought to this House for discussion this very important document, as it has described it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: Time was when we had foreign policy debates in this place initiated by a government; now, however, in the age of participatory democracy, such inhibitions as parliamentary discussions have been sloughed off. Press releases are much simpler and visits to distant lands with press entourages are obviously much more dashing and exciting. We have grown accustomed, not to innocents abroad but to professionals abroad. Perhaps it is considered valuable for Canada's Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to become the tourist of the year. Nor should we be critical if the Prime Minister desires to escape from time to time the troubles which his administration has visited upon this country. We have no quarrel with the glamourized publicity—kissing orangoutangs or sliding down banisters is all right with me. If this be descending charisma, so be it. Showmanship is fine but I become concerned when showmanship is taken for statesmanship. So I shall leave aside the frills, frivolities and furbelows of the Russian and other visits and try to examine such things and statements as might be considered serious and significant and beyond the range of the travelogue or public relations field. For such scrutiny there is at least one document which demands our attention, and that is the protocol referred to in the motion now under discussion.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (12:20 p.m.)

This protocol was signed on May 19 after the Prime Minister's first full day in Russia. One might describe it as almost "instant diplomacy", or was it an item held in freeze from last October when it was thought that a visit to the Soviet Union would be made? According to Time magazine of May 24, and this is a journal not unloved by the government:

Such are the formalities surrounding an official visit to Russia that the communiqué summing up the full and frank discussions between Trudeau and Kosygin was, in fact, drafted before Trudeau even left Ottawa.

This interesting revelation is to be found at pages 4 and 5 of the latest issue of Time magazine. We received it today so Time must have had this information much earlier, and that is not surprising. In the light of this revelation, the narrowly prosaic or frugal might ask in the wartime expression "was this trip really necessary?"

The protocol document was signed with much fanfare and many press statements, but without such mundane things as consultation with or reference to the Canadian Parliament or the Canadian people. We are told that because it was a protocol such inhibiting developments as Parliamentary discussion need not be forthcoming. This is a matter which requires examination, but not much examination before one comes to the conclusion that the naming of this particular testament as a protocol does not by any means avoid the requirement and the propriety that it be discussed in this place and before the Canadian people. Whatever the name used, whether it be called a treaty, an agreement or a protocol, the intent and effects of documents of this kind may be far-reaching for both countries and should have been discussed in Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: Going back to 1926, Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King—at times I think he still lives—moved a resolution which set out the procedure governing the negotiation, signature and notification of international agreements and treaties. He stated that:

—before His Majesty's Canadian ministers—

That is now an archaism!

—advise notification of a treaty or convention affecting Canada or signing acceptance of any treaty convention or agreement involving military or economic sanctions, the approval of the Parliament of Canada should be secured.

That is to be found in Hansard at page 4759 for the year 1926. It refers to a treaty or a convention affecting Canada. Now, we move on past the day of Mackenzie King and come to some of the luminaries of our governmental services. One of these is Mr. A. E. Gotlieb, a well-known international affairs expert and one of our best international lawyers who, in his book "Canada Treaty-Making" at pages 16 and 17 stated:

A study of Canadian precedents over the years tends to confirm that governments of the day have, as a general rule, considered that the important categories of treaties for which parliamentary approval should be sought prior to ratification fall roughly into four general groups involving:

(1) Military or economic sanctions;

(2) large expenditures of public funds or important financial or economic implications;

(3) political considerations of a far-reaching character.

Surely, if the words of the Acting Prime Minister are to be taken at face value, that this protocol is an historic and important agreement, it would fall clearly within the category set out in paragraph 3 of Professor Gotlieb's book. He is now the Deputy Minister of Communications. If this document, signed in the Soviet Union, is to be taken at face value it is surely one involving political considerations of a far-reaching character. I would say that regardless of the terminology and the designation by the press of this agreement between two countries, any measure into which Canada enters with one of the great powers of the world—the superstate of the Soviet Union —would have to be treated as a major move and should deserve the consideration of this Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: To do less with any agreement or negotiation with one of the great powers of the world is clearly a contempt of Parliament or a denigration of the importance of the document. So to find out, since the document was not put before us, we have to go to that usual source, the lyrical Lynch of the Southam chain, and his associates who have been following the Prime Minister from south to north and from east to west during his latest tour. We must turn to them for information and evaluation, and God knows that is a hazardous enough undertaking for any of us. There have been fullsome and sometimes fanciful reports of what went on, and efforts at judgment and description which, if nothing else, are interesting and readable. Some see the Russian trip as a new bridge of understanding, and some regard it as a buttress to Canadian independence from the United States. I say that this suggestion is unworthy, if not contemptible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: The United States is not above reproach but anyone, especially in the Soviet Union, who reflects upon the state of the borders with that country and its neighbouring states, and reflects upon the many generations of our peaceful, open border with the United States and makes the suggestion that it is necessary to call in the Soviet Union to sustain us from the pressure of the economy, culture and military—I use the word "military" as it was used in the report from which I read—is again making a contemptible, unworthy, improper and totally unrealistic statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: As I said, the lyrical Lynch saw the Prime Minister calling in the old world to redress the imbalance of the new, recalling the great George Canning. Charles Lynch also said of the protocol:

That may be one way of saying that Canada can have Washington's cake and eat Moscow's caviar, with Peking's duck as a main course.

To this suggestion, Mr. Speaker, I reply, that is quite a meal if you can get it.

Mr. Crouse: All we have is a goose.

Mr. Macquarrie: How significant in the field of international affairs is the protocol? What does it mean to public relations between the two signatories and other states which have important international commitments? It is in this area we face a great problem. Is this grandstanding, is it windowdressing, or is it something else again? I looked for some quotation from the Prime Minister and I came up with something very reminiscent of Humpty Dumpty, as quoted in the Globe and Mail of March 21:

But Mr. Trudeau himself said that the protocol will be what the two countries choose to make of it.

• (12:30 p.m.)

But what do we mean? Is this another development on the international scene of the famous grandstanding techniques which were so long successful in this country domestically? Is it another case like the great Commonwealth initiative which was to have saved the Commonwealth at the Singapore meeting, but which was in ashes and ruin almost before the Prime Minister returned to Canada to read his own press releases concerning how well he had done.

An hon. Member: Read the paper and find out the truth.

An hon. Member: Or make your own speech.

Mr. Macquarrie: Or is this something fundamental? Is this an important and historic agreement? I say if it is it is outrageous that it should be entered into through the back door, through secrecy and without reference to the Canadian people or before discussion in Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: If this is important, if this is a watershed, if this is a great triumph in touristic statesmanship, then it has been very badly handled. The people shoud be consulted. This government has not made many moves in the field of foreign affairs. Usually, it reveals the withdrawal syndrome reminiscent of the 1930's and Mackenzie King. In its few moves in the realm of foreign affairs, this government has been distinguished for its unilateralism. The dropping of the Commonwealth sugar rebate in the Caribbean is one example of this. But if this is an important document, it should not only have been preceded by consultations here or followed by consultations here but also with consultations with our allies who are very much involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: One is beginning to be concerned about the place of our friends of long standing and the priority of values in this government's foreign policy. One wonders why the head of the Canadian government, so ready to go to far away places with strange sounding names, has so little interest in on the on-the-spot conversations with the leaders of Great Britain, West Europe or the United States. Is it now thought that these areas are of diminishing interest or concern for Canada or for the people of the world? I fear that the people of this country must be among the first to suffer because of the downgrading of our interest and concern for West Europe and Britain.

The government, despite constant warnings by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and others, has not made meaningful adjustments to the likely trade outcome of Britain's entry into the European Common Market. The flurry of last minute interest by ministers would almost lead one to believe that they first heard about the British contemplation the week before last. Perhaps history may judge that the Prime Minister of Canada might better have been in Brussels rather than in Tashkent or even Samarkand. This House has taken up for discussion this day a matter of international concern because the government did not choose to make its secret document a subject for House discussion. We were without access to its contents beyond the mere statement which has been tabled. We do not have the information necessary to judge all its ramifications. So we face an important document in a very casual way. But we can, without hesitation, deplore the method whereby this protocol was adopted. I should like to say, Sir, that the denigration of Parliament becomes no more acceptable just because it becomes more and more common as month follows month.

Now, of course, any improvement in our contact with the Soviet Union and its people is welcome. I was not one of those who relished the brittle era of the cold war, nor would I aid or abet any of those who would wish to return to the narrow and rigid diplomacy of that period. Of course, we welcome detente. I was proud to be a supporter of the government of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) in its great extensions of trade, not only with the Soviet Union but with the Peoples Republic of China, which I believe had profound effects for good not only in this country but in the other countries as well. There is no reason there cannot be fruitful discussion with the government of the Soviet Union, but this must not be at the expense of others upon whom in the final analysis we must depend for such security as is vouchsafed to anybody in this insecure world of tension and trial.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would say again that we must be ever watchful lest the postures of popularity leads us away from the perceptions of reality. We are anxious to appear open-minded. Nobody wants to be called a red-baiter or narrow-minded nowadays. We must also always be broad in outlook. In fact, it is dangerous to oppose anything that is considered different. But in all this, we cannot forget the realities of the world situation. There was the event in Hungary in 1956. There is the Berlin wall; we did not build it and the United States did not build it, neither did Great Britain build it. All of us here can remember the grim tidings of that summer morning in 1968 when that proud little country Czechoslovakia was brutally crushed and its flourishing new socialist freedom was obliterated. We cannot forget that the Baltic States are in thrall. These are people who had aspirations and hopes for development and countries which, for brief periods, flourished as sensitive democracies.

Can we ignore the plight of the Soviet Jew? Is there not an extension of Russian naval strength in the Mediterranean, in the Red Sea and in the Indian Ocean? Was there not such a thing as the Brezhnev doctrine announced a while ago and was it a pleasant thing to contemplate for those who knew of its dangers. In our desire for scientific talks and for ameliorated conditions let us not be totally bemused by the jubilation of the visit and the social harmony of the situation. Let us not forget to ask whether or not the hard questions were discussed. Were there really serious discussions about the deprivations of the fishery on the east coast which affect the livelihood of many decent Canadian people who make their living from the sea. Were there meaningful discussions about the future of the captive peoples? When the right hon. member for Prince Albert was the Prime Minister of this country, the Canadian delegation to the United Nations General Assembly took up the question of the people who were held in bondage by the Soviet Union. Should these things be forgotten? I hear very little reference to this in the House. Just because freedom is long suppressed it does not mean this issue should be forgotten.

• (12:40 p.m.)

What of the Ukraine? How fully was that situation discussed? What about the fishing in the troubled waters of the Middle East and the involvement there? There is a long list of serious matters which will remain on the table after the banquet hall is cleared and the guests have departed. Even a small contribution to the solution of some of these problems would be infinitely more valuable than grandiloquent exercises in self-congratulation on ephemeral accomplishments in an attempt to claim that, by one stroke of a prime ministerial pen, the world has been turned upside down and new eras have been entered into and old values kicked out.

I should like to say in conclusion that if this protocol is as important as designated by the Acting Prime Minister, then it should properly have been presented to Parliament and to the Canadian people as an important document rather than taken secretly out of the brief case and flourished before the people of the Soviet Union.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: If it is more public relations froth, it should not be deceptively presented to the Canadian people with over-exaggeration as to its import. I say to the government that on a question of such vital and sensitive consequence, they had better be careful to present this to the Canadian people for what it is and for nothing more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) said, I welcomed the action of the opposition in putting this motion on the table on one of the opposition days because I was very anxious to find out what views the opposition might have on the protocol that had been signed by the prime ministers of Canada and of the Soviet Union. I listened with great interest to what the hon. member for Hillsborough had to say, and I must say I remain very confused as to the views of the Official Opposition on the subject that they have raised.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: At one point I began to be encouraged when I listened carefully to the phrases near the conclusion of the very witty and good speech of my hon. friend. It seemed to me that he said—I think this is the position of the Official Opposition, and if it is not, perhaps I can be corrected—that he favours this protocol. I think that was the position he took. He then went on to try to get on the other side of the subject, if he could so that those in his party who oppose the protocol could say that he had in fact not endorsed it. However, perhaps the party itself can clear up its own confusion.

So far as the government is concerned, it is strongly in favour of this protocol. Indeed, one of the principal reasons it is in favour is exactly the reason put forward by the hon. member at the conclusion of his speech when, in speaking about the trip of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the Soviet Union, he said that there will remain on the table problems of great importance. That is precisely the reason it is important that we should have improved methods of consultation with the Soviet Union. That is why I have no question in my mind about this protocol, its purpose and what it will do to the future. As for the comments that the hon. gentleman has made about what the Prime Minister said in the Soviet Union, of course the Prime Minister himself will deal with these questions.

Let me direct my attention to the terms of the motion itself which says that we should have brought this protocol before the House of Commons for discussion before it was signed by the Prime Minister. As the House knows, it is clear under our constitution that the power to make arrangements with other nations resides in the Crown, that is to say, in the government. I do not believe there is any dispute about it, and my hon. friend proved that fact. It has always been Canadian practice to table documents of an important nature in the House as soon as it may conveniently be done. In this case, as hon. members are aware, the protocol was tabled on May 20, a day after it was signed in Moscow. This protocol envisages consultations on a wide range of issues between the government of Canada and the Soviet Union. It does not stand alone, but is the latest in a series of arrangements for consultation entered into by successive Canadian governments, of which one of the first was with one of the great powers referred to by the hon. member for Hillsborough, namely, the United States.

Let us look at what happened on that occasion. That was entered into in 1953 by an exchange of notes between the two governments. I do not think that hon. members question the importance of that document. If I had been the secretary of state for external affairs at that time, I would have referred to it as an important and historic document, exactly the words that I used the other day with respect to the protocol for consultation with the Soviet Union. I do not think that hon. members either will question the value to Canada of this joint committee which, with few exceptions, has met annually to discuss matters of substance. There was no debate whatever in the House of Commons prior to the exchange of notes. It was reported to the House, as I have reported on behalf of the government, the signing of the protocol with the Soviet Union.

Now, I come to one that is perhaps of even more significance in the light of the fact that the Official Opposition has taken exception to the procedure that was followed. I refer to the Canada-Japan Ministerial Committee which was established on June 26, 1961 by the government of which the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was the prime minister. This committee has met regularly since and has proved to be a valuable instrument in the conduct of relations with our neighbour to the west. Indeed, among the instruments that provide for consultation, and we have very few of these, this was the second to be established. It was also an historic and important document. In this case, there was not even an exchange of notes. The committee was set up and a joint communique issued in Ottawa by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, then prime minister, and Mr. Ikeda, then prime minister of Japan. They did not even sign a protocol; they issued a joint communique. The most careful perusal of the official record fails to disclose that the right hon. member for Prince Albert found it necessary or appropriate to consult Parliament before taking action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Arrangements of this kind are enabling in nature and do not necessarily impose obligations upon either side. A Mexico-Canada Joint Committee was established by exchange of notes on November 22, 1968, without prior debate in the House. I bring these facts to the attention of the House because they show the flexibility that is possible within these arrangements. In fact, the joint committee that was established has not yet met. This does not suggest that the government does not attach great importance to our relations with Mexico or that the committee will not meet. As a matter of fact, I expect that it will meet this year, but it has been a matter of convenience and therefore these kinds of arrangements are very flexible. They are as useful as we want to make them. In effect, it is for this that these arrangements provide.

As I have suggested, the form used to establish arrangements of this kind can vary depending upon circumstances. Informal consultative arrangements also exist with France. We have a commission mixé. These arrangements were brought into being without any written exchange and without debate in the House, and have proven no less useful and effective for those reasons.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I do not intend to rehearse today the circumstances in which all our arrangements similar to the Canada-U.S.S.R. Protocol were worked out. In addition to those I have dealt with, we have consultative arrangements with Britain, Australia, New Zealand and Tunisia. In no case was any of these arrangements reached after debate in the House.

It cannot be argued that the signing of the Protocol augurs any change in the direction of our foreign policy. The Prime Minister has stated publicly in Moscow that Mr. Kosygin signed the Protocol in the full understanding that Canada intends to continue its full membership in the North Atlantic Alliance and as a close ally of the United States in the defence of North America. The Prime Minister and I on a number of occasions have stated in this House and elsewhere Canada's firm intention to increase its bilateral contacts with the nations of Eastern Europe. A definitive statement of government policy on this matter is there for all to read in "Foreign Policy for Canadians."

The North Atlantic Alliance, in its search for detente, has urged upon its members, including Canada, the advantages to be gained by the multiplication of contacts and consultations between its members and members of the Warsaw Pact, so that far from doing anything that is suspicious to our allies we are in fact carrying out what has been decided upon as sound policy in the interests of promoting peace and stability in the world.

In this connection hon. members will recall that a protocol providing for consultations on a wide range of issues was signed in Moscow last October by President Podgorny of the Soviet Union and President Pompidou of France, one of our NATO allies. And apropos of the point made by the hon. member opposite that we did not consult with our allies in advance of our signing this Protocol with the Soviet Union, I can assure the House that France did not consult her allies before signing that protocol with the Soviet Union. We took no exception to it. We welcomed it, and I hope that today the hon. member has welcomed our signing a similar protocol. I know that our Protocol with the Soviet Union will be welcomed by our allies as carrying out a firm and declared policy of NATO.

The development of Canada's bilateral relations with the Soviet Union has been steady and positive, although there have been a number of setbacks. After the euphoria that characterized the immediate post-war period our relations might have been described as correct. The cold war thawed briefly in the period 1955-56 and a trade agreement between Canada and the Soviet Union was signed at Ottawa on February 29, 1956. This was followed by a visit to the Soviet Union by the right hon. Lester B. Pearson, then Secretary of State for External Affairs. This was the first visit made by a Canadian secretary of state for external affairs to the Soviet Union.

The present phase of our relations with the Soviet Union can be said to date from 1965 which saw the first academic exchanges and the first posting of Canadian newsmen in Moscow. These moves stemmed from the first large sales of Canadian wheat, from the détente arising from the settlement of the Cuban crisis, and the signing of the test ban treaty. Continuing wheat sales and the growing Soviet need for western sources of technology encouraged the Soviet Union to seek closer relations and wider exchanges, cultural, technological and scientific, with Canada. Soviet participation in Expo 1967 brought Deputy Premier Polyansky to Canada in 1966 and 1967. A number of other Soviet ministers also visited Expo 1967, as did some 6,000 other Soviet citizens. In the same year Senator Martin, then Secretary of State for External Affairs, visited the Soviet Union, as did other ministers.

The Soviet Union, after the freeze in east-west relations brought about by the invasion of Czechoslovakia, moved quickly to re-establish contact with a number of western countries, including Canada. In July, 1969, Mr. Gromyko, the Soviet Foreign Minister, stated that:

> The Soviet government attaches substantial significance to our relations with Canada. In recent years, a widening of mutually beneficial links have developed in the economic, technical, scientific and cultural fields—

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister accept a question?

Mr. Sharp:

> —and a good basis laid for political contacts between our countries. We are for a further development of relations with Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond seeks the consent of the minister to ask a question at this time.

Mr. MacInnis: I wonder if the minister realizes the synchronization between himself and the three members in the gallery was slightly off on the turning of that last page. One fellow was a little slow.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I compliment the hon. member for Hillsborough. His witticisms were far superior.

Mr. McBride: That isn't hard.

Mr. Sharp: This was closely followed by Mr. Gromyko's visit to Ottawa in October, 1969. This visit gave renewed impetus to negotiations toward the Agreement on Co-operation in the Industrial Application of Science and Technology, signed on behalf of Canada by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) in January of this year. Canada has responded and is continuing to respond to these Soviet initiatives carefully, after due thought, and in pursuit of our own national aims and objectives.

At the same time we have not hesitated to let the Soviet Union know, in the clearest possible terms, when we disagree with them. This was done, for instance, in the cases of the invasions of Hungary and Czechoslovakia and the trials of Soviet Jewish citizens in Leningrad. Hon. members should not assume that consultative arrangements like the Protocol are useful only with nations with whom we are basically in agreement. Indeed, they can be more useful where there are fundamental disagreements. By signing this Protocol, Mr. Kosygin has indicated Soviet willingness to discuss with us matters of Soviet policy that may be causing us trouble and distress.

This review of the development of Canada-U.S.S.R. relations since the war has been sketchy and selective. It is not my purpose today to give a history lesson, but to remind the House that despite setbacks there has been a steady, if slow, improvement in our contacts with the Soviet Union. The House knows this. It is difficult for me to understand how hon. members opposite can suggest that the signing of a protocol providing for more systematic consultations is a sudden act, a surprise to them, or a departure rather than a development in east-west relations.

Although it is an important and historic development, as I have said, we share some very basic concerns with the Soviet Union. As the two principal circumpolar powers we both have a special responsibility for the Arctic. We both have endless tracts of tundra, rich in mineral resources but presenting developmental and ecological problems of the greatest magnitude. In this area there is a great deal that we can learn from the Soviet Union. In the field of technology and secondary industry there may be something they can learn from us.

It is not by an accident of history that Canada has entered into a series of arrangements for consultation in the last decade. It is the working out in practice of the new dynamic diplomacy that has been made possible by the great development in the means of communication. Ministers and officials of governments need no longer rely only on written and telegraphic communications; they can meet regularly, at short notice, and discuss face-to-face problems of bilateral or worldwide concern. It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that in this new era of dynamic diplomacy we can avoid the misunderstandings and miscalculations that in the past have led to global conflicts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REGULARITY OF TABLING OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE TO HOUSE—RULING ON POINT OF ORDER

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps hon. members might want me to refer at this time to a point of order raised earlier today by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I appreciate that the hon. member is not with us at the moment, although he was in the House until the last minutes of this morning's sitting. Because of the urgency of the matter to which he referred in the course of his submission to the House, I thought I should give my ruling at this time before we resume debate on the motion now before the chamber.

The hon. member for St. John's East rose on a point of order in relation to proceedings on the estimates of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the Standing Committee on Regional Development. The hon. member suggests that there was some impropriety in appointing members to a standing committee after that committee was seized of his motion, and that the naming of members in that way was an abuse of Standing Order 64 (4) (b).

If the hon. member's proposition is valid, I suggest that it would be exceedingly difficult to ever effect a change in the membership of a committee. It does seem to me that there are innumerable occasions when a question is under consideration in a committee, on a continuing basis, from one meeting to another; indeed I am reliably informed that some committees sit for weeks on the same question. If this is the case, as I believe it is, then it would seem to be most impractical for the House to adopt the position that the membership of committees should not be altered while a motion is under debate or under consideration in the committee.

The hon. member also went on to suggest that a vote could not be taken in that committee because the bells had begun ringing to call members to the House for its daily sitting at two o'clock in the afternoon or at 11 a.m. on a Friday. I am wondering whether that suggestion will bear up in view of the provision of section (8) of Standing Order 65 which provides that standing Committees may sit while the House is sitting. It may be that the hon. member's point is to the effect that a quorum was not present when estimate number (1) of the department in question was carried in the committee. That is a very difficult question for the Chair to decide with the particulars now at hand. It does seem to me that the question of a quorum should have been resolved in the committee and I might point out that the hon. member has stated that he, himself, withdrew from the committee.

It may be that the report in question could be returned to the committee, but there is the question whether any useful purpose might be served in doing so. Hon. members know that, pursuant to the provisions of section (14) of Standing Order 58 all estimates will be deemed to have been reported back to the House in any event not later than next Monday. At any rate, I suggest that our supply proceedings provide other opportunities to bring under review either the report of the committee or vote number (1) of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

* * *

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REFUSAL OF GOVERNMENT TO HAVE U.S.S.R.-CANADA PROTOCOL CONSIDERED BY HOUSE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macquarrie:

That this House regrets the refusal of the government to bring before the House for consideration and decision the U.S.S.R.-Canada protocol in order that all aspects of this relationship can be considered before implementation.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) had the floor and I believe he still had a few minutes of his time left. I see he now indicates that he had completed his remarks. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Shakespeare had a title for one of his plays which I think characterizes this debate, "Much Ado About Nothing".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Indeed, I am tempted to use a modern expression and say to my friends of the official opposition as well as to those on the government side of the House, "Cool it".

When one examines the motion that is before us, although it is couched in certain technical terms, it boils down to a complaint against the government for the steps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has taken in trying to establish friendly relations with the Soviet Union. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if there is one thing we need in this world, it is all the bridges we can build between and among our various peoples and nations. There is really no place for a sophisticated form of red baiting. There is no place for decrying the attempt to establish good relations with people in any part of the world.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The technical wording of the motion which is before us in the name of my good friend, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), is to the effect that Parliament should have had a chance to consider and make a decision on the so-called protocol which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this country and Chairman Kosygin signed in Moscow a few days ago. The hon. member for Hillsborough and I are strong advocates of Parliamentary supremacy and the responsibility of the executive to this House of Commons. However, I think that principle has to apply when there is something of substance. I ask the hon. member for Hillsborough and the members on the government side, what substance is there in the protocol that the two gentlemen signed in Moscow and in the lengthy joint communiqué, a copy of which was tabled in the House this morning?

The hon. member for Hillsborough referred to a statement made many years ago by Mr. King concerning Parliamentary supremacy in these matters. I listened to that statement. It clearly referred to any documents or agreements dealing with any kind of substance. In my view, there is nothing in either the protocol or the communique. It is like a couple of juveniles who met at a summer camp and who decided to be penpals and write letters back and forth. To make a big fuss and suggest it should not be done without a prior debate in Parliament, is using this day in a less useful way than has been the case with some of the motions that my friends to the right have brought before this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I welcome the applause from the government side of the chamber for the friendly remarks that I have been addressing to my associates on this side of the House.

An hon. Member: And now you are associates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Associates in the sense that they are fellow members of the opposition. I hope I will get the same kind of response from the goodly band of Liberals we see here this afternoon. I would like to think they came in to hear me speak.

Mr. McBride: That is the reason.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The applause makes me hope that maybe that is true, but there is a rumour that the Prime Minister is coming into the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: He is in the pressure tank now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suppose that rumour has something to do with the attendance of such a large number of Liberals on a Friday afternoon.

Mr. Woolliams: Nineteen is quite a few.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are many remarks being made, some of which I am getting and some of which I am not. Perhaps I had better move on. I say to the Liberals that they are just as guilty of making a big fuss over nothing when they think this protocol is a forerunner to the millennium as are my friends in the Conservative party in thinking that it spells some sort of doom.

Mr. Sharp: We never claimed that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), who is no longer Acting Prime Minister, shows his sense of relief. He says "We never claimed that". I suggest that the sorts of things he has been saying in reply to questions in the past few days, and the kinds of statements we have been getting from the press and will get from the Prime Minister this afternoon are along that line. Maybe it is not the millennium, but the Liberals think that somehow the world is going to be better because of this historic, important document.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wonder whether Your Honour has had time to read either the protocol that was signed in Moscow or the communique that was tabled this morning. I read each of them two or three times to try and find something in them. As I said, it is like a couple of juveniles who became friends at a summer camp and said to each other "Let's keep on being friends. Let's be penpals. Let's write back and forth and agree to meet each other sometime in the future." This protocol really amounts to nothing more.

There is no change in foreign policy on the part of the Canadian government implied in these documents. There is certainly no change in the foreign policy of the Soviet Union in either of these documents to which Premier Kosygin is apparently a party. They are just expressions of how important our two peoples are, how our problems are alike, how nice it would be to consult with each other if there is any problem which concerns us both and how nice it would be if we would do our part to strengthen the United Nations and make for a more peaceful world.

I had the privilege of visiting the Soviet Union in 1946, 25 years ago. They did not give me the same kind of red carpet treatment which they gave the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Just a pink carpet.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They treated me courteously and cordially. Mind you, it was rather a dramatic experience. While I was in the Soviet Union in February, 1946, the news about the Gouzenko situation came out in Canada. The warm hospitality which I had enjoyed for two or three days was suddenly interrupted. On a certain day, there were no guides to take me anywhere. I had to walk around Moscow and ride the subway by myself. In any event, I was impressed by the friendliness and how much the Soviet Union is like Canada, especially in February. Moscow and Winnipeg in winter, la même chose. I returned from that trip, which was before the cold war really got going, feeling that there was value in having friendly relations with that country and in trying to develop those relations. On March 19, 1946, I stood in my place in this House and suggested to the then Prime Minister, Mr. King, that he should visit Moscow in order to receive the same kind of friendly reception. Nobody thought the world would come to an end because I suggested that kind of friendliness. I am not trying to say that very much came of it. The only reason I mention that trip, the plea I made for friendship and how little came of it, is that I do not think there is much more before us at the present time.

I say to my friends on both sides of the House, don't get too excited. It is a Friday afternoon. If we do not want to do anything very heavy or serious, it is all right to have this discussion. I say this in particular to the Progressive Conservative members who may follow later in this debate. Please do not indulge in red baiting and please do not complain about building bridges of friendship. I say to those on the government side of the House, if you want to do something constructive in the field of foreign relations, you will have to do a lot more than has been done during this week's Cook's tour of the Soviet Union.

The rumour about the Prime Minister coming in this afternoon is interesting. I do not intend to try to keep speaking until he gets here. In any event, I am under a time limit. If the Prime Minister does come, I hope he will not just rehash what is in the communique. I hope he will not just give us a travelogue and tell us how much he enjoyed the friendliness and so on. I hope he will tell us whether there were any discussions about the Berlin wall, the problems relating to fisheries and whether there were discussions with Premier Kosygin about the trials and persecutions of Jewish citizens in the Soviet Union. In other words, let us deal with a few concrete things. I hope he may tell us what progress was made in terms of furthering disarmament and also in terms of what kind of contribution we might make, our two countries and any others, toward strengthening the United Nations as an instrument for world peace and human accord.

• (2:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: That is what you are going to hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member across the way says that is what we are going to hear. Normally on a Friday attendance in the House dwindles. Sometimes we get below a quorum and have to wink at it. Well, this afternoon there is the prospect of the Prime Minister coming in, and there is also the prospect of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) making a speech. It promises to be a good afternoon in terms of histrionics, in terms of the dramatic. But if the government wants Canada to play a constructive and vital role in external affairs a lot more is called for than the kind of trip which the Prime Minister, Mrs. Trudeau and the members of his party have just made.

Something really substantial should be done to play our part in the bringing to an end of the war in Viet Nam. Serious attention should be given to the situation now facing the world in East Pakistan or Bengla Desh. It was good to hear the announcement this morning that there would be a contribution of $2 million made toward aid and relief for those who are suffering because of the civil war but there is a festering sore there which will require a political solution. We have got brains in the Department of External Affairs. I suggest the government put those brains to work on a problem of that kind instead of using them on these various Cook's tours.

There is also the whole question of the situation in the middle east and the terrible need by all parties in that area, the people of Israel, the Arabs and the refugees who are lost in between, to gain the confidence of countries like Canada and other countries in the world. Let us put our efforts into that. There are plenty of solid questions which call for solution and it is these things about which the government should be concerned. I wish the hon. member for Hillsborough had been himself today and put down as an external affairs motion one calling upon the government to pay attention to the real and solid problems.

I turn, now, to some observations I have been saving until the end of my remarks in case the Prime Minister came in. Of course, if he did come in there would be such a round of desk-pounding that I should probably not be heard. If the right hon. gentleman wants to express the view that there is too much domination of this country by the United States, I would agree with him. However, I think the place to say so is here or in the United States rather than in the Soviet Union. Now that he has broken the ice and has said it I hope he will say it back here as well as in the United States if on his next foreign visit he goes to that country.

I also wish to complain about some of the indiscreet statements the Prime Minister made while he was in the Soviet Union. If he made a statement in Kiev that the government of this country was like the government of the Soviet Union, I suggest this was not only an offence to many Ukrainians in this country, but an offence to us. It may be the Prime Minister is trying to make the government of this country like the government of the Soviet Union—perhaps that has just leaked out—but in any case I suggest it was an indiscreet statement.

If the Prime Minister comes in this afternoon he will get the floor. There will be lots of applause. He will get the press on today's debate and nothing anybody else says will be heeded at all. But I hope he will give us not just a travelogue, not just reminiscences of how delightful it was to be at the Bolshoi or at Samarkand. I hope he will tell us about some of the real, solid issues he discussed with Chairman Kosygin. I hope he will tell us that he is now prepared to give this country leadership in tackling some of the real problems which have to be solved if our world is to be held together.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to make a few remarks on the motion moved this afternoon by the Progressive Conservative party, and which reads as follows:

> That this House regrets the refusal of the government to bring before the House for consideration and decision the USSR-Canada protocol in order that all aspects of this relationship can be considered before implementation.

Mr. Speaker, this famous protocol had not caught my attention in any particular way, because knowing the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I was aware that in the course of his journeys to India and the USSR, he would tend to sign all kinds of papers and agree to all sorts of things which may not have any great substance, just through tactfulness. This is somehow the impression I had gathered from this protocol.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

• (2:30 p.m.)

But upon considering the motion thereon, I realize that the Progressive Conservative party may have given too much importance to the protocol unless the responsibility lies with the press. Indeed, with this government you always come to learn of the ministers' statements through the press which often says a few words too many.

The May 20 edition of Ottawa's Le Droit mentions a new Soviet-Canadian agreement. They should have written "protocol on consultations" and not a formal agreement on principle as the one signed with Red China. In my view, it is merely an arrangement providing for consultations on the best way to live together as good neighbours. We cannot ignore the fact that we are living between two giants—the Soviet and the American. The question is: Who will be the first to swallow us?

Being a small country, I think we should better go at it intelligently. From what I read in Le Droit it would seem that consultative meetings will take place frequently. The article goes on to pinpoint the objectives of the protocol, and I quote:

> The protocol of agreement provides—

—well, I do not like the word "agreement" here—

> —for close co-operation between our two countries in areas such as pollution control in the Arctic, northern development, science, technology and culture.
>
> Both governments would now proceed to rapid exchanges of views in case of a world crisis, to see what could be done to improve the situation. As regular contacts are foresen, the agreement states that the Foreign Affairs ministers or their representatives will meet if need be and, in principle, once a year.

Further on one can read the following:

> Although the Soviets had dismissed the idea of their eventually participating in an international conference on Arctic pollution, put forward by Mr. Trudeau, it is believed the Canadian Prime Minister let Mr. Kosygin know that the Ottawa government had appreciated the Kremlin's understanding attitude last year when Canada unilaterally decided to control water pollution 100 miles off the Arctic archipelago.
>
> The Soviet attitude in this respect is that Canada and the USSR obviously have in that part of the world responsibilities and special rights other countries should recognize.

Mr. Speaker, if a group of Canadians and the Department of External Affairs are able to influence in any way the Soviet government, in trying to enter into certain friendly agreements, in short, if the government could succeed in establishing a genuine dialogue with the Soviet Union, a further step toward world peace would have been accomplished. However, I rather doubt it will succeed because considering the Russian government attitude toward all the countries which placed confidence in it we can rightly doubt its sincerity.

When one considers the situation of the countries dealing with Soviet Union, particularly after traveling through Germany and seeing how the Soviet Union has signed friendly agreements by such means as the Berlin "Wall of Shame" for instance, I think one can rightly contend that the Soviet government alone has had the nerve to undertake such a monstrosity in the twentieth century.

As I said earlier, this is why our government should be most careful before negotiating with a country such as the Soviet Union since a country should always be judged by its past and that of the Soviet Union is not quite reassuring in the light of what happened in Hungary, in Poland and in all the other countries which have had dealings with it.

I think—

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Should you be judged by your past? You were a Conservative before being a Creditiste.

Mr. Gauthier: I beg your pardon? Mr. Speaker, we were speaking of relations between countries and not between individuals. Someone is asking me personal questions. This is not our subject at the moment. I will not be diverted from it and I only want to make a few remarks without directly blaming the government. This is only a warning because we must be careful. In Le Devoir you can read, and I quote:

Trudeau might displease U.S.A.

Earlier I mentioned two giants. I keep on quoting:

Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau might displease the United States and his other Atlantic alliance partners in his efforts to reinforce the Ottawa-Moscow relations. This is what some Canadian leaders hold.

But, they add, Trudeau considers political risk a necessity for Canada which must assert its independence against the almighty influence of Washington.

During a press conference in Moscow last Thursday, the Prime Minister stated that his strategic "diversification" of political contacts was necessary to overcome the overpowering pressure of the United States on Canadian business.

The United States is Canada's most important trade partner and probably exert on it the most powerful cultural influence. Both countries also have concluded a mutual defence agreement within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

Several trade interests in Canada belong to American corporations.

The Canadian people are quite aware of this situation. Trudeau wants to do something about it. More than ever, Canada carries on commercial exchanges with communist countries. Last year, Trudeau established diplomatic relations with communist China, against the wishes of the United States. He also withdrew Canadian troops from NATO Command.

These matters are quite thorny. The Prime Minister, for instance, suggests that he will invite the Soviet Union to reduce the size of its troops in Europe, while Canada has already begun such a move. The Soviet Union, as always, puts forward a beautiful image, says that it will try to do it but does nothing. It will keep its troops in Europe as long as a single American or other soldier remains in Europe.

This is why I stated at the beginning that we should distrust the Soviet Union while trying to gain its confidence, but I think that in every field Canada should pay greater attention to the United States than to the Soviet Union. We must realize that we are in North America and not in Siberia. Our normal relations must be on the North American continent.

This is why we feel that this debate on the protocol deals with an agreement which is not definitive nor concrete. It is only an act of courtesy by the Prime Minister in Russia as are the gifts made to all other countries at the taxpayers' expense. This is not too bad, if it can incite the Soviet government to hold a frank and sincere dialogue with Canada. This is specifically the aspect of the matter which interests us and we urge the government, when it will eventually have some discussions, to ask the advice of the House before signing agreements.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest and amusement this morning to the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). His was an entertaining speech which had all the flourishes of a Shakespearean passage, and by the end of it I wondered whether it had not really turned out to be all sound and fury, signifying nothing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, get something new.

Mr. Gillespie: It was a speech that entertained rather than informed. But what did he say? Let us examine the record in order to see if we can find out what he tried to tell us this morning. Did he say that he is against information exchanges with the Russians? It seemed to me at one time he flirted with the idea. He approached the subject tentatively but he backed off before embracing it.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Gillespie: It seems to me that he came to a decision—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) rising on a point of order?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order at this time to draw your attention to the fact that this House should not be subjected to this hon. member reading a speech again.

An hon. Member: Oh, sit down.

Mr. MacInnis: This is a practice he has followed in this House before. I trust that the Chair will keep him in order by not permitting him to follow a text prepared by somebody else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Throw your notes away.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: Table your speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): This point has been raised many times in this House. While there is a Standing Order that prevents hon. members from reading speeches, it is very difficult to prevent members from referring to notes, as is done very frequently in this chamber. It is also very difficult for the Chair to rule on this point. The mere fact that this practice is brought to the attention of the Chair and hon. members on different occasions is, I think, a favourable reminder and of some use to the House and hon. members.

Mr. Baldwin: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should just like to say that if the hon. member does read he should read scientifically.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the intelligence level of the interventions is perhaps a good reflection of the amount of homework hon. members have done on this subject.

Mr. Danforth: Tell us who wrote your speech.

Mr. Gillespie: As I was saying in reference to the speech of the hon. member for Hillsborough, it seems to me he approached his subject with interest but at the critical moment he backed off. He was not prepared to really deal with the question: Are we against information exchanges with Russia? He suggested, I think to his discredit—he did more than that he insinuated—that in some way this protocol which Canada signed with the U.S.S.R. was downgrading the relationship between us and our good friends. I think this was contemptible and unworthy of him. I do not think he has to stoop to this kind of tactic in this House.

Mr. MacInnis: You are reading again.

Mr. Gillespie: I suggest, Mr Speaker, that his leader would not share his views. Let me read from some remarks his leader made, as reported in the press, about a year ago following a one week trip to Russia. Perhaps it is worth-while pointing out in this connection that Mr. Nixon, President of the United States, on an earlier occasion took only 10 days. I refer to an article by Robert Stanfield which appeared in the Ottawa Journal on Saturday, August 1, 1970, in which he said:

> There is, however, room for co-operation between us in such things as the exchange of information concerning this area—

He was referring to a recent visit he had made to the Arctic Institute in Leningrad. He went on to say:

> Beyond politics, questions of international trade patterns and Canadian-Soviet trade relations frequently come to the fore. I am convinced that the door is far from closed to imaginative and sustained Canadian activities in this field in the Soviet Union.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: The Leader of the Opposition then posed this thought to himself, having stated that he recognized some means were necessary:

> —the U.S.S.R. and the western countries must work out a means of peaceful co-existence no matter what name we may choose to call it.

I suggest the protocol which was signed between Canada and the U.S.S.R. very recently is precisely the kind of means the Leader of the Opposition had in mind. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), in his response to the hon. member for Hillsborough, challenged him to say that he or his party were not in agreement with the protocol. The hon. member for Hillsborough did not accept the challenge, so, we can only assume that he does accept the protocol to which I have referred.

Mr. MacInnis: You are reading again.

Mr. Gillespie: The question we must ask ourselves—

An hon. Member: At least you can read.

Mr. Gillespie: —is whether there is any language in the protocol which the hon. member does not accept? He has given us no evidence in his speech today that he repudiates any of the language of the protocol. Instead, he stated that in some way the protocol should have been presented to Parliament before it was signed. The Secretary of State for External Affairs made it quite clear in his remarks that there is ample precedent for signing protocols before presenting them to this House. In fact, he cited an occasion when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was the Prime Minister and a protocol was arranged or signed between Canada and the Chinese.

Mr. MacInnis: And the Liberals called it criminal.

Mr. Gillespie: I would ask the right hon. gentleman, who I believe will be speaking in this debate shortly, if he would refute the fact that this protocol was not tabled in Parliament before it was signed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to point out that there never was a protocol with China.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Get your facts straight.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. gentleman will have ample opportunity to elaborate on that point during his remarks.

Mr. MacInnis: You had to put that page away without reading it.

Mr. Gillespie: Let me clear up a point which may be bothering hon. members opposite as to what a Protocol actually is.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, here we go.

Mr. Gillespie: It seems to me that it is an arrangement regularizing normal diplomatic intercourse.

Mr. Paproski: Shame, shame.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the preoccupation of hon. members opposite is pretty obvious.

An hon. Member: It is an agreement or a declaration.

Mr. Woolliams: But he can't read.

Mr. Gillespie: A protocol is an important social exchange between two countries. This protocol provides an opportunity for Canadians, on the one hand, to learn something of the problems of a northern people and how to deal with them, and an opportunity on the other hand for the Russians to learn how we have dealt with some of our problems.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis: "So it says in my notes".

Mr. Gillespie: But more than that, one of the most important aspects of the protocol, of this relationship, is the opportunity it provides for the Russians to have access to the western point of view.

Mr. McIntosh: They have six spy rings now, or is it seven?

Mr. Gillespie: We have a number of common interests. We are a northern people and we have similar types of resource problems, as I understand it.

An hon. Member: Both have the American problem.

Mr. Gillespie: Some of my colleagues who were with the Prime Minister on his recent visit to Russia are in the House with us now. We welcome them back. We are pleased to see them and assure them that we followed their progress in Russia with a great deal of interest.

An hon. Member: How are things in the salt mines?

Mr. Gillespie: They will be able to speak at a later date from firsthand knowledge of the problems there, and how the Russians are or are not dealing with those problems. They will be able to speak from firsthand knowledge of some of the things the Russians are doing in Arctic navigation.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because of the information given to this House on the Prime Minister's trip to Russia. When he was dealing with northern problems he referred to a point one hundred miles north of Montreal, Mont Tremblant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I should mention to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond that this point of order does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders of this House. I think the Chair should say to the hon. member that, although the Chair appreciates the good mood of the House this afternoon, hon. members should not go so far as to prevent the member who has the floor from speaking.

Mr. Gillespie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think another aspect of the common interest we have with the people of Russia is the native people of the north. We have Eskimos and they have Eskimos. They have other native peoples, namely the Chuck Chee. Perhaps the hon. member opposite might learn something if he listened.

Mr. McIntosh: If he listened to whom?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, they have a land which is under-populated. They have boreal forests. They have to deal with the question of permafrost. They have done such things as build dams in permafrost. I suggest these are things we as Canadians might learn from them.

I should like to refer to the recent report of the Senate committee on Science Policy for Canada, Mr. Speaker. At page 122 the report states that Canada spends about 2.5 per cent of the total research and development dollars of ten of the industrialized countries of the world. These are all OECD countries and do not include the U.S.S.R. The report goes on to say that we obviously cannot be self-sufficient in technology and we may not even be able to compete successfully in research and development programs that involve huge expenditures.

Obviously it is in the interest of Canada to gain what it can from the experience of others and to learn from the science and technology information of other countries. This is precisely what the protocol said. I shall quote from one of the preamble paragraphs:

> Endeavouring to improve and further develop relations between the two countries by means of high-level contacts, expanding ties and exchanges in the fields of economy, trade, science, technology, culture and northern development.

The preamble also "notes with satisfaction the conclusion of the Soviet-Canadian agreement on Co-operation in the Industrial Application of Science and Technology, and the development of trade on the basis of the 1956 Trade Agreement". Mr. Speaker, various steps have been taken by this government and other governments to gain for Canada the advantages of the research and development of others. I should like to trace some of these in the few minutes remaining to me. In 1959, under the government of the right hon. gentleman opposite, the National Research Council formed an agreement with the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences. This agreement opened up for Canadian and Russian scientists an opportunity for exchange visits. Over a period of slightly more than ten years, more than 100 Canadian scientists have undertaken research projects in Russia and a comparable number of Soviet scientists have pursued their research work in Canada. The agreement signed by the then president of the National Research Council of Canada was renewable. I should like to read one particular paragraph of a letter from the president of the NRC dated October 28, 1959 addressed to the President, Academy of Science of the U.S.S.R.:

I suggest we commence the exchange with the 1960-61 academic year and agree to review the program after a complete year of operation.

That has been renewed since then. It covered fields of endeavour such as research into electrical engineering—I am speaking of the sort of thing the Canadian scientists did in Russian institutes and universities.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What year was that?

Mr. Gillespie: This is a sampling over a ten-year period.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What year are you quoting from?

Mr. Gillespie: A schedule of April 26, 1971 in respect of the NRC-U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences Exchange Agreement. It covers, as I said, over one hundred Canadian scientists in genetics, electrical engineering, mining engineering, plant pathology, geological sciences, insect pathology, oceanography, metallurgical chemistry, earth science and so on. The point is that this was one of the first, and perhaps the first, regularizations, if you like, of contact between professionals in Canada and professionals in the U.S.S.R.

We have also signed similar agreements with France. One was an intergovernmental agreement signed in 1969. Another was between the National Research Council and Centre National de Recherches Scientifiques in Paris. There are agreements with Czechoslovakia and Brazil, again covering the area of science and technology. On no occasion were these agreements first presented to Parliament for ratification.

Mr. MacInnis: Still reading.

Mr. Gillespie: If the hon. member opposite is interested in learning the source of my material he should listen.

Mr. Mahoney: He better listen because he could not read it himself.

Mr. Gillespie: I have referred to intergovernmental agreements and agreements between the National Research Council and other agencies. I should like to now refer to an agreement which the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources made in 1965 on an interdepartmental basis with the State Committee of the U.S.S.R. Council of Ministers for Science and Technology. This is a letter dated June, 1970, written by the deputy chairman of the U.S.S.R. committee. I shall quote only parts of it. He says:

• (3:00 p.m.)

The State Committee of the U.S.S.R. Council of Ministers for Science and Technology considers it possible to extend the agreement concerning co-operation with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources until June 23, 1975, and wants you to consider this letter as an official confirmation of the extension of the term of validity of the above mentioned agreement. It appears to us that if an intergovernmental agreement of scientific technical co-operation is to be concluded, the realization of the agreement between our committee and your department will be apparently carried out in accordance with the conditions of the general agreement between the Soviet Union and Canada.

There are many other agreements of a similar nature that I could mention. I could mention those with Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., and there are several with countries such as Japan and Italy. There are others.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but his time has expired.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my first words are to congratulate my friend, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), for the manner in which he presented his views in connection with the matter before us. As I listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) discussing his regard for the United States, I could only come to the conclusion that the Waffle group has come very close to him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I listened to the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie). I understand he was preaching for a cause, and for that reason he received a very warm welcome throughout the House for his remarks; indeed, it was so warm that it became necessary for Your Honour to ask for order because those who were listening to the speech the hon. member read wanted to keep up with the various pages as they were turned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are here for the purpose of discussing a question having to do with our relations with the U.S.S.R. In all of us hope springs eternal. We can only hope that in the next few weeks, regard being had to what has taken place in the last three months, the U.S.S.R. has come to a position in which it has decided that in co-operation the world can continue in peace, and only by co-operation can peace be achieved. If it is sincere in the expressions that are being voiced by the two leaders of the U.S.S.R., then of course we are entering a new sphere of world peace and understanding.

I point out, however, as one who was in San Francisco in 1945 and came back to this House in November of that year and spoke of the foundation of the United Nations, that I was so wrong in the conclusions to which I had come. I believed that there had been achieved, in the United Nations Charter, agreement among those who had stood together during the days of war, and that never more—to paraphrase the words of Molotov—would dictatorship raise its head anywhere in the world, and that for all time to come the nations of the world which were joined in war would be joined in peace.

I can only hope that the straws of wishfulness in the hearts of mankind brought about what we hope are apparent changes in the winds of international affairs. But again, in the experience of 26 years of duplicity on the part of the U.S.S.R. in connection with its agreements, we at this time must not become overly optimistic or overly hopeful that the millennium has been attained in international affairs. We hope for it and we can only look forward with anticipation, but we have to realize that in the last few months the U.S.S.R. has been increasing its military strength. Had I the time, I would give particulars in this regard. It is known, however, that they are increasing the number of sites for the launching of intercontinental ballistic missiles.

What is being done is contrary to every representation that is being made today by the leaders of the U.S.S.R. that they have indeed changed their view. Is this another detour on their part in order to lull us in the western world into a false sense of security, or does it indeed represent an about-turn on the part of the Kremlin to the end that peace in our time will be assured?

I followed the trip of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with a great deal of interest. I read the accounts of some of the pressmen which led me to believe that only a Messianic arrival could possibly equal the effect of the visitation of the Prime Minister. I must conclude that two or three of those pressmen will not be ruled out for an early appointment to the other place, a place of rest. Today, in the members present on the government side of the House I can see the brightness in some of their eyes as they look forward in the next few days to the opportunity that has been provided by the passing of the legislation on government reorganization. They can see themselves in the position of being just outside the precincts of greatness in the very near future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister is going to be here this afternoon. While my first name is John, and I am a Baptist, I will not go further in this regard.

I have been interested, as has the hon. member for Etobicoke, through the years in bringing about relationships between our country and other countries. He was kind enough—and I appreciate that fact—to refer to the agreement of 1961 made during the period of my administration. I appreciate his having done so. I have been tremendously interested in those who today look into the north and see its potentialities but who did not see them in 1957 and 1958. Some who today sit opposite used to ridicule the views that I was expressing about the future of and the need for action in the north. Indeed, the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson said that I had in mind the building of roads and railroads from igloo to igloo.

• (3:10 p.m.)

That "heresy" on the part of the Conservative party in 1957 and 1958 carried into effect to a degree that is only today being realized and has become the cornerstone of the present government. Now they are suddenly realizing the needs of the north and, as the hon. member for Etobicoke said, the need for the fullest co-operation between our country and the U.S.S.R. in reference to the development of the north.

I was rather surprised at the Prime Minister's statement concerning northern cities. He saw cities that no one else from the western world had seen, cities far in the north. In one of his moments of sophisticated musing he stated that he could see in northern Canada cities of 100,000 population. I wondered where they would be, and a few days later he cleared this up: he said he was not thinking further north than Mont Tremblant. This just shows the effect, even on a person like the Prime Minister, of the generous hospitality which was extended to him. I can speak of this, having been a recipient of that hospitality—of course, to a much lesser degree and unaccompanied by an entourage—two years ago when I was received by members of the Presidium. I was shown, not what they wanted to show me but what I wanted to see, particularly in the Ukraine and around Moscow.

I have read the communiqué in detail. It is a massive document. But what does it say? I am not here to argue the question as to whether protocols are to receive consideration by Parliament, but I do say that the means taken by my hon. friend to bring this matter before the House were the only way in which we could possibly get a discussion on the subject of what happened in the U.S.S.R.

Mackenzie King, in the days when he was minister of external affairs, did not want anyone to look into those matters; Parliament had no right to discuss them. I recall when he came back, having met Hitler in 1938, and the general feeling that he expressed, "There will be no war. I met Hitler. We talked together intimately and frankly and I am convinced he is a man of peace." Even Mr. King, who had extraterrestrial powers of communication, was not able to see through the intricacies of the mind of Hitler when as he chose to pretend, as he did to Chamberlain, that what he was endeavouring to do was bring about a new world of peace.

So far as the contents of the protocol are concerned, I have no criticism of it. The words of the protocol represent a viewpoint that will be generally acceptable. But, Mr. Speaker, I have seen people before who signed agreements but who did not read between the lines. What the Prime Minister said can be interpreted. What has particularly shocked me, although viewing with approval many of the things that took place, are some of the expressions of the Prime Minister in the U.S.S.R. which have placed Canada in a position that is completely at variance with the attitude of Canadians. I refer to some of the interviews he gave. I do not have them here in detail, but I picked up a few coming into the chamber.

I ask you, Sir: Have we in Canada forgotten that our two closest neighbours are the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A.? I have disagreed strongly with the United States of America when it has interfered with Canadian policies—but have we forgotten that if it were not for the United States of America, that if the U.S.S.R. were in the same position as the U.S., geographically speaking, you and I, Mr. Speaker, would not be here? Some of the statements made by the Prime Minister in the U.S.S.R. will become part and parcel of the propaganda used by Communists all over the world. Some of the words he uttered are unbelievable to me. To the men of the Kremlin he pointed out "the danger to Canada's national identity from American cultural, economic and even military influences."

I remember the days of 1914 to 1917 when we were virtually alone within this empire and Commonwealth. The United States came into the war in April, 1917. If it had not come in, all of us were beginning to fear, with millions of men having died on the field of battle. And in the last war, if it had not been for the Americans coming in when they did, pressed in by reason of what happened at Pearl Harbour, we can only visualize today the darkness to our freedom. I want to know, when has there been any subservience to military influences? I want to find out when there came about a growing consciousness among Canadians of a danger to our national identity—and I refer particularly to military matters. I want to know what the Prime Minister meant when he said that this protocol will affirm Canada's independent foreign policy in the face of the overpowering presence of the United States of America.

Mr. De Bané: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is one young man, without experience, who applauds. Sir, if he can be identified, I immediately recommend him for consideration as a parliamentary secretary. What I object to is the interpretation that can be placed upon the Prime Minister's words, that we are in military danger or that we are subject to military interference from the United States. That kind of thing represents loose thinking and, what is worse, when uttered by the Prime Minister of Canada it will become the cornerstone of Communist propaganda against the United States all over the world. I had my arguments with the United States. They tried to push me around, and the Liberal party said I was anti-American because I dared to say that this country's policy should be made in Canada by Canadians.

• (3:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: The Liberals called that criminal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They dared say I was anti-American. But the Prime Minister has made his statement which he will regret over and over again. It will take its place among those expressions that have been uttered over the years and have had to be withdrawn.

I see my hon. friend, the member for York North (Mr. Danson), Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, over there. Since he assumed the responsibility of office he has ceased to be one of the wits of Parliament, and we miss that. Is it not a strange thing that the only Jewish member in the group that went to the U.S.S.R. was one with a diplomatic passport, the parliamentary secretary? The U.S.S.R. would not give a visa to one Jew who applied to go as a press representative. I ask, what was said over there either publicly or in whispers about the diabolical treatment now being handed out to the Jews? What about the Ukrainians and those—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the right hon. member, but unless he gets the unanimous consent of the House his time has expired. Does the House agree to allow the right hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Som hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair feels that there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, could we have the identification of the hon. member who does not allow me to finish the sentence concerning the Ukrainians and all the other captive peoples of whom nothing is told?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair is always willing to understand the feelings of hon. members, but it should also abide by the rules.

Mr. Reid: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I think if you were to ask if there is unanimous consent to hear the right hon. gentleman, you would probably find that there is.

An hon. Member: What about the fellow over there?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

An hon. Member: He is not even in his seat.

An hon. Member: He is out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member knows that by the rules of the House he cannot have the floor unless he sits in his place. The hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané).

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Matane on a point of order.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to allow the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) to continue, but I did not like at all his personal attack on the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Danson) and I think that this type of allegations—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair cannot accept this kind of argument. The question is whether the House would now agree to the right hon. member for Prince Albert continuing his remarks. The hon. member for Matane may only state that he will not allow the right hon. gentleman to pursue his speech. I now recognize the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt).

[English]

Some hon. Members: Shame!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt).

An hon. Member: I never saw such treatment of a former Prime Minister.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Has the hon. member been given the floor by the Chair?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Yes, the hon. member for Oxford has been given the floor.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a great pity that this House did not have the opportunity of hearing the concluding remarks of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who probably has more experience in foreign affairs over the years than anybody in this House. Be that as it may, I should like to say that like the right hon. member for Prince Albert and the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), I am glad to hear of any treaty, protocol or arrangement that will help reduce tension directly or indirectly between the super powers or any other powers in the world.

As I see it, the prime objective of Canada's foreign policy is to do everything possible to prevent a major war from breaking out between the two super powers. The fate of Belgium and the Netherlands in the last two world wars would be nothing to what would happen to us if war broke out between the Soviet Union and the United States, or China and the United States. We would be the ham in the sandwich; there is no doubt about that. All our foreign policy and objectives should be directed toward prevention of such an outbreak.

As has been said by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, the protocol itself is very innocuous; it is an expression of hope for the future, nothing else. We know that it is not what is done in this world that is important so much as what appears to be done. It is not the importance of the protocol itself that concerns us; the accompanying words and the extraneous remarks made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in referring to it have caused unease in Canada and apprehension on the part of some of our allies. According to press reports, the Prime Minister said that the protocol is what we make of it, that it is elastic. We heard the right hon. member for Prince Albert point out the dangers of American military domination and political involvement. This apparently is very much in accord with the views of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) but he was not anxious to hear any further remarks from the right hon. gentleman.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned the occasion when the right hon. Prime Minister said to the Ukrainians in Kiev, "After all, there are people in Canada of Ukrainian descent who are just the same as Ukrainians in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic." I cannot help recalling at this point that I had the honour of representing Canada for a number of years at the United Nations and sat next to the representatives of Byelorussia, one of the states of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

According to the charter of the United Nations, all member states should be independent, but any time a speech was delivered by a member of this delegation it was brought over by a member of the Soviet delegation and handed to him. There was no secret about it. On one occasion when nothing particular was taking place, it was the duty of the member of the Byelorussian delegation to commence the vote and he did not know how to go about it. The president of the assembly, who was Irish, leaned over to him and said, "Your are supposed to vote 'Yes'". Nobody laughed louder than the Soviet Union delegates. This is the kind of thing we have to face.

• (3:30 p.m.)

When the Prime Minister tells the people of the Ukraine that they are living in the Soviet Union in the same way as the people of Canada, it is either a reflection on the government of this country or a forewarning of what is to come during the next year or two. We had better take careful note of this. I hope the Prime Minister will clarify the remarks he made about the United States of America when he speaks this afternoon. I would not have been surprised had these remarks been made by my colleagues to the left. Over the years that I have been here, and for many years prior, they have been openly distrustful of the United States, if not harbouring an absolute hatred of that country. There has never been any doubt about that. This is rather singular of them.

Seeing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre here this afternoon reminds me of a similar debate in this House in 1955. As I recall, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre took part in the debate, as I did. The subject was the same as today, foreign affairs. One or two members, myself included, pointed out that the foreign policy of the former CCF, the successor of which is the New Democratic Party, had—as a peculiar coincidence—always been identical with that of the Soviet Union. I am not imputing any motives; it may be an accident.

An hon. Member: You are kidding.

Mr. Nesbitt: In a jocular way one hon. member has said, "You are kidding". I presume this means he agrees. Look back to see what has happened. The Marshall plan was introduced. It rebuilt and saved Europe. Who in this country opposed it? The CCF of the day. During the United Nations expedition into Korea to contain Russian and Chinese aggression in that country, who opposed it? Again it was the CCF. There are many incidences I could quote. That party opposed NATO. Anything built or designed to prevent further Russian expansion in Europe in the post-war days was always opposed by members to my left. What their motives were, I do not know. There may be a few among them who did not do this.

I have followed this matter very closely. The only time I can recall any member of the NDP or their predecessors opposing anything that the Russians did was when Czechoslovakia was invaded. As I recall, the then leader of the party said something like, "Naughty, naughty; you must not do it". That was about it. On every occasion when the United States does anything that is entirely popular, it appears that Satan himself and all the legions from the lower region are involved and that our main danger and enemy is the United States of America. I am not surprised to hear this from the NDP, but when we hear it from the Prime Minister and some of his colleagues there is cause for alarm. No wonder there is apprehension in the United States and elsewhere.

The Prime Minister has the habit of expressing himself in riddles, similes or metaphores. Not too long ago he said that being next to the United States of America is like sleeping with an elephant. If nothing else, an elephant is rather pleasant, although it can show a temperate nature and be a bit clumsy occasionally. We all agree with that. Perhaps it might be well to remind the Prime Minister that there may be difficulties getting into bed with an elephant, but getting into bed with a Russian bear with rather carnivorous habits is quite another matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Watch your chastity-belt.

Mr. Nesbitt: Some members of the House, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and others on the government side, have had some experience in dealing with the Russians. If nothing else, the Russians are very practical people. They do not spend vast sums of money on entertaining and huge, spontaneous demonstrations unless they have something in mind. It is well known that one of the prime objectives of Russian foreign policy is to drive a wedge between Canada and the United States. This is not because they give a hoot about us: to them, we are just another Belgium. It is because they wish to damage American defences on the continent and American influence and prestige abroad. That is the main objective of the Russians. When the Prime Minister of our country is wined and dined, receives flowers, huge groups and the works, it is not because the Russians enjoy spending money and putting on shows. It is for one purpose. If one can pay any attention to the reports on the remarks of the Prime Minister, they have certainly succeeded.

As the Prime Minister said, protocol is very elastic; it is what we want to make of it. From what we have seen and heard so far, it is apparent what he wants to make of it. I hope we get an explanation when his eminence arrives this afternoon. I presume that he will be here very shortly. It should be remembered that the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nesbitt: I do not think anyone in the House is more pleased than me to welcome back the right hon. gentleman from his trip to the Soviet Union. Perhaps the right hon. member has not yet heard about it, but as has already been pointed out we have a lot of questions. We would like a lot of information about his observations of the Soviet Union. I hope that the Prime Minister, who has now rejoined us, will be able to give us some of his observations on what he did there, and what the indications are vis-à-vis the Soviet Union and the United States. I am happy to give the floor to the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by thanking all hon. members for their welcome and to say how happy I am to be back in Canada. I know that I speak in this respect on behalf of my parliamentary travelling companions, my parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) and the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon), who were of great assistance while I was in the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union occupies a vast land mass extending through 11 time zones—some of which I am still feeling—with climates varying from the desert heat of central Asia to the frigid temperatures of the Arctic. While in the U.S.S.R., I was taken by the Soviet government to six cities in addition to Moscow. We travelled some 12,400 kilometres while doing so. Two of those cities, Murmansk and Norilsk, were within the Arctic circle, the largest communities in the world that far north. They offered evidence of the advantages to be gained by Canada in the development of our north through closer co-operation and exchanges with the Soviet Union.

This visit to the U.S.S.R., which concluded just three hours ago, was the first of a Canadian Prime Minister, while in office, to that country. It was by no means, however, the first occasion on which a minister of the Canadian government has travelled in the Soviet Union. Our relations with that country have been developing and increasing in complexity since Canada first opened an embassy in Moscow in the early 1940s.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Hon. members will recall that Canada has long had treaty arrangements with the Soviet government. Our first trade agreement was signed in 1956. Since that time, in every year except 1969 we have enjoyed a favourable and often substantial balance of trade in our favour. I might add that while in Moscow our trade in wheat was reviewed, including the Soviet assurance that when the U.S.S.R. has requirements to import wheat, it will in the first instance apply to Canada as a preferred source of supply. In January of this year the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) concluded an important agreement with the U.S.S.R. on the industrial application of science and technology, an agreement which reflects the recognition in the U.S.S.R. of Canada's increasing stature as the owner of important, advanced technology and of our awareness of the important progress made by the Soviets in a number of fields.

This increasing interest in the Soviet Union has not been confined to the government. A wide range of contacts has been established in recent years by persons who recognize the Soviet Union as a near neighbour, as a country of great influence, as a marketplace and trading partner of immense potential, as the home of wide cultural attainments and as a fascinating land. I believe we have much to gain in this process of increasing awareness and I am pleased that visitors to the U.S.S.R. in recent months included the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Canadian businessmen, scholars, artists, athletes and tourists are visiting the Soviet Union in increasing numbers and with considerable success. While my party was in Leningrad yesterday a ship unloaded a valuable cargo of sophisticated, heavy-tracked vehicles purchased by the Soviets from a Calgary manufacturer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Earlier in my visit I was delighted to be told that an Edmonton girl, Miss Elizabeth Carruthers, had placed first in one of the events at a championship diving meet in Riga and that two of her Canadian teammates came third and fourth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Against this steadily developing background it was only natural that steps be taken to place Canadian-Soviet relationships on a more structured and orderly basis, and this was the purpose of the protocol which was signed in Moscow last week and tabled in this House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) on the same day.

This document, which I believe to be an important one, goes some distance toward placing Canadian-Soviet consultations on the same basis as has existed for a number of years with the United Kingdom, the United States and Japan. Hon. members will recall, Mr. Speaker, that a similar arrangement was entered into with Mexico as part of the work of the ministerial committee which travelled to Latin America, and that agreements for regular consultation with both New Zealand and Australia were reached during my visits to those countries last May.

[Translation]

This process of broadening Canadian relationships is an ongoing one and was spelled out in the foreign policy review. The principles of that review have been discussed widely in Canada and were studied at length by a parliamentary committee. The foreign policy of this government has been to contribute where it can to a peaceful world and to strengthen our relations with a number of countries. In both respects this policy is designed to serve basic Canadian values and interests. The Canadian-Soviet protocol is a natural manifestation of that policy.

As the communiqué which was tabled this morning reveals, the protocol will ensure continuing consultations at a variety of levels on matters of the kind discussed by me and the Soviet leaders, President Podgorny, Premier Kosygin and Secretary General Brezhnev. The communiqué refers to the desirability of relaxation of international tensions and of stability and détente in Europe; economic, scientific and technological cooperation; Canadian-Soviet trade; Arctic and northern development including the safety of navigation and the prevention of pollution; the significance of the forthcoming U.N. Conference on the Human Environment; the conviction that international issues be resolved in accordance with the principles of the United Nations Charter and that the effectiveness of the U.N. be enhanced; satisfaction at the conclusion of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, and the treaty prohibiting placement of weapons of mass destruction on the ocean floor.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party cannot be suggesting in its motion that discussions on subjects of this importance to Canada should not take place with the Soviet Union. Nor, surely can the opposition now contend that the government's policy of widening and strengthening relations with a selective number of countries is not known to them or is not desirable.

If the purpose of the motion and of this debate is to make known to Parliament and to Canadians the constructive and imaginative foreign policy initiatives of this government, then I welcome the opportunity. And I remind the House that the foreign policy review stated that we would seek actively opportunities to further Canadian interests; that wherever possible we would not wait passively for events to occur and then to react to them; that, in sort, we would pursue in as judicious and advantageous a way as possible the broad range of policies which are permitted to Canada as a country which is well-respected abroad.

These things we have been doing, and these things we shall continue to do.

While in no way diluting our friendship or our contacts with those countries such as the United States, Britain, France and others with which we have had traditional and friendly relations, we have taken a fresh look at the world and at the Canadian interests in it. Areas of the world which have not in the past figured prominently in Canada have been sought out consciously as friends, as prospective trading partners, as sources of information and advice, as contributors to an independent Canada; a Canada not overwhelmingly dependent upon or dominated by any one state or group of states; in short, a Canada with a singular identity and well recognized as such both by Canadians and by citizens of other countries.

We have been active in the world in those areas where we could contribute positively and usefully: economic and technical assistance, through the creation of the Canadian International Development Research Centre; fresh juristic concepts for the prevention of pollution in waters off our shores and for the conservation of fisheries; studies and proposals in the fields of disarmament and arms control. We have looked to Latin America and are seeking permanent observer status in the Organization of American States; we have expressed our many-faceted interest in the countries of the far rim of the Pacific; we have adjusted our defence posture to remove from it any elements that could be regarded as provocative, and to ensure that our policy adequately but truly reflects the needs of Canada for national defence; we have been successful in establishing useful and official contacts with the most populous nation in the world, the People's Republic of China; we have entered wholeheartedly the new Francophonie organization.

All this has been done, Mr. Speaker, while retaining Canadian membership in NATO and NORAD, while strengthening our relationship with such economic associations as the OECD and GATT, while contributing in an effective and constructive fashion to the U.N. and to the Commonwealth.

These activities are good in themselves, are good for Canada and, I am convinced, are supported strongly by the majority of Canadians.

[English]

It is in this context that my visit to the Soviet Union should be viewed. As we have looked traditionally south to the United States and east to Europe and, more recently, west to Asia, so should we not disregard our neighbour to the north. The relations between Canada and the Soviet Union in the post-war years have not all been of a wholesome or a desirable nature. I harbour no naïve belief that as a result of this protocol our two countries will find themselves suddenly in a relationship which will reflect nothing but sweetness and tender feelings. As I stated in my speech in the Kremlin, there remain many fundamental differences between us; differences relating to deep-seated concerns springing from historic, geographic, ideological, economic, social and military factors.

• (3:50 p.m.)

But surely, Mr. Speaker, the only way to resolve these differences and eliminate these concerns is by increased contact and effort at understanding. That is what the protocol proposes. That is what, in a different way, is achieved by prime ministerial visits. Through them an opportunity is created by the pens of journalists and the cameras of photographers for the people of both Canada and the Soviet Union to learn much more about one another—their respective histories, their sufferings, their aspirations.

No one can travel in the Ukraine and not absorb the instinctive and passionate desire for peace on the part of a people who lost nine million of their countrymen during World War II, a number approaching in magnitude the entire population of Canada at that time. No one can walk through the cemeteries of Leningrad and view the mass graves of tens of thousands of residents of that city who died of starvation during the cruel 900-day siege and not understand that the Russian people fear desperately the repetition of an experience which no Canadians, fortunately, have ever suffered. The death of half the people of a city—600,000 of them women, children and civilians—did not spare a single Leningrad family. The survivors of that cruel conflict do not regard war as an abstract concept, as a glorious pursuit or as a credible means of resolving disputes. War to them is the loss before one's eyes of loved ones, of home, of possessions, of hope.

To achieve a satisfactory, just and continuing peace requires a climate of confidence, a climate in which men of differing social and economic systems trust one another. There is no simple way in which this can be done, but neither is there the slightest doubt that it must be done. Equally, confidence can be engendered only by increasing contact of governments and of people. In this way, gradually, and sometimes painfully, can we continue and accelerate the slow progress toward a world-in which the foremost goals of every government of every country must be the attainment of social justice, fundamental human rights and the dignity and worth of all human beings.

Because tolerance and good will are nowhere so evident as they are in Canada, Canadians are possessed of an uncommon opportunity to urge all men everywhere to pursue these universal goals. I attempted to do so while in the Soviet Union, where I expressed to Premier Kosygin the widespread concern in Canada over the alleged refusal of the Soviet government to permit its Jewish citizens to emigrate to Israel or to other countries of their choice. I was assured by Mr. Kosygin that these allegations were not well-founded and that, in particular, his government had permitted to exit to Israel for many months of significant numbers of Soviet Jews. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Kosygin's statement has been corroborated by the Canadian government from other, independent sources.

I seized the opportunity to urge Mr. Kosygin to permit persons of all ethnic origins with relatives in Canada to come here and thus reunify the many families which have been split tragically for many years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: He assured me that his government would not place unjustifiable barriers in the way of those persons and he promised that he would give personal attention to the list of names of such persons which I took with me to Moscow.

In another area entirely, I was able to discuss with Mr. Kosygin the concern and fear expressed by our east coast fishermen over the practices of the Soviet Atlantic fishing fleet. I pointed out to him the immense increase in recent years of the Soviet catch, the decrease in the Canadian catch and the vital need for conservation of this important food resource in the interests of both our countries. Mr. Kosygin observed that the Soviet Union was a party to the North Atlantic fisheries convention and had a profound interest in a long-lasting and healthy fish stock. We agreed that this issue was deserving of further talks.

Only time will tell, Mr. Speaker, whether the warm welcome which was accorded me in the U.S.S.R. reflects the commencement of an era in Canadian-Soviet relationships as advantageous as we all hope will be the case. I prefer to be optimistic and I am urging all government departments to exploit these new openings. I urge Canadian businessmen to accept the new challenge. For our part as Canadians, I assured the Soviet leaders that there was no impediment in our desire for better and more mutually beneficial relations. In the pursuit of those benefits I am happy to report to the House the exceedingly high reputation and the impressive competence of the Canadian ambassador to the Soviet Union, Mr. R. A. D. Ford, and his conscientious and professional staff.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: As the House is aware, Mr. Speaker, I invited Premier Kosygin to visit Canada at a time convenient to each of us, and he accepted with pleasure. I am certain that on that occasion Canadians will respond to the Soviet leader with the same warmth and conge-niality as was shown to me by persons in every city I visited. I am particularly grateful to Mr. Kosygin who spent some 20 hours with me and whose daughter acted throughout the visit as the hostess for my wife.

I am happy, Mr. Speaker, that I was given the opportunity to make the trip. I am happy to be back. I am happy at what appears to be the favourable results of the visit.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I join the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) in welcoming the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) back from his journey. As he may have surmised from this debate, we have followed with interest his peregrinations through the various parts of the Soviet Union. I regret that he was compelled, upon landing in this country, to come to the House of Commons for this debate. I assume that he has learned by now that it has arisen as a result of the regrettable refusal of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister refused what I consider to be our very reasonable request that the government should set aside for debate and discussion the treaty and surrounding, connected matters which were entered into while the Prime Minister was in the Soviet Union.

My own preference would have been for the Prime Minister to have reported: then suitable arrangements could have been made among the various parties to set aside one or two days to debate this important issue and the surrounding circumstances flowing from this trip and treaty. The Secretary of State for External Affairs refused this and challenged us, in effect, to bring this subject forward on the first available opposition day in the House of Commons. We had no alternative to so doing. That action has brought the Prime Minister here. I am glad he is here, and I was glad to hear what he had to say.

Let it not be said, Mr. Speaker, that this party or anyone in it objects to discussions, negotiations and consultations between this country and any country in the world, including the Soviet Union.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: That has not been the issue in this debate. The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when speaking indicated the extent to which this practice has been followed in the past. The practice was initiated to a large extent by the government he led when he was Prime Minister. What concerned us and what impelled us to bring about this debate were the circumstances surrounding the institution of the so-called protocol, what was said in Russia and what was said here. I am quite sure that if this protocol had been executed without the fanfare which accompanied it, and without the proud claims and boasts made in this country and in the Soviet Union, there would have been discussions and there would have been a statement made by the Prime Minister on motions. We must look at the surrounding circumstances. Hon. members have quoted the Prime Minister's statements and I will not repeat them, but they referred to the historic nature of this particular arrangement.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister, made a report to the House in which he emphasized this. The only impression we got in this House, which I am sure the country got, was that the government was embarking on a completely new course, in a new direction, and was engaged in charting a voyage in new waters.

Mr. Sharp: That was your interpretation.

Mr. Baldwin: That was the impression derived in this House and in this country. The hon. gentleman cannot deny that. I will have some references to establish that point before I conclude. Something has been said about whether this is a protocol or a treaty, and what should be done about it. I do not care what you call it—it is what is in the document that is important. The important thing is what was said at the time of its execution and what was said by the apologists who accompanied the Prime Minister and reported on it. There can be no doubt at all that the impression created by the Prime Minister, his entourage, his staff here and the Acting Prime Minister was that this was something new, substantial and different.

It is true that this document reduces certain proposals to writing, but there is nothing in the protocol with regard to the future which could not have been, and was, done in the past.

Mr. Bigg: It was done before he went there.

Mr. Baldwin: The impression which must remain indelibly in our mind is that this is intended to be something new, significant and tremendously important. It is for this reason we asked for this debate. Having listened to the Prime Minister, I must say we are not much wiser than we were before he returned.

An hon. Member: You didn't listen.

Mr. Baldwin: Something has been said about the tremendous approval surrounding this document.

An hon. Member: His speech was a good travelogue.

Mr. Laing: Are you sorry, or are you glad?

Mr. Baldwin: There are varying opinions about this document throughout Canada and it will take time for the dust to settle. Let it be said that there are grave misgivings in certain parts of Canada, not with regard to the mere existence of a protocol but because of the surrounding circumstances, its execution and statements made in Russia and in Canada. Let me put a few comments on the record. I have here a letter dated May 26, 1971, addressed to the then Acting Prime Minister from the Ukrainian Canadian Committee. The first paragraph reads:

> Ukrainian Canadians received with great appreciation the remarks made by the right hon. Prime Minister Trudeau in his state dinner speech in Kiev, the capital of Ukraine, in which he emphasized the important contribution Ukrainians have made to the development of Canada while preserving their Ukrainian identity within Canada's cultural mosaic.

He might as well have mentioned the pitiful amount of money this government has contributed to the cultural betterment of these people as compared to moneys contributed in respect of biculturalism and bilingualism.

Mr. Sharp: Are you opposed to bilingualism?

Mr. Baldwin: Let me read the next two paragraphs.

However, we must strongly object to the Prime Minister's statement in which he made comparison between Canada's federal and democratic form of government and the totalitarian colonial system by means of which Soviet Russia rules over some 125 million people of non-Russian nations, of which Ukraine is the largest with a population of 47 million.

Under no circumstances can the democratic and federal system of Canada be equated with the one-party Soviet Russian dictatorship which uses secret trials, forced labour camps and other means of police rule for political and imperialistic purposes. The U.S.S.R. is in fact the only and the greatest colonial empire in the world today.

These are the views of the people. I put this on record to show that there is not the universal approbation in this country which the Prime Minister and others of his party suggest exists. Let me read from an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press last Thursday under the heading "Historic Indeed":

The Canadian-Russian treaty signed in Moscow is officially described as a "protocol". By insisting on this distinction the Trudeau government achieves two purposes of political importance. Protocol is a somewhat antiseptic term and hence useful to ministers preparing to pretend, when not preening themselves on their achievement—

These are not my words, but I adopt them.

—as world statesmen, that they have entered into a simple agreement for the encouragement of cultural, environmental and scientific exchanges. Moreover, their diplomatic stroke is a fait accompli; they do not have to seek ratification of a "protocol" by the Canadian Parliament.

In fact, the treaty is another significant step in the reversal of long-established Canadian policy. Mr. Sharp in Parliament called it "historic," as it may well be. The cordiality of the Soviet leaders is not surprising. Will you walk into my parlour, said the calculating spider to the innocent flies. And in walked Messrs. Sharp and Trudeau.

The people of Canada have been hoodwinked, in company with their allies. First, we had the elaborate foreign policy exercise which was intended to weaken our NATO ties under cover of professions of loyalty. Doubters were reassured by pointed references to the text of the Prime Minister's announcement of April, 1969, which emphasized our continuing membership. Now that the dust has settled we have the second move, a Moscow agreement creating a special relationship between Canada and the Soviet Union.

Without adopting in toto the principles of the suggestions contained in this editorial, I put this on record to add to the growing list of pronouncements and statements made by many people in Canada who have doubts about the statement of the Prime Minister on what he has done or signed, accompanied as it was by all the surrounding statements. This action was not accompanied by the wholesale approbation of the people of Canada.

Finally, hot off the press today, in the Toronto Star we have this article. You will notice I am quoting from papers which are not entirely unsympathetic to some of the very few reasonable proposals this government makes from time to time. This editorial is headed "Scene of the Crime" and it reads:

Honestly, we wouldn't have mentioned it, if he hadn't raised the subject himself. It was a sickening, disgusting and frightening affair, that brutal Soviet crackdown on Czechoslovakia in August, 1968. But people did nothing about it at the time, and there's been a tacit agreement since to let it alone.

But this week, Russian Communist party boss Leonid Brezhnev went, fresh from the Trudeaus, to Prague, where he boasted about his 1968 dirty work, and carefully repeated the nauseous "Brezhnev Doctrine," meaning he'll do it all over again, if he ever feels he has to. Since Mr. Brezhnev has been so tactless, we incline to being outspoken ourselves. There are 80,000 Russian troops still in Czechoslovakia. The deposed and disgraced Czech leader, Alexander Dubcek, is their butt. In his place, put there by Soviet brute force, is Gustav Husak, who saved Dubcek's life, but only by licking Brezhnev's boots. And 300,000 Czech Communists have been purged.

The obsequious praise that Husak heaped on Brezhnev in public when they met this week would have turned a normal man's stomach, but Mr. Brezhnev lapped it up.

An ear less tin might have detected an odd little note in the paean. Husak affirmed the need to defeat "right-wing opportunists, revisionists and anti-social forces". But these are precisely the terms the Chinese employ for abusing the Russians. Husak may not be quite the toady Mr. Brezhnev thinks. The Czechs have a long tradition of quietly needling their conquerors. Ever hear of "the good soldier Schweik," Mr. Brezhnev?

• (4:10 p.m.)

I have a great many of these quotations which I could place on the record. Hon. members might fall over themselves praising everything they have done, but I believe it is up to them and the people of the country to examine with care and caution what has been done and what is being done. Good things we accept, however, and there may be some good come out of this. We hope this will be the case. We will check into it as time goes by.

The right hon. gentleman said today that he had mentioned to the Chairman certain problems which now exist between Canada and the U.S.S.R., such as the question of the Jewish people trying to leave Russia, the fishery problem which exists and which has been the subject of speeches by many members on this side of the House, the question of immigration, and so on. We will watch with care and interest what comes out of this. If in fact there are compensating features and improvements which take place, we will be prepared to give credit to the Prime Minister even though these might take place in any event.

However, this does not alter the fact that the right hon. gentleman fled Canada because of the problems he faced domestically. We have heard of the retreat from Moscow. Now we hear about the retreat to Moscow of the right hon. gentleman and his friends. Napoleon went one way and the right hon. gentleman went another way. We will watch with care and we will file a caveat in respect of the development which is taking place.

We have exercised our responsibility as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition because of the dismal failure of the government to set aside appropriate time to discuss this matter—because it is either an historical and important event, as has been suggested, or it is nothing. If it is as important as the Secretary of State for External Affairs says it is, then it justifies proper debate and discussion in this House. The refusal of the government to do this has compelled us to bring about this debate. The problems which we envisage certainly have been brought to hand by what we have seen today. On the government side there has not been one speech of substance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I regret having to include the right hon. gentleman in that. There has been nothing to explain, justify and rationalize not only the protocol but the accompanying statements. Let us make sure that before we throw aside old friends, old agreements and old alliances we know where we are going. I suggest to the right hon. gentleman that if he has not already done so, he should read "Pilgrim's Progress."

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, all of us listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a few minutes ago. In the view of most of us, he demonstrated beyond any argument the present and potential value of the arrangement signed the other day with Russia. He demonstrated beyond question the fact that there is no basis at all for the proposal contained in the resolution under discussion that the protocol should be brought before the House for consideration and decision.

Precedent after precedent has been cited in the House this afternoon by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), by other members and latterly by the Prime Minister who indicated that the procedure followed was perfectly in order and consistent with the action of this and other governments. Beyond that, however, I think it is most disturbing that we have heard such narrow, petty criticism of what can only be regarded as an important piece of progress in the development of Canada in respect of its external relations policy. A few moments ago we heard the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the House leader of his party.

Mr. Greene: He used to be a big man.

Mr. Perrault: Did he comment on the announcement of the increased Canadian wheat sales? There wasn't even adequate recognition of the sales. There is a complete ignoring of this important fact and just a recitation of the arguments resurrected from the cold war. I believe it is a disappointing type of treatment from a man in his position. Shortly before that we heard from the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who formerly was granted the great privilege of leading the government of this country. Yes, other Privy Councillors have journeyed to Russia at other times and have expressed their deep pleasure in the warmth of the Russian reception. The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert played a different tune on his balalaika a few years ago. The Toronto Star of October 17, 1969, states:

> Former Canadian Prime Minister John Diefenbaker has a dream and he hopes the Russians will help make it comee true.

The report continues:

> Diefenbaker said later that they agreed that Canada and the U.S.S.R. should co-operate in a scientific exchange program aimed at developing the Arctic areas.

In another article Mr. Diefenbaker is reported to have said that the meeting could not possibly have been more cordial and friendly. In the Toronto Star of October 14, 1969, we find these words:

> Former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker checked into the room used by Lenin in Moscow's National Hotel today and prepared for a meeting with Dimitry Polyanski, deputy premier of the Soviet Union.

When he was asked about the arrangements made for him, he said he was obviously pleased. He said he was given the ornately furnished hotel room with the balcony from which Lenin addressed the revolutionaries in 1917. It must have been a great experience. The Toronto Star goes on to say:

> Occasionally he talks mysteriously to the walls in his room of honour in the National Hotel where Lenin lived and from which he addressed the revolutionary hordes in 1917. The RCMP warned Diefenbaker before he left Ottawa that his room would probably be bugged.

Apparently he must have been talking to the microphone on that occasion. But when the former Prime Minister of this country was in Russia he talked in terms of the necessity of co-operation between our two great countries. He insisted that there was a place for Canada to play a very important role. He talked in terms of the value of Canada's efforts to bring about a rapprochement between the United States and the Soviet Union. This is also from the Toronto Star of October 14, 1969:

> He seemed to startle the Intourist guides by quoting former British Prime Minister Lloyd George to them. I remember George said 'That God chooses small nations to carry the sweetest wine of democracy to the world.'

Perhaps at least here we are brewing a batch of wine which may bring good results. Possibly there are some who in this debate would like to perpetuate the dreary era of the cold war and who cannot conceive that the world can change and that conditions can change. There are those in this House with dark and lingering fears in their minds that any time Canada achieves an agreement of any kind, that agreement represents a so-called sell-out or betrayal of Canada's interests and that somehow or another Canadians are unable to negotiate any international agreement which will confer benefits on this nation.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Yet there are other, enlightened members of this assembly who know all too well that this is not 1947, 1957 or even 1967—it is 1971 when throughout the world a certitude exists that unless we open more doors between nations we risk not only a military cataclysm but ecological and environmental disaster. It is to the credit of this government that it is a government willing to work with other nations, willing to undertake initiatives and willing to assist in the resolution of international disputes and misunderstandings. Despite the suggestions of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that we have lacked in our efforts to promote international understanding, Canada's record is one of the finest in the world. I am sure the hon. member is aware of that fact. There are countless issues where Canadian initiatives have conferred a benefit on the entire world. Those who advance their narrow criticism of the recent agreement between the U.S.S.R. and Canada should remember that Canadian initiatives to keep the seabed free from nuclear weapons, to reduce armaments in the world and to protect the world's environment have involved extensive consultations with those whose political ideologies we cannot support.

Projected to its extreme limit, the argument advanced by certain hon. members would have us only conduct our external relations with politically acceptable governments. Such a policy would be foolish in the extreme and it would be foolhardy. Here we are, one of the world's largest nations with one of the world's longest coastlines, bounded on the north by our unique Arctic and beyond that the Soviet Union. Our geography makes mandatory relations with both the United States and the U.S.S.R. in a number of critical areas. In a war we could be another Belgium, the no man's land where nuclear warheads land. No wonder Canada is so active at the Geneva disarmament talks; no wonder Canada is a leader of the small nations in efforts to bring about disarmament—because there are now nuclear warheads capable of droping a million tons of t.n.t. or its equivalent should a war be conducted overhead.

In the fight to protect the world's environment, together with our two vast neighbours we could be a key to protecting the biosphere of the earth. So we have this agreement, we have this accord because we have a great interest in all efforts, unilateral, bilateral and multilateral, to protect that real estate which we share with our two giant neighbours, the United States and Russia. Yet some of those in the opposition continue to look into the glass darkly and tell us that we have no business attempting to construct a better and more efficient way to discuss with our neighbours a range of problems common to us. Common sense Canadians know where their best interest lies—not in a narrow, introverted chauvinism but in a healthy, positive approach to our international relations.

The House has been assured that this agreement is not a treaty but a means whereby we can conduct normal diplomatic relations on a more regular, systematic basis. It is, in a sense, a protocol to eliminate, paradoxically, the need for even more protocol, an arrangement to render unnecessary the construction of new and totally separate arrangements for issues which arise between our two governments. If similar arrangements can be achieved with other nations of special importance to Canada, then we should proceed to establish these similar arrangements as well.

The opposition has questioned the benefits which are expected to flow from this arrangement, and some of the points have been reviewed. Discussions will take place under this arrangement about the preservation of the environment, Arctic conditions and navigation, the status of minorities and on matters which, hopefully, will lead to a reuniting of families.

I want to say something about the first of the possible advantages to flow from this new arrangement with the U.S.S.R. We have an immense amount in common with the geography of northern Russia. Canada for years, quite understandably, has been very interested in the Soviet Arctic, particularly the eastern areas. We have in common with Russia a vast area of permafrost, a boreal forest, a sparse population and peoples some of whom have a very similar ethnic background to some Canadians. Canada wants to know more about a range of considerations relating to the Arctic, wherever that Arctic area may lie. So far, far eastern Siberia has been closed to the west. Hopefully, that area can be opened to our scientists.

This flow of knowledge and information cannot be a one-way street. It is wrong to assume that Canada is the only possible beneficiary of such an exchange. We have done some unique things in our own Arctic and this information is of interest to our Soviet neighbours. There is a possibility, then, of a sharing of information which may well be of substantial benefit to both nations. They build dams in permafrost in the U.S.S.R. It would be good for our scientists to discuss dam-building techniques in our permafrost.

How does the vast Soviet forest industry cope with pollution? Do we have technical knowledge which can be shared in this area? If it helps the Soviet Union, then it helps the environment of the world and our youngsters and people will benefit just as much as young people and citizens in any other part of the world. How are natural gas pipelines constructed in permafrost? Surely there are opportunities to share information and knowledge with respect to community and social development and ways in which the capabilities of our respective native peoples can be brought to full development. Surely there are ways to share information with respect to the education of our respective native peoples and the ways in which their rich heritage of life, language and customs can be retained, while offering these peoples an opportunity to realize their full potential.

In the Northeast Passage, within the area under Soviet jurisdiction, a remarkable system of navigation has been established by the Soviet through 40 years of development. Surely Canada has an interest in sharing with the U.S.S.R. and all other countries knowledge which may ensure safe and efficient navigation in the dangerous Arctic waters. We have a common interest in Arctic ecology and in methods involved in preventing pollution of these waters.

In other words, those who heap scorn on this agreement and attempt to read into it all sorts of dark implications must be unaware of the world in which we live, a world where a diplomatic thaw already is under way between China and the West. For 22 years since the Communists came to power in China scarcely a constructive word has been exchanged between the United States and the People's Republic of China. Some dramatic events occurred over a table-tennis tournament a few weeks ago—incredible events. A great deal of credit for this unexpected and most hopeful development must be given to the U.S. government, and yet the suggestion was contained in the speech of one of the members of the opposition today that the United States would be offended by our action. Let me quote from an editorial of the Christian Science Monitor, a reprint of which appeared in the May 24 issue of the Globe and Mail. It reads:

> But there is no real basis for objection and Washington itself has just paid Trudeau foreign policy the supreme compliment of imitation. After all, he did open up the road to Peking which Washington is now trying to travel.

So we are living in a new world, a world which is apparently beyond the comprehension of the external affairs critics who reside in the official opposition. A few days ago the President of the United States announced a step to move the world to an era of negotiation so far as a de-escalation in the arms build-up is concerned. He declared that the deadlock at the strategic arms limitation talks with Russia is now over. Hard bargaining lies ahead before the nuclear super powers can actually slow down the lunatic arms race. But they have now agreed, after 18 months of negotiations, to work out simultaneously the limitation of defensive and offensive missiles. The breakthrough at SALT must not be regarded as an isolated development. Where there is progress in one area, it can be matched in another area. Fortunately, that is the philosophy of the government of this nation.

• (4:30 p.m.)

At Geneva, Canada's representative, George Ignatieff, continues with some success his efforts to achieve a ban on underground nuclear testing. He has persuaded the 25-nation conference to listen to scientists who claim that the latest seismological instruments will detect even small nuclear explosions 4,000 miles away. If scientists can prove it, that ought to lead to the signing of a treaty banning all nuclear tests—again a Canadian initiative, again a demonstration that wherever the vital interests of this nation are concerned we will sit down with any government, whatever its ideology, if we think the Canadian people can be thereby aided and the betterment of the world advanced. That has to be our philosophy.

There is much evidence to support the view that the nations of the world regard foreign policy as an extension of their own domestic self-interest. It may be that today the world's nations are interested in détente because, among other considerations, they can see no long-term future in the world for a build-up of armaments and a deterioration of the environment and they have come to realize, at least in part, the need for co-operation.

No one should be naive enough to assume that closer co-operation between Canada and the U.S.S.R., closer co-operation between the United States and the People's Republic of China or closer co-operation between any two other countries in the world represents an abandonment by them of their long-held goals or political ideologies. For our part, we would be guilty of a monstrous disservice to the Canadian people if we ignored, abandoned or neglected any initiative which may serve to improve the lot of our people and the world. It is in this spirit, a spirit of hope and optimism, that Canada has achieved the agreement with the U.S.S.R. which we are discussing today—and fortunately the vast majority of the Canadian people will hail it and will not support the narrow criticisms we have heard from the official opposition.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our party I welcome the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) back to Canada and express the hope that he fully enjoyed his trip through the U.S.S.R. In fact, I am sure he did. I believe that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) expressed the sentiments of this party when he said it was a worth-while effort on the part of the head of the Canadian government to make personal contact, to talk to the people who rule the U.S.S.R. and to see that country.

I have read the protocol. It seems to me that there is a general understanding or agreement between our two nations to talk to one another, to consult on matters that are of mutual interest, probably to agree where we can agree and to disagree where we do not agree. Is there really any other basis upon which good relations can be established between countries? After all, countries are made up of peoples, and is this not the basis upon which individual people and groups operate?

I am pleased the Prime Minister pointed out that considerable discussion was undertaken in regard to trade between our two countries. Trade has been important. We have sold large quantities of grain to the U.S.S.R. Incidentally, one dealer in my constituency has half a dozen Roumanian tractors on display which he is selling to farmers in Saskatchewan. This is the kind of trade which all westerners are pleased to see because, being fairly practical people—and I take it that the citizens of the U.S.S.R. are the same—we are well aware that we cannot proceed on a one-way street so far as trade is concerned. We are aware that it must be two-way trade, that we must open our doors to the products which the U.S.S.R. has to sell and they in turn will be prepared to purchase from us the things that we have to sell.

I had the privilege of being in Geneva at negotiations on two occasions on the International Wheat Agreement. The negotiators for the U.S.S.R. approached the matter precisely as did the negotiators for Canada—on a practical, hard-nosed and workmanlike basis. So I think that the agreement which was concluded in 1956 and the second one which was signed in January this year will facilitate more trade between our two countries.

So far as consultation is concerned between our two nations in regard to the Arctic and to fisheries, if we can protect not only our interests but the ecology and the fisheries a lot will be gained. I understand that this kind of arrangement was being developed and was well under way before the Prime Minister undertook his journey, but it may very well be that further contact will be helpful.

Mention has been made by the Prime Minister of representations he made on behalf of people in Canada whose ancestry goes back to the Ukraine and to Russia. I have received representations from such groups. I went to school with the children of those people, know many of their families and have some idea of what it is all about. If the Prime Minister was able to make representations which may make things a little easier for them, I for one will be very pleased.

As Canadians, we must take the view that we are being realistic when we expand our relations with other countries through contact and consultation. When he was attempting to become President of the United States I remember Wendell Wilkie saying that we would have one world or no world. Of course, that is an absolute statement and probably not all that profound. But certainly we will have to learn to live together, particularly with the present state of technology in the world. We have no other alternative. Aneurin Bevan, the great British Socialist, in his book "In Place of Fear" published after the war—about 1946 or 1947—said it would be essential to the peace and welfare of the peoples of the world that contacts and working relationships be established between the two great ideologies which had emerged from the nineteenth century and which had taken up opposing positions after the Second World War. He was quite right; we did not do it. Instead, we went into opposing positions and have carried it through almost up to this time.

• (4:40 p.m.)

We cannot claim that the process has been an outstanding success but surely through gradual contact with other peoples we might learn to tolerate what we cannot accept because that is the only alternative. We certainly will not be prepared to accept the ideologies and the form of government of all other peoples in the world any more than they will be prepared to accept ours.

The war in Viet Nam, which has been carried on with terrible ferocity for many years, has not succeeded in changing anything. It has caused the death of a great many people and has devastated the countryside, but it has not convinced the people over there to change their ways. We have to recognize the facts. Times change, and it may happen that over the years we can find better ways of developing human relations throughout the world. Wendel Wilkie and Aneurin Bevan held two entirely different philosophies but they agreed that we must develop ways to live together. It must be the hope of people that we can do so.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I should like to ask some questions in connection with the very successful trip just completed by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). First of all, I should like to welcome him back. While I have not had much personal experience, I am told that travelling through many time zones is exceedingly tiring. I hope the "awkward squad" he left behind to look after things in Ottawa has not got them in such a mess that he will not be able to have a weekend of rest before being involved in affairs of state.

Any right-thinking person would applaud efforts to broaden the scope of personal and national contacts. This afternoon the Prime Minister mentioned things which are worth while—the exchange of information relative to Arctic technology, including navigation, prevention of pollution, exchange of educational and cultural ideas and increased trade. All this is a step in the right direction, but I submit that most of these things are already in effect. They were in effect before signing this protocol. Over the years Russia had loosened travel restrictions. We had trade relations with them and they bought products from us when it was in their interests to do so. We were getting along fairly well and situations were improving. But we were dealing, as I suggest we should, at arms length which was not a bad thing. We have not really accomplished anything new. The Prime Minister mentioned fishing, and that is fine. Representatives of the Soviet Union have been sitting in on the discussions at Halifax, so this is an improvement.

The question uppermost in the minds of most Canadians is, who instigated this protocol? Was it the Russians or was it Canada? I think this is important, but we have never been told. Who started negotiations, and who stands to gain? I think all Canadians were delighted that the Prime Minister was so warmly welcomed in Russia. I hope it was a genuine demonstration of affection, but remembering events as recent as those of 1968 in Prague I cannot quite accept that. I sincerely hope that I am proven wrong but I have a nagging suspicion that this great event may have been largely staged in order to embarrass and drive a further wedge between Canada and our closest and sincerest friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: I mean our NATO allies, and in particular the United States of America.

Mr. Sharp: That is nonsense, sheer fabrication.

Mr. McCutcheon: I cannot forget that the stated Soviet foreign policy is to discredit the United States of America in the eyes of the world. Sincerely, Mr. Speaker—and I cannot stress this too much—I hope that we have not been hoodwinked.

An hon. Member: Yes, we have.

Mr. McCutcheon: Let me refer for a moment to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the treaty, which I should like to read into the record:

> 2. In the event of a situation arising which, in the opinion of the two governments, endangers the maintenance of peace or involves a breach of the peace, the two governments will make contact without delay in order to exchange views on what might be done to improve the situation.
>
> 3. The provisions set forth in paragraphs 1 and 2 above do not affect obligations previously assumed by the parties in respect of third states and are not directed against any of them.

This simply means that nothing Canada has to say will have any effect on the behaviour of the U.S.S.R. or her

Warsaw Pact activities in the event that any of the subjugated nations become restive. Surely Canadians will not be so naive as to assume that this provision is designed for our benefit. Surely our relationship with the United States and our NATO allies would be affected. This is really nothing, except that Russia still wants to have the best of both worlds. In the May 20, 1971, edition of the Toronto Telegram, the Prime Minister is quoted as saying:

• (4:50 p.m.)

"Canada might risk losing her personality because of the overpowering United States neighbour, for which reason we have to diversify our relationships with other countries."

What a play on words! What a perversion of fact! We should have a complete debate in this House on the threat to which the Prime Minister has referred.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: If the government was really sincere, wanted meaningful discussion and wanted to take the Canadian people into its confidence, I suggest that this matter might have been handled differently.

Mr. Sharp: How?

Mr. McCutcheon: Are you still the Acting Prime Minister or are you—

Mr. Sharp: The Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. McCutcheon: The Secretary of State for External Affairs asks, "How?". This minister would not permit the matter to be brought before the House in government time. The Prime Minister was to arrive on Monday with a prepared speech and each of the opposition parties was to be given a few minutes in which to reply. Nothing would have come out of that except of five-minute exchange.

I wish to comment on the remarks made this morning by the then Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp). In my humble opinion he made a very specious argument. He compared this protocol with certain agreements made by previous governments. He referred to 1961 and other years. He was really comparing apples and watermelons, if we are to believe what the Prime Minister said this afternoon. These previous agreements, which were made without approval of the House—and he referred to that—do not have anything in common with this one. I make that statement having regard to the fact that the other agreements did not contain a change in policy or direction.

Mr. Sharp: Nor does this.

Mr. McCutcheon: The minister says "Neither does this," but this is not the inference that is being carefully put across to the Canadian people.

Mr. Sharp: By the opposition.

Mr. McCutcheon: I believe there are others who wish to participate in this debate, so I will not take any more time. I will conclude by saying that I am disturbed by certain developments in this country, some of which were alluded to last night on television by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). He referred to certain Marxist students who were receiving government largess. I have in my hand an article which appeared in the Toronto Telegram pointing out the irony of the Canada Council awarding a $3,500 grant to Mrs. Phyllis Clarke, former chairman of the metro Toronto Communist Party. Bearing that in mind, I wish to quote as follows from one of the nice little books entitled "Foreign Policy for Canadians," put out by the Department of External Affairs:

External activities should be directly related to national policies pursued within Canada, and serve the same objectives.

Perhaps this has passed unnoticed by many Canadians, but I suggest it is time that they were reminded. I repeat:

External activities should be directly related to national policies—

If our national policies are to support Marxists, where are we being led?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, a member of the Créditiste party has been waiting to speak for some time. With the unanimous consent of the House, perhaps we could continue for another five minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is very pleased to accept the suggestion. I know the hon. member would like to have a few minutes. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its great courtesy in allowing me to say a few words on the trip of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the U.S.S.R.

We are pleased to see that the Prime Minister did not do things by halves. To my mind, the trip was timely and Canada should benefit from it.

Mr. Speaker, as it is five o'clock, I do not want to keep the House too long, but I should like to congratulate the Prime Minister for the account he gave us of his beautiful trip; I also thank him for supplying us with a copy of the protocol and the report on the discussions he had with the representatives of that country.

We have to keep in direct contact with all countries of the world, regardless of their ideologies, their political philosophy and their economic system.

We must realize that there is something to be said for the economic policy of other countries even if we disagree with their ideologies. We are facing two great ideologies: capitalism and communism.

The capitalist system is good in some respect, even if it has serious deficiencies which should be corrected.

There are also deficiencies in the communist system, as unlike capitalism it deprives certain citizens of their freedom.

The communist system involves certain administrative principles which give good results in the countries which live according to its principles.

So even though we might not adopt the communist system as a whole, we could perhaps consider its principles in matters of financing. It is said that what is materially possible should be financially feasible.

If this principle is valid for Russia, it is probably valid also under a capitalist system such as ours provided we proceed to reform such a system.

• (5:00 p.m.)

On the contrary, one must hope. Having respected the two systems, our contemporaries must unite and get organized to force a confrontration on the only level where agreement is possible: the higher level of moral values, in brief, the very highest level of all. Instead of fighting them, we should reform them internally through patient, constant and determined efforts.

We must humanize capitalism and liberalize communism in order that the two may meet in the world of man, so that it may become what it should be, so that man may recover his rights and his privileges. Respect for the human being must be paramount. If we respect nations, we may come to respect individuals. Today, nations should have plenty of respect for one another, because we are all in the same boat. If we do not learn to know one another, to better appreciate one another, to live like citizens, like human beings, then if the boat is sunk, we shall all perish together, the victims of nuclear armament. In such circumstances, if we wish to be practical, we must show some consideration for one another and make use of all our resources for the greater good of the human race.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

THE BUDGET—ORDER AS TO PRESENTATION AND DEBATE THEREON

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, might I seek the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter which I understand has been discussed through the usual channels? I believe there is agreement for the following order to be passed by the House:

That if the day appointed for the next budget presentation by the Minister of Finance be a Friday, the House shall not adjourn that day at 5 o'clock p.m., but the sitting shall be suspended until 10 minutes after 5 o'clock p.m. and shall at that time be resumed in order to permit the said budget presentation and the preliminary remarks by the member speaking first on behalf of the opposition;

And that, immediately upon completion of the budget debate, the House shall take into consideration any Ways and Means motions presented in relation to the said budget and shall not adjourn until it has completed its consideration thereof, and has given first reading to any bills thereon.

I understand there is agreement among the parties that this motion shall be put and that it become an order of the House.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, this "protocol" has just been placed before us and we have not had much time in which to examine it but I am sure the Minister of Agriculture, outside of agricultural matters, would be sure to give us the facts as they are. First, we give our consent to revert to motions. Basically we are in accord with the provisions of the proposed order, but I wish to make it plain that our understanding is that the Friday in question is a Friday in June. If it should happen that we get into July, there would be some disposition not to accept this arrangement.

The understanding is that we start on the budget at ten minutes after five. There would be some comment by the speaker for the opposition, the debate would continue in its usual way and there would be an opportunity to bring forward a bill or bills based on the budget, for first reading, despite the fact that there might not be enough time under the Standing Orders. That is our understanding and I take it this is what the minister intends. On this basis we are perfectly prepared to agree with it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), this proposed order represents an agreement which has been reached among the House leaders. Like the hon. member for Peace River, I think that one or two other parts of the package should be on the record. I may say that these negotiations are carried out in a friendly and co-operative spirit; we do not have any trouble about them—but it is useful to have these points on the record.

Like the hon. member, we are agreeing to this order only if it is put into effect during the month of June. If the month of June goes by without this expected budget, the order is spent as far as we are concerned. There is agreement among us that if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) makes his budget presentation on a Friday, the debate on that motion will not be resumed until the following Tuesday. If the budget is on the day we expect it to be, there will be enough days to get the six-day debate in.

The package includes a little more than is contained in the order. It is one we have all agreed to. I confess I asked myself a few minutes ago about those mysterious ten minutes, why the House should suspend at five o'clock and come back ten minutes later. I understand this would provide an opportunity to escort members of the press out of their locked-up cells to the press gallery to hear the minister's speech. Anyway, the order has our approval.

Mr. Olson: If I might comment on the questions which have been raised, I would suggest that neither of the hon. gentlemen who spoke were asking that the proposed order be changed. They wanted these things on the record. While I was not a party to the discussions, I have the same understanding respecting the month of June as has been expressed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the order and the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Oslson). It would seem to me the references to the month of June might call for an amendment. However, if hon. members are agreed that the proposed order be presented as drafted, subject to the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I will put it on that basis.

Is it agreed that an order be made in those terms?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered. It being five o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) the proceedings on the motion previously before the House have expired.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 31, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF GENERAL COUNCIL OF COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Speaker: May I draw the attention of hon. members to the presence in the Speaker's gallery and also partly in the Senate gallery of a distinguished group of parliamentarians from various regions of the Commonwealth. They are members of the Executive Committee of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association's General Council who have just concluded their annual spring meeting held this year in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. They are with us today as guests of the Canadian branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. I am sure hon. members will want me to express to them on your behalf a most cordial welcome to Ottawa and to our national Parliament. We hope that their discussions here in Ottawa will be as fruitful as their meetings in Charlottetown have been and that they will enjoy their all too brief stay with us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2:10 p.m.)

CONGRATULATIONS TO MR. SPEAKER ON INSTALLATION AS CHANCELLOR OF UNIVERSITY OF WINDSOR

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly under the provisions of Standing Order 117 on a matter which I believe will meet with the approval of all members of the House. We should like to extend to you, Sir, our congratulations on your having been installed on Saturday as Chancellor of the University of Windsor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As one who had the privilege of being there for that occasion, I can say that your performance of your duties and the address that you made brought honour to this House. We are proud of you and we extend our warmest congratulations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville perhaps rising on the same question of privilege?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Your Honour's intuition is as usual infallible. As a member of the faculty of the University of Windsor perhaps I may be permitted to say that those associated with that university consider themselves to be singularly fortunate in having such a distinguished member of this House as their chancellor.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members and I want to assure them, after 48 hours in my new office, that it is just as easy to be chancellor as it is to be Speaker.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

Seventh report of Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works—Mr. Hopkins.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

THE CENSUS

EXAMINATION OF COMPLETED FORMS BY PRIVATE CITIZENS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 43, to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion in respect of a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This urgent matter relates to the fact that census forms for rural areas and small towns, and the long forms for every third household, require these citizens to divulge information about their incomes, under pain of severe fine or imprisonment. This would be acceptable if such information were assessed and reviewed by career civil servants at centres generally remote from the areas surveyed. However, these returns are to be scrutinized and assessed by private citizens politically recruited from the local areas, in many cases neighbours of those required to give the information.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson):

That this House urges the government to reform the census procedures with respect to the scrutiny of rural areas and small towns census returns, and the returns on the so-called "long form", to ensure that such scrutiny is done exclusively by career public servants; and, further, that pending such reform, prosecutions for failure to file such a form be suspended.

Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has indicated the essence of his motion. As he knows, no possibility is provided under the Standing Order to discuss the matter further at this time. The duty of the Chair is to inquire whether there is unanimous consent as required by the terms of Standing Order 43. I therefore ask if hon. members, having heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Wellington, give unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF REDUCTION IN DAIRY SUBSIDY HOLDBACK RATES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that the Canadian Dairy Commission will reduce the rate of holdback from payments to industrial milk producers, for milk within quotas, to 20 cents per 100 pounds, effective June 1. The previous rate has been 26 cents.

The holdback on over-subsidy quota milk will be reduced from $1.25 per hundredweight to $1.05, and the comparable figures for cream will be from 8 cents to 5 cents per pound of butterfat. For deliveries over market quotas, the holdback will be reduced from $2.40 per hundredweight to $2.05 for milk and from 50 cents to 30 cents per pound of butterfat for cream deliveries. These changes in holdback will directly increase producers' returns by an equivalent amount.

The funds collected from the holdback are used to recover costs of export assistance on surpluses which have to be disposed of below Canadian support prices.

The present reduction is in keeping with the principle of adjusting the rate of holdback as conditions change. There has been a considerable recent improvement in world market prices for dairy products, although the price for skim milk powder, which is the main surplus product, is still below Canadian support levels.

While the world situation is favorable at present, there are some indications that present prices may not continue through the full fiscal year. Since it is not desirable to change the rates of holdback too often, the present rate has been set in the light of the necessity of projecting the position for some time into the future.

Should the revenue to the commission from the holdbacks exceed the funds required to dispose of surpluses produced during the present fiscal year by any significant amount there will be a refund to producers after the end of the dairy year which of course is March 31, 1972.

The commission is also establishing and will announce consequential changes in the rates of holdback on deliveries in excess of quota.

It has been possible to take this action to reduce the holdback because of the improved international situation brought on by recent and remarkable changes in the dairy surplus picture throughout the world. As I am sure members will appreciate, it is not possible for Canada, through its internal policies, to significantly affect the world supply although it cannot help but have a bearing. We have, however, been active in the international field and I would cite the skim milk powder agreement negotiated under GATT. It is our hope that the type of international co-operation that has recently existed will continue to the benefit of all concerned.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to note on behalf of my party that the minister has finally listened to some of the representations which have been made to him in this regard by the official opposition. In view of some of the problems the farmers' unions have in getting the ear of the Minister of Agriculture, I am happy to note also that he has listened to some of their representations in this regard. I should like to read a portion of their representation made earlier this year. They said:

> On a world scale, it is undeniable that 1971 was a year during which the dairy products market experienced an improvement. The enormous mountains of butter and powdered skim milk which were accumulated in North America and in Western Europe, have been considerably reduced—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. There seems to be some irregularity about hon. members taking the opportunity provided by the Standing Orders when commenting on a ministerial statement to put on the record statements made outside the House by other people. I really do not think it is quite in order to follow that course of action. I would invite the hon. member to submit for the consideration of the House and the benefit of all hon. members his own comments at this time.

Mr. McKinley: I agree, Mr. Speaker. I think I have read enough to let the House and the people know that the minister does occasionally listen to these people. It is rather ridiculous sometimes that farmers' organizations and others have to bring these things to the attention of the minister time after time before they can get him to act.

One thing is missing from this statement. In respect of the increase that will come to the farmers as a return for their milk production, nowhere in this statement does the minister promise that there will be no reduction in the subsidy in the future that would take this money away from them. When the increase in the price of powdered skim milk was announced some time ago I questioned the minister in an effort to get all this return for the farmers but in the end only half of it got to them.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Now the Minister of Finance fools around—

Mr. Bell: He sure does.

Mr. McKinley: —with financial arrangements in this country. We in the Conservative party believe that if we had a prosperous agricultural economy throughout the country many of our unemployment problems would be solved. There is no way in which this can be achieved by removing two-thirds of the farmers from the farms. I have personally witnessed in the dairy industry in my own locality a number of dairy farmers selling out because the returns are not sufficient to enable them to continue to operate. Anything that can be done to increase the returns to dairy farmers in Canada is certainly worth while. The minister has taken some action in this respect, and we hope that this is an indication of better things to come in the future.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I think that the minister has certainly been well advised to make these changes in light of the changes that have taken place in marketing conditions. This statement indicates the situation that has developed in that it has been extremely difficult for the Canadian Dairy Commission to forecast adequately the changes that have taken place in market demands for dairy products and it is now trying to catch up with the changed situation. This points up the need, not only in the dairy industry but in other aspects of agriculture, for those who are now in the business of planning and programming the farmers—that is what they are trying to do—to get more accurate information or be more careful about their programming and the planning, either the one or the other.

I suggest to the minister that he read an editorial which appeared recently in the Western Producer, a western Canadian publication. In it there is the most severe condemnation of a government policy that I have ever seen. They say that this program, along with the red tape and other forms of torture, has rapidly thinned the ranks of cream shippers, and is one of the cruellest things that has been done to the cream shippers of western Canada. While I admit that the Dairy Commission has been willing at times to listen to representations on behalf of individual producers, the total effect on the ordinary cream producer in Saskatchewan has been really rough. They have suffered as a consequence of the policy being followed which is forcing a specialization that is resulting in the same kind of syndrome as that experienced in Ontario where the manufactured milk shipper is helping to create an added surplus of milk powder, whereas if the ordinary cream producer were given a break he would feed some of that byproduct—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I believe it is my duty to remind him and others who may be speaking after him on this ministerial statement, as well as those who have spoken before him, that the Standing Order requires that statements at this time should be brief. As I have said before, it is always difficult to estimate what brevity is. Perhaps the hon. member thinks he is being very brief in making his speech. It is difficult for the Chair to indicate to the hon. member that he should not prolong his remarks too much, but I would invite him at the first opportunity, during the current sitting if possible, to bring his remarks to a close so that we can continue with the consideration of the matter raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Gleave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall try to be brief. I shall finish very quickly, but there are so few opportunities for members to call to the attention of the minister what he is doing to the ordinary cream shipper in Saskatchewan that I feel it necessary to do so now. Perhaps to some extent we can impress on these planners that they really cannot deliver a total Utopia to the western producers and that very often they are delivering disaster instead.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) deserves some congratulations undoubtedly due to the circumstances prevailing on international markets and to some other causes.

He has announced a reduction for producers under the quota system. They used to be asked 26 cents per hundred pounds for export assistance, but they will now have to pay only 20 cents.

As for the holdback on over-subsidy quota, it will be lowered to 20 cents per hundred pounds, while that on cream will be reduced from 8 to 5 cents per pound of butterfat.

However, I think that the producers are now concerned about shipments and even if the penalty of $2.40 is reduced by 35 cents when shipments are over the allowed quota, I should like to bring this point to the attention of the minister, because I feel that this is what is now doing so much harm to the average and small producers, the big ones having had time to make proper arrangements before being hit with a fine. The minister would do well, in the future, to pay more attention to the small producer.

Today, the minister tells us that this improvement was brought about by the demand on the world market, but I wonder if that is the reason for the apparent improvement. If the dairy market shows some balance today, I believe that it is due to a large reduction of the dairy herds, especially in Quebec. Instead of stimulating production, farmers were forced to sell their herds, to stop production, in order to ensure this balance. The fault lies not so much with the fact that surpluses have been eliminated as with the lack of aid.

Today, under-consumption is caused by the government that has not come up with a policy to promote greater consumption of dairy products. If the farmers who have held firm benefit from this, I am happy and, once again, I ask the minister to come to the aid of the farmers who want to increase their returns. But, all the time the cry is heard: "They must die." I believe that the large producers should set an example and stop shouting: "They must die." Some of them should die once in a while so that the small and average farmers may live.

I thank the minister for his statement and I hope that as soon as possible he will reduce these fines which the farmers can no longer "digest".

Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

POLLUTION—USE OF AEROBES IN CLEANING UP OIL POLLUTED WATERS

Question No. 1,097—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Has the government any information on the use of aerobes in cleaning up water polluted by oil refinery operations in the Baytown, Texas area and, if so, will the government consider their use in Canadian oil-polluted waters?

2. Is the information available as to the cost of using such micro-organisms in comparison with pollution control installations used to purify water polluted with oil and, if so, what is the cost?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): 1. The Government has no specific details of installations at the Baytown, Texas refineries, but we are aware of numerous current applications of the principle in various parts of the world including Canada.

2. Yes. Under reasonable conditions costs can range from four-eight cents per 1,000 gallons of waste treated but when relative capital costs are high, or conditions adverse, costs could exceed these figures.

ESTIMATED DEBT FOR AVERAGE CANADIAN FAMILY

Question No. 1,223—Mr. Mather:

What is the estimated debt for the average Canadian family including the nine billion, eighty-seven million dollars of debt for Canadian families reported by DBS in November, 1970, plus the approximate debts owed to oil companies, credit unions, retail stores reporting quarterly and doctor and dentist bills?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada (Dominion Bureau of Statistics) reports that: At the present time DBS has no statistics on the debt of the average Canadian family. However, DBS recently carried out a survey on family income, indebtedness and asset holdings. The results will not be available until the latter part of this year. These surveys are only conducted occasionally, and the last one was taken in 1964. In December 1970, total consumer credit outstanding was $11,406 million. This includes amounts owed on all charge accounts, oil company credit cards, and instalment debt. It does not include debt to doctors and dentists. These statistics are obtained from lending institutions and not households.

LABOUR DISPUTES—JASPER LODGE AND CHATEAU LAURIER

Question No. 1,313—Mr. Fortin:

What stage has been reached in the "Jasper Lodge" and "Château Laurier" labour disputes with respect to minimum salaries?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Canadian National Railways has appealed to the Alberta Supreme Court the July 7, 1970 decision of the Canada Labour Relations Board to certify the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers as bargaining agent for its employees at Jasper Park Lodge, Jasper, Alberta, on the grounds that this operation is not within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada. This case is still before the Court and judgment has not yet been delivered. The decision of the Court should resolve current differences of opinion concerning the application to certain hotels of federal labour laws, including the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—MEETING OF SENIOR OFFICIALS AT MONTEBELLO, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,330—Mr. Schumacher:

During the month of April 1971, did senior officials of the Department of Public Works hold meetings at the Seignory Club in Montebello, Quebec, to discuss reorganization of the Department and, if so (a) what was the expense involved (i) as to accommodation for meetings and participants (ii) transportation (iii) meals and per diem expenses (b) for what reasons were government facilities in Ottawa not used (c) what was the duration of such meetings (d) what conclusions were reached?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Yes, (a) (i) and (iii) $4,638.27. Accommodation and meals not treated separately as expenses were based on American (meals inclusive) plan. (ii) $2,221.48. (b) It was essential that the agenda of the Conference be the singular concern of the participants. It was thus decided to hold the Conference in an environment which would minimize the potential conflict between the normal operating responsibilities of the participants and the conference objectives. (c) From the evening of April 19 to the evening of April 21, 1971. (d) It was not the objective of the meetings to reach conclusions but to permit a full exchange of views among management personnel to ensure that the conclusions finally reached by management are based on sound consideration of all the factors involved.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—SEMINAR HELD IN MIAMI, FLORIDA, 1971

Question No. 1,331—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Is there a designation of "Zone Manager" within the Department of Public Works and, if so, what is the function or duties performed by a person so designated?

2. Did any Zone Managers, other officials or employees of the Department attend a seminar in Miami Beach, Florida during the month of April 1971 and, if so (a) what was the purpose of the seminar (b) what expense was involved (i) as to accommodation for meetings and participants (ii) transportation (iii) meals and per diem expenses (c) what was the duration of the seminar (d) how many employees of the Department attended the seminar and, in each case, what position do they hold within the Department?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes. A Zone Manager, under the general direction of an Area Manager, directs and operates the property management zone activities and ensures that the most efficient and economical use of labour and finances is exercised in renovations, alterations, repairs, cleaning, elevator services and utilities in Crown-owned and leased premises.

2. Yes, seven employees attended a course in Miami, Florida in April 1971. (a) The course is designed to study the latest technique in office building management as determined by the Institute of Real Estate Management. (b) (i) $19.76 per manager per diem; (ii) $162 per manager; (iii) $15 per manager per diem. (c) Seven days, April 18 to 24 inclusive. (d) Seven people attended the course, five were Zone Managers, one an administrator of Real Properties Inventories, and the other the Head, Federal Central Real Properties Inventory.

PUBLIC SERVICE—HIRING AND DISCHARGE OF MR. JULES DEMICHER

Question No. 1,359—Mr. Nowlan:

1. What were the names of individuals and the dates they were first considered or contacted, with respect to the senior financial and administrative job in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and (a) in what manner and for what reasons did the government come to (i) consider approaching (ii) contact Mr. Jules Demicher (b) on what date and for what purpose did he first contact the government?

2. (a) Was the position of Assistant Deputy Minister for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce filled by competition and, if not, for what reason (b) what were the job specifications or descriptions for that post (c) were these specifications or job descriptions modified during the course of 1968-70 and, if so, in what manner?

3. (a) Did the federal government invite, or make a suggestion to Mr. Jules Demicher, to move to Canada (b) were any costs of transportation for Mr. Demicher and his family paid by the government, and (i) if not, for what reason (ii) if so, what were those costs, on what date and where did such transport originate (c) what was the nature and salary rate of the offer of employment made by the Public Service to Mr. Jules Demicher (d) for what period was he paid by the government (e) what were the total payments made by the government to and for Mr. Jules Demicher?

4. With respect to the senior financial and administrative job or the post of Assistant Deputy Minister in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce (a) in what ways were the qualifications of the individual appointed superior to those of Mr. Jules Demicher (b) was Mr. Demicher sufficiently fluent in and able to work in English and French (c) in the Autumn of 1968, was a stipulation made that a French Canadian be appointed and, if so (i) by whom (ii) on what authority (iii) in what manner was it made known (iv) to whom was it communicated (v) on what date (vi) does this represent government policy?

5. With respect to the discharge of Mr. Jules Demicher by the Public Service Commission (a) was appropriate Public Service employment available at the time of his discharge (b) have the circumstances of his discharge been investigated by, or referred for investigation to the Language Commissioner (c) what is the nature of the investigation of the Jules Demicher case underway in the Labour Department (d) are the results of the later investigation to be made public and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): As this matter is still the subject of an inquiry, it would be inappropriate to provide the information requested.

Order for Return

SUMMER WORKS PROGRAM

Question No. 1,364—Mr. Comeau:

Has the Department of Public Works made plans to implement a Summer Works Program to alleviate the unemployment situation, and (a) if not, for what reasons (b) if so, on what date can an announcement be expected?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): The works program of the Department of Public Works traditionally is at its peak during the summer months and consequently no plans have been formulated to date for a separate Summer Works Program, as such. In addition to staff engaged by consultants, contractors and suppliers in relation to the current year's Public Works program, the Department expects to engage approximately 558 students and 517 casual employees during the summer months in addition to its full time establishment.

RAPESEED FREE OF ERUCIC ACID

Question No. 1,399—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. How many varieties of rapeseed free of erucic acid have been (a) developed by the Department of Agriculture (b) imported and from what countries?

2. Have agreements been reached by the government with other countries for the export of (a) rapeseed free of erucic acid (b) rapeseed products and, if so, with what countries?

3. Has the government set a price per bushel for rapeseed which will be sold on (a) the domestic market (b) the export market?

4. Will the government have representatives on the mission sent by the Rapeseed Association of Canada, to South America?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) Three varieties of rape which produce seed free of erucic acid have been licensed. They are: Oro, Span and Zephyr. (b) No variety or varieties of rape that produce seed free of erucic acid have been developed in countries other than Canada.

2. No.

3. The Government does not set prices for rapeseed.

4. The Government was not represented on the mission of the Rapeseed Association to South America in 1971.

* * *

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

PERSONNEL IN OFFICES OF PRESENT CABINET MINISTERS

Question No. 520—Mr. Coates:

1. What are the names, positions and salaries of each of the persons employed in the offices of each of the Cabinet Ministers in the present administration at the present time?

2. In each instance, what was the staff of each of the Cabinet Ministers as compared with one year ago?

3. Are there any conditions placed on the number of employees each Minister might recruit for his personal staff and, if so, what are these conditions?

Return tabled.

Inquiries of the Ministry

• (2:30 p.m.)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FIRST QUARTER GNP GROWTH—MEASURES TO STIMULATE ECONOMY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance who has just entered the House. He will have to be on the job more if he is going to get the gross national product moving forward satisfactorily. In view of the report by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics that the gross national product grew at a disappointing rate during the first three months of this year, substantially below the rate of increase during the final quarter of 1970, is it still the minister's position and that of the government that the economy is moving forward satisfactorily and that unemployment will fall by a satisfactory rate or is the minister now prepared to take measures to stimulate the economy and get it moving forward at a satisfactory rate?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the whole question asked by the Leader of the Opposition is in the form of a proposition to the House or an argument, and I wonder whether the question in those terms is acceptable. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my question is whether, in view of the report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics regarding the GNP figures for the first quarter of this year, the Minister of Finance is now prepared to take measures to stimulate the economy of the country?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, starting a year ago we have taken measures to stimulate the economy in Canada. Whether it requires further stimulation is a matter which the government will have to decide, and I shall be bringing forward a budget in the near future.

* * *

WELFARE

MEASURES TO AVOID REDUCTION IN PAYMENTS—SUGGESTED MEETING WITH PROVINCES AND CITIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. In view of the report that the city of Halifax is finding it necessary to reduce welfare payments, an indication of what is taking place in many cities across this country, is the minister prepared to meet with the provinces and cities with a view to adopting measures to ensure that deserving Canadians do not go hungry as a result of the municipalities having to cut down on welfare because of additional unemployment?

[Mr. Coates.]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated before in the House, the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan amply reveal the willingness of the federal government to share in these costs. On the question of getting together with the provinces to discuss this matter or other questions of this kind, may I say that I am meeting with the provincial ministers next week.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Will the government increase its effort to fight these evils to at least half the effort it is making to try to win the constituency of Central Nova?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HALIFAX—REPORTED REQUIREMENT THAT APPLICANTS OBTAIN EMPLOYERS' SIGNATURES BEFORE ASSISTANCE GRANTED

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare which is related to part of the questioning by the Leader of the Opposition. In view of reports from Halifax that welfare officers are requiring certain welfare applicants to get the signatures of 20 or 30 employers before they can be granted welfare, will the minister have an investigation made into this practice to determine whether it violates the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, we will be meeting with the provincial welfare ministers at the beginning of next week. Undoubtedly such situations, and others to which hon. members referred last week, will be discussed by the welfare ministers at that time.

Mr. Forrestall: Will you raise it?

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FEDERAL PAYMENTS UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the problem does not concern the 50 per cent share of welfare costs which the federal government pays, will the government consider picking up a portion of the additional cost that the provinces and municipalities have to pay? Will the federal government increase its contribution beyond 50 per cent?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this point I cannot add anything to what the Minister of National Health and Welfare has just said, that he is meeting with the welfare ministers of all the provinces next week and they are going to discuss various questions, including the Canada Assistance Plan. There is nothing that can be announced to the House at this point.

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT—CONSULTATION WITH EXPERTS TO FIND SOLUTIONS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question concerning unemployment and inflation.

When this government tries to fight inflation, there is an increase in unemployment. When jobs are created, there is an increase in inflation. Would the Prime Minister tell the House whether the government is currently using experts, economists, sociologists and so on to find a cure for these two evils and whether these experts have suggested a program to this end?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly employing experts to study these problems. The Department of Finance has many experts studying the question. The Prices and Incomes Commission has also been working on a solution for two years. The Bank of Canada also has a number of specialists who are concerned with this problem.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Would he not agree to adding a few Créditistes to these experts, in order to come up with a solution—

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question of the hon. member is more in the nature of a suggestion and he must take it for granted that it will be considered by the Prime Minister.

* * *

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

FIREMEN'S STRIKE, EDMONTON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT —ACTION TO END DISPUTE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Labour I shall direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour. In view of the strike of firemen at Edmonton International Airport, with the threat of a spread of the strike, will the minister report to the House what steps he is taking to make sure that this labour dispute is brought to an end soon, it now having been in negotiation for seven months?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): The hon. member has asked an important question, Mr. Speaker, but I would point out that it comes under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Board. As the men involved are civil servants, it is not within the ambit of responsibility of the Department of Labour. I would be pleased, however, to communicate to my minister the gravity of the situation as reported to the House.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Notwithstanding the fact that the men in question may be public servants, I wonder whether the Minister of Labour would put some of that vaunted ability of his to work in getting this dispute settled immediately?

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OPPORTUNITY FOR JEWS TO EMIGRATE FROM SOVIET UNION TO ISRAEL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Prime Minister's report to the House on Friday of Mr. Kosygin's assurance that the allegations of Soviet refusal to allow the emigration of Soviet Jews to Israel were unfounded and that the Canadian government has corroborated this statement, can the Prime Minister now advise whether the government of Israel was among those with whom the matter was checked and if that government is now as satisfied as he is with these assurances?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have figures from various sources, but the government of Israel has agreed that there has been a substantial increase in immigration from the Soviet Union.

SIMILARITY OF UKRAINIAN FIGHT FOR LIBERATION AND FLQ MOVEMENT—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the Prime Minister, now that he is safely back in Canada, whether he still believes that the Ukrainian fight for liberation in the U.S.S.R. is similar to that engaged in by the FLQ last fall?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase that question. It is very important.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question, of course is not in order. Perhaps the hon. member for Calgary North would like to rephrase his question. I have to recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate in a moment on a supplementary to the previous question, and we will return to that matter.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in light of the statement that the Prime Minister made over the weekend on the radio, would he be prepared to go before the special committee that is to be set up and give evidence in reference to his position regarding the liberation of Ukrainians and make clear his position with regard to the FLQ and future, repressive legislation?

An hon. Member: That is some rephrasing.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly answer any questions put to me in the House on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may be very glib—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Prime Minister has said that he will answer any questions asked in the House but the questions, of course, must be acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I put another question to the Prime Minister. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister likes to answer questions here, but would he be prepared to answer a serious question and a series of questions in the committee that will be set up as a result of his own resolution?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I see no better forum for answering questions than the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Why did you people change the rules, then?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has a supplementary to a previous question.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Paproski: May I ask a question?

Mr. Lundrigan: All right—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate for his co-operation and his suggestion that another hon. member should have the floor although he himself has been recognized. The hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary was in reference to an earlier question, and I think the urgency of this question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege. The hon. member will be recognized in a moment. The Chair also intends to recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West later. As hon. members know, there must be an attempt by the Chair to give an opportunity to representatives of different parties to ask their questions from time to time. That is why, at this point, I feel I ought to recognize the hon. member for Regina East.

* * *

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN ELECTION—LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR FEDERAL PUBLIC SERVANTS TO BE CANDIDATES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I wish to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. Will the parliamentary secretary, on behalf of the Secretary of State, assure the House that no impediments are placed in the way of federal public servants who wish to obtain leave of absence from their posts in order to run as candidates in the Saskatchewan election?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps it is time to return to the question to be asked by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. I think we should try to dispose of the original question first, and then I will recognize supplementaries on the second question proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre and others.

Mr. Burton: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. At this time I must seek the hon. member's co-operation. I have recognized the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

FIREMEN'S STRIKE, EDMONTON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT —REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SITUATION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, to return the urgency of a previous question, may I put a quick supplementary to one of the eight ministers present. Perhaps I could direct it to the Acting President of the Treasury Board. Can we have an undertaking that a statement will be made tomorrow concerning the impending walkout of firefighters throughout Canada, in sympathy with the firefighters at Edmonton international airport, in view of the fact several airlines have indicated their lack of desire to land at international airports where there is not proper firefighting control and patrol? This is an urgent matter which could tie up the whole nation. I wonder if there could be that kind of undertaking?

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take that question as notice and refer it to the President of the Treasury Board.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION BY PRIME MINISTER WITH SOVIET AUTHORITIES CONCERNING RELEASE OF VALENTYN MOROZ

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister please advise the House what discussion took place as to the release of a great Ukrainian, Valentyn Moroz, during his brief visit with Mr. Brezhnev and Mr. Kosygin?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I made no representations personally about that matter, although I understand that some members of my party did. I will try to ascertain what happened and report.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Why did the Prime Minister show discrimination and a lack of intestinal fortitude by not bringing up this very important matter?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that that is not a supplementary question. It is a speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. The hon. member for Regina East.

* * *

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN ELECTION—LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR FEDERAL PUBLIC SERVANTS TO BE CANDIDATES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question I asked previously of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State. Will the parliamentary secretary undertake to investigate the case of an employee of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who has apparently not yet been granted leave of absence for which he applied two months ago in order to run as a candidate in the Saskatchewan election?

An hon. Member: Who for?

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to look into this. Possibly the hon. member could give me the name of the individual concerned.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FREEDOM FOR NATIONALS UNDER RUSSIAN DOMINATION —DISCUSSION UNDER PROTOCOL WITH SOVIET UNION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of his rather casual treatment of the question of freedom for some of the nationals under Russian domination, can he indicate to the House whether humanity will best be served by his not taking up the cause so that world opinion might pressure the Russians into allowing these people their freedom?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member refers to the argument of humanity, I think that arguments based on humanity can be best made by parties who are in a good relationship with one another. That is why we have signed this protocol with the Soviet Union, in the hope that we could do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: The Soviets also signed an agreement with Hitler and that did not work out very well either.

Mr. Korchinski: Prior to signing the protocol, did the Prime Minister have any assurances from the Russian authorities that the question of the freedom of these people would be one of the subjects that would be discussed at a future date?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I missed the whole first half of the question because some of the Conservative members were shouting.

An hon. Member: This is just like old times.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, hon. members were probably shouting because the Prime Minister did not take up the cause of freedom for the Ukrainian nationals.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ALLEGED COMPARISON BY PRIME MINISTER OF UKRAINIAN NATIONALS AND FLQ

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister tell the House what justification there was for his remark comparing the Ukrainian nationals with the FLQ in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not comparing the nationals of any country with the nationals in Quebec. I was indicating that the position of the Canadian government was that we were not supporting the independence of any part of any other country which is recognized under international law any more than we would want any other country to support the independence of any part of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In regard to Valintin Moroz, who has never preached the separation of the Ukraine from Russia, who has never been guilty of violence and has never preached violence—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized for the purpose of asking a question. He should do so and not make a speech.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, my question is this. Do you equate freedom of speech with violation of the law or apprehended insurrection?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously debate and argument. It is not a question.

Mr. Thompson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and with due courtesy to yourself, the Prime Minister has invited questions. He said that this is the place where we should ask our questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hillsborough.

OPPORTUNITY FOR JEWS TO EMIGRATE FROM SOVIET UNION TO ISRAEL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Was the government of Israel one of the sources of corroboration of the statement of Mr. Kosygin that the statements about Soviet resistance to Soviet Jews going to Israel were unfounded? Has he actually ascertained that the government of Israel is now satisfied with the way the government of the Soviet Union is treating those of its citizens who wish to go to Israel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that the government of Israel was satisfied that everyone who wanted to leave the Soviet Union to go to Israel could do so. I said that they are satisfied that the number has increased.

Mr. Macquarrie: Were they one of those listed by the Prime Minister on Friday in his speech as having corroborated the statement of Mr. Kosygin? Were they among that group or not?

Mr. Trudeau: I fail to understand the question.

Mr. Macquarrie: The Prime Minister said the Canadian government had corroborated from various sources that Mr. Kosygin's statement was correct. I ask him now whether the government of Israel was one of those sources?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I stated that Mr. Kosygin said they had in recent months permitted an increasing number of Soviet citizens of Jewish origin to leave the Soviet Union for Israel. And I say that the Canadian government did ascertain this to be a fact from various sources, one of them being the government of Israel.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley on a supplementary on the same subject and then go to a representative of one of the parties to the left of the chair.

DISCUSSION OF STATUS OF CZECHOSLOVAKIA BY PRIME MINISTER WITH SOVIET AUTHORITIES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of the Prime Minister's answer to the hon. member for Mackenzie. In view of the Prime Minister's reference to humanity in relation to the status of independent countries and his statement that he was not going to interfere, I wonder whether in his talks with either Brezhnev or Kosygin he discussed the status of Czechoslovakia and the plight of that country since 1968?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): In view of the importance the Prime Minister now places upon parliamentary committees, would he not agree to appear before the committee on external affairs to answer these questions which are taking up the time of the House right now?

* * *

FINANCE

INCLUSION OF MEASURES TO ASSIST AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY IN BUDGET

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, if I might be allowed to turn the attention of the government to its domestic problems rather than its external ones, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance this question. Having regard to the very flexible decision he has taken to allow input into the budget up to 48 hours before the time the budget, and probably the minister, leave the launching pad, can the minister assure the agricultural industry that its very special plight and deteriorating situation, as evidenced by the recent DBS figures, will be the subject of remedial treatment in the forthcoming budget?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I think my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and the government generally have been doing a good deal and are proposing to do a good deal more to help the agricultural industry, if they can get co-operation from the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: As requested by the Minister of Finance I will ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he will give some indication shortly that the government intends to modify its present legislation directed to forcing small family farmers off the land?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Nothing could be further from the truth than that assertion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF MORATORIUM ON REPAYMENT OF FARM LOANS IN BUDGET

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has made any representations to the Minister of Finance calling for a temporary moratorium on the repayment of farm improvement loans and Farm Credit Corporation loans in the forthcoming budget in view of the fact that farm cash receipts are continuing to decline and farmers are experiencing serious difficulty in discharging their obligations?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I announced some time ago that we are continuing the policy of deferring payments under FCC for any individual who can demonstrate that he is unable to meet those commitments. As far as the other part of the question is concerned, I believe the hon. member knows that the government has provided $100 million to relieve the grain industry and that there have been very significant improvements in the dairy industry recently.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY—COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION OF CENTRAL TESTING AND EVALUATION AGENCY

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): My question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the government planning to implement the recommendation of the Barber report on farm machinery with regard to establishing an independent agency to develop and test new machinery?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I cannot say positively today that we shall establish such an institute but we are giving serious consideration to the recommendation.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RELATIONSHIP OF PROTOCOL WITH RUSSIA TO CANADIAN ROLE IN NATO AND NORAD

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I wonder if I might direct my question to the Prime Minister. While it is regrettable that he did not see fit to make a full statement today on his trip to Russia—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: You cannot call Friday's one. If the people of Canada consider his intrusion on Friday to be a statement on his trip—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Forrestall: That was a sort of cowardly approach on Friday. I wonder if the Prime Minister can give the House some indication whether or not there will be briefings of our officials within the context both of NATO and NORAD with respect to the conclusions and the purposes of the protocol so as to remove any possible misunderstandings with respect to our attitude here in North America?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is leaving tomorrow for the NATO meetings which are being held in Europe and I am sure he will have occasion to inform our colleagues in NATO on any points they may wish to be clear about. He may also refer to the Conservative motion on Friday.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POSITION OF SOVIET UNION RESPECTING BALANCED REDUCTION OF ARMED FORCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Last week I was seeking information from the Secretary of State for External Affairs as to the change in the Russian position with regard to a reduction of troops in Europe. In view of the statement by the Prime Minister that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is leaving for an important meeting, can the minister indicate, or create an opportunity—I am sure the House would consent—to describe to the House what was meant by a phrase equivalent to appropriate conditions with relation to the meeting which the Prime Minister of Canada and the government of Russia urged should be held with regard to this whole subject? What are the conditions under which Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My understanding is that the Leader of the Opposition has inquired whether a statement will be made on motions. Certainly the type of statement he now suggests would normally be made by the minister on motions.

Mr. Stanfield: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I have been seeking this information for more than a week. On one occasion, the Secretary of State for External Affairs apologized for not having provided it. He is now leaving the country in connection with these matters and I call it to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs again, particularly in view of the joint declaration made by the Prime Minister of Canada and the appropriate representative of Russia with regard to this whole matter.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think I can answer the question quite briefly, Mr. Speaker. The NATO forces in their communiqué of last December did propose negotiations on mutual arms reductions under certain conditions. The Warsaw Pact, in its reply, used these words:

> It would help to lessen tension and promote security in Europe if a reduction of foreign armed forces on the territories of European states were discussed.

Mr. Brezhnev, on March 30, 1971, amplified this and indicated a change which we considered to be important. He stood for "a reduction of armed forces and armaments in areas where the military confrontation was especially dangerous and above all in central Europe". This is the area which was referred to by the NATO powers.

* * *

[Translation]

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Regarding the large James Bay resource development project in which the Quebec government and Hydro-

Quebec are directly involved, is the federal government offering to take part in it and is it attending discussions in that connection?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, no such request has been made to the federal government.

* * *

[English]

GRAIN

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN TRANSITIONAL PAYMENT TO PRAIRIE FARMERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture, in light of the previous answer he gave today about the amount of assistance and effort the federal government is putting into agriculture, particularly western agriculture, and in view of the drop in net farm income in the three Prairie provinces of $476 million since he joined the cabinet, whether he or his colleague from Saskatoon-Humboldt is recommending to the government a substantial increase in the $100 million transitional payments that are presently proposed?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the $100 million is an increase in the amount that has been appropriated for that purpose before, and it would be helpful if we could have the legislation passed so that we could pay out the money.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order that all members of the House may be co-operative and assist the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, would the minister now advise whether or not the government would bring in the transitional payments as a separate item so they may be passed by the House within the next 48 hours?

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON ARCTIC POLLUTION AND SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Now that the Prime Minister has concluded an agreement with the Soviet Union to solve the problems of Arctic pollution and sovereignty, can he tell the House when he will be concluding a similar agreement with our ally in North American defence, namely, the United States of America?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the premise is not quite correct. There was no agreement reached solving these problems. There was discussion of these problems and, of course, we have discussions of the problems with our friend and ally the United States all the time. There will be a meeting early in June on pollution in some of the Great Lakes between United States representatives and their Canadian counterparts.

[Mr. Caouette.]

TRANSPORT

NOVA SCOTIA-NEWFOUNDLAND FERRY RATE INCREASE—DISCUSSION BETWEEN MINISTERS OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION AND TRANSPORT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that the proposed increases in transportation rates between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland will have serious effects on the economy of the province of Newfoundland and therefore jeopardize the objective of overcoming regional disparity, does the minister intend to discuss the problem with the Minister of Transport, or has he discussed it with him, in order to try to overcome this situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am having continuous discussions with the Minister of Transport.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister direct the Atlantic Development Board to look into this action, which will seriously affect the economy of the province, and report back to the House?

NOTIFICATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND OF INTENTION TO ALLOW FERRY RATE INCREASES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I should like to address to the Prime Minister. Since communication with and transportation to and from the rest of Canada were factors in the joining of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland in confederation, did the government inform the governments of these two provinces of its intention to allow a very large increase in transportation costs between those provinces and the mainland?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice. I know of no such information having been imparted.

REQUEST THAT NOVA SCOTIA-NEWFOUNDLAND FERRY RATE INCREASE BE SUSPENDED PENDING INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I will direct to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. Would he ask the Minister of Transport to set aside the present rate increases, which are as high as 80 per cent above the present level, until the total effect of this move can be ascertained and the charge that there is a contravention of the terms of union of the province of Newfoundland with the rest of Canada is fully investigated?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly turn this question over to the minister when he returns from Europe.

YOUTH

CAPITAL ASSISTANCE FOR PROVISION OF YOUTH HOSTEL FACILITIES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of citizenship programs. In view of the large numbers of young people now travelling in Canada, is the government considering a program to provide capital assistance for youth hostel facilities? I ask this question in view of the fact that the current program is restricted to operational assistance.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question. Could I also ask the minister whether he is considering alternative means of assistance this year for facilities in communities where difficulties in obtaining approval of municipal authorities have been encountered?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, there is a very flexible provision for assistance. The Canadian Assistance Plan offers a great deal of assistance to such projects, and the citizenship branch will assist further with operational costs where there is clear evidence available of community support and responsible management.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF INSTALLATION OF ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILES IN ARCTIC

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement made some time ago by the Minister of National Defence that the installation of ABMs in Canada's Arctic was possible, can the Prime Minister now say as a result of his trip to Russia whether this project can be considered possible in the near future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the project to which the hon. member is referring. I will consult with the Minister of National Defence.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's previous experience and the fact that the Russians seem to be calling the tune, was there any suggestion on their part that he would be better advised to return to his ballet dancing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. Perhaps we might try to limit ourselves to matters which ought to be considered during the question period.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CENSUS

EXAMINATION OF COMPLETED FORMS BY PRIVATE CITIZENS—ACTION TO PROTECT SECRECY AND PRIVACY

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question about the census. As the minister responsible and his parliamentary secretary are absent, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the census forms, whether the long or the short, are not being mailed directly to Ottawa for scrutiny and tabulation, as was the case in 1961, but are being directed to local organizations for scrutiny and checking before being sent to Ottawa, would the Prime Minister ask the minister in charge to delay the deadline for sending these forms and suspend the provision for the imposition of fines until such time as secrecy and privacy are protected?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not sense the nature of the question, Mr. Speaker. I will, of course, transmit it to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but I am not sure in what way the hon. member is alleging that secrecy is not being protected.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he thinks that the privacy of individuals is being protected when local committees scrutinize the census forms rather than have the scrutiny made in Ottawa?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question on the same subject. May I ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance whether the government is not aware that these forms are in violation of the Income Tax Act?

* * *

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT ON WHEAT FOR 1969-70 CROP YEAR—BARLEY PAYMENT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. What is causing the undue delay in making the final payment for wheat, and when can we expect the payment on barley?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when a pool is closed there is always a significant period of time before accounts are finalized, and there is nothing undue about the period of time that is being taken in this case. The barley pool for 1969-70 closed, of course, some time ago and payment was made.

Mr. Korchinski: May we expect the payment within three weeks?

Inquiries of the Ministry

YOUTH

PROVISION OF BEDS AND MATTRESSES FOR HOSTELS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that many hostels are not able to open until beds and mattresses are made available, would the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State indicate whether arrangements have been made to make available beds and mattresses for these hostels across Canada?

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this is the first I have heard about any problem involving beds and mattresses. I will consult my colleague who seems to be more familiar with the situation.

* * *

POLLUTION

DEADLINE FOR CLOSING OF E. B. EDDY PLANT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the E. B. Eddy plant to be entirely closed down by the 1975 deadlines or is it merely a question of cleaning up?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any deadline, and I am not the appropriate minister to whom to put the question.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister please advise the House of his itinerary in Red China, particularly Peking, and say whether he plans to take his wife with him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

GRAIN

TRANSITIONAL PAYMENT—FINAL PAYMENT ON WHEAT FOR 1969-70 CROP YEAR PRIOR TO JUNE 23

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In light of his hopes in respect of transitional payments, does he intend to announce a final payment on the wheat pool prior to June 23?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the Wheat Board has finalized the accounts I am sure it will issue cheques in the usual fashion.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ROSTER SYSTEM—ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS NOT SCHEDULED TO BE PRESENT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I should direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister or the Acting House Leader as it has to do with the roster system. Will whoever is responsible on the government side for the imposition of the roster system consider tossing it out the window in view of the fact that a number of ministers—

An hon. Member: What about your own ranks?

Mr. Lundrigan: Never mind the ranks on this side of the House.

Mr. Crouse: Start taking responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my question is a serious representation. Will the government consider—

An hon. Member: Just a bunch of phonies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed to ask his question and the minister might be allowed to answer as quickly as possible because we have reached the end of the question period.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether, in view of the fact that a number of ministers are not here today but are present on Parliament Hill, and a number of ministers who are supposed to be here today are not here, it is possible to permit ministers who are here tomorrow but who are not scheduled to be in the House to be in attendance in the chamber to answer questions?

Mr. Danson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe there is something wrong with the translation system because the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate is not coming through very sensibly in English.

Mr. Lundrigan: The parliamentary secretary is being his usual witty self. Perhaps he is going to be retired. I should like to have my question answered. Is the Acting House Leader—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member's question is, by his own admission, a suggestion. He indicated that he wanted to make a serious suggestion to the government. At this time we must assume that this is what he is doing and that his suggestion will be taken into account. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DETERMINATION OF PAYMENT FOR WHEAT—EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO FLAXSEED, RYE AND RAPESEED

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-238, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make two points this afternoon with reference to the amendments to the Wheat Board Act proposed in Bill C-238. The first point relates to the inclusion of rye, rapeseed and flax, as well as oats under certain circumstances, under the Canadian Wheat Board. I appreciate the fact that this is merely enabling legislation permitting the executive to pass orders in council, if and when it sees fit.

I am sure the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, as well as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), have received representations to the effect that the only cash crops the farmers have had for a number of years have been cereal crops, other than wheat or coarse grains, including oats and barley. The only cash crops they have had have been rye, rapeseed and flax. Let us deal first with rapeseed.

The introduction of this crop into western Canada took place at Tisdale, Saskatchewan, during the war. This crop was used successfully in the production of edible oils. It was introduced in that area by a man by the name of Kermit Purdy who became very successful. Rapeseed at that time ran at approximately 2,000 pounds to the acre and was worth about six cents per bushel on the farm. It was first introduced in the Carrot River Valley, and has since been introduced to other areas in western Canada. It was introduced then because of the same problem now facing producers. They were having difficulty making deliveries of grain in time to pay their expenses and to keep their families and their enterprises.

The same situation existed when wheat became surplus. Rapeseed was then used, along with rye and flax as a cash crop. If these grains are put under the Canadian Wheat Board, we may find western farmers in the same situation, without any cash crop to meet current expenditures. Hon. members with some knowledge of western Canada, and the production of crops there, will appreciate there are certain areas in which stock growing is not a profitable enterprise. In these same areas, the farmers can attain a high production of wheat and coarse grains including rye, rapeseed and flax. This is because of a shortage of water in many places. I could name a number and I will do so this afternoon. The minister knows one of these areas very well, namely Kindersley which is adjacent to Saskatoon. Other areas include Rosetown, and Vulcan, Alberta. These are basically cereal producing areas rather than stock producing.

One of the greatest dangers inherent in the Canadian Wheat Board taking over these crops is the suggestion that they will be put on a quota system similar to wheat. As a result, the small scale farmer will have no cash crop to use for paying current expenses. I oppose that part of this bill. I had hoped the minister might have said this is a method by which farmers can obtain cash. The farmers in western Canada do not need handouts and they are not asking for them. What they need is a market for their produce. Before this bill is given second reading, I hope the minister will say the government does not intend to create a situation under which there will be no cash crops available to the operators of these small farms. If that is not so, then members of all parties on this side who have some knowledge of the situation can only come to the conclusion there will be no possibility of cash crop production on farms in order that farmers can pay immediate expenses and make a living. If the government takes any other attitude, then we must assume this is umbrella legislation which will deny farmers the opportunity of making enough money to support their families and pay immediate expenses, with the result they will be driven from the land. That is the first point I wanted to make.

My second point is related to the first. For a long time we have opposed the idea that you can control the sales of grain from one province to another. There have been literally thousands of bootleg sales between Saskatchewan and Alberta because of the quota system implemented by this government. This quota is entirely different from the old. I hope under this legislation that the minister and this government will end once and for all this control over the export of cereal grains from one province to another, particularly in western Canada where the grains involved are barley, rapeseed, rye and flax.

At the present time a great deal of grain, particularly wheat, is being produced along the western border of Saskatchewan and all across the border through Alberta to be used as feed. Very often this grain finds its way into elevators there under the quota system. The farmers in Saskatchewan do not want to bootleg their grain in contravention of the law. Many of them are not able to pay their expenses, their taxes or their liabilities without doing so. Being placed in these desperate straits, they are obliged to take the only measure at hand. As was said in "Oliver Twist", the law is an ass so far as this situation is concerned.

Today a case is being argued in Ottawa in respect of another commodity. I will not say any more than that. I would hope the result of that decision, and the result of the government's decision in the future, will be such as to carry out the objective of the constitution that we have free trade between the provinces. Many places in western Canada can produce—there is no doubt about it—grain of all types and much cheaper than it can be produced in the other provinces of Canada. This not only works a hardship on western Canada but also on eastern Canada which needs some of the cereals to feed livestock. There has been such a demand for livestock feed in Ontario and in Quebec—and I have heard all about this from my friends from those provinces—that corn and other commodities are being imported from the United States.

There is a third point concerning the matter of quotas. We now hear the minister boast that there is now a five-bushel and six-bushel quota in existence. He has not explained to the farmers, to the House or to the media, that the new quota is based on a much smaller acreage. The farmers would like to hear something about this. I would like to take the Minister of Agriculture to my farm in Saskatchewan. I would ask him why grain is not moving off the farms at Rosetown and Kindersley and why the farmers do not have cash.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if the House would give unanimous consent I would be very happy to answer this question.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the minister has spoken but when I am finished I shall be quite prepared to give consent, as I am sure the House will, because we want a solution to the problem.

I am sure the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) was not sent here by his constituents to holler and shout, as he did today during the question period, just so the Prime Minister could make a quick answer. I would hope that he would listen to those who want to make a contribution, if he does not wish to make a contribution himself, and start acting like a gentleman.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, has the hon. member taken into account the fact that there is not only a five-bushel and six-bushel quota on wheat but also a 20-bushel quota on flax and a 30-bushel on barley, all of which used to be counted within the six-bushel per specified acres.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, my answer to that is that I would have hoped the Minister of Agriculture would have told the truth. The quotas he is talking about are not based on the previous acreage. Under the old quota system, the quota in respect of wheat was based on the total acreage; not only that planted in wheat, flax, barley or rye, but the total acreage of the farm. If you had 640 acres under cultivation and planted only 200 acres of wheat your quota was based on 640 acres. Today it is based on production under the new Lift program. There is no use giving answers of this kind because they are far from honest or factual. The Minister of Agriculture will not tell the facts in the House or out on the farms. I am sorry he takes the attitude he does.

My point is that these quotas are based on the Lift program rather than on the old system of total acreage. The tenant who operates my farm tells me that what he really has in wheat, compared to what he used to have, is about a two-bushel quota. That is not enough to pay either his expenses or the taxes on the land which my father pioneered and homesteaded in Saskatchewan. If all farmers are in the same economic plight as that farmer is, then they are in dire straits. I will be surprised if the Minister of Agriculture makes any contribution to the election in Saskatchewan because I think the most dangerous thing Thatcher has to face today is the Liberal government's policies in respect of agriculture and other things that affect the Prairies. I do not think the minister can deny this. I am sure he cannot say he has not had complaints, not only in respect of this legislation but also in respect of the whole agricultural program. He tries to pass the buck over here. I am sure he has had protests from the farmers who are in dire straits.

Questions have been asked today, for instance. The government was asked whether it is bringing in legislation which would protect against the vigorous efforts of government agencies to collect the money lent to farmers. I have received dozens of letters from farmers in the province of Alberta who indicate that they cannot meet the interest on the money. The government is pressing as hard as it did in the 1930's, in the days of Aberhart and Manning. The policies of this government are bringing the farmers to the point of bankruptcy.

Mr. Olson: The louder the better!

Mr. Woolliams: Sometimes it is necessary to get certain points across to you.

Mr. Paproski: It has to come out loud and clear for you.

Mr. Olson: It must be logical, too.

Mr. Woolliams: My first point had to do with the cash flow to the farmer. My second point was in respect of free trade between provinces and my third point concerns quotas. I wish to return to the question of free trade between provinces. My recommendation is that the minister, under this legislation or by regulation, permit free trade of farm goods between all provinces. The former Chief Justice of Canada, who is now retired, said in this regard:

> It seems clear that the enactment—

Dealing with the Canadian Wheat Board:

> —of such a prohibition would be beyond the powers of any provincial legislature and so would appear prima facie to fall within the powers of Parliament under the opening words of s. 91 of the British North America Act and to be valid, unless it contravenes s. 121 of that Act.

Section 121 of that Act deals with free trade between the provinces in plain ordinary English.

> It may be that if, on its true construction, s. 32 would have the effect of prohibiting the supposed transportation it would be in conflict with s. 121 as being a prohibition which, to borrow the words of my brother Rand, "in its essence and purpose is related to a provincial boundary" and not being a regulation of trade or commerce (since there are difficulties in regarding a person as engaged in trade or commerce with himself) or a necessary incident of such regulation. If this be so it would furnish a strong reason for construing s. 32 as excluding from its operation the transportation in the case supposed, but I do not find it necessary to reach a final conclusion on the point—

In other words, in CPR versus Murphy, 1958 Supreme Court Reports at page 644 the Chief Justice said in effect that the prohibition of free trade between provinces might well be ultra vires in respect of the Canadian Wheat Board Act which is of course federal and not provincial legislation. A worsening situation has been brought about today by the fact that today the cash crops being produced on the farms are confined to the jurisdiction of the provinces in which they are produced.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The minister was asking questions and I have just been handed figures regarding cash income from grain in Saskatchewan. These figures are from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. In Saskatchewan, grain income in 1967 was $737 million; in 1968, it was $655 million; in 1969, it was $495 million; and in 1970, it was $449 million. I say to the minister that from the figures that are now being given out, it is obvious that the exports of wheat overseas have declined. He will find those figures to be correct. If I am wrong, I will sit down and he can correct me. He should compare those figures with figures in other years. Those are figures for both export and domestic sales. If they are higher, then why are we not moving the grain off the farms?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the minister rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the hon. member is aware of the fact that wheat exports are running very heavily ahead of last year, and is he aware of the fact that the total grain exports are now somewhere over the 500 million bushel mark, which means that with two months to run we are ahead of any but the four best years, all of which we almost certainly will pass? Also, I wonder whether the hon. member is aware of the fact that while such quotas as the rapeseed quota are at the 30 bushel level, barley is also at the 30 bushel level and wheat is at the five or six bushel level. This means that a straight wheat farmer who has a quota on all his acres has a much higher total delivery quota than he has had for several years.

Mr. Woolliams: I must quote the figures to the minister—

Mr. Osler: You do not understand them.

Mr. Woolliams: I think I understand them. I thought the hon. member was more patient than that, even if he is sucking his thumb.

Mr. Osler: No, I was scratching my chin.

Mr. Woolliams: If what the minister said is true, may I bring something to his attention. Hon members have noticed how carfully he uses the word "grain" instead of wheat in order, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) pointed out, to hide facts. If he is correct in his assertions, I challenge him to explain why gross income from grain in Saskatchewan alone dropped from $737 million in 1967 down to $449 million in 1970, a loss of almost $300 million. Either he is selling grain at fire sale prices or else the exports have declined. He cannot have it both ways. The figures I quote are from the DBS.

I do not blame the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) for having two fingers in his mouth now. I would feel the same way if my minister were throwing figures around. I can imagine how badly members from eastern provinces feel when they know what is happening in Saskatchewan. I say through you, Mr. Speaker, that this government is in such disrepute today that the minister does not dare cross provincial borders, let alone allow grain to cross them.

Mr. Osler: Coming as I do from western Canada, I am scratching my chin in wonderment.

Mr. Woolliams: I know. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre wonders at the minister being so ill-informed about grain, particularly since his constituency was the home of the grain exchange. He will have to do a little visiting. I should like to ask the minister, before I sit down, whether, when he used the word "grain" he meant wheat, or did he mean grain. Let him look at his notes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair is wondering whether this procedure can be followed. I do not see how the hon. member speaking can ask a question of the minister. If the minister wants to ask a question of the member who has the floor, the hon. member would have to decide whether to allow the question. I do not think the Chair can allow this kind of exchange from one side of the House to the other because, according to the rules of the House, a member is entitled to speak only once at this stage of the debate. I do not see how the minister, who is not permitted to seek the floor to take part in the debate, may be allowed to reply to a question put by the hon. member.

Mr. Lang: May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: That is different; I do not mind hearing the point of order.

Mr. Lang: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I was rising on the assumption that after 18 members had spoken I would in fact, take the opportunity to reply, which I know would close the debate, and I was waiting for you to say no.

Mr. Woolliams: I will conclude with the following remarks. This just shows how factual the minister was. He deliberately used the word "grain" knowing that most people think of grain as being wheat. The two words are synonomous in people's minds. The minister hoped he could cover up the facts when I pointed out that exports had decreased. I say to him again that I challenge him to say that the figures for the export and domestic consumption of wheat equal those in 1966, 1967, 1968 or 1969, on the average. That is what we are interested in.

I want to drive home one more point. The minister has been talking about the great exports of grain. I have not received an answer to my question. If the minister is interested, I will go to Saskatoon with him and I will drive 200 or 300 miles through the grain belts with him.

We will walk together and bring the press with us. He will find grain piled up on the farms everywhere.

Mr. Lang: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister laughs.

Mr. Lang: Because you were not saying so a year ago.

Mr. Woolliams: If the minister thinks we were not saying so, he must have had ear plugs or else it was beyond his comprehension. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what they are really frightened of? They told me this in Saskatchewan the other day. They said that things are so bad for the minister, they are frightened he will be defeated and will return to being dean of the university. This would be one of the worst things that could happen.

I want to finish what I was saying. The supply of wheat is building up on the farms, as well as other crops, but there is no cash on the farms. Farmers cannot meet their expenses and liabilities. That is the true story, and that is the story that Saskatchewan knows. If Mr. Thatcher were to sneak through in this election, the only way in which he would do it would be on the strength of his performance. But he and his advisers know that what he has to fight today is not the NDP but the performance of this government.

Mr. Rod Thompson (Battleford-Kindersley): I am not sure that I can show the same enthusiasm as has my hon. friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) when he talked about walking or travelling through the grain belt arm in arm with the minister. I suggest to him that if he were to do so, it would not do him any good politically out there.

The minister obviously wants to put the best face on his performance. In looking at the federal government statistics on farm income in Saskatchewan—and we are talking about net income, not gross income—I see a drop from $354 million in 1967 to $202 million. That is quite a drop when you speak in terms of net income. I do not know whether the minister has had enough farming experience to know what this really means, but surely his intellectual understanding of the problem should be adequate, even if his personal experience is not.

No act is any better than the government that administers it. I suggest that generally speaking the Wheat Board has not done too bad a job, in spite of the government as has been suggested, but frequently when they did not do a good job the reason was that they did not have the tools needed at the time. I should like to suggest some of the things that should have been done sooner in relation to the proposals now put forward by the minister.

• (3:40 p.m.)

One of the first things I would like to talk about is credit sales. We saw what happened when the government began to guarantee wheat sales to countries which had dollar problems. Mr. Speaker, if I were a country purchasing wheat and had to buy it with American dollars or gold, in all probability I would buy American wheat rather than Canadian wheat. It seems to me that our government has insisted on a method of pricing that operates only in Canada's favour. We want the best of both worlds, but this is not the way things work. When the Wheat Board began to use the mechanism of credit sales it immediately increased its sales. I have heard the minister talk about this. Mr. Speaker, I was a Wheat Board delegate in the years 1954 to 1959, and we were talking about credit sales then, not to mention other things. It seems that before the federal government wakes up to a situation and takes action, someone has to go broke or reach the verge of bankruptcy.

The subject of pricing should have been examined by the Wheat Board a little sooner. I am not speaking as a producer of grain, but I think there have been times, if we had been on the ball, when we could have sold more grain at a better price, both in Canada and abroad. We should have been awake to what was happening to world prices. I believe that producers should be paid, through the Wheat Board, an adequate price for wheat consumed in Canada. I suggest that that price should be at least $1 more per bushel than the selling price abroad. At least that price would be comparable with the prices farmers have to pay for goods and services. If the minister does not want to accept my advice, or the advice of others like me, I would invite him to try a little farming on his own. These are the kinds of tools that the Wheat Board must use if it is to do a good job on behalf of the grain producers.

I have checked on some of the countries that purchased wheat from Canada through credit arrangements, and I have discovered that we have not sold significant quantities to some of them since 1952, while to others we have sold none at all since 1952. If grain had been sold to those countries during the intervening years, we would not have the surplus in Canada that we have now. When we first heard about the awkward problem facing the grain producers of western Canada we pointed out that the growing surplus of grain would be reflected in the future of the livestock industry. Just a few days ago I heard some Quebec members complain about the low price of pork in that province. One thing leads to another. The government did not act soon enough in one area, and the problem moved into another area. Surplus grain was converted into surplus pork, and now Ontario and Quebec farmers are facing the result.

Some of the changes brought about by the Canada Grains Act should have been enacted much sooner, and here I refer to protein grading, mixing at the terminals, and credit sales. The other change envisaged by the minister is the bringing of flax, rye and rapeseed under the authority of the Wheat Board. I think it is high time that this was done, but I cannot help but wonder why the minister is doing it now. I read his speech the other day in preparation for this debate. He said that, although he proposes to bring rapeseed, rye and flax seed under the Wheat Board, he does not intend to use those provisions of the bill now. Why bring those grains under the Wheat Board if this is the case? Must we read between the lines of his speech? I hope that when he replies he will tell us why he is including these grains. What is the purpose?

Hopefully, it is the prospect of selling more of them at a better price, and thus look after the farmer's interests in a better fashion. I have been trying to make an honest assessment of the matter, and am still wondering at the minister's reasoning.

I suggest to the minister that there has been some hanky-panky in connection with the prices that producers have been receiving for rapeseed. I can give one instance of a difference of 15 cents a bushel for rapeseed between Lloydminster and Maidstone. Sometimes the difference is only 10 cents per bushel, but that means a lot of money to an individual who has grown several thousand bushels. Producers wonder why there cannot be some other method of handling these grains. Occasionally a farmer gets burned if he sells his rye or flax at a low price on the open market. As a result, he thinks the Wheat Board type of selling is not a bad thing. I can recall when we had the option of selling on the open market or selling to the Wheat Board. When prices were good people sold on the open market, but when there was a surplus of grain and prices were down, people sold to the Wheat Board. The only time they used the Wheat Board was when there was trouble. I hope the minister replies to this point. I think it is a good move, assuming the Wheat Board uses the power given it wisely and well.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a few words. I believe the bill will get second reading and go to committee later this afternoon. I just want to say that, in my humble opinion, the over-all package of federal government agricultural legislation, of which this bill is part, contains a collusive conspiracy between the government and government officials to denude the rural areas of western Canada of farmers, particularly those on small, family farms. I do not think there is any question about that. I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) a question during the question period today. He really did not answer me factually, and the very indignant nature of his response indicated that there was no question about the purpose of the government's agricultural legislation.

Some figures will indicate the truth of this assertion. According to the DBS, total grain cash receipts in 1967 in Saskatchewan were $737 million; in 1968, they were down to $665 million; in 1969, down to $495 million, and in 1970 down to $449 million. There are similar figures showing over-all cash receipts received by the agricultural industry throughout the three Prairie provinces. In Alberta, these receipts fell from $794 million to $729 million. In Manitoba, the figure also is down.

The bill which we are discussing contains two elements which have been debated by my colleagues and other members of the opposition parties. But surprisingly enough very few, if any, government supporters took part in the debate to support the bill. That part of the bill dealing with the $100 million might well have been the subject of a very simple arrangement. Nobody in this House has indicated any objection to these subsidies being given to the farmers who desperately need the money. This payment could have been made in the way it was during the administration of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when a simple item in the estimates was brought forward, debated and passed. This could have been done some considerable time ago.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The minister has indicated that, in his view, there is no intention to utilize the other part of the legislative program which permits the government to put into effect provisions which would bring rapeseed and the other grains mentioned under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board. He simply wants to have that power in case it may be needed. I disagree with that form of legislation. When the government needs power it should come forward and ask for it. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is related to the provincial election in Saskatchewan. I do not want to get involved in discussing that as we have other problems, but I think it is disgraceful when a legislative program is related to a provincial election.

I should like to reinforce the point I made regarding the serious and deteriorating situation of agriculture in western Canada. I farmed there myself for a number of years and when I first went out to practise my profession I had the opportunity to meet and become associated with thousands of people in Alberta. I know that they are being driven constantly and continuously from the land into urban centres thereby causing problems for the areas they leave as well as those areas into which they are forced.

As the sprawling metropolitan areas of the east and west struggle with the miseries of overcrowding, weary farmers, ranchers, village dwellers and their educated young flee the Prairies by the thousands. Figures published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics indicate this. The drain on the countryside has caused an almost desperate situation in many rural areas, and especially on the plains of the heartland, as people leave. Economic survival becomes more difficult and dozens of towns are dying, some are already dead. The Prairies are part of this problem and so are the urban areas. As a result of this exodus, fairly well educated and motivated people settle in urban areas and there is no question that they tend to displace people already there who need jobs.

The problems of pollution, overcrowding and the concomitant difficulties which are being posed are part of the total economic picture. In spite of the answer of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to my question this afternoon, there is no doubt that the actions of the government and their advisers are such that we can only assume they are gripped by this stupid, wrong and false determination to strip the rural areas of all population except those people who, in the view of the economic advisers of the government, are competent to handle the problems of the agricultural industry. The rules and conditions which are being laid down contain all the economic factors which usually prevail under a government bureaucracy. I resent that and I think most people in western Canada resent it.

I am not competent to speak on the problem as it exists in eastern Canada, but I have heard reports that it does exist there as well. I suggest to my hon. friends opposite, to the Minister of Agriculture and the minister piloting this bill through, that the day will come when they will regret having been part of this conspiracy. There is no doubt that it will be necessary to retrace their steps and settle people back in the desolate areas from which they have come as a result of the policy of this government.

Not too long ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke about net social benefit, but I think he had his tongue in his cheek. He spoke of it being a result of the gross national product of the country, which is one of the present indicators of our economic progress. In their deliberate scheme to strip the rural areas of family farms and send the people to the cities, I suggest that the government will have to retrace their steps and make it possible for these people to stay on the land. I could put on record hundreds of letters from people in my district who have been compelled to leave and who are anxious about the new life they face. They are concerned about leaving areas where the local municipalities have been involved in the school structure, in the system of utilities, in building up a society equipped to deal with a given number of people. When a half or a third or two-thirds of the people leave, those remaining face staggering problems. In all seriousness, I suggest to the government that they should review their policies and programs and not compel people to leave the land just because the government thinks that step must be taken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before allowing the hon. Minister without Portfolio in charge of the wheat board to speak in the debate at this time, I must warn hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this debate on the amendments to the Wheat Board Act has ranged over a period of approximately two weeks, and during that time we have heard from 20 members of the opposition.

An hon. Member: How many sitting days?

Mr. Lang: They have dealt almost totally either with one section of the bill or with matters not related to it at all. As I assess their general remarks, they support most of the amendments in the bill. With the exception of that one section they have either supported or not commented on the other amending sections so I take it that they are in agreement with those parts they have not commented on as well as those to which they have made reference. Their remarks related to agricultural matters generally, and there were several speeches on another bill before this House which is not part of this one. On occasion they linked the three pieces of legislation as though they were one. I refer to the three bills relating to grain which are before the House or on their way through committee. Certainly, the three bills are related in an effort to improve the economic position of the grain farmer in western Canada.

• (4:00 p.m.)

In my opening remarks on one of these bills, I indicated formally my view and that of the government that those farmers who want to continue farming should be helped in every way we know in order to do so. That would be done by having that part of the system over which they have no control put in the best possible shape for them. I urged hon. members at that time to refrain from the mischievous and, indeed, malicious suggestion that in some way someone is out to get farmers off the farm against their will. I should really use the words used by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to describe this suggestion. The words he used in describing it are, "stupid, false and wrong." Really, that is the best characterization of this continuing attempt to put fear into the hearts of people whose economic and social difficulties are already great enough. There is no need to stir up this idea of some great conspiracy lurking in the wings.

The main issue in the debate before the House, to the extent that it was relevant at all, touched on that section of the legislation which proposes to allow the addition, by order in council, of rapeseed, flax and rye under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. This will be done by extending parts III and IV to cover those grains, should it seem appropriate at some point to do so. Hon. members opposite have been divided in their views on that section. On the one hand, on the left, there is the view that this should be done immediately, without enabling legislation. These views were accompanied by strong statements that this ought to be done since everyone knows that producers are in favour of doing this now. From the right came sounds of indignation that anyone should even think about consulting producers. There were statements that the producers seemed to be lined up against that view—

Mr. Korchinski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it was amply illustrated in the House by various speakers, myself included—and a motion was moved to this effect—that our party had taken the position that we welcomed and wanted a plebiscite on this question.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) clarify his position on this point. As I listened to the speeches from the opposite side I had detected that those hon. members of the Conservative party who either had rapeseed growers in their constituency or knew something about rapeseed tended to be rather more broadminded about consulting the producers on the issue. I thought that the hon. member for Mackenzie had clearly expanded the view that the producers were totally against any change in the marketing system. I was glad to hear him in his point of order join me in the suggestion that the producers deserve to be consulted fully on this issue and adopt my view that, in this area, we should put ourselves into the position of serving the producers in the way they want to be served. I have made it completely clear that the procedure which is being followed—

Mr. Southam: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify the record and support the contentions raised in the point of order of my colleague, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), may I say that I had the honour and privilege, when leading off the debate one week ago last Monday on the bill with respect to the amendments to the Wheat Board Act, to support the principle that there should be a plebiscite to settle this issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Perhaps at this time the Chair should take the opportunity of reminding hon. members that it is not the practice of this House to allow hon. members to intervene in the debate on points of order for the purpose of making explanations or corrections. The Chair is ready to allow hon. members to make clarifications. None the less, opportunities for clarification were given to all who participated in the debate. The minister now has the floor. I do not think hon. members should interrupt him regularly for the purpose of correcting statements or interpretations of statements.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it is true, of course, that we should get nowhere if every hon. member rose to redeclare his position. It is useful to hear the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) repeat the position he adopted in leading off the debate. I thought he took an eminently sensible position. I was surprised at the extent to which colleagues of his representing other ridings, and perhaps not as much associated with the agricultural community as he is, departed from that position in suggesting that the view of producers was well known and that they were so clearly against this measure that there was no point at all in consulting them. I invite him to check the record and confirm that many of his Conservative colleagues adopted that position.

Of course, I was saying that it had been my view that this is an area in which it is particularly up to the producers to decide. In order to examine this question fully I set up, over one year ago, a committee composed of two producers and a distinguished member of the Rapeseed Association. It was to examine the question of the marketing systems available for the oil seeds in particular, although rye is now included in the amendment to the bill. This committee, in analyzing the problem, reached the conclusion that the producers did not have at the present time sufficient information in their hands about the way the marketing systems operate to make a clear and responsible decision about this question. They suggested in their report that after more information was obtained and put in their hands, a plebiscite should be held. I indicated immediately that I agreed with their view that the producers deserve additional information to understand the system. Indeed, it was my view that the atmosphere has changed to some extent with regard to the marketing of these grains and that the producer organizations deserved a further opportunity to examine the marketing system.

I asked the committee to continue its work on developing the necessary information and I hope that, before very long, the results of their labours will be available to the producers of this country. They will have in their hands a fully documented analysis of the present marketing system, problems relating to it and possible improvements to it, as well as a documentation of some of the alternatives which may be available if producers choose them. It was my view that, at that point, the views of the producers should be obtained. My only hesitation, as I pointed out at page 6021 of Hansard with regard to spelling out a plebiscite in the bill, was in relation to the question of voting rights in regard to such a plebiscite. I have a formula for the plebiscite which I suggested to the committee and which I should like to put before the House. In my view, no change should be made unless there is clear support on the part of producers for such a change. I said that particularly because these things, once done, cannot be easily undone. In that case a mere shadow of a feeling in favour of change may not be enough. The clear and substantial support of the producers is required.

In this area the question is complicated by such questions as, who is a producer? This must be asked in order to determine what form of plebiscite should take place. Is a producer one who produces for one year, or for two years or three years? Is some weight to be attached to the size of acreage in production of the respective producers? Again on this point, Mr. Speaker, I have a formula which gives some weight to the size of production and which gives some weight to the persistance of participation in the growing of rapeseed. This may be developed and then incorporated into the legislation itself. Certainly, it is some such form of consultation that I had in mind right along. I want necessary information to be available to producers which will allow them to understand.

I have been surprised by the heat of the debate regarding the pros and cons of the situation, since no information that is appropriate has really been set out. The arguments of hon. members tended to be, "Let's do it because the producers want it," or, "Let's not do it because producers do not want it." I suggest that that was not very helpful. The best decision, of course, would be one recognizing that some further discussion through farm organizations and across the prairie region is needed in the next number of months. Then, some further, final consultation with producers will need to be held to determine how many wish to continue the existing system and how many are against it. If their clearcut choice, made evident at that point, is for adopting a different system, we would do so. We would then be in a position to do so with the proper machinery required to protect their rights as producers and marketers of this grain. Since hon. members have supported the generality of the amendments in this bill, and since two prominent spokesmen for the Conservatives now repeat their view that such a plebiscite should be held, I welcome the support of all hon. members for these amendments to the Wheat Board Act and am pleased to move the second reading of this bill and its reference to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Benjamin: I should like to ask the minister a question. In considering the pros and cons of bringing rye, flax and rapeseed, all three or any one of them, under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board, has the minister taken into account as an important factor the support forthcoming over a number of years by way of resolutions from the membership conventions of the wheat pools, the Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union, support which has been forthcoming for as long as 20 years?

Mr. Lang: Yes, it has certainly been considered by me. It was one of the factors which led me to undertake an inquiry into the marketing system. I notice that in recent years some of these organizations have delicately shifted the tone of their recommendations toward favouring consultation with producers; their position is less rigid than the one they took earlier. However, I do not wish to get into an argument about that, since the difference appears to be really one of tone. I have also been inpressed by the fact that the rapeseed associations, that is to say, the associations composed of the rapeseed producers themselves, were obviously far less sure than were those other organizations about the issue. I hesitate to say they were against the proposal but the tone of the communications I have received from these associations suggest they welcome the notion of a plebiscite—that they have no real objection to the amendments if a plebiscite among rapeseed producers is clearly part of the legislation, and I have been giving them assurances in that regard.

Mr. Benjamin: I appreciate there are some differences when one considers rapeseed as opposed to rye and, to a lesser degree, flaxseed. Would the minister agree that there might be an argument in favour of bringing one grain at a time under the jurisdiction of the Board? Less difficulty arises in connection with rye than with flaxseed or rapeseed.

Mr. Lang: I would agree that these three grains ought really to be talked about separately because of the possibility that important differences might exist in each case. Certainly, if producers clearly took the view that rye should be placed under the board's jurisdiction, this could happen ahead of the time the other grains were considered.

Mr. Skoberg: Could the minister tell us whether he will be in close consultation with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) who has expressed doubt as to the wisdom of placing all these three grains under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. What kind of consultation is he carrying on with the Minister of Agriculture in this regard?

Mr. Lang: There is very close consultation indeed. My colleague is fully in agreement with me that this subject requires further discussion with, and understanding by, producers. On this matter, as is the case in connection with other matters with which he has to deal, he believes the will of the producers with regard to the conduct of what is, essentially, their business, should prevail.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the motion agreed to?

Mr. Korchinski: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

* * *

[Translation]

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING STAMP AGENTS' COMMISSION, LETTER MAIL PREPARATION ARRANGEMENTS, EXTRAORDINARY SERVICES, MEMBERS' MAIL, ETC.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): moved that Bill C-240, to amend the Post Office Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: In discussing this bill of major importance to the Canada Post Office, I wish to speak first, in general terms, of the present situation. The Post Office finds itself confronted with mounting costs for wages, transportation and materials. Many of its buildings are obsolete, overcrowded and unsuitable. The Post Office deficit reached a new high for the fiscal year just ended. In short, we are faced with formidable problems which are difficult to solve. Hon. members may say that these words are familiar, that they have been said before. It is true, the situation I have outlined is not new to the Canada Post Office or indeed, to any postal administration in the western world. Nevertheless, these conditions must and will be improved.

[English]

In speaking of what is being and will be done, I must first express my appreciation and, I am sure, that of all hon. members, to the more than 50,000 men and women throughout Canada whose efforts provide a postal service which is among the best in the world. We depend upon and need their support and co-operation in coping with the problems we face.

Among the specific problems, one which concerns me greatly is the loss of public confidence the Post Office has experienced in recent years. As I have said before, this confidence must be restored if the Post Office is to be able to continue its vital role in Canadian society. To this end, we are moving to improve services through major reforms.

We have instituted a new approach in our organization, that of decentralizing the administration. This is intended to put responsibility and accountability in the region and districts where the action is. At the head of each of the four regions is a general manager. Headquarters, on the other hand, are now deeply involved in systematic long-range planning. Emphasizing management commitment and contribution to corporate goals, this planning is providing valuable orientation and cohesion to the many operational reforms.

The Post Office is relying heavily on marketing principles to determine the needs of customers and to tailor services to meet these needs. The effect of this is reflected in the recently-announced assured mail delivery program, made possible by radical transportation and mail-processing changes, and by a general tightening up of internal operations. Accompanying this program are major efforts to improve productivity. Statistics from a comprehensive quality assurance program designed to monitor all mail services, show that vast improvements have already been effected.

[Translation]

We have long-range plans to replace inadequate mail processing facilities in major cities with up-to-date plants, in which working conditions will be second to none. The recently-announced facilities for Toronto launched this program. Montreal will be next. These plants will contain the mechanized mail processing equipment necessary to make the national postal code operate at maximum efficiency. As you know, Ottawa is the pilot area for the code, which will be introduced to the rest of the country over the next two years.

At the same time, the Post Office is giving urgent attention to its retail outlets. Tangible evidence of the new approach here is the postal boutique opened at the Fairview Mall in Willowdale on March 1. Plans call for more such outlets, which among other things, will provide other government departments and agencies with the opportunity to disseminate information and sell their products. A program to improve the service and the appearance of small offices is scheduled to get underway in July.

These, and associated improvements, will, I am certain, result in better service. Post Office management consults with the postal unions at each step in the introduction of a new program. This atmosphere of consultation, together with the improved working conditions that these programs encompass, will, I am sure, bring about better relations with the unions.

In order to reap the full advantage from service improvements, and to enhance the image of the administration and the postal worker in the eyes of the public, we are placing more emphasis on public relations.

I have no doubt that this new presentation, the improvements in service, the new retail outlets, and the greater use of outlets by government organizations, will enable the Post Office to project more effectively the federal presence throughout the nation.

To all concerned—observers and those whose task it is to bring about the changes I have just mentioned—a question constantly comes to mind: Can the Post Office meet its costs? I am convinced that it can, given the fact that the services it provides are, for the most part, of a commercial nature. It would therefore appear reasonable to assume that the Post Office, given the authority to act in a commercial environment, would be able to break even on its operation.

Government has to decide if the taxpayers of this country should subsidize services whose main users are business and industry. Approximately 80 per cent of Post Office volumes are in fact derived from business and industry. Given this, the principle of successive operating deficits, to be supported by general taxation, would appear inequitable.

• (4:20 p.m.)

On the other hand, we must bear in mind that the Post Office provides a service which is essential to many Canadians, particularly those who live in far away communities. That is a reason why rates for first class mail are uniformly applied across the country, whatever may be the distance travelled by this mail. Our country being so vast, it is understandable that deficits should occur in certain areas.

[English]

I have nevertheless learned during recent visits to Britain and the United States that postal administrations are confidently planning to achieve financial self-sufficiency within the foreseeable future.

With the assured mail program, the Post Office is hoping not only to recoup revenues and business lost during the labour turmoil of last year, but to attract new business and, correspondingly, to increase revenues. It is with this in mind that the deficit for 1971-72 is estimated at about $113 million, a reduction from last year, which is encouraging. This is the deficit we expect without any increases in the postage rates. Obviously, we must look to such increases if the gap between revenues and postal costs is to be narrowed significantly.

For 1971-72 the basic losses will occur in letter mail and second and third class mail. Although we anticipate a deficit of some $30 million this year in providing service to the newspapers and periodicals, we are not now recommending any increase in these rates. This does not mean that we are not concerned with the substantial deficit. On the contrary, an in-depth study of the second class mail service is underway. In view of the historical concepts that have governed the fixing of rates for these publications in the past, and the fact that the last part of the phased-in increase in these rates took effect only a year ago, we are deferring the question of any further rate adjustments until our study is completed.

This year's loss on third class mail is expected to be just about $38 million. This category covers printed material of various sorts, such as advertising circulars and catalogues, Christmas cards and small packages of merchandise that do not weigh over one pound. The postage rates for this class of mail were last adjusted in November 1968.

As you will have noticed in the bill, an increase to be phased in over two calendar years is proposed on letter mail up to one pound. In terms of the purchasing power of the dollar, the basic increase of seven and eight cents is actually lower than the four cent rate which came into effect in 1954. On very much the same basis, the new rates represent a lower charge to Canadians for the service provided than what the people of other countries, such as Britain, Germany, France, Australia and The Netherlands, must pay.

Mr. McCleave: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): At this point?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Will the minister allow a question from the hon. member?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

Mr. McCleave: Does not the third class rate also embrace solicitations by charitable organizations?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): It depends on how the solicitations are made. If it is by sending circular letters to people, then that kind of mail is included.

The effect of the rise in postage rates on the general public would be marginal. The department estimates that the average cost per person per year would increase approximately 25 cents on July 1, 1971 and 50 cents on January 1, 1972. We are seeking the hike in two stages to lessen the impact of increased mailing costs on business.

The new letter rate schedule, because it calls for reduced charges per ounce for successive weights up to one pound, better reflects the relationship between our prices and our costs. The facts are that the Post Office's costs of handling lightweight letters do not increase in direct proportion to their individual weight. The new rate structure reflects our intention to move away from traditional concepts and to orient our rates towards more realistic market and economic considerations. As hon. members will notice from the bill, the increased rate for letters weighing over seven ounces will be slightly smaller.

• (4:30 p.m.)

In the case of the letter packets over one pound, cost do rise in proportion to the weight and distance over which such items are conveyed by air. In this regard, we are asking for the authority to regulate the rates for letter mail over one pound. I am convinced that a zone rate structure would bring greater equity in the rate levels for these heavier letter items, and would afford those who wish to use air service the same advantages they enjoyed before air parcel post was abolished in 1969, that is, more equitable rates which take distance into account.

[Translation]

It is estimated that the proposed adjustments in our domestic rate structure will yield some $37,140,000 in the current fiscal year and $80,720,000 in the 1972-73 fiscal year.

You will have noted that we are seeking authority to provide rate incentives to large customers who are willing to prepare their letter mail under conditions which would reduce our costs. In brief, what we are proposing is simply an extension of the rate incentive principle introduced in 1964 for quantity mailings of third class articles.

To be eligible for the incentive letter rates, the mailer would have to comply with clearly defined conditions and standards of mail preparation and mailing procedures, including the posting of mail at times which would reduce Post Office costs by helping to level out production peaks and valleys. In no case, would the benefit to the mailer exceed the net reduction in costs to the Post Office. Details of this program, as it applies to first class mail, will be announced later following further consultation with regional and district office management as well as with the postal unions.

I trust that what I have said has given you an insight into the nature and objectives of the changes in the Post Office Act proposed in this Bill. In concluding, I wish to stress that, if the Post Office is to maintain its present level of contribution to the Canadian economy, the only solution to our adverse financial position, lies in a better correlation between postal rates and costs of providing postal services to the people of Canada.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to the minister's statement, explaining why his department feels it must increase postal rates in Canada.

[English]

The reasons given by the minister for the increase in rates do not satisfy me, and I am sure they do not satisfy members of my party. The highlights of the bill include an increase in the rate for first class mail and the establishment by regulation of the rates for letter mail. Let me say to the minister that if he could assure the House this surcharge on industries and private individuals would be used to restore the reliable postal services once enjoyed by the Canadian people, I am sure most Canadians would accept it. Until such an assurance can be given, it is unjustifiable for the government to come to Parliament asking for an increase in rates. If the increased revenues are to join the millions of dollars in the bottomless pit of Post Office deficits, then again we are opposed. While there are frequent airline services between most Canadian cities, I am opposed to such increases.

As long as first class mail takes several days to get from Toronto to Montreal, from Saskatoon to Calgary and from Halifax to Moncton, or from one city to another in this country, I am opposed to this increase. This is what is happening. Mail leaving Ottawa addressed to my riding in Nova Scotia took two days when I first came here. In order to have people receive mail in my riding on Tuesday I must post it on Wednesday afternoon of the preceding week. This is absolutely ridiculous. Until Canadians receive the type of mail service they deserve, the government has no right to come to Parliament asking for an increase in rates.

A recent device has been advocated in relation to posting mail before 3 p.m. This is one of a number of gimmicks adopted by the postal services. This is a manipulation by the public relations branch of which the minister spoke so highly. He suggested this procedure would give improved service and, in turn, improve public relations. There never was any need to post letters before 3 p.m. in order to obtain service. Only within the last couple of years has this been the case.

It seems to me that 24-hour mail service is possible and absolutely necessary between large cities. We have direct flights between these cities. Surely, it is possible to have 24-hour service for letters to be delivered within the bounds of a city without the necessity of all these gimmicks. After looking at the debates which took place in March of this year, it seems to me that current deficits have been stated to be the result of increased costs of labour, transportation, mechanization and modernization. I suggest that the current deficit is the result of inefficiency in the last couple of years. The Post Office has been inefficient in respect of these fields of transportation, labour, mechanization and modernization. That is why this type of bill we are considering today is required. This is the case in respect of not only the postal department but other departments of government. All these departments are lamentably lacking in morale.

Since the new minister assumed office there has been an improvement in the morale of postal employees. For this I respect the minister and give him credit. He has attempted to restore morale. The general record of this government in respect of labour costs, transportation, mechanism and modernization has been absolutely incredulous. The government can talk about increasing costs but we will never be convinced that an increase in the rates will help solve present problems. Such an increase will not improve efficiency. Perhaps this bill might have been more acceptable had there been a government policy statement that the increased rates would result in increased efficiency.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I repeat that the postal service is not such as to encourage anyone to give a blank cheque in respect of an increase in the rates. Questions must be answered regarding the post office. Are we to have an increase in postage rates and continue to have a decrease in postal service? This is a question which has not been answered. Has the delivery service been accelerated? It has not been in respect of parcel mail. In many cases a parcel will not reach the coast of British Columbia in ten days and sometimes longer. This is another question which has not been answered by the minister this afternoon. There would appear to be a difference between the 1970 deficit as stated in the annual report and as mentioned by the minister in his statement of March 29 in the House. The annual report states that the deficit is $52 million. On March 29 in a speech the minister said:

> I should like to make a few remarks regarding the point raised by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. The Post Office deficit is not $52 million. Last year it was $120 million and this year we forecast a deficit of $113 million.

I cannot understand why the annual report would show the deficit as $52 million and the minister would state that the deficit is $113 million. This is another question which was not answered in the past and which has not been answered this afternoon.

We might take a look at some of the clauses of the bill. On page one, for example, in the first clause we see there is to be an increase in the commission of agents selling postage stamps. This commission is to be increased from 2 per cent to 5 per cent. We might ask what prompts this increase. Will we have better service as a result of doing this? The argument the government uses in respect of the increase is that it is needed to improve the service. In subclause (3) of clause one, we see that the Postmaster General may delegate certain powers and functions to departmental officials. Again I ask whether this will bring about more efficiency. What is the minister's responsibility to be now? So far as I am concerned, he must be responsible for the Post Office Department.

Then we see in clause 2, that the Postmaster General is to have the authority to change rates by regulation. The Postmaster General is to be given the power to tax without representation. The power to tax without representation is always risky no matter what department is involved. We have asked what is the volume of mail. This question has not been answered. We have asked about the income from this class of mail. We wonder what part of the business will be effected by these changes. Clause 3 is the clause which allows the increase, in two stages over a six-month period, on letter mail to eight cents. The present rate is six cents, as was pointed out by the minister, on one ounce for a first-class letter and this is to be increased to seven cents in July and eight cents beginning next January. Again, we have not been given any valid reason for this. Perhaps this type of increase might be justified if the government had proven itself in respect of the labour problems in the post office, in respect of transportation and so on.

The minister announced that once the bill is passed the government will increase third class mail rates. The minister will have this power. An increase in third class rates will affect many organizations. Other members I am sure will wish to speak on this. For example, charitable organizations are now paying five cents and this rate will be increased to six cents. Charitable organizations have a different enough job at the moment without being charged an additional cent for each piece of mail sent out. We might say that one cent is not much, but it is quite a bit. Again, we complain about the service deteriorating and at the same time are faced with an increase in rates. In the 1970 annual report we see that the volume of mail in 1968-69 was 4.9 billion pieces and in 1969-70 it was 4.8 billion pieces. It has gone down. The department has become very inefficient and the increase in rates will not deal with this problem. The mail must move. It moved before 1968, that is before the government started reorganizing things and I suggest it could still move.

There is no doubt that the service could be improved between cities, within cities and everywhere across the country. Many rural post offices have been closed. This practice has been stopped by the present minister but the damage has been done. If the confidence of the people could be restored in our postal department, then the government might have a right to come before us and say that since there is to be an improvement in service there should be an increase in rates to make the system a bit more viable. The minister stated that there has been a vast improvement. I ask him how he can talk about a vast improvement. How can he make a judgment such as that. Certainly, I would judge improvements by the service given. The service is absolutely lousy. "Lousy" is not a strong enough word. I judge improvements not by increased rates, not by the promotion of certain gimmicks, but by the service given the public.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the minister said he would try to bring about further improvements in the service. That is just what we have been trying to achieve for the past three years. With all deference to the minister, I would ask him not to allow himself to be led by his officials, by the same people who have been in charge of reorganization for two years.

[English]

That is completely unacceptable to the Canadian public because service is what the people want. The minister asks whether the post office could pay for itself. Sure, it could pay for itself. I am not against a move along the line of trying to make the post office pay for itself. We can continue to raise the rates and decrease the service, but after a while there must be a balance point. Surely, there is a limit to how much the Canadian public can take and how much we have to pay for the movement of a letter from one place to another. One reason for the decrease in service in rural areas is that the service in these areas does not pay for itself. I suggest to you that we pay taxes in this country to make sure that those parts of the service which pay for themselves will help to cover the deficits in those rural places where the service does not pay for itself. We pay taxes in this country to make sure that these places have a postal service. We contribute through our taxes to the operations of the Post Office Department because we want letters to move on a 24 hour basis, we want letters to move from one city to the next, to move within the cities, and from one rural village to the next.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The public would not mind increases in the rates if improved service came with them, but with the type of inefficiency we have it is totally unacceptable for the government to come to us asking for an increase in rates. The Canadian public does not have to put up with this. In view of all this, and in view of the reasons given to us by the minister, I suggest that the bill should not be read a second time now, and that the minister should explain some of the matters I have raised with respect to the service. The minister should make an honest assessment and tell us what he plans to do to improve the service. Only then will we be able to give the government and the minister the right to increase rates. I suggest that the bill should not now be read a second time, in fact that it should not be read at all. Therefore, I move:

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"This bill be not now read a second time but be read a second time this day six months from now".

[Mr. Comeau.]

Mr. Speaker: I assume the hon. member will allow the Chair to have a copy of the amendment, or perhaps the original. I might suggest to the hon. member that, although there is no difficulty about the procedural aspect of the amendment, it might not be a bad idea to give consideration from time to time to following the accepted form in this kind of amendment, normally referred to as a six months hoist. The wording usually adopted is that the bill be not now read a second time but this day six months hence. This is a detail and I do not want to make an issue of it in any way, but there are accepted forms and perhaps it might be better if we were to respect these forms. The motion has been put.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, in this discussion I think it might be useful if we took a brief over-all view of the Post Office in order to gain a better understanding and perspective of what is involved in its detailed operations. The Post Office is probably the federal service which touches more people more frequently than any other. It is a vast service. It handles close to five billion pieces of mail per year. It serves five million doors. It operates 9,000 post offices, and it employs close to 50,000 people. I think it is fair to say that, despite its problems and recent troubles and disruptions as well as the curtailment of service, the Post Office provides a very good service. We should remember that our Post Office provides part of a global postal service, a part of 132 such services in as many countries. It is a splendid example of what can be attained by co-operative action for the common good.

In my view the Post Office should not be regarded, as it so often has been by both of the older parties, as a place of some importance to which sometimes transient ministers going from post to post are appointed. We have had—and I believe this figure is accurate—11 postmaster generals in the last 14 years. In my view, the Post Office and the public it serves deserve something a good deal better than that. We would not tolerate 10 or 11 head men for, say, Air Canada in 14 years. We should not tolerate it in the case of the postal service. I cast no reflection on the present minister responsible for the Post Office but I suggest to him, to the House and to the country at large that if anyone is going to do a good job any place, any time, anywhere, he must have a longer period of time to study the problems and to get acquainted with his job than postmaster generals have had until now. I do not know whether it is the intention of the government to shift this minister to another post but I do not think it is fair to him or to the country, nor do I think it would be fair to the new minister who would replace him. In this respect we should demand of governments better and more consistent management, and whatever the future holds for the present minister I hope it will not be a shift of this nature.

In my opinion, whether efficiency is achieved by making the Post Office a Crown corporation rather than a department of government in some other manner, we need to look upon the Post Office a good deal more seriously than has been the case so far. We need to improve its long range planning, its costing procedures and its stability. Having made these introductory remarks, I should now like to turn to the details of the legislation before us.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External Affairs—East Pakistan conflict—Discussions with Indian and Pakistani representatives—provision of relief supplies; the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Airports—Toronto International—method of letting contracts for skycap services; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Post Office—last daily pick up of mail in cities.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HEALTH

MEDICARE—SUGGESTED DISQUALIFICATION OF PROVINCES IMPOSING DETERRENT FEES OR FAILING TO USE FUNDS FOR MEDICAL SERVICES ONLY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of introducing legislation to amend to Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Medical Care Act to provide (a) that the imposing by any province under its own hospitalization and medical care plans of deterrent or utilization fees upon recipients of these services, or (b) that the failure by any province to make legislative provision that all funds received from the federal government shall be used only to cover costs of its hospitalization and medical care plans will disqualify such province from receiving any share of costs from the government of Canada.

• (5:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion has been on the order paper in my name each session of this parliament. Until something is done about the subject matter of the motion it will remain on the order paper for as long as I am a member of this House.

I spoke on this subject in October, 1968, in the first session of this Parliament, and I will repeat some of the remarks I made then because they are as valid now as they were at that time. But I also have some additional evidence to support my contention that measures must be taken that will effectively prevent provinces from implementing deterrent fees to be paid by the recipients of medical care and hospitalization services, and will effectively prevent provinces from making any other use of funds received from the federal government for their hospital and medical care plans. The motion asks the government to consider a method that would effectively accomplish the purpose stated in it, namely, that when a province decides to implement deterrent fees or to use funds received from the federal government for some other purpose, it would no longer qualify for any share of costs from the government of Canada.

Universal public hospitalization and medicare plans in theory imply, and in fact require, that the total population prepays the cost of hospital and medical care benefits that any citizen may incur in the event of illness. In spite of organized opposition from some individuals and groups, the fact is that the overwhelming majority of Canadians wish to participate in a collective way to protect themselves and their families from being faced with large financial obligations at the time of illness, or immediately after illness strikes. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the consumers of medical and hospital services decided through their governments to prepay the costs of their hospital and medical care needs. Underlying these measures is the principle that good health is a right, not a privilege, of every citizen of this country. It is a basic tenet of such public programs that regardless of financial means or station in life, the right to good health and treatment for illness shall not be denied to any citizen because of financial barriers.

The intent and purpose of universal hospital and medical care plans are to provide full and equal access to the best possible health care for each citizen regardless of his station in life, financial means, race, colour or creed, or his place of residence. They are a way of spreading the cost of health care over the entire population, and of removing the financial burden of hospital and doctor bills from the patient. The great majority of citizens have decided, through their democratically elected governments, that they wish to pay in advance for their hospital and medical care through yearly premiums, through income tax and sales tax, and other similar measures. Premiums, of course, are a fixed charge on every citizen. Income and sales taxes to a larger or lesser degree are based on ability to pay. This then brings me to the purpose of this motion. Experience has shown and is showing that some provinces are imposing additional charges that completely negate the intent and purpose of public hospital and medical care plans, including the federal Medicare Act and the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

The imposition of so-called deterrent fees, or utilization fees, or co-insurance fees on a patient is, in fact, an extra tax on those who become sick or injured. It means that people who have already paid for their hospitalization and doctor care through their premiums and taxes, must pay again as soon as they are sick. Such charges, I submit, fly in the face of the intent of our national Medicare Act, and are perpetrated because of loopholes in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. The effect of deterrent or utilization fees is, in fact, to deny reasonable access to medical and hospital services to the poor, the chronically ill, the aged, and those with large families. Section 4(1) (b) of the Medical Care Act is most explicit on this score. It says that medical services are to be provided for insured persons and that nothing, directly or indirectly, whether by charges or otherwise, shall impede or preclude an insured person—mark those two words—impede or preclude an insured person from access to such services.

Those who support deterrent fees can argue that deterrent or co-insurance fees are not specifically mentioned. Well, they are not, Mr. Speaker. In fact, however, the federal act discourages such charges which could have the effect of impeding reasonable access to insurance services by insured persons, since these fees are not considered as a cost to be shared by the federal government. In fact the federal government, the Parliament of Canada, says in the act that the provincial plans must provide for the furnishing of insured services upon uniform terms and conditions to all the provinces in accordance with the various tariffs, etc., set out under the law. That service must be provided upon a basis that allows for reasonable compensation for insured services to medical practitioners and, I quote, "that does not impede or preclude, either directly or indirectly, whether by charges made to insured persons, or otherwise, reasonable access to insured services by insured persons."

To further strengthen the point, I want to call for my witness the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) himself, and I am sure that hon. members on the government side will agree with me that he is an ideal, unimpeachable witness. I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the minutes of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, issue No. 24, of Thursday, April 1, 1971. As recorded at page 13, I asked the minister if the government considered the use of deterrent fees by any province with respect to its plan, in any way flies in face of the principles laid down in the Medical Care Act. The minister replied, and I quote:

> As a general principle, in our dealings with the provinces with reference, say, to medicare, we generally have tried to discourage the type of deterrent fee structure set up by the provinces. We have argued that it is an inhibitor to accessibility, and that we would like it discouraged.

Note that last sentence, Mr. Speaker. The minister says "we"—meaning he, the department and the government have argued that deterrent fees are an inhibitor to accessibility and that they would like them discouraged.

Further, as recorded at page 14, the minister said in response to my questions, and again I quote:

> It may appear that I am contradicting myself in the sense that we regard it as an inhibitor against accessibility, and at the same time the studies would indicate it has not had too much effect. Of course that is the trouble with deterrent fees. Once the principle is inaugurated there can be a tendency for them to become a greater and greater proportion. Of course I think it is inevitable, especially with the people these programs are designed to assist, and I am talking about the lower-income groups, that sooner or later it is going to inhibit the accessibility of those people.

In a further reply recorded at page 15, the minister said:

> Generally, I would like to see it discouraged. You are not going to get much argument from me in the philosophy you are expounding now.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Surely, it is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the effect of these kinds of charges must be to inhibit—to use the minister's word—or impede, or preclude—to use the words in the Medical Care Act—reasonable access to medical or hospital services. Surely, this is most apparent in the case of the poor, the aged, the chronically ill and those with large families. These deterrent fees are being imposed in more than one province. In particular, they are being imposed in my own province of Saskatchewan. There, the deterrent fee is $1.50 per call on a doctor, $2.50 per day for the first 30 days in hospital and $1.50 per day for the next 60 days.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Surely, deterrent fees must inhibit or impede or preclude reasonable access to medical services since it is possible to pay the $1.50 deterrent fee four or five times in a single day, because it can be charged by each doctor the patient might see for the same illness. You could go to a general practitioner with, say, a stomach ache. He would charge the deterrent fee and refer you to an internist, who would charge you a deterrent fee and turn you over to a radiologist, who would charge you a deterrent fee and then refer you back to the general practitioner who would prescribe medicine. You would be charged the fee for consultation. Even though you have already paid for your medical care through your income tax, your sales tax and your premium payment, you will pay again when you are sick. In addition, the fee is charged for every single office and house call for the same illness or injury, no matter how often you must go to the doctor.

The chronically ill, and more particularly cancer patients, are victimized because of the number of times they must visit their doctors, or the number of times the doctors must visit them in their homes. They are victimized also because of their numerous hospital stays, some of which are very lengthy. Someone unfortunate enough to be ill with cancer has enough trouble, I submit, without being saddled with these various additional unfair and unjust costs. Someone sentenced to death by cancer and forced to lie for weeks or for months in a hospital bed, should not, at such a time, be burdened with extra costs which an unconscionable government, either provincial or federal, has imposed on him.

The problem of deterrent fees imposed on treaty Indians has still not been solved. It is quite clear that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the federal government feel that the exaction of these fees would prevent Indian people from receiving reasonable access to health services, and they decided to pay the fees on behalf of the treaty Indians in Saskatchewan. Surely, this is further evidence that the government believes deterrent fees violate the intent and purpose of the hospitalization and medical care acts.

What about the Métis people, whose income in many cases is as low as, if not lower than, the income of the Indian people? Is it not logical to suppose that these fees will affect them adversely, too? What about other classes of people with similarly low incomes? We hear it said that no one will be turned away. But anyone who goes to a hospital at ten o'clock at night in an emergency and does not have the required $25 deposit will not get in, and no bureaucrat will be able to convince me that anyone can get $25 from a social agency at that hour of the night.

The deterrent fee in connection with hospitalization is equally vicious. At $2.50 a day for the first 30 days, and $1.50 a day for the next 60 days, a total extra tax of $165 is imposed on a sick person who has the misfortune to be hospitalized for 90 days. The reason most often given to justify the imposition of deterrent or utilization fees is that they serve to curb abuses of the hospital and medical services. This is pure baloney. In fact, the baloney is no longer pure. It is old, it is bad, and it smells to high heaven. Abuses by whom? Where, when and how is there an abuse? Not the slightest evidence has ever been researched or presented to indicate that there is any significant amount of abuse. The infinitesimal number of people who might be considered hypochondriacs should not be deterred either, because they are sick, too. They may be a little bit sick in the head but that does not mean they do not need a doctor. They need a psychiatrist.

Mr. Osler: We are all here.

Mr. Benjamin: I know there is one here from Winnipeg and I hope he can get to his psychiatrist real fast.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler)!

Mr. Benjamin: To suggest, and some people have been stupid enough to do so, that deterrent fees will correct abuses of the use of hospital beds is to ask us to believe the unbelievable. No patient can admit himself to hospital or stay in a hospital one day longer than his doctor says he can. If there are abuses in the use of hospital beds, charging a patient extra for something over which he has no control is both callous and unjust. If there are any abuses of hospital admissions and length of stay, they can be laid entirely at the door of the doctors and the hospital administrations, not at the door of the patient.

The Hall Royal Commission, appointed by a Conservative government, came out strongly against deterrent or co-insurance fees which their report stated would simply deter the poor and have no effect on the unnecessary demands in the middle and high income categories. Such a policy would mean Canada was simply continuing to ration health services on the basis of ability to pay. This position was subsequently endorsed by the Canadian Welfare Council.

I submit that this principle was accepted by the federal government on the day in 1966 when the Medical Care Act was passed. The criteria then established included comprehensiveness of medical service, universal coverage, administration by a public authority, and portability between provinces. Surely, the imposition of deterrent fees negates two of those four principles. Surely, it negates the principle that provincial plans must be universal, that the provinces must make health services accessible to all without regard to financial circumstances. And surely it negates the principle of portability, when someone from a province which does not have deterrent fees has to use hospital or medical services in a province that does, and thus has to pay an additional tax. Surely that inhibits, impedes and precludes the principle of portability. In giving effect to the medicare plan, the federal government is rightly accepting responsibility to see to it that every citizen in Canada, no matter where he might reside, will not be denied the basic right to reasonable access to hospital and medical care. According to the act of 1966, reasonable access means financial access.

I said earlier that there is not the slightest evidence that there are abuses in hospital use by patients, nor do I think there are abuses of the doctor's time by patients. If there are, the doctor is fully free to turn the patients away. But I believe there is evidence to prove that deterrent free do in fact impede, or inhibit or preclude people from having full and reasonable access to hospital and medical care services under the national and provincial plans. I know that the minister has given grants for studies to be made on the effect of deterrent fees, and I believe he knows there is evidence already at hand, probably in his office, to prove this statement.

May I ask the minister what other studies are being carried out? What further plans does he and his department have to carry out more investigations? What is he doing? I believe there is evidence that the imposition of deterrent fees reduced the costs of the total plan to the province of Saskatchewan in 1968 by 6 to 7 per cent. Although they may claim it reduced costs by as much as 10 per cent, I suspect the books have been cooked a little bit. I know that there is evidence that the reduction of costs resulting from the imposition of deterrent fees has been transferred to the patients and that transfer of those costs has fallen most heavily on certain categories. It has had very little or no effect on middle and high income groups, and as much as 25 per cent of certain families have been adversely affected. The worst effect of all is on the large families, on the aged, on the chronically ill, and on the low income groups. I believe there is evidence to force a conclusion that the imposition of deterrent fees has caused, and is causing, a reduction in service to these groups. Surely, the principle of medical care and hospitalization plans is to reduce the disparity in medical and health services available to people. Surely, it is apparent that deterrent fees fly in the face of that principle.

I believe investigation will turn up evidence to show that there have been many changes in the way doctors function since deterrent fees have been imposed in various places. For example, I will bet a dollar to a hole in a doughnut that investigation will show there has been a marked increase in total examinations. This is only logical. When a patient who only needs an arm or a leg examined, comes to see the doctor the fee for this is $4. After deducting $1.50, the doctor can only bill the medical care insurance plan for the remaining $2.50 and hope to get the $1.50 from the patient. If the doctor conducts a full examination, which pays $8 or $10, he can deduct the $1.50 and then bill the plan for the balance. This is logical and the doctor could not be blamed for it. The deterrent fee has made the doctor misuse the service.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I do so to advise him and the House that his time has expired.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, may I continue for a few minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may continue if he has the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The matter is bound to get talked out, in any event.

An hon. Member: The hon. member is the one talking it out.

Mr. Benjamin: I am trying to be helpful to government members, none of whom know anything about this and none of whom are prepared to speak to this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: The example I gave the House involving partial and full examinations is merely one of many examples I could bring forward regarding the unfortunate change in procedure that deterrent fees have forced both upon patients and doctors as well as the hospital staffs.

Each province has the right and jurisdiction to establish whatever kind of hospital or medical care plan it wishes. If a province wishes to, it may establish deterrent fees. If it chooses to do that, if it chooses to implement a plan that is unfair and unjust to the consumer of these services, it should not be aided and abetted by the resources of the federal plan. The effect of this motion, if passed, will be to ask the federal government to consider making changes to legislation in this field.

The second part of the motion, which I will not dwell on, has to do with what I consider is the misuse by at least one province of the share of funds allotted to it by the federal government. During the last year the province of Ontario had an excess of revenue over expenditures in connection with its OHSIP plan. The surplus in OHSIP figures for the year 1970-71 was $32.9 million. It is estimated that the surplus in 1971-72 will be $3.6 million. These additional funds are being generated at the expense of places like nursing homes. These funds should be used to meet the costs of medical care and the hospital services plans but they are being syphoned off into other plans. No wonder premiums in Ontario are so high. Federal funds are being misused and misappropriated by governments such as that in Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I think hon. members on the government side fully agree with that part of my motion. I hope they will pass it so that the government may reconsider the legislation in this field.

The result of amendments would be that provinces like Saskatchewan, for example, would have one of two choices. Such provinces could charge deterrent fees if they wish; they could choose to collect $7 million worth of blood money from the sick each year or they could obtain $15 million from the federal government under the national medical care legislation. That is the choice open to them. I submit that the government of Canada should not, under the federal legislation, aid and abet such provinces in the charging of deterrent fees.

I hope hon. members on all sides of the House will agree that amendments to the federal legislation ought to be made so that this unjust and callous treatment of the poor, the chronically ill, the aged and of those with large families will no longer be meted out by provinces which wish to share in the federal medical care and hospital insurance plans.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in the debate this afternoon on the motion moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) concerning deterrent fees and utilization fees. The hon. member mentioned that a similar motion in his name has been on the order paper since 1968. I recall a motion like this being debated several times.

Mr. Benjamin: Only once, I think.

Mr. Foster: As I recall, part (b) concerning the use of funds by a provincial government for purposes other than medicare was not included in the original motion. I think this certainly is a sore point with regard to the province of Ontario, and I am glad to see that that part has been added to the motion which is before the House today. I should like to review for a moment some of the background of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, which came into effect on July 1, 1958, and the Medical Care Act, established in 1966. I think hon. members will have a better understanding of the intent and purpose of these important pieces of legislation.

The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act provides for federal contributions to participating provinces for a specified share of costs incurred by provinces in respect of public hospital insurance programs which they administer. The federal share of costs represents 50 per cent of sharable costs for all Canada, although the share to any individual province may be slightly more or less than the 50 per cent figure. This share is calculated on the basis of 25 per cent of average national per capita costs, multiplied by the eligible insured population in each province.

The act specifies that insured services shall include the standard in-patient services provided by hospitals, as well as out-patient treatment and diagnostic services provided. Excluded from cost sharing are t.b. hospitals and sanatoria, hospitals for the mentally ill, and institutions that provide custodial care, such as nursing homes and homes for the aged. The federal government enters into agreements with the provinces and these agreements cannot be terminated or amended unilaterally by the federal government except by giving five years notice.

The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act is subject to the "interim arrangements" legislation which provides machinery for "opting out". So far, however, only the province of Quebec has exercised this authority. Recent statements by the treasurer of the province of Ontario and, to some extent, by the new premier as well, give us cause for wondering whether that province will be exercising this machinery for opting out at some time in the future. I certainly hope that will not be the case, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that if major provinces with a large percentage of the population opt out of the federal plan, the overriding value of the program will be diminished.

The act, in its present form, permits provincial hospital insurance plans to make authorized charges directly to patients for insured services, but excluding charges by way of premium or other sum not related to a specific service, and these charges are not cost sharable by the federal government. Moreover, authorized charges are not acceptable to the federal government if they exceed 10 per cent of the cost of services. Variations, Mr. Speaker, exist in provincial hospital insurance plans because the act was designed to establish basic minimum levels of coverage; to allow provinces freedom to choose the method of raising their own share of costs; and because of the "opting out" feature of the legislation. Several provinces levy co-insurance and deterrent charges, but in all cases provision is made by these provinces for the payment of authorized charges on behalf of persons who would otherwise not be able to pay, or would be financially embarrassed by such charges. In other words, Mr. Speaker, no Canadian is denied necessary hospital care because of inability to pay.

The Medical Care Act establishes a grant-in-aid program whereby the federal government is empowered to make financial contributions to those provinces which operate acceptable medical care insurance plans that meet certain minimum criteria related to comprehensiveness of services, universality of coverage, portability of benefits and standards of administration. Federal funds became payable from the first of July, 1968, and are based on the national average per capita cost of insured services, excluding administrative costs, multiplied by the average number of insured persons in each province. With the exception of the Yukon, all provinces and territories have introduced provincial plans; and it is expected that the Yukon will have introduced an acceptable plan by the end of the current fiscal year.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The Medical Care Act, Mr. Speaker, embodies only four basic principles which must be incorporated and reflected in provincial medical care insurance plans. The reason for keeping these conditions few and simple is to avoid the necessity for entering into complicated signed agreements with each province, a feature of the Hospital Insurance Act. These principles are:

Use of Medicare Funds By Provinces

1. Comprehensive coverage for all medically required services rendered by a physician or surgeon, and there can be no dollar limit or exclusions except on the grounds that the service is not medically required. Mr. Speaker, there must be no financial impediment or preclusion of service to an insured person that would deny him needed medical care. Provinces also have the latitude to include additional health services in their programs should they desire. And if there is a consensus among the provinces, additional health services may be added to the national program.

2. Universal availability. Coverage must be available to all eligible residents of all participating provinces on equal terms and conditions. Moreover, in establishing a plan, coverage must be available to at least 90 per cent of the eligible population—a figure that went up to 95 per cent from April 1, 1971. This feature ensures access to coverage by all residents and prevents premium discrimination on grounds of previous medical history, non-membership in a group or other considerations. At the same time, subsidization in whole or in part for low-income groups or individuals is permitted.

3. Portability of benefits when the beneficiary is temporarily absent from his own province or when moving from one participating province to another. Portability ensures that coverage is not lost as a consequence of moving from place to place within Canada.

4. Non-profit administration. Public authorities administering medical care insurance plans are accountable to the provincial authority for all financial transactions.

Because the conditions have been kept simple, a province may qualify for shared federal financial support by reaching a federal-provincial understanding as to the nature of the particular provincial plan that is appropriate and acceptable for federal cost sharing. This gives each province considerable leeway to develop its own plan in the manner that best meets the particular requirements and circumstances of the province while still meeting essential national criteria. While it is true that the Medical Care Act does not preclude imposition of a utilization fee, the act clearly specifies that any such charge must not impede or preclude access to insured services by insured persons. In other words, no feature of a provincial medical care plan may deny insured services to the Canadian public.

I would add that the federal government does not especially favour utilization charges because we do not believe that such fees effectively control costs in the long run. However, provinces have the right under the Medical Care Act to determine in what manner the provincial share of medicare shall be financed and federal contributions under the act are made regardless of whether or not utilization fees are levied, providing the four essential criteria I have mentioned are met. For the information of this place, only one province has seen fit to levy utilization fees under its medical care insurance plan.

I turn now, Mr. Speaker, to the benefits to Canadians resulting from the hospital care and medical care acts which puts Canadians among the best medically cared for people in the world. Our health coverage is universal, of a high standard, administered publicly, not by private carrier, and is portable virtually throughout Canada. These plans ensure that the less endowed provinces receive the same basic standards of coverage as the more affluent provinces and ensure that hospital and medical care is available to all Canadians. If I may refer again to the deterrent or utilization charges referred to in the hon. member's motion, as I have already stated such charges are allowable under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and I do believe that these form the raison d'être for the motion before the House.

Concerning medicare, the federal government does not favour this method of provincial financing because we believe it can cause undue hardship to persons having only limited financial means and who as a group have greatest need to unfettered access to medical care without hindrance of any kind. Unless such charges are set at a level high enough to hinder or deter access to services, they are of little consequence. If such fees are high enough to deter, then they are self-defeating. In this regard there is no evidence to suggest that in the long run they naturally affect the level of utilization of service or the total cost of care. All they achieve is a transfer from the paying agency to the patient at the time when the patient is least able to afford such charges.

It is on the principle that a utilization fee will deter persons from running to the doctor for the most trivial matters that such fees are imposed. This reasoning is based on the false premise that only the poor make unnecessary demands on the service; the deterrent is seldom high enough to deter the more affluent user. I would quote Mr. Justice Hall, in a speech delivered in Saskatchewan in 1964, as follows:

> Stripped of all sophistry and regarded in their naked application, the so-called deterrents are a tax on the poor predicated upon the fallacious assumption that it is only the poor that would ask for frivolous services.

In 1968 Saskatchewan introduced deterrent charges. Initially this resulted in a decline in utilization of medical care services. However, today utilization now exceeds the previous level of use. It is too early to determine whether this fee has deterred anyone from seeking or receiving needed medical care, but studies in this regard are being conducted. I would also like to mention the peculiar backlash that can occur when utilization fees are imposed. Once over the initial shock, many of the general public increase their use of services, feeling that as they have to pay directly for the service they might as well use it at the slightest provocation.

I should, in fairness to the Saskatchewan plan, mention that the province has agreed to pay the utilization fee on behalf of those receiving public assistance, that it pays the fee for patients receiving "statutory benefits" for cancer, tuberculosis or mental health care and that any citizen may apply for special assistance to meet the utilization fee should his circumstances require it. Additionally, doctors and hospitals are encouraged to report to provincial authorities patients not in receipt of public assistance who could be embarrassed by the fee.

[Mr. Foster.]

On this basis, Saskatchewan has introduced a family ceiling of $180 for combined utilization fees for hospital and medical care. The fee per doctor's office call is $1.50, and for a doctor's house call or hospital emergency visit $2. The hospital insurance fees are $2.50 per day for the first 30 days, $1.50 per day for the next 60 days and no charge after 90 days. A charge of $1.50 is also made for each outpatient physiotherapy visit. Other provinces also charge hospital utilization fees which on the whole are quite nominal.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, with respect to part (a) of the hon. member's motion, the federal government's position regarding utilization fees is consonant with the hon. member's intent. The federal government certainly does not favour such fees being imposed under the Medical Care Act. However, it is our belief that experience with utilization fees will shortly lead to their abandonment because they do not achieve the purpose for which they were intended.

• (5:40 p.m.)

With respect to the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, generally speaking payments by the federal government to the provinces for hospital insurance are in the form of advance payments and final payments. Monthly advance payments are based on 25 per cent of the provincial disbursements for the previous month and 23½ per cent of the estimated national per capita costs applicable to the number of insured persons in the province at the end of the month. Under this arrangement, advance payments have always been much less than the provincial disbursements already made, usually approximating 50 per cent of the provincial disbursement of the previous month. Final payments under hospital insurance are made approximately two years following the actual disbursements by the province. It would therefore appear that the proposed amendment concerning the application of federal moneys by a province would not be appropriate in so far as the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act is concerned because the objectives of the amendment are already, quite clearly, being achieved.

With regard to part (b) of the hon. member's motion, this would, as I say, seem to be aimed at Ontario where the level of premiums set may be sufficient to carry the plan's costs from October 1, 1969, through the entire fiscal year 1970-71 without using the federal contributions at all, when one takes into account provincial funds previously being spent for insured services and which were still presumably available for this purpose. However, if the premium level were to remain unchanged, within several further years the accumulated surplus would be gradually used up. While one might disagree, as I do, with Ontario setting the initial level of its premiums as high as it did, it would seem clear that the people of Ontario are at least ensured that there will be no need to increase the premium level for some years.

I recall that when this step was taken in 1968 the share of the federal government amounted to over $170 million a year. I thought it rather unusual that at the same time the province of Ontario raised the premium level from what was only $10 a year to $20 a year. It was a great revelation to those of us in Ontario, in view of this tremendous amount of money coming in from the federal government, that the premiums were raised. I think everyone living in the province at the time expected premiums to drop by one half, because supposedly the federal government was paying one half of the cost. As I say, instead of that the premiums were increased.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre indicated in his remarks a few moments ago that there was a surplus, I believe, of $30.9 million in the fiscal year 1970-71 and that in this fiscal year under the OHSIP program there will be a surplus of $7.6 million. I would join with hon. members in commending the hon. member for his motion; there are many aspects of it with which I agree.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker I have no hesitation in commending the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) for introducing this motion. From experience I have gained in one section of this great nation of Canada, I can state there should be no deterrent fees of this sort and that everything should be done to help those in need, regardless of the cost.

I understand there may be some constitutional problems and I hope that at the next federal-provincial conference, soon to be held, the minister will use his influence to overcome some of the existing anomalies under the Medical Care Act and the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act in order that we have a universal plan that will provide care for all those in need.

I have some figures regarding the cost of health services which it might be worth while quoting. The cost under the health services program is $7 million, under the health insurance and resources program over $1 billion, under the medical services program $49 million, and the cost of the Medical Research Council is $36 million. I understand that deterrent fees are used in the United Kingdom to prevent over-use and abuse of the program there.

I hope that a motion will be put forward soon seeking to reintroduce under the health resources program legislation to provide funds to establish medical centres, hospitals and other services, and to induce doctors to visit our more remote and isolated communities. People living there are not worried about referral and deterrent fees, because they cannot even afford to travel vast distances in order to see a doctor. This is a ridiculous state of affairs.

Let me give the House an example of what I mean. Three days ago when visiting a community in my area I met a fisherman who over the years had built his own home with his savings. His wife had suffered a heart attack and was paralysed. He went to the welfare department to get some help in order to employ a girl or somebody to look after his wife while he was out fishing, and his application for assistance was refused. As a result, he had to build himself a shack right on the beach, bring his paralysed wife to the shack and leave her in bed while he went fishing for an hour or two. He would then have to return ashore after a couple of hours' fishing to see how his wife was. And this sort of situation exists in a great, affluent country like Canada!

Let me give another example. I know of a child who had to wait for one year for spectacles. When he finally received them, they were no good to him because his eyesight had deteriorated even further in the interim. I also know of the case of a lady who had no legs, heart trouble and high blood pressure and was confined to bed; but because she had been cared for by her family, her social assistance payments were reduced. I suggest that situations like these should be given attention and that we must steer our efforts in this direction.

Since it is obvious that all members who have spoken are in favour of the motion, and since the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has mentioned that the minister is in agreement with his motion, I fail to see why we should speak any further on the matter. I just want to put in my two cents' worth by saying the government of Canada must realize that we need medical care centres and more doctors and services for the needy who cannot provide for themselves, such as the blind, the incapacitated and the undernourished. More attention must be paid to such people. Without keeping the House any longer, I commend the hon. member for his motion and hope the government will agree to amend the act in order to make provision for the kind of care described by the hon. member.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, you have heard my colleagues speak at length on this motion and review for you the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Medical Care Act. I wish to speak on the constitutional aspects of this motion.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the British North America Act has generally been interpreted as providing that the responsibility for decision and execution in the field of personal health care rests essentially with the provinces. This does not mean, however, that the federal government is not concerned with the health of Canadian citizens. Indeed, this concern of the federal government is expressed in concrete terms through the hospital insurance and medical care programs. It is through federal financial assistance that the hospital and medical care provided by these two acts is available throughout Canada. Many provinces, particularly those that fall below the national average economically—such as, I would say, Manitoba—would simply be unable to meet their health care responsibilities to their residents without federal participation.

• (5:50 p.m.)

There are three important aspects of health care which are of special concern to the federal government. First, the federal government is concerned that there be equal opportunity for all Canadians to have access to necessary health care services. There are several ways of achieving this result. For example, unconditional federal equalization payments could be made to the provinces, leaving them with the responsibility of determining the minimum level of service they would provide for their residents. However, this method of providing assistance to the provinces would leave the door open for equalization payments to be used for any function of provincial governments.

The second method of equalizing health care services would be for the federal government to operate a health insurance plan limited to collecting taxes and making payments in respect of insured services. However, provincial governments have jurisdiction over the most important elements of the provision of hospital and medical services such as the operation of hospitals, provision of health personnel, organization of services, quality of care, and so forth. It can readily be seen that a federal insurance plan which had no control over matters such as I have just mentioned would be largely ineffectual in meeting the basic goals of ensuring that insured persons received high quality care at reasonable cost.

A third method of equalizing health care services for Canadians is that taken by the federal government in respect of hospital and medical care insurance programs, namely, through the medium of providing federal financial assistance under certain conditions to the provinces to help them operate their own programs. You can see that this method not only recognizes the constitutional realities but also the varying abilities of the provinces to finance necessary health services. This alternative, at the same time, effectively ensures that the provinces establish and maintain relatively uniform health insurance plans across the country. In my opinion this is the most practical approach to the problem of health care in the Canadian context.

In a country as large as Canada with highly mobile population, health and medical care must be available for Canadians should they move from province to province. To achieve portability of benefits, hospital and medical care plans must be integrated as far as possible so that the individual citizen, should he move, would retain coverage until he could obtain comparable protection in his new province of residence. Only through federal participation in hospital and medicare programs is portability made possible.

There is one further aspect of federal involvement in the health of Canadians which bears mentioning. In essence, this relates to the fact that research and technology related to the provision of health care transcend provincial boundaries. The advances being made by medical science must be available to all levels of government, and much of the responsibility for ensuring that high standards of health care are available for all Canadians falls on the shoulders of the federal government which carries out or sponsors research in the health field. Moreover, the federal government assists the provinces financially in their efforts to achieve this very desirable goal.

In respect of the patient making any direct financial contribution to the doctor on the grounds that there should be no financial impediment to anyone seeking medical advice, there has been some objection. This case would be stronger if the doctors were bound to accept the amounts paid by the plan as payment in full. This is not the case. For example, the Ontario medical association believes 40 per cent of doctors charge their patients directly an amount equal to 10 per cent of the Ontario Medical Services Insurance Plan payment even though no so-called deterrent fees are in force. The public naturally prefers not to pay anything in the way of an extra bill, a deterrent fee or a deductible. These methods are therefore somewhat politically unacceptable, except perhaps for specified limitations.

I have not made any reference to the task force, which I thought I might have time to do this afternoon. I will refrain from doing so. In conclusion, it is my opinion that the motion before the House—presented, I am sure, with the best intentions—is, when the facts are understood, unduly restrictive and constraining to the provinces. Indeed, it is sad that the valuable time of the House should be spent debating this matter, because I feel that had the hon. member looked into his proposal more closely he would have realized the intent of his motion is covered by existing legislation.

If the hon. member is of the opinion that needed hospital or medical service is being denied Canadian citizens through the imposition of utilization fees, he should be prepared to bring these cases to the attention of the federal or provincial authorities, whichever the case may be.

An hon. Member: We can't go to Victoria.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): If you cannot go to Victoria, I suggest to the hon. member that Mr. Schreyer is making this information available not only to his own members but to members of the opposition. Perhaps the member could consult him. As I have stated, the federal government does not believe utilization fees associated with medical care programs achieve their objective. We believe that experience with these fees will cause the provinces imposing them to arrive at the same conclusion.

The public airing of this matter will, I am sure, achieve the effect desired by the hon. member. I would remind the House that the method used to raise the provincial share of the cost of hospital and medical care is a decision for each provincial government to make. We in the federal government make clear to all Canadians the amount the federal government contributes under each cost-sharing program with which it is concerned. It is the responsibility of each province to explain to its citizens and justify the taxes or premiums required to cover the provincial share of these programs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING STAMP AGENTS' COMMISSION, LETTER MAIL PREPARATION ARRANGEMENTS, EXTRAORDINARY SERVICES, MEMBERS' MAIL, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté (Minister without Portfolio) that Bill C-240, to amend the Post Office Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock while discussing Bill C-240, to amend the Post Office Act, I suggested that no arm of the government or no department of government could be expected to do a good job when the minister was being shifted around from this department to that and when ministers were steadily coming and going from the Post Office. I do not think it is fair to the Post Office to be downgraded in this fashion or to expect any minister to do the job required in this department when there is so much shifting around. I suggest to the minister and to the government that if they are to do the necessary job in reorganizing the Post Office Department or in just running it properly, this practice should not continue and there should be some consistency to allow the minister to develop the expertise required in running the department.

The main thrust of what is proposed is a further major increase in the first-class ordinary letter rate. Three years ago local first-class letters were handled for four cents, while onward letters were handled for five cents. These rates were increased to a flat six cents. This was a 50 per cent raise in local first-class rates and a 20 per cent raise in onward rates. This was accompanied by a major reduction in service to the five-day system.

It is now proposed to again increase this rate of a flat seven cents and, further, to increase it once more to eight cents by the start of next year. This will represent a 100 per cent increase in the local mail delivery rate of ordinary letters and a 60 per cent increase in the onward letter rate in four years.

No increase in rate at this time is proposed for second-class mail.

• (8:10 p.m.)

I was interested to hear the minister say that a study on this subject is under way. I do not want to be critical and say whether these people should pay more or less at present, in view of the fact that the minister thought it worth while to make a study. Obviously he is doing something in this regard and I would be willing to leave this matter until the study is completed.

With the exception of this comment, we have indicated in this House or have had indicated to us time and again that Time and Reader's Digest get by very easily here and that we might pick up $1 million or $2 million if we were to put them on a special rate. I would recommend to the minister that he take a hard look at this matter. Over the past 10 years this category of second-class mail has caused a loss to the Post Office Department of $200 million and it is forecast to lose another $30 million this year. Of the second-class mail, the loss of only $2.3 million was attributable to carrying rural weekly newspapers the circulation of which is under 10,000.

Over the years the Post Office has done quite well with first-class mail. In 1969-70 the loss on that mail was only $360,000 out of a total business of approximately half a billion dollars. In the main this mail is paying for itself. One might argue that it should continue to do so, but if this is the case why does the minister not consider that other categories of mail should not do the same? The projected loss for 1970-71 has soared to $35 million. This immense increase is due to business interruptions because of labour disputes, and salary increases beyond the 1970-71 estimates. An estimated loss of $35 million equals approximately three cents per week per Canadian.

A deficit of $33 million is forecast by the Post Office Department on third-class mail, some of it junk mail, in 1970-71. No increase in rates for this class of mail is proposed. The minister indicates that I may be mistaken. I will be happy to listen to him again. I listened fairly carefully the first time he spoke, but if I find I am in error I will be happy to apologize. When we are talking about second-class mail, at least there is a study of what should or should not be done with regard to it, but I did not hear a case put forward by the minister as to why there should not be an increase in third-class mail rates. The next time the minister speaks I should like to hear him make a case on why third-class mail should not pay its way. I would recommend that he explain to us why it should not.

I oppose a further increase in first-class mail rates. The great bulk of first-class mail is in the form of bills from or cheques to telephone, hydro, oil companies and other businesses. It is consumer mail. If the first-class mail rate is increased again, these concerns will undoubtedly pass that increase in their costs on to their customers. Hence, ordinary letter writers using first-class mail will be paying more for their stamps and will be charged more through bills for utilities and other services for which they are billed through the mail.

A further substantial raise in postal rates affecting consumers should be opposed as inflationary. The present loss on first-class mail is but three cents a week per capita. It can be argued that the basic Post Office service to Canadians using first-class mail, and to some extent second-class mail, is part of our communications media and cannot entirely be priced on a specific dollar and cent basis.

In my opinion there is a good case to be made for assistance to non-profit, health and cultural societies the success of whose efforts depends much upon their ability to communicate by mail. There is a case to be made for their receiving, if they qualify, a certain amount of federal financial aid earmarked to pay for the margin between what the non-profit societies can pay and what the Post Office should have in revenue so as to avoid being unfairly charged with carrying mail at a loss. I commend this thought to the minister and to the government. We have the examples of the Canada Council, the National Film Board and the CBC by which to judge whether, without loss to the Post Office, non-profit public or semi-public services can be assisted.

I think we must take a new, hard look at second and third-class mail. As I have indicated, I am willing to leave second-class mail rates as they are in view of the study being made. No increase has been proposed for these classifications at present. They are both, to a certain extent, services carrying profit-oriented, business or promotional mail and both these services lose the Post Office a great deal of money.

I think it is interesting to look at third-class mail and to realize that business can be profitable if mass mailing and handling can be organized. It is a fact of life of the printing business that the major cost is in the first or smaller number of pieces. If a greater volume is involved and it is handled efficiently, the unit cost of third-class mail is reduced and the revenue is increased. In my view, much of the third-class mail is not wanted by the mass of Canadians. It is mail which the business houses want to get in the letter boxes. It is mail that may be desirable for the Post Office to encourage because, properly processed and handled, it can make money for the Post Office or at least reduce the cost.

However, we find that the anticipated loss on third-class mail in 1971-72 will be no less than $38 million. Why should that be? This is, or could be, to a large degree profit-oriented mail. Why should the third-class rate not be increased to the point where it will at least more nearly pay for carriage of this mail? We should press for renegotiation of the international postal agreement which has involved losses for Canada in carrying U.S. mail, much of it printed. The international agreement does not take into consideration that Canada and the United States exchange, free of charge, mail handling services while one country has a population ten times that of the other.

I also urge an examination through a commission or special inquiry of the various subsidies and charges borne by the postal service in order to bring out the facts of costing and to provide a clear picture showing who pays for what. The purpose of this would be to rectify the outmoded system still in vogue whereby the Post Office provides free services to some departments while other departments provide the Post Office with very valuable services such as free accommodation in buildings.

If the minister is not satisfied with what I have said relating to some of these items, I would be happy to have him tell us that the Post Office does operate under a proper cost accounting system: I should like him to prove to the House that this is the way in which the Post Office is run. Myself and many other Canadians, I am sure, are not absolutely certain that this is the way it is done. If we are in error, we would be happy to hear from the minister.

We want to know the findings of the body which studied the value of turning the Post Office into a Crown corporation rather than continuing it as a department of the government headed by a minister. This question has been much debated. If the government decides to turn the department into a Crown corporation, we want advance information on such studies before deciding whether or not we agree.

• (8:20 p.m.)

We urge modernization of equipment, procedures and administration beyond what has been achieved so far. In this regard the Post Office is in the same position as the telephone companies were a few years ago before they made their operations as automatic as possible. It is possible to end the physical distribution of old age pension and family allowance cheques, totalling scores of millions of letters a month, by using an electronic mail service, with the value of the cheques being deposited in the banks by electronic impulse. While pressing for efficiency we must seek to preserve and extend the gains made by postal workers since they attained collective bargaining. Phase-outs of jobs in certain postal categories must not be made at the expense of the employees. For instance, while the new sortating procedure is estimated to improve efficiency and reduce per unit handling costs by means of greater speed, it should not result in lay-offs of employees over the next several years.

What I am saying is that, hopefully, any modernization of equipment within the Post Office will be achieved on a basis that will cause the least possible damage to the employees involved. When we consider that there may be 50,000 people working for the Post Office, we can see that this department affects a great many people. We oppose the increase in first class mail rates and for this reason we will support the amendment of the official opposition.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity Bill C-240 presents to discuss not only the amendments to the Post Office Act but also matters in regard to the general operations of the Post Office. I am very happy to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) in the chamber tonight, because for two years he and I have been trying to arrange a mutual visit to the beautiful little village of Elora where two years ago he was kind enough to stop the building of a new post office. In that connection I hope the Postmaster General will talk to his officials and ask them to take another look at the building and at the accommodation required, because we had a local architect look at it, a man who has designed many good buildings in Toronto, who felt that with some modifications and changes it could be retained in accordance with the wishes of the people.

Elora is a beautiful little village situated on the banks of the Grand River. A great many of the homes are built of stone. Some of the churches are built of stone. It is in the centre of the area through which the Elora road went up from Guelph. In those days it was, shall we say, a watering place. It has that background of stability which you find only in the smaller villages of Ontario. If the Minister of Public Works cannot make the trip that he has promised to make to the village, I sincerely hope the Postmaster General will have his officials meet with the officials of Public Works and agree on modifications to make this building more useful to the people who work there.

I am not one who always looks for change. I see some of the new post offices that have been built in communities, replacing old ones cast aside a few year ago—beautiful, red brick post offices which were subsequently bought by the local communities and used as municipal buildings. Those old offices could still be functional as post offices. In light of that experience, I think the officials of both departments should take a second look before deciding to demolish old post offices and erect new ones. Mr. Speaker, you and I know that many of the older buildings will still be standing when some of the new buildings being put up today will have outlived their usefulness. The present post office in Elora could be modernized without destroying its architecture.

Now I wish to say a word about this bill and in support of the amendment moved by my colleague objecting to postal rate increases. This is the second time within a very few years that we have been faced with a postal increase; and it is the same old story, that the administration needs more money for labour and renovations. In his remarks the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Côté) indicated that within the past year they have been able to reduce the postal deficit. I believe that implementing some of the programs he has initiated and introducing more efficient means of handling and distributing mail will result in the deficit being brought down a great deal more.

When I first became a member of this House, Mr. Speaker, the Post Office used to have a surplus. That was quite a few years ago. I remember criticism being made of the then Postmaster General because the postal service was so poor. People today are still complaining about the postal service. In light of a question I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) last week with respect to the census, we can only wonder about the efficiency of the postal service. As recorded at page 6075 of Hansard, I asked the minister:

> In connection with the census which begins on June 1 can he explain to the House and to the people of Canada why all Canadians will not be allowed to send their returns directly to the department as will be done in cities?

In reply the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a note from DBS which says that either the mail-back or pick-up system by census representatives assures confidentiality, but the pick-up system is employed in localities where, for instance, the mail service is insufficient—

My riding is made up of small rural and urban communities. I think I get as good postal service as do people in the cities of Ottawa and Toronto and I can see no reason why the people of my area should be treated differently, with respect to the census, from people in Ottawa and Toronto. As was indicated by my colleague from Wellington (Mr. Hales) today, the census-taker may be your next door neighbour. He is supposed to discuss your census problems with you. In such a case there is not complete confidentiality. I plead with the Postmaster General to plead with his colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to have an advertisement appear in all newspapers across Canada telling people in small communities that if they want to put their returns into envelopes and send them by mail to the DBS, they are free to do so. That could still be done even though tomorrow is census day.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I see no reason why people in small communities should be treated differently from city dwellers. They should be allowed to return the census form to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics by mail. There is a lot of criticism across the country on this matter, so I hope the Postmaster General will get in touch with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and work something out.

Referring to the amendment proposed by my colleague, it is interesting to note that the Postmaster General has indicated that 80 per cent of postal revenue is derived from business and industry. The last time postal rates were increased I remarked that it would have an inflationary effect, and now the government is doing it again. We all know that in the end the consumer pays. Although the rate for first-class mail may only be increased by two or three cents, business takes that increase into account in its profit and so we have another inflationary trend.

I wonder if the Postmaster General discussed this bill with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) before it was brought in. Does it mean that we will have another round of inflation and another round of deliberate unemployment to stop it? The increase in the third-class mail rate applies mostly to throwaway mail and catalogues of the type issued by large department stores. It is a vicious circle; the catalogues are used to promote business, but in the end it is the customer who pays for the increased cost of doing business and this, of course, includes the postage on the catalogues. I object to the proposed increase in postal rates because we have had enough inflation and enough of the unemployment that was created in an effort to curb it. I do not think that the people will stand for this again.

A previous speaker mentioned the low morale of Post Office employees. Maybe the Postmaster General has improved the morale a little, but he has a long way to go. As morale improves, efficiency will improve. He should work toward this end. This government has brought in many phasing-out programs, starting with the small post offices. In many villages the store with the post office was the hub of the community. In many cases the closing of the post office has meant that business has ceased to be profitable and merchants have had to sell out and move to the cities to try and find other employment.

The government also talks about phasing out the textile industry, and it is phasing out the farmer. Pretty soon they will be dictating how everybody in Canada may earn a living. These programs are neither fair nor just—people are being injured and ways of life are being destroyed by them. We sincerely hope that before this bill is passed the Postmaster General and the government will reconsider it. It might even be withdrawn or held back. As I have pointed out, there should be some means of controlling the deficit other than by increasing postal rates.

Another point that bothers me is that residents of small communities must pay rent for a post office box. There is door to door delivery in some rural areas and in the larger towns, but in small communities it costs $5 or $10 to have the mail put in the box. Even then it is sometimes impossible to get into the post office after hours for one's mail. I am also a little disturbed by the delegation of authority. Clause 1, subsection (3) reads:

Section 5 of the said act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsections—

There is provision for delegation of powers to assistant deputy postmasters general, regional general managers and directors of the Post Office Department. When the minister speaks in this debate I should like him to explain why these powers are delegated to non-elected officials of the Post Office Department. "Governor in Council" appears in a lot of other legislation, so I should like to know what powers are being delegated to these officials throughout the country.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say again that I do not think these postal rate increases are necessary, because they will be inflationary and we have had enough of that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For Kootenay West (Mr. Harding).

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, members who come from British Columbia are not anxious to move further east; we prefer to remain in our own province.

I should like to speak briefly on this bill and to endorse the amendment moved by the official opposition to give the legislation a six months' hoist. I believe a number of valid reasons for this have been given by various speakers and it is not my intention to repeat them this evening. Just two years ago we had a very lengthy debate on Post Office problems. That was when rates of all description were increased rather sharply. A great deal of damage was done to a number of publications in Canada. As yet, hon. members of this House have not been given a full or extensive report of what actually happened in that connection. This should be given to us prior to our again increasing sharply postal rates on first-class mail.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Although several points have been stressed by other speakers I will refer to one or two of them again. I might say that the Public Accounts Committee discussed matters along these lines. I raised these points with officials of the department. They said they were looking into one or two matters which I will again bring to the minister's attention. I hope that the points raised will be taken care of in legislation. One of these points may sound like a small matter for people living in cities but it means a great deal for people who come from rural areas. In a city, so long as there are 2,000 postal drops there is free mail delivery. The postman comes to your home and delivers the mail through a slot in the door; it is delivered to you in your house.

In smaller communities with less than 2,000 postal drops—I happen to live in one and would not move to a city just to get the additional mail carrier service—people are charged rent for a post office box. There the postman puts the mail in the box and you must go down, collect the mail from the box and take it home.

I have raised this point before and I raise it again. This is rank discrimination against Canadians who live in rural areas. There is no escaping this fact. People of our smaller communities must take the time and incur the cost, quite frequently, involved in driving several miles or they must walk a considerable distance to the post office. Once there they are given the privilege of renting a post office box unless, of course, they desire general delivery.

I suggest to the minister that the rental charged for post office boxes be done away with. The least the minister can do is give residents of these small areas the right to obtain their mail free of charge from a post office box. In the cities, as I say, the postman comes to your door and drops the mail right at your home. Surely the least we can do is provide a box for the rural homeowner so that he may go and pick up his mail whenever it suits him. The rural dweller incurs the additional cost of having to go the the post office under his own steam, by car or by any other means he may choose. The cost varies with the distance he must travel.

I have received a number of letters on the subject and I am sure that the minister and the department have also received letters. I received a letter the other day from an individual in Fruitvale which is in my riding of Kootenay West. The writer points out that he must pay $15 a year for a certain class of post office box. If he lived in a larger centre the mail would be delivered to his home free of charge. I do not think anyone can demonstrate to me the logic in loading an additional charge upon those who live in rural areas. I have protested against this charge before and I do it again now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: If any group of residents in Canada deserve to be subsidized with regard to mail service or any other service, it is our citizens who live in rural areas and who quite often are without many of the amenities of life. These amenities are concentrated in the big cities. It seems that the services of almost any department of government are more expensive in rural areas. Rural dwellers are stuck with these additional costs. In this instance we are talking about the Post Office. I again suggest to the minister that this is one of the topics which ought to be put on the agenda for discussion. He ought to talk it over with the staff of the Post Office. People in rural areas ought to be shown this consideration. I have no hesitation in making this suggestion although I know that if it is implemented the department will lose revenue. That is beside the point, however.

A good argument for subsidizing—if you want to call it that—rural post office boxes stems from the fact that two years ago when we were dealing with Post Office costs we found that Reader's Digest, an American magazine, was subsidized for delivery in Canada to the extent of $800,000, and that Time magazine was subsidized to the extent of $721,000. I do not think that situation has changed. These two magazines are being subsidized to the extent of $1,521,000. The money comes out of the pockets of taxpayers, including those who live in the rural areas. I say it would be far better to use the $1,521,000 to help those in rural areas obtain better mail service than to subsidize these two magazines.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, but they are Liberal supporters.

Mr. Harding: Yes. At least, they have been on occasion. They have supported this government. But that is beside the point.

Let us look at the rates that will come into effect under this new piece of legislation. We find that first-class rates will be primarily affected. They will be affected seriously. The effect on individuals will be serious. The increase will constitute a truly inflationary cost with respect to the mailing of letters. On July 1, 1971, just over one month from now, first-class mail rates will increase to 7 cents a letter. Six months later, just after Christmas, this Liberal government will tell the Canadian people that, for a New Year's gift, they will be charged 8 cents for every first-class letter mailed. I say that this rate is excessively high.

Let us examine the first-class mail rates which the minister is trying to initiate with this new legislation. The 8-cent rate which will be implemented at the end of the year will cover only those letters weighing one ounce or less. For letters weighing more than 1 ounce—and many letters weigh slightly more, tipping the scale at 1¼ ounces—the mailing rate is to be 14 cents per letter. As you go up the scale you find that the rates increase fantastically. Perhaps I should put them on the record because some hon. members may not have examined them.

I will take the rates which will apply on January 1, 1972. These are to be the rates: 8 cents for any letter weighing 1 ounce or less; 14 cents for a letter weighing more than 1 ounce but not more than 2 ounces; 20 cents for a letter weighing more than 2 ounces but not more than 4 ounces; 32 cents for a letter weighing more than 4 ounces but not more than 8 ounces; 44 cents for a letter weighing more than 8 ounces but not more than 12 ounces, and 54 cents for a letter weighing more than 12 ounces but less than 16 ounces.

• (8:50 p.m.)

If this is not an inflationary method of increasing costs to the Canadian public, I don't know what is. I suggest to the minister that he look very closely into this question of postal rates. He should find out how these rates have affected the small weeklies and periodicals which used to circulate in abundance two or three years ago. Hundreds of them from one end of Canada to the other have been forced out of business because they could not afford the excessive increase in mailing costs. Some may say the Post Office must pay its way. But many of these little publications were part of the Canadian way of life. Many of them had their own peculiar outlook, if I might put it that way, and brought a different perspective to events which took place in various sections of Canadian activity. I believe we have lost culturally and in other ways through these papers being forced out of circulation.

We should think in terms of providing subsidies. Hon. members may ask why papers of this kind should be subsidized. But if we are to get into a discussion on subsidies, one might well ask: Why subsidize anything? A story which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star a couple of weeks ago indicated we were subsidizing the mining industry to the tune of more than $300 million. In the northern regions of Canada most of the mining firms receiving these subsidies are foreign-owned and controlled; they ship Canadian products out of the country after we have plowed a subsidy into the operation.

I say that a type of subsidy which gives something to the people of Canada is far better than giving something to a foreign corporation which exports raw resources from the country for fabrication elsewhere. The point might be debatable and the minister might wish to debate it, but I am using it by way of illustration. If he is looking to save dollars he should not be trying to whittle a little more from the average Canadian citizen who will be forced to pay excessive postal rates in many instances. The minister should be looking elsewhere for his savings.

I may be wrong, but I understand there is to be a postal convention in July at which rates are to be reviewed. I hope this is so. I made a note to the effect three or four weeks ago when we were discussing the Post Office estimates in the Public Accounts Committee. If there is to be a postal convention I suggest it is a good reason for holding over this legislation. There are a number of points which the minister should raise at the convention. If they are raised and if changes are made, he might be able to tell us that certain modifications can be made in connection with this legislation.

Here are a few facts I gleaned during one of the committee's meetings. In 1969-70 the Post Office lost $27.9 million. Of this, $3.9 million represented the loss on the mailing of daily papers. Another $2.3 million was lost on mailing weekly papers. Some of these papers, as hon.

members know, can be mailed free of charge within a 40-mile radius of their place of publication. In connection with the mailing of magazines and periodicals, there was a deficit of $13.6 million of which the delivery of foreign publications mailed in Canada accounted for a loss of $2.7 million. A loss of $5.4 million was incurred in dealing with incoming United States mail.

One of the oddities of the postal structure is that although the delivery of foreign publications mailed in this country costs $2.7 million, it would have cost $5 million if it had been mailed in the United States. This does not make sense. In the circumstances, it is a good thing for Canadian taxpayers that these publications were mailed in Canada or the Post Office would have lost double the amount it did. It seems to me the whole mailing cost structure needs revision. These things should not happen. It is for this reason I say the legislation should be held over until the convention has been held and we know exactly what rates will be charged for handling mail by other nations and ourselves.

The provision of Post Office facilities is not dealt with in the bill before us but it will certainly be affected by the new regulations which are laid down. We have been promised that certain new postal facilities for Castlegar will be ready by March of next year. I believe the department should press forward with this work as quickly as possible. A new postal walk system will be started in the area, the point having been reached at which there are more than 2,000 postal drops. Let the department complete this new facility and get the new postal walk system started. I believe a number of small communities just outside the area of Castlegar, Kinnaird and Robson should also be included in this service. This would do a good deal to improve the mail service in the area, and the people there certainly need it.

While I am dealing with local matters I wish to draw to the minister's attention the fact that delivery of second and third-class mail is extremely lax in my constituency. Daily papers are sent to me and I am lucky if I get them ten days after they have been posted in Nelson. It is not unusual for me to get them two weeks or 16 days later. This is not good enough. We were told at the time rates were last revised that the mail service would improve. It has not improved; it has deteriorated. I was receiving second and third-class mail much faster than I do now. There must be some kind of tie-up somewhere that the department should investigate.

• (9:00 p.m.)

We have complained about this sort of thing, but service does not seem to improve. There is a hold-up somewhere along the line after second-class mail gets to the post office. Whether it is because the mail is slow leaving the post office of origin, or the transit of the mail is slow, I do not know; but it should not take from ten days to two weeks to send a weekly or daily paper from Nelson to Ottawa. A donkey could walk across Canada faster than that. There is no reason in this day and age to put up with a mail delivery service of this nature.

In closing, I urge the minister to hold over this legislation at least until the fall. By then we will have had a better chance of looking into many of the points that have been raised and, I hope, will be able to make some meaningful amendments to the legislation.

[Mr. Harding.]

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I think previous speakers have outlined many of the problems of the present day postal service but I have a few impressions that I should like to put on the record this evening. Several clauses of the bill are laudable, particularly the one that provides for the free delivery of mail to the blind. This is a very good step to have included within the postal regulations. Further, some economies may be possible as a result of the provisions of proposed new paragraphs (u) and (v) of sub-section 1 of section 5 of the act under which postal customers who prepare their mail in a manner that creates less work for postal employees will pay reduced rates. One cannot argue with the merits of these two provisions of the bill.

There are, however, very few members of this House who would agree with the increase in postal rates at this time. Some time ago I read a comparison of the cost of mailing letters and making telephone calls. Although the comparison was of the situation in the U.S.A., I think a parallel can be drawn in Canada. When telephones were first introduced into the United States you could mail something over 13,000 letters for the cost of one telephone call across the continent. Although I forget the exact figures, today you can only mail several hundred letters for the cost of one telephone call, giving a ratio of something like 20 to one. I suppose we have seen some improvements made in the field of transportation since that time, but it does make one wonder where one is going in view of the way costs between these two methods of communication have increased inversely.

Government has become involved in many ways both in the private and the public sector and a great many people disagree with this. If one were to conduct a survey across the country on whether to put departments of government on a pay-as-you-go basis, there would probably be more support for subsidizing the Post Office and postal services than any other aspect of the economy that is subject to government interference, or perhaps I should say government intervention.

There are many areas in which we are conscious of maintaining Canadian content and culture and of keeping Canadians aware that they are Canadians. As the previous speaker pointed out, some periodicals in Canada have been very useful in promoting culture, both locally and nationally. Many of these periodicals have had to go out of business, having become part of our daily life. Some of them, as it were, were institutions in themselves. By making postal rates prohibitive and causing these publications to be discontinued, we are that much poorer. We pour money into the CBC in an effort to portray the Canadian scene. Perhaps we would do better to withdraw funds from such organizations and use them to subsidize postal rates.

Comparisons have been drawn between rural and urban postal services and some of the glaring inequities have been referred to. Many communities have had to suffer a cessation of postal services. True, the population of these communities was not great but in several cases in my own constituency the alternative means of mail delivery, while not nearly as effective in the community, often cost more than the original postal service. In many instances post offices were housed in old buildings, and while they may have been substandard they did provide a living to members of the community and gave better service than alternative mail services.

I do not think there is one member of this House who has not received letters from his constituents about the cost of post office boxes compared with general delivery costs. This has been another glaring anomaly. People pay for these boxes at additional cost, yet they do not have the service received by those on rural delivery or obtain better service than those on general delivery. The present rate structure pertaining to post office boxes can only discourage people from renting them, thus putting a greater load on the general delivery service.

Obviously, pride of workmanship in the Post Office is disappearing. There used to be a slogan that the mail must go through, though this has not been evident in recent years. I remember that five or six years ago it took about two days, and sometimes less, to get a letter from my own riding to Ottawa. Today it takes a week. Sometimes it takes only four or five days, but often two weeks. One can sense a loss of pride of workmanship in postal services in the last few years.

• (9:10 p.m.)

We all used to subscribe to a daily newspaper in my home town. I still have such a subscription. That paper was delivered by the postal service to my box one day after publication. This I can understand. There must be certain economies in the postal service and in a small rural community it may not be possible or practical to have same-day delivery. The situation today is that the paper comes in by bus, it is picked up by a delivery boy the same evening and at a cost of $5 per year less than the cost of mail delivery it is delivered the same day. I am not exaggerating the situation. If this situation exists in my community it must exist in a great many others across the country.

The rates envisaged in this bill will phase out the use of the Post Office Department. It is time we looked at this system with a view to overhauling it. There has been a gradual deterioration of mail services. There is only a fraction of the number of letters written in Canada today as were written years ago. This is a deplorable situation. If we intend to subsidize other means of transportation to promote culture and communication in Canada, the postal service should be at the top of the priority list.

The minister must be aware of a brief submitted by War Amputations of Canada. There is nothing in this bill which will have an effect on third-class mail, but many organizations such as the one to which I have referred are doing their best to be self-sufficient in carrying out an effective role in Canada. They have had difficulty because of increased postal rates. If we do not look after these organizations in some way in relation to lower postal rates, the government will be faced ultimately with an additional expense to offset their costs. Surely a lower rate is the best way to take care of this situation.

I shall not take any more time to deal with postal rates. Other members have made their points very capably. Surely, as a result of the briefs presented to the minister he is well aware of the situation. The time for talking has passed. The minister should approach the postal service situation with a view to working out a viable service in Canada of which we can all be proud.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments before this bill to amend the Post Office Act is referred to the committee for further study. I know the minister does not officially occupy the position of Postmaster General until his ascension under the government reorganization bill, but I should like to congratulate him as the Postmaster General. I know he is very sincere in his efforts to do a good job in this position. He is faced with great responsibility in getting the Post Office service back on the rails. Had he been Postmaster General for some time perhaps this department would not find itself in the position it is today.

This bill contains several worthy amendments. Clause 3, on page 2, suggests that the Postmaster General may delegate all or any of the powers he holds. This will add greatly to the operations of the Post Office. I have in mind one incident discussed by members of the Public Accounts Committee not long ago. One postmaster in Canada accepted bulk mail at the wrong rate; it was later found that a higher rate should have been charged. The ensuing dispute ended up in the Department of Justice which ruled that the local postmaster did not have the authority to set the postage rate which should be charged on this particular type of mail. As I understand this bill, that situation will be covered.

Hon. members of this House appreciate the clause in the bill which allows Members of Parliament free postage on four bulk mail deliveries per session. There is also a clause which provides that those operating sub post offices on behalf of the department will receive 5 per cent of their sales rather than 2 per cent. I am sure the people affected will be grateful to the minister for this change. Blind people will appreciate the changes made in the bill in respect of their mail in Canada.

The rest of the bill is comprised of increases in rates with a few other consequential changes. I am at a loss to understand why the Postmaster General has brought in increased rates for two different dates, July 1, of this year and January 1, of 1972. Perhaps he thought the changes would be easier to swallow if they were made in two separate doses. I am sure the people of Canada would much prefer to have one increase.

There is nothing in this bill which will increase the efficiency of the operations of the Post Office. This seems to be where the trouble lies. Let us consider how long it takes for a letter mailed in Ottawa to be delivered in Montreal. Two weeks ago a letter was posted on Friday night instructing the recipient to phone when the letter was received. The return phone call was not made to Ottawa until Wednesday, because it took from Friday morning to Wednesday morning for the person to receive the letter containing the phone call instructions. Over such a short distance as from Ottawa to Montreal a person could have taken the message a lot faster on a bicycle. I cannot see anything in these amendments which will clear up such a situation.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Also, I do not see anything in the amendments to correct the situation in respect of householder mail delivery. I had a recent experience in this regard. I have bulk mail deliveries for which I pay on a per pound basis. As an example, this mail left Ottawa on May 20 and was not delivered until May 28. Another batch of mail was mailed from here, received at the local post office on Tuesday and carried by the rural mail carrier in his car from Tuesday to Saturday morning without being delivered. This type of thing must be corrected in the Post Office operation.

The Canadian office of the Shorthorn Breeders Association is located in my area. This association publishes a monthly magazine. It is taken to the post office a few days after the first of the month. The delivery of this magazine is taking as long as three weeks. The delivery service in respect of this magazine is so poor that the advertisers have threatened to withdraw their advertising unless better mail service is provided. I do not see anything in these amendments to take care of next-day delivery. I know there has been an attempt in major centres to have various boxes labelled so that if you post mail in those boxes before a certain time, next-day delivery will be guaranteed. I hope this situation will be taken care of by the regulations the department will be instituting. Previously we had next-day delivery practically anywhere in Canada, but it is now a very rare occasion on which there is next-day delivery no matter where one lives. There is nothing in these amendments to take care of such a situation.

There is a situation which was brought to the attention of the Public Accounts Committee. This is a reflection on the personnel involved, those on whom the minister depends for administration. In 1964 the Post Office Department published Christmas stamps. This was the first time it had been done. The bottom of the stamp contained the inscription "1964". The number of stamps that would be sold was overestimated to the extent that when Christmas 1964 was over, $16,000 worth of printed stamps were on hand. Nobody wanted to use 1964 stamps on their 1965 Christmas cards; therefore the department decided the only thing to do was to scrap the whole lot. The Post Office Department scrapped $16,000 worth of printed stamps because of an error on the part of those responsible for the purchase of stamps.

That surely should have been lesson enough for the Post Office Department. But no. In 1970 they again overestimated the purchase of Christmas stamps. If they had merely printed a Christmas stamp without the year on it, it could have been carried over to the next year. But, no; they did it again. In 1970 they had about $8,000 worth of Christmas stamps left. You can go into almost any post office, ask for a 1970 Christmas stamp and obtain it. I received an Easter card saying "Happy Easter" and the envelope bore a Christmas stamp. These stamps are still being sold. This sort of thing is going on in the Post Office and it is the responsibility of the people working in that department. Unless the Postmaster General, through his deputy, sees that the people who have responsibility execute that responsibility the Post Office and its service will never improve and become efficient.

We have only to think of the sale of trucks during the strike of the Lapalme drivers in Montreal. The Post Office Department decided it should get into the business of delivering mail and therefore purchased the trucks from, I believe, Rod Service. They took an inventory of so many trucks. However, the people in the Post Office Department, in adding up the number made a mistake involving $16,000. If we are to have this type of operation by personnel in the Post Office Department we will never have an efficient service; the people of Canada will never have the service to which they are entitled.

I do not see anything in the bill to improve our stamps. I believe Canada has the worst postage stamps of any country in the world. They have no lustre, no colour, brightness or attractiveness. All one need do is receive a stamp from a country such as Jamaica and Antigua to know that our stamps are not as attractive. The Postmaster General shakes his head; he does not believe this statement. If he were to write a letter to the stamp collectors' organizations across this country and ask their honest opinion concerning Canadian stamps, I believe what I have said would be borne out to be fact.

There is no mention in these amendments of a very important point. I do not know how the minister will reconcile charging the people of Canada an increased postage rate when he is not giving them good service. I am not holding this Postmaster General responsible; he was not the Postmaster General when the situation arose. What happened in respect of the last increase is that the people of Canada were charged a higher postage rate and received less service. This is what is likely to happen again.

I believe the minister would have been smarter had he given the people real service and efficiency so that he would have just reason for asking for increased rates. The Postmaster General has no right to increase postage rate until he gives the people of Canada better service and more efficiency in the operation. The only way in which I believe he will be able to do this is to return to the six-day delivery service. Canada is the only country in the world which has tried a five-day delivery service. It has been tried long enough for us to know it will not provide service to the people of Canada.

The example I spoke of concerning a letter taking from Friday to Wednesday, over a holiday weekend, to go from here to Montreal was partly a result of the five-day delivery system. There was no delivery on Saturday and no delivery on Monday because it was a holiday weekend. When this happens the mail piles up, cannot be handled on Tuesday and does not go out until Wednesday. Until we return to a six-day delivery system we will have this situation. I do not see how in these circumstances the people of Canada can ever be given the service this increase in price demands.

The counter service in the post office was withdrawn for many months. If you went to a post office on Saturday you found a couple of men who handed out parcels or general delivery mail, but if you wanted to buy a money order or stamps they would say, "I am sorry, but we are closed today". This is quite asinine. It might be compared to going to a department store and approaching a jewellery counter which is closed, or going to the men's department and finding it closed although the whole store is open. If you are going to run a post office, for goodness sake run a post office; don't run a half show and have the counter half open or half closed. I am glad to note that since this minister took over he has restored the counter service on Saturday mornings. I think that the next step should be to open it all day on Saturdays as it used to be, so that the people of Canada can have the service which they deserve.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The minister has a public relations job on his hands. It seems that he must get a well organized team which will work together, pull together and adopt the theory that the mail must go through. He must not try to think up excuses why it did not go through. Unless he obtains that co-operation within his organization, he will not succeed.

I must congratulate his predecessor on going out into the business field and hiring men from industry. He picked up some top-notch men who were outstanding in the business community and he transplanted them into the Post Office Department. They are now in positions of authority in the Department and I am looking for great results from this type of reorganizaton in the Post Office. I am sure that under this minister's direction we will get it. I think this minister will treat men as human beings and not as machines, as was the case before. Having made some of these changes, I have every hope that the minister will get the Post Office back on the rails so that the people of Canada will be able to say that we have as good a postal service if not better than anywhere in the world.

Now I would like to say a few words about rural post offices, some of which are in a deplorable condition. This is not really the fault of rural postmasters. The problem is that they have not been paid well enough to keep a decent place, to paint it and to make of it a respectable post office. After all, these places represent Her Majesty's mail service and they should be show places. They should be tidy, neat and a credit to Canada. I should like to say that in my community our post office is one of the show places on the main street. It is always clean and there is always a flag flying from its rooftop. It is a well operated post office. I hope we will find similar ones all across Canada.

May I say in conclusion that there are many problems facing this minister and I know he will do his best to correct them. I am sure he knows that if he does not increase the efficiency of the delivery service to which the Canadian people are entitled, he will have no right to increase the rates as outlined in the amendments to the Post Office Act.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, it is like old times to be discussing the Post Office Department, but I can hardly tell you how much I miss the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) in these discussions. However, I have a feeling that perhaps the Post Office will remember him even longer than I will, because he who was so excellent in many other activities and has such a great contribution to make to the understanding of the economic problems of this country could not have been more unfortunately miscast than by being placed in charge of the Post Office Department. I never quite knew whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did this deliberately.

However, I am hopeful for better things from the present minister but not as hopeful as I was a few months ago, because I think he has not shown too much energy in throwing off the regrettable habits, attitudes and postures of his predecessor, these things which brought about such a decay in the service and such a multiplication in the deficits. Neither of these situations is something which a conscientious Canadian parliamentarian or postal patron would welcome.

I seem to remember that in another Parliament this same minister had a little trouble in getting through an extra soaking of the Canadian public for postal rates. Perhaps history will repeat itself.

I am sorry that this minister, for whom I personally have great affection, should be presenting a major piece of legislation the chief ingredient of which is yet another increase in the cost of postage to the people of Canada. As my colleagues have said, if this by any stretch of a partial imagination could be correlated with improved service, there might be some justification for looking upon the proposed increase with dispassion. But this is not the case. No one would talk with much enthusiasm or conviction about an improved postal service. The problem is the result of a series of costly fiascos in the administration of the Post Office Department, fiascos which have diminished the respect of the Canadian people for this important department of government and curtailed the use by the people of Canada of the Post Office Department, thereby diminishing the revenues which should flow from the public use of the department.

It is well known—and I quite agree with my colleague who has just resumed his seat—that the most egregious error under the previous Postmaster General was the cessation of service on Saturdays. He was warned that in a country of such vast distances as Canada this could not possibly be anything but a stupid and retrograde step. The events have proven the wisdom of this sad prognosis. Much of the problem of the delayed mail delivery comes from the fact that there is a blackout between Friday and Monday and that a good deal of the mail which is brought in on Friday does not move until Tuesday.

Another result is that patrons of the Post Office Department in the parcel post field are using alternative means, and daily we hear on radio the advertisements of the bus PX service. It is apparently cheaper and more efficient to use other means of transporting parcels than Her Majesty's mail. So as costly fiasco follows costly fiasco, as there is a diminution of the usage of the postal department by the people of Canada, the natural result is that those who still use it—and there are many millions who must—will have to pay more. So up goes the price of stamps yet again.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The white paper—it is a mistake to say "the" white paper—one of the plethora of white papers has forecast stamps that would cost 26 cents. We are moving toward that, Mr. Speaker, with a very unpleasant and unwelcome speed. Time was when we had five-cent stamps and six-day delivery. Then the shift was to five-day delivery and a six-cent stamp. But that is not good enough. We have to raise the ante; we have to increase the cost of stamps. No one can point out that this is in any way likely to be connected with increased service because alas, Mr. Speaker, we find that under the present jurisdiction the same old problems of employee unrest seem to plague the Canadian postal service.

Only today we hear of very serious protests from union spokesmen in the Post Office here in Ottawa; charges of far too numerous employment of casuals and charges of something even more serious, that there is a degree of nepotism involved. All of this, of course, is very disturbing to the morale of the Post Office and it seems to be a repetition of the old, old story that things are not going well in this department which was established at the time of confederation, one of the old established departments of government which, if experience should mean anything, would be expected to be a very efficient one.

I agree with those who point to this particular bill and find it inadequate in dealing with the important issues. A few months ago we were told that the glittering prospect of the establishment of a Crown corporation was not far away and that this was the answer. How many hundreds of thousands of dollars were spent on how many costly, elaborate and lengthy studies into the efficacy and efficiency of a Crown corporation? Now it seems that the idea, like the studies from which it was produced, is gathering dust and no one mentions the Crown corporation any more.

It seems that the only innovation we can get out of those in charge of the Post Office is something new like a new price of a stamp, and it is always a higher one. This is the thing that is most disturbing to all of us. I fear that it will turn the people of Canada still more against this department. We would like some assurance from the minister that things will be done. I think if he would stand up and say that the five-day week was a mistake and that he will see it is corrected, that would do something in itself to get across to the people of Canada that there would be some improvements. I wait and hope that he will take this opportunity.

I hope that we will get a little more efficiency and a little less tendency to reach for a bigger stamp cost. I hope we will have no more regrettable performances such as that which we are reminded of every day when we see the Lapalme workers parading around the Parliament grounds. History says, perhaps somewhat mythically, that a certain queen of France lost her head for telling the people of that country to eat cake. What the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) advised these poor workers to eat is far less appetising than that, and this is hardly the view of an enlightened employer toward people who have grave difficulties in working for the people of Canada.

So I look upon this legislation with feelings of regret. I wish that this minister could have produced something more than yet another appeal to the people of Canada to pay more for their postage stamps. There are so few governmental services which are given to the people of Canada at low cost that it is too bad the art, the capacity of communicating one with another should be taxed ever more heavily. Therefore I do not welcome this piece of legislation, nor do I commend the minister for his actions in bringing it forward.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a disposition to reach the point tonight at which a vote on the amendment could be ordered. My remarks will not interfere with our reaching that point. However, I should like to add to the comments that have already been made by my colleagues, the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), by saying very clearly that we shall support the amendment for a six months' hoist and that when the vote on the second reading of the bill comes, if it does come, we shall vote against the bill itself.

As has been pointed out several times today, it is only a few years ago that people could mail first-class letters in the city for four cents and anywhere in Canada for five cents. By next July, if this bill goes through, that four cents will be doubled to eight cents and the five cents rate will become eight cents. That is an increase that I think deserves the word "unconscionable" when one considers what even a few cents mean to many of our people, particularly those whose pensions were increased last December by only 42 cents a month.

This is not a justifiable increase, and we shall oppose it. However, Sir, there are a couple of other things I would like to say. The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) referred feelingly to the remarks that were given some publicity today, remarks made by representatives of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. As I recall it, the representatives of that union said—and they said it on the background of the experience they have had—that it is not their business to improve the image of the Post Office; that it is their job to get the best possible deal for their members who work for the Post Office.

One cannot quarrel with that position taken by the unions, but I think it ought to be a challenge to the soon-to-be Postmaster General. He belongs to a government which has mouthed the phrase "participatory democracy." I suggest that those words from the union are a challenge to him to establish the kind of relationship with the workers in the Post Office so that they will feel not only that they must secure better wages and working conditions for themselves but that they will want to help improve the image of the department as a whole. You cannot expect them to do that unless they are presented with an opportunity or a challenge. I suggest that the ball is in the court of the soon-to-be Postmaster General.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Benjamin: He will strike out.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to comment briefly on the changes proposed by this bill with respect to mailing services which presently are free. I notice that a number of changes are being made. There is one particular complaint which I have received many times in recent weeks. A number of correspondents have asked why they must pay postage when mailing their income tax form but not on the census form. The official answer is that the taxation data centre in Ottawa to which income tax returns are sent has been designated as a field office, not the head office of the Post Office Department, and therefore a postage stamp is required. Apparently, because the census return involves statistics it is possible to send it to field offices all over the country without postage.

It looks as though there is another explanation behind this, Mr. Speaker. Citizens know that if they do not file an income tax return they will be in trouble, and so the government charges what the traffic will bear. There is not the same element of compulsion with regard to the census return. I know there is a penalty for non-return, but people do not seem to fear it and in order to induce them to send the return to Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary or any other centre there is no charge for mailing.

The reasoning behind such decisions is not commendable. If census returns can be mailed postage free, I suggest that the same should apply to income tax returns. Although we are speaking of only a few cents it is another form of regressive taxation. For the wealthier people, the millionaires, another 6 or 8 cents for postage on an income tax return does not mean anything, but to the old age pensioner on the guaranteed income supplement the fact of having to pay postage on a tax return is adding insult to injury. The bill makes it possible to have some reconsideration of the question of what can or cannot be free. I hope common sense will prevail when the bill gets to the standing committee—that is, provided it gets there.

The essential feature of the bill is to increase the postage on the first ounce of first-class mail to seven cents on July 1, and to eight cents on January 1 next. This party is against this being done, so we shall vote for the six months' hoist, and if we get to second reading of the bill we shall vote against it.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment to the main motion. All those in favour will please—

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think there is agreement that this vote be deferred.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps there will be no vote. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I believe, as has been mentioned by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) there is agreement that the division on the amendment will be postponed until tomorrow. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might call it ten o'clock, as it is so close to being that time.

Mr. Olson: I wonder if I might prevail upon Your Honour and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to deal very rapidly with item No. 79 on the Order Paper. I think there is agreement to deal with this. It is the Canada-Finland tax agreement. If there is disposition perhaps we could deal with it in the next two minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

CANADA-FINLAND SUPPLEMENTARY INCOME TAX CONVENTION ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO APPROVE SUPPLEMENTARY CONVENTION

Hon. H. A. Olson (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill S-18, to implement a supplementary income tax convention between Canada and Finland, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think there was agreement that we should refer the bill, rather than to the standing committee to committee of the whole. Could that matter be dealt with as well?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Honey in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 3 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before the bill carries, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance what he is going to do with the speech he had prepared?

Mr. Mahoney: If anyone shouts "Explain" very loudly, I shall read it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried!

Bill reported.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. H. A. Olson (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—EAST PAKISTAN CONFLICT—DISCUSSIONS WITH INDIAN AND PAKISTANI REPRESENTATIVES—PROVISION OF RELIEF SUPPLIES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on May 4 I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) about Canada's role in providing relief supplies for the victims of the cruel war in East Pakistan. Regrettably, Sir, the question still has painful relevance today. News items from the India-East Pakistan border tell of terrible suffering on the part of vast numbers of people. A despatch from New Delhi today declares that over four million East Pakistanis have fled from East Pakistan since martial law was imposed. The Indian Labour and Rehabilitation Minister, R. K. Khadilkar, is quoted as saying "What the eventual figure will be is anybody's guess. It may be five or even eight million." Reports of cholera epidemic add tragedy to an already deplorable story of mass human suffering. Crowded living conditions have fostered other diseases.

The minister already quoted accused Pakistani troops of pursuing the refugees across the frontier into India. Alluding to the possibility of India taking defensive or preventive measures, he said, "Nobody wants war but if they start hot pursuit, as they are now doing, in such a situation can one keep absolutely mum and just protect?" Thus the prospects of international military action are very much and very dangerously present. So, along with a gripping story of fearful human suffering we have here a grave threat to world peace.

As I said in the House on Friday, I welcome the government announcement regarding the $2 million contribution to relief funds. Certainly the whole burden must not be borne by India. It is a matter of international concern and should also be one for international action. So far I have not noted any Commonwealth interest or initiative. I wonder what, if anything, Canada has been doing to have this matter discussed in a Commonwealth context.

The initiative of Secretary General U Thant is welcome. The visit of the three-member team from the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was also a proper step. But the need for international inspection on both sides of the border is compellingly urgent. I think none of us here enjoy seeing Pakistan become the object of widespread and sharp criticism from the thoughtful and sensitive in the international community.

There is obviously a very serious situation in Pakistan, and while that country may well assert that the political aspects are not the subject of international scrutiny or concern, the humanitarian aspect is one which should prompt the government of Pakistan to welcome the good intentions and efforts of people from many parts of the world.

I hope that Canada will not rest its case with the $2 million contribution or desist from its efforts to broaden the base of aid and enlarge the scope of the assistance which so many people across the world desire to extend to the victims of this grim, human tragedy. I hope that we will continue our aid program through the approved channels. We should also use our good offices with Pakistan, a fellow Commonwealth state, to open the doors and remove all grounds for criticism that political considerations are standing in the way of maximizing aid to an unhappy people.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, since May 4, when the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) asked for more elaboration on the situation in East Pakistan and particularly whether the authorities there would accept relief supplies, it can be said that some progress has been made toward providing relief assistance for the victims of the Pakistani conflict. As you are aware, it was announced on May 28 that the government is providing $2 million to help meet the immediate needs of the refugees crossing into neighbouring states of India from East Pakistan. Included in the Canadian contribution will be foodstuffs, medicines, medical supplies and a cash donation. This is, of course, additional to the earlier contribution of $50,000 to the Canadian Red Cross, supplementing its gift of $10,000 to the Indian Red Cross for relief to refugees.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) had earlier indicated that the government of Pakistan was reluctant to accept relief assistance or to permit relief administrators into East Pakistan, considering that their own resources were adequate to meet immediate needs. This situation has now changed and the government of Pakistan has recently indicated that assistance from abroad would be welcome.

Our High Commissioner in Islamabad has been in contact with officials of the Pakistani government who have indicated that external assistance will be required in two categories: (1), humanitarian relief and (2), reconstruction and rehabilitation. The government of Pakistan has appealed to the United Nations and to the world food program for assistance in the first category. With regard to reconstruction and rehabilitation of East Pakistan, the Pakistan government has prepared a list of priority items which is now receiving scrutiny of the appropriate governmental authorities.

The Secretary General of the United Nations has appointed a co-ordinator of United Nations relief activity and it is expected that he will visit East Pakistan in the very near future. Canada has already indicated that any assistance which the Canadian government may give will be closely co-ordinated with that provided through the United Nations.

Assurances have been received from the government of Pakistan that any assistance given will be used only for rehabilitation and relief, and the co-ordination arrangements to which they have agreed would appear to be adequate to ensure proper distribution for the purposes intended.

AIRPORTS—TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—METHOD OF LETTING CONTRACTS FOR SKYCAP SERVICES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on May 18 I directed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) which hon. members will find reported in Hansard in the following terms:

> I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the report that a United States firm has displaced a Canadian-owned company at the international airport at Toronto, involving the majority of airport skycaps, would the minister indicate the method by which such contracts are let?

Mr. Speaker indicated he doubted whether the question was in order and suggested it might be considered at the time of adjournment. I agree with him 100 per cent.

First, I should like to say we are extremely pleased to learn that in this corner of the House there is to be one more member, from the constituency of Brant. He was elected with a majority of about 5,000 and he will probably be in a position to speak forcefully for the people in that area when he enters the House very shortly.

With regard to the question I asked, it appears that Consolidated Fueling Services of New York took over the skycap contracts at the International airport in Toronto for all but two airlines. They are Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines. At that time Consolidated Fueling Services agreed verbally that they would hire the people who had been laid off by Airline Services, who previously held the contract, thus enabling men who had spent years of service at the airport to retain employment.

However, this was not the result of the takeover which is really effective as a result of agreements between the airlines involved and the people employed as skycaps. It would seem that the situation involved in this so-called contract at Toronto airport is similar to that which arose in Montreal not long ago. The men concerned in that affair, the Lapalme drivers, are still marching in front of the House of Commons day in and day out. Someone else took over the contract to provide the services which they were providing and the displaced workers are still expressing their concern.

The same thing could happen in Toronto unless the Department of Transport undertakes to do something about the type of contract they let at so-called public expense airports. For the department to wash its hands of the whole affair is not in the Canadian interest. We are well aware that in Toronto, Consolidated Fuelling Services of New York, a strictly U.S.-owned firm, did not employ the people that they had undertaken to employ and as a result the airline services which did employ labour for Air Canada and CP Air had to lay off, according to my information, some eight people at the terminal.

• (10:10 p.m.)

I am asking whether or not the government, although the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Duquet), would indicate to the House this evening why a United States firm has been allowed completely to take over services at the International Airport at Toronto that were not put out to tender; why it has allowed independent airlines operating into Canada to employ skycaps without tender; why it has allowed air services which would hire skycaps to employ people off the street rather than engage labour that was fully qualified; and why the Department of Transport claims it is interested in providing services to the people when there are two groups of skycaps at Toronto International Airport meeting cabs that arrive at the airport and asking the passenger whether they are travelling by Air Canada or CP Air, thus causing a nuisance to the travelling public.

The people of Canada are entitled to know whether or not the employment of skycap services in this country is going to be commensurate with the demand. They are entitled to know whether these services are sufficient to serve the travelling public. Although the people who were picked off the street may well have been Canadians, in my humble opinion this is another case of union-busting. Consolidated Fuelling Services of New York do not hire union labour or have certification with any labour union in Canada. To say the least, it is a disgrace that while we have airline services in Canada today which hire labour from the Canadian Brotherhood of Railways, Transport and General Workers Union, the company to which I have referred, unhindered by the Department of Transport, is allowed to hire people off the street who are unqualified or inexperienced, which in turn results in the lay-off of long-term employees who themselves have to walk the street.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member from Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) raised this question on May 18. Since that date I have had an opportunity to make inquiries with officials in the Department of Transport who are familiar with the detailed operation of the International Airport at Toronto. I am informed that the skycap service is handled directly by the airlines and not by the department. The reason for this is that it is felt that the service is one that can be directly attributed to the passenger and that the airlines are in a better position to provide this service.

The hon. member is aware that up to a short time ago the skycap service for the majority of the airlines at Toronto was provided by Air Terminal Transport Limited. Recently the contract expired, and although Air Canada extended the contract the other airlines preferred to solicit bids from other companies in this type of business, including Air Terminal Transport. As a result of the bids a contract was awarded to Consolidated Aviation and Services, the Canadian subsidiary of Allied Aviation Services.

The hon. member has made a number of observations which I have noted. I will, of course, bring these to the attention of the departmental officials who are directly concerned with this subject, and if there are additional points which have not been mentioned this evening I would be pleased to receive them.

POST OFFICE—LAST DAILY PICK-UP OF MAIL IN CITIES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, once upon a time at this hour the House used to ring with welcome over the great exchanges between the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and the former Minister of Communications and Postmaster General, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans). So great was the excitement produced by these exchanges that the National Centre for the Performing Arts had to time its evening breaks and its performances in order that people could rush up here for 10 or 15 minutes to hear what went on. We all know what happened to the former Minister of Communications and Postmaster General.

In inviting our friend, the soon-to-become Postmaster General, here this evening I promised him I would not, and do not want to, perform in the role of the hon. member for Hillsborough. I should like to clear up one question in my mind. Broadly stated the question is, does the government serve the people or do the people exist to serve the government? More specifically, did the government or his department really have to change the timing of afternoon mail collection from some time after five o'clock to around three o'clock in our great Canadian cities?

The minister, his department and his staff in various parts of Canada have received correspondence in respect of this early mail collection. I should like to quote from two letters. The first is from a Mr. Paul D. Silver, president of Silver's Agencies Limited of Halifax. He states in part:

> For some unexplained, and in my opinion completely unfounded, reason business "boxes" are only cleared once daily (Monday to Friday) and that at 3 p.m. or two hours prior to the close of normal office business.
>
> Delivery to Montreal/Toronto, on 5 p.m. mailing, would therefore require 38 hours as against the previous 18 hours.
>
> Local deliveries, within the city, also come on a 38-hour delivery basis.
>
> Is it anticipated that, for a whim of Ottawa, every company should reorganize to mail before the 3 p.m. deadline or should we all direct our staff to the post office, after 5 p.m., causing traffic tie-ups, diverting people from their normal home routing and adding to their expenses?

The other quotation is from a letter written by Mr. Byron D. Anthony, director, labour-management bureau at the Dalhousie institute of public affairs, Dalhousie University. It was written to the postmaster in Halifax and in part states:

> To be more specific, mail posted in a city mail box at 5.20 p.m. Friday, May 14th addressed to 15 separate addresses, at noon today, Wednesday, May 19th had been delivered to only four recipients.

That gives an idea of the magnitude of this problem and the fact that people still have their normal office routines to follow. Having regard to the question I posed last week, the soon-to-become Postmaster General was really telling us that the mailing habits of Canadians should be changed. Perhaps the habits of the new Postmaster General and his department should be changed back to what used to be the case. I ask the Postmaster General to assess this new time in light of experience, and should the resistance of the public be greater than its acceptance to the new hours will a change be made back to former hours?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have already partially answered that question as it was asked by the hon. member the other day in the House. I can add to that answer that the frequency of clearances of street letter boxes varies at each assured mail centre, but generally boxes located in residential areas are cleared once daily in the morning and striped boxes located on main thoroughfares and in business areas are cleared at least twice daily, in the morning and in the early afternoon, Monday to Friday, and once in the morning on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. Times shown on both types of boxes reflect final clearance deadlines for assured next delivery day service to designated centres.

• (10:20 p.m.)

A final early evening clearance is made from striped boxes only at most assured mail centres, Monday to Friday. This mail is processed in the normal way, and although we are able to give a good portion of it following-day delivery in certain areas it is not guaranteed next delivery day service.

The need for a later pick-up of mail after assured mail collection deadlines will be determined on the individual merits of each area where the assured mail program is implemented. That is why we are still having difficulty with the program. As I say, we might have had better box clearance in some areas. All we were doing in many instances was merely accumulating a large volume of mail in the post offices during the night which meant that more employees had to work on the night shift without providing better service.

So we hope after a period of adjustment to have a more assured mail program. If the people of Canada will bear with us a little longer, I believe I can assure hon. members and the public that in a short time, a month or two, things will be stabilized to a large degree and the service will be very much better than it is at present.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 1, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF COMMUNIQUÉS ISSUED BY NATO NUCLEAR PLANNING GROUP AND DEFENCE PLANNING COMMITTEE AT CONCLUSION OF CONFERENCES

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table copies in both official languages of the communiqués issued by the NATO Nuclear Planning Group at the conclusion of their conference, May 26, 1971, and the NATO Defence Planning Committee at the conclusion of their conference, May 28, 1971.

* * *

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND-NEW BRUNSWICK FERRY RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgency and importance. It concerns the recent increase in rates on the Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick ferry service which constitutes a further deterrent against the type of interprovincial transportation service promised the people of Prince Edward Island and presents serious disadvantages to the tourist industry and other aspects of the Prince Edward Island and Atlantic economy.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald):

That this House requests that the fare increase on the Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick ferry service be suspended and that the matter be referred forthwith to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has proposed a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie) moved that the third report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on Friday, May 28, 1971, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

• (2:10 p.m.)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT ON SECURITY OF WEST BERLIN AS PREREQUISITE TO CONFERENCE ON BALANCED FORCE REDUCTIONS IN EUROPE—RIGHT OF SOVIET UNION TO PRESERVE COMMUNIST REGIMES BY FORCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to the Soviet-Canadian declaration calling for a conference properly prepared. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether a prior settlement regarding the security of West Berlin is still a prerequisite for such a conference in the view of the Canadian government, as it was the view of the NATO council last December when it issued a declaration to which Canada subscribed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my discussions with Prime Minister Kosygin I did make the point that we did not feel that the matter of European security could be advanced very readily if some solution had not been found for the question of Berlin. He, of course, expressed a contrary view to mine and we discussed the matter along those lines. There was no agreement. I indicated that the Canadian government was anxious to look for any means of promoting peace in Europe and arriving at mutual, balanced force reductions but that we did feel as a result of our NATO discussions that the Berlin question was paramount.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is it the position of the Prime Minister that a settlement of the security question in West Berlin is a prerequisite to the holding of such a European conference, as was the position taken by NATO in December?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is not a prerequisite in the sense that it would have to be settled first—not necessarily. It would be part of the general discussion. Our position was that there would not be much point in a meeting on European security if we felt there would be no serious discussion on the question of Berlin, to which Prime Minister Kosygin answered that in a sense he agreed but that they had a plan for arriving at a solution of the Berlin question and wanted to discuss it with us.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. Is not the government of Canada unilaterally departing from the position taken by the NATO council jointly? I should like to ask the Prime Minister finally whether the Canadian government continues to support the position taken by the NATO Council last December when it insisted that a rejection of the so-called Brezhnev doctrine must be included in any meaningful renunciation of the use or threat of force, that for this to be meaningful Russia must reject the doctrine under which it claims the right to enter another country in order to save and preserve the communist regime.

Mr. Trudeau: That matter was not discussed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Is the Canadian influence so strong in Russia that we now refer to Kosygin as Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

EXTENSION OF FORTHCOMING MEETING TO DISCUSS ECONOMIC POLICIES—ADOPTION OF AGENDA

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the government giving consideration to the request of Premier Davis of Ontario that the talks at Victoria be continued for a fourth day so that economic policies can be discussed, and can the Prime Minister say whether he discussed this matter last evening with Premier Bourassa?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before leaving for the Soviet Union I wrote to the premiers of all the provinces putting to them what the agenda for the conference might be. I did put to them Prime Minister Davis' suggestion for additional time on the economic question. I have not as yet received replies from all provinces, and therefore I do not know what the final agenda will be.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it fair to take it that if the provinces want the fourth day the federal government is prepared to agree?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I said in my letter to the provinces that of course we would be prepared to stay for a fourth day and discuss that or any other matter of a non-constitutional nature which it was desirable to put on the agenda.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): In that event, can the Prime Minister tell us why the Secretary of State for External Affairs was able last week to tell my colleague, the hon. member for Spadina, and I believe the hon. member for Sainte-Marie, that the agenda for the conference had been fixed, in light of the fact that yesterday there was a conference with Premier Bourassa to set the agenda and now we are told that there are further openings on the agenda?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, the meeting with Mr. Bourassa was not to set the agenda. As to the answer of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I do not have his reply at hand but I do know that the traditional practice was followed of the federal government suggesting an agenda to the provinces and until the provinces agree to that agenda we do not make it public. In that sense the agenda is not final. Perhaps it may be final in our minds in the sense that we put it to the provinces, but we are always willing to make additions, subtractions or inversions of the order of the items according to the desires of the provinces. I repeat that we have not had answers from all the provinces yet.

POSITION OF PROVINCES ON FORMULA TO AMEND CONSTITUTION—POSSIBLE VETO FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question dealing with the agenda of the constitutional conference. In light of the fact that Members of Parliament represent all the Canadian people in the House of Commons and as the Prime Minister will be representing Canada federally at the conference, can he now tell us, as representatives of the Canadian people, whether any of the provincial premiers have at this date indicated that they will oppose the Turner veto formula to be laid before the conference which is about to meet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is meant by the Turner veto formula, but I have no indication from any province that they will make objections to the general amendment formula which was discussed last February.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the population shift that will take place in British Columbia, thus placing them in a preferred position particularly in relation to the veto formula, and in view of the language of the Prime Minister, has the Prime Minister considered that some of the Prairie provinces now and in the future may be without any say with reference to constitutional questions if that formula were agreed to and accepted at the conference?

Mr. Trudeau: This has to do with the negotiations which went on between the Minister of Justice and several of the provinces. I have made my position quite clear, and I think it is that of the federal government. We made it after the February conference. I understand that the western provinces themselves are prepared to give a kind of veto to British Columbia, and that is where the matter rests so far as we are concerned.

Mr. Woolliams: I have one more supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North on a further supplementary question and then recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Woolliams: Do I take it from the Prime Minister that Premier Thatcher of Saskatchewan has agreed to the formula in question about which I have been asking and to which the Prime Minister referred today which will be discussed at the conference?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, it is hardly fair to ask me to be the spokesman for Premier Thatcher or for any other premier. I can only report on the state of the discussions as they took place. Surely the hon. member is not asking me seriously to tell the House what Premier Thatcher's position will be at the June conference. I do say, however, that in February we had a conference at the end of which a communiqué was issued in which all the provinces indicated, shall we say, very strong interest in the adoption of an amending formula along those lines. The word "veto" first appeared in the question of the hon. member and not in my language.

INCLUSION ON AGENDA OF TRANSFER TO PROVINCES OF JURISDICTION OVER SOCIAL AND INCOME SECURITY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the subject of social security and income security being transferred to provincial jurisdiction, as suggested by the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs, is on the agenda or if any of the provinces have sought to put it on the agenda?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): To the second question, Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. Some provinces have sought to put it on the agenda. I might say that we agree with that suggestion, but I cannot go much further without saying what the agenda will be because I do not know what it will be until all the provinces have agreed to it.

[Translation]

QUEBEC—TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER SOCIAL SECURITY AS PREREQUISITE TO ACCEPTANCE OF FORMULA TO AMEND CONSTITUTION

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

I should like to ask him whether the return to Quebec jurisdiction of social security is a prerequisite for Quebec's acceptance of the new Turner amending formula.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not authorized to inform the House of Quebec's prequisites; I believe the Quebec authorities are in a position to do so themselves.

Mr. Asselin: I have another supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Prime Minister tell us whether, during his meeting yesterday evening with the premier of Quebec, an agreement was arrived at with regard to the transfer of jurisdiction in the field of social security.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, those conversations were private and confidential, and I do not intend to reveal Mr. Bourassa's position. If the hon. member is interested in mine I will surely make it known to him, but as far as those of the other governments are concerned, I refer the hon. member to those governments.

Mr. Asselin: I wish to ask a last supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

May I have the Prime Minister's opinion on this question?

POSITION OF PROVINCES ON FORMULA TO AMEND CONSTITUTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether some provinces have officially expressed their disagreement about this proposed amending formula, in short whether some provinces have informed him that they disagreed with him completely?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Here again, Mr. Speaker, I am requested to speak on behalf of the provinces, which is not altogether my role. I must say that a press release was published after the February conference; this press release is public, and if the hon. member reads it he will know the position of the provinces.

Mr. La Salle: I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I am not asking the Prime Minister to speak on behalf of the provinces, but rather to indicate whether he has received correspondence from the provinces stating that the latter rejected the amendment proposed at the last conference?

Mr. Trudeau: If my understanding is correct, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is repeating the same question.

The Minister of Justice has met with the attorneys general of the provinces at intervals since the month of February. Many views have been expressed.

As regards the position of the provinces, once again I would ask the hon. member to inquire from the provinces.

[English]

OPPORTUNITY TO DISCUSS FEDERAL GOVERNMENT GRAIN POLICIES AT FORTHCOMING MEETING

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister if he would consider, aside from the formal and regular agenda involving all the premiers, holding discussions with the premiers of the three Prairie provinces with a view to securing their views as to the adequacy and efficacy of the government's grain policies, particularly the proposed stabilization plan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have always agreed to discuss subjects which were acceptable to the provinces when we set up the agenda, but so far to my knowledge there has been no request to put this matter on the agenda. Therefore it becomes a hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker.

FORMULA TO AMEND CONSTITUTION—DIVISION OF POWERS—PRIORITY OF DISCUSSION AT FORTHCOMING MEETING

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the candlelight conference last night can the Prime Minister tell us if there has been any change in priorities between discussion of the amending formula and/or the division of powers that might ensue at the conference in Victoria?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would like to answer fairly, Mr. Speaker, but I do not understand the question.

Mr. Nowlan: I will omit the part about candlelight and thus shed light on the question. As a result of the discussions last night was there any request—I appreciate that the Prime Minister cannot speak for the provinces but he does speak for Canada—or any action on changing the priorities at the conference in Victoria to give precedence to discussion of the division of powers over discussion of the amending formula?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of ordering or arranging the items on the agenda, and although there has been some speculation in the press that this is what we were going to talk about I must say quite candidly that Premier Bourassa and I did not discuss in any way the order of the items on the agenda. It does not seem all that important.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

FIREMEN'S STRIKE, EDMONTON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT —ACTION TO SETTLE DISPUTE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday I asked a question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour in connection with the withdrawal of services by members of the firemen's union at Edmonton International Airport and the threatened spread of that labour dispute. In view of the fact that negotiations have been taking place with this particular group since last October, is the President of the Treasury Board able to enlighten the House on what is actually being done to solve this problem or are we going to see a full-fledged strike?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I cannot predict what will happen but I can say that the actions of employees in the firefighting branch at 11 airports across Canada are contrary to the terms of the collective agreement. Discussions are now under way with the President of the Public Service Alliance with a view to getting the men back to work immediately. In the meantime, supervisory personnel are carrying out firefighting assignments so that no peril to the public will arise as a consequence of this interruption of work.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is it the view of the minister that the action taken by the employees is any worse than the government's action in changing the conditions of employment during the currency of the contract, particularly so close to the time when they should be negotiating a new contract?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the intended change is designed to improve substantially the reaction time of firefighting units in meeting an emergency. As the hon. member pointed out, it has been under discussion for some six months with a view to implementation. The steps envisaged have been explored by the contracting parties and the date of implementation on an experimental basis in Edmonton was just a few days ago. The delay in implementation has been occasioned by the extent of the consultations and discussions. These are continuing at the present time to see whether the work stoppage can be brought to an end on the basis of reason rather than enforcement of the law.

FIREMEN'S STRIKE, EDMONTON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT —METHOD OF IMPLEMENTING WORK CHANGES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the President of the Treasury Board tell the House whether the work changes were unilaterally implemented by management without regard to the so-called Freedman report?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, implementation by the employer in this case was strictly in accordance with the terms of the collective agreement following some six months of consultation with the members of the bargaining unit.

* * *

THE CENSUS

EXAMINATION OF COMPLETED FORMS BY PRIVATE CITIZENS—ACTION TO PROTECT SECRECY AND PRIVACY

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Yesterday I directed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and he agreed to transmit it to the minister responsible for the census. I asked whether the minister would give consideration to a delay in the return of census forms and suspension of the provision for the imposition of penalties until such time as the privacy of the individual and the secrecy of the returns could be protected. In other words, will those people who object to sending their census forms to a locally appointed census committee for checking and study be able to mail their forms directly to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in Ottawa?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): This is a long question, Mr. Speaker, and the proper answer is even longer. If my hon. friend would like to look at the questions and answers I distributed last Friday he will find that question No. 7 covers his point. I might say that, if a person is not satisfied with the census representative who picks up the questionnaire, if it is someone who is a friend or a neighbour—

An hon. Member: It is just that they are all Liberals.

Mr. Pepin: —he can ask for a commissioner to come and pick it up. If he is not satisfied with the commissioner he can ask that the regional officer come and pick it up. However, confidentiality is assured in each case: the census takers are all under oath.

I notice that yesterday the hon. member mentioned that in 1961 things were done differently; indeed they were. In 1961 every census representative helped every single householder to write the answers to the questions, so in some ways the system of self-enumeration we have this year is much better from the point of view of confidentiality.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to get into the field of argument on this point, but I would ask the minister this question. If anyone objects to the present system, does he have the right and privilege of putting the census form in an envelope and sending it to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in Ottawa?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it is believed that that would not be a good system because, if the questionnaire is found not to be completed fully, it would have to be sent back to the person and returned again. Each questionnaire has to be checked locally. I repeat that if the person is not satisfied he can ask for the commissioner to come and pick it up. If he is not satisfied with the commissioner, he can ask for the regional officer of DBS to come and pick it up. That, I think, should assure satisfaction to everybody.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a last supplementary question. Are we to assume that the minister is in agreement with the policy of having local citizens check and tabulate the returns of other citizens of that area?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this is the way it is done in every part of the world. If we were to hire an additional 42,000 people on a permanent basis for DBS, hon. members on the other side of the House would complain violently.

An hon. Member: There are not that many Liberals left.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Considering that projects put forward by students under the Opportunities for Youth program have not yet been accepted because it seems that all available funds have been allotted, could the President of the Treasury Board tell us if the Secretary of State has put in to him a request for additional funds?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that the question can be put like that. The hon. member is asking the President of the Treasury Board if he has received a request from another minister. In these words, it seems to me that the question is not acceptable, but if the minister can find a way to reply to it briefly, the Chair sees no objection to it.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can say that the Secretary of State is presently considering this matter, that considerable amounts are allotted to this program and that, until now, there have not been any actual discussions by the government.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I realize that considerable amounts have been allotted to this program, but it seems that a great number of requests are still pending. My question is as follows: Is the government, through its President of the Treasury Board, prepared to consider a request that supplementary estimates be used so as to subsidize these numerous projects?

Mr. Speaker: It seems that the question of the hon. member is taking the form of a suggestion to the minister concerned, and he has to assume that it will be taken under consideration.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

GOLD MINING—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING OF MINISTER AND COMPANY OFFICIALS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since earlier this year we extended the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act for a period of two and a half years, with the idea of discussing with a number of the interested parties the success of that operation, has the minister anything to report on his recent meeting with the mining industry inasmuch as the Upper Canada mine has found it necessary to close?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the recent meeting with mining company officials was called for the purpose of exploring whether or not methods could be found to extend not only the life of the mines but of the communities by further exploration and geological studies in the areas of the gold mines. We hope to take the matter further by bringing in community leaders, trade union leaders, etc. to discuss social as well as economic plans for the communities later in the year. As yet I have nothing to report as to any definitive solutions pursuant to our agreement to extend the act for 2½ years and to try to draw up total economic plans for the communities.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister if his department is participating in a study that is now being contemplated by the Ontario government, involving those mining areas where there has been a great potential and probably still is, in the form of research into the availability of other mineral resources in the area?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain whether we are participating specifically with the province of Ontario in their program, but certainly the very purpose of the recent meeting that my officials had with the various companies was to try to determine a plan for finding other mining resources in the area of the gold mining communities.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EUROPEAN SECURITY CONFERENCE SUGGESTED IN SOVIET-CANADIAN COMMUNIQUÉ—AGREEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER WITHOUT DISCUSSION OF BREZHNEV DOCTRINE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the Prime Minister in connection with the joint Soviet-Canadian declaration regarding a European security conference. May I ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the declaration of the principle of non-aggression in the Canadian-Soviet declaration, which differed significantly from the NATO declaration in that it made no reference to the so-called Brezhnev doctrine, I am to understand that he agreed to this declaration without any discussion with the Soviet government as to whether it was precluding itself from invoking the so-called Brezhnev doctrine when it made a declaration assuring the territorial integrity and inviolability of frontiers? Did the Prime Minister agree to such a declaration differing from the NATO declaration without inquiring as to what it meant?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the Leader of the Opposition has asked a question and perhaps the Prime Minister might be recognized at this time for the purpose of replying to the question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not neard the question, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition was just going to ask it.

[Mr. Peters.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister heard the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I asked the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, whether he associated himself with this joint declaration of principle, differing from the NATO declaration, without inquiring whether the declaration he was associating himself with prohibited the use of the Brezhnev doctrine which justified the invasion of Czechoslovakia? Did the Prime Minister associate himself with that declaration without inquiring whether or not the Soviet Union was rejecting in future—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Ask the question.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, it is all very well for those people opposite to joke about something they do not understand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must seek the co-operation of the Leader of the Opposition. I believe that the Leader of the Opposition has asked a question and he may wish to ask a supplementary, but I would be inclined to recognize the Prime Minister now and then allow the Leader of the Opposition to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Greene: What did you say, Bob?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that the Prime Minister is refusing to answer my question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it would be simpler if the Chair were to recognize the Prime Minister for the purpose of answering the question and then recognize the Leader of the Opposition for the purpose of asking a supplementary.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the protocol I signed speaks for itself. There is no reference in there to the Brezhnev doctrine. I did not feel it would be a very sensible venture on my part to go into this matter. We signed a protocol for continued agreement. We signed a protocol which both sides hope will lead to a de-escalation of the arms race in Europe. I did not go into all the past doctrines and practices of the Soviet government and they did not ask Canada to justify its past ventures or, for that matter, for us to talk about the American role in Suez or in Guatemala. We did not discuss these subjects. We sought agreement and not disagreement.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my question related not to the protocol but to the declaration calling for a European conference. With regard to the future, did the Prime Minister associate himself with a declaration which significantly disagrees with the NATO declaration, the NATO declaration being deliberately designed to call for rejection by the Soviet Union of the so-called Brezhnev doctrine? With regard to the future, has the Prime Minister associated himself with the position of the Soviet Union which differs significantly in this respect from the position taken by NATO?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to indulge in semantics, but when I talked about the protocol I thought that was what the Leader of the Opposition was talking about. He is now talking about a declaration. I suspect he means the communiqué.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes.

Mr. Trudeau: There was a joint communiqué in which we included those subjects that we could agree should be included. Our position on Berlin was not put in there, nor was their position on Berlin because we do not agree on our respective positions with regard to Berlin. What we did agree on, we put in the communiqué. Among other things, we said we would meet again at regular intervals in order to try to iron out these differences which had been the subject of disagreement.

Mr. Stanfield: One further supplementary. May I ask why the Prime Minister of Canada associated himself with a declaration of rights and duties in this communiqué which significantly differs from that which had been agreed upon by Canada as a member of NATO?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the premise on which the question is based. We did not put everything in the communiqué which Canada believes. We did not put everything in the communiqué for which NATO stands. This was not the objective of the communiqué. It was not that the Russians should be asked to agree with what we stand for in Canada. It was that Canada and the Soviet Union try to find some common terms of agreement, which we did.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley for one supplementary. We have to give other members an opportunity. There are only eight minutes remaining in the question period.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My supplementary arises out of the Prime Minister's answer to the Leader of the Opposition. The Prime Minister mentioned equating and relating past endeavours of Russia with Canada. Can the Prime Minister inform the House and Canada what past endeavours of Canada even compare to some of the past endeavours of Russia, be it the Ukraine, Czechoslovakia or Hungary? It was the Prime Minister who used those words.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that this is debate. The point may have been reached when the Chair should recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order or a question of privilege, depending on how Your Honour wants to interpret it—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to ask a supplementary, but the answer of the Prime Minister led to a very responsible and constructive supplementary question to attempt to find out what is in the mind of the Prime Minister on something that is as important, which I admit it is, as the relations between Russia and Canada. I am all for better relations. I am not for some other things.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: My friend from the Ukraine—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is debate, of course. The hon. member will recognize it is the feeling of the Chair that, if there is to be debate during the question and answer period, we could continue with the first question every day and spend the 40 minutes on debate. I suggest that is not fair to other members who have questions to ask. There are now only seven minutes remaining in the question period. We spent the first 15 minutes on this point and we are now spending another 10 minutes on it. I fail to see where there is equity in relation to other members in doing this.

Mr. Nowlan: With due deference and all the respect I hold for the Chair, I would like Your Honour to declare and define for me—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not going to declare anything for the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The rules state very clearly that the question of supplementaries is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Chair. At one point the Chair must rule whether we should go on to another question. This discretion has to be exercised by the Chair. It is perhaps not always exercised with the degree of wisdom that it should be, but it is certainly exercised with good will. That is why I thought we might have reached the point where the Chair should recognize another member of the House.

Mr. Nowlan: On the same question of privilege—

Mr. Greene: Shame!

Mr. Nowlan: Now that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is commonly known as the minister of gas—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that the situation is perhaps deteriorating a bit. I invite the hon. member to give the Chair the opportunity to recognize another hon. member. I am not suggesting that the question asked by the hon. member is not important and relevant, but it is a question of discretion and judgment whether we should go on to another questioner. The hon. member, who is here every day, might have an opportunity to ask the same question tomorrow as he is asking today.

Mr. Nowlan: With all due deference and for clarification for future questions, I would like to know what part of my question to the Prime Minister was argumentative in seeking an explanation of his own answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member will read the Standing Orders he will know that he cannot ask that question. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

UKRAINIAN NATIONALISM—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S VIEWS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is for the Prime Minister. As there is serious confusion concerning the Prime Minister's views on civil liberties arising out of his remarks on Ukrainian nationalism, both on a radio program on the CBC on Sunday and in answering questions is the House yesterday, and particularly as one of those involved is a distinguished scholar who has been convicted of advocating nothing more than linguistic and cultural freedom, will the Prime Minister please clarify his position on this issue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think I made my position quite clear in answer to a question in the House yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope we are not resuming the debate we had on this point yesterday. The hon. member seems to be poised for a supplementary. I will allow him to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Broadbent: I am poised, indeed, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to be very serious and not indulge in any spurious kind of red baiting, to be quite frank, but the kind of equation that has been made by serious people on the subject—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that this is debate. I have recognized him with the suggestion that he might ask a supplementary.

Mr. Broadbent: Would it be correct to infer from the Prime Minister's comments over the CBC and in the House that he no longer distinguishes between the activities of Mr. René Levesque and the FLQ?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LENNOX ISLAND RESERVE—CONSTRUCTION OF LINK TO MAINLAND

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. For some time I have been asking the minister what decision will be taken with regard to building a causeway or bridge to the Lennox Island Indian reservation. The minister recently informed me that the Department of Public Works was considering a possible design and would reach a decision by the middle of May. In view of the present construction season and the need for an almost immediate start on the project, will the minister indicate when this important project will commence?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I cannot report to the House today, Mr. Speaker. I have not received the report yet.

* * *

INDUSTRY

TRANSFER OF PART OF ENGINE PRODUCTION BY FORD MOTOR COMPANY FROM WINDSOR TO CLEVELAND

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the indefinite lay-off of approximately 200 employees of the Windsor engine plant of the Ford Motor Company yesterday, with the prospect of further lay-offs in the next month, allegedly caused by a company decision to transfer a substantial part of its engine production from the engine plant in Windsor to that in Cleveland, what action does the minister propose to take?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have an answer to this but I cannot find it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: The gist of it is quite simple. Ford is not now selling in Canada in sufficient number the type of cars for which engines were being produced in the Windsor plant, so there is no transfer of work from Canada to the United States. There seems to be a change in the mood of the population with respect to the size of cars they wish to buy at this time.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister advise the House how Ford of Canada intends to maintain Canadian content in line with that of the base year if these engines are going to be made in another country?

Mr. Pepin: The Canadian content of Ford is very high at this time, in the neighbourhood of 100 per cent, Canadian value added.

ALLEGED MOVING OF PARTS BACK AND FORTH ACROSS BORDER BY AUTOMOBILE COMPANIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether, with reference to the question asked by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, the minister is aware that because of the auto pact it is quite common for companies to shift parts back and forth across the border, whether the whole automobile is assembled in the one country or the other.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): If the hon. member has some information he would like to give me on this subject, I would be delighted to study it.

* * *

POLLUTION

ACTION TO REMOVE THREAT OF OIL SPILL FROM GROUNDED TANKER, "TRANS PACIFIC"

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the proposed minister of the environment and the Minister of Transport I should like to direct my question to the acting minister since it is urgent. In view of the fact that the motor vessel Trans Pacific is aground off the southeast end of St. Pierre Island near Cap Noir lighthouse, has been aground since May 18, has on board 250 tons of bunker oil and is liable to break up at any time, can the government say what action it has taken to remove this threat to our shores?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

CONTINGENCY PLANS TO DEAL WITH OIL SPILLS FROM SHIPS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the acting minister might answer the question whether the government has any contingency plans to deal with an emergency such as that referred to by my colleague from South Western Nova, as recommended by the Arrow task force several months ago?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this question would come under the responsibility of the Minister of Transport and I shall be glad to draw it to his attention.

* * *

FISHERIES

SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF RIGHTS GRANTED TO UNITED STATES FISHING VESSELS ON PACIFIC COAST

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister concerning which I sent a short memorandum across the floor to him a while ago. In light of the continued violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the reciprocal fishing arrangements between Canada and the United States on the Pacific coast by the United States coast-guard in refusing to allow Canadian fishing vessels to seek harbour refuge, will the government consider the immediate suspension of present rights granted U.S. fishing vessels to use Canadian ports and to travel the inside passage?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the answer to this question. I will refer it to the Minister of Fisheries or the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

* * *

SHIPPING

ESTABLISHMENT OF GOVERNMENT SPONSORED MARINE INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I will direct to the right hon. Prime Minister. As a result of the Darling report on shipping, is the government now giving some consideration to the establishment and operation of a government sponsored marine insurance program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if any policy is to be announced it will be announced in the House.

* * *

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ADDITIONAL FUNDS PROVIDED IN 1971 COMPARED WITH 1970

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister or to some other responsible minister. In view of the fact that the federal student summer program package announced some time ago was to have a budget of $58 million, which was later raised to $68 million, to provide extra opportunities for youth, and in view of the fact that reports are coming in that certain programs in operation last year catering to the same general area have been reduced, can the minister say how much money additional to that budgeted last summer does this summer's program contemplate? In short, how much new money is in the program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not have the figures in my head but they should not be difficult to ascertain. This year there is $68 million in the program. Last summer I believe there was approximately $15 million to $20 million. The figures can be found in the estimates and the simple deduction can be made.

Senate and House of Commons Act

AIR TRANSPORT

ASSURANCE OF SAFETY OF PASSENGERS PENDING SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE INVOLVING FIREMEN

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Transport. Unfortunately he is not here today and neither is the acting minister so I will direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister who perhaps can distribute it among his ministers. Is the government making arrangements to ensure the safety of air passengers in Canada until such time as the dispute between the Department of Transport and the firefighters union is settled?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

• (3:00 p.m.)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MEMBERS' SESSIONAL AND EXPENSE ALLOWANCES, ETC.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-242, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and an act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Speaker: Might the Chair inquire who is the seconder of motion No. 1?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, after consultations with members on both sides of the House I find there is not sufficient bipartisan support to guarantee the motion's passage, so I would ask that it be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the hon. member is not moving the motion standing in his name.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West) moved:

That Bill C-242, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and an act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate, be amended by deleting clause 5 therefrom and by inserting instead thereof the following:

"5. This act shall come into force on the day fixed for the general election following the dissolution of the twenty-eighth Parliament".

He said: Mr. Speaker, before commencing my remarks I should like to thank my seconder, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), for his generous assistance. I am glad he sincerely supports what I am about to say.

Mr. Gilbert: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview is rising on a question of privilege.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, the only reason I seconded the motion was so the House could debate it. Certainly, I am not supporting it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I owe an apology to the hon. member for Broadview. He was standing at the moment the motion was put and I assumed that he wanted to second it. Perhaps he was simply moving from place to place and had not intended to be named as the seconder. If he wishes me to name another member I will do so with pleasure; perhaps this would be best. Mr. Rose, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I regret that my remarks are being accompanied at this point with such a great deal of hilarity because I am speaking, on a very serious matter. In introducing this amendment, which deals with the date on which this act shall come into force, I am really contemplating delaying the coming into effect of any increase in indemnity until after the date of the next general election. I fully appreciate that many members from distant ridings have in the past experienced, and are currently experiencing, some financial difficulty with the present indemnities and allowances. The financial objectives, of course, are recognized, especially the one that requires two residences, one in the riding of the member concerned and another in Ottawa. Similarly, the need for additional transportation expenses is both real and legitimate. The Beaupré report had some comments to make upon at least one of those two items, but the government has not seen fit to accept the recommendations of its own commission in this regard, and this I regret.

A greater expense burden is placed on those members who represent ridings which are geographically isolated, extremely widespread or scattered than the burden on those who represent relatively compact or nearby ridings such as those in Ottawa, Montreal and the Toronto area. The cost of an additional residence and an addition car represents a sizeable drain on the financial resources of any Member of Parliament, particularly those coming from the far east or the far west, or those representing rural or northern ridings.

I can appreciate the fact that those members who are in favour of an immediate pay raise might well be moved to ask why, in view of my remarks, I do not vote for the raise. My answer to this hypothetical and rhetorical question is that I have no philosophical objection to a pay raise for MP's or anybody else, but I do object to the size of the raise and its timing. I personally resent being put in the unacceptable position of voting myself a pay hike, and I will try to be more specific in that respect as I continue my remarks. I am also disappointed that the Beaupré report recommendations were not followed to assist those people representing ridings which require greater financial demands because of their remoteness as compared to compact ridings near the urban centres.

No one can really win by taking part in this debate on this issue because if you are in favour of the increase you are considered to be greedy and irresponsible, and if you vote against the raise you are considered to be a hypocrite who secretly wants the money but wants to gain the political advantage of opposing such an increase. I suggest that view is widely held not only by some people in this House but also by members of the general public.

I have no objection to voting for a reasonable raise for the position of a Member of Parliament or for extra expenses, facilities or the staff necessary for a member to perform his job more adequately. It is for this reason I put my amendment forward. This is precisely why I feel any increase in salary or expenses should not come into force immediately but following the next general election. Under those circumstances, I would then be voting for an increase in salary for the position rather than for myself. There is little guarantee that anyone who is a member of this Parliament will be sitting as a member of the next Parliament.

I am prepared to vote for the upgrading of the position of a Member of Parliament. This position should be recognized by a salary increase. I am in favour of that if it can be handled in a different manner. Perhaps it should be tied to some salary scale in the civil service, or some other formula. This is not the case now. One of the main reasons for putting forward this amendment is the fact that this is our last hope of modifying the government proposal put forward at the worst possible time. I resent being put in the position of having to deal with this issue in the manner in which I am forced to do. Having been here for some three years, I am satisfied that the duties and financial responsibilities of an MP demand a constant reappraisal of financial return. No one comes here to make money. Most members are rewarded less than they would receive from their private occupations outside this place. However, I do not believe that Parliament should be the private preserve of those people with sufficient substance or wealth so that the size of an MP's indemnity is irrelevant. Parliament can be, should be and is to a large extent a reflection of various groups of Canadian society. The financial rewards, then must be such that the average Joe can run for office and serve his time here without taking a financial shellacking, therefore, there is a real need for constant reappraisal of the indemnity and expenses of MP's.

While the Beaupré did not propose a formula, it at least indicated the direction in which we should travel. The House leader has attempted to get the various parties to come together on a formula but I am sorry his negotiations failed. I am in favour of a pay increase coming into force only after the next election. While my expenses are much greater than I anticipated before I was a member—I admit that I did not fully understand the nature of the job or the demands placed upon a member—I emphasize that that dilemma is not unique in respect of the office of MP. All groups and societies have experienced inflation and the consequent reduction of the value of our dollar in real terms. If there is anything unique about the position of an MP, it is that he is a member of one of the few groups in society which can vote itself a raise in pay.

Other groups, which perhaps need an increase urgently, must depend on others to vote for that increase. Most have to go through elaborate bargaining processes. We do not have to do this. The timing of this raise is particularly inopportune in view of the government's proposed two-year period of restraint in other segments of our society. Perhaps after the next general election the economic conditions of the country will be different. I have not much faith in that line of argument, but I put it forward to indicate that the general public is quite critical of this proposed increase. There is a vast number of adults and students who are unemployed. The contemplated change proposed for our financial status does not automatically assure a similar prospect for the thousands of unemployed people. They cannot improve their status as we can. Someone else must do it for them.

When I ran for office I was a big boy, and I knew what I was doing.

An hon. Member: What happened, did you shrink?

Mr. Rose: I am sure some members think that I have shrunk since but I consider the personal rewards of a session of Parliament to be part of what I view as a contractual obligation. No matter how it hurts, members should be content with the $12,000 and $6,000 for the life of this Parliament. I am certain I will not receive substantial agreement on this point. I believe MP's salaries should be related to those of others on fixed income, veterans and pensioners, subject to yearly revision on the basis of a formula. We should try to avoid this controversy which occurs when we allow our salaries to remain in status quo for a period of 10 years and then propose a substantial hike. The government House leader has tried to explain that this increase is not a substantial hike but represents only five per cent or six per cent per year to bring our salary level up to date. The general public considers it a substantial hike, however, as compared to the increases the average individual is receiving. They feel this increase is substantial, monstrous and irresponsible.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I note that the government has abandoned, however, any attempt to reflect the cost of living in the old age security pension. We abandoned this last fall. A great number of people regret that even the limited two per cent escalator has been abandoned which was designed to perhaps bring some protection into old age security at a time when the value of our dollar was shrinking because of inflation at the rate of approximately five per cent per year.

Next, I should like the position of Member of Parliament to be recognized for salary purposes, rather than the person. In this way, during the next election citizens would have an opportunity in the ridings to choose from between three of four members who they would like to see occupy the particular position. I believe this improvement in social justice would be accomplished by the passage of my amendment. The people would have an opportunity to decide which of three or four persons is the most worthy. Any political gain or disadvantage would then not accrue to anyone regardless of his vote today on this issue. I believe, by supporting my amendment, we would be recognizing the need for an increase but would be divorcing it from the individual member. This is what I would prefer.

Earlier, I expressed my regret that the government apparently had tossed aside the Beaupre Commission report. I know the government House leader said that the individual Member of Parliament could decide to do the things the Beaupre Commission recommended. I am not sure all the things the Beaupre Commission recommended could be accomplished by the individual member but certainly some could. Better research, office facilities and vouchered expenses reflecting riding needs have all been virtually ignored, so each member now is left with the decision, according to his own conscience, whether he wishes to use the money for the purposes suggested by the Beaupre Commission or pocket the increase himself.

I shall close by urging members to vote in favour of the amendment because it seems to me that only by supporting it can we at once recognize the need for a reasonable and responsible indemnity for Members of Parliament, with adjustments from time to time and also some better permanent legislation on this important matter.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, the remarks I am about to make may not contain too much logic. I fully confess that those who heard what I said previously will think I should speak in favour of the amendment advanced by—

An hon. Member: Speak a little louder.

Mr. Nowlan: If I had a microphone I would be heard. Otherwise, I will have to raise my voice.

An hon. Member: You have a dead mike.

Mr. Speaker: It is obvious that something is happening. Something would appear to be wrong with the hon. member's microphone. The problem now seems to have been resolved.

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to mention anything that happened during the question period, but I am glad the gremlins have not decided to inhibit this desk. What I started to say before my dulcet tones could be carried across the chamber was that I confess what I am about to say may not appear to be too logical, and I admit readily that this is so, to those who heard what I had to say when this bill first came before the House. Hon. members will think I should support the amendment advanced by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose). I do not. I do not question the sincerity of the hon. member. Obviously, we cannot do that and it is a good thing that we cannot do it. I would not do so in this case in any event, because the hon. member is a personal friend of mine.

When I spoke earlier I felt very seriously that a pay increase, separate from an allowance for expenses, was not justified for a number of reasons which I shall not repeat now. I also said that such a pay increase should come after the election. The hon. member's amendment, however, would put the whole problem over until after the election. There is not a member in any seat in the House of Commons, including the hon. member, who does not know that expenses, allowances and out-of-pocket money with which members are involved week in and week out needs readjustment, reassessment and revision. It is for that reason the hon. member's amendment goes too far.

I considered moving an amendment to eliminate that part of the bill referring to salary increases. I, personally, deliberated the question and felt, perhaps wrongly, that it was not up to me to put individual members on the spot in respect of such a sensitive issue which affects all of us. This is why, although in my earlier speech I said I would endeavour to see if an amendment could be developed, I confess I did nothing during the committee proceedings even if I could have. Also I do not have a formal amendment to move today which would enable members to pick and choose, thus putting them on the spot in respect of expenses and salary. In my opinion, members, no matter how maligned they are from all sources, be it from the editorials, cartoons and people who write letters to the editor, do need a review and adjustment of their expenses and allowances. That is why I give full credit to the President of the Privy Council, the government House leader, for attempting—and at one time I was most optimistic there would be some success in his attempt—to have included in this bill a provision for a regular review and revision of salaries so that members would not again be confronted with the invidious practice of having to speak for or against the amount that goes into their pocketbooks.

It makes me sad that the President of the Privy Council was not able to get an all-party agreement to amend the bill. It was thus a surprise to me that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) withdrew his amendment which, in effect, would go part way in providing for a permanent review porcedure which would obviate the necessity of members going through this moment of truth in making a decision which affects their pocketbooks. Such decisions can be misinterpreted or interpreted in any way one wishes. However, I am not supporting the amendment of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. I also cannot support this bill. The bill which the hon. member attempts to amend, I believe, is a bad bill at this time. My main objection is that I believe it destroys the credibility of this institution as it relates to any economic matters involving restraint, discipline or control. One does not have to be a soothsayer to know that Parliament, in the months ahead, will be confronted from time to time with economic problems and with the duty of preaching the philosophy of restraint, discipline and control.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Furthermore, I believe, and I could make a speech on this topic alone, that this bill at this time downgrades Parliament in the eyes of the public. I said previously that I would not accept any benefits from this bill. Well, I went too far, and I admit it. An hon. member from behind the curtains says he wants them now. I also want them. If the hon. member behind the curtain comes to his seat—and I know who he is but I will not challenge him—I will show him that I never spoke against the principle of a review and a substantial upward revision in expenses and allowances of members. I also admitted freely that members needed an increase. So, my position, over which the hon. member behind the curtain chuckles, is one that I am prepared to face because it looks as though I have done a flip flop. In reality, however, it is no different from the one I took when I made my speech previously. But in honour to my friend behind the curtain I not only revise what I said, I repent in part for what I said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: There is no doubt in my mind, as I said previously, that members need an increase in funds for living expenses. Many have attacked this bill in a most negative fashion and some have mouthed platitudes against the bill, but nevertheless admit they will accept the fruits of the subject of their attack in whatever form or fashion. Some say they will donate the amount of the increase to charity. I must say that I explored this possibility but found there are more than mechanical difficulties. There are monetary difficulties in being Santa Claus to so many deserving Canadians. Of those who say they would donate it to charity, some may be able to afford it. I admit I cannot. Some members say they will be Pied Pipers in their ridings, dispensing dollars for charitable projects. Let them go to it. I cannot and I will not be a part of such hypocrisy. Some members say they will set up offices in their riding. Fine; let them go ahead, but once they do they will be accepting the bounty of this bill. Let us not fool ourselves. If they accept the bounty of the bill, then those members should not rail so aggressively against it.

To put it simply, I believe honestly that my instincts are right, but my pocketbook cannot afford them. Therefore, I intend to take the increase, and thus I feel I cannot vote against the bill. But since I believe so fundamentally in what I said earlier about the bill and its negative character, I cannot support the bill. Therefore I find myself in a sterile, neuter and, in effect, negative position for the first time in my life as a member and so will deliberately abstain from voting on this bill. This is why I am making this short speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to miss the opportunity to state my views on the bill now under consideration, since I feel it is quite important. Some hon. members have been putting on a big show since the bill was introduced. I will not have anything to do with that and I would like to say immediately that I welcome this bill.

I think that a member has some heavy responsibilities. Some object to the bill claiming that its passage would be untimely. It was the same in 1968 when I was elected. It was too soon then to deal with an increase of our parliamentary salary. It was again too soon in 1969. However now it is too late because I imagine that an election will be called within a year and then, the passage of the bill will have to be delayed till 1972 or 1973.

Mr. Speaker, some hon. members are putting on a big show since they don't need an increase. They should, at least, have the decency to allow those who need it to use this additional income provided by this increase. On the other hand, there are those who extol virtue, but are not prepared to practise it. They should be honest enough to admit it.

Mr. Speaker, two election campaigns have just ended where odious comparisons have been made between the increase of 42 cents granted to some disabled people and veterans and this increase of $8,000 for Members of Parliament. Of course, this made for an interesting debate for the people to listen to. On the one hand, some hon. members blamed the government for introducing this bill and on the other, some considered this increase insufficient.

I believe the opposition parties blamed the government for that truly insufficient increase. There can be no comparison between that last one and the present proposal. Electionwise, that was interesting and perhaps profitable.

Through arousal of feelings of all kinds, there is again today an attempt to gain politically from this increase. It might be interesting to know who is against the increase and who is afraid, for instance, of seeing Parliament lose some of its prestige. As for myself, I am wondering how much a member of Parliament is worth.

I made a few studies recently and I calculated how many hours members of Parliament put in—because most of them work hard—and I arrived at the figure of $3.46 per hour. Of course, I must include the hours I spend at my office on weekends. I think that I am not the only one in this House to do so much overtime on weekends.

On several occasions, I had the opportunity to ask some ladies how much their husbands were earning. The answer was $4 or $5 an hour, in the case of professionals. I came to the conclusion that $3.46 was not exaggerated if we take into account the responsibilities inherent to the position of Member of Parliament.

I am convinced that several hon. members do know that the salary increase will be passed. I am one of those who look forward to it, and I do not hesitate in saying that this has become highly necessary in view of the responsibilities involved in my work. It is true that during the election campaign of 1968, I agreed to serve in this Parliament for the current salary. However, it was difficult for me, at that time, to know what amount of work this position implied. In the light of my experience so far, I quite agree now with the proposal of the government. I blame it for one thing only: that it waited until today to have this House vote on it!

I feel that my opinion reflects the views of the majority, and I would invite hon. members, if they want to be honest with the population as they would like to be, at least to undertake to give this raise to charities if they think they do not need it and that this legislation is unacceptable.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I would like to be able to afford handing over that increase to charitable organizations. But I am not, Mr. Speaker. I shall use it simply to meet my present obligations.

I shall dwell on the matter no longer, but I had to express my views. I wanted to ask those who are against that increase to make less of a political issue of it or commit themselves officially to handing it over to charitable institutions. I know that, in my riding, the St. Vincent of Paul Society would be only too happy if I were to hand over the $8,000 a year. And I would be happy to do so, but I cannot afford it. The majority of members, except for those who are wealthy, cannot do any thing else but follow suit; but those who make political hay of the issue and oppose the bill in order to be able to say during the election campaign that they were against it, even though they accepted it, will be judged by the people.

I wanted to make these few remarks to ask other members who could be tempted to go on electioneering on this subject to refrain from doing so in order that we could now proceed to the vote; I will thus be in a position to take advantage of this raise to provide better service to my constituents and a better response to all solicitations for an improved administration of my constituency and I will also be better armed to defend the interests of my people.

It is with this in mind that I will welcome the raise and I am grateful to the government for acknowledging that you need money to go into politics and that I am not especially fond of having to work under difficult conditions. It is difficult for most people to accept and to understand the proper role of MP's and the expenses it entails. It is hard to understand that we should experience difficulty in getting along with our salary, but should we have to explain in minute details that our job involves some obligations and in this regard, I will refer to the invitations we receive from the public.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I hope this raise will not be delayed any longer and our situation should not prevent us from understanding that other groups of citizens also need higher incomes; furthermore, I do not hesitate in supporting the groups of citizens who are now in need of salary increases. I am not aware of this and I agree with it.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a few minutes of the time of the House at this stage. As hon. members are aware, I opposed this bill at second reading. I intend to oppose it on third reading as well. The arguments for that position have already been made and it is not my purpose to repeat them now. However, I should like to say just a brief word in view of the fact that I was given the opportunity to second the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose).

I may say that I do not agree with everything my hon. friend said in his speech about the arrangements that should be made in the future, but I do agree completely with him that if this bill is going to be passed it would be better if its effective date were at the beginning of the next Parliament rather than its present arrangement which makes it retroactive to October, 1970. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to second the amendment. I shall vote for it, but when we come to the third reading it is still my position that Parliament should not pass such a measure at this time and I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The House divided on Motion No. 2 (Mr. Rose) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Barnett
Beaudoin
Benjamin
Burton
Dionne
Fortin
Gauthier
Gleave
Godin
Harding
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Laprise
Matte
Mazankowski
Rodrigue
Rondeau
Rose
Schumacher
Skoberg
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)
Winch—22.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aiken
Allmand
Anderson
Andras
Asselin
Badanai
Baldwin
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Bell
Benson
Bigg
Blouin
Borrie
Breau
Broadbent
Buchanan
Caccia
Cadieu
Cafik
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Cobbe
Code
Comeau
Corriveau
Côté (Richelieu)
Côté (Longueuil)
Crossman
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Deachman
Deakon
Downey
Dupras
Duquet
Émard
Éthier
Fairweather
Faulkner
Forest

Messrs:

Forget
Forrestall
Foster
Francis
Gendron
Gervais
Gibson
Gilbert
Gillespie
Givens
Goyer
Gray
Guay (St. Boniface)
Gundlock
Haidasz
Hales
Harkness
Hopkins
Howe
Hymmen
Isabelle
Jerome
Kaplan
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing (Vancouver South)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Langlois
Laniel
La Salle
Leblanc (Laurier)
Lefebvre
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Lind
Loiselle
Lundrigan
MacDonald (Egmont)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
MacLean
Macquarrie
McBride
McCleave
McCutcheon
McIlraith
McIntosh
McNulty
McQuaid
Mahoney
Major
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Marshall
Monteith
Munro
Murphy
Nesbitt
Noble
Nowlan
O'Connell
Orange
Osler
Otto
Paproski
Peddle
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peters
Prud'homme
Reid
Ricard
Richard
Ritchie
Roberts
Robinson
Rock
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Ryan
Scott
Skoreyko
Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Southam
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart (Marquette)
St. Pierre
Sullivan
Thomas (Moncton)
Thompson (Red Deer)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Valade
Walker
Watson
Weatherhead
Whicher
Woolliams—153.

• (3:50 p.m.)

During the taking of the vote:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is a little difficult with the noise, for the Clerk Assistant to take the roll call. Perhaps we might start again, beginning with the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau).

After the taking of the vote:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion negatived.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-242, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and An Act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At the next sitting of the House.

* * *

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CHANGE NAME AND PROVIDE RESIDENCES FOR LEADER OF OPPOSITION AND SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-241, to amend the Prime Minister's Residence Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if Your Honour would call government order No. 69. I believe there would be some representations to put Bill S-15 through all its stages in order to meet the convenience of hon. members.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On the same point of order, it is our view that there should be an amendment to the motion. This bill should be referred to committee of the whole, and not to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

* * *

INCOME TAX ACT

CONSOLIDATION IN PRINTED ROLL OF REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue) moved that Bill S-15, respecting the consolidation of the Income Tax Act in the printed Roll of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

Post Office Act

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING STAMP AGENTS' COMMISSION, LETTER MAIL PREPARATION ARRANGEMENTS, EXTRAORDINARY SERVICES, MEMBERS' MAIL, ETC.

The House resumed, from Monday, May 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté (Longueuil) that Bill C-240, to amend the Post Office Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Comeau (page 6220).

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to special order made on Monday, May 31, the House will now revert to the deferred division in relation to the proposed amendment to Bill C-240. The question is on the amendment.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Comeau) which was negativated on the following division:

• (4:10 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Aiken
Asselin
Baldwin
Barnett
Beaudoin
Bell
Benjamin
Bigg
Brewin
Broadbent
Burton
Cadieu
Code
Comeau
Crouse
Dionne
Downey
Fairweather
Fortin
Gilbert
Gleave
Godin
Hales
Harding
Harkness
Howe
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Lundrigan
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacLean
Macquarrie
McCleave
McCutcheon
McIntosh
McQuaid
Marshall
Matte
Mazankowski
Monteith
Murta
Nesbitt
Noble
Paproski
Peddle
Peters
Ricard
Ritchie
Rodrigue
Rondeau
Rose
Ryan
Schumacher
Scott
Skoberg
Skoreyko
Southam
Stewart (Marquette)
Thomas (Moncton)
Thompson (Red Deer)
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)
Valade
Winch
Woolliams—69.

NAYS

Messrs:

Allmand
Anderson
Andras
Badanai
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Benson
Blouin
Borrie
Breau
Buchanan
Caccia
Cafik
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Cobbe
Corriveau
Côté (Richelieu)
Côté (Longueuil)
Crossman
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Deachman
Deakon
Drury
Dupras
Duquet
Émard
Éthier
Faulkner
Forest Forget
Foster
Francis
Gendron
Gervais
Gibson
Gillespie
Givens
Goyer
Gray
Guay (St. Boniface)
Haidasz
Hopkins
Hymmen
Isabelle
Jerome
Kaplan
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing (Vancouver South)
Langlois
Laniel
Leblanc (Laurier)
Lefebvre
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Lind
Loiselle
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
McBride
McIlraith
McNulty
Mahoney
Major
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Munro
Murphy
Noël
O'Connell
Orange
Osler
Otto
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Prud'homme
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rock
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay)
St. Pierre
Sullivan
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Walker
Watson
Weatherhead
Whicher—105.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Is the House ready for the question on the main motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, for some time now the postal department has indicated that the only category of mail which constantly pays its own way is first class mail, yet we note that the full impact of this increase with fall on those who use first class mail. This increase is from six cents to seven cents per letter on July 1, and from seven cents to eight cents on January 1, 1972. Within the last three years we have seen an increase in the rates for first class mail from four cents to eight cents, including letters posted for delivery in local areas. Thus the increase on January 1 of next year will be 100 per cent.

The time has arrived to look at the source of the revenue of the postal department. We must make some concessions on behalf of those people who are paying for the greatly reduced and inferior postal service. Only five years ago when you mailed a letter in a community for delivery in that area it cost four cents. At that time such a letter would have been delivered the same day as a result of a twice-daily delivery service. After January 1 of this coming year, we will be required to place an eight cent stamp on a letter for delivery in a local community. We will have once-a-day delivery, so if the letter is not posted in time it will be delivered perhaps two days later, if you are lucky. Not only is there this built-in delay, but we find that the cost of the service and the efficiency have increased and decreased respectively. As a result of the new service, it will take four or five days to deliver a letter within a community.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I have heard stories, as I am sure other hon. members have, about what happens when someone is at the end of a postal walk. When there are letters that have not been delivered at the end of a postal walk they are taken back and put in the box again. If there should be too much mail again on the second day, the same mail might be taken back a second time. If a person lives close to the end of a postal walk or at a point where the postal employee might be at the time he goes home or leaves for lunch, that person might wait from Monday until Wednesday to have his mail delivered. The minister in charge of the post office should be prepared to say why he believes first class mail should carry the major share of the cost of the mail service in this country. He has said he will have mail delivered across Canada at a much accelerated rate. He made some suggestions, but he has not been able to produce. There are many instances in which mail service in Canada is not as fast today as it was.

There is no question but that in Northern Ontario 20 years ago mail was delivered at least one or two days sooner, on an average, than it is now. Occasionally, a letter mailed in Toronto is received in Northern Ontario the next morning, but this must be the result of an accident in which the letter got mixed up in some way and managed to get there. There was a time when if you mailed a letter before four o'clock in the afternoon in Toronto, it would be placed in the box in New Liskeard, 400 miles away, between four o'clock and eight o'clock in the morning. This variation in time was caused by the variation in the time of arrival of the train; it was never on time. However, that letter was always there the next day. All business in northern Ontario was based on a one-day delivery service in that area. Better than that, if you posted a letter in the postal box at any railway station or handed it to the man on the train as it went by, the letter would be dropped off at any delivery point along that railway line. Now, if a letter is put in the mail box at the station it will probably be taken back to the post office because it will go out on a bus.

Obviously, mail cannot be sorted en route in a bus. That was tried in the United States. They used a gyro car which is a truck with the body suspended to compensate for the movement. They found they could not keep people at that type of work. It has been impossible to have sorting en route. This means that in northern Ontario the mail has to be sent to a distributing point. The mail goes to the post office and is handled through the sorting system. It is then sent to a distribution point for delivery. If there is insufficient time to do the sorting at the first distribution point, it is put back into the box and sent to another distribution point at the other end of the line. I understand this is how the mail is handled now that road transportation is used. So, I sympathize with the minister in charge of the post office.

There does not seem to be any way, because of the manner in which the mail is presently handled, to have decent service. If the service is reduced, then the cost also, to some extent, must be reduced because there no longer is sorting in cars on the railways. The people who rode in those cars year after year are no longer employed in that position. The mail at a distribution point is handled through the normal sorting procedure and, therefore, there probably is a reduction in the cost of handling that mail.

I presume the reason the government dropped the mail contract with the Ontario Northland Railway was that it was very expensive. So, expenses are being reduced. To my knowledge no one in this House who represents a riding, urban or rural, would say that we are getting better service now than we did 20 years ago. Twenty years ago letters were delivered for 3 cents. Now, on January 1, the rate is to be 8 cents. The former Postmaster General said he would do something about this problem. He sure did. He got things into such a state that the employees were walking up and down in front of the Parliament buildings almost every day a year after they had a disagreement with the Post Office Department. The minister has not been able to tell them that the government has nothing to say to them because every few months or so another suggestion is made to these employees. They are given another offer which they can negotiate. Nothing has been solved. The result of all the negotiations has been dissatisfaction and disillusionment with the Post Office Department. This has created very low morale and a very poor relationship between the public and the postal employees. It has resulted in the public being dissatisfied with the type of service they receive.

If the rate for first class mail is to be raised from 6 cents to 7 cents and then increased to eight cents by January, why is the minister not in a position to say we are now able to have mail delivered twice a day. Why is he not able to say that the problem of the delay in many areas has been solved, and that the postal service will meet the standard that we established 20 years ago. I am not referring to a standard that we should have in the future but rather the standard we had 20 years ago. A large proportion of the cost of the postal department is being paid by the revenue from first class mail. I suggest we should be told if we are receiving some other benefits for the expenditure we are making.

The minister has not indicated that there will be any relief for the social, charitable, religious, labour and trade magazines. These magazines were very important to the economy of our nation. Most of the farmers we talk to today still lament the fact that most of the farm publications have gone out of business as a result of the attitude of this government toward postal rates. The government has not done a damn thing about such magazines as Time and Reader's Digest. We understand that the same subsidization is being paid by the post office to Time and Reader's Digest that was originally negotiated. Neither Reader's Digest nor Time magazine, for all their comments, have done anything but provide Canadians with a lower cost propaganda machine, and most of the reports that we see in those magazines that are published in Canada have a slant in line with that in the parent magazine. But if the general public, the people who drop a letter in the mail box, are going to subsidize the reading material of this nation, then I suggest they could use their money to better advantage by subsidizing those magazines that were dropped as well as some of the trade publications that were beneficial to large segments of our population.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Much of the development in the agricultural field was brought to the attention of the farmers and of the entrepreneurs in the agricultural sphere by the articles that appeared in those magazines. I never found many people in Canada who were interested in providing such subsidization as we are now giving to Reader's Digest and Time magazine, but I have found many Canadians who would have preferred the government to subsidize magazines for the rural communities. They were one of the major instruments for social development in that segment of the population and helped to develop our rural way of life.

I did mention the fact that we have not done much to improve the relationship of the employees with the Post Office. Morale among post office employees in my area has had its ups and downs. In the last year or two, I have received numerous complaints about employees of the post office and about the fact that they do not seem to be very interested in serving the customer. They have a certain job to do at a certain time and that is all they care about. Customers can line up and wait or do whatever they want. The relationship of the employees to their customers is not as friendly as it used to be three or four years ago when people dropped into the post office for a kind of social gathering. They met there in the morning to exchange the news of the day. The rapport at present is not nearly as good as it used to be several years ago.

Why is there no indication in the bill of the view of the government as to whether it wants the Post Office Department to stay as it is or to become a Crown corporation? Are we going to get out of this never-never land of the Communications Department which is more interested in space vehicles, satellites and new types of communication rather than in the Post Office? Is any member of the government interested in the simple business of writing a letter, putting a stamp on it and mailing it to someone in the expectation of eventually receiving a reply to it? Are we to anticipate the establishment of a separate free enterprise organizations which would handle our mail? This possibility is not so remote any longer.

I understand that in the city of Toronto, during the time of the postal strike, hundreds of agencies were set up to deliver mail around the city by car. It was much easier to pay such a company for the service of distributing messages to customers around the city than it was to drop mail in the mailbox. If that was the case when the rate was at six cents a letter, such agencies will find it easier to obtain mail delivery contracts when the Post Office charges eight cents a letter. The entrepreneurs will take an interest in this, and I am sure many arrangements will be made which will have the pony express delivering mail around the major cities rather than the postal employees. All this depends on whether or not the Post Office can operate at eight cents a letter, and it is my guess that unless we bring the employees of the Post Office into the picture they will continue to be confused about the intention of the government with regard to continuing the Post Office as a government department or making it a Crown corporation.

We will have to wait and see how the Post Office department manages on the increased rates that are proposed and how it will manage the labour disputes. They will find that there are many other ways of handling communications within a city as well as from city to city. If we raise the rate to eight cents, we will not penalize a very large sector of the population. You will find that it is the business people who will suffer. Let me give you a small example. An American wrote a letter to a Canadian tourist operator in my area. He wrote that letter fairly early in the year asking for reservations on a certain date. It took 21 days for the operator to receive the letter. He then wrote back confirming the reservation, and that letter took eight days before it got back to the American. The tourist operator sent me the envelope. The destination of the letter was only northern Ohio. I sent this envelope to the Post Office asking them what happened. They are still looking, I presume, because I never had a reply. I am not sure that they can tell what happened because this seems to be a pattern which occurs frequently. Sometimes letters are delivered within a day and a half or two days, but this really shows that the whole system is wrong; it is not reliable. The tourist agent told me that he loses one out of five bookings because he depends totally on the postal service; he cannot use telephone communication. I am sure this is true of a number of other people who depend totally on the postal service.

It seems to me that before we raise our first class mail rates we, as Members of Parliament, should be assured that an over-all plan is being developed which will improve the mail service. When I get a bill from a company, I do not care how long it takes the bill to reach me. If I put a cheque in the envelope and send it back, I do not care if it takes a month for that cheque to reach its destination. This does not worry me, but it may worry the company that is billing me. They may want that money now. This must affect many companies because many people have credit cards. If it takes a considerable period of time for the bills to reach the company's customers, the company has much money outstanding.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I suggest that we should look at the problems of our mail service, and assess what we can do about them. We should estimate what it will cost to do something about those problems. We should be in a position to look at some of the ways in which the problems can be solved. We then might find ourselves justified in raising the price of stamps to eight cents on the guarantee that mail is delivered within a reasonable period of time and, if it is not, that it be returned to the Post Office Department which would refund the cost of the stamp. For such a guarantee, I am sure many people would be willing to pay a reasonable postal rate.

If the rate on letters delivered locally is raised from 4 cents to 8 cents next January, all within a period of less than three years, it will entail an abnormally high expenditure for the ordinary public, especially when one considers that they will not get anything like the service that they previously got for 4 cents. In some areas people who live on rural delivery routes have advantages over people living on other routes. If you live on a rural delivery route that does not have too many customers, the likelihood is that you will get mail delivery about three times a week. But if you live on a route which has many more customers you will get mail delivery six times a week. In fact so far as mail delivery is concerned, you may do better living on a rural delivery route than living in a city. I suggest that people living on rural delivery routes should be treated equally. All postal subscribers should get equally good service, no matter where they live.

I hope the minister is able to indicate that the dropping of a large number of small community post offices across Canada has come to an end. I agree that the question of economy was involved. Many of the small post offices were costing much more than they were worth, and it was probably time to examine the services provided by them in relation to the cost. But I suggest that all this had a great adverse effect on many communities. I do not know how many hon. members share my experience, Mr. Speaker, in that the place where I was born no longer exists. It may not have been much of a place to crow about, and my being born there did not add much to it, but it had a sense of community. It existed by virtue of the services provided by the railroad and the post office. These services have now been taken away from it. People still live there but they find it difficult to maintain any type of identity as a community. I am sure my colleagues from western Canada could name hundreds of communities that are in a similar position. The net result may have been a savings for the Postal Department, and in my opinion the amount of savings should have been sufficient to permit normal mail delivery, at the six cent rate for first class mail, to be continued to those communities.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Postmaster General will clarify for us the direction in which the department is heading. The country would like to know what is being done. Recently a departmental inspector came into my area, into the town of New Liskeard. It has been designated a bilingual area by the federal government. The inspector came in there, and what did he do? He doesn't look at the hole in the floor of the post office. People have been tripping on that hole. The hole has gone through some kind of plastic coating, and through the plywood beneath that to the original hardwood floor. But the inspector doesn't do anything about that. He says, "We are just renting the building from Public Works; it is the fault of Public Works." Mr. Speaker, it seems it doesn't matter if people fall and break their necks. One lady did fall and was highly embarrassed. When one of the local councillors said she should sue the post office she replied that she was only concerned to get out of the building because of her embarrassment. The inspector says, "You're supposed to have a bilingual notice on the door to show where the postmaster can be found." Mr. Speaker, anybody who ever wanted to see the postmaster had no difficulty finding him. But the inspector insists, and says the French should be at the top of the notice. Maybe that is important, Mr. Speaker. It will be important to that inspector because he will be in lots of trouble. Although it may be a bilingual town the people are not swayed to the extent that they want a major war over Français au verso Anglais, or Anglais au verso Français. They just want the floor fixed.

I know that the minister is very familiar with the Postal Department. He has a family connection with it. He is sympathetic to the problems of the workers. He has not got his head in the clouds as the former minister in charge of it had. I am sure he has some good suggestions to make. This is a department that must provide service to the public. As long as it remains in the public domain the minister owes us an explanation of his intentions, and of what this large increase in rates will mean to the service provided for the public.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, and notices of motions.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before calling the items to which I have just referred it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott)—Housing—Decision respecting Rochdale College, Toronto; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton)—Youth—Capital assistance for provision of youth hostel facilities.

Canada Labour (Standards) Code

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CANADA LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE NINTH GENERAL HOLIDAY WITH PAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved that Bill C-42, to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code (Provision for a Ninth General Holiday with Pay) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

• (5:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make a desirable amendment to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and, in particular, to amend that part of it which provides for what are legally described as general holidays. The more common expression is "statutory" holidays. As it now stands, the code provides for eight of these holidays in the year and the proposal in this bill is to add one to the list. The days now provided are New Year's day, Good Friday, Victoria day, July 1, Labour day, Thanksgiving day, Remembrance day and Christmas day.

Mr. Peters: No St. Jean Baptiste day?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend wonders where St. Jean Baptiste day is. Well, it is on June 24 but there is no provision for a holiday in this statute. He is probably recalling the fact that it is on the list of holidays taken by this House of Commons. However, thanks to the helpful interruption of my colleague, I shall point out at this juncture that there is a section in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code under which certain adjustments can be made and some other holiday substituted for one of those set out in the code. It is under the provisions of that section, namely section 28, that in some parts of Canada St. Jean Baptiste day is celebrated rather than one of the holidays listed in the statute.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, that digression is not as much of a digression as it might seem to be because while my bill seeks to extend the list of statutory or general holidays to nine, it keeps alive the provisions of section 28 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. This means that in any part or region of the country where it was desirable to do so, any holiday more appropriate to a particular area could be substituted for one of the holidays listed. That is all by way of detail.

The purpose of this bill is simple and straightforward. It is a very minimal bill in terms of what it seeks; it asks for just one more general or statutory holiday in the year so that workers who come under federal labour provisions would get nine days in the year instead of eight. The bill specifies that this ninth day would be the first Monday in the month of August. That is a day which is celebrated in many areas of Canada under the title "Civic Holiday" or sometimes it is known as the "August Holiday". It is a little difficult to put a name to it that will meet with general understanding across the country and for that reason in my bill I simply refer to it as the first Monday in the month of August. That is also the reason for the title of my bill which simply asks to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code in order to provide a ninth holiday with pay.

There is before Parliament at the present time, Mr. Speaker, a bill to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. This bill stands in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey). Unfortunately, that bill does not deal with this subject and does not touch on the question of the number of general holidays in a year. I would hope that even if this House is not prepared this afternoon to pass this bill on second reading, that it would see it as appropriate to refer at least the subject matter of the bill to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in the hope that the committee might add this holiday to the list.

Sir, it is becoming more and more recognized that what we used to regard as adequate in terms of vacations with pay and holidays is no longer the case. There is abundant argument for more time off, for more leisure for our people; there is abundant argument for not only shorter work weeks and more holidays during the working period but for a shorter working life, for early retirement and so on. In the context of the realization that we should be moving in that direction, both to do something about the problem of unemployment and to establish the fact that life is not only for work, my request is a very simple one: it calls for just one more holiday per year. There are already nine holidays specified in the Standing Order of this House for the House of Commons so it seems to me that we should not do any less than that for the workers who come under federal labour jurisdiction.

May I again make the point, and it seems we have to make it every time federal labour law is discussed, that we are not dealing with just the public service. When some newspaper people learn that we have been debating a law regarding workers who come under federal labour jurisdiction they think that means federal public servants. That is not the case. When we speak of federal labour law, we refer to those people who, under the British North America Act, come under federal jurisdiction, such as those who work for the railways, shipping, airlines, in banking and a number of other industries that are clearly set out. Surely, we ought to take the step of providing nine general holidays in the year for these people.

Let it be clear that a part of this package, and this is also set out in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, is that these holidays are to be with pay. There is no point in having holidays without pay. Too many Canadians are experiencing that right now. The provision already in the code with regard to extra pay for people who must work on general holidays would still stand with the amendment that is suggested in this bill.

As I present this bill to the House, Mr. Speaker, it will be pointed out that this is not the first time it has been presented. As a matter of fact, for a good many years now I have been presenting these bills; in the first place o try to get a Canada Labour (Standards) Code and now to amend it. I hope the House is in the mood to say,

"This is so right, this is so well deserved, this is so little, the least we can do this afternoon is agree to it."

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in this debate this afternoon on Bill C-42, an act to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code by the provision of a ninth general holiday with pay.

As the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, I am quite interested and concerned in this general field. It is of more particular interest at the present time because, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, our committee has before it Bill C-228, another bill to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code which was proposed by the government earlier this year. We have commenced hearings on Bill C-228 and in the next few days will be receiving written and oral submissions from a number of main Canadian union and employer associations across the country, including the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, etc.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Government Bill C-228 recommends a number of significant amendments to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, including the increasing of the minimum wage, initiating 17 weeks maternity leave, strengthened provisions for equal pay for equal work, severance pay and varying lengths of notice with respect to mass lay-offs. However, as the hon. member who just sat down said, Bill C-228 does not make any amendment with respect to the definition of "general holiday" in paragraph F of Section II of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code which now calls for eight general holidays; these are New Year's day, Good Friday, Victoria day, Dominion day, Labour day, Thanksgiving day, Remembrance day and Christmas day and includes any day substituted for any such holiday pursuant to Section 28 of the Code. Bill C-42, which is being debated here this afternoon, would provide for a ninth general holiday under this definition by adding the first Monday in August.

I note that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has introduced similar bills on at least three occasions, according to my information; in April and May, 1967, and September, 1969, but none have been given second reading. When the Canada Labour (Standards) Code first came into effect July 1, 1965, the provision for eight general holidays with pay was far in advance of the number obtained by collective bargaining in federal industries at the time and required a substantial adjustment by the employers under federal jurisdiction.

The proposal for nine holidays is still far in advance of the practice in industry as a whole, although it is apparent that there has been an increase in the number of employees receiving more than eight days holidays since 1965. According to the survey of working conditions conducted by the Canada Department of Labour, only 38 per cent of non-office workers in federal industries received nine holidays or more in 1968. For office workers, the figure is 75 per cent. This compares with 17 per cent of non-office workers and 51 per cent of office workers in 1965. In industry as a whole, 56 per cent of non-office workers and 75 per cent of office workers had nine holidays or more in 1968. This compares with 40 per cent for non-office workers and 59 per cent for office workers in 1965.

Only three provinces, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Alberta, have legislation similar in principle to the federal holiday provisions. Three provinces, Manitoba, Ontario and Nova Scotia, have laid down requirements regarding pay for work done on public holidays. Saskatchewan and British Columbia provide for eight public holidays and Alberta provides for five. Both Manitoba and Ontario require payment of overtime pay for work done on seven public holidays. The Nova Scotia provisions, which are contained in minimum wage orders, require payment of overtime for work on public holidays, but do not stipulate the number of holidays covered. In the United States, the matter of paid general holidays has been left to collective bargaining. The Code provides also that, under certain conditions, an alternative holiday may be substituted for any of the eight holidays specified.

Should a holiday occur on a day on which an employee does not normally work, he must be granted a day off with pay in lieu of the holiday, either at a time convenient to him and his employer or by the addition of a day to his annual vacation. If Christmas, New Year's day or Dominion day falls on a Saturday or Sunday that is a non-working day for an employee, he must be given a holiday with pay on the working day immediately before or after the general holiday. These provisions regarding alternative days off do not apply, however, to employees covered by a collective agreement that entitles them to at least eight paid holidays a year.

The Code lays down the general principle that an employee in a federal undertaking who does not work on a holiday is entitled to his regular pay for the day. If he is paid by the week or month, his wages must not be reduced by reason of his not working on a holiday. If he is paid on any other basis, he must receive the equivalent of a normal day's pay. An employee in a federal undertaking who is required to work on a general holiday, other than one employed in a "continuous operation", is entitled to his regular wages for the day and, in addition, to time and one-half his regular rate for all time worked. In effect, he is paid two and one-half times his usual rate.

An employee employed in a "continuous operation", defined to include employment concerned with the operation of trains, planes, ships, trucks and other vehicles, telephone, radio, television, and telegraph services, or any other service normally carried on without regard to Sundays or holidays, who is required to work on a holiday either must be paid his regular wages for the day, plus time and one-half his regular rate for all time worked or, in addition to his regular pay for the day, must be granted a holiday with pay at some other time, which can be either a day added to his annual vacation or another day convenient to him and his employer.

There are some situations in which an employee is not entitled to holiday pay. An employee is not entitled to pay for a general holiday that occurs in his first 30 days of employment with an employer, but if he is required to work on a holiday he must be paid time and one-half his regular rate. If he is employed in a continuous operation, he may be paid at his regular rate for work done on a holiday. A further exception is that an employee is not entitled to pay for a general holiday on which he does not work if he is not entitled to wages for at least 15 days during the 30 calendar days immediately preceding the holiday. An employee in a continuous operation is not entitled to pay for a general holiday if he did not report for work in response to a call from the employer.

Special regulations for longshoremen provide that a longshoreman employed by an employer who is not a member of a "Multi-employer unit" is entitled to holiday pay if he is entitled to wages for at least 15 days or 120 hours in the 30 calendar days immediately preceding a general holiday. Pay for the holiday may not be less than eight times the employee's basic hourly wage rate. A longshoreman employed by an employer who is not a member of a "multi-employer unit" must be paid, on each payday, in lieu of general holidays, an amount equal to 3 per cent of his basic wage rate multiplied by the number of hours he has worked for the employer in the pay period. An employee who is required to work on a general holiday is to be paid at not less than one and one-half times his basic rate of wages for the time worked by him on that day.

From the figures I quoted earlier of 38 per cent of non-office workers in federal industries and 75 per cent of office workers in federal industries receiving nine holidays or more in 1968 and, in industry as a whole, with 56 per cent of non-office workers and 75 per cent of office workers receiving nine holidays or more, I would think that the time is fast approaching for the federal government to further amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code to add at least one more, a ninth holiday. I believe, also, that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should be congratulated for keeping this matter before the House of Commons in recent years. While he can often be criticized for private bills which propose considerable additional benefits, either in money or otherwise, out of all relationship to the practical realities of the day, I believe that in this case he is coming pretty close to a realistic mark in advocating the amendment of the Code to include a ninth general holiday for industries under federal jurisdiction.

I know that in Ontario, and I believe in many other parts of the country, a large proportion of employees, including most office employees, have obtained the first Monday of August as a holiday, known as Civic Holiday, for a number of years. The first Monday in August is particularly welcome as a holiday because it gives another long summer weekend in between the Dominion day, July 1 holiday, and the Labour day holiday on the first Monday of September. The workers, particularly in our large urban areas in southern Canada, look forward to a long holiday weekend about the first of August to get away from the often very oppressive heat in the cities to the lakes and resorts districts. Accordingly, since in 1968 by the aforementioned figures considerably more than half the employees in general had this first Monday in August as a holiday, I would certainly think that it is about time that we amended the Canada Labour (Standards) Code to include this as a ninth general holiday as soon as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He's back at the old stand.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I read with interest the bill presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He indicated that I am back at the old stand. I think he made that somewhat derogatory remark because I participate in the debates in private members' hour. I can assure him that this is a compliment to him. I have heard him say on more than one occasion that this is a good opportunity to participate in the cut and thrust of a debate. The hon. member is well known for his talent and ability in the debating field. One appreciates the opportunity to match wits, talent and ability with a man of such long experience in this chamber.

The hon. member indicated that, in effect, this amendment applies to those who come under federal jurisdiction. He then went on to point out that this is not limited to federal civil servants. When this kind of suggestion is put forward, it has the effect of acting as a guideline for other jurisdictions. I sometimes wonder whether creating this kind of false holiday makes the small businessman wince a bit. It is my guess that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has never been a small businessman and, therefore, has not been faced with the difficulties of meeting these particular paid holidays. The hon. member would be right to correct me and say that this particular piece of legislation does not apply to small businessmen, but I suggest it is the thin edge of the wedge that would be used by workers employed by small businessmen to bring about the number of holidays that he is recommending.

If I might digress for a moment, the hon. member referred to the fact that we in this chamber have nine or 10 holidays. Frankly, that is not a fair comparison. Many of the holidays provided find the members back in the ridings participating as Members of Parliament in one function or another. In many cases, they can hardly be called holidays. I think that most members of this chamber within appropriate travelling distance are able to go back to their ridings and participate in Remembrance Day services. Although it is a holiday from the House, it is not a holiday as far as the members are concerned. They participate in the services, albeit this is something they like to do. However, it can hardly be described as a holiday.

I believe in having as much leisure time as possible. However, as I have indicated on more than one occasion, I was raised in a mining community where fathers and older brothers worked a seven day week. We accepted this because it was automatic for dad to go to work every day. We were happy that he was able to be home on Christmas day. In many instances, particularly in the mining communities in northern Ontario, Christmas was the one and only day that was recognized as a holiday. There comes a time when we have to look at what I call false holidays, when we are creating holidays for the sake of leisure time. We must not go too far and create a detrimental effect by lowering productivity, thus making it possible for the employed to become unemployed because the small businessmen cannot cope with all these holidays. We must bear in mind that the small businessmen would have to hire others to fill the gaps on more than one occasion.

I take exception to the timing of this particular holiday, if the bill is carried. It has been suggested that the holiday be on the first Monday in August. The hon. member who spoke before me and the mover of this bill have indicated that the first Monday of August would be the appropriate time. I do not believe this proposal takes into consideration what we in Canada all know, namely the severe winters. If we are going to have another holiday rather than Victoria day. It is time we started the mood of vacation and holiday. Even though an individual has to work in July and August, there is a certain relaxed atmosphere, something that is not evident in the months of February and March, toward the end of a long winter. If the holiday proposed in this bill is adopted, I will move an amendment that some consideration be given having it sometime in February.

There is another aspect of holidays which disturbs me. This particular holiday has not been given a name. I notice that July 1 has not been given a name. The May 24 holiday is sometimes referred to as the 24th of May holiday rather than Victoria day. It is time we started looking at these general holidays with a view to giving them names and honouring different ideas and themes. I would like to see the name of Victoria day changed. It could be given a name that would pay respect to the men who won the liberty that we all enjoy and appreciate so much today, namely the veterans of this country. I do not think that members of the army, navy or air force would object if this were called the Battle of Vimy Ridge day or Dieppe day. I would like to see these men recognized so that each year the young people would ask why we have a Vimy Ridge or Dieppe day. We could stress the contribution that was made by our Canadian fighting men during those days. It would have much more significance and would operate as a unifying force, much more so than using a name such as Victoria day.

There is a great deal of debate at the present time about July 1. It is called many things. Here it is called Dominion day. This would be a glorious opportunity to honour the men who gave us the freedom and opportunity to work so that we can appreciate the eight, nine, 10 or more holidays which we get annually. To avoid any interservice jealousy, I would suggest a name such as veterans day.

Remembrance day has special significance. It is my hope that we will never change the idea of the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month. That has a particular significance. It is not the kind of day where we should try to accommodate the working man in order that he will have a long weekend. I hope Remembrance day will always be on the same day as at present. In this way, when people ask why we have a holiday in the middle of the week and have two minutes silence at eleven o'clock on November 11, we will continue to be able to give an answer to the young people who have not known a time of war and hopefully never will.

It is not often that I agree with a gentleman we see over television from time to time, namely Gordon Sinclair. I hope that one day we will have a holiday that will be called flag day. I am not so naïve as to think that after the bitter debate that surrounded the flag, the partisan politics brought to play and the viciousness of the attack and counterattack that this is apt to happen overnight. There are probably still many memories in this House of that particular debate. There are still some feelings against the flag. However, the day will come when we will all be proud of the flag. When that time comes, I hope we will have a flag day.

I was pleased to see the Kinsmen Club of Stoney Creek have a project to sponsor the idea of a flag day. They, as did Gordon Sinclair, suggested that it take place sometime in February, primarily because it would give a holiday to the workingman at that time of the year when the workingman is really looking for a holiday. It would have the effect of honouring the flag we have come to know as the flag of Canada, distinctly, uniquely and proudly Canadian. The hon. member who moved this bill has indicated that there is really not much scope for debate. In fact, it seems to boil down to the question whether we are going to pass this bill and thus create this particular holiday or we are not.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I am going to vote against the bill at this stage because I think other things should be done first. I sincerely believe that thought has to be given to chang ng the names of some of our holidays, as we understand them, so as to give them meaning in the way I have suggested, namely, to pay tribute to the veterans to whom we owe so much and whom all too often we have a tendency to forget. You cannot blame the young people for this, Mr. Speaker. With them it is not a question of forgetting but, rather, of never knowing about the contribution made by our veterans. Although I was not living at the time of the First World War, as a result of my experience during the Second World War, in which I lost friends and knew others who participated in the armed forces, I obtained a new insight into, a new interest in and, more important than anything, a new appreciation of our veterans.

It is unfortunate that we had to have a Second World War so that someone like myself could have a second look at our veterans and recognize the contribution made by what we have called our "old sweats", the veterans of the First World War. If we put into these holidays the kind of respect that I think our veterans deserve, then perhaps it will be better than giving the workingman an extra day's holiday. Perhaps on more than one occasion during the year we shall say to our veterans that we are paying tribute not only to those who gave their lives but also to those who gave their time and effort, even parts of their bodies, in order to protect this country. We would tell them that we have not forgotten. And to those people who never knew them or had the opportunity to forget, we are pointing out the contribution they made. One small way in which we could do this is by changing the name of some of our holidays.

The hon. member who spoke before me must have had the same research material as I, because some of the comments that I wanted to make he covered in his usual comprehensive way, obviously the result of a tremendous amount of work done this afternoon or last night. I pay tribute to him for the fine job he is doing as chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. Needless to say, I will not insult his presentation by reiterating the points that he made. I have tried to make my point; I hope I have done so effectively and I thank the House for its attention.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cullen: Cautiously, yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is a perfectly friendly one. After the good things I heard about the hon. member when I was down in Windsor over the weekend I want to treat him with respect. In view of the fact that the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) expressed pleasure at the idea of an additional holiday in August, and in view of the fact that the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) has said that he would like a holiday in February, could these two Liberals get together and agree to make it ten holidays a year? That would satisfy them both.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to commit my hon. friend. This is the sort of thing that we as Liberals do in a very democratic fashion. I do not think that two of us in this House should determine what the whole Liberal party stands for. However, we will raise it in the Ontario caucus and discuss it in the national caucus. We do things in a democratic way, rather than making an offhand decision in the House simply on the basis of a question asked.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Saint-Henri): Mr. Speaker, I must recognize the tenacity of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). When he is not calling for an increase in old age pensions, of Canadian National employees pensions, of social security pensions somewhere, he assumes the defense of the worker. Employers are seldom mentioned.

At the very start of my remarks, I should like to say that my quarrel is not with the idea of granting workers a ninth general holiday with pay but with the reasons given by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, which I feel are inadequate to warrant my support for the establishment of a ninth general holiday with pay. He so readily grants holidays that a few minutes ago he was even considering granting a tenth one. At that rate, we should start by reassessing the eight already in existence and perhaps, as the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) said a little while ago, "renaming" some of them.

He was speaking, for instance, of the Queen's birthday; I am very happy that I also have discovered that some people who are better informed than I am have learned this year that, when we celebrate the Queen's birthday, it is that of Queen Victoria and not that of our present Queen. I quite agree with the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton that a new name should be given to that holiday.

That holiday should be established in honour of our veterans who have fought and died for their country overseas. Such a holiday would be more useful and would gain more recognition. It would make more sense than calling it the Queen's birthday.

Since we are speaking about new names, why not give a new name to Dominion day? In my view, that name is old fashioned. Why not call it Canada day? Instead of calling the first of July holiday "Dominion day", we would have more reason to call it "Canada day". At least, it would be a Canadian holiday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Loiselle: I see that the hon. member supports the idea. I would hope that those who opposed a bill to this effect during the last session will agree to this natural state of affairs. I see that the hon. member if frowning, I do not mean the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I said—

[English]

I was happy to see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in favour of that subject.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With both hands.

Mr. Loiselle: I hope that those who were against the bill when it came up last session will change their minds. Mostly they were against the use of the word "Dominion". I agree that some of them were on my side of the House, but even so I still say that they are wrong. At least, in my opinion they are wrong, though they may have reasons for thinking themselves right. Nevertheless I still say that "Dominion day" should be called "Canada day".

[Translation]

—"Canada Day" in Canada, and this would be a holiday for all Canadians.

At the beginning of the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I believe that one of his colleagues said "Why not Saint John the Baptist day"? This is celebrated in Quebec, just as in other provincial legislatures have passed different laws on statutory holidays. It is a provincial right to legislate as to statutory holidays. Incidentally, three provinces have eight statutory holidays while other provinces have six. In addition, there have been arrangements for other holidays, and this remains under provincial jurisdiction. I know also that the hon. member is proposing a ninth statutory holiday which would fall within the federal government's province. Now it does not make sense to me that there should be nine.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Earlier in my remarks, I said that I had no objection in principle to the holiday as such, but that we are now facing other problems which are much more important than that of proclaiming a ninth statutory holiday.

And, I have here a short list whose contents I do not have to detail to you, but still I would like to bring it to the hon. member's attention. Indeed, taking into account all the labour contracts signed in this country, the record shows that in 1968 there were labour groups which enjoyed 16 holidays, others 15, 13, 11, 10 or 9. There is evidence that additional holidays must be granted under contract between employers and employees. That should be the concern of associations and unions which consistently claim that they want to defend the employers' interests. They are the ones who should be responsible when negotiating labour contracts, for convincing the employers that they should grant one, two or three additional holidays.

Unless it has important reasons for commemorating a special event, the government must not give one or two additional holidays just for the pleasure of doing so. There is much more to do in that sphere.

Since I am aware that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is interested in labour, it would perhaps be advisable to settle problems of many Canadian workers. As it happened yesterday in my office, I met some who in a country like ours still work a 40-to-45 hour week and earn from $65 to $70 a week. One among them earns $68 per week after deductions and he has six children. This is illogical—

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Loiselle: Yes, it is a shame. It is truly ilogicall. Instead of granting additional holidays without a valid reason, we should try at least to find some solutions.

Why not set up normal wage rates for those heads of families who, because they work, are denied all kinds of supplementary benefits they could get if they were unemployed or depended on welfare allowances.

I would much rather encourage someone who is willing to work, who takes the trouble and has the courage to earn his family's living. I would rather help him than the chronically unemployed. I am not talking about those who are sick and are entitled to welfare allowances; there are exceptions. However, some people never want to work.

I had evidence of that a few times this winter. I hired a man for a three-to four-hour job. He was a man of good build, the same as mine, he was 28 years old, he had two children and he was on welfare. I asked him casually: Do you want to work? He said he did. And so, I referred his case to the manager of the Manpower Centre in Montreal. Now, can you imagine what the answer of the manager was after 12 days? "We made four appointments with him and he did not show up for a single one." I had to tell the manager to forget about it. This is another chronic case, another parasite of society. I would agree to treating those people in a very special way, because the fellow who earns from $65 to $70 a week, who kills himself working for a mere pittance, has to pay his modest income tax and support the man who sits comfortably at home all year round, taking things easy. Indeed, the worker deprives his family while the man on welfare does not have to do so.

I will give you an example. Last year, those who were on welfare could obtain special passes for "Man and His World". However, a father with six children and earning from $65 to $70 per week could not give $2.50 to members of his family for visiting "Man and His World".

The hon. member knows that when the veterans bill was debated in the House, I objected to decreasing the amount of pensions to the widows and mothers' pension who wanted to supplement their income by working outside the home. I objected to it on the principle that we should at least give some encouragement to people anxious to help themselves in this life, to those who are willing to earn their own livelihood, to overcome their daily difficulties, instead of surrendering all the time to opposition parties' demands to improve the welfare system with increased allowances.

I know what social welfare is all about. I come from a workmen's district, a district with citizens' committees and dissenters. Unfortunately, there are some traitors who, instead of helping these people to manage their budget and make do with their normal earnings are seeking an increase in social welfare benefits. I support these increased benefits in the case of people who are really in need. A 62-year-old widow recently came to my office. Since there is no legislation applicable to her case, I refered her to the local welfare office. She started crying and she told me: "Listen, Mr. Loiselle, while my husband was alive, we never had much money, that's true, but we never had to go on welfare. Well, he is dead, and here I am". I told her "Dear Madam, just take advantage of it. There are enough social parasites and heartless people who take advantage of these benefits at the expense of those who really need them. This money is yours, and you are entitled to your fair share of it."

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member mind indicating what this has to do with the bill?

Mr. Loiselle: Let me repeat what I suggested at the beginning. Instead of proposing another holiday for the workers of Canada, we should attempt to find a solution to the problems of the poor guy who earns $65 or $68 per week. Some of these people have six kids at home, such as the one who was in my office.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell that to your government.

Mr. Loiselle: We should try to benefit from experience. Instead of asking for more holidays the hon. member should attempt to help the government and those in this party to assist people who need it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Loiselle: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will he, then, support an amendment I shall make to increase the minimum wage to $2 an hour for those who really need it?

